Boarding and Day School for Girls, 13 and 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and chaperonage for special students.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

50th year. Academic and College Preparatory, SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph. D.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.

THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all postgraduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Established 12 years. Address
F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

SUMMER SONGS

IS THE TITLE OF OUR BEAUTIFUL NEW SERVICE FOR

CHILDREN'S DAY

or Anniversary in the Sunday Schools. Any superintendent sending name and address (5 cts. stamps) will receive a sample copy.

THE EMMA PITT PUB. CO., Baltimore, Md.

JUST PURCHASED

the Library of Rev. JULIUS H. WARD, religious editor of "Boston Herald." Upwards of 10,000 volumes.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

"THE BEST COLLECTION."

Carmina for the Sunday School.

By Rev. LEWIS W. MUDGE, D. D., and Rev. HERBERT B. TURNER. 293 Hymns, with Tunes; in durable Cloth Binding. Price, $35 per hundred.

TESTIMONIALS:

From Rev. E. Morris Ferguson, Supt. New Jersey S. S. Association:

"If you want a well-printed, cloth-bound book of moderate size and price, edited with rare wisdom and taste, and full of rich, sweet tunes, with strong harmonies and singable melodies, get a sample copy of CARMINA FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL."

From Rev. W. W. Sleeper, Second Congregational Church, Beloit, Wis.:

"I do not hesitate to pronounce it the BEST collection of Sunday School songs I have ever seen."

A sample copy sent postpaid on receipt of 35 cents. Correspondence invited.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of ten years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist.

Loan Wanted. $3,000 for 3 years, on valuable church property in the West. Interest 6 per cent., payable quarterly. For particulars address Deacon W. M. Seare, Reno, Nev.

Wanted. From the last week in May until the early part of October, at the seashore, a capable, reliable Protestant woman to do general housework in family of adults. Address, with reference, Box 427, Newton Center, Mass.

For Summer Guests A Congregational pastor opens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious rooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; first-class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York or Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted. Some practical woman of cultivation, who wishes to follow cooking as a profession, to enter a private family for the purpose of filling outside orders for fine home cooking, and receive a certain proportion of the proceeds thereof. Must possess executive ability. Address "Refined Home," Congregationalist office.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 6 May 1897 Number 18

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 633
Reasons for Reassurance 634
The Hero's Value to His Country 634
What Is Conversion 634
The Outward Show of Inward Life 635
Current History 635
Current History Notes 641
In Brief 636

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

From London 637

CONTRIBUTIONS:

The Grant Celebration in New York. H. A. B. 638
European Travel. II. Tramway and Coaches. H. W. Dunning 639
Becoming a Christian—a symposium 640

THE HOME:

The Maryland Yellow-throat—a selected poem 643
Paragraphs 643
The Pity of It. Martha Clark Rankin 643
Later Flowering Trees and Shrubs. Josephine E. Cragin 644
Dr. Hü King Eng. Mrs. S. E. Bridgman 644
The Game of Characteristics. G. 644
Closet and Altar 645
Tangles 645
The Art of Love-making—a selection 645
Working Women's Clubs at Philadelphia. H. M. N. 646
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 647
Corner Scrap-Book 647
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for May 16 648
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for May 16-22 663
LITERATURE 649

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

From St. Louis 652
The Arizona Association 652
Across the Border 659
Accessions to the Churches 660
Weekly Register 661

MISCELLANEOUS:

The New Congregational House 641
In and Around Chicago 642
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 646
In and Around Boston 651
Worthy Honors to a Veteran Still in Harness 651
Notices 652
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 657
Marriages and Deaths 657
The Business Outlook 658
W. H. M. A. at Lowell 662
Obituaries 662
Dr. Abbott's Sermons on the Bible 663

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 630.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 14, Memorial Day.
No. 15, Children's Sunday.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

THE long desired and greatly needed new Congregational House bids fair to be a speedy reality. Our cover presents a picture of the structure as it will look when the builders have completed their task, which will require, perhaps, a year or more. Building operations will probably begin as soon as the members of the Congregational Association, which meets this week, have ratified the decision of the board of directors. Elsewhere we state particulars concerning the edifice, the Congregational Association which controls the property, and the valuable library for which generous provision has been made. The denomination has every reason to congratulate itself on the outcome of several years of agitation and discussion with reference to a new building. The location is a most desirable one and the edifice will easily bear comparison with the handsome Unitarian building just across the way. When it is completed and the denominational interests pleasantly housed there will be reason for general jubilation. We are particularly glad that the building is to be completed in ample season for the international council in 1899.

The heavy debts under which our missionary societies groan are a strong appeal for more generous giving, but no society ought to be allowed to suffer because it has anticipated diminishing receipts by restricting its expenditures. This the Sunday School and Publishing Society has done, as its annual report, just issued, shows. Perhaps an appreciation of this fact may be seen in the increase of gifts by living donors, amounting to about $5,500 more than the previous year. But the legacy account, which is distributed over a series of years, will yield this year about $6,000 less than last. It is probable also that the business department of the society will not be able this year to make any donation toward the expenses of the missionary department. The thirty-five superintendents and missionaries during the last year have secured the organization of 521 new Sunday schools, have reorganized 111 others, have held about 400 institutes and conventions and have done a vast amount of service in places where but for them no Christian work would have been done. These faithful and successful laborers ought to be increased in number, not further reduced. They give generously. The welfare of our country and of the kingdom of God requires that we, their brethren, should be as generous in our gifts as they are.

Permission having been obtained from the legislature, the Springfield School for Christian Workers now stands before the public as the Bible Normal College. The change in nomenclature marks a new era for the institution, and plans already well initiated provide for a considerable extension of the course and such thorough instruction in every department that the ends for which the school exist will be subserved much better than before. It has earnest and indefatigable men behind it who hold that modern conditions call for as thorough a preparation for Christian work on the part of the laity as those receive who are to form the future ministry of this country. Recent changes include the addition of a specialist in educational psychology, pedagogy and sociology, Professor Dawson, a graduate of the University of Michigan and exceptionally well prepared for his important duties. Each student is required to take the Biblical course and in addition studies either in the Sunday school or the missionary departments. One who examines the new catalogue, just issued, must be impressed by the thoroughness with which the curriculum has been mapped out. We know of no other institution in the country better equipped as a laboratory for the lay Christian worker. With all these evidences of progress and of adaptation to the needs of today the Normal College ought to make a stronger appeal than ever to college graduates and to all young men and women who desire to enter the wide field of modern Christian activity in this country or abroad.

It was something of an experiment for the Y. M. C. A. to hold a national convention at so distant a point in the South as Mobile, Ala. But the five days' international gathering just concluded compared favorably both in attendance and enthusiasm with the most successful assemblies in other years. Indeed the amount of money pledged during the session—over $12,000—considerably exceeded the sum raised at Springfield two years ago. This, with other regular gifts, will enable the international committee to put a fourth college secretary into the field, and to employ for the first time a secretary who will give his entire attention to promoting Bible study among the associations. The wide scope of activity under the supervision of the international committee was revealed during the convention by reports, discussions, conferences and special addresses. The progress of the work among railroad men is specially encouraging, while Dr. Eastman, the alert Indian secretary, is making good headway among the members of his race. The world-wide range of Y. M. C. A. work appeared in Sec. J. R. Mott's recital of his remarkable trip during the last year around the world. He was able to plant the association ideas in educational institutions in all lands, and to put the associations organized in touch with one another through a World's Students Christian Federation. We congratulate the Y. M. C. A. upon the vigor and wisdom with which it prosecutes the various phases of its work.

Apparently Chicago, as our Western letter this week shows, is facing a tremendous problem as respects the denomination's part in city evangelization. The rapid growth of the city leaves large sections utterly unprovided with religious privileges, while at the same time down-town churches have to struggle to maintain their existence. Indeed, Dr. Gunsaulus's change of base, if it comes, will be partly due to the strain upon his church by virtue of its down-town environment. If we could pick up our churches and shift them about in a night, according to the rapidly changing centers of church-going population, our problems would be simpler. But with large investments in brick and mortar and with conflicting claims upon the church called, as it is, to minister both to the people who fly to the suburbs and those who linger in the city, the question of wisely planting our churches and maintaining them despite fluctuations of population becomes severe enough to tax the wisest brains among us. It is a comfort that so many of our leaders, ministerial and lay, are devoting time, thought and money to these questions. They are the critical questions of modern Christianity as respects its practical and serviceable relation to the world.

REASONS FOR REASSURANCE

Sounding notes of alarm has become a chronic habit. It has fixed itself in business, in politics, in society and in religion. It is demonstrated that in all these departments of life, unless certain reforms are adopted, ruin is inevitable. Our currency system is drawing the ship of state into a maelstrom. The projected tariff is driving it on the rocks. Each political party proves that the success of its opponent, even in local elections, will destroy the very foundations of government. Students of social conditions point out fatal diseases just ready to take root at the heart of society, unless their remedies are speedily applied. The whole fabric of revealed religion is shown to be sure to vanish if certain beliefs are allowed to spread.

This habit of trying to compel support of measures and parties and creeds because of assumed consequences of not supporting them has gone so far that it promotes the evils against which it warns men. In our vast and complex nation dangers are real and numerous enough without exaggerating them in order to carry measures through legislatures or to raise money for reform movements or to compel assent to religious beliefs. Such efforts also are sure to bring reactions which weaken men's confidence in one another, and especially bring their leaders into discredit.

There are self-correcting forces in society, uncounted factors in reasoning from present conditions to future consequences, and an overruling mind guiding humanity to ends worthy of itself, which are sufficient to warrant earnest effort in saving men, and to give encouragement even in temporary defeat. Neither free trade nor a protective tariff will ruin business. One may be better than the other, but many men of business sagacity in this and in other countries are seeking to find out by experience which is the better way. The ultimate results of study and experiment will be for the good of mankind. We have before us a mathematical demonstration, published a number of years ago, that the colored race in this country would in time outnumber the whites and absorb their property. It was shown to be a deadly peril to our Government, and was used as an argument to urge the necessity of educating that race for citizenship. The necessity was real, and still is, but there were important factors left out of the demonstration. A considerable part of the allotted time has passed, yet the colored people are not increasing relatively to the white, and their growing thrift is not less to the advantage of their white neighbors than to themselves. Only a few weeks ago newspapers assured the country that the decision of the Supreme Court against railroad combinations would be an irretrievable disaster to the traffic, but already we are told that the railroads are arranging agreements by which they will be able to maintain rates better than before.

It would be easy to multiply instances in which predictions of wholesale disaster have not been fulfilled. In the larger sweep of history it would be easy to show that temporary disasters, even some which have seemed overwhelming, have brought about permanent good for mankind. If we are aiming to serve men for Christ's sake we need not be frightened by the failure of measures we advocate or the prevalence of views we do not hold. There are many men outside of our political party and beyond the bounds of our church who are seeking the public good. There are latent forces of righteousness in our country not yet measured. We are not living for ourselves only nor for today only. We are living to bring to its final fulfillment the purpose of Christ for mankind. And God reigns. No Christian is true to himself or to his Master who gives up heart in his present work or confidence in his fellowmen or faith in the future. The Christian in business, in society and in politics is engaged in an enterprise which cannot fail, and he has more allies than he knows.

THE HERO'S VALUE TO HIS COUNTRY

We describe elsewhere in this issue the scenic features connected with the dedication of the Grant monument in New York, but before the great day recedes further into the past, what it meant in its permanent significance may well be pondered upon for a moment. That it furnished an illustration of the essential unity of this nation could not be doubted. As the memory of our soldier-president rose up before the assembled thousands, all the disputes over policies of government and all the clashing interests of the hour were hushed. The country, through its president, its judiciary, its military, as one person, paid honor to the departed chief. No partisan words or cheers sprang to any one's lips. It made one hope and feel that there is an underlying unity of purpose in this nation too essentially interwoven into our very make-up as a people ever to be overwhelmed by the differences and the contentions now so prominent on the surface.

The day also was a great educator. How little thousands of those who stood in line for hours know of our national history and traditions. Many of them are but recent comers to our shores. They hardly know what liberty means and what liberty joined with law can do for a nation. But there must have filtered down to the dullest understanding something of the deeper meaning of the day. They must have imbibed a new respect for the forces of order. They must have felt, if but for a moment, the best influences of our civilization and our Christianity.

And these, and others too, must have come away with a freshened sense of what this nation owes to its heroes and its saviours. It was no military idol of a few passing years to whom honor was paid last Tuesday. It was to a man who through war wrought out peace, and then gave his life to the maintaining of it throughout our boundaries and the wide world. This noble monument has been reared, partly through the offerings of our humblest citizens, because this nation has come to see in Grant a greatness of character, a valor both on the field of battle and through long weary days of suffering in his sickroom, a consecration to righteousness and the welfare of his fellowmen.

It seemed at times during the demonstration of last Tuesday that the imposing pageant overshadowed for a time the memory of the hero. But after all that was the kind of demonstration that he would have liked. He preferred always to keep himself in the background. But as the substantial tomb, alone of all the elements contributing to last week's demonstration, now is left upon the beautiful hights of Claremont, and will forever remain the embodiment of a nation's love and reverence, a shrine protecting precious dust, so the name of Ulysses S. Grant will always abide. And as he sleeps beside the majestic Hudson, along whose banks a little further north he learned the art of war, generations will grow up to do him honor and to draw inspiration from his example. Well may we apply to him Tennyson's words concerning the Duke of Wellington:

> . . . . his work is done.
> But while the races of mankind endure,
> Let his great example stand
> Colossal, seen of every land,
> And keep the soldier firm, the statesman pure:
> Till in all lands and thro' all human story
> The path of duty be the way to glory.

WHAT IS CONVERSION

It is an intensely practical question which we have asked leaders of thought and work to discuss in our columns this week. Valuable as it is from time to time to secure different opinions regarding intellectual and speculative issues, we render no better service to our readers than occasionally to furnish them with a broadside of views upon so intensely consequential a matter as the relation of an individual soul to its Maker. We therefore call especial attention to the side lights thrown upon the act of becoming a Christian by men who themselves have had much experience in bringing souls to Christ.

What impresses us most in this array of opinions is the fact that little emphasis is laid upon compliance with a mechanical and stereotyped method of procedure. Dr. Pentecost tells a story about a sleeping car porter whom he once urged to become a Christian, and who expressed his purpose so to do in due season, but added that he "dreaded the process." This dread of the process has often kept men out of the kingdom. They have fancied they must pass through a certain series of emotions, not experiencing which they have concluded that they were not moved by the Holy Spirit. This broadside makes it clear that mere emotionalism has little part in the act which reconciles a man with his God.

We are also impressed with the minimizing of the intellectual element by the contributors to this discussion. Though these writers differ widely in theology they make the path to the Saviour simple and easy. Nothing is said about belief in an elaborate creed. The one thing set forth, by old school and new school men alike, is yielding the life wholly to Christ. One or two striking sentences make this point clear. Says Dr. Cuyler, "Your best 'inquiry meeting' will be an honest hour alone with Jesus Christ." Says Bishop Huntington, "The personal direction may be reversed by a right-about-face or by a movement that is curvilinear." Says Mr. Moody, "The man who commits himself to Jesus Christ is the man who believes in him and is saved." Certainly if any soul wants to become a Christian he need not, in these days, halt because the way is hedged up or obscure.

THE OUTWARD SHOW OF INWARD LIFE

It is the tendency of a true life to be simple and sincere. In spite of temptations to seem one thing while we actually are something else, and of the fact that often a proper courtesy and self-respect forbid the frank revelation of all our thoughts, the difference between inward motive and feeling and outward expression in conduct tends to diminish. This is so true that we rarely hesitate to form impressions about people's characters from their faces and actions, and these impressions deepen into well justified convictions often enough to warrant a large degree of dependence upon them.

Probably few persons, however, fully appreciate the unconscious revelations which they thus make of themselves. Sooner or later he whose heart is evil lets out the fact by a glance or a tone which tells its mournful story plainly. And however repellant one's features or manners may be at first, if we discover later in him the appearance of genuine integrity and kindness we give him our trust. A man may seem for a while to be a Christian without really being one. But no one can actually be one long without its becoming apparent.

To have clean, honest, happy, trustful hearts, then, hearts which need not shrink from being laid bare to view because God reigns in them—this is the great thing. This, too, is the way to influence others. It is the old, familiar truth once more apparent, that to be means far more than to say or even to do, and the nobler and fuller the inward life, the holier and richer are the outward appearance and the fruit of it in example and influence.

This outward show of inward life may blend a hearty frankness with a delicate reticence. We need not reveal all the items of personal history, opinion or feeling. But the underlying principles to which we are loyal we may not hesitate to show forth. We may testify to our love and practice of charity, for instance, without specifying our gifts, even of sympathy and consolation. The inward life is the soul's attitude towards God. The outward show is its attitude towards men. The nearer they approach harmony, and even identity, the better.

The Kingdom suspends publication, but proposes to resume next October in Chicago, with headquarters at Hull House. It will advocate the principles of Christian Socialism. It is probable that a new paper will be started in Minneapolis with the name which The Kingdom used to have, The Northwestern Congregationalist. The discontinuance of The Kingdom is not a failure of the enterprise. It is able to pay all its debts and its suspension is probably only temporary. It has made a brave struggle against the adverse conditions which have within the last few years weighed heavily against religious journalism.

CURRENT HISTORY

At Washington

The national capital was almost deserted through the early part of last week, President, Cabinet officers, senators and congressmen being in New York taking part in the Grant celebration. Two or three holidays, however, make comparatively little difference just at present with the onward movement of legislation, inasmuch as other matters are kept in abeyance until the Finance Committee renders its report on the Dingley Bill. It will probably be before the Senate before this week ends, the final adjustments and revisions being made as we go to press. The Republicans are increasingly hopeful of securing its passage substantially as recommended by the Finance Committee, indeed claims of a majority as high as twelve are being freely made. Senator Jones of Nevada, the free silver Republican on the committee, has required careful treatment. Conscious that he and his free silver associate held the balance of power, he has pressed the demands of his section of the country for recognition in the new tariff. He seems to be too much of a protectionist to make it easy to yield to all his requests and at the same time pay respect to other clamorers for attention. It is more and more apparent that sentiment in the East is inclining to as low a tariff as will provide for proper revenue, and the pressure on representatives and senators from New England from their respective constituencies has been chiefly to secure modifications of the Dingley Bill in the direction of reductions. It looks, however, as if, despite the vigorous protests of Eastern leather men, the duty on hides would remain. Whatever form this important piece of legislation shall finally assume, it is to be hoped that the outrageous levy upon books and works of art will be entirely eliminated.

Currency versus Tariff

Comment in various parts of the country upon President Cleveland's speech ten days ago at the dinner of the New York Reform Club has been in the main unfavorable to the positions taken by the ex-president. The New York Evening Post naturally stands by him, but the New York Times, the other stanch advocate of Mr. Cleveland among metropolitan papers, takes issue with some of his positions. That his attack on the Republican party is unwarrantably severe may be granted. Mr. Cleveland is not an opportunist, and tact in choosing the best time to utter his convictions, as well as suavity in expressing them, have never been prominent characteristics of his. Nevertheless, all the talk about his courting the presidential nomination three years hence is laughable. He is through with politics so far as office holding goes, and we presume thoroughly glad that he is no longer the target for a thousand criticisms. His New York speech was certainly sincere, and no doubt voices the conviction of many gold Democrats who voted for Mr. McKinley and who hoped that the Republican party would give the country a moderate tariff.

On the other hand, it must be admitted that a party like the Republican, pledged first of all to a revision of the tariff, has no superior obligation to that of fulfilling its pledge. It can only be hoped that not because of any special duty to the gold Democrats, but rather as a matter of expediency, the tariff finally framed will be constructed on broad and statesmanlike lines. The currency question certainly cannot long be relegated to a secondary place, and no settlement of the tariff issue can remove it from the field of pressing problems. We are glad to see indications at Washington that a competent monetary commission may be created before the present session of Congress ends. The sponsors for the business men's convention which met at Indianapolis several weeks ago are still bringing arguments to bear to this end, and will leave no stone unturned that will secure the desired result. Failing to obtain action by Congress, these representatives of the business interests of the country may appoint a monetary commission of their own which shall go immediately to work and devise a plan to lay before the country by early winter. Such an undertaking as this should properly emanate from Congress, and we trust that not many weeks will go by without a movement in this direction.

The Bradford Manuscript

This document was formally handed to Mr. Bayard last Thursday by the Bishop of London at his official residence. It appeared that Mr. White, the secretary of the United States embassy, had requested that the MS. should be delivered to the new ambassador, Col. John Hay, instead of to Mr. Bayard. This request was put aside on the ground that the consistorial court had decreed that the MS. should be given to Mr. Bayard. It will come back to this country not only priceless for the history it contains, but with the added value of the interest in the story of its wanderings and of the expressions of friendship between the two countries which have characterized the transactions resulting in its return. It will be brought by Mr. Bayard to President McKinley, and it is probable, as it would certainly be very appropriate, that it may be presented by Mr. Bayard or by Senator Hoar to Governor Wolcott at the celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of Queen Victoria's accession to the throne, which is to be held in Mechanics Hall, Boston, June 21. That would furnish a fine occasion for eloquent and effective speechmaking and give the celebration a rare historic interest.

Kentucky Elects a United States Senator

The contests over the election of United States senators in several State legislatures this year are just so many strong arguments in favor of the election of senators by popular vote. Delaware, for so small a State, brought on herself a very large disgrace. Florida and Oregon are still struggling. The deadlock in Kentucky, after a protracted contest which has cost the State over $100,000 and has developed an uncalculated amount of partisan prejudice and personal animosity, came to an end last week on Wednesday by the election of Dr. W. J. Deboe to succeed ex Senator Blackburn. The latter was the Democratic candidate for re-election. He favors free silver. Dr. Hunter, who for a year and during two sessions of the legislature has been the Republican candidate, has during that time been voted for on 112 ballots, falling short of election toward the last by only one vote.

He, also, it was claimed by his opponents, favors free silver. Dr. Deboe's election was brought about by a union of Republicans and gold Democrats, and the result is, as far as it goes, a victory for sound money. He is said to be a man of good education and character, and fitted creditably to represent his State in the United States Senate.

Storms and Floods

It seems but a little while since we were reading the first accounts of the opening of new lands and the settlement of Oklahoma Territory. Yet its population has so increased and has become so permanently established that the tidings of a great disaster by flood read like a record of destruction of the fruits of long continued civilization. Later reports reduce considerably the figures received last week on Wednesday. But it appears that in the flooded districts in and about Guthrie 500 homes were swept away and property amounting to $100,000 was destroyed, while not less than twenty lives were lost, the majority of them being Negroes. A stream, ordinarily about forty feet wide, rose four feet in thirty minutes. Floods are still working great injury along the lower parts of the Mississippi River, and large sections of country are ruined, at least so far as the planting of crops this year is concerned. Not for many years has there been so great loss of life and property from floods as this year.

Gold Going Out

Gold shipments to Europe began on a large scale last week, the total amount being $6,477,000, and as large a sum may be going this week. This is in spite of a low rate of exchange. Austria has sold a considerable quantity of three and a half per cent. treasury bills for gold. Russia and Japan are calling for large amounts of the yellow metal. The excessive purchases of goods abroad in anticipation of tariff changes, the summer exodus of tourists already begun, and the fact that our exports are at the minimum at this season are among the reasons for expecting that gold shipments will continue large for some time. There is, however, no occasion for anxiety on this account. The Treasury held $153,000,000 in gold last Saturday, and, since we are not now threatened with any dangerous inflation of the currency, is not likely to be called on for so large a sum as to arouse again the alarms of 1893 and the following two years.

Our Business with Canada

The chief features of the new Canadian tariff bill in which we are interested are the reduction of the duties on iron and the reciprocity provision allowing a rebate on goods from Great Britain of one-eighth of the duties established by the revised tariff. This rebate is to be increased to one-fourth after July 1, 1898. "Other countries which, in the opinion of the governor in council, treat Canadian products with fairness" are to share in these privileges. These reductions do not apply to spirits, ales, beers, tobacco or sugar. The new tariff schedule is already in effect, although the imperial authorities have not passed on it. Thus the law is practically made retroactive. This discrimination against goods received from the United States is likely materially to lessen trade between the two countries, but it is hardly likely to continue long. The interests of the United States and Canada are too closely related to make it good business policy for either country to put obstacles in the way of imports from the other.

Greece and Turkey

Public expectation in regard to the Greeks has been considerably disappointed since last week. Their record of gallantry has been marred by a conspicuous collapse. After fighting stoutly for a time at Tyrnavo, at the center of operations, they not only were defeated but became panic-stricken and ran away to Larissa, which the Turks later captured. Officers and troops fled together in a disorderly scramble. Their rout was not only complete but shameful. An immediate result was the uprising of the population of Athens, demanding a new cabinet. Premier Delyannis was deposed and M. Ralli appointed in his stead. General Smolenski also was sent to the front at once in supreme command and the public has settled down in comparative quiet to await the result. The king had a narrow escape from being dethroned and the military leadership of Prince Constantine became discredited.

There has been sharp fighting at Velestino and the Greeks seem to have had rather the best of it. But it has had no important results. The anticipated struggle at Pharsala may be begun at any moment. The Greeks have gathered a considerable force there and mean to make a desperate stand. But they probably will be defeated, in which case the battle doubtless will be the last. The Greek campaign in Epirus, on the west, has been substantially abandoned, and on the east the Greek fleet, instead of doing any important service, has been bombarding small Turkish coast settlements of little value to either side. The great Powers have been discussing intervention but cannot agree. After another defeat, however, Greece is expected to appeal to them, and then a majority of them, including England and France, probably will favor forcing the close of the conflict. Reports are conflicting and evidently the German emperor is reluctant to check Turkey, but the end seems near. The czar and the emperor of Austria have conferred with representatives of Germany and France, and Lord Salisbury has been sounding the different governments, but no policy of action is yet announced.

The effect of victory on the sultan is likely to be mischievous. He is expected to demand both territory and a heavy indemnity from Greece, and to be less open to persuasion by the great Powers than heretofore. But he will find them inflexible. No increase of territory is likely to be allowed him, and, although his claim for an indemnity may be admitted, he will not be able to collect it from bankrupt Greece. But Greece will be compelled to evacuate Crete immediately. The prestige of the Greek royal family is much lessened, whether by their fault or only their misfortune. But since they are foreigners, and are salaried by the great Powers, loyalty to them naturally is less than if they were natives. The danger of a general European war seems diminishing day by day.

South Africa

The South African situation is still at the front in London. Mr. Chamberlain denies all previous knowledge of the Jameson raid. He and Sir William Harcourt have had a lively tilt in Parliament over the proposal to increase appropriations for defenses at the Cape of Good Hope, and indications multiply that the government intends to inaugurate active operations against the Boers before long. Probably they will be delayed until after the queen's jubilee celebrations, or even until autumn, but they are looked for then at latest. But President Kruger may expedite matters if he thinks it for his advantage. He is an antagonist not to be despised, and he is making preparations quite as energetically as are the English. The Boers can depend upon German aid so far as it can be rendered surreptitiously, and, if England wins, it will be only after a struggle for which even the gold mines of the Transvaal will be an imperfect compensation.

IN BRIEF

A good record—that of the Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply which in the last eleven months has rendered service in matters connected with the filling of the pastoral office for 120 churches of this State.

A Hebrew national flag was dedicated last week on Sunday night in Chicago. All the Jewish rabbis of the city were present. It would be interesting to learn where is the nation which the flag is supposed to represent.

Our London correspondent, in this week's letter, gives some account of preliminary steps toward the trial of Ian Maclaren for heresy. Later news says there will be no trial, the synod having rejected the petition containing the charges.

The most popular man in the Senior Class at Yale is a class deacon and also a quarter back on the football team. Pure religion, as well as athletic achievement, in a healthy community exalts a young man in the eyes of his associates, and nowhere more than in an American university.

John McNeill, the Scotch evangelist, preached in New York for Dr. Burrell last Sunday morning and for Dr. John Hall in the afternoon. He will be in demand as a speaker on this side the water, for on his former visit in 1893 he made many friends and drew large congregations.

Last Sunday, despite the down-pour of rain, in many places was a joyous day in the churches that received large accessions. May these first fruits of special interest during the past winter add permanent strength to the organizations with which they are connecting themselves, and may the new-comers in turn feel themselves warmly welcomed.

The choice of President Angell of the University of Michigan as minister plenipotentiary to Constantinople is being everywhere recognized as one of the wisest which could have been made. The regents of the university have voted him a year's absence. While he is away Dr. H. B. Hutchins, dean of the law department, will act as president of the university.

After wintering in Newton Center Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cook left last week for their summer home at Cliff Seat, Ticonderoga. We are glad to say that Mr. Cook's health is somewhat improved. He is, as of yore, an omnivorous reader, and Mrs. Cook has been often seen the past winter coming from the Boston bookstores and libraries with her bag filled with books. Fiction and light literature have interested the distinguished lecturer of late more than theology.

At last week's meeting in Lowell of the Woman's Home Missionary Association Mrs. Caswell stated that she met a woman in a recent Western tour who, when she learned that our earnest worker was a missionary, exclaimed, "And you a missionary, what a pity, O, what a pity!" In view of the fact that careful estimates show that only about six women out of a hundred are interested in missionary work, we are tempted to adapt the words and say to the host of indifferent ones, "And you not a missionary, the pity of it, O, the pity of it!"

The Observer says of Dr. Gunsaulus: "The Broadway Tabernacle would have no need to move one inch from its present location with such a preacher in its pulpit, though Conservatives might not agree with all of his utterances." It would not be possible to find any one for the Broadway Tabernacle with all of whose utterances all his hearers would agree. What the Tabernacle wants is an accredited Congregational preacher who can hold the congregation together and instruct and edify them. Dr. Gunsaulus is eminently fitted for that service, but we think he will not get away from Chicago.

The Dubuque Association of Iowa, in session at Bellevue, April 27, continued the history of its connection with the case of Rev. C. O. Brown, D. D., by voting, fourteen to three, to table the latest communication it has received from the Bay Conference of California concerning this case. The association then voted, without dissent, to grant Dr. Brown a letter of dismission, we suppose to the Chicago Association, since he has accepted a call to the Green Street Church of that city as is reported in our Chicago news. We cite the facts without comment, and shall await with interest the action of the next association to pass judgment on the Bay Conference. It is pertinent to add that Judge Advocate Woodhams, who acted as legal adviser of the council of investigation into the charges against Dr. Brown, has issued a pamphlet declaring that, "From all that appeared to me at that investigation Dr. Brown was absolutely innocent of any of the guilt imputed by those charges."

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM LONDON

Sympathy with Crete

Whatever may be thought of the part played by the British Government in Eastern affairs, it is beyond question that the best elements in the nation are at the present juncture in the fullest possible sympathy with Crete and Greece. Numerous religious organizations, including the Congregational Union, county associations and individual churches, have passed outspoken resolutions of sympathy with the attempt of Crete to throw off the Turkish yoke and of condemnation of the action or inaction of the British Cabinet. Apart from the humanitarian side of the question, Lord Salisbury's whole policy is viewed with amazement and distrust by an increasing proportion of the nation. Is England, it is being asked again and again, to be made a mere cat's-paw of the emperors, to be dragged at the tail of an European concert? To many Lord Salisbury's prudence is indistinguishable from cowardice. Not a few of his own followers are becoming alarmed at the humiliating pass to which he has brought the country and are asking what is to be the end. Let it be clearly understood in America that the heart of the British people is totally opposed to the line Lord Salisbury has taken in regard to both Armenia and Crete.

How We Are Governed

The affairs of the British Empire are now managed by Lord Salisbury and his nephew, Mr. Balfour, assisted by a smart young gentleman, Mr. Curzon, who condescends to fill the office of under-secretary of state for foreign affairs, Mr. Chamberlain being given a freehand in Africa and the colonies. The House of Lords passes its time in contented slumbers, occasionally broken by incoherent murmurs, the House of Commons being regarded by our aristocratic rulers as a superfluity and an impertinence. When our relations with foreign powers are at a most critical stage and the very independence of Britain seems endangered, our premier and foreign secretary betakes himself to the Riviera for a holiday, whilst young Mr. Cruzon meets the requests of politicians like Sir William Harcourt and Mr. Morley for information with insolent or irrelevant responses, and Mr. Balfour flies into a passion if anybody presumes to question the actions of this best of all possible governments. One can imagine Mr. Balfour's feelings of relief and satisfaction when the doors of the House of Commons are closed, as at Easter, and he, his uncle and a few friends, who seem to run the British Empire for their own amusement and according to their personal notions, are free from the meddlesome interference of the elected representatives of the people. The country chose a Conservative government and they have got it with a vengeance. Landlords have been enriched, Anglican schools have been endowed, Armenians have been left to be butchered, Cretans are being starved, Greece is being coerced. What more can a Tory ministry do?

Heterodox Ian

The proposed arraignment of Dr. John Watson before the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, which meets at Sunderland May 26–30, is not regarded seriously on this side and certainly does not distress the doctor himself. We are aware the author of The Mind of the Master is broad—catholic in spirit, large in heart and consequently liberal in theology—but no one who really knows him and his full teaching doubts his fundamental soundness. Indeed, one cannot but regard with impatience and annoyance the spectacle of a man who is working so hard and accomplishing so solidly useful a work as is Dr. Watson being pestered by small-minded, self-appointed custodians of orthodoxy, who are deficient in the sense of proportion and cannot discern the signs of the times. Dr. Kennedy Moore, the petitioner, challenges Dr. Watson with holding "defective, if not erroneous, views," and pleads that he has not repudiated the charge that his teaching tends towards Unitarianism. If Christian teachers are to be impeached for not rebutting every reckless charge brought against them by irresponsible critics, church courts will have a busy time. But it so happens that when being interviewed last summer by the representative of The Congregationalist Dr. Watson complained that he was found fault with "in regard to the one doctrine of the catholic faith on which I am most convinced—the deity of Christ," and he has recently reaffirmed his belief that "Christ is the Son of the Father in a sense which can be affirmed of no other man." The amusing thing is that the moderator of Durham Presbytery, which has charge of the synod arrangements, has discovered that the theological views of Dr. Watson's accuser are not all they should be, whilst Rev. J. T. Middlemiss of Sunderland has declared that if Dr. Moore were charged with holding "defective, if not erroneous, views" of the teaching of Dr. Watson, the charge would be approved by the whole presbytery of Durham, and, it is safe to add, every other presbytery and all persons of common sense everywhere.

Dr. Pierson in London

Dr. Pierson has just reappeared in London. After his protracted series of farewells last summer we did not expect to have the pleasure of seeing him again so soon. He has returned to this country, so he announces, to deepen its spiritual life. On Sunday, April 11, he preached at Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury, North London, and in May goes to conventions in Belfast and Dublin. It will be remembered that last year Dr. Pierson signalized his appearance in our midst by the solemn announcement that he had passed through some remarkable spiritual experience. Before he began his first sermon at Harecourt he startled his hearers with the confession, "I have had of late a very profound conviction of sin, beyond anything in my previous life." There was general relief when he explained that the conviction of sin was that he had not preached the gospel simply enough. So in future he proposes to confine his attention to the simplest lessons about salvation. The doctor also mentioned that "during the last four years I have been in a consuming fire. I never knew what a consuming fire was before; I always thought the consuming fire referred to in Hebrews 12: 29 was the consuming fire of God for the ungodly and the impenitent, but I have found that it means God's own people." It was not very clear just what Dr. Pierson meant by this statement. He always aims to give a touch of specialty to every service he conducts. Towards the close of the sermon he said, "I have a confidence that God is marvelously here this morning—that right here this morning 100 people are going to say to God, 'Thou shalt be my God.'" Having in the course of the sermon explained that the popular notion that Amen means, "Let it be so," is wrong, and that the true meaning is, "It shall be so," Dr. Pierson, after the singing of the last hymn, asked the congregation reverently to resume their seats and to repeat in an audible voice, which they did, "It shall be so," after each of a series of Scripture promises recited by him. The doctor looks very frail and worn, but he says he is in the best of health. He presided over the celebration at Christ Church of the fiftieth birthday of F. B. Meyer and conveyed the congratulations of American Christians. Mr. Meyer was presented with an address and a cheque for £400 subscribed by a thousand friends in various parts.

Silvester Horne in Harness Again

On the completion of Dr. C. Ray Palmer's two months' ministry at Kensington Congregational Chapel, the pastor, Rev. C. Silvester Horne, returned to his pulpit after a year's compulsory rest. Mr. Horne is a universal favorite, and his achievements up to date give promise of a brilliant future. Although only a little over thirty years of age, he has written several books, including a popular history of the London Missionary Society and one or two novels, and occasionally drops into poetry. His zeal for work and readiness to respond to requests for service led to a very serious breakdown. Rest and travel have greatly improved his health, and it is hoped that with care he will be able to remain at his post and continue to sustain the traditions of the historic church to which he is minister.

April 14. ALBION.

The Grant Celebration in New York

A Memorable Day in American Annals

From the spectacular point of view there were at least six different exhibits in New York city last Tuesday. They were the display on the water, the adornment of the city, the people, the parade, the presidential party and other distinguished guests, and last, and perhaps most significant of all, as justifying and explaining all the others, the tomb of General Grant itself. Each of these displays was splendid and imposing. Taken together they constituted a pageant which will rank among the few great demonstrations which have been witnessed in modern times in the Old World or in the New. The only parallels worthy to be adduced are the inaugurations of our presidents, or the demonstration in New York in 1889, when the centennial of the adoption of the Constitution was celebrated, or that remarkable funeral train in 1885, when on a summer day they laid to rest the hero in whose honor the ceremonies of last week took place. The forthcoming celebration in London in connection with the queen's jubilee will doubtless surpass the demonstration of last Tuesday, but we shall not probably see in this country for many a year any such mobilization of military and naval forces, any such mighty concourse of people, or any such outburst of popular feeling taking form in every mode of expression that could utter the deepest emotions of grateful and appreciative hearts.

To take up the phases of the grand affair in order. Reflect for a moment on the aspect of the two mighty rivers which flow together at the apex of Manhattan Island. From the East River bridge down around Battery Point and up to 122d Street—where the tomb is located—the wharves and docks and warehouses blossomed with color. But it was upon the bosom of the broad Hudson, chiefly, that the ships were gathered, their masts and yards fitted out with flags and streamers, their decks and armaments carefully polished and their officers and seamen in holiday attire. The cruisers and gunboats of the North Atlantic squadron had rendezvoused, while other men-of-war, representing at least four foreign nations, had also assembled to take part in the ceremonies. Bulky excursion steamers, trim merchantmen and sailing vessels, too, were on hand, and besides them the usual contingent of big ferry-boats and steam tugs came and went through the day on their customary errands. The Hudson is too wide a river to look crowded, even though the craft upon its waters are more than doubled in number. There was ample room up and down the four or five miles of river where the vessels lay at anchor or moved to and fro at appointed signals.

The eye, roaming from river to city, was confronted with similar evidences of the special character of the day. There never has been an occasion when citizens united more generally with public officials to adorn the houses and other buildings with flags and bunting. This feature was not confined to the route of the procession alone, but all over the city, in cross streets and in lower New York, and even in alleys and upon tenement houses, the stars and stripes were in constant evidence. Upon streets and squares, miles from the line of march and the throngs of sight-seers, you would come across the national colors and other picturesque tokens of the celebration in progress. But on Fifth Avenue and Madison Avenue and on Riverside Drive, through which thoroughfares the procession marched, the adornments were most profuse and elaborate. It was hard to find a house, except here and there where there was mourning for yet unburied dead, that did not evince its patriotic spirit by unfurling to the strong northwest wind a flag or a bit of bunting or a great streamer, while the hotels and club houses and public edifices vied with each other to secure resplendency of effect. At the monument itself, fittingly enough, royal purple was the only color used, each of the six front pillars being adorned with a broad strip of the ribbon which served as a fastening for a palm branch.

Scene at the Monument as the West Point Cadets Were Marching by the Presidential Reviewing Party

It would have been a magnificent showing, even if only a chosen few had witnessed it, but, after all, its crowning glory lay in the fact that it was the people's day. Estimates vary, of course, but probably the city's normal population was increased by more than a million outsiders. For one sociologically inclined it would have been well worth a trip to New York to study the types of humanity which lined the streets. Doubtless somebody had been left at home in a good many instances to take care of the baby, or to attend the ill, but it was difficult to conceive of anybody living within comparatively easy reach of the line of march, and possessed of the power of locomotion, as performing his usual duties away from the throngs of sight seers. To be sure, although it was a holiday, transportation in different quarters of the city had to move on as usual, and one could but pity the horse-car employés and other public servants who had to continue all day in their beaten track and catch only intimations of what was going on far from their treadmill of duty.

But the stream of humanity on both sides of the route of the procession was unending. In common with a good many others who undertook to get up town I was obliged to walk from 60th Street to the monument—a distance of over three miles—dodging my way in and out of the crowd, taking to the street whenever the police refrained from enforcing strict discipline and encountering as I went human being of all ages and degrees. Those who could pay from fifty cents to five dollars for seats on the stands, which grew more and more frequent as one neared the monument, shivered there in the cutting blasts for hours, until the wished-for moment arrived, but the vast majority of the people stood on the curbstone or hopped on soap boxes peddled about by gamins, and while they waited for the procession straggled here and there and munched doughnuts and candy and drove bargains with venders of Grant souvenirs, who carried on a brisk business in badges and buttons and other mementos of the day. It was a good-natured crowd, yet one was impressed with its cosmopolitan character. The New England type was conspicuous by its absence, while all the other national types that are now forming the American population were visible as one's eye swept over the sea of faces. Most of these curbstone sight-seers looked poor, but some of them were not too poor to bring their little children and it was good to see them making holiday.

The streets were alive with policemen, though there seemed to be little call for their activity. They were thicker than lamp posts and one could hardly wonder that the oversight of such a body of blue coats keeps the police commission in a continual ferment. Squabbles or no squabbles, however, the force was amply competent to take care of itself and the vast multitude besides.

Probably the average observer was about as anxious to see the presidential party as anything else connected with the ceremonies of the day. The members of it went up in handsome carriages three hours in advance of the procession in order to be present at the exercises at the tomb, which consisted of an address by President McKinley and another by Gen. Horace Porter. Their oratorical successes were not great, in view of the fact that they spoke out of doors in the teeth of a biting wind, and seemed to be addressing the whole of Manhattan Island and the Hudson River thrown in. The speeches read well, however, in type, and General Porter's, being the more formal and elaborate eulogy, was, as was to be expected, a deliverance of great historical and literary value. President McKinley's brief speech befitted the occasion.

As to the other notabilities, they were recipients of generous attention and applause. Most persons were able to pick out at once Vice-President Hobart, Governor Black, Speaker Reed, Mayor Strong and the Grant family. The grandchildren of the general, two of them bearing his own name, made a pretty sight as they stood in the front row of the party overlooking the parade, their curly heads coming just above the railing as their owners looked down upon the marching hosts with all the unfeigned interest of childhood. Of course the diplomats, the Cabinet officers and the members of Congress and the judiciary were also eagerly watched as they moved from point to point, and Mr. Cleveland, who rode in the carriage with Mr. Gilder of the Century, was warmly received.

To say about the procession that it was six hours and fifteen minutes in passing a given point, that 60,000 men participated in it, that never before have so many of the regular army and of the national guard been mobilized in this fashion, that in it were Union and Confederate veterans, the flower of our Northern militia and the crack company of Virginia, the Richmond Grays, painted Indians and the famous scout, Buffalo Bill, governors and generals, regulars, their faces bronzed with exposure in Western campaigns, and boys still in school, artillery and cavalrymen, simply states the bare facts of the magnificent pageant. One not there must supply by imagination the life and color, the movement and the glow that accompanied the scene. One must fancy the enthusiasm created by repeated renderings of the Star Spangled Banner and My Country, 'Tis of Thee on the one hand, and by Dixie and My Maryland on the other. One must conceive of a rapidly shifting panorama of moving colors, of brightly uniformed men, of artillery wagons, of troopers sitting like machines on their steeds, of marshals and staff officers brilliant in their regalia, and all this continuing hour after hour, the procession punctual to a dot, no waits after it once came in sight and no serious accidents along the way. The best marching, good judges said, was done by the West Point Cadets, as was to be expected, and by the regulars. The Seventh Regiment, the crack regiment of New York city, made a fine showing, and as a Massachusetts man I was glad to hear the applause which rained down upon the Boston Cadets, the escort of our erect and handsome governor, who was certainly the most distinguished civilian upon horseback that day. General Howard, leading the veterans, some of whom were chums of General Grant, was another striking figure, as he would take his bridle in his teeth to respond, with his one hand, to the salutes with which he was deluged. The naval battalion was particularly interesting and their gait striking, combining the landsman's precision with something of the sailor's roll.

As respects the tomb itself, the judges of good architecture are disposed to criticise its lines and its proportions, and there is considerable feeling that the $600,000 invested in the mausoleum might have been made to show more satisfactory results. Its solidity and plainness are impressive, and befit the man whose remains are deposited within. The interior is arranged somewhat after the plan of the Hotel des Invalides in Paris, where Napoleon is buried.

There were moments in the day when all the special features of the celebration seemed to be focussed in one picture. One such came about five o'clock in the afternoon, when, after reviewing the procession for nearly four hours, President McKinley left the stand to board the Dolphin in order to inspect the naval exhibit. The stream of marching men was still flowing by, the bands playing their spirited airs and the throng of spectators still crowding to the front. The sun, which had been captious about shining during the day, had by this time cleared itself of the clouds and poured down its welcome warmth upon the hosts of shivering spectators. From an elevation near the monument one could command the river, the parade, the presidential party, the moving throngs and the city stretching far to the south, while the silent mausoleum stood out as the stable feature in the scene. Then all at once were heard the booming of cannon and the sharp notes of steam whistles, and one knew that the day had reached its culmination and that all the elements that had contributed to its gayety and its solemnity were on the point of scattering, never again to be composed into the same picture. It was a sight never to be duplicated in the experience of those who witnessed it. H. A. B.

EUROPEAN TRAVEL

II. TRAMWAYS AND COACHES

BY H. W. DUNNING, YALE UNIVERSITY

Having spoken in a previous article of railroads and steamboats, we now proceed to other less patronized and more local means of travel. The steam tramway is of comparatively recent date, but is doing much to cheapen and extend local travel. Holland and Belgium may be called its home. The country is level and the distances between towns are short, so the tramway has found here the place for which it is best suited. The cars are long and divided into two compartments. The first class is handsomely upholstered and generally provided with large windows. The tram runs along the high road, passing through the main street of each village on the route, so it is practically equivalent to driving in a private carriage. One can travel all over Holland on the tramways and steamboats. For instance, he can go from Rotterdam to Delft by boat, thence by tram via The Hague and Leyden to Haarlem, and then by boat or train to Amsterdam. Enjoyable trips can be taken from Amsterdam north or south.

Next to the Low Countries, Italy employs the tram. North Italy and the plain of Lombardy have several lines. Many of them run up into the foothills of the Alps. One goes from Padua to Fusina, whence a steamer can be taken direct to the Square of St. Mark in Venice. From Rome the excursion to Hadrian's Villa and Tivoli is easily made in this way. Naples has several lines in all directions. But, unfortunately, the Italian is far different from the Dutchman, especially in the matter of cleanliness, so that our unqualified recommendation of Dutch tramways cannot be extended to those of Italy. Many of the larger cities of Europe have lines of tramways running to their suburbs. Not far from Copenhagen there is a curious car which enters a lake, becomes a steamboat and emerges as a tramcar again.

Until within the last three-quarters of a century travelers by land were entirely dependent upon the stagecoach, so the post roads were placed under government management and attained to a high degree of perfection. Today the railroad has taken the place of most of the old stage lines, but throughout the mountainous districts of Switzerland, Bavaria and the Tyrol the old diligence still holds sway. The latter country affords an especially delightful trip. The diligence is a species of stagecoach plying upon the mail routes. In Austria it is known as the "malleposte" or "eilwagen." A seat in the coupé with the driver costs a little more than an inside place, but of course the latter is undesirable for the tourist. The "stellwagen" is a slower and clumsier conveyance which only survives in the most rural districts. For a party of three or more it is generally cheaper and always pleasanter to travel by private coach. Often the postmaster will provide one upon receipt of notice, or an entire private outfit may be hired. In the former case the horses will be changed at the usual stations and the charges are fixed by law according to the distance, while in the latter the same horses are retained through the journey and a private contract is made. The driver is entitled to the payment of his return expenses. Sometimes a returning coach can be hired at a much reduced rate. In Spain the diligence is often fitted with a rear coupé. This has the lowest priced seats but it is often the most desirable place.

In Norway the traveler often has to make use of the "stolkjærre" or "kariol." The former is the larger vehicle. The posting stations are divided into two classes. At the so-called "faste" stations horses must always be kept in readiness; at those called "tilsigelse" the postmaster is allowed a certain time to furnish them. English travelers change these terms into "fast" and "slow," although neither is a correct translation. In some portions of the country a charge for more than the actual distance is allowed on account of the hills or poor quality of the road. The traveler usually drives himself, and in that case is liable for all accidents. Upon many of the rivers and lakes unprovided with steamers a service of row-boats is managed on a similar plan.

Pedestrian tours are by no means things of the past, the mountain districts of Switzerland and the Tyrol being especially fitted for them. There are many parties of German and English students and occasionally a father and his sons. Sometimes the daughters go, too. The English have a great advantage over us, for they can go from London to Switzerland in a day at an expense of ten dollars. Many practical suggestions can be found in Baedeker's guidebooks. Don't walk for the sake of economy. Where transportation costs less than a cent a mile it does not pay to walk to save money. But if the walk is the object and not the means of your trip then go ahead. Many countries have tourist clubs. They set up guideposts, construct paths, build huts of refuge and hotels and circulate literature pertaining to travel. The subscription price is usually about a dollar and entitles one to the club's journal and to preference and special rates at its hotels.

Becoming a Christian

Representative Opinions Regarding Conversion and Personal Salvation

We have recently sought from several representative persons brief replies to this question: "How would you answer a man who came to you with the questions, What is conversion, and how can I be saved?" We made these inquiries in the hope that the answers would prove helpful to many who, as the result of the revival work of the past winter, may be thinking for the first time of the question of their personal salvation. We print below the answers received. Editorial comment will be found elsewhere.

DWIGHT L. MOODY

Conversion is the sinner's turning to God. God regenerates him by his Holy Spirit, he gives him a new heart, and the first thing that new heart does is to freely turn to God. That, as I understand it, is conversion. It's the sinner's own act after he has been born again. It's the first step in a holy life, and every step that follows it is a renewed conversion.

If a man were to ask me, How can I be saved? I should answer as Paul did, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." And if asked to explain that word "believe" I should say it meant not merely to admit that Jesus Christ lived, or that he was a holy man and told the truth, but to put trust and confidence in him as a personal Saviour. And I should enforce that meaning by such expressions as that in Isa. 45: 22, which urges us to "look" to Christ, or John 1: 12, which tells us to "receive" him, or John 6: 35, which invites us to "come" to him, or Heb. 6: 18, which bids us "flee" to him, or 2 Tim. 1: 12, which speaks of one as having "committed" himself to him. The man who commits himself to Jesus Christ is the man who believes in him and is saved. And this is a very simple and easy thing to do, and it only takes a moment to do it. May God use this testimony to move some lost soul to believe on his Son.

PRESIDENT HYDE OF BOWDOIN COLLEGE

Man is by nature the child of appetites and passions, which in themselves are neither good nor bad. When, however, natural impulse clashes with our own welfare, the rights of others and the laws of God, it becomes bad. This collision is at first thoughtless, not deliberate. Then it is naughtiness, not wickedness—badness, but not "imputed" sin. Not until we wake up to a realizing sense that we are making fools of ourselves, wronging others and offending God does our wrongdoing deepen and harden into conviction of sin.

Then comes the gospel message that the offended God is the Father whose love and grace the life and sacrifice of Christ reveal; that our wronged and suffering fellows are our brothers, whom we, like Christ, may help and serve. Touched by the love of God, attracted by the opportunity of Christian service, we renounce our folly, our selfishness, our sin, and accept the love of the Father, the fellowship of Christ and the service of our brothers as the spirit of a new and better life. This is conversion. It may come as suddenly as a flash of lightning out of midnight darkness. More often it comes as silently and imperceptibly as daylight breaks upon the sleeping world at dawn. Without it, in some form or other, no man can see the kingdom of God.

Brunswick, Me.

DR. THEODORE L. CUYLER

Personal experiences differ as much as human faces, but there are two things that are vital to every case of genuine conversion. The one is sincere repentance of your sins, and the other is obedience to Jesus Christ. Repentance means a great deal more than "feeling badly"; it signifies both a change of heart toward sin and a change of conduct. Pray earnestly that the Holy Spirit will change your heart and help you to change your conduct. You may ask, "Must not I believe on the Lord Jesus Christ if I would be saved?" Yes, very true. But saving faith is more than an opinion, and more than a feeling—it is an act. It is the act of yielding your heart to Jesus and of joining your weak soul to him as your atoning Redeemer and Lord. His command to you is "follow me." The Holy Spirit working on your conscience bids you do a certain thing to please and obey Jesus Christ. Do it. When you honestly take any step, either in abandoning a sin or doing a duty, and do this to please Christ, then conversion has begun. You have broken with Satan as your old master and accepted Christ as your new master.

Make your religion more a matter of conscience than of emotion. Dig deep; lay your foundation on Christ as the solid rock. Shallow conversions make shallow Christians. Your best "inquiry meeting" will be an honest hour alone with Jesus Christ. Nobody else can save you; settle the mighty question of your soul's salvation with him.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

BISHOP F. D. HUNTINGTON

Each inner human life has a moral "drift," or direction. The directions are two—God-ward or self-ward. Illusions are many. In either one there are gradations and deviations. But the alternative is a constitutional necessity. Whenever the individual with normal faculties comes to a choice between the two, responsibility begins. Prior to that choice character cannot be predicated. The moral condition of the "natural" man is undetermined and irregular. "Regeneration" is God's way of putting a soul into the kingdom or family of Christ. There must be the consent of faith on the part of the person or promisers, but the act of grace is that of the Holy Spirit. Hence the meaning of the word. We are not born of ourselves. Baptism is the seal of the Spirit, the sign of the promise or covenant. The final effect is conditioned upon repentance, personal faith and steadfast obedience.

Salvation is not yet secured. Conversion is another thing. It is the voluntary return, the turning back, of a soul that has gone astray. Free will is the decisive agent, accepting the Spirit's power and pleading, which works within "both to will and to do." The direction is changed. The drift is heavenward. Life comes under God's law of righteousness. The effort of teaching, preaching and intercession by the gospel is to move the heart, the conscience and the will to yield, to obey and to live the everlasting life. This is salvation. The change may be sudden, instantaneous, such are the laws of the mind, or it may be gradual, as are the great movements of divine Providence in nations and the church. The time element falls out. The personal direction may be reversed by a right-about-face, or by a movement that is curvilinear.

Syracuse, N. Y.

DR. EDWARD P. GOODWIN

It is the human side of regeneration. It is the man renouncing sin and seeking righteousness, giving up his own way and taking God's way. It implies a revelation of the desires and dispositions of the heart that condemns the man as a sinner and without hope of salvation unless he have help outside of himself. It faces him toward the cross of Christ as the one and only way of cleansing and deliverance. It is consummated when he clasps that with the cry, "Be merciful to me, a sinner." When genuine it always leads to and implies the new birth.

Paul's answer to the trembling and convicted jailer gives the answer that saved him, and will save every one that will accept it, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house." What is believing on Jesus Christ? Taking him as the Son of God dying on the cross as the propitiation or sacrifice for our sins, dying the just for the unjust that we might have forgiveness for his sake. Our Lord's own words are, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Nothing could be simpler. No waiting to have hard questions answered, insoluble mysteries cleared up. No waiting for more light or more feeling or more favorable circumstances. A sense of personal need, of not being right with God and a looking trustingly unto Jesus. The dear old hymn that has helped so many souls into the kingdom covers it all:

> Just as I am, without one plea,
> But that thy blood was shed for me.
> And that thou bid'st me come to thee,
> O, Lamb of God, I come!

Whoever comes like that will have then and there the healing touch of God laid upon his soul, and from the moment of such trust will be, upon the authority of the Lord Jesus, a possessor of eternal life.

Chicago.

MRS. MARGARET BOTTOME, PRESIDENT OF THE KING'S DAUGHTERS

I should say, "Ye must be born again." And when Nicodemus asked him how, Christ's answer was: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." So the work done on the cross is what the unconverted man must see, for salvation is there, and the Holy Spirit alone can awaken—convince of sin.

As a measure of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal, I would tell a man who wanted to be saved to pray for the Holy Spirit to lead him. And as the Spirit takes of the things of Jesus and shows them to us he will show the sincere seeker the work done on the cross for him. I remember hearing Henry Ward Beecher say he had pointed sinners to Christ till his arm was tired, but he had never gotten one to see him, but the Holy Spirit reveals Christ, and to know this is eternal life.

New York.

DR. GEORGE A. GORDON

If one should ask the question, "How can I be saved?" there could be, in my opinion, no hesitation about the form of the answer. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." To the Biblical call for supreme help here is the sovereign Biblical response.

But among the many hundreds of young people who have come to me on the most serious errands, with hearts full of the most solemn questions, I have never once met a soul that framed its appeal in the familiar words, "What must I do to be saved?" That precise question I have never been asked except by an ecclesiastical council. Living souls are not made upon traditional patterns. They come with the immediate touch of the Holy Spirit upon their interests, and with the awe that he inspires in their faces. Experiences that are genuine preparations for Christian discipleship are not framed to suit fixed theological rules. Hearts that have found God, without knowing it, in the joy and hope, in the regret and disappointment of life itself, must be met by fresh, sympathetic and ever-varying applications of that gospel, which is the power of God to every one who believeth. Hypothetical questions can be met with hypothetical answers, and the whole procedure sounds fine and complete until a living soul that has gone some hitherto untraveled road turns up with the divine appeal in its face.

The prevailing mood among those who have come to me upon serious errands has been one of dissatisfaction with the past, and the desire for a better righteousness. These feelings of regret and new desire have, of course, varied all the way from their slightest to their deepest forms. And I have found that the gospel has moved them because it held out the sure hope of a new beginning, and because it promised the increasing possession of a real righteousness. The sense of a fresh start in life, the faith in the gradual possession of a better righteousness under the sovereign influence of Christ, I look upon as conversion on its practical side.

One cannot doubt the continued presence of God with men when looking upon the souls that are responding to his call. One cannot question the reality of a perpetual revelation of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit when in awe and hope one turns to look upon the great sight of hearts aflame with the Ineffable Presence. To find these serious and inspired questioners ready to accept Jesus Christ as the Teacher of their minds, as the Friend of their hearts, as the Master of their wills, as the Redeemer of their total life, is to be introduced anew to the ultimate realities of the Christian faith; it is to feel the power that is forever making the unwritten Bible of the world; it is to stand face to face with God.

Boston.

CURRENT HISTORY NOTES

Pittsburg suffered on Monday a loss of over $2,000,000 by fire, consuming many wholesale and retail business houses.

Fire Marshall Whitcomb of Boston, after carefully investigating the causes of the subway disaster of March 4, blames the transit commission for not adopting precautionary measures.

Speaker Reed received a vindication on Monday from the House, thirty-three Democrats, including Mr. Bailey, voting with the Republicans to sustain the speaker in not appointing committees.

Sunday witnessed the passing into effect in New York city of the amendments to the Raines law. They were generally enforced, and the improvised hotels, which have been doing a big Sunday liquor business for many months, were closed.

The exposition at Nashville in honor of the centennial of Tennessee was opened with impressive ceremonies last Saturday. At a given signal President McKinley at Washington pressed the telegraph instrument, and at once the people on the ground indulged in jubilations.

The Secretary of War announces that any religious denomination may build a chapel at West Point under the same conditions as those under which Roman Catholics are building a chapel there. That seems to dispose of the complaint that favoritism is being shown to that denomination.

Trinity Church, whose building is still a famous landmark on Broadway, facing Wall Street, New York, even though great office buildings multiplying in lower Broadway begin to overshadow it, celebrated the 200th anniversary last Sunday. Its charter bears the seal of William III. It includes nine chapels, in addition to the parish church, besides a hospital, many industrial schools, guilds, clubs and parish associations. Its property would probably foot up well toward $20,000,000.

The New Congregational House

To Be Erected at 12 and 14 Beacon Street, Boston

When definite steps were contemplated with reference to a new building in Boston for the denomination the question at once arose whether the structure should be exclusively devoted to denominational uses, and, therefore, comparatively small, or whether the example of the Tract Society and the Presbyterians in New York city be followed, and an office building of large proportions be erected. There was but little sympathy with the latter proposition, and the outcome now reached is a projected structure which, while providing some accommodation for desirable outside tenants, is mainly devoted to the needs and uses of the denomination. Its distinctively Congregational character is thus entirely assured. The building will be only eight stories high, but will be sufficiently large and imposing to take rank among noteworthy modern structures.

The possibility of having a hall sufficiently large for the meetings of the Congregational Club and other large assemblages was submitted to the architects, but abandoned because it was seen that it would necessitate the setting apart of more space than could be afforded, and, inasmuch as the occasions are so few when such an assembly room would be in demand, and it is so easy for other halls in the neighborhood to be obtained, there will be general approval of the plan decided upon.

The committee having in charge the procuring of plans for the building proceeded in the most careful and thorough manner to obtain the best results, and on Feb. 1 invited four architectural firms in this city to submit plans in competition for the building. In order that the decision should be unprejudiced the architects were requested to submit their designs under some device or motto without their names appearing. These four architects submitted their plans under the nom de plumes "Scrooby," "Anchor," "Crusader," "1630." After the committee had carefully examined the plans and taken expert advice on the same, they unanimously decided in favor of "Scrooby," and upon opening the sealed envelopes found the design was that of Shepley, Rutan & Coolidge. They are the successors of the late Mr. H. H. Richardson, and have offices in this city, Chicago and St. Louis. They have designed many large buildings, among which are the Ames Building, Chamber of Commerce, Northern Union Station, the new Southern Union Station and new front of Trinity Church, all in this city; the Chicago Public Library and Chicago Art Institute; the Leland Stanford University in California; the Montreal Board of Trade; the Howard Library and Pickwick Club in New Orleans; public library buildings in Springfield, O., and New London, Ct.

The design of the exterior is colonial in style, and it is monumental rather than ecclesiastical. The connection of the Congregational denomination with the first settlements in this country has been emphasized in the design by placing between the second story windows four panels with carving representing the Embarkation at Delfs-Haven, the Signing of the Compact in the Cabin of the Mayflower, the Landing on Plymouth Rock and the Treaty with the Indians. The building will be made thoroughly fireproof with steel skeleton frame construction. The most modern and approved method of heating and ventilating will be employed.

The entrance from Beacon Street will be in the center of the building, with a store on either side. One will be occupied by the Sunday School and Publishing Society. In the rear of the first story, facing the Granary Burying-ground, will be offices or stores for renting. In the sub-basement will be the boiler, engine and dynamo rooms, and storage room for the American Board. The basement will be occupied by the S. S. and P. S. and the shipping-room of the American Board.

The assembly hall, seating 300, is located in the basement at the rear, with windows eight feet high opening directly on the Granary Burying-ground. This hall will have an entrance from Beacon Street and is accessible either by two fast-running elevators or by a double flight of stairs. It has also an entrance through a passageway twelve feet wide from Park Street, from which the hall is reached by a single flight of stairs. Adjoining floors will be occupied by the missionary societies, while considerable office room will be available to the general public. The building will have two high-speed hydraulic elevators in its center, easily accessible from all the offices. The material suggested for the exterior for the first two stories is pink Milford granite, with the upper portion of the building red brick with marble trimmings.

The plans for the new building place the library in the rear half of the second and third stories, looking out on the Granary Burying-ground, and thus securing unobstructed light. In place of the old arrangement—a high interior surrounded by alcoves—will be a separate reading room, 23 x 40 feet and more than twenty feet high, a stackroom with a capacity of nearly 140,000 volumes, a librarian's room and a cataloguing room. Thus opportunity will be provided both for future growth and for the administrative system essential to the well-being of a modern library. In connection with the library there will be two well-lighted committee-rooms, which will be at the disposal of the occupants of the building.

The location of the present library renders its very existence unknown to the average Bostonian, but the collection already numbers nearly 40,000 volumes, besides a larger number of pamphlets, etc. Its chief departments were described in an article in The Congregationalist of July 13, 1893. Other libraries excel it in many respects, but as to all matters connected with the history and life of our local churches its special excellence is apparent, and would be greatly enhanced if it could obtain such material from every church.

The new house will be the property of the American Congregational Association, a society founded in 1853, under the name of the Congregational Library Association, to preserve the religious history and literature of New England. Its scope was soon enlarged to include the securing of a home for our benevolent societies, and in 1864 it took its present name. The management is vested in a board of thirty directors, ten of whom are ministers and twenty laymen. The president of the association is Samuel Johnson.

Owing to a succession of financial difficulties, the association has never been able to reach the goal aimed at—the providing free rentals for our benevolent societies. The twofold object, however, has always been kept in view, and while other religious bodies have erected denominational buildings in this and other cities, the Congregationalists alone have made the library a conspicuous feature.

Our readers will remember that last June the present Congregational House was sold and the new site purchased. A lease of the old building for two years was procured, so that the various enterprises centering here will not have to be disturbed until June 19, 1898, by which time it is expected that the new building will be ready. The association sold its property for $600,000, and bought the land at Nos. 12 and 14 Beacon Street for $310,000 Deducting commissions and some other necessary expenditures, and having paid the long-standing debt of $142,000, the association will have about $125,000 remaining towards the cost of the new building, which is estimated at about $300,000.

In and Around Chicago

Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus

The air is full of all sorts of rumors about a call from the Broadway Tabernacle to Dr. Gunsaulus. That church would act wisely were it to extend him a call and then furnish him the means of doing the work in the heart of the city which he desires to do and which he is so well fitted to do. But it will not be an easy thing to remove him from Chicago. He has now been pastor of Plymouth Church ten years. In December he will have been at the head of Armour Institute five years. His management of it has been remarkably successful. It has a constant attendance of more than 1,100 pupils, the majority of them from those poorer classes which both Mr. Armour and Dr. Gunsaulus are so desirous of reaching. It would seem almost disastrous to the interests of the institute to have him leave it at present. The Plymouth people will not give up their pastor without a struggle. Whenever he preaches the church is packed to the doors. But Plymouth has become a down-town church also, and its problem is how to take care of the crowds which frequent its morning services and at the same time provide for the demands of a family church. It has been proposed to build a tabernacle, seating 4,000 or more, on Grand Boulevard near 47th Street, where so many of the families reside, and also to continue services mornings in the present church and secure the Auditorium, or some other suitable building, for an evening service in the very heart of the city. Various plans will be carefully considered, and we may safely trust the Plymouth people and their pastor to arrive at a wise decision.

Dr. Willard Scott

It is well understood in Chicago that Dr. Scott has recently received a flattering call to an important church East, but has declined it on the condition that measures be taken to secure for him better facilities for carrying forward his work here. Since the World's Fair the trend of population has been into and beyond the field the South Church occupies. In order the better to cover the whole field south of the old city limits at 39th Street, it has been thought wise by many to move South Church a few blocks further south and erect a larger house of worship, in which sittings can be furnished at a moderate price and better opportunities afforded for Sunday school work. This church is fast becoming the center of our work on the South Side. Dr. Scott has been eminently successful as a pastor, and has attracted large congregations. He is a hard worker, is devoted to his church and is deserving of the success which has come to him. It is to be hoped that in the proposed changes the vast region between the South Church and the center of the city will not be left without some provision for the Congregationalists who still live, and are likely to live for many years, in that region.

Resignation of Dr. Johnson

Sunday, April 25, Dr. J. G. Johnson of the New England Church read his resignation and set forth some of the reasons which have led him to the step. The tendency of population during his pastorate has been away from the region in which the church is situated, and its problem has become the problem of the down-town church. He is a preacher of exceptional ability, a scholarly man, attractive in his personality, always in demand in difficult cases and wherever advice is needed, honored and beloved by his brethren. Fortunate will that church be which secures his services. May 29 he intends to sail with his daughter for Europe, whence, after a short visit in Great Britain and on the Continent, he will return ready for work. No man could leave our circle whose presence will be more missed.

Lack of Church Accommodations

Were one to attend the services of any of our older and stronger churches, some empty sittings would indicate an abundance of room for strangers. But the indication would hardly suggest the cause of these vacant places. Were one to listen to the sermons in these churches for several Sundays in succession, one would say, Certainly the preaching is not at fault even if larger numbers do not hear it. Were one to go west or south or north, one would find that the people who are wont to fill our churches have removed miles and miles from the vicinity of churches which only a very few years since were in the midst of the residence population, but which are now surrounded by boarding houses and flats, and that these once active church members are too far from their home church to attend its services with any regularity and are too poor to contribute large sums toward erecting suitable houses for worship in their immediate neighborhood. The truth is, changes in the location of our population occur faster than we are able to meet the demands which these changes make. But the brethren are not indifferent to these problems. They are discussing them carefully and without doubt will find a solution ere long. But let no one think for a moment that the solution will be easy or that a pastorate in Chicago is a bed of roses.

A Greek Meeting

The Ministers' Meeting Monday assumed the character of a meeting of sympathizers with the Greeks in their fruitless struggle against the Turks. Father Phiamboulos, the Greek priest, gave an account of the present troubles, and traced the causes which led the Greeks to take up arms in behalf of Crete. It was, he said, a brotherly act; 300,000 Christians on the island had appealed for protection against the 50,000 Turks who had been set over them, and who had massacred them on the slightest excuse. He described the feeling among the 2,000 and more Greeks in Chicago, and appealed for aid in sending volunteers to Greece and for money for the refugees in Athens. Professor Scott called attention to some of the reasons why the Powers cannot side with Greece even in fighting for the liberty-seeking Cretans. Others spoke in behalf of Greece, and a resolution of hearty sympathy for that country was adopted favoring the appeal of the Greek priest for pecuniary assistance.

The Lake Front Park

A third banquet has just been held to consider the plans of Mr. D. H. Burnham, the architect who had so much to do with the creation of the White City, for a park six miles long in front of the city. It will begin at the southern end of the present Lake Front Park, near Twelfth Street, and will be connected with the North Shore drive by a tunnel. The cost will be many millions, but if the authority to issue bonds is given by the legislature it is thought there will be no difficulty about getting the money. The wealth and enterprise of the city are interested in the plan. If realized it will make Chicago one of the most attractive cities in America, as well as one of the most healthful. The control of the proposed improvement, which is less of an undertaking than the preparations for the Columbian Exhibition, will be intrusted to the South Side park commissioners, who happily stand outside political influences and are chosen by the judges of the court for their merit alone. The land thus formed will be sold to meet the expenses of the project. If work begins on the improvement this summer there is no reason why it should not be completed in less than five years.

Traveling Libraries

Rev. S. E Lathrop, so well known in the South as the editor of the Helping Hand, now located at Ashland, Wis., has been spending a few weeks in Chicago soliciting aid in books and money for libraries to be circulated in the isolated regions of the North. Senator J. H. Stout, at his own expense, has provided the rural communities of Dunn County, Wis., with loan libraries. Hon. J. D. Witter of Michigan has done the same for the rural communities of Wood County in his State. Mr. Bradley of Tomahawk, Wis., is looking after the needs of those who reside in his vicinity. But the needs are far beyond the ability of private individuals to supply. As Mr. Lathrop came to understand them he persuaded a few persons to unite with him in a corporation known as the North Wisconsin Free Traveling Library Association, with headquarters at Ashland. As vice-president and field superintendent Mr. Lathrop gathers the books, assorts them, arranges them into small libraries and sends them out on their mission among the settlements. In the pineries of the North there are, he says, more than 200 of these settlements. The forty or fifty volumes, contained in a strong wooden box, provided with lock and key, and put into the hands of some one who is pledged to look after their circulation, are welcome visitors in the homes of these, for the most part, poor and isolated people. When a library has been in a place four or five months it is sent to another small town, and another substituted for it. The logging camps are also reached and it is needless to say that the lumbermen read the books put into their hands with avidity. The work is only just beginning, but enough has been done to prove the wisdom of the method by which it is carried on and to justify Mr. Lathrop in his appeals for aid. Responses in Chicago have been gratifying.

Green Street and Dr. C. O. Brown

Green Street Church, one of our younger organizations, has invited Dr. Brown to become its pastor. He has accepted the invitation and will begin his work in a week or so. For some months Dr. Brown has been living in Chicago, preaching for his brethren as opportunity offered, and conducting himself with such modesty and Christian fortitude as have won him many friends. It is hoped that the California conference will ere long see its way clear to restore him to his former standing and give him a letter of dismission to some association East. In that case the Dubuque Association would probably annul its action and thus do its part toward disentangling the ecclesiastical knot in which matters are at present. The salary of the Green Street Church at present is very small, and the house of worship of a temporary character, but it is likely to have a rapid growth.

Chicago, May 1. FRANKLIN.

Yale University has made great progress during the last ten years, which President Dwight impressively sets forth in his recent annual report. Fifteen new buildings have been erected, and over $4,000,000 have been given to the university. But the increase of students has more than kept pace with the improvements, and immediate needs are as pressing as ever. The library wants a further endowment. A school of architecture in connection with the art school is needed, and would cost $250.000. The medical department should have a new building; also the Sheffield Scientific School, which is now getting ready to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary next June. The departments want libraries, and graduate fellowships and scholarships are necessary to develop the graduate department, which has had a remarkable growth of late. In short, the evolution of Yale is going on nobly, but it can be largely and advantageously accelerated by the increased generosity of its friends.

The Home

THE MARYLAND YELLOW-THROAT*

While May bedecks the naked trees
With tassels and embroideries,
And many blue-eyed violets beam
Along the edges of the stream,
I hear a voice that seems to say,
Now near at hand, now far away,
Witchery—witchery—witchery!

An incantation so serene,
So innocent, befits the scene:
There's magic in that small bird's note—
See, there he flits—the yellow-throat;
A living sunbeam, tipped with wings,
A spark of light that shines and sings
Witchery—witchery—witchery!

You prophet with a pleasant name,
If out of Mary-land you came,
You know the way that thither goes
Where Mary's lovely garden grows.
Fly swiftly back to her, I pray,
And try, to call her down this way,
Witchery—witchery—witchery.

Tell her to leave her cockle-shells,
And all her little silver bells
That blossom into melody,
And all her maids less fair than she—
She does not need these pretty things,
For everywhere she comes, she brings
Witchery—witchery—witchery.

The woods are greening overhead,
And flowers adorn each mossy bed;
The waters babble as they run—
One thing is lacking, only one;
If Mary were but here today,
I would believe your charming lay,
Witchery—witchery—witchery.

Along the shady road I look;
Who's coming now across the brook?
A woodland maid, all robed in white—
The leaves dance round her with delight,
The stream laughs out beneath her feet—
Sing, merry bird, the charm's complete,
Witchery—witchery—witchery!

—Henry van Dyke.

* From The Builders and Other Poems, copyright, 1897, by Charles Scribner's Sons.

What sort of home training had the young man whose double crime of theft and murder recently startled a quiet New England town? Neither intemperance nor insanity has been urged as even a remote cause of the horrible deed. Are there any laws of heredity which must be taken into account in judging his conduct? Did he as a child show any tokens of having a defective moral sense, or must we charge this outbreak of passion to evil associations and environment in early life? The latter theory would probably be held by advocates of the bill now before the Massachusetts legislature, providing for a more careful supervision and a more natural and healthful environment for the 1,600 neglected and wayward children in State institutions. This policy of prevention rather than cure is in line with the progressive ideas of the day, and the alarming fact, based on recent statistics, that each year it is a younger set of men and lads who are responsible for the majority of crimes committed, shows the crying need to safeguard society by beginning reform in season.

"My neighbors are narrow-minded and not intellectually congenial, but I can't afford to neglect them." This remark, overheard in the course of a conversation at a woman's club, brings up afresh the problem of the desirable proportioning of time between social intercourse and efforts in the line of self-culture. It leads us to question whether some women are not so absorbed in the passion for acquiring knowledge that they are neglecting the old-fashioned virtues of neighborly kindness and sympathy. Without hesitation we may vote whist parties, afternoon teas, crowded receptions and formal calls not "worth while," but is there not danger that impatience with social demands may be carried so far that we shall forget our obligations to our neighbors? A bright, spicy letter to a lonely friend or a cheery call upon an elderly neighbor are as important to our own best development as a lecture on psychology or a reading from Shakespeare. Some one has declared that it is harmful to indulge our emotions by listening for hours to sublime music unless the uplift and inspiration thus gained be expressed in some practical act of helpfulness to others. Let the woman who is rushing from class to lecture and from lecture to club stop now and then to call on her next-door neighbor, or, perchance, to cheer some member of her own family.

THE PITY OF IT

BY MARTHA CLARK RANKIN

The little city of Raymond was in a state of great excitement. George Langdon, a young man who had been born and brought up in the town, and whose family was one of the best, had committed suicide. The news had flown throughout the city, carrying a shock everywhere. People could talk of nothing else, and a feeling of gloom and depression weighed down many a household. If such a thing could happen to the Langdons, who was safe? Proud fathers and fond mothers looked at their sons and daughters with fear and trembling. If George Langdon had found life unendurable, who could tell how their children might be regarding it? Altogether, such a day had never been known in Raymond before, though some of the older people likened it to the time of sorrow which followed the news of Lincoln's assassination.

"How do you explain it?" asked Mrs. Osgood of her husband, who had for years been principal of the Raymond High School, in which George Langdon had fitted for college. "You knew George well; did you have any suspicion of such a thing?"

"I had no thought of such a tragedy, surely. It must have been done under a sudden impulse, after some great disappointment which intensified feelings from which I know that he suffered. I have known George since he was twelve years old, and of late he has been much on my mind. Although he has been out of college only a few years he has found life sadly disappointing, and he has been thoroughly discouraged and disgusted with the existing order of things.

"I don't wish to reflect upon his parents, yet I can't help thinking that his untimely death is the result of an unfortunate 'bringing up.' From his earliest recollection he was taught to consider himself a wonder, while his ambition was stimulated in every possible way. He was constantly told that one of the great places of the world was waiting for him, that with his wonderful abilities he had only to do his best and the world would be proud to do him homage. A most brilliant future was prophesied for him over and over again by admiring friends and relatives.

"The boy was bright, and he had ambition enough, even had there been nothing to stimulate it. You know he was always at the head of his class at school and at the provincial college to which his parents, contrary to my advice, insisted on sending him. His college days over, he felt that there was no place in Raymond for such distinguished ability as his—nothing less than a fine position in New York could satisfy his ambition. Then his disappointments and disillusionments began.

"His abilities were excellent, and no doubt he would eventually have admirably filled some important position, but he had been led to expect too much. He had grown to think that such power as his could not fail of immediate recognition. He found that there were others quite as gifted as he—not one, nor half a dozen, but scores of them. In short, instead of being the wonder which he had always supposed himself, one disappointment after another forced upon him the unwelcome truth that his only chance was in struggling along with others just as gifted, in the hope of sometime winning a share of success and fame. Instead of the 'plenty of room on top,' which he had had preached to him all his life, he found the top fully occupied, and all the approaches filled with successful climbers waiting for a chance to swing into any vacancy the instant that it existed. No wonder that the poor fellow sank down in despair, unwilling to have his expectant friends mortified by his failure.

"I always felt that his great lack was strength of character, and this sad ending of his life convinces me that I was right. Yet I honestly think that he did the best he could considering his environment, which was the worst possible for his temperament. And that is what makes the case peculiarly sad. With right and judicious training he would have been a useful, successful, perhaps even a great man, instead of throwing away his own precious life and darkening the lives of his many friends.

"His is an extreme case, but there are many similar ones. I often tremble when I see our boys and girls growing up with ideas which cannot fail to end in unhappiness. It's the exception to find a boy who expects to be content with his father's lot in life. He is going to make more money, or know more, or be more famous, while his sister dreams of a handsomer house and more social prominence than her mother has ever had. Parents and teachers are largely to blame for this state of affairs, and it is time they awoke to the fact. It is a very different world from what it was fifty years ago. Had George Langdon lived then he might have speedily risen to a place of eminence. But now it is no longer a question between good and bad or even between better and best, but simply a matter of selecting from the best those who shall fill the few high places; for the prizes of life have not increased in proportion to the population, opportunities do not begin to equal desire and ability.

"What we need at the present time is an army of contented workers who are willing to fill places of moderate influence, who will do their best in full knowledge of the fact that wealth, fame, even general recognition will never be theirs. The majority must lead commonplace lives; they will never be very rich or very brilliant in any direction, but they may, nevertheless, live nobly and make the world purer and better for their existence. American children no longer need to have their ambition stimulated.

What they need to be taught is to do their best and 'be content with such things as they have,' and to feel that 'godliness with contentment is great gain.'

"Have I preached a sermon in answer to your question? This tragedy has moved me so deeply that I couldn't help it."

LATER FLOWERING TREES AND SHRUBS

BY JOSEPHINE E. CRAGIN

May and June are busy seasons for bees and blossoms. Fly honeysuckle is an odd little plant found in moist woods, with trumpet shaped twin flowers and pale red twin berries. Bush honeysuckles grace the hedges and attract the bees. Sumach blossoms are richly stored with honey. All day long the hum of the busy workers may be heard among them. But it is in autumn that sumachs are most striking and attractive, when both leaves and fruit show wonderfully rich and brilliant hues. The pointed clusters of berries, small, crimson and closely packed, of the stag-horn sumach possess great power of withstanding wind and weather. I have gathered them in April as perfect and unbroken as they were six months before.

Poison sumach, often, but wrongly, called dogwood, is a small, handsome tree bearing white berries, easily distinguished, and with its relative, poison ivy, should be carefully avoided. Fortunately for flower seekers these are the only plants we have that are poisonous to the touch. We have no poison dogwood.

Common elder is a graceful shrub both in flower and fruit. Its virtues were recorded more than two centuries ago by English botanists.

Quite unlike the bloom of all other trees are the round, feathery tassels of beech. It is said that in Europe beeches are never struck by lightning. Is this true of the American variety? If so, what secret of electricity explains it?

Very curious are the hop-like clusters of fruit, neither cone nor nut, which follow the flowers of the hop hornbeam, called in some parts of Massachusetts black hazel and Indian cedar. Common hornbeam gives still another variety, and red cedar, laden with bluish-white berries. In Russia branches of this cedar are often hung at the doors of houses in the belief that they will effectually keep away the witches from homes so guarded.

Cone bearing trees are less likely to win attention in flowering time than most others, though fully as well worthy of it. The sight of a group of pitch pines when the pollen is just ready to escape well repays a walk of miles. One hardly wonders at the belief of the ignorant in a superstitious age that showers of pollen from forests of Scotch fir were showers of brimstone.

Many members of the rose family contribute to the florà of early summer, among them the feathery steeplebush and meadowsweet of pastures and roadsides, blackberries and raspberries, giving promise of fruit to follow, and the showy purple flowering raspberry. This less common variety grows in profusion on the slope of Wachusett Mountain. More attractive than any of these is the white-flowered, scarlet-fruited hawthorn. Burns sang of the "songster's nest within the bush" of the English hawthorn. Many times I have seen these impenetrable thickets, beset with sharp, stout thorns, chosen as nesting-places of birds, seeming to defy the entrance of an enemy.

Bright June days bring bewildering variety in the out-of-door world. One hardly wishes to tarry indoors for an hour. The air comes heavy with the breath of chestnuts laden with tossing, creamy plumes. Seen at a distance on a wooded side hill among trees of deeper green, they appear like gleams of sunlight breaking through a clouded sky.

The various cornels and viburnums follow one another in quick succession. Some find it difficult to distinguish them. This need not be if it is remembered that cornel blossoms are always four-petaled and viburnums always five-petaled. The latest and loveliest, cornus sericea, has a fragrance like water lilies.

Lyonia lifts up panicles of dainty, ivory-white bells. Faultless, sweet-scented azalia, our American rhododendron, reigns now for a little while, but soon falls blushing to the ground to make room for laurel, the acknowledged queen of June. Probably no flower is so sought for and so prized.

> White with the whiteness of the snow,
> Pink with the faintest rosy glow,

it is a matchless flower. England has nothing to compare with it. Both azalia and laurel are largely transplanted to the gardens of the wealthy there.

But in our turn we are indebted to Europe for one of our most ornamental shrubs, barberry, equally beautiful, clustering with short, nodding racemes of golden flowers or drooping with its weight of deep red fruit. Aside from its usefulness it merits a place near our homes.

About midsummer round heads of buttonbush enliven the river banks, white and odorous, and still later, by low roadsides and meadows, sweet pepperbush of delicate beauty and rare fragrance greets us as we pass. Thus the words of the wise man are as true today as of old: "He hath made everything beautiful in his time."

DR. HÜ KING ENG

BY MRS. S. E. BRIDGMAN

Miss Butler, in The Congregationalist of April 8, described an interview between a young Chinese girl and Li, the famous Chinese statesman. He decided that this bright young lady should represent China at the World's Congress of Representative Women in London next year and that Dr. Hü King Eng, the first Chinese woman to study medicine in this country, should accompany her. I have before me the photograph of this already famous young physician, given us by her when she was our guest on one occasion, a few years ago. We recall vividly her vivacity, her artless manner, her faith in God, her hope for the future, her desire to finish her education to return to China for service, showing that a Chinese girl differs but little from an ambitious American student. She is a daughter of one of the most efficient and eloquent native ministers of the Foochow Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her mother belongs to the small-footed class of Chinese women.

As we sat at the tea table with Dr. Arthur Smith and other missionaries, the young physician's story of leaving her mother and taking the lonely journey across the sea was intensely interesting. She wore, as always, her native costume, which was very rich and beautiful. When asked where she procured such superb gowns she replied: "O, they come from my dear mamma who sends them to me from home. They are in a box. I take them out where they lay so pretty—for my own dear mamma makes them all. I place my hands on them because her dear hands placed them there for her little girl. When I come over I feel so bad—people were real kind—they thought me seasick, but I no seasick—I so homesick for mamma. I tell nobody, for I don't want to go back till I study medicine, and then go back to do much good to my own dear China."

THE GAME OF CHARACTERISTICS

Our family spends many a leisure hour in playing games. We consider ourselves, because of our many years' practice, connoisseurs, and just now Characteristics is a prime favorite. Its very simplicity adds to its charm. As many pencils and sheets of paper as there are players complete the equipment. Each person writes legibly—as it is not for his own personal use—at the top of his page the question, What is your name? Immediately below this he answers, using his own full name. Then the questions in succession, leaving a space below each for the reply, are written as follows:

What is your occupation in life?
What is your greatest virtue?
What is your worst fault?
Where do you best like to be?
What is your latest fad?
What is your favorite food?
Who is your favorite author?
What is your greatest aversion?
Whom do you love best?

When we have expected guests we have written the queries on the sheets beforehand to facilitate matters. After the questions are ready the papers are collected and redistributed, no one knowing into whose hands his name and fate have fallen. He must not have his own.

Then the game really begins. Each question must be answered in as many words as there are names at the top of the sheet, and each word of the answer must begin, in proper order too, with the initial of each name. For instance, suppose I have on my paper the name Arthur Estabrook Peterson. I might answer the question in regard to his occupation in life, "Amiably Evading Poverty," and "What is your greatest virtue?" "Answering Everyone Politely." Knowing his pride in play of words, I should surely say that his worst fault was, "Alas—Evil Punning," and in view of the fact that he seems at the present moment so pleased with his surroundings, I should probably reply to the question, "Where do you best like to be?" "At Evening Parties." Of course, the more jokes there can be made on the owner of the name on your paper the better, and often, too, sheer nonsense is the last resort, as sometimes the combination of letters is fatal to sense.

After the time specified at the beginning for the writing of the answers is passed, the papers are again distributed and read aloud. The jolliest way of doing this is to have the questions read in succession each time by the same person, and as he directs the serious questions to one of the players, he, in turn, will solemnly read the account on his paper of the character of the person whose name heads it. With a half-dozen or more of bright persons this game has proved exceedingly amusing. G.

Closet and Altar

Humility teaches us the necessity of prayer, fervor gives it flight and endurance, trust provides it with an immovable foundation.

Dear Lord and Bridegroom, I here vow and promise to thee surely, that all which thou willest I also will. Come sickness, come health, come pleasure or pain, sweet or bitter, cold or heat, wet or dry, whatever thou willest that do I also will; and desire altogether to come out from my own will, and to yield a whole and willing obedience unto thee, and never to desire aught else, either in will or thought; only let thy will be accomplished in me in time and in eternity.—Tauler's Covenant, 1340, A. D.

When I am sick and tired it is God's will;
Also God's will alone is sure and best—
So in my weariness I find my rest,
And so in poverty I take my fill.
Therefore I see my good in midst of ill,
Therefore in loneliness I build my nest,
And through hot noon pant toward the shady west,
And hope in sickening disappointment still.
So, when the times of restitution come,
The sweet times of refreshing come at last,
My God shall fill my longings to the brim:
Therefore I wait and look and long for him:
Not wearied, though the work is wearisome,
Nor fainting, though the time be almost past.
—Christina Rossetti.

Our Lord God doth like a printer, who setteth the letters backwards; we see and feel well his setting, but we shall read the print yonder, in the life to come.—Martin Luther.

Prayers for goodness and purity in a sense answer themselves, for you cannot pray for these things without in some measure receiving them in the very act. To lift up the soul to God calms and ennobles it. It was this, I imagine, that was the beginning of Christ's transfiguration. The absorption and delight of communion with his Father overspread his very face with beauty and glory. In some degree this happens to all who pray, and it may happen in a high degree to those who pray much.—James Stalker.

Almighty God, comfort us by thy fullness. Our strength is but weakness, our knowledge is but small, our wisdom is as naught, our vision narrow, our life but passing away. By thine eternal wisdom, thine unshaken power, thy constant years, thine unfailing love, uphold and comfort us. When out of patience with ourselves, as ofttimes we are; when, weary with our work, we come to think we might as well cease from it, for there seems to be no fruit of all our labor and we cry, like that sad soul of old, "Now, O Lord, take away my life for I am not better than my fathers!" when the fire of life is dying down, and the ashes of the old fire threaten to put out what little there is left; when the world has no new thing to teach; when the lights of life are dim, and when the oil of life has run out—Lord God! at these times let us think of thy long suffering, that the burdens thrown down in dull despair we may take again with fresh courage; that we may sing thy songs and tell one another of thy patience and love, and so be strong to endure even unto the end. Amen.

Tangles

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

40. CHARADE

(Phonetic.)

Said ONE to THREE, "O lady fair,
Would that we ne'er might part;
Will TWO not deign my home to share
And bless my faithful heart?"

Said THREE to ONE, "When far or near,
My heart goes out to TWO;
Dear ONE, I pray, dismiss your fear;
To TWO I will be true."

Now ONE and THREE have found their place
And made a happy home;
They strive to WHOLE a younger race,
And do not care to roam.

Mrs. John Allen.

41. THE ALPHABET ANALYZED

(By Sound.)

1. What three letters are the most stirring? 2. What three name a foe? 3. What two are jealous? 4. What four are always good? 5. What two are a vine? 6. What two name a nobleman who lost his head in 1601? 7. What three acknowledge a debt? 8. What two are in a bad condition? 9. What two are never hard? 10. What two have nothing in them? 11. What three are an image? 12. What two are very pungent? 13. What two are a short dissertation? 14 What two indicate superfluity? 15. What two mean to adorn?

Mattie W. Baker.

42. PIED DIAMOND

No chisel or mallet is needed
To sculpture a diamond here;
But patience and gumption, if heeded,
Will surely make everything clear.

These twenty-four letters before you,
If used in the proper way,
Form words long or short to suit you,
And fashion a diamond alway.

D D D D D
A A M A A
E E D E E
T R U R T
L M R M L

Effendi.

43. A TOUGH KNOT

A barn twenty five feet square stands in a corner of a large field, and to its projecting corner a horse is tied by a rope 100 feet long. Over how large an area can he graze?

H. H.

44. BURIED QUOTATION

(A line from one of Dryden's odes, one word in each line.)

It seems but yester eve I wooed my fair;
And what my pleasure was I now, in part,
Disclose, for she has vowed my lot to share,
Who long had been possessed of my heart.

Yet many a week has passed, but now draws near
The day that we've been waiting for, when two Whose minds and hearts are one, with naught to fear,
Shall pledge, my fair and I, our troth most true

Yes, weeks and months have flown, and in their place
The hopes we had of sweet and happy home
Abide; so now I check my anxious race,
And wait the hour when I no more shall roam.

Nillor.

45. SOME WELL KNOWN GENERALS

1. One that is not popular. 2. Always in poor health. 3. Always welcome. 4. One that needs watching 5. One that we should heed. 6. One we all agree with. 7. One we all enjoy.

C. A. S.

ANSWERS

35. Token (tow-ken).

36. 1. Reed, deer. 2. Stop, pots. 3. Pot, top. 4. Evil, live. 5. Lived, devil. 6. Reviled, deliver. 7. Rail, liar. 8. Draw, ward.

37. The letter L.

38. Braid, raid, aid.

39. Uncle Tom's Cabin; The Minister's Wooing.

Among solutions recently received are the following: Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt., 30 (in part), 31, 32, 33, 34; Mrs. Frances P. Tripp, Taunton, Mass., 33, 34; Abel, Malden, Mass., 31, 32, 33, 34; Marguerite H. Rogers, Bar Harbor, Me., 30, 32; Pearl, West Medford, Mass., 30, 31, 34; K. H. C., Woonsocket, R. I., 30, 32, 33, 34; P. N. Stanton, Cambridge, Mass., 30, 32, 34; L. C. D., Readville, Mass., 30 (in part), 32, 34; Mira Jacobus, Los Angeles, Cal., 27 (nearly complete)

We regret that the excellent answers of Miss Jacobus did not arrive in season for the prize contest.

Nillor calls attention to the fact that the answer to 26, as printed, may still puzzle some This is the full answer, but it should have been pointed out that the puzzle is an acrostic.

THE ART OF LOVE-MAKING

Those who read Rev. Dr. R F. Horton's helpful little book, The Art of Living Together, will welcome the companion volume which has just appeared, entitled The Four Pillars of the Home. The pillars which bear up the home are Purity, Love, Unselfishness, Discipline. In the chapter treating of the second of these he writes:

> It has always been a surprise to me that more has not been said on the subject of preserving love in the home. I estimate that the pillar of love needs re-establishing, lest decay should weaken its strength morning by morning, and furbishing, lest rust deform its beauty evening by evening. I counsel the master of the household to attend to this business before he concerns himself with other duties about the home stead, and the wife to be more scrupulous in this repolishing than in any other of her manifold diligences.
>
> Now of all minor guards to watch and cherish love there is none more neglected than courtesy. "Courtesy for the court, love for the home," seems the thought in many minds; nor is it remembered that love does not readily abide at home or at court without this little page to guard his slumbers and to carry his train. Why should we be boorish to people because we love them? That is a question seldom put and never answered in any satisfactory way. I think Christ smiles tenderly on young lovers at their wooing, but with a full heart on old lovers whose wooing has not ended with gray hairs.
>
> "Love-making" is a poor, wilted term which generally provokes a smile. I would raise love-making to a fine weaving art, at which none could laugh, and I would employ all hands in the home at this busy loom. Love making is not only the finest of fine arts, but it is the sweetest of good employments. Thoughtfulness is the warp and activity the woof. The design which grows on the piece is very beautiful to see. Children can work at this loom, and, indeed, in some homes it is left entirely to them. Husband and wife turned sick at heart from the loom long ago, and for want of making love with one another they lost the power of making it with their children. It is an art which dies from disuse, and once discontinued it is taken up again with stiff and awkward fingers.
>
> How lightly we talk of love, forgetting that it is God! If God had not come to dwell in our tents, as St. John calls it, to be in our homes, as we should say now, this wonderful pillar of home had not existed. Nay, before the coming of Christ I doubt if the world knew what love in the home could be. And if in our homes the fair pillar stands propping the roof-tree, if we know what it is to love one another from a clean heart fervently, shall we not bow in gratitude and worship to the Father of the home and ask him that we may learn to cherish and maintain the good gift which he has deigned to give?

Children's Sunday school papers and picture cards are much desired at Hampton, Va., for distribution to needy Sunday schools of colored children. Any such contribution will be gratefully received. Packages of such papers should be addressed to Graduates' Department, Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.

WORKING WOMEN'S CLUBS AT PHILADELPHIA

Nature and all Philadelphia smiled a broad welcome on the 250 and more delegates to the Working Women's Convention, as they hastened to the city of Brotherly Love the last three days of April. Along the prosaic railroad tracks leading to the city, cherry trees, wild and cultivated, were out in bridal white and a delicate scattering of pink peach blooms suggested the bridesmaid's decorations. The city itself never looked fairer and the great park, with its pleasant reminder of the centennial year to many visitors, was green and lovely.

Morning sessions of the convention were held in the New Century Club rooms. There was but one afternoon session and in the evening the crowds gathered at the Drexel Institute or at Horticultural Hall. The clubrooms are decorated in ethereal tints and suggest lofty themes. Over the platform the word Salve offers a perpetual welcome to this or any succeeding convention of women philanthropists.

The assembly was unique. Here, sitting side by side and each equally interested in the discussions, were the girl of slender means and the lady who came in her carriage. This, in itself, was less unique than the dominating sentiment of the occasion. The rich and the poor often meet together and generally forget that "the Lord is the maker of them all." The mingling of representatives of these two great classes seldom results in harmony or affection. But sitting in the beautiful drawing-room of the New Century Club those April mornings one was forced to believe that a millennial spirit really exists, to an unusual degree, in this little band of workers. The faces of such well-known women as Miss Edith Howes, Miss Frances J. Dyer and Miss Lillian Richards of Boston, Miss Grace Dodge, Miss Virginia Potter of New York, Mrs. Effingham Perot, Miss Fisher, Mrs. Kirkbride, Miss Sibley and a score of other workers, shone with a spiritual light which must have proceeded from genuine, hearty benevolence. These women really love their less fortunate sisters, and because of that love are warmly received by them and are able to help them. Shams are quickly detected in the heart realm.

Of all the bright, suggestive, practical papers and discussions which occupied the three days' session it is impossible to write. Harmony pervaded all the proceedings. Each member had come to give and receive practical ideas, not to insist or persist. The girls themselves were a vital part of the convention and presented thoughtful papers. The general topic of the Thursday session was Trades Unions and the Labor Question. Miss O. M. E. Rowe read a bright, comprehensive paper on Shorter Hours of Work, and Mr. Isaac Clothier, the well-known Philadelphia merchant, was listened to with interest on The Employer's Point of View; but the interest did not wane when girls from carpet factories and stores set forth the best and the worst conditions of the employed, with little circumlocution and much emphasis.

Religion in the Club was the attractive, perplexing question which occupied a part of a morning session, and was treated in a singularly sensible fashion. The Club Plus Religion Equals Friction was the formula presented by Miss Lowrie of Philadelphia in a very quaint address. If a guild is composed of many sects, the teaching of sectarianism means danger. The truth of the whole matter appeared in a paper prepared by a New York working girl shut up in a hospital, and was read by Miss Grace Dodge. The right kind of religion is not outward form but an inward grace. Deeds and words, not preaching, reach the heart. If the teacher or director of the club is as she wishes the girls to be, the girls will soon find it out. The inspiration of personal character is the most forceful religious teaching that can possibly be given. Causes of success and of failure in clubs for working women were presented in a series of short, practical papers from Massachusetts clubs. Certain rules were emphasized, such as: Ask no question of members that you would not ask outside; study other things than bookkeeping and current news; refinement and courage should have their place; cultivate real sympathy and interest between members; teach how to be rather than how to seem ladies; abide by business principles; visit sick members; know your members intimately; have plenty of music, brightness, fun and motion; be sure to get a pleasant room for the meetings; keep each member busy.

The Rainy Day Club of New York sent down as its delegate Miss E. Marguerite Lindley, who wore an attractive but abbreviated tweed costume, and who presented the true idea of the club when she said that, if the mistress would wear a suitable gown on rainy days, the maids would soon wish to adopt the same costume.

Two papers presented at the Thursday evening session at the Drexel Institute would have attracted special attention even if the author of one of them had not been an editor of The Congregationalist. Miss Dyer's paper on How to Read a Newspaper was rich in thought and delivered with rare charm. Back of the paper, in the hearts of all who knew her, rose the record of her work for and with Boston girls, and this alone would have commanded interest and attention. Miss Dyer advocated judicious study of the daily paper as an incentive toward a liberal education.

An encouraging feature of the convention was the gracious hospitality extended to delegates, eight out of ten being working women, by the best citizens of Philadelphia. Not only were the University of Pennsylvania, the Drexel Institute, the Y. W. C. A. and the School of Industrial Art opened for social entertainments, the presidents acting as hosts, but beautiful private residences, as that of Mrs. W. L. Elkins, extended full hospitality to the stranger guests. The Pennsylvania Society of Colonial Dames entertained the convention at tea in Independence Hall, and less public courtesies from some of Philadelphia's proudest dames showed that the organization has gradually made its way to the hearts of the fortunate ones of the country.

The presence of a large number of wage-earners has been mentioned. In many clubs funds were raised in various ways in order to defray the expenses of delegates. These keen-witted girls thoroughly enjoyed the discussions, social pleasures, insight into the lives of other workers and the glimpses of industrial art which rouse the ambition of all progressive workers in these lines. If the convention had no other meaning it would be something to have listened to words of wisdom from the lips of remarkable women and to have been entertained in such royal fashion by college presidents and ladies of highest culture. The wage-earners (we are all workers, either for love or for money, said Mrs. Perot) wore happy faces, easily made friends with each other and plainly delighted in their unusual holiday.

The choicest sights of the city were shown to the visitors. Glimpses of Cramp's shipyard, Independence Hall, libraries and museums, the battleship Iowa and beautiful Fairmount Park in its early spring loveliness agreeably varied the consideration of serious problems. On each of the three days a delicious luncheon was served to all guests in the parish rooms of St. Luke's Church. Tables were generously decorated with apple blossoms, cowslips and violets in artistic designs. A long line of carriages was in waiting outside the church each day to convey guests to places of interest. What could the Pennsylvania Association do more, was the thought of each gratified guest as good-bys were said.

A national league of clubs and guilds, having for their object the welfare of working women, was decided upon and resolutions concerning its formation were presented by Miss Edith Howes of Boston. H. M. N.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, APRIL 30

The leader, Mrs. W. H. Fairchild, assistant treasurer of the board, choosing for her subject God's Injunction to Joshua, "Be strong and of a good courage," spoke of courage as one of the greatest virtues and as a necessary supplement to faith in illustrating the topic by the story of the warrior of old whose invincible sword struck terror and dismay among the ranks of his enemies. His king sent for the sword that he might examine it and discover wherein lay its magic power, but returned it to the soldier saying that he could not see that it was more than an ordinary weapon. "Ah, sire!" said the owner, "I could have told you that there was nothing in the sword itself; but if you will examine the arm and the heart behind it you will find the secret."

The topic, in these times of discouragement, struck a chord that touched all hearts, as was shown by all the other speakers.

Mrs. Capron, Mrs. Kellogg, Miss Adams and others contributed to the deepening of the impression, and Miss Elsie M. Garretson of Foochow spoke of the constant source of strength and comfort which the "fear nots" of the Bible had been to her in her missionary experience, and said that, in returning to her work as she hopes to do in the autumn, it was a joy to feel that the same God of comfort would be going with her, and that the "fear nots" would still fit every untried emergency as they had done in the past.

Mrs. J. W. D. Carter of Portland, corresponding secretary of the Maine branch, spoke of the activity in that State, more meetings having been held there in the past year, and more societies having been formed, than for a long time previous. They were trying to impress upon every woman to whose heart had come the gospel of salvation that she must "pass it along."

Notice was given of the Children's Missionary Festival, to be held at Berkeley Temple Saturday, May 8, at 2.30 P. M. The special subject will be the work in China, and the children will be asked to contribute towards the raising of sufficient money to erect a new building for the girls' boarding school in Foochow, which is exceedingly cramped for room. Mention was made of the calendar topics, and earnest prayers were offered for these and in behalf of a member of the executive committee, who is seriously ill.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER
Cleveland's Baking Powder does the work just right every time.

GET Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate
Pure, wholesome, convenient—made in a jiffy—NO BOILING.

The Conversation Corner

THERE was one CAT left out of our recent feline symposium for the simple reason that there was altogether too much of him to put into any ordinary Corner with any other ordinary fellow cats. I have been waiting since for a chance to give him a whole broadside, with ample room for him to display himself in the various attitudes secured by his artist. "The General," for that is his honored name, officially and properly belongs to the Corner, having been for a long time a familiar inmate of the business office of The Congregationalist, where I have no doubt many of our readers have seen him, with a ribbon around his neck, lying in a dignified manner just inside the cashier's rail, his immense form in fact nearly filling the opening where you put your money in for your year's subscription. It all has to go, if not literally through his paws, yet over his head, and I always think of him as "the watch-dog of the treasury."

I ought perhaps to say here that I have several times suggested that I would like to show his picture to the Cornerers, but the first intimation I had that he had consented to allow himself to appear in so public a place was when I met one day Dr.——, a well-known Boston divine (I believe Mr. and Mrs. Deacon Dudley have not visited his church yet, nor must I mention his name, but his boys, Bruce and Charlie B., are members of the Corner) on Beacon Street with his camera, and he told me that he had been up to take the General. I heard nothing more of it until I received a splendid set of proofs, marked "With the Compliments of the General," and accompanied by the following letter, which, as you see, is a kind of autobiography and, as you will also notice, seems to have been composed by himself! It is written in a very elegant hand—for a cat—but I suppose he had daily watched the penmanship of the lady cashier at his desk. I shall publish the whole of it—a thing not often done with such long letters.

Dear Cornerers: For a long time I have had a great desire to become acquainted with you, and now I am going to write you a letter, telling you a little about my life, and then perhaps you will feel as interested in me as you do in Kitty Clover. Since I became a member of the business staff of The Congregationalist, a little over two years ago, a picture of Kitty Clover has appeared in the paper and several times mention has been made of him, and it has been a very bitter experience for me, especially as people come in and seem disappointed when they find I am not he. Of course it is natural that Mr. Martin should think more of him because he knows him better.

Until I was about six months old I lived in a very pleasant family in Dorchester, where there were two other cats. One of these was a little white kitten and for her I didn't care much, but the other one was an old cat named John Calvin, and I was very fond of him. We used to have fine times chasing each other up and down stairs. One day my little mistress said, "Now, today, we must wash Peeky (that was my pet name) and put a ribbon on him for he is going to have company, and we want him to make a good impression." I always hated a sponge bath and I tried to hide, but they found me and washed me, which made me so angry that I went and got into the coal bin and got all black. I am afraid it was a very naughty thing to do, and after I saw the young lady she spoke so pleasantly to me that I was ashamed and went and washed myself before I saw her again.

"COMPLIMENTS OF THE GENERAL"

When I went back to the sitting-room I heard them saying something about taking me away. I didn't know what they meant, but it worried me so that I couldn't sleep that night and the next morning I tried to keep out of sight, but they found me and put me in a bag and carried me away. I was awfully frightened and two or three times I cried as loud as I could, but it didn't do any good and after what seemed a long time they opened the bag and I found myself here. At first I hid under the big safe and for two or three days I staid there all the time, but one day one of the gentlemen—I think he must be the business manager, because he has a little office of his own—bought a nice piece of carpet and put it on his desk for me to sleep on. That was such a nice thing for him to do I came from under the safe and stayed in his office. The people were all very nice to me and finally I lost my fear and commenced to go about on the different desks. They bought me a pretty collar and a purple ribbon which is quite becoming, I think. You see once in a while I go and look at myself in the glass the young lady keeps on her desk.

At night a boy comes and takes my collar off and carries me into another room where there are a great many papers. I have to sleep in there and it is very lonesome, so sometimes when I see the people getting ready to go home, I know he will come and I crawl away in the darkest corner I can find, but he always finds me and I have to go. One thing comforts me somewhat: this old Congregational House is a great place for rats and mice and I have interesting times catching them out there in the mailing-room. One morning I caught one in the office, but I lost it in playing with it, which made me feel much ashamed. You see I am quite large—I weigh thirteen and one-half pounds—and have double paws and I suppose I am very clumsy.

As I said before the people here are very nice, but about some things I think they are very peculiar. For instance, instead of letting me eat my breakfast all at once, as they all do, they give me one or two pieces at a time and they won't give me that even until I have begged for it like a dog and shaken hands every time I want it. I am perfectly willing to shake hands once, but I don't see the use of doing it half a dozen times, and sometimes I refuse.

Besides the business manager there are two young men and an older man in the office. Of the last I am very fond because he pays me a great deal of attention. I like the young men also, one of them especially, because he always gives me something to eat. The other stamps his feet at me, but he always comes and pats me afterwards, so I think he likes me quite well. There are some very nice people in the other rooms. Up in Room 14 is an old gentleman who often comes in to see me. I don't like to have callers very well, and sometimes I refuse to speak to them, but I always like to see him and always go to him. I think my picture is going into the paper with this letter, and now I am going to tell you a secret. I think you would have seen it some time ago, but I was very stubborn and wouldn't stay quiet to have it taken. You know cats cannot always be good any more than children. I concluded the other day that I would try and be good and I hope you will like my looks, and that next time you come to our office, instead of asking for Kitty Clover, you will inquire for

Yours very truly, THE GENERAL.

That's good; give me your paw, General! We are glad to receive you into our Corner, and by sending a stamp you can have a certificate of membership. Let me assure you that Kitty Clover has not the slightest unkind feeling towards you, as you almost intimate. When I was ready to copy your letter I could nowhere find it and almost gave up the search, supposing that in the kindly reconstruction of my library during my recent absence this with other valuable papers had been neatly laid aside in some unknown place. At last I called the reconstructor to my assistance and then it was found in an envelope marked "Cats," under Kitty Clover, who had affectionately made a pillow of it! Does not that sufficiently show his sentiments?

P. S. D. F. says "add six brevier lines"; I will add "Dick," who is just six!

GLOBE VILLAGE, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have a cat in the house which is six years old and weighs twelve pounds. His name is Dick and he is a beauty.

BESSIE H.

Mr. Martin

"LOOK UP AND NOT DOWN"

"AND LEND A HAND"

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR MAY 16 Acts 13: 44-14: 28

PAUL PREACHING TO THE GENTILES

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Paul's first missionary journey apparently included three years or more and the larger part of it is covered by this lesson. It tells briefly the story of the planting of Christian churches in an extensive region of Asia Minor, among Greeks and among peoples only half civilized. The three cities most prominent in early Christian history, named in the order of their importance, are Jerusalem, Antioch in Syria and Antioch in Pisidia. In the first, the first Christian church was formed and it included only Jews. In the second, the first Christian church was organized which included Gentiles and it sent out the first foreign missionaries. In the third, the distinct purpose to preach the gospel to Gentiles was declared and entered on. The successive steps of this entire journey, in which missionary labors find such encouraging illustrations, are:

1 The missionaries rejected by Jews. At first they were deeply interested in Paul's preaching and desired to hear more. But they soon got more than enough, for they regarded the Scriptures as theirs only, and the missionaries offered to the Gentiles the promises of the Scriptures. Paul closed his first reported sermon to the Jews of Antioch with a solemn warning from their sacred books [vs. 40, 41]. He began his ministry to the Gentiles with a glorious promise, quoted from the same books [v. 47]. Thus the Jewish faith was made to certify to the authority of Jesus as their Messiah, and he was offered to the heathen as their Saviour from sin. Paul said to the Jews, It was the will of God that the good news of salvation should first be proclaimed to you, and this we have done. But you have not examined our message; you have only repelled it. In doing so you have pronounced judgment on yourselves.

Those who shut their minds from possible messages from God are unworthy to receive any message from him. They are unfit for eternal life. Such were the Jews of Antioch. They fought the preachers of the new faith as shrewdly as if they were modern Christians hunting for heretics. They set influential women against them. There are no more dangerous enemies of Christ than women of influence whose religious impulses are stirred up by designing men against advance movements in the kingdom of God. The chief men in the city also took part in the persecution. No doubt they were urged on by the women and thought it better to please the Jews who lived there than to favor a new movement among strangers. This sort of persecution, both at Antioch and Iconium, ended as such persecutions usually end—in driving out the preachers. It is worth noting that they insisted on being recognized as Jews, and that they preached in synagogues till they were driven out. Quite likely the Jews told them that if they did not wish to preach Jewish doctrine according to Jewish methods, the fair thing for them to do would be to hire a hall and preach as independents. At last they did this.

2. The missionaries treated as gods. This was no more to their liking than to be persecuted as Jews. It would have been easy for them to have won a great following at Lystra by letting the multitude have their way. Why didn't they heal many men as the cripple was healed, and why did they not lay emphasis on their powers of healing, as some do nowadays, preaching that everybody might be free from sickness by following them and accepting their views? Instead of doing this they disclaimed any peculiar power or difference of nature from their hearers, and exhorted them earnestly to turn from idolatry, either of images or persons, to the living God, whose character and claims they eloquently described. Is not this the true method of missions either at home or in foreign nations?

3. The missionaries treated as devils. It was men of their own faith and race who persuaded the multitude, but lately eager to worship the missionaries as gods, to stone them as messengers from the devil. The bitterest opponents of Paul and his company on this heathen field were missionaries who proclaimed the same God, and these Jewish missionaries who temporarily gained leadership were in the wrong. The people who, a little while before, had been determined to worship Paul were now as determined to kill him, and they were as little governed by reason in one case as in the other. Those who preach the gospel faithfully must not be too much exalted when everybody welcomes them, and need not be too much cast down when everybody, even those who have followed them, opposes them. Time tests truth and establishes it. Paul was driven out of Lystra. But a church sprang up there, and there in later years he found one of his closest friends and fellow-laborers [Acts 16: 1, 2].

4. The work of the missionaries established. Temporary reverses did not discourage the men who had been called and sent on their errand by the Holy Spirit. I can imagine Paul and Barnabas talking together after they have been driven out of Antioch and again out of Iconium, and still later out of Lystra. Perhaps Barnabas would say, "Our work in this place has failed, just as it did in the last place. Wherever we go, these Jews follow us and the people turn against us." But Paul would reply, "You know we did not start till we had fasted and prayed with the brethren; and they and we clearly understood the Holy Spirit saying, 'Separate unto me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.' You remember, too, that the brethren sent us also, and we are responsible to the Holy Spirit and to them to complete the work." So they went back again to each place and organized churches, securing the appointment of elders in each, and instructing them how to care for the interests placed in their charge. These churches appear to have been self-governing, and yet to have realized that they all had interests in common which required their united wisdom in administration. This was primitive Congregationalism.

5. The missionaries' report of their work. They stopped at Perga, on their return, to do what they had been prevented from doing on their first visit, perhaps by the necessity that Paul should for his health get quickly into the mountainous country. Then they came back to Antioch in Syria, from which they had been absent perhaps three years on this first missionary journey. How eagerly they must have been welcomed! How many questions were asked and answered in those meetings after their return! No doubt the brethren in Antioch were revived by the missionary tidings they received, and the impulse of the good news did not fail during the two years that Paul remained there preaching to them. No Christian church will long continue its vitality without interest in missions. Every church needs to keep in touch with those who are representing it in distant fields. Its sense of responsibility for giving the gospel to the world is the measure of its understanding of him who gave his life for the world to redeem mankind.

◆

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic for May 9-15. The Outward Show of Inward Life. Micah 6: 8; Matt. 22: 34-40; Jas. 1: 25-27; Phil. 4: 8, 9.

The soul facing God. Looking out on the world. Guiding its course in accordance with God's will.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

◆

Every Christian ought to be a window through which somebody could get a glimpse of heaven.—Ram's Horn.

Enameline

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.

Try it on your Cycle Chain.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

This figure in Red on every box.

Your Kitchen Maid

whether competent or incompetent, can clean your silver, do it easier, quicker—giving it the silversmith's brilliancy if she uses and your gain is two fold, for she cannot injure it. Electro-Silicon never scratches, never wears. It's unlike any other silver polish. Ask your grocer for it.

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH

Trial quantity of us for the asking.
Box post-paid, 15 cts. in stamps.
THE ELECTRO SILICON COMPANY, N. Y.

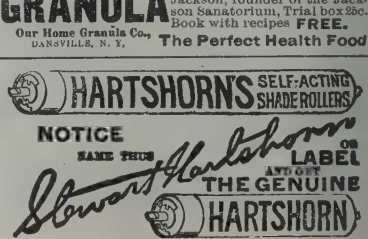
"How to Disinfect," Sent Free.

The intelligent use of true disinfectants is the surest defense against one half our illness.

"How to Disinfect" is a complete illustrated book, giving rules in cases of infectious diseases and in everyday life. Send your address; no money.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.
636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

GRANULA Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.
Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.
The Perfect Health Food



HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE NAME THUS Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S LIFE OF NELSON

To the English navy Lord Nelson is what the Duke of Wellington is to the army. England never had a greater naval hero than he. Indeed, it would be difficult to name his superior in the annals of any nation, although undoubtedly there have been men in our own navy, e. g., John Paul Jones and Farragut, and perhaps in others, who have been his superiors in character, who, so far as they had opportunity, won similar success, and who, given the same conditions, would have equaled him in reputation. But he always must stand out as one of the most conspicuous figures in the naval history of the world, and the record of his career is of perennial interest and importance. Such a man could have no more competent biographer than Capt. A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., whose previous successes in literature have placed him fairly at the head of that portion of it relating to naval affairs. He has accomplished this task with an enthusiasm and a discrimination alike as notable as the latter, at least, must have been difficult. In the two handsome volumes before us the author has supplied what must remain a standard biography of his subject, and in this particular alone he has attained high excellence.

As a mere life story his narrative is vivid, comprehensive, well-proportioned and extremely interesting. He makes Nelson live again for the benefit of the reader, portraying his personal and official characteristics with unusual clearness and skill, and with a keenness of comprehension and a kindly yet unfaltering candor, so far as faults and weaknesses are concerned, which inspire not only confidence but admiration. But the work is more than a mere biography. It is a study of the naval history of Great Britain, and to some extent of France, during an important period of history. It exhibits the naval methods, customs and policies, now largely gone out of use, by loyalty to which Great Britain became the mistress of the seas. It pictures the life of the British seaman and official, indirectly and only by occasional allusions, yet so that one gains a good idea of it. It also deals with larger subjects, setting forth effectively the international political conditions of the period, especially in the south of Europe. It contains much shrewd comment and criticism upon Napoleon's career and the schemes of the British to neutralize or conquer his efforts, and is valuable in a high degree to the student of political history, quite apart from the relation which it holds to Nelson personally.

Of course, also, it includes stirring descriptions of Nelson's great sea battles, the Nile, Copenhagen and Trafalgar, but it also reveals afresh how much, sometimes of equal importance with victory in battle, may be accomplished by the blockading or dogging of an enemy's fleet, and it brings into deserved prominence the fact that an apparent defeat sometimes may accomplish the effect of a victory, inasmuch as the beaten fleet may so cripple its victor as to render the latter useless for a long period, thereby confusing and neutralizing the enemy's plans. This is a point upon which Nelson dwelt with great emphasis and frequency, and which we have never seen defined and enforced at length anywhere else. In spite of his faults Nelson always will retain, and will deserve to retain, the sincere admiration of all brave and noble men. Some of his professional faults were grave. For example, he sometimes was daring even to recklessness. At times even he took the law into his own hands, breaking his orders and defying his superiors. One of the most interesting features of the work is the author's occasional discussion of Nelson's possible culpability in this respect. Captain Mahan justifies, and we think rightly, the position that in some instances a subordinate may assume the responsibility of disregarding orders which he has received, but he must take the risk frankly. No excuse of good intentions can save him in case of failure. He must be able to prove, not only that he meant to do the best thing, but that, whatever its result, he actually did the best thing. Doubtless among naval men some differences of opinion on this point will be created, but we do not see how any other position can be successfully defended. Men are not machines, and the officer who rigidly obeys orders, whether circumstances have rendered them inappropriate or not, must invariably come to grief.

In dealing with Nelson's personal traits Captain Mahan's judgment hardly can be commended too highly. Nelson must have been, indeed, an unusual character. Evidently a man of some religious feeling, and one who apparently maintained habitually the practice of personal devotions, his relations with Lady Hamilton, even if the best interpretation be put upon them, were open to serious criticism; and it is to be feared, and Captain Mahan evidently believes, that the best interpretation cannot be put upon them. He has treated this delicate and difficult department of his subject with frankness and sufficient fullness, yet in a truly delicate and manly way. Several portraits of Nelson and of others closely connected with him appear in the book, and a number of diagrams facilitate the comprehension of his campaigns and battles. The two volumes are handsomely printed and bound, and the popularity which they are said to have attained already in England will be equaled, without doubt, in the United States. [Little, Brown & Co. $8.00.]

RELIGIOUS

Dr. Dunning's volume, Congregationalists in America [$2 00], which has become widely known as a classic upon its subject, is reissued under the auspices of the Congregational Publishing Society, and it will continue to do its important work as a conspicuously successful blending of the scholarly and popular elements of history from our denominational point of view. It abounds in illustration, and is too widely known to need comment here. It can be had by our own subscribers for one dollar.

The second volume of Professor Kent's History of the Hebrew People is entitled The Divided Kingdom [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25] and treats of the history of Israel and Judah from the death of Solomon to the fall of Samaria and the exile, respectively. It presents the results of the work of Professor Kittel, and other prominent critical scholars, in a simple and concise form for the use of the busy, practical student. Controversial argumentation is avoided, and one is referred to more technical works for a discussion of the questions of criticism. The author emphasizes the salient points and underlying causes of the history, and dwells rightly upon the messages and part of the Hebrew prophets. The book carries out the plan of the first volume, and, owing to our fuller knowledge of this period, it is, if a comparison be made, even more valuable. The history and chronology, as revealed to us in the Bible and in extra-Biblical sources, are plainly and honestly presented. A careful and honest study of this book with constant reference to the Bible cannot fail to result in an intelligent and, as far as our present knowledge goes, correct understanding of the history of the chosen people.

In the autumn of 1896 ten lectures were delivered in the Union Theological Seminary, New York, by Drs. C. C. Hall, A. V. G. Allen, E. C. Smyth, C. C. Tiffany, W. R. Huntington, G. D. Boardman and others, which have now been gathered into a volume bearing the title Christian Worship [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50]. The course of thought is historical and expository, the Christian worship of the centuries being described and the methods of the chief religious bodies of Christendom being explained. Of course each lecturer spoke from the point of view of his own denominational preference, and the resulting volume is therefore valuable for its suggestions both of a common spirit and of the diversities which equally consecrated Christian hearts under different systems of training have developed. Clergymen especially will appreciate the significance of the volume. It is issued in a neat and handsome form.

Modern Methods of Christian Work [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50] is by Rev. G. W. Mead, with an introduction by Rev. Dr. C. L. Thompson. It is an elaborate, detailed and practical manual of all sorts of church work. It is the best book of the kind, the most modern and comprehensive, the most diversified and suggestive, which we have seen. We heartily commend it, venturing to accompany the commendation with the hint that machinery without steam is useless. There are churches in which so much attention is paid to methods and appliances of work that the cultivation of spirituality seems thrust into the background. Of two churches, one of which has little or no knowledge of so-called modern methods, but is inspired by the true spirit of consecration, and the other is equipped with the most elaborate forms and the most highly organized army of workers, but which lacks the presence of the Holy Spirit, the former will accomplish the best and most lasting service for both God and men. We do not say this to undervalue the serviceableness of such a book as this or of the methods which it commends, but only as a warning against too much reliance on mere methods.

STORIES

Edward P. Dole, the author of The Stand By [Century Co. $1.25], is assistant attorney general of Hawaii. His book is one of the comparatively few successful examples of preaching through a story. It is a spirited and engrossing novel and at the same time a plea and an argument for prohibition. In fact, it is the strongest presentation of the prohibitory cause which we remember to have seen. The enemy is given every advantage by the author and then it is shown how he can be overcome. The hero of the story, of course, is the central figure in the prohibition fight, and the grim determination with which in such a contest the liquor interest would probably meet its enemy is portrayed in these pages with a distinctness not often equaled. The plot is admirably handled. It is well proportioned and so shaped that interest increases to the end and the love story, although never lost to sight and never failing to enchain attention, after all is secondary to the moral purpose of the book. If prohibition ever is to be made a success it must be essentially along the lines suggested in this volume, and total abstinence workers ought to derive not only inspiration, but practical information of solid and lasting value from Mr. Dole's story.

The Landlord of Lion's Head [Harper & Bros. $1.75], Mr. W. D. Howells's story, has been coming out as a serial. We have so genuine an admiration for Mr. Howells that it is always painful not to be able to give his stories high praise. In some respects they are such examples of conscientious work that they appeal to one strongly. But, to tell the truth, this is a fine-spun and tedious tale. We have found the utmost difficulty in compelling ourselves to read it through. The heroine is sweet and noble, far above the average in the author's works. We do not ask to read always of heroes and heroines in the high sense, but the commonplace lives and passions of the others are treated with such wearisome minuteness, and the pettiness and insipidity of life is often thrust upon us so fatiguingly, that we, at least, have grown unutterably weary.

The Great K. and A. Robbery [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 25], by P. L. Ford, describes in his bright and entertaining fashion a "hold-up" of a train on a Western railroad, which was only a sham hold-up, yet furnished an opportunity for some lively detective work and some personal tribulations, but out of the distress and anxiety of which the fruition of the hero's best hopes came. The narrative entertains from beginning to end and therein answers its evident purpose.

It is a long time since we have read a book so thoroughly cynical and so boldly low in moral tone, and withal so grisly in its pictures of grotesque and desperate adventures, as The Sign of the Spider [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1 25], by Bertram Mitford. The hero is absolutely selfish to begin with, and he grows more so. He deliberately abandons all allegiance to moral convictions, and his example and influence, as well as his sentiments, are those of a knave. Bold, reckless, yet with some noble qualities, there is no sufficient excuse for him, and we cannot recommend the book. Moreover, some of the melodramatic and almost infernal experiences through which he is described as passing are too improbable to even seem possible. The book is written with ability, but it is ability misused.

The Master-Beggars [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50], by L. Cope Cornford, is a historical novel relating to the time of the struggle between the Dutch and the Duke of Alva. It is a very able story, presenting a graphic picture of the wild, undisciplined recklessness, infused nevertheless with sturdy patriotism, of the famous Gueux, or "Beggars," and of the stern, relentless cruelty of the Spaniards. The narrative is full of dramatic incident, and a pleasant romance is interwoven with its plot. It is written with spirit and considerable historical sense, and is a good example of a certain useful type of novel-writing.——Lovice [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25], by the late Mrs. Hungerford, "The Duchess," is another English story, the actors being country gentry and their families. Whether intentionally or not, it points out vividly the misery which came from the love of a bright, warm-hearted young girl for an unworthy man. It is very interesting, though decidedly sad.——Into an Unknown World [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50], a new book by John Strange Winter, is based upon the fact of the caste spirit which still exists in English society, although lately much modified. It describes the marriage of the heroine, who is of high family, to a young man socially far below her, and the trials which befell her, due to the utter difference in her new social surroundings from those to which she had been accustomed. She is a winsome character, and the story turns out agreeably.

MISCELLANEOUS

Prof. F. H. Storer's masterly work, Agriculture in Some of Its Relations to Chemistry [Charles Scribner's Sons. $5 00], has been revised and enlarged for its issue in the seventh edition. It is based upon lectures delivered by him at the Bussey Institution, connected with Harvard University, from 1871 to 1897. Addressed originally to young farmers and the sons of farmers, and also to city bred men intending to interest themselves more or less directly and practically with the cultivation of the soil, it is a treatise on scientific farming, in which theory is taught and practice suggested. It is too scientific and technical for the uneducated mind, although an intelligent man may derive valuable knowledge from many portions of it, but the trained and scholarly farmer will draw from it an immense amount of invaluable information. Of course it deals with all such subjects as climate, soil, crops, fertilizers, insects, irrigation, etc., and it stands in the foremost rank of works which the modern, up-to-date farmer needs in his library in order to make agriculture pay. It is in three handsome volumes.

An agreeable work by the late P. G. Hamerton is The Mount and Autun [Roberts Bros. $2 00], two somewhat extended descriptive essays, the one a narrative of a visit to the site of a Gaulish city on Mt. Beuvray, the other an account of the neighboring city of Autun. Mr. Hamerton's genial style, in which he blends narrative, history, philosophy and sentiment charmingly and gracefully, here finds appropriate subjects, and without taxing the reader severely imparts considerable information of significance. It is one of those delightful volumes which you do not like to lay aside. A portrait of Mr. Hamerton serves as a frontispiece.

In American Lands and Letters [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50] that genial and expert essayist and critic, Donald G. Mitchell, skims over the surface of American literature, taking off the cream, so to speak, and serving it up in tempting fashion for his readers. There is no lack of thoroughness, so far as thoroughness is essential, yet the work is sketchy in its plan and contains a series of vivid and charming pictures of character and literary service rather than elaborate studies. One gains adequate conceptions of the different authors mentioned in most cases, and they seldom, if ever, fail to justify themselves upon reflection. The book is illustrated delightfully, and impresses one afresh with the rare ability and versatility of its author. A useful chronological table is appended.

A new edition of Rev. Dr. W. E. Griffis's Corea, the Hermit Nation [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50] is out, to which the author has added a chapter on Corea in 1897. The volume is a standard on this subject, has met with wide favor, is the fruit of personal observation and study, and the additional chapter, of course, bringing down the record to date, adds perceptibly to its substantial value. It is handsomely issued and is supplied with various maps and illustrations.

Life's Comedy, First Series [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50], contains a choice selection of cartoons and other pictures taken from the weekly numbers of Life, together with the text which they originally illustrated. The wit, sometimes audacious and occasionally not very far from irreverent, but always genuine and telling, and the spirited and suggestive pictures, executed with rare delicacy and power, even if Mr. Gibson's two types of face do appear and reappear over and over again in different expressions and situations, render the book one of the events of the season. It will do as much to insure a hearty laugh, and thus to promote good health and good spirits, as any other book of the year thus far.

Art Education the True Industrial Education [C. W. Bardeen. 50 cents] is the second edition of Dr. William T. Harris's address before the National Educational Association at the meeting at Nashville in 1879. The first edition having been exhausted, this has been brought out to supply a steady demand.——Littell's Living Age [Living Age Co. $2.25] for January, February and March, 1897, is out in the usual type and binding and presents as many attractions to cultivated readers as ever. Certainly nothing in its own line surpasses it.

NOTES

—— Authors may take encouragement from the fact that one of their number, Mr. J. J. á Beckett, once disposed of a story for a high price which had been rejected fifteen times.

—— The price of Dr. E. F. Williams's volume, Christian Life in Germany, is $1 50, instead of $1 00. Moreover, it is well worth the larger sum, which is not true of all books which cost so much.

—— Mr. Thomas N. Rooker, whose likeness the New York Tribune recently published, has been connected with that journal since the first number appeared, and is the only person of whom this is true.

——The Bookman recently contained Charles Reade's recipe for writing a popular novel, given by him to a young friend who used it successfully. It is this: "Make 'em laugh; make 'em cry; make 'em wait."

—— The following item from The Publishers' Weekly should interest many of our readers:

> By order of the trustees of the British Museum, a portfolio of facsimiles from early printed books in the museum collection, mostly from books exhibited in the King's Library, will shortly be published. The portfolio will contain thirty-two plates with full descriptions, the books illustrated being, for the most part, of the greatest rarity, the large size of many of them having hitherto prevented their being given as illustrations in histories of printing. Among them are the early block-books of the Ars Moriendi and Biblia Pauperum, the 1454–1455 indulgences, the Gutenberg Bible, Mentz Psalter of 1457, Mentz Bible of 1462, specimens of the work of Sweynheim & Pannartz, Jenson, Ratdolt, and Aldus, of the early French printers, of Gerard Leeu and Colard Mansion, six Caxtons, and books printed at Oxford and St. Albans, and by Machlinia, Wynkyn de Worde and Pynson.

For Books of the Week see page 657.

In and Around Boston

The Young Men's Congregational Club

The first annual meeting of the club brought out a good attendance last week at the American House. The dining-hall, elaborately decorated with flags and bunting, presented a festive appearance and good cheer ruled the prandial hour as a happy close of the first period of the young society. The annual reports brought out some interesting facts. The club was organized a little over six months ago with a charter membership of 59; since then the growth of its membership has just reversed those figures. The balance in the treasury at this time is $236. The meetings thus far have presented strong programs, and the idea of the club has been warmly encouraged by the earnest words of thoughtful speakers. The club has now held five meetings and the next gathering observes its annual ladies' night. President Hall conducted the business session. The election of officers resulted as follows: Prof. W C. Boyden, president; J. J. Tillinghast and E. P. Merriam, vice-presidents; E. M. Abbott, treasurer; H. H. Stickney, secretary.

The program of the last meeting was appropriate to the observance of a "members' night," and the speakers chosen from the roll of members made an excellent impression on their associates. Two laymen, Messrs G. F. Partridge and L. S. James, discussed the topic What Should the Up-to-Date Layman Expect of the Up-to-Date Clergyman, and two ministerial brethren, Rev. W. I. Cole and Rev. C. F. Carter, considered What Should the Up-to-Date Clergyman Expect of the Up-to-Date Layman. The good-natured and helpful hints offered by each set of speakers were received in the same spirit in which they were given, and the club must be congratulated that both sides of such practical questions could be so ably represented from among its own members.

About Boston Greeks

Whether the conduct of their brethren in Greece warrants their devotion or not, the fact remains that the Greeks of Boston have shown a brave love of country, carried to a most altruistic extent. Starting a dozen years ago with a handful they have grown to 600 in Boston alone, 700 in Lowell and 2,000 in Massachusetts. Leaving out such men as the consuls past and present, Professor Anagnos of the Perkins Institute for the Blind and a few enterprising young men, the body of the Greek inhabitants of Massachusetts are fruit dealers, teamsters or poorly paid mill hands. Most of them are thrifty. It is told that a mill hand in Lowell on less than $4.50 a week supported himself, and in a year and a few months had sent home $150 to his family in Greece. Few of the American Greeks are married. There are probably not twenty-five Greek women in Massachusetts. As a rule they have a most intense love of the homeland, which is about matched by their hatred of the Turks.

A few nights ago they held a mass meeting in Odd Fellows Hall. The consul, Mr. Timayenis, presided, and several well-known Greeks spoke. Not a word could the reporter understand, but he could read the story in their faces. A few of the men looked comfortable and well cared for. The majority of the 400 there had dark, forbidding faces, rough clothes and savored of the slums. But every man was ready to help King George. A hundred stood ready to pay their own expenses. More would go if they were able. One man gave $1,500, probably his whole savings. Two thousand dollars were raised in a few minutes. There were tears in many hard eyes as they pledged themselves to give their all, and their life as well, in the cause of little Crete, which the fatherland has taken up. There was a depth of devotion that was touching. A hundred and fifty men have gone from Boston to make up the 500 who sailed from New York on Saturday. And despite all unpleasant reports from the other side many more are ready to go as soon as money can be provided for their equipment, for Greece cannot even pay their expenses, and pays the volunteers no money in the field.

Meanwhile philanthropists are doing much to aid the suffering if not to help wage actual warfare. Among those who have interested themselves in the matter are Archibald M. Howe, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Louis Agassiz, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. Annie Fields, Mrs. John L Gardner and J. M. Rodocanachi, the well-known Greek ex-consul at Boston. The latter says he has hardly fifteen minutes a day for his own business so engrossed is he in packing off boxes of clothing etc., to the front. One thousand dollars have also been cabled to the Greek Woman's Relief Union within a few days. To the intent that yet more may be done for relief through this organization, a number of prominent Massachusetts women called a meeting of those interested for this week Tuesday.

No License Jubilee

A significant event was the celebration in Cambridge last week of a ten years "no license" jubilee. The university city has voted "no" every time for ten years, and has suppressed all open sales of liquor. Saturday and Sunday were the days set apart for public exercises. Ten thousand souvenir badges were given away to school children. Saturday there were several factory meetings and two mass meetings in the evening. At Union Hall in the afternoon the speakers were Prof. F. G. Peabody and Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer. Ex-Mayor Bancroft presided at the mass meeting in the evening. There was also a mass meeting at St. John's Hall at which Father O'Brien presided, showing at least one bond of union between the Cambridge churches of all denominations. Professor Peabody said, "The ten years have not fully solved the question; Cambridge has simply done away with open saloons. . . . We may not have the $80 000 we would have had from license, but we have the $300,000 added taxable property."

Among the speakers at the jubilee exercises were Judge John W. Hammond of the Superior Court, Father Scully, Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., Dean Hodges, Senator F. W. Dallinger, Representative Myers of Cambridge and Edwin B. Hale. Sunday evening there were union meetings of fourteen churches, with remarks from eighteen different clergymen and fifteen laymen. Prominent among them was Deacon Frank Foxcroft, chairman of the citizens no license committee.

The New Southern Station

Ground has been broken for the Boston & Albany and New York, New Haven & Hartford's $12,000,000 union station, which will be the largest railway station in the world. It will cover forty acres between Summer, Cove and Kneeland Streets, and extend into what is now Fort Point Channel, where it will be necessary to drive 40,000 piles, some of them forty-five feet long. It is to be a commanding building of red Stony Creek granite and brick, several stories high in certain portions, with a great clock tower entrance at the corner of Summer and Cove Streets, having a radius of 228 feet. There will be twelve acres of roof, over the train sheds, waiting-rooms, baggage-rooms and carriage concourse.

Even with this large area the station will be the first in the world to have two stories of tracks. On a level slightly above the street, twenty-eight terminal tracks will be laid, with their platforms and all accommodations, over a system of two large route tracks to come in and go out of the station in a great loup, far below the street, yet so commodiously arranged that 2,000 trains will be handled daily. Each of these track stories will be connected with the street and the baggage and passenger-rooms by broad inclines, so gradual that the people will not realize that they are ascending and descending what would make a very long staircase. It is said that this station would not be crowded by all the people who have ever come into Boston in one day. Another new thing will be the handling of baggage upon special platforms between the tracks toward the rear instead of forward.

Norcross Brothers, the contractors, have made an interesting drawing, representing all the largest buildings of Boston huddled together on the site of this station and leaving plenty of room to spare. The ground area is thus more extensive than that of the Cadet Armory, Mechanics' Building, Old South Church, Trinity Church, Faneuil Hall and Market, State House, Old State House, Exchange, Post Office, City Hall, Public Library, Carter Building and a dozen more great office buildings and hotels. The only similar structures in the world that approximate it in size are the new station at St. Louis and the one at Frankfort, Germany.

WORTHY HONORS TO A VETERAN STILL IN HARNESS

On Wednesday of last week the Franklin County Association of Congregational Ministers united with the Franklin Conference in a day's meeting with the church at East Charlemont, Mass., devoting the afternoon session to a celebration of the eightieth birthday of its pastor, Rev. Lyman Whiting, D. D. Invitations had been widely sent to interested churches, institutions and individuals, and while many friends assembled, a much larger number of salutations were received by mail and the telegraph. The exercises began with the presentation of gifts by the children and their singing an original hymn prepared for the occasion by President Rankin of Howard University. Dr. Whiting then read a paper, presenting in modest spirit, but most interesting detail, his recollections of his many years, fifty-five of which have been spent consecutively in pastoral service. The salutations which followed were divided into four half-hour periods, from churches, colleges and academies in which he has interested himself, theological seminaries and friends.

The greetings from his native town and his early church were presented in person by the pastor of that church, the First Congregational of North Brookfield, Mass.; a delegate was also present from the church in Brookfield, which was his first settlement, and one from South Williamstown, which he left eight years ago for his present field. Letters were also read from churches which he has served in Lawrence and Reading of this State; also from similar churches in New Hampshire, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Iowa and Wisconsin. The greetings from the colleges and academies and seminaries were peculiarly hearty, and revealed what a powerful and widespread influence for good has gone forth from this life. Professor Merriam brought the greetings of Hartford Theological Seminary, and finely emphasized the value of many short pastorates distributed over diverse points of opportunity as contrasted with a single long stay with one church. Not the least interesting circumstance of the day was the sight of the genial and youthful doctor himself, in whose honor the church offered its abundant hospitality; with eyesight undimmed, with brisk step, with undiminished love for the pastorate and eagerness to pursue its tasks, he was a living manifestation of the power of a keen mind and hard study to make fruitful the years which are so often devoted to nourishing decaying powers. J. L. S.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

Evangelical Alliance, Bromfield Street Church, May 10, 10 A. M. Subject, Christian Socialism. Speaker, Dean George Hodges, D. D.

Worcester Central Conference, Boylston Center, May 11.

Middlesex Union Association, Fitchburg, May 11, 9 A. M. Ladies' day.

Worcester North Conference, Gardner, May 11, 7.30 P. M., continuing through May 12.

General Association of Massachusetts.—Annual meeting at Plymouth Church, Worcester, beginning Tuesday, May 18, at 3.30 P. M. Organization; addresses of welcome by the pastor and response from the moderator; reports of the secretary and treasurer and of the committees on temperance and gambling. 7.30. Sermon by Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, followed by the communion, with collection in behalf of the ministerial aid fund.

Wednesday, 9 A. M. Devotional service, led by Rev. Isaac C. Smart. 9.30. Work of the Churches—report. (a) Relation of the Pulpit to the Spiritual Life of the Church Rev. William H. Davis; (b) Of the Prayer Meeting, Rev. William W. Jordan; (c) Of the Sunday School and Y. P. S. C. E., Rev. James L. Hill. 10.30. General discussion of these subjects. 11.30. Board of Pastoral Supply—report. Business. 2.30 P. M. Annual meeting of Massachusetts Home Missionary Society. 7.30. The Church in Modern City Life. (a) The Church and Secular Societies, Rev. Charles P. Mills; (b) The Church and Spiritual Power, Pres. Merrill E. Gates.

Thursday, 9 A. M. Devotional service, led by Rev. John L. Sewall. 9.30. Ministerial Relief, Rev. Nathan H. Whittlesey. 10. Reports of committees on (a) Home Evangelization; (b) Religious Literature; (c) Sunday Observance. 10.50. Addresses. (a) Divine Authority for the Observance of the Lord's Day, Rev. Edward M. Noyes; (b) What Can Pastors, Churches and Sunday Schools Do to Promote It, Rev. Reuen Thomas; (c) The Sunday Protective League, Rev. M. D. Kneeland. 11.50. Business. 2.30. Pentecostal Power in the Church of Today, Rev. A. H. Plumb. General discussion. 4. Adjournment.

The railroads will sell round-trip tickets, good May 18–21 inclusive, at two cents per mile for less than 25 miles; $1.00 for distances from 25 to 35 miles; and one and one-half cents per mile for greater distances. Entertainment can be had at the Bay State House for $2.50 per day; at $2.00, $1.50 and $1.25 at various other hotels, varying in some cases as one or two occupy a room; and at boarding houses for $1.00. Write to Rev. A. Z. Conrad.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Indiana,	Kokomo,	Tuesday, May 11.
Illinois,	Peoria,	Monday, May 17.
Iowa,	Algona,	Tuesday, May 18.
Massachusetts,	Worcester,	Tuesday, May 18.
Michigan,	Saginaw,	Tuesday, May 18.
Ohio,	Sandusky,	Tuesday, May 18.
New York,	Brooklyn,	Tuesday, May 18.
South Dakota,	Vermillion,	Tuesday, May 18.
Rhode Island,	Newport.	Tuesday, June 8.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

Difficulty is met by certain churches in the attempt to collect pew rents. Business methods strictly applied sometimes call forth severe criticism, and do not always effect the desired results. One church we hear of has decided that pews shall not be rented to persons who are two years in arrears of payments.

The action of a Nebraska church in recognizing the ability of an honored member not only accords with gospel principles, but it is the part of worldly wisdom as well, when a church has won such friends, to grapple them to itself "with hooks of steel."

That "corn fed" Oklahoma pastor and the Sunday school supported by eggs reminds us of primitive times, when trade was carried on by barter. Certainly there is no chance to inflate that currency—unless the corn is popped and the eggs are beaten before marketing.

What will disbelievers in foreign missions say to the situation in the New Mexico Association, where two able, consecrated young Mexicans, converted and educated in the missions of their own country, were approbated to preach to the heathen of America?

Municipal leagues and civic federations, as indeed all organizations for reform, should be scrupulously careful as to their methods and practices, lest, like one we hear from in a western city, they merit the adjuration, "Physician, heal thyself."

The western association which resolved itself into a council and recognized two new churches probably got as much inspiration as it would have gained from the most elaborate program of theoretical papers.

We imagine that the Nebraska community which recently received the ministration of an evangelist "between trains" found four hours none too long a stop for this spiritual refreshment.

Appreciative tokens of esteem were those at the leavetaking of a prominent pastor in an Interior church. The record of the past suggests the reasons for regret at the close of this pastorate.

Notice the large number of church debts wholly or partially raised in Connecticut. The spring is a propitious time for clearing financial accounts as well as for house-cleaning.

The advantage of the "pleasant evening gatherings" which a New England church has held the past winter is that they can be held whether the night is fair or foul.

That licentiate in the Sunflower State has no need to be ashamed of the results of his efforts during the last three years to develop old churches and found new ones.

With the energy which an Ohio conference leads off to meet the first H. M. S. debt in that State, there is little probability that the burden will last long.

Easter sermons by those who deny the Messiahship and resurrection of Christ must be rather anomalous productions.

Of Special Note

A good start to secure the C. E. convention of 1899 by a city of the Lake States.

Boy gardeners of a Massachusetts church amply rewarded.

A co-operative stimulus to missions in Michigan.

Origin of foreign missions at home in Cleveland.

FROM ST. LOUIS

Spring Elections

The Republicans of St. Louis, in the face of a divided Democracy, carried the city by decided majorities. The Civic Federation first gave a partial support to Mr. Merriweather as a candidate for the Democratic nomination, but later endeavored to focus its strength upon Mr. Harrison, a gentleman above reproach, but who is said to have unfortunate political affiliations. As a result the Federation has not come from the struggle with untarnished reputation. The best elements in the city are not enthusiastic for the Republican administration. The mayor is undoubtedly in sympathy with the saloons and is more or less in league with the machine politicians. The School Board Bill of the Civic Federation has been amended and carried at Jefferson City. The feature which placed the appointment in the hands of the mayor was eliminated and election of each member of the board by the city at large was substituted. An election under the new provisions has not yet been held, but one has been ordered in the face of an attack upon the constitutionality of the bill. At the last election a proposition was voted down to tax the people half a mill on the dollar for a period of five years to erect a building for the Public Library, which now occupies a part of the building of the school board.

Union Revival Work

Some time ago ten or twelve of the larger city churches united in a Friday evening meeting, looking to closer union and a larger spiritual blessing. From this grew an invitation to Mr. Moody to visit St. Louis. Careful preparation was made. A chorus choir was trained, and the largest audience-room in the city secured. Mr. Moody conducted two services daily for four days in April. The hall was crowded to the doors, and hundreds were turned away. The preaching was direct and strong. Mr. Moody's eloquence did not attract to itself, but riveted attention upon the truth. The newspapers devoted pages to his sermons. The spiritual life of the churches has been quickened, and a Sunday evening service has been organized in the Music Hall of the Exposition Building. Rev. S. J. Nichols, D. D., delivered the first sermon, and other city pastors will unite to maintain the service. It is worthy of note that, after Mr. Moody had been preaching the gospel during the week to crowds, unhindered by storms, that most eloquent infidel, Robert G. Ingersoll, spoke on the clear evening of the Lord's Day to a half-filled theater. The contrast, when the training and history of the men are taken into account, is striking.

Easter Sermons

The resurrection was commemorated in our churches with appropriate sermons, music and floral decorations. In some cases the Lord's Supper was celebrated. Two noteworthy Easter sermons were delivered by prominent Jewish rabbis, one on The Origin and Meaning of Easter, and the other on The Passover and the Resurrection of Christ. In each Renan was quoted as saying that Jesus did not rise from the dead, but the disciples were deluded or self-deceived. In one case Israel was congratulated that one of the race occupied so exalted a place in human history.

J. P. O.

THE ARIZONA ASSOCIATION

A writer in a recent number of one of our denominational papers suggests as one means of reducing expenditures, dispensing with State meetings, or at least limiting their frequency to one in three or more years. It is believed that if he were a missionary in Arizona or New Mexico, where the churches are 200 miles apart and it is a rare thing for one to see a brother minister of the same denomination except at the annual gatherings, he would not be disposed to practice this form of economy except as a last resort. Though the cost is heavy, it is believed out here that no expenditure of money yields better returns. One pastor had to travel 480 miles and over four lines of railroad.

The meeting was held at Prescott, April 13–

15. The entertaining church had just bade a reluctant farewell to its pastor, Rev. T. D. McLean, who went East for further study. He leaves a good record. The church has increased its annual benevolences to $678 in 1896. The new pastor, Rev. E. D. Wyckoff, was on the ground in time to welcome the association. The principal theme of discussion, Christian Education in Arizona, was opened by an address by F. S. Hafford, recently principal of one of the Los Angeles schools and an expert in both public and denominational education. President Baldwin of Pomona College contributed much by his wise counsel to the settlement of the educational problems in hand. His address on Man was most interesting and suggestive. The discussion culminated in a movement looking toward the establishment of a Christian home in connection with the Territorial Normal School at Tempe. Here proper religious and social influences will be provided for such normal students as may wish to avail themselves of the home, and supplementary instruction will be given in the line of preparation for college. The association has left the matter in the hands of a strong committee with power to incorporate and proceed with the establishment of the home, provided that sufficient financial encouragement can be secured. If this beginning be made, it is with the understanding that it may grow into a college in time, if it can, but the association is in no way committed to the college idea.

Other topics treated were The Church's Mission to the Community, To the Social Nature, To Denominational Organizations; Public Worship as a Means of Grace, The Prayer Meeting, and The Separatists in England. The reports from the churches were uniformly encouraging. The one church organized during the year, that among the Mexicans at Tempe, shows gratifying progress and at the same time a need that can scarcely be exceeded anywhere in the land. It receives no home missionary aid and the pastor, Rev. Stephen Edwards, provides for his own support and that of his family, except for $170 contributed by the Arizona churches. More money would mean more time for the work. The need is great and the door open.

The reception given the delegates at the beginning of the exercises, and the closing session with its experiences from workers, were interesting features, each in its own way.

E. H. A.

ASSOCIATIONAL COUNCILS

The Frontier Association of Nebraska, which was to meet at Ogalalla for its spring session, arranged a series of services entirely out of the usual order. The pastor, Rev. W. S. Hampton, had been holding revival services during the winter at his two outstations, Brule and Sherman School House, and had succeeded in gathering large churches at both points. Preliminary organizations had already been formed. Instead of a formal program councils of recognition were arranged for April 20, 21. Sherman School House is about midway between Ogalalla on the U. P. Railroad and Grant on the Burlington, and delegations came from both places. The afternoon session was devoted to considering The Need of the Church, Its Polity and Aims. The place was found to be in a large community of permanent settlers, and to have a good outlook. Thirty-two persons united in the organization. An address to the deacons was given and the right hand of fellowship was extended. The prayer of consecration was offered by Rev. C. G. Murphy. A bountiful collation was served by the women at noon. At the evening session a sermon was preached by Rev. C. W. Preston, and the address to the church was given by Supt. Harmon Bross. The following day the whole delegation with a number of members from the newly organized church drove to Brule, 12 miles distant, for a similar service. The revival services at Brule during the winter had been of deep and widespread interest. Twenty-four persons, most of them heads of families, had entered into the preliminary organization. Some of them spoke with signal ability of the need of a church organization in the community, and of the outlook for good work. After the council voted heartily to recognize the church the formal service was held, Superintendent Bross preaching the sermon. Brule is in the midst of the cattle region of the Platte Valley, and it was stated as an illustration of the few changes occurring in the population that the precinct in four years had lost but two voters. Both of these churches are in communities unreached by any other denomination.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Hartford

The Rhineberger Club gave a concert last Tuesday evening and was assisted by Miss V. W. White and Miss Eloise Fellows.——At the faculty conference last week Wednesday the subject discussed was the Minister in Society. Professor Perry led the conference.——The second debate of the Junior Debating Society was held last Saturday evening on the question, Resolved, That prohibition is the best way of dealing with the liquor question.

Yale

Among last week's lectures was The Gentler Side of Puritan Character, by Rev. E. P. Parker, D. D. ——The final examinations for the Senior Class will be held May 13–15, the class supper on the 18th and the Commencement exercises and alumni meeting on the 19th.——Professor Brastow is concluding his course by a series of lectures on The Care of Souls. ——The Senior Class preachers last week were W. H. Rowe and W. H. Short.

Oberlin

Of the 22 men who graduate this year—17 classical and five English—12 report engagements already made for work next year. Five stay in Ohio, two go to Nebraska, two to South Dakota, one to Kansas, one returns to Ontario and one to Wisconsin. In the case of most of the others arrangements are well advanced toward securing work.——Recitations closed last week, and the present week is given up to examinations and Commencement exercises.——The baccalaureate sermon last Sunday was by Prof. E. I. Bosworth. The Commencement address, May 6, is to be given by Prof. W. D. MacKenzie of Chicago, and the alumni address by Pres. W. G. Frost of Berea.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

Mass.—Hampshire East Conference in Enfield April 27 considered: How Can Church Attendance Be Increased Today? Preparation for the Sunday School Class Without a Teachers' Meeting and The American Board. Rev. G. J. Newton preached.

Andover Conference, at its 38th annual meeting, April 27, was to a considerable extent occupied with a discussion of the status of the two Lowell churches, the First and the First Trinitarian. The council which decided that both were de facto churches had declined to pass on the question as to the membership of these churches. The Trinitarian Church claimed membership in the conference, and also included in its statistics of its own membership many whom the First Church counts as its members. The statistical report of the scribe of the conference was the subject of rather sharp discussion. The matter was referred to a committee, which, however, did not report at that session. The questions at issue are left unsettled. The sermon was by Rev. F. H. Page. There was also a missionary address and a discussion on Our Idle Male Members and How to Get Them to Work.

Worcester South Conference met for its annual meeting with the Evangelical Church, Westboro, April 28. The topics were: Is the Church Realizing Christ's Idea of It? The Educational Value of the Church, "Attractions" at Church—Legitimate and Illegitimate, The Relation of the Church to Outside Organizations, The Inspirational Church, and Our Denomination in the Educational Work of the United States. Rev. B. A. Robie preached the sermon.

O.—Grand River Association met at Pierpont, April 27, 28. Rev. C. N. Pond preached the sermon. The topics were: The Social Life of the Church, What Constitutes a Thoroughly Organized Church, Kingdom Extension, The Relation of Creed to Life, My Ideal Pastor, My Ideal Layman, The Country Church and Ian Maclaren's Theology. Hereafter it is proposed that ministerial membership in the association be conditional on connection with some church in this body.

Medina Conference held its annual meeting at Wellington, April 28, 29, and discussed these topics: Hard Times and Their Lessons, The Minister and the Milking Stool, Present Situation and Needs of Our Missionary Boards, New Features of C. E. Work. Addresses were made by Mrs. I. V. Woodbury for the A. M. A., Mrs. C. M. Price of China, Prof. H. C. King of Oberlin on Some Present Tendencies in Theology, and Prof. G. F. Wright on Mediate Miracles of the Bible.

Cleveland Conference met with Bethlehem Church, Cleveland, April 27, 28, the women of Union and Irving Street Churches assisting in entertaining. Nearly every church in this largest of Ohio conferences was represented. About 150 persons took dinner in the spacious rooms of the Bible Readers' Home, which adjoins the meeting house and in interesting after-dinner speeches Dr. and Mrs. H. A. Schauffler and others explained the work of the home. The topics were: The True Message of the Ritschlian Theology, Young People of the Church and Our Benevolent Societies. A special overture to the Ohio H. M. S. was adopted, urging that the debt of $2,000 which rests upon the Ohio Society this year for the first time in its history be at once apportioned among the churches of the State. The Cleveland Conference pledged itself to raise one-third of the debt. The closing session was devoted to a communion service.

Ill.—Southern Association held its last semi-annual meeting in Norris City. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. W. F. McMillan, James Tompkins, D.D., and D. M. Brown. The topics were, The Great Purpose and Aim of All Religion, Churches and Ministers, The Minister as an Educator in a Community, The Minister's Need of Perpetual Self-Culture, The Spirit and Method of Conducting the Business of a Church, Normal Drill on the Book of the Acts, Evangelistic Meetings, The Illinois H. M. S., and Foreign Missions. The Southern Collegiate Institute was reported as doing good work. An unpleasant duty of the association was the passing of a resolution suspending Rev. Ned Forest, recently pastor of the First Church, Anna, for deserting his family, church and friends to elope with a woman. A more thorough investigation will be made.

Mich.—Detroit Association held its spring meeting April 26, 27, with People's Church, Detroit. The subjects were: Is the Church Adapting Itself to the Changed Conditions of Modern Life? The Responsibility of Church Members, Why Do You Read the Bible Every Day? The Crisis in Congregational Benevolence. The sermon was by Rev. B. F. Aldrich.

Southern Association held its annual meeting at Wheatland, April 19–21. The sermon was by Evangelist L. P. Rowland. Topics were: Are Our Churches Careful Enough in the Choice of Pastors? The Pulpit in Politics, Home Missions and The Land and the Book, with stereopticon.

Mo.—Springfield Association held its spring session at Carthage. It was characterized by vigorous discussion of practical themes and by missionary addresses. Much interest was reported in the five academies and Drury College, all connected with this association.

Wn.—The Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho Association convened with the Medical Lake church, Rev. J. D. Jones, pastor, and was royally entertained. When it met in the same place seven years ago the church had 22 members, now it has 110. Then there were 15 churches and seven pastors in the association, now 44 churches, 29 of which were represented. The program was one that fulfilled the most sanguine expectations. The subjects were: The Pastor as a Preacher, The Pastor as a Teacher, The Needs and Possibilities of Christian Work in the Colville Country and in the Big Bend, Kindergarten Work as Applied to Sunday Schools, The Ideal Sunday School Teacher, The Christian Endeavor as a Factor in Christian Culture, The Responsibility of the Church for the Purity of the Home and for Public Morals, The Reflex Influence of Missionary Work, How to Increase Missionary Interest, Home Missionary Work in Rural Districts, Home Missionary Problems, A Year's Work in the Sunday School. The claims of the American Missionary Association and Church Building Society were presented and educational interests, especially Whitman College and Eells Academy, received due attention. The former has made remarkable progress during the last year, the number of students enrolled having exceeded anything in its past history and the work being worthy of the highest commendation. The sermon was by Dr. F. B. Cherington on The Qualifications for Soul Winning. Reports from the churches gave evidence of progress. The last service was one specially to be remembered, when addresses were delivered on What Are We Building? and The Faith of the Future. The communion was then administered.

CLUBS

Mass.—The Connecticut Valley Club met in Springfield, April 27. The topic was Ethics and Evolution. Prof. G. T. Ladd of Yale and Profs. H. H. Wilder and H. N. Gardiner of Smith spoke. About 75 were present.

Pa.—The club of Pittsburg and vicinity met with the First Church, Allegheny, April 27. The subject of the evening was Egyptian Antiquities. Rev. H. M. Bowden and Miss Effie Butler were the speakers.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 651.]

Union is looking forward to its 75th anniversary, which occurs in June, but will not be celebrated until fall. Subscriptions are now being received for the new organ fund. The C. E. Society has shown quite a revival of missionary interest. It has pledged $500 for next year, and hopes to be represented by native preachers in Japan, China, Turkey and India. It will try to aid the A. M. A. in work among the mountain whites, and will take a share in the jubilee fund of that association.

The Superintendents' Union met at Berkeley Temple as usual last Monday night, with a somewhat larger attendance than usual, owing, doubtless, to the general interest in planning the most effective programs for Children's Sunday. That important day in the Sunday school calendar was the subject for the evening, and was discussed first by two leading speakers, Mr. W. H. Emerson and Rev. E. N. Hardy, under the topic: How to Make It Interesting and Have It Accomplish the Largest Results, then an open discussion was held. That the observance of the day is becoming more helpful each year as a local benefit to schools and as a feature in denominational work was unanimously testified.

Dorchester.—Central. Under the auspices of this church, Rev. P. B. Davis, pastor, Sunday afternoon praise and preaching services have been conducted in Stewart's building. At times half the seating capacity of the hall, which is about 500, has been required. The preachers thus far have included, besides the pastor, Rev. Messrs. Arthur Little, D. D., E. G. Porter, W. H. Bolster, D. D., D. W. Waldron, G. W. Brooks and W. H. Allbright, D. D. The services will be continued through the spring until warm weather.

Massachusetts

Winthrop.—Union, established last May, is gradually strengthening its roots in the community and extending its branches to home and foreign missions. Its first pastor, Rev. Arthur Truslow, was ordained and installed last fall. He has been made a life member in the A. M. A. through a gift of the church. Christmas barrels were sent to Joppa, Alabama and to Grand Lake Stream, Me., in the latter case with individual presents from the children. A gift of $30 has also been sent to Rev. Edward Fairbank of Sholapur, to maintain for one year a "Winthrop" school in western India. The charter membership of the church has increased from 21 to 31. The Sunday school is also in good condition. The people are hoping for increased congregations with the coming to Winthrop Beach of cottagers and other summer guests.

Cambridgeport.—Hope. Old Stearns Chapel, the home of this church, has been treated to a new coat of frescoing, the platform lowered for the comfort of the congregation. Also a new, small pipe organ takes the place of the old reed instrument. The work has been under the direction of a member of the church who is a practical decorator. The work began with the Men's Social Club—a temperance body—and was helped on by the Ladies' Aid Society and the Sunday school. The material improvements followed a little revival season, in which several persons were converted and others quickened. The temperance club has been of great value to the men and to the church. Rev. C. M. Carpenter is pastor.

West Somerville.—Day Street has been six months in its renewed building. The church has an average of 150 more in attendance than before. Rev. Peter MacQueen, the pastor, has a large Bible class of young men, and the Sunday school has already outgrown the enlarged vestry. The primary school has nearly doubled this year. The church will do more for missions this year.

Auburndale.—At the missionary concert, May 3, interesting addresses were given by Rev. G. T. Washburn, D. D., of Pasumalai, India, and by Mrs. M. C. Leavitt, who told of her observations of missionary work while on her tour of the world in the interests of the World's W. C. T. U.

Ballardvale.—At the last communion, of the seven persons received into the church on confession four were members of the Junior C. E. Society, of which Mr. William Shaw, treasurer of the United Society, is the leader. The society numbers 40 members. The church prospered during the year, and at the annual meeting of the society $25 were presented to the pastor, Rev. A. L. Golder, and money was appropriated for a new carpet for the church. At a church festival held recently $90 were cleared for an improvement fund.

Beverly.—Dane Street received nine new members May 2, making 35 since Jan. 1, and 86 during the present pastorate of less than two years. The new history and manual is beautiful and complete. The church has been greatly bereaved recently by the loss of valuable members, among them Miss Nellie P. Dodge, for 19 years a teacher in the primary department, and ex-Mayor Charles H. Odell. Rev. F. J. Van Horn is pastor.

Ipswich.—First closed its pleasant evening gatherings for the winter with An Evening Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush. Rev. G. W. Christie gave selections from Ian Maclaren's book. These gatherings were originated by the pastor, Rev. Edward Constant, and have proved a signal success. The aim has been to furnish recreation of an intellectual character and to develop the social life of the community. Professional men, laboring men, sea-faring men and the ladies have been called into requisition on the programs. There has been a great variety of topics, including travels, addresses, reminiscences and historic, patriotic, literary and religious themes. The chapel has been tested to accommodate those who wished to attend.

Lowell.—French. Last week was a glad one to this missionary church, marking the culmination of the winter's work; 24 persons were baptized by the pastor, Rev. T. G. A. Coté, at evening services held at the homes of the people. In one of the services an entire family, including eight children, were baptized. The meetings have given an opportunity for instruction concerning baptism, which the more formal church service could not secure. On Sunday 12 were received into church membership, four being heads of families and recent converts from the Church of Rome. The attendance at the regular services is much increased. ——Kirk Street and John Street have united, as for four years past, to oppose the effort to locate a liquor saloon upon the thoroughfare to their houses of worship. The attempt to secure the license was unusually determined this year, the applicant insisting upon a public hearing, at which his lawyer presented reasons for granting the license in an address lasting an hour and a half. Rev. Messrs. Johnson and Bartlett, assisted by their Methodist and Free Will Baptist neighbors, presented in half an hour the reasons against, and were forcibly assisted by Deacon Cumnock of Kirk Street, the agent for the mill, in whose tenement house district the location was asked. For the fifth year in succession the application for this license was refused to the great joy of the churches. ——Swedish has a new pastor, Rev. A. P. Nelson, recently of East Orange, N. J., in whose honor a social recognition service has been given by the church, with an address of welcome by Rev. C. W. Huntington of the High Street Church.

Marlboro.—Union has finished a quiet but prosperous year. The annual reports showed a gain in financial matters. Weekly calendars are printed. A stereopticon has been purchased for church use, the Harris system has been adopted in our benevolences, the Sunday school has been graded and a home department added. Steady growth of numbers in attendance upon the services of the church, especially in the evening, are noted. Rev. L. B. Goodrich is pastor.

North Brookfield.—First. The pastor, Rev. J. L. Sewall, recently invited the boys of the Sunday school to a church lawn party, each to bring a rake and assist in beautifying the somewhat extensive grounds about the meeting house. About 50 responded. When their labors were over they sat down to a maple sugar supper, furnished by the women, and spent the evening with the pastor in playing games.

Palmer.—In April, 1847, the First and Second Churches held their last service in the old meeting house at Palmer Center. The Lord's Supper was administered. Last week Sunday, April 25, after a lapse of 50 years, the churches united again in an anniversary service. The sacrament was administered and a letter was received and read from Rev. M. K. Cross of Waterloo, Ia., who was pastor at the time of separation.

Harwich.—A series of gospel meetings have been a means of blessing to this old church. The community has been stirred, large audiences have gathered and there have been many interesting cases of conversions. The church has been quickened and reinforced. Rev. G. Y. Washburn is pastor.

Ludlow.—Union. A council acted upon the resignation of Rev. A. J. Quick April 28, and it is to take effect Aug. 1. The council added a testimonial to their confidence in the late pastor's character and ability, and commended his faithful work during this pastorate. Mr. Quick's pastorate has been the longest and most prosperous of the church. Its membership has more than doubled, its benevolences have increased, advanced work has been done in the Sunday school and in the two C. E. Societies. The church is financially prosperous.

Springfield.—Park has sustained a severe loss in the death of Henry W. Blake. No truer friend of pastor or church in all lines of work could be found than he.

Williamsburg.—Rev. H. S. Snyder being dismissed April 27, the council passed resolutions commending his pastorate of nine years. A reception was tendered him and his wife the same week. Many persons tendered their regrets in person.

Maine

Castine.—"The Desert Palm," a unique missionary society of this place, has just issued its reports for the 17th year Its work has comprised the support of a Bible woman in India, $35; two pupils in India, $40; a school in Turkey, $20; a pupil in college at Harpoot, $25; and relief work, $5. The society has sent during its brief life $1,850 to mission fields.

Bangor.—Hammond Street. Rev. H. W. Pope closed the special meetings recently. The church gratefully acknowledges the spiritual uplift received.——One of the local papers published for an Easter issue a symposium, from Congregational pastors and others, upon The Resurrection, as a historic event.

Rockland issues an attractive manual this year containing several pages of historical notes showing the united work of Baptists and Congregationalists at the start, and the growth of the early church. Forms and rules as usual are part of the contents. Rev. C. A. Moore is the present pastor.

Dedham and Holden.—These feeble churches have been strengthened by accessions, so that the pastor, Rev. H. A. Freeman, is greatly encouraged. Easter was observed by a missionary offering, and Holden has also sent $9 to India.

Cornish.—A course of illustrated lectures on foreign lands, with historical, artistic and literary matter, given by the pastor, Rev. J. B. Saer, has been valuable and popular.

Presque Isle.—The Gale meetings have stirred the whole community, and many conversions are resulting. About 200 persons signed cards.

West Brooksville.—Rev. F. W. Snell has served acceptably here nearly three years, and will leave many friends who regret his resignation.

Freeport is holding a revival and enthusiastic temperance meetings. One Sunday 123 persons signed the pledge.

Bethel recently had a fine choral festival.——Boothbay Harbor held a celebration supper at the close of the business year netting $30.

New Hampshire

Exeter.—Second. After a year or more of uncertainty a location has been secured for the new edifice. Arrangement has been made for the transfer of a corner residential site west of the academy grounds, 100 feet square, to the academy for the church in exchange for the old site, which will come into the possession of the academy to complete its quadrangle. This is satisfactory to all concerned. Plans will be immediately prepared for an elegant edifice of stone or brick, complete in all its appointments for beauty, convenience and comfort for its varied uses, and work will begin and be pushed forward with the design of finishing the outer walls before another winter and if possible completing the structure for occupancy within a year.

Goffstown.—From the estate of Mrs. J. S. Caldwell, a faithful and beloved member of this church, recently deceased, $200 have been received to be added to invested funds for the support of preaching, and the C. H. M. S. receives $300. The Y. P. S. C. E., inspired by an address last February by Rev. J. S. Chandler, has purchased a beautiful communion set of six pieces for the South Gate Church of Madura, India. On the flagon is the inscription, "All ye are brethren."

Manchester.—South Main Street. Thirteen were added to membership at the last communion, 12 on confession. A normal class has recently been organized for study of the Bible. The Easter congregations were unusually large. The pastor, Rev. C. A. Bidwell, gave an address recently at the union meeting of all the young people's societies of the city. He has been asked to give the G. A. R. Memorial Day oration.

Meriden.—Recent gifts of $110 have decided the question of going forward immediately to erect a stone edifice if the funds in hand are sufficient. It is much needed to take the place of the house burned two or three years ago. The growing prosperity of the academy adds to the need.

Gilsum.—In the recent death at Keene of Mrs. Nancy M. Hubbard, aged 95, the church has lost its oldest member. Blessed with good health till within two years, and with large capabilities, she made her life efficient in helpful service.

Hinsdale.—Members of the churches have planned a house to house visitation of every family in the town to learn the church preference of every person. The town has already been districted for the purpose.

Littleton.—The church has met with a great loss in the death of Miss Julia Allen, for 65 years a member and for nearly 50 a teacher in the Sunday school. Steps have been taken to organize a Boys' Brigade.

Pembroke.—Rev. Paul E. Bourne has entered auspiciously upon his fifth year of service. At the recent annual meeting all bills were paid and an encouraging balance was reported for the coming year.

The society in Warner receives a legacy of $8,000 from the estate of the late John Foster of Boston. The town also receives a like amount.——The church in Laconia receives $200 by the will of the late Mary T. Chapman of Peabody, Mass., and the Massachusetts Bible Society, the C. H. M. S. and the Woman's Board $400 each.

Vermont

McIndoes Falls has been in great need of a vestry. After several unsuccessful efforts to provide it, about a year ago one member offered $400 on condition that as much more should be raised. Success followed, and April 30 a beautiful and commodious vestry was dedicated free from debt. The largest donor increased his gift about $100 to make the building better than it was at first planned.

Burlington.—The claims of Howard University were presented recently at the First and College Street Churches. Gen. O. O. Howard, now residing here, followed with an account of the beginnings of the university, in which he had an active part.——First. The proceeds of a recent concert were divided between India and Armenia.

Rev. F. G. Appleton will close his work of three years in Granby, June 1.

Rhode Island

Chepatchet.—Necessary repairs were provided for at the recent annual meeting. Rev. F. J. Nash will remain another year, with a two months' leave of absence for rest.

Connecticut

Hartford.—First. A pleasing feature Easter Sunday was the reading of a letter of greeting from the congregation to Rev. Dr. G. L. Walker, pastor emeritus.——Asylum Hill. A handsome new baptismal font greeted the congregation Easter Sunday, the gift of George L. Chase, Esq., in honor of his daughter, Mrs. C. H. Langley, a member of the church, who died in 1893. It is of white Carrara marble, imported from Italy and of one piece. It stands about two feet high on a circular base 26 inches in diameter and five inches thick, the whole being a most artistic piece of work. It was formally dedicated by the baptizing of Mr. Chase's grandson.

Ansonia has just completed a successful year. From the surplus left $250 have been paid on the debt, leaving a balance of $2,750. Toward the payment of this Mr. Egbert Bartlett has generously contributed $500 on condition that the entire amount be paid within two years. His offer has been formally accepted and it is now certain that the fine property valued at over $40,000 will soon be entirely free from financial encumbrance. The church gained two in its membership last year, receiving 15 accessions. The benevolences of the church were $170 and of the Ladies' Society $265. Rev. W. F. Markwick is pastor.

Torrington.—The proposed plans for the enlargement of the audience-room include the building of a broad gallery and the removal of the organ and choir to the pulpit alcove, which will be enlarged and built in the back. Transepts will be built on the north and south, making the church cruciform, improving its appearance and adding a seating capacity of 230 in all. The chapel will be enlarged by the building of a large wooden structure containing Sunday school and social rooms.

Wolcott.—Rev. H. M. Kellogg closed a pastorate of a little over four years in April. During this period 27 new members have joined and a Y. P. S. C. E. has been organized. The last Sunday he faced a large congregation reluctant to let him go. He immediately begins work in the new growing church in Olcott, Vt.

Willimantic.—At a recent special meeting of the society, it was voted to borrow $2,000 to pay the society's note. It was reported that $800 were needed by the society at once to carry on its work. Three hundred dollars were raised on the spot and the remainder is nearly assured.

Terryville.—The church debt of $500 has been wiped out, a committee having secured in a short time more than enough pledges to cover it. Dr. W. A. Gay, the pastor, has been confined to the house with illness for a time.

West Hartford.—First, on a recent Sunday, had no sermon, the time being spent in raising pledges for the debt of $528. All but $50 was secured and this amount has since been made up. Rev. T. M. Hodgdon is pastor.

Ledyard.—By the will of the late Charles Bill the church receives a bequest of $1,000 and the Bill Library $5,000. Other bequests include the endowment of Wellesley College with a scholarship fund of $7,000.

Unionville.—The annual meeting shows the past to have been a prosperous year, $200 surplus being left, which will be applied on the society's debt. Rev. D. D. Marsh is pastor.

Hadlyme.—Neighborhood meetings have closed for the summer. Twenty-three have been held altogether with 14 families. The average attendance was 33. Much good has resulted.

New Haven.—Howard Avenue. During May the pastor, Dr. W. J. Mutch, will preach a series of sermons on The Young Man. The first was given May 2 on His Preparation for Life.

Goshen.—In accord with the will of Miss Jane L. Griswold, late of Winsted, the church receives a legacy of $1,000 to add to the permanent fund of the society.

Newington.—Nearly $600 were raised Easter Sunday towards the extinction of the church debt of $700 and that amount has been largely increased since.

Danbury.—Swedish. The new building fund now amounts to $612, of which $329 were given by the members and the remainder by friends.

East Hartford raised $485 towards the church improvement fund Easter.——The ladies at New Hartford cleared $30 towards the church debt from a recent supper.——The Easter fair at Putnam netted the ladies about $60.——South Glastonbury took up an Easter collection of $20 and Talcottville one of $25, both for the India famine sufferers.——Broad Brook will have a new bell.——The sewing society of the Swedish church at Bridgeport realized $120 from a recent auction sale.——At Hartford a similar sale netted $200. Rev. L. W. A. Bjorkman conducted the sale in both places.——Thompson has a pastor's class for beginners.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

Maine.—The branch of the W. H. M. S. of this church held a meeting recently the proceeds of which go to aid in the education of a young man studying for the ministry. For several years the branch has contributed $25 annually for him.

Lake View.—Union, officered by representatives of different denominations but for nearly two years under the oversight of the State H. M. S., has at length been incorporated and recognized by council as a Congregational church. Much credit is due the pastor, Rev. C. E. Page. The enterprise has been much hindered by lack of unity of management and by property complications, but now that these obstacles are apparently removed the church has prospect of vigorous growth.

Clayton is prosperous, with a good addition of new members, as a result of special services conducted by the pastor, Rev. William Excell. An entire family, except a little child, were among those brought into the church. A Junior Endeavor Society, recently organized by the minister's wife, has reached a membership of 30.

Walton.—Rev. C. W. Hardendorf, pastor at East Albany, has been assisting in special services with gratifying results, a number having professed conversion. This church is one of the strong village churches of the State. Rev. G. W. Nims is pastor.

Camden is afflicted in the loss of Deacon Rowland Harding, who for more than 20 years held this office. He had made a special study of church law, and had held nearly all the offices in the gift of the church.

Gloversville.—Two evenings recently Rev. W. E. Park, the pastor, gave lectures, illustrated with stereopticon. They were designed to describe The Congregationalist Pilgrimage of last summer, and were entitled: Homes and Haunts of the Pilgrims in England and Holland, and English City and Country Life, Principal Cathedrals. About 140 pictures were thrown on the screen. The lecture was for the benefit of the C. E. Society.

New York.—Tompkins Avenue has granted its pastor, Rev. R. R. Meredith, D.D., a six months' leave of absence, to begin at once. The time will doubtless be spent chiefly in Europe. Dr. Meredith's health has been impaired to such an extent as to require restoration by a complete change. A committee of the church will supply the pulpit.

New Jersey

Jersey City.—Waverly is rejoicing over the removal of a mortgage which has weighed heavily upon it for many years. Of the $5,000 required, the church raised $2,000, the C. C. B. S. changed its loan of $1,000 to a grant, the Northern New Jersey Conference, through the new Congregational Union of the State, paid $1,000, and the pastor secured $1,000, more than nine-tenths of which came out of his own limited private funds. The spiritual condition of the church is good. Twenty-six new members have joined on confession within a year.

Newark.—Belleville Avenue, after being pastorless for several months, has become happily united in the choice of Rev. W. A. Rice, D. D., heretofore a Presbyterian and one of the secretaries of the American Tract Society. He was installed April 22, a large council assisting. He is in middle life and ripe in experience. His paper before the council was an account of experience, faith and purpose. He stated that his theology was less precise than formerly, though deeper. The sermon was preached by Dr. S. M. Newman of Washington, D. C.

Pennsylvania

Mount Carmel.—English during the past seven months has about doubled its membership and the Sunday school has increased from 80 scholars to 203. Arrangements are being made to rebuild the house of worship. Rev. R. N. Harris is pastor.

Lansford.—Second, under the pastorate of Rev. J. C. Handy, is doing a noble work. The church building has recently been frescoed and repainted and now presents an attractive appearance.

THE SOUTH

District of Columbia

Washington.—First. The yearly report of the society shows slight evidences of the recent financial depression, the receipts falling a trifle below those of last year. It is hoped that needed repairs in the church furnishings may be made during the coming year.

THE INTERIOR

[For Chicago news see page 642.]

Ohio

Cleveland.—Pilgrim held Lenten services for 10 days, with a devotional meeting in the afternoons of Passion Week and evening meetings with addresses by the pastors. The attendance was large and the interest deep and earnest. One evening service was conducted by the Endeavor Society. The morning of Palm Sunday the Sunday school held a meeting for prayer and testimony in place of the usual study of the lesson and nearly a hundred of the scholars signed cards expressing their purpose to lead a Christian life.——Euclid Avenue. An innovation was introduced on the occasion of Dr. H. M. Ladd's dismissing council, April 29. The body sat down to supper together at 6 P. M., and transacted its business about the tables after the fashion of a Congregational club meeting. Later it adjourned to the Sunday school room, where a large company of members of the congregation and friends from other denominations had gathered, and, with President Thwing as presiding officer, several brief addresses were made reviewing Dr. Ladd's 14 years' pastorate and the large place he holds in the life of the community. To the cordial tribute paid him, Dr. Ladd made appropriate and feeling response. In addition to extended resolutions adopted by church and by council, a feature of the occasion was a strong communication to the council, headed by a prominent Methodist layman, and signed by many prominent citizens outside of Dr. Ladd's congregation, expressing regard for him as a man and a citizen and regret at his leaving. Dr. Ladd will for the present retain his membership in the church, and will reside in Cleveland, while he engages in work as special manager for the Ohio Anti-Saloon League. During his pastorate 878 members were added to the church, 398 on confession. The church has raised and expended for its own work in the same time, including the building of its beautiful house of worship, $121.809, and has contributed for missions and charitable work $84,973. Three other prosperous and independent churches, having now a combined membership of 743 and each having an attractive house of worship, were organized as colonies from Euclid Avenue Church largely through Dr. Ladd's efforts.——Lakewood gave a largely attended farewell reception to Rev. and Mrs. H. A. N. Richards, and presented them with a piano lamp and a substantial purse of money. The following week another reception was given for the new pastor, Rev. F. C. Holbrook, who comes to Cleveland from Wayne, O., where he has been pastor five years. He receives a cordial welcome.——Bethlehem is the cradle of the work of Congregational churches for foreign populations in the United States, and, with its branches at Cyril and Mizpah Chapels and East Madison Avenue, is a splendid testimony to the success of foreign missions at home.

Indiana

DUNKIRK.—The new edifice was dedicated April 25. Two weeks' meetings preceded, in which the pastor, Rev. W. A. Thomas, was assisted by neighboring pastors. The dedication sermon was by Rev. M. E. Eversz, D. D., who also led in liquidating an outstanding sum of $2,500. Communion services were held in the afternoon. The evening sermon was by Dr. J. M. Lewis. Active work was begun in this field three years ago, although an organization had been made as far back as 1891. The church has a membership of 90, and is doing efficient work in all departments. The new building, with the lot, has cost about $9,000. It is centrally located with 62 feet frontage and a fine corner tower on the main street. The foundation is stone and superstructure is pressed brick veneer. The auditorium has a bowled floor, with pulpit in corner, is seated with opera-chairs and can be doubled in size by opening adjoining rooms. The church has been fortunate in having members of liberal and earnest minds.

EAST MOUNT CARMEL, on the lower Wabash, has suffered from floods. It is a point where S. S. and preaching services have been maintained for two years. Recently a church has been organized with 35 members, and a church building is in course of erection. Services are now held in the schoolhouse, a large building, which is well filled. During the recent floods the water rose from two to three feet above the first floors, and boats were used for getting about. Services are conducted by Dea. A. F. Van Sickle of Hosmer, who has become an acceptable lay preacher.

ELKHART.—First. Rev. F. E. Knopf, pastor, rejoices in an accession of 15 adult members since March 1. Several families have united including that of one of the leading lawyers of the city. The church gave a reception in honor of the new members and also of the new Riverside church, April 23. The latter is steadily increasing and has a Sunday school now averaging 95.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Plymouth has received a gift of $1,000 through the will of Mrs. Franklin Taylor, long a member. Rev. F. E. Dewhurst, the pastor, on his recent birthday received from the young men a bicycle.——Brightwood. Special services under Pastor C. E. Grove have been continued. Twenty or more have decided for Christ.

Michigan

DETROIT.—Fort Street. Plans for the new edifice are completed and are held under favorable consideration. The new house will probably cost from $17,000 to $20,000. The pastor, Rev. John Pogson, is enjoying a two weeks' vacation.——The city wants the C. E. National Convention in 1899 if possible. Local churches have already subscribed $5,000 and $7,000 more are subscribed by outsiders. A committee is vigorously going to work to round up the total amount to $25,000 ——People's. Rev. F. A. Miller, evangelist, has closed two weeks of special meetings, 460 persons having signed cards. One-third prefer to unite with People's Church. About 150 were children from 10–15 years of age, mostly in the Sunday school. On Easter Sunday, before a congregation numbering 1,500, Rev. Morgan Wood, the pastor, baptized 57 children, nearly 100 parents standing in a row.

LANSING.—Plymouth. Brief reports recently given from all departments show a healthy condition. All running expenses have been paid and $500 of debt have been cleared off. Rev. C. F. Swift, the pastor, is asked by the faculty and students of the Agricultural College to repeat his sermons on The Novelist as Preacher. They will be given at the college Sunday afternoons.——Pilgrim has just received 21 persons into fellowship, making 68 during the last six months.

GRAND RAPIDS.—Park. An interdenominational missionary meeting of the women's missionary societies took place April 23. Over 20 churches and seven evangelical denominations were represented. Interesting addresses were given by pastors of Methodist, Reformed, Episcopal and Congregational churches.——Smith Memorial has enjoyed a season of revival under the lead of Rev. Joel Martin. About 70 persons professed conversion.

BELDING has just been encouraged by 16 accessions on confession. A good number more will come at the next communion. The pastor, Rev. B. V. Child, is preaching a series of morning sermons on The Principal Doctrines of Scripture. The Y. P. S. C. E. has worked hard to pay for putting in electric lights in the meeting house.

CADILLAC has had a remarkable awakening through the united efforts of the pastors and Rev. E. E. Davidson of Newtonville, Mass. Over 200 persons joined an inquirers' class, mostly from among the leading families of the city. The work still goes on.

KALAMO.—Rev. Carl Jones has closed his pastorate with this church. The people are sorry to part with him. Rev. Frank Estabrook of Vermontville will probably take up this work as an afternoon appointment.

IMLAY CITY.—The Men's Club is doing fine work on Sunday evening in filling up the house. The club about once a month takes the entire service, relieving both pastor and choir.

HART.—Rev. Joel Martin has closed a successful series of meetings. The church has been quickened and 25 adults and 21 children have given themselves to Christ.

SAGINAW.—The chapel rooms have all been beautified and made more attractive. The Woman's Society has won great success during the year.

Wisconsin

NEW RICHMOND.—Evangelist C. N. Hunt recently closed a series of gospel meetings of large influence in the community and many additions have been received by the churches. The Congregational church, Rev. A. D. Adams, pastor, received 37 new members lately as its first fruits of the work. Mr. Hunt is devoting his entire time to evangelistic work, having four years ago given up a lucrative law practice to enter this field of labor.

KEWANEE.—Rev. W. E. Rigby, the pastor, is encouraged by two Boys' Brigades, an earnest C. E. Society and unusually large congregations. Mrs. Rigby's experience in Salvation Army work and as an officer in the Volunteers makes her a valuable assistant pastor. New pews, a carpet, wall paper and a sidewalk have all been added to make the church attractive.

SPRING VALLEY.—Rev. F. B. Bridgman and wife, having received their appointment for the Zulu Mission in Africa from the American Board, close their work here the middle of May. They have, by their devoted and successful service, brought the church up to a solid foundation, and will leave the work to the regret of all.

SEYMOUR.—Rev. C. W. Damon, the pastor, is holding special meetings with the aid of Evangelist Pratt. A gift of 300 library books from Massachusetts has been received for Osborne, an outstation. Offerings have been taken during the year for four missionary societies.

WEST SUPERIOR.—Hope, since the resignation of its pastor in January, has sustained services and has called Rev. L. A. Brink. The new ministry begins under favorable conditions.

THE WEST

Missouri

KANSAS CITY.—Olivet, a year ago, was worshiping in a basement and $1,400 in debt, with collections averaging $7 a Sunday. It now has a completed edifice, including basement and superstructure; the membership has increased from 75 to 105; a branch with 18 members has been organized at Myrtle Avenue; the debt has been paid and $2,400 raised toward the new building. With the blessing of God and the aid of the C. H. M. S. and the C. C. B. S., Rev. H. L. Forbes has led the people over the mountains of difficulty into this delectable land.

Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS.—Plymouth celebrated its 40th anniversary April 29. A large congregation listened to the story of the struggles of the original band of worshipers. The early history of the church, its misfortunes, of its pastors, the labors of the faithful choir, which continued in service for 15 years, the financial success and growth—all was narrated by those who had helped to bring it to its present strength. Rev. C. C. Salter of Duluth, an early pastor, closed the services with an eloquent review of the church during his pastorate. A few charter members remain, some of whom were present and spoke. Letters were read from former pastors, Rev. Drs. H. A. Stimson, R. G. Hutchins and C. F. Thwing.

The new Year-Book gives this city 19 Congregational churches, including four just outside the limits. The total membership is 4,356. There were 397 accessions during the year, 178 on confession.

GLENWOOD.—Under the new pastor, Rev. E. R. Latham, the church is prospering greatly. Eight new members have been received to fellowship, and the amount of aid required from the H. M. S. has been reduced. The church hopes soon to reach self-support.

Kansas

BUFFALO PARK AND COLLYER.—These frontier churches have greatly prospered during the three year's pastorate of Rev. I. M. Waldrop. When he began Buffalo Park Church had eight members, no services and no Sunday school; now it has 52 members, large congregations, a thriving Sunday school, Y. P. S. C. E. and prayer meeting. The town, which was formerly unusually worldly, has been spiritually revolutionized by the growth of Christian sentiment and activity. This is the only church in the region. At Collyer the membership has increased from five to 30. Mr. Waldrop has also conducted revival services in two country districts, resulting in the organization of the Fairview Western and Alanthus churches, the former having 40 members and the latter 15. The whole region is in the drought-stricken section of recent years, and is an open field for purely missionary work.

ALTON.—Rev. T. H. Gourley is holding revival meetings with marked manifestation of interest. The business houses close at 7.30 P. M. to enable all to attend. He will conduct a revival meeting at Stockton in May, using the H. M. tent.

Nebraska

OMAHA.—Rev. W. G. Puddefoot preached at the First Church on the morning of April 25, and spoke before the Men's Club at St. Mary's Avenue in the evening. The houses were crowded at both services. He was at Lincoln the following Tuesday evening and at Seward Wednesday evening.——Plymouth. Rev. H. S. MacAyeal and his people have nearly completed the canvass for funds with which to meet the proffered loan of the C. C. B. S., and it is expected that the whole matter will be closed up in a short time.

PLYMOUTH.—On Easter evening, just after the C. E. meeting, a unique service was held to testify the high esteem in which church and congregation hold Prof. Laurence Bruner, who has the chair of entomology at the State University and has been asked to spend a year in the Argentine Republic to investigate the grasshopper plague. Brief addresses were made by the pastor and by one of the trustees. In his response Professor Bruner expressed his abiding interest in the work of the church.

TRENTON.—The work at the out-station, Rosefield, where Rev. D. F. Bright has been preaching for some time, has so developed that a project is agitated for building a house of worship this season. This is almost exclusively a Welsh settlement and the people have long desired stated Congregational service.

PALISADE.—Rev. D. M. James is pushing work here and at the country appointment, Eureka. Major Cole lately spent four or five hours here between trains holding evangelistic services.

WEEPING WATER.—The pastor, Rev. C. S. Harrison, has gone to the mountains for a rest of several weeks. Vigorous efforts are being made to extinguish the debt.

FREMONT.—The pastor, Rev. W. H. Buss, to the great relief and joy of his people, announced, April 25, that he had decided to remain with them.

South Dakota

LEBANON AND LOGAN.—Rev. C. H. Driesbach has been called to Ohio by the death of his father. During the past year the house of worship at Lebanon has been greatly improved inside and a new organ has been purchased.

HERMOSA.—Rev. William Dawson, having charge here and at Rockerville, Red Earth and Hayward, is meeting with encouragement and is helping the young people, whom he gathers once in two weeks for a singing class.

GETTYSBURG.—This vacant field in a county seat presents a good opportunity for a young man of wisdom and energy. The young people's Bible class has an attendance of about 30.

Rev. E. W. Jenney is conducting special meetings at Huron which are well attended.

Wyoming

SHERIDAN.—This leading Congregational church in North Wyoming has taken a fresh lease of life under its new pastor, Rev. W. E. M. Stewart. Accessions at the last communion, overflowing congregations at the three Easter services, lively interest of the townspeople in the work and payment of the debt are encouraging features.

WHEATLAND has lately added a pastor's study to its parsonage. The church is growing, and the out-station Sunday schools organized last season have reopened for the summer.

Oklahoma

Wakita.—A prominent member has agreed to cultivate 10 acres of corn and give the proceeds to the support of the minister. This practical method so commends itself that every church in Grant County has adopted it. The Ridgway Sunday school supports itself by taking a collection of fresh eggs instead of coins, and afterward markets them.

Hillsdale dedicated a new meeting house Easter Sunday, Superintendent Parker preaching the sermon. Two Baptist ministers and one of the U. B. persuasion also took part.

PACIFIC COAST

California

Rohnerville.—During the year just closed 31 members have been added, interest and attendance have increased, and $300 have been raised to renovate the building. This has been largely due to the untiring efforts of Rev. G. A. Jasper. He now adds Alton to his already double field of Hydesville and Rohnerville.

Washington

Walla Walla.—First has sold its present property for $2,500, but is guaranteed the use of it for an indefinite period. A new building will be erected upon a site nearer the college as soon as the funds can be secured. No interest-bearing indebtedness will be incurred in building. A loan from the C. C. B. S. is hoped for. The Men's Sunday Evening Club held its third anniversary banquet in April, and listened to a scholarly address by Rev. A. W. Ackerman of Portland. This club is the only one to survive in the Northwest. It began with 20 members, and has grown to 86, not all of whom are now resident, however. During the past three years the number of Congregational churches in this county has grown from three to five, and the Sunday schools from three to nine. One of the latter is supported by First Church workers, Prof. L. F. Anderson being superintendent. This church also contributes nearly one-half of the salary of Rev. C. T. Whittlesey, who labors in the county.

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$67.57
Previously acknowledged	24,480.05
Total	$24,547.62

Marriages

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

BAILEY—BACON—In Williamsfield, O., April 24, by Rev. D. W. Bailey father of the groom, Ernest W. Bailey and Alice M. Bacon.

HUBBARD—MUNSON—In Huntington, April 28, by Rev. M. A. Munson of New Haven, Ct., assisted by Rev. Dr. N. I. Jones of S. Hadley, Dr. G. W. Hubbard of S. Hadley and Maude E. Munson of Huntington.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

GROUT—In W. Brattleboro, Vt., April 27, Lydia Bates, wife of Rev. Lewis Grout. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Grout were engaged in missionary work in South Africa.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

Per Copy, 6 Cents. Per Year in Advance, $3.00.

Two Years in Advance, $5.00; Five Years, $10.00.

If Payment is Delayed, $3.50 Per Year.

One old and one new subscription, $5.00.

Club of Five, one at least being new, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

Receipts for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

Discontinuances.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Advertising Rates.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

Reading Notices, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Lee & Shepard. Boston.

Jane Austen. By Oscar F. Adams. pp. 279. $2.00.

Roberts Bros. Boston.

After Her Death. pp. 137. $1.00.

Copeland & Day. Boston.

Lyrics. By John B. Tabb. pp. 187. $1.00.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

Echoes. By Josephine C. Woodbury. Decorated by Eric Pape. $2.50.

J. Selwin Tait & Sons. New York.

A Key to the Orient. By Mrs. Clapham Pennington. pp. 161. $1.25.

Eskdale Press. New York.

Leo XIII. and Modern Civilization. By J. Bleecker Miller. pp. 189. $1.50.

A. S. Barnes & Co. New York.

History of the English Bible. By Blackford Condit, D.D. pp 507 $2.00.

American Tract Society. New York.

Uncle John Vassar. By Th. E. Vassar, D. D. pp. 258. $1.00.

James Nisbet & Co. London.

Letters from Armenia. By J. R. Harris and Helen B. Harris. pp. 254.

PAPER COVERS

Cassell Pub. Co. New York.

Phyllis of Phillistia. By F. Frankfort Moore. pp. 342. 50 cents.

Ruth Farmer. By Agnes Marchbank. pp. 312. 50 cents.

Bible Institute Colportage Association Chicago.

A Castaway. By Rev. F. B. Meyer. pp. 127. 15 cents.

Stormont & Jackson Washington.

John Fiske on the Idea of God. By Rev. E. T. Shanahan, D. D., Ph. D.

MAGAZINES

April. Our Day.—Southern States.—American Folk Lore.—Music

May. Atlantic.—Pall Mall.—Scribner's.—St. Nicholas.—Pocket.—Harper's.—Lippincott's.—Chautauquan.—Catholic World.

Have you Eaten too Much?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

People impose on the stomach sometimes, giving it more than it can do. Horsford's helps to digest the food, and puts the stomach into a strong and healthy condition.

The Royal—White and Pure as the Driven Snow.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Pure Blood Is a Necessity

Every thought, word and action takes vitality from the blood; every nerve, muscle, bone, organ and tissue depends on the blood for its quality and condition. Therefore, pure blood is absolutely necessary to right living and healthy bodies. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the great blood purifier. It is the great cure for scrofula, salt rheum, humors, sores, rheumatism, catarrh, etc.; the great nervine, strength builder, appetizer and stomach tonic.

Wonderful Effects

"My little girl, 7 years old, was troubled last spring with impure blood. Every pimple and scratch would make a great sore. My husband got a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, the little girl began taking it. When she had finished taking one bottle she did not have a sore or blotch on her, but I gave her another bottle to make sure of a permanent cure. This spring I am giving Hood's Sarsaparilla to both of my little girls for loss of appetite and it is wonderful to see the change in them. They are gaining in flesh and weight and their cheeks are rosy." Mrs. Edward Garrett, care Warren Foundry, Phillipsburg, New Jersey.

If you have decided to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other instead.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best Spring Medicine. All druggists. $1; six for $5 C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, reliable, beneficial, easy to take. 25c.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

The P. O. address of Rev. Frederick Alvord is Newton Center, Mass., instead of Talcottville, Ct.

Lay College for Christian Endeavorers, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

American Seamen's Friend Society, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the Society at New York.

James W. Elwell, President.
Rev. W. C. Stitt Secretary
W. C. Sturges, Treasurer.

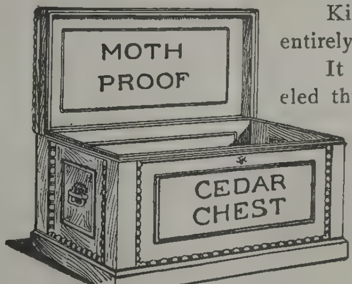
RED CEDAR.



Kindly notice that this is not our old chest, but an entirely new design.

It is made of Solid Red Cedar and is double paneled throughout, to avoid all cracking and splitting. The wood is thicker and highly aromatic, being specially selected.

Patent automatic supports to lid. Double lock. Folding iron handles. Carved moldings. Extra stout casters. 27,600 cubic inches of storage space.

Here is twice as fine a chest as we have ever offered before. It will hold the wardrobe of the entire household, and is good for a generation of service. The thickness of the Cedar assures its pungent odor for years to come.

There is a universal demand for these Improved Chests. Accept no other. Price, $14. Our new Catalogue of Summer Furniture will be mailed on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER
Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.
R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashua, N. H.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Hotels and Travel

Going To . . . EUROPE?
H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

EUROPE. ANNUAL SUMMER TOURS. Few vacancies in select and small party personally conducted by Prof. CAMILLE THURWANGER, now forming. 31 Pierce Building, Boston.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
THE LAFAYETTE will entertain 100 guests during the Home Missionary Meetings at $1.25 and $1.50 per day. Elegant and convenient location on Circular St. Very pleasant modern house, electric bells, excellent bill of fare. Rates good until June 15. Our 15th season. Send for circular.
GEORGE E. BATES, Prop.

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st,
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

The St. Denis,
BROADWAY AND ELEVENTH STREET,
Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your face toward New York."

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The same slow, almost imperceptible, improvement noted in general trade last week is again to be reported. Business is quiet—there is no doubt about that. The great question is whether it is growing duller or is improving, and we believe this query to be truthfully answered in the opening sentence of this article. The indications by which it is known that business is on the mend are: better retail demand, a freer movement of merchandise as shown by increasing railroad earnings, and a tendency towards firmness of prices in many directions.

Perhaps the most infallible barometer of the state of trade is railroad earnings, and, although the increases in the latter are as yet very moderate, they nevertheless afford considerable gratification. As regards monetary rates, they continue low. The supply of commercial paper is light and the inquiry for funds from nearly every quarter is practically at the minimum. The cotton mills are said to be well supplied with cotton, or they might be in the market as borrowers. Bankers are hoping that the exports of gold will result in strengthening monetary rates.

Iron and steel are in as unfavorable a position as any of the staple products. The demand does not increase at all and prices are none too steady. Indications point to the shutting down of some furnaces in the Pittsburg district. Activity in wool has subsided somewhat, that is, the speculative craze. Cotton goods continue quiet at low prices, while woolen manufacturers are busy and prone to ask an advance on new orders.

The stock markets are exceedingly dull and it is difficult to see whence any greater activity is coming right away. The big Wall Street interests do not seem to be in the market, and the business on the exchange is strictly professional and among the room traders.

THE specimens of Miss Barlow's incised decorations at Jones, McDuffee & Stratton's, opened the past week from the Lambeth Pottery, London, are unique. She is peerless in her art, and the fact that she never repeats the same design on a piece of ware renders the work its great value.

IN view of the fact that the Paine Furniture Co. has been for many years one of the most regular, persistent advertisers in The Congregationalist, the following editorial, which appeared in the Boston Journal of 28 April, will be of interest to advertisers and to our general readers as well: "The Paine Furniture Co. of this city has just tried an experiment in advertising which was original, daring and successful. Therefore it is of interest not only to the company but to the whole public. The company believed that because of its magnitude, its reputation for honorable dealing and the other legitimate methods by which it had fixed itself conspicuously in the public eye, it could make one of its usual announcements and without affixing its name thereto could depend upon buyers to identify the advertiser and call for the goods. The detail of the experiment was the insertion for one day in some of the newspapers of an advertisement describing a certain library table, with the price given, but no hint of the name of the maker or of the place where it was to be sold. Nevertheless, within twenty-four hours more than fifty of the tables were bought at the company's warerooms and dozens of additional orders poured in from all over New England. In the judgment of the company itself this result speaks eloquently of the value of judicious, intelligent and persistent newspaper advertising. For a dozen years the advertisements of the Paine Co. have been so shaped. Therefore its ability now to carry through successfully so unusual an experiment results from those years of intelligent effort and liberal expenditure. . . . The lesson, then, to the merchant who would succeed through advertising, always assuming that his goods are what he represents them to be, is to be sure that his announcements are attractive, that they are printed persistently, that in his choice of newspapers he is influenced by the quality as well as the quantity of its readers, and that in a purely business matter like this he does not permit himself to be governed by whims, by prejudices or by newspaper traditions which in the sight of all persons save himself are things of the past."

Save the Babies
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
Its Value in the Preparation of Artificial Food for Infants.
Hunter McGuire, M. D., LL. D.,
President and Professor of Clinical Surgery, University College of Medicine, Richmond, Va.
"For some time I have been using
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
in the preparation of ARTIFICIAL FOOD FOR INFANTS. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and it is impossible to get a wet nurse. One serious objection, along with many others, to cow's milk, is its acidity. Human milk is always alkaline, but cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many babies, and lime water is often added to the milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of lime water is hurtful to digestion, and last summer, when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal derangement, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
SPRING No. 2 in preparing the food, with immediate and continued good results. The water was added until the milk lost its acidity and was neutral or alkaline."
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00, f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address.
PROPRIETOR, BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VA.

8% Security Safe as Government Bonds. Your money can surely earn it. Can prove it by best Eastern banks. Rob't E. Strahorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
Delay, Expense, and Worry saved by using CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES, for reasons told in circular, which is mailed on application. Cashed anywhere, any time, in any country of the world.
Agency of the U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

The "Harris" Method of Giving
This little tract has been of immense service to the churches in suggesting systematic methods of giving. It was first published as an article in the Congregationalist, and attracted wide notice. Many large editions of the "True Method of Giving" in its present form have been sold. Price, 100 copies, $2.50; 35 copies, $1.00.
For sale at the office of The Congregationalist. Boston.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS of all concerned if, in correspondence suggested by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, mention is made of the fact that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

ACROSS THE BORDER

Among the Churches

April is the counterpart of October in denominational gatherings and general church interest in the Dominion. October makes a forecast and April a review of the winter. The review this year is of special interest, since every month shows gratifying additions in different fields. In various places, also, Lenten services were fittingly held for deepening spiritual life and gathering the results of the winter. The general observance of different days of Lent is new to many of the churches, but no doubt it is the beginning of a yet more general recognition of the season.

College Closing

The first denominational gathering of general interest was the closing of the college session at Montreal, which was specially impressive because of the retirement of Principal Barbour. Mr. J. R. Dougall, chairman of the board, presided, and referred feelingly to this fact, and also to the five graduates who were leaving. The conferring of the first B D. degree in the history of the institution was a novel feature, and Rev. F. J. Day, B. A., of Sherbrooke was the recipient of the distinction. Mr. C. R. Ashdown of Toronto, under appointment by the American Board as missionary to Turkey, delivered the valedictory, and his classmates gave brief addresses on timely topics. Dr. Barbour, in the concluding address, briefly reviewed the work of the college during his principalship of ten years, and referred kindly to the young men who had passed from his instruction and were doing good work in different parts of the world. At the request of the chairman the venerable principal was commended to God in special prayer, led by Rev. John McKillican, after which the meeting closed.

Toronto District Association

A few days later there was held the regular quarterly meeting of this association at the Western Church, Toronto. Mr. E. L. Ye'gh presided, and, considering the wet day, the attendance was good. The first service was largely taken up with the suspension of one of the churches for having called a pastor who has since been expelled from the Western Association, and whose character at that time was under investigation by committees of the association and the Union of Ontario and Quebec. Unhappy experiences of the past are causing churches and associations to be more than usually careful in the reception of pastors whose character may be questioned. In the evening Rev. J. H. Barnett, late of Lakewood, N. Y., addressed the meeting, attacking higher criticism, and was followed by Rev. J. D. McEwen on Hindrances and Helps to Our Denominational Work in Nova Scotia. The hindrances pointed out were the exodus, isolation and lack of denominational literature, and the helps outlined were the intelligence of the people and the strong loyalty to their Puritan ancestry. Rev. John Morton delivered an able concluding address, prefaced by a plea for charity, not only toward those who hold the old theological ground, but also to those who stand upon the new.

Western Association

The same day this body began a two days' convention at Forest. The pastor, Rev. J. I. Hindley, Ph.D., conducted the devotional hour and cordially welcomed the members. The president, Rev. W. H. A. Claris, then called for reports from the churches, which, with one or two exceptions, were most encouraging. The district secretaries also reported good work in their respective localities. The evening meeting took the form of a recognition service, when Rev. E. C. W. McColl was installed pastor of two neighboring churches. The first topic of the second day was Church Finances, which was handled in a well-prepared paper by Mr. G. Y. Donaldson, who advocated direct and systematic giving. The subjects for the afternoon were: The Study of Congregationalism in Young People's Societies, by Rev. W. J. Hindley; Our Present Outlook, by Rev. J. K. Unsworth; Our Missionary Society, by Rev. A. F. McGregor; and the Press and Pulpit, by Rev. G. T. Carr. The addresses delivered in the evening were: The Future of Christian Endeavor, by Rev. A. F. McGregor, who organized the first Ontario society and was one of the presidents of the Provincial Union; and The Minister and Public Affairs, by Rev. J. W. Pedley, an energetic example of his topic.

Quebec Association

One week later the Quebec Association met at Montreal, when all but three of the churches were represented. The first session was devoted to the deepening of spiritual life, when earnest papers were contributed by Rev. B. W. Day on the Study of the Bible, and by Rev. A. W. Main on Prayer. The sermon in the evening by Rev. W. M. Barbour, D. D., on the Fruits of the Holy Spirit, as illustrated by Gal. 5: 22, 23, was an able and fitting continuation of this object. The reports from the churches next morning were particularly gratifying, and evoked a discussion on how city and country churches might help one another. The suggestions that found favor were the sending of representatives by the former, and the forwarding of donations by the latter of the abundance of farm produce to the poor of the city. Two excellent papers followed by Rev. G. H. Craik on Over-Churching of Country Districts, and by Rev. Robert Hopkins on The Church and Sociology, the "woman's hour" in the afternoon was a new and agreeable feature of the association, when splendid addresses were given by Dr. Susan Dougall and others. Practical talks followed on the legal duties of ministers by Messrs. Charles Cushing and J. M. M. Duff, who gave timely instruction in connection with marriage licenses and registration. The evening meeting was a good conclusion to a most successful association, the speakers being Rev. Messrs. W. T. Gunn, Thomas Hall on the Great Opportunities of Congregationalism in Canada, G. E. Read on Foreign Missions, and J. L. Brown on Christian Citizenship.

J. P G.

Beautiful Specimens
OF . . .
Doulton Faience.

Floor Vases of Miss Barlow's incised decorations, costing from $20 to $50 each. Also the smaller Mantel Vases. No duplicates.

Handsome Pitchers from the same pottery. All sizes. Costing from low cost up to expensive specimens. In the Pitcher Department are over 500 kinds to choose from.

Jardinieres of the Doulton leafage decorations. Low tone colors. From the small to the large and very large sizes. An extensive exhibit to choose from.

American Cut Glass Pieces. Rich crystal cuttings. None finer made in the world. Adapted to Bridal Gifts.

China Dinner Sets, superb shapes and decorations, to be seen in Dinner Set Hall (3d floor).

INSPECTION INVITED.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
Crockery, China, Glass, and Lamps,
120 FRANKLIN.

MILLINERY

No Trimmed Hats can be found elsewhere to excel ours in style or quality. Lowest possible prices for the best work.

Ladies' Trimmed Hats

Stylish effects in FLOWER-TRIMMED HATS, in all the new shades of Geranium, Violet and Green, trimmed with Fadeless Roses, Poppies, Pansies and other Fine Imported Flowers, at from

4.00 to 10.00

Children's Hats

Large assortment of CHILDREN'S TRIMMED HATS—very dainty creations—at 2.50 to 6.00

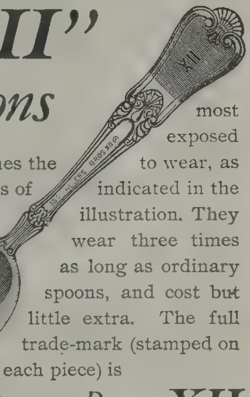
WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.



"XII" Spoons have three times the usual thickness of silver on the places most exposed to wear, as indicated in the illustration. They wear three times as long as ordinary spoons, and cost but little extra. The full trade-mark (stamped on each piece) is

1847 Rogers Bros. XII

For sale by dealers everywhere. Made by
MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO.
MERIDEN, CONN.; 208 Fifth Ave., NEW YORK.
The largest manufacturers of high-class silver-plated ware in the world.

999,999 Strawberry Plants at prices that will sell them. Also Novelties in Hardy Vines and Climbers, Water Lilies (all colors), Celery Plants, Asparagus, Roots, etc., etc. Send for my illustrated Catalogue before ordering elsewhere. I have a reputation of thirty years back of me. C. S. PRATT, Reading, Mass.

EARN A BICYCLE

600 Second Hand Wheels. All Makes. GOOD AS NEW. $5 to $15. New High Grade '96 models, fully guaranteed $17 to $25. Special Clearing Sale. Shipped anywhere on approval.

We will give a responsible agt. in each town free use of sample wheel to introduce them. Our reputation is well known throughout the country. Write at once for our special offer

N. C. MEAD CYCLE CO., Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

BLANCARD'S

PILLS AND SYRUP
OF
Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE,
for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.

None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.

E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA
Alturas,	—	55
Byron,	1	5
Crockett,	6	8
Eagle Rock,	—	4
Los Angeles, First,	12	22
Oakland, First,	—	3
Market St.,	2	5
Pacific Grove,	—	6
Rosedale,	30	38
San Francisco, Third,	—	3
San Jacinto,	5	7
Santa Ana,	4	5
CONNECTICUT
Clinton,	—	22
New Haven, United,	15	15
Norwich, Second,	—	8
Thompson,	1	3
INDIANA
Angola,	6	8
Cedarwood,	11	13
Dunkirk,	1	3
E. Mt. Carmel,	7	7
Elkhart, First,	10	10
Riverside,	4	4
Indianapolis, Pilgrim,	2	9
Plymouth,	—	11
Washington,	3	10
IOWA
Moorland,	6	7
Waterloo,	9	14
KANSAS
Plymouth,	—	10
Sycamore,	5	9
MAINE
Bluehill,	5	5
Dedham,	3	4
Eliot,	2	7
Gardiner,	—	6
Holden,	20	21
Norway,	3	6
Oldtown,	—	9
Vinalhaven,	5	13
MASSACHUSETTS
Boston, Berkeley Temple,	14	19
Central,	4	7
Dorchester, Second,	6	18
Maverick,	12	13
Mt. Vernon,	1	4
Phillips,	6	6
Shawmut,	1	4
Union,	2	5
Walnut Ave.,	17	32
Brockton, Wendell Ave.,	—	66
Chelsea, Central,	40	55
Everett, Courtland St.,	5	5
Lowell, French,	12	12
Kirk St.,	5	14
Lynn, First,	2	5
Malden, First,	9	14
Middleboro, Central,	15	17
Newtonville,	3	10
Northampton, Edwards,	8	11
Pittsfield, First,	32	36
South,	15	17
Springfield, South,	13	14
First,	6	17
Stoneham,	26	29
Worcester, Central,	—	10
Hope,	3	4
Old South,	5	19
Park,	1	3
Pilgrim,	15	24
Plymouth,	4	5
Union,	1	9
MICHIGAN
Belding,	16	16
Carson City,	2	5
Grand Rapids, Barker Memorial,	1	3
First,	7	10
Grandville,	3	3
Lansing,	14	21
Muskegon,	11	14
Olivet,	21	32
Owosso,	—	8
St. Clair,	7	7
MINNESOTA
Cornish,	32	32
Fergus Falls,	—	16
New Ulm,	—	3
Staples,	—	7
NEBRASKA
Arcadia,	6	7
Brule,	—	24
Cowles,	—	6
Friend,	3	3
Harbine,	—	4
Lincoln, Vine St.,	4	8
Minersville,	8	8
Sherman School House,	—	32
Wallace,	6	8
Waverly,	2	4
NEW YORK
Brooklyn, Lee Ave.,	—	15
Clayton,	11	11
Lake View,	—	13
Lysander,	23	25
New York, Manhattan,	3	16
Pilgrim,	6	7
Ogdensburg,	4	6
NORTH DAKOTA
Inkster,	3	3
Portland,	7	7
OHIO
Berea,	13	15
Cleveland, Trinity,	—	6
Wellington,	14	14
WASHINGTON
Pleasant Prairie,	4	4
Riverside,	—	9
WISCONSIN
Berlin, Welsh,	21	21
Burlington,	6	7
Clinton,	1	5
Eagle River,	—	6
Kewaunee,	7	7
New Richmond,	—	37
Waupun,	—	6
CANADA
Hamilton, First,	—	10
London, First,	—	5
Ottawa,	—	9
OTHER CHURCHES
Burlington, Vt., College St.,	6	8
Denver, Col., S. Broadway,	1	4
Genesee, Ida.,	29	29
Hood View, Ore.,	11	11
Marlboro, N. H.,	25	25
Mount Carmel, Pa.,	—	7
Sheridan, Wyo.,	5	5
St. Louis, Mo., Redeemer,	—	4
Churches with less than three,	17	27

Conf., 821; Tot., 1,564.

Total since Jan. 1: Conf., 7,210; Tot., 13,345.

THE Syndicate Publishing Co., of Philadelphia, make some interesting statements regarding their proposed new publication, The American Educator. "It gives special attention to the live topics of the present day. Its electrical department is claimed to be the best in print, and brought right down to the date of issue. All the latest advances in science and mechanical skill are recorded and illustrated, as, for example, the great suspension bridges just begun at New York—one crossing the Hudson and the other the East River; the Boston subway, the Chicago drainage canal, our latest battleships of the Kearsarge and Alabama types, the Maxim and Langley air-ships and the Arctic explorations of Nansen and André, while the recent stirring events in Armenia, Cuba and Greece are, for the first time, made matters of authentic encyclopædic record. The biographies are largely those of living men, the statistics are in part the result of some 30,000 special reports sent to the publishers by local officials in all parts of the world since Jan. 1, 1897. We note also a fine history of Methodism, by Rev. Bishop Hurst, giving the world's statistics for 1897, while other denominations receive equally exhaustive treatment at the hands of Rev. Dr. Purves of Princeton Theological Seminary, Rev. Dr. Vedder of Crozier, etc.; most valuable treatises on the Ant and Spider, by Rev. Dr. H. C. McCook, who is the highest living authority on these topics; wonderfully interesting problems in astronomy, discussed by Professors Simon Newcomb and Lewis Swift, the 'comet finder'; scholarly articles on Psychology, Hypnotism and Telepathy, by Prof. J. Mark Baldwin of Princeton; a remarkably able treatise on Bridges, by Professor Merriman of Lehigh University; and hundreds of other notable scientific papers. The illustrations embrace a line of chromatic plates showing nearly 700 subjects in seventeen colors." The regular prices have been fixed at $35 to $45 a set, but the advance orders, see page 631 of this issue, are to be filled at $7.50 and $9, of which amount only one-half is required in advance of publication. Our readers should certainly send for sample pages of the work, which will be sent on application, for this unusual opportunity is certainly deserving of wide acceptation, and the high commercial standing of the publishers makes it perfectly safe to send advance orders as required.

HARD TO RESIST IT.—It is hard to resist the plea for summer luxury which is contained in the advertisement of willow furniture, over the signature of the Paine Furniture Co., in our last issue. It will be doubly hard to resist such a plea a little later in the season, when the hot days are here. We will give our readers a hint in this connection, which may prove profitable. There has never been so fine a display of summer furniture in this city as that now on exhibition at the Paine warerooms, and such inexpensive prices were never quoted before.

IF the system is fortified by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which makes rich, red blood, there is little danger of sickness.

ITS healing properties are wonderful, Pond's Extract. Do not trust any worthless substitute for the genuine.

ONE INSTANCE IN WHICH DELAY IS DANGEROUS—

If the teeth attacked by tartar have lost their enamel, it is too late to save them; but if not, use SOZODONT at once, the liquid daily, the powder twice a week. Both in one package. Druggists.

HALL & RUCKEL
NEW YORK Proprietors LONDON
A sample of Sozodont and Sozoderma Soap for the postage, three cents.

The Staying Qualities of a Singer Sewing-Machine

SIMPLICITY—
Easily adjusted, and won't get out of order.

SPEED—
Does the most work with least effort.

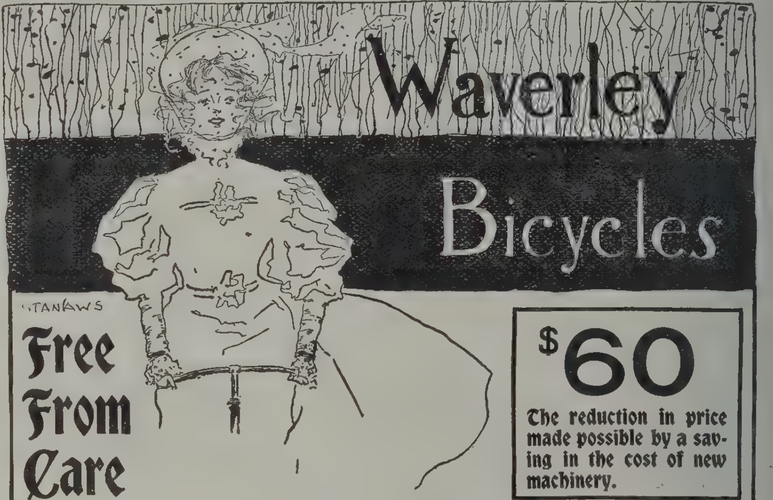
STABILITY—
Wears longest, with least repairs.

STYLE—
Is an ornament to any home.

The Sewing-Machine bearing this mark best unites these qualities.

THE SINGER MANFG. CO. TRADE MARK.

SOLD ONLY THROUGH THE COMPANY'S OFFICES, IN EVERY CITY IN THE WORLD.



Free From Care

$60
The reduction in price made possible by a saving in the cost of new machinery.

are the riders of Waverley Bicycles. The '96 model, greatly improved, is now sold at a price popular with all. For those who want the very best, none better than the new 1897 Waverley Bicycle can be found. Perfect bearings, beautiful finish and the acme of mechanical skill. The price is $100. Send for a Catalogue.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Indiana.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

but have sold direct to the consumer for 24 years, at wholesale prices, saving them the dealers' profits. Ship anywhere for examination before sale. Everything warranted. 100 styles of Carriages, 90 styles of Harness. Top Buggies as low as $35. Phaetons as low as $55. Spring Wagons, Road Wagons, etc. Send for large, free Catalogue.

No. 37½. Surrey Harness—Price $15.00. As good as sells for $22.00.

No. 606. Surrey—Price with curtains, lamps, sunshade, apron and fenders, $60. As good as sells for $90.

ELKHART CARRIAGE AND HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. PRATT, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

ALDRICH, Benj. F., Pontiac, Mich., accepts call to Ypsilanti.
BEARD, Wm. S., Yale Sem., to Durham, N. H.
BELL, Sam'l, late of Pittsfield, N. H., to Deerfield.
BROWN, Chas. O., formerly of First Ch., San Francisco, to Green St. Ch., Chicago. Accepts.
BUCK, Geo. J., late of Springfield, Minn., to Rockefeller, Ill. Accepts.
BURGESS, Wm., Chicago, Ill., to Des Plaines.
CARTLEDGE, Henry, Lantana, Fla., to New Smyrna, for a year. Accepts.
CRAGIN, Chas. C., recently of Sebastopol, Cal., to Rio Vista. Accepts.
DAVIS, A. A., Lakeland, Minn., to North Branch and Sunrise.
DICKSON, John W., Croton O., to Flat Rock, Mich. Accepts.
EVANS, J. Lewis, Derry, N. H., to Rochester.
GOFF, Edward F., to permanent pastorate at Riverside, Cal. Accepts.
GRANGE, Wallace S, formerly of Atkinson, Ill., to Malta. Accepts.
HERTZOG, Geo. N., Wantagh, N. Y., to First Presb. Ch., Cedarville, N. J. Accepts.
HILL, Jas. L., Salem, Mass., formerly of Mystic Ch., Medford, to English-speaking Ch., Leipsic, Germany. Declines.
IORNS, Benj., late of Belle Fourche, S. D., to Fertile. Accepts.
LEGRANDE, Otis G., recalled to Wellston and Tohee, Okl., in connection with another preaching point.
LUCE, Albert A., Leroy, Mich., to Lacey. Accepts.
NICHOLS, Sampson, to supply another year at Gorham, N. H.
SLOAN, Alex, Jr., Andover Sem., to Groveland, Mass.
STERNS, Wallace H., Bangor Sem., accepts call to E. Granville, Mass.
STEVENSON, Wm. D. J., late of Spring Green, Wis., to First Ch, Arena. Accepts.
STUBBINS, Thos. A., Oberlin Sem., to Castalia, O. Accepts.
WARNER, Alex. C., Chicago Sem., to Ashkum, Ill. Accepts.
YARROW, Sidney R., Pacific Sem., to Sausalito and Mill Valley, Cal. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations

HEDBERG, E. O., o. Swedish Free Ch., Providence, R. I., April 12.
KIDD, Wm. D., o. p. San Rafael, Cal., April 12. Sermon, Dr. W. C. Pond; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Geo. Mooar, D D., L. D. Rathbone, W. P. Hardy.
McCOLL, Evan C. W., rec. p. at Forest, Ont., April —. Sermon, Rev. H. S. Beavis, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. D. Silcox, A. F. McGregor, J. I. Hindley, Ph. D.

Resignations

APPLETON, Fayette G., Granby and Victory, Vt., to take effect June 1. He will return West.
BUSS, Wm. H., not resigned at Fremont, Neb.
CROWELL, Preston R., Greenfield, N. H.
FULLER, Jona. K., not resigned at Barton Landing, Vt.
GRIMES, Frank J., Windham, Vt., has removed to Keene, N. H.
JOHNSON, James G., New England Ch, Chicago, Ill.
LEWIS, Samuel, First Ch, Coaldale, Pa., to take effect June 12.
WATERS, Frank P., Third Ch., Waterbury, Ct.

Dismissions

HARDY, Wm. P., San Rafael, Cal., Apr. —.
LADD, Henry M, Euclid Ave. Ch., Cleveland, O, Apr. 29.
QUICK, Abram J., Union Ch., Ludlow, Mass, Apr. 28.
SNYDER, Henry S, Williamsburg, Mass., Apr. 27.

Churches Organized

FRUITVALE, Cal., rec. 16 April.
SAN JOSE, N. M., rec. 20 April. 11 members.

Supplies for the Summer

ARENA, Wis., R. F. Black of the State University.
BLACK EARTH, Wis., Edwin Ralph of Beloit College.
BUTTERNUT, Wis., W. R. Dixon of Chicago Seminary
SHERBURNE, Vt., Wm. Hazen of Hartford Seminary.

Miscellaneous

BARNES, Stephen G., has been granted by the church in Longmeadow, Mass., two months' absence for recuperation, beside a vacation of one month. Mr. Henry P. Schauffler of Hartford Sem. will supply the pulpit.
BOSWORTH, Wm. A., and wife, Fairmount Ch., Wichita, Kan., were agreeably surprised on the evening of Mrs. Bosworth's recent birthday, by a call from a large gathering of their parishioners, laden with substantial and beautiful gifts.
BRADLEY, Albert I., retiring pastor at Old Orchard, Mo, and his wife, were given a farewell reception by their Young People's Society, who presented them with "22½ pieces of McKinley money."
BRAY, Spencer H., after three months will close his pastorate at Chester, N. J.
BROWN, Frank J., has closed his work at Aitken, Minn.
COLP, Donald G., of Yale Seminary, will resume charge at Kragness, Minn., the coming summer.
DALEY, Chas. M., Supt. for the C. S. S. & P. S, is making a six-weeks' missionary trip in the Black Hills and Wyoming.
EMERSON, John, is supplying at Acton, Me.
FREELAND, Sam'l M., has closed his service with First Ch., Tucson, Ariz., and will return to his home in Seattle, Wn.
FUNKHAUSER, Hugh C., has accepted an invitation to supply at Northeast Ch., Indianapolis.
JONES, Carl, has closed his work at Kalamo, Mich.
KIMBALL, Jere., late of W. Superior, Wis., has been engaged to supply at Tomahawk for three months.
PIERCE, Albert E, late of Portland, Ind., has been invited to edit the county S. S. paper. For the present he will reside at Liber.
SCUDDER, Wm. H., of Tacoma, Wn., has dislocated his knee by falling from his wheel.
STICKNEY, Edwin H., Supt. for the C. S. S. & P. S., owing to reduction of its force will, in addition to his field in N. Dakota, assist Supt. R. P. Herrick in Northern Minnesota, where there is large immigration.
TUCKER, Joshua T., of Roxbury, Mass., now in his 85th year, has for five weeks been suffering with nervous prostration and heart failure. His recovery is doubtful.
WILLIAMS, Wm. W., who for over 40 years has been pastor of First Ch., Toledo, O., retires May 10 as pastor emeritus.

WORTH KNOWING ABOUT.—Every one who is thinking of buying a cedar chest this season ought to know that there has been an improved cedar chest brought out within the last sixty days, which is so far in advance of the old chests of last year that there can be no question of its desirability. It costs about the same price, but is really twice as good a chest. The best place to purchase, where one may be sure of securing the new and improved chest, is at the Paine warerooms on Canal Street.

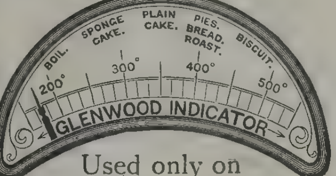
ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

WHAT has been your experience? That the "just-as-good," "sold-for-less-money" kinds are the most expensive? That the best, or standard, in all lines is the cheapest? The best in paints is Pure White Lead and Linseed Oil. (See list of the genuine brands.)

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

WHY Don't You make cooking A Delight with the GLENWOOD Patent Oven Thermometer



The "Greatest Help" to modern cooking ever invented.

Used only on Glenwood RANGES.

The Glenwood agent in your town has them.

Blindness Prevented!!

There Should be No Waiting to be Blind.

The Absorption Treatment a Heaven-sent Blessing to . . .
. . . Those Upon Whom Blindness is Approaching.

The Rev. S. M. Haskins, D. D., Rector of St. Mark's, Brooklyn, N. Y. (had cataracts), upon his return home writes:—"The first Sunday after I came home I read the Gospel from the Chancel, then I called the attention of the Congregation to the fact that it was the first time they had heard me read it for three months, and I assured them that I felt truly thankful we had such an Institution as yours in this country. It was already calling down the blessings of thousands upon your head. I hoped that everyone afflicted with diseased eyes would visit your Institution. I enjoyed my stay at the Sanitarium, Everything is done for comfort and pleasure."

The Rev. B. N. Palmer, D. D., of New Orleans, La., (had Atrophy of Optic Nerve), writes an investigator regarding the above treatment: "Almost by every mail I receive letters of inquiry as to my experience of the treatment of my eyes. His theory is rational, based upon the self-restoring power of nature herself. Medicine cures only by rousing a peccant organ to the performance of its duty, when disease is thrown off and the patient recovers. The eye, he thinks, should form no exception. His aim, therefore, is to stimulate the eye, promote its secretions and increase the circulation, thus revitalizing the eye and enabling it to fulfil its functions; it throws off all the troubles and repairs its own waste. His method is simple, safe, in no way unpleasant, without disfigurement."

A. B. Colvin, Treas. of the State of New York, and a resident of Glens Falls, writes:—" . . . The history of this Institution and its advance by marvelous strides is well known to all of us. It has been one of the most remarkable and successful projects ever essayed in Glens Falls. The entire credit belongs to Edward H. Bemis, the eye specialist, whose success has been well-nigh miraculous, and remarkable ability in his field of labor and wonderful energy have brought about the results so familiar, not only to residents of Glens Falls, but to hundreds, perhaps better thousands, of afflicted ones all over the United States and in many foreign lands. May the work which is benefiting all of us, continue, and God speed him. . . ."

The Cause of Impaired Vision and Diseased Eyes Explained.

Pamphlet Free, Explaining Treatment at Home and at

THE BEMIS EYE SANITARIUM, - - Glens Falls, N. Y.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

W. H. M. A. AT LOWELL

The Woman's Home Missionary Association is not superior to the impulse that moves every one in the springtime to go a-roaming, to get out and away from the old haunts into fresh surroundings. This and the fact that no routine business takes any of the hours make the semi-annual meetings always memorable and delightful. The gathering at Lowell, in the Eliot Church, on April 28, brought representatives from many towns and cities in Massachusetts, and Nashua, N. H., also sent a delegation. A warm, homelike church, with a beautiful arrangement of palms, ferns and flowers about the pulpit, a cordial welcome voiced by Miss Morrison, president of the auxiliary, and a bountiful luncheon at noon were adjuncts of no mean importance.

Would that it were possible to convey to the absent friends of the association the spirit of earnestness and consecration that marked the day, from the opening devotional exercises conducted by Mrs. C. L. Goodell, the presiding officer, and Miss Lucy Fay, to the closing solemn words and prayer by Dr. J. M. Greene, pastor of the church. Tender were the words of Mrs. J. L. Hill in response to the greetings, for a fitting reference was made to an honored director, Miss Josephine L. Ely, who served the association many years, until called to a higher work. The Home Missionary Association from a Patriotic Standpoint was the theme of Mrs. Susan Fessenden's able address, which will be printed for wider circulation. She claims that patriotism is something far deeper than a sky-rocket celebration, that the character of the people is the fundamental thing, not the material wealth of the land. To organizations doing home missionary work the Government could well afford to appropriate a large sum each year to extend the work, to raise the people from the rut of the sensuous to the level of the spiritual. Mrs. Henry C. Brown gave a vivid picture of her recent experiences during a Southern trip, and described plantation life and the A. M. A. schools.

The question hour, conducted by Mrs. J. W. Danielson of Providence, is a much prized opportunity for discussion of ways and means. The box work and the methods of interesting children, especially the very young ones, were special topics raised. Most fortunately, Mrs. H. S. Caswell, a name loved from the Atlantic to the Pacific, was able to be present at both sessions. Not soon will her description of the conditions at Cripple Creek be forgotten, nor the joy in her voice as she said that money has just been pledged for the rebuilding of the Congregational church destroyed by fire some months ago. In the afternoon her informal talk, The Ninety-four, touched many a heart. What did she mean by "the ninety-four"? Simply that out of every 100 women in the churches only six are interested in missionary work. Why is the proportion so woefully small? Because of household cares, social life, clubs and whist parties. She quoted with emphasis the sad truth that lack of missionary enthusiasm is the grippe of the churches. The remedy for the disease is a cultivation of the habit of knowing, giving, praying, loving.

Other good things were a spirited talk by Mrs. A. A. Berle of Brighton upon Some Present Needs of the Indian Work, a paper by Mrs. M. A. Fuller of Providence on the Rhode Island Neighborhood Meetings, and a helpful, suggestive Bible reading by Mrs. Goodell on some lessons to be drawn from the life of King David. The special music consisted of a solo and a duet by Lowell ladies and a hymn written for the meeting by Miss Mary C. Jones of Cambridge. A. C. B.

OBITUARIES

CHARLES F. YOUNG

This well-known citizen of York, Me., died at his home in that town on Monday at 1 o'clock, March 29. His age was 77 yrs., 11 mos. and 3 dys. He was grandson of William Frost, Esq., of York, who was the nephew of Sir William Pepperell.

Mr. Young was a man of fine business ability, ambitious and energetic in all of his enterprises, and of strong integrity in his business dealings.

He gave his heart to God when twenty-one years of age, and through the changes of life that hope and belief in God and in his Word remained.

Mr. Young was sick but a short time, and confined to his bed only a few days. He had symptoms of the grip which, combined with disease of longer standing, and his age, rendered his illness short. He passed away quietly and peacefully, with these words: "Read in the Book." He was the only son of the late Noah Young of York. One sister, Mrs. George D. Moulton of Alfred, Me., survives him.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. Rebecca Napier Stedman died in Northampton, Mass., April 9, aged seventy-one. That tells of a life ended after the appointed round of years had been measured; it does not tell of the rounded character and services of that life If it should be added, Mrs. Stedman, daughter of the late Deacon James Hibben, was born in Charleston, S. C., in 1826, was married in 1846 to Mr. William S. Stedman, lived in St. Louis up to the time of her husband's death in 1866, then came to Northampton where she passed the thirty years of her widowhood—still all would not be told. After the death of her husband, widowhood made yet more sacred the duties of motherhood, and she devoted herself to her children. Home became the center of interest and effort. By authority and counsel and loving influence, she put upon her children the impress of her own gentle yet positive personality. In them she still lives. Well born, well reared, well cultured by school, society and grace, she was, as a friend has called her, "a gentle lady." In her manner geniality and dignity were happily combined. Strong in her convictions, she was not self-asserting, conscientious she was not censorious, and in the pleasant interchanges of social life she gave more than she asked.

Her religious life was characterized by a simple faith in God, which made her more constant in her loyalty than exultant in her joys, more painstaking in duty than demonstrative in emotion. Her piety was like a quiet but unfailing stream.

She loved God's word, and took its teachings with an appropriating faith which made them the nourishment of her spiritual life, and used them with a practical purpose which turned them into virtues and graces of character.

She loved God's house, and was a constant attendant upon its services as long as health permitted; she was an attentive hearer, and got good for herself; an appreciative hearer, and gave strength and cheer to her pastor. She loved God's people and prayed for the peace and prosperity of Zion. And when the time of testing came she was not found wanting. With weakness of body came no weakening of faith, with weariness and distress came no murmurings; with increasing dependence came no forgetfulness of others' needs and comforts. The trustful spirit which had given strength for life's activities gave peace in the sickroom. The unselfish spirit, which had moved her to so many ministries to others, moved her to thankfulness for ministries received, and thus that which had been the charm of her life brightened to its close. "Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love." I. C.

Ask your Druggist for a generous 10 CENT TRIAL SIZE.

ELY'S CREAM BALM contains no cocaine, mercury or any other injurious drug.

It opens and cleans the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals and Protects the Membrane.

CATARRH COLD IN HEAD

Restores the senses of Taste and Smell. Is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. 50 cts. at Druggists or by mail; Trial Size 10c., at Druggists or by mail.

ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York.

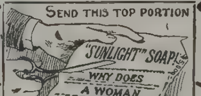
Blood Humors

Whether itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, pimply, or blotchy, whether simple, scrofulous, or hereditary, from infancy to age, speedily cured by warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, gentle anointings with CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure, and mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER D. AND C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Every Blood Humor," free.

FACE HUMORS Falling Hair and Baby Blemishes cured by CUTICURA SOAP



These competitions will be conducted monthly during 1897

First Prizes, each of $100 Cash	$ 400
20 Second Prizes, each of $100 Pierce Special Bicycles	2,000
40 Third Prizes, each of $25 Gold Watches	1,000
Cash and Prizes given each month	$3,400
	12
Total given during 12 months 1897	$40,800

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM. Competitors to save as many "Sunlight" Soap Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating competitor's full name and address and the number of coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with Number of the District competitor lives in. The districts are as follows:

NAME OF DISTRICT.

1 New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, and New Jersey.
2 New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3 Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4 The New England States

$3,400.00 GIVEN AWAY EACH MONTH IN CASH, BICYCLES AND WATCHES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS

The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First-class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

LEVER BROS., LTD., NEW YORK.

RULES. 1. Every month during 1897, in each of the four districts, prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.00.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Bros., Ltd., as final.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

The Electropoise

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.

Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.

L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.

General Agent for the New England States.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF CURES CATARRH

It has never been equalled for the instant relief of Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Headache. Cures Deafness, restores lost sense of smell. Sixty yrs. on the market. Price 25 cts. at all Druggists or by mail postpaid.

F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 Days Treatment Free by mail.

Drs. Green & Sons, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, May 16-22. Some Things Worth Living for. 1 John 2: 12-17.

A great many things give a certain worth and zest to life. Youth, health, sensitiveness to the beauties of earth and sky, appreciation of music and art, a poetical temperament, friendships, agreeable employment, delightful holidays—all these appeal to us as sources of satisfaction, and appeal with peculiar force in these days, when the range and variety of human pleasures is so large. Yet, put them all together and they do not fill the measure of man's longing, or assume a worth in his eyes commensurate with the promptings of his deeper nature. Many of these sources of happiness come and go. Others pall upon you. Then there is a great area of human life largely untouched by them. Think of the inmates of hospitals and sickrooms, the young life in public institutions, the multitudes of our fellow-creatures whose days are spent in mines and amid the ceaseless rattle of machinery. What things can make their lives worth living? For young and old, for the healthy and the bed-ridden, for rich and poor there are in the long run but two or three enduring sources of contentment. They are belief, work, love.

A great faith in a principle, a cause or a leader adds immense worth to life. To believe in something not apparent to mortal sight, to stake one's all upon it, to hold to it despite derision, to live under the inspiration of it—can an immortal soul crave any less worthy, less ennobling, end in life than this? Read on this subject of faith Anna Robertson Brown's What Is Worth While, and the last chapter in Dr. Munger's On the Threshold. Then to have a part in the work of the world, whether it be by active participation or by patient submission, is to fulfill another high design of our Creator. Blessed is the man who has found his work, even though it be not just what he desires. Whatever it be there is value enough in it to teach him life's great lessons, to bring out his latent powers, add to and to develop his manhood.

And besides faith and work one needs the softening, inspiring influences of a great love which leads one out of himself and into the joy of service and sacrifice for others. "Depend upon it," says one of the humble characters in a novel of Walter Scott's. "When you come to die it isn't the things others have done for you that will give you satisfaction, but what you have done for others." And if we ask how we can obtain a faith, a work, a love that will make life worth living, we go straight to Christ and his gospel. Nowhere else can we find so exhaustless a fountain whose overflow enriches every life which will own its thirst. Christ inspires faith, sets his disciples at work and shows them how and what to love. Thus only do we get the things that are worth living for.

DR. ABBOTT'S SERMONS ON THE BIBLE

At Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott recently concluded the course of sermons on the Bible which has awakened great interest and called forth much criticism. In the closing sermon he reviewed the whole movement of Old Testament prophecy pointing to Christ, and showed that Christ was the fulfillment of all prophecy and the completion of the revelation of God to men. These are Dr. Abbott's closing words:

> Now do you see why I do not believe in any further revelation? I do not see any room for it—do you? Other men may come to elaborate, other men may come to interpret, other men may come to teach, but can you conceive of anything higher to be said than this, that you and I can come to such a man as Christ was? Is there anything that can be said higher than this, that God is love, and love is sacrifice? Is there anything higher than this, that my relationship with God may be like the fellowship of Christ with the eternal Father, I one with him and he one with me? Is there anything higher than the hope that is based on this, that God himself in the person of his Son imaged, reflected, shown forth (explain it as you will) has come into life and put his own strong, healing hand upon me and said, "I will, be thou clean."
>
> It was inevitable that these lectures should have aroused some criticism. One cannot cleanse away that which has gathered on a great picture without creating foreboding in the mind of those who love the picture, and one needs be reverent and anxious lest one injure the lineaments that one wants to make clearer. I have wished so to open the Bible to you that you would see in it Christ, and in Christ the God whom I love, and whom I want all men to love, and I am glad to know from the witness that has come to me that my purpose has not been wholly in vain, and God has granted some grace to my ministry. Do you search the Scriptures, I wonder? If you do, remember that they are they which testify of Christ. Let it not be written against you at the last day that ye would not come to him that you might have life.

You think it is because your child is "growing too fast" that he fails to put on flesh. More often it is due to a gradual and general weakening of all the forces of the body. The child may have no pain, may have a fair appetite and yet lose flesh. Perhaps the happiest effects of Scott's Emulsion are in such cases as these. It gives the body a fat which is easily taken up; alters unhealthy action and supplies the best blood-making food known to medical cience.

60
60
3600
8
28800)40000000(1388 8/9
28800
112000
86400
256000
230400
256000
230400
8/9 = 25600/28800

How many days

(working days, Union labor days,) do you suppose it would take a woman to count the packages of Pearline (use without soap) sold yearly. Here it is, all figured out for you.

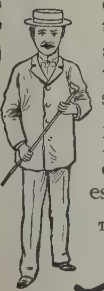
1,388 8/9 days, about four years.

Now if you are one of those poor, plodding women who are trying to get along with the old-fashioned ways of washing, stop and think what all that Pearline (use no soap) means. Don't you suppose most of these millions of women who use it are just as careful and particular as you are? And if Pearline were not what we say it is, or if anything could be urged against it, would women be using it in any such way?

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 503 JAMES PYLE, New York.

On a red hot day Hires Rootbeer stands between you and the distressing effects of the heat.

HIRES Rootbeer



cools the blood, tones the stomach, invigorates the body, fully satisfies the thirst. A delicious, sparkling, temperance drink of the highest medicinal value.

Made only by
The Charles E. Hires Co., Phila.
A package makes 5 gallons.
Sold everywhere.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F 1

Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

The advance of civilization is marked by the sale of SAPOLIO.

The beauty of a summer dress
Is in its dainty spotlessness;
The charm of evening linen, too,
Is in its clear and snowy hue;
And so the dress of man and maid
Depends alike on Ivory's aid.

Copyright 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

For Bicycle Wear

For the tennis court or gymnasium, every woman should wear a Ferris Waist. Formed on hygienic principles, yielding to every motion of the body, permitting full expansion of lungs, at the same time giving the body healthful and graceful support. Style No. 296 is made with stiff bust, elastic sides, and hose support attachment, expressly for bicycle wear and athletic exercise.

FERRIS' Good Sense Corset Waist

is made high and low bust, long and short waist, to suit all figures. Always superior in quality and workmanship. Children's, 25 cts. to 50 cts. Misses', 50 cts. to $1.00. Ladies', $1.00 to $2.00.

FOR SALE BY ALL RETAILERS.

For Good Health

USE

POND'S EXTRACT

It Relieves all Pain.
Controls all Hemorrhages.
Subdues all Inflammations.

The genuine is put up in bottles only, enclosed in buff wrappers, on which is printed our landscape trademark.

AVOID SUBSTITUTES
Weak. Watery. Worthless.

Note our name on every label and wrapper.

Pond's Extract Co., New York and London.

Volume LXXXII Number 19

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 13 May 1897

THE TRUE LIGHT

THE morning's brightness cannot make thee glad,
If thou art not more bright than it within;
And nought of evening's peace hast thou e'er had,
If evening first did not with thee begin.
Full many a sun I saw first set and rise,
Before my day had found a rising too;
And I with Nature learned to harmonize,
And to her times and seasons made me true.
How fair that new May morning when I rose
Companion of the sun for all the day;
O'er every hill and field where now he goes,
With him to pass, nor fear again to stray;
But 'neath the full-orbed moon's reflected light
Still onward keep my way till latest night.

By JONES VERY.

✠ ✠ ✠

Rev. GEORGE A. GORDON, D. D., pastor of Old South Church, Boston, says: "I regard it as a careful and exceedingly valuable account of 'Congregationalists in America.' . . . The work has, in fact, no competitors, and should have, as it justly deserves, the widest circulation."

✠ ✠ ✠

Dr. Dunning's Congregationalists in America.

A POPULAR HISTORY of the Origin, Belief, Polity, Growth, and Work of our Denomination.

With Introductions by R. S. STORRS, D. D., and Gen. O. O. HOWARD, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. ROY, Dr. A. H. QUINT, Dr. F. E. CLARK, and Rev. H. A. BRIDGMAN. 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in CHICAGO or NEW YORK, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address
THE CONGREGATIONALIST
1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

✠ ✠ ✠

From The Chautauquan, Meadville, Pa.: "A very clear, comprehensive and in every way satisfactory work. . . . To all seeking any knowledge concerning Congregationalism, the book will be found a full storehouse containing all obtainable information regarding the subject."

✠ ✠ ✠

NEW BOOKS PUBLISHED BY THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

NOW READY.

A New Novel by the Author of "A Kentucky Cardinal."

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE.

By JAMES LANE ALLEN, author of "Summer in Arcady," "Flute and Violin," etc. Cloth, 12mo, $1 50

The first edition is in the hands of the booksellers A second edition is now printing.

"What impresses one most in this exquisite romance of Kentucky's green wilderness is the author's marvelous power of drawing word pictures that stand before the mind's eye in all the vividness of actuality. Mr. Allen's descriptions of nature are genuine poetry of form and color. . . . This is the longest, strongest and most beautiful of Mr. Allen's novels." The Tribune, Chicago.

A New Novel by the Author of "On the Face of the Waters"

IN THE TIDEWAY.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL, Author of "On the Face of the Waters," "Red Rowans," etc. Cloth, 16mo, $1 25

"Its charm pursues the reader along several lines. The central motive is original, and its development is even more unexpected." The Tribune, New York.

"A story that on its own merits will appeal to many readers. The main motif, which is as old as the hills, is treated with great delicacy and skill. . . . The scene is laid in the Hebrides, and the great charm of the story lies in its salt, bracing atmosphere of the wind-swept moorland, where the nor'wester blows unrestrained across broad stretches of white and purple heather, and the ceaseless music of the sea hints of the mystery of 'the wave-washed sand, and the wave's vain desire.' This book will not have the same phenomenal success as the Indian story, but it is a work of art, and, as such, will not lack appreciation." The Sun, New York.

Second Edition.

THE PORT OF MISSING SHIPS

And Other Stories of the Sea. By JOHN R. SPEARS Cloth, 16mo, $1 25.

"They are not only very graphically told, but disclose an imaginative element which lends such stories an unusual quality of interest. The tale which gives its title to this volume is an exceptionally strong piece of work from the imaginative side, very finely conceived and very well executed." The Outlook, New York.

"Singularly effective in theme and composition, tasting of tar and pitch and breathing saltiness. . . . They are bracing tales . . . veritable sea classics." The News, Providence.

GENESIS OF THE SOCIAL CONSCIENCE.

The Relation between the Establishment of Christianity in Europe and the Social Question. By HENRY S. NASH Professor in the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. Cloth, 12mo, $1 50. Just Ready

"Not only is his treatment of the great thesis which he has undertaken to discuss fresh and suggestive, but he shows himself to be a clear and original thinker. . . . In luminous and epigrammatic statement, in compactness of thought and in a thorough mastery of the whole subject he ranks among the best writers on sociology who have appeared during the last twenty years, and we believe his book will come to be recognized as one of the most valuable and helpful treatises in the language." The Tribune, New York.

JUST READY

THE MYTHS OF ISRAEL.

The Ancient Book of Genesis with Analysis and Explanation of its Composition. By AMOS K. FISKE, Author of "The Jewish Scriptures," etc Cloth, 12mo, $1 50.

The author resolves the Ancient Hebrew Book of Genesis into the myths and fragments of myths of which it is mainly composed, and explains their significance and bearing in the literary and religious development of the Hebrew people.

Rural Science Series. New Volume.

THE FERTILITY OF THE LAND:

A Discussion of the Relationship of Farm-Practice to Saving and Augmenting the Productivity of the Soil. By I. P. ROBERTS, Director of the College of Agriculture, Cornell University. Fully illustrated, $1.25.

In the hands of all booksellers, or to be had of the publishers,

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study. Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof. G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

MASSACHUSETTS, AUBURNDALE.
GLENFELD SCHOOL.
A College Preparatory Home School for Girls. Opens Sept. 15. For particulars address Miss SARA B. MATHEWS, Box 99, Auburndale, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph. D.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory. SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N.Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address C. J. WRIGHT, A. M.

Educational

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, EASTHAMPTON.
WILLISTON SEMINARY.
Prepares boys for any college or scientific school. The most advanced methods. Library; physical, chemical, biological laboratories; gymnasium, etc. Founded 1841. Opens Sept. 9, 1897. JOSEPH H. SAWYER, M. A., Principal, Easthampton, Mass.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book-keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

Chautauqua 1897.
The famous summer community offering a wholesome, well rounded conception of Christian social life.
THE NEW EDUCATION IN THE CHURCH.
The application of modern pedagogical ideas to Sunday School Teaching will be advocated and illustrated in new courses of study for Sunday School Teachers.
Rich schedule of lectures by Bishop McCabe, Miss F. E. Williard, Dr. Graham Taylor, Dr. J. C. MacKenzie, Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, Mr. George W. Cable, Mr. Jacob A. Riis, Commanders Frederick and Eva Booth-Tucker, Prof. H. B. Adams, Pres. G. Stanley Hall. Bishop Vincent, and many others.
Cost of Living at the Minimum.
Good Hotel. Numerous cottages. $10 from New York and return. $14 from Chicago.
W. A. DUNCAN, SEC., BOX 18, CHAUTAUQUA, N.Y.

Notice this to-day. It may not appear again.

$5,242 GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in ENTHUSIASTIC?

Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. Use no language except English. Words spelled alike, but with different meaning, can be used but once. Use any dictionary. Pronouns, nouns, verbs, adverbs, prefixes, suffixes, adjectives, proper nouns, allowed. Anything that is a legitimate word will be allowed. Work it out in this manner: E, Eat, Eats, Nat, Nut, Nuts, Net, Nets, Tat, Sat, Set, Hat, Hats, etc. Use these words in your list. Words must be spoken—not made-up words.

The publishers of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will give to the person who makes the largest list of words from the letters in ENTHUSIASTIC a Wing Upright Rosewood Piano, value $700.00; to the second largest a set of Century Dictionary, value $130.00; to the next four, $100.00 Bicycles (your choice of either ladies' or gentlemen's); one set of Standard Dictionary, value $26.00, to the seventh; Webster's International Dictionary for the eighth, and 300 Cash Prizes to the next 300 largest lists, and 400 Dress Patterns to the 400 next largest, and 167 Cameras to the next 167 largest, and 125 Cash Prizes of $2.00 each to the next 125 largest lists—in all 1,000 PRIZES.

Why we give the rewards.—It is done to attract attention to WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY, a beautiful, practical magazine for women and the home; edited by Mrs. B. A. Whitney, assisted by Dinah Sturgis, Sally Van Rensselaer, Juliet Corson, and others; 36 pages; profusely illustrated with original matter by the ablest artists and writers in literature; three great serial stories always running. The Board of Award is Rev. Joseph Sanderson, D.D., author, scholar and divine; Horatio Alger, Jr., an author whose name needs no comment, and John Habberton, equally celebrated. Every person who enters into the contest for one of the prizes can rest assured that they will get just and impartial treatment.

To enter the contest, it is necessary for you to send 25 cents, in stamps or silver, for a three months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 25 cents and a list of twenty words or more is guaranteed an extra present, by return mail (in addition to the magazine), of a 188-page book, "Treasure Island," by Robert Louis Stevenson, a most fascinating story. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than July 15. The names and addresses of successful contestants will be printed in August issue. Our publication has been established ten years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Make your list now. Address WOMAN'S WORLD PUBLISHING CO., Dept No. 232, 22 and 24 N. William Street, New York, N. Y.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of en years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist.

Wanted, by lady of middle age, the care of an invalid in vicinity of Boston. References all that would e required as to character and ability. Address Mrs. M., ffice of The Congregationalist.

For Summer Guests. A Congregational pastor pens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious ooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; irst class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York r Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted, position as housekeeper in an elderly widower's Christian home, by a refined, middle-aged ady, who understands the care of a nice, quiet home. Not over twenty miles from Boston. Address, A. R., The Congregationalist.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, tc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

THE present address of Rev. H. A. Stevens is 4 Harvard Place, Brighton, Mass.

THE P. O. address of Rev. Frederick Alvord is Newton Center, Mass., instead of Talcottville, Ct.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE.

The most approved form, convenient, attractive, inexpensive, and commended by all using it for sanitary safety. We shall be glad to show samples at our office or send on approval. Correspondence solicited.

E. B. FLOYD & CO.,
419 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON,
Selling Agents.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 669
The Failure of the Arbitration Treaty 670
What Is the Remedy 670
The Sacredness of Secular Work 671
Current History 671
In Brief 673

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

New York 674

CONTRIBUTIONS:

The True Light—cover poem. Jones Very 665
Bypaths of European Travel. III. The Bicycle. H. W. Dunning 675
The Spiritual Dangers of Theological Study. Prof. George Harris 676
Deacon Dudley's Sundays in Boston. IX. Alden Endecott 677

THE HOME:

A Spray of Apple-Bloom—a selected poem 678
Paragraphs 678
Parents in League. Ellen Conway 678
Camera Hints for Young People. Clifton Johnson 679
Of Interest to Women 680
Closet and Altar 681
Mothers in Council 681
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 682
Corner Scrap-Book 682
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for May 23 683
Y P. S. C. E.—Topic for May 23-29 677
Notes 696
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 685
LITERATURE 687

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

Boston Women Plead for Greeks 690
The Missouri State Association 690
The New Mexico Association 690
Weekly Register 697
Accessions to the Churches 698

MISCELLANEOUS:

Our Readers' Forum 684
Oberlin's Anniversary 685
In and Around Chicago 686
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 686
Notices 689
The Business Outlook 694
Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 696
Biographical 697
Marriages and Deaths 699

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11¼ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

"THE BEST COLLECTION."

Carmina for the Sunday School.

By Rev. LEWIS W. MUDGE, D. D., and Rev. HERBERT B. TURNER. 293 Hymns, with Tunes; in durable Cloth Binding. Price, $35 per hundred.

TESTIMONIALS:

From Rev. E. Morris Ferguson, Supt. New Jersey S. S. Association:

"If you want a well-printed, cloth-bound book of moderate size and price, edited with rare wisdom and taste, and full of rich, sweet tunes, with strong harmonies and singable melodies, get a sample copy of CARMINA FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL."

From Rev. W. W. Sleeper, Second Congregational Church, Beloit, Wis.:

"I do not hesitate to pronounce it the BEST collection of Sunday School songs I have ever seen."

A sample copy sent postpaid on receipt of 35 cents. Correspondence invited.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

HIS LATEST AND BEST.

The Social Law . . . of Service.

By Prof. Richard T. Ely,
University of Wisconsin.

Commended unreservedly by critical press reviewers and indorsed by Drs. Lyman Abbott, H. Clay Trumbull, and other leading thinkers on social problems as a masterly contribution to the literature of Sociology.

12mo. Cloth. 90 cents.

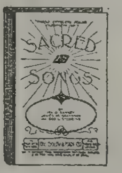
EATON & MAINS, Publishers,
150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

JUST PURCHASED

the Library of Rev. JULIUS H. WARD, religious editor of "Boston Herald." Upwards of 10,000 volumes.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston

SACRED SONGS No. 1



Contains 236 pieces. 100 are new and over 100 are choice selections from Gospel Hymns, etc.

Over 150,000 Copies already sold.

An excellent collection for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc. Issued in Round and Shaped Notes.

$25 per 100 by Express, charges not prepaid; 30c. each if sent by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
Chicago House, Lakeside Build'g. 76 E. Ninth St., N. Y.

Children's Day Services, complete with new Carols, Recitations Script. Readings, also new features not found in others. Send 15 cts. for samples of our three latest. JUST OUT: Triumphal Anthems No. 2, also: Gospel Hymn Selections for male voices (128 pages), same for female voices, (124 pages). Specimen pages FREE. GEO. F. ROSCHE & CO. Chicago, 940 W. Madison st. New York, 44 E. 23rd st.

CHILDREN'S DAY
COMPLETE SERVICE.

VOICES FROM THE SUMMER LAND. By MARION WEST. With music.

SHINING FOR JESUS (Primary and Junior). By Mrs. OTIS ATWOOD.

Either of above 5 cents each, $4 00 per hundred.

CHILDREN'S DAY RECITATIONS, postpaid, 15 cents. Many others. Complete catalogue free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO., Publishers,
13½ Bromfield Street, Boston.

Are You Going Abroad?

You might take, or read before you go,

Legends of the Rhine.

By H. A. GUERBER.

12mo, 350 pages, 40 illustrations, $1.50 net.

"The interest of a Rhine pilgrimage is more than doubled by a knowledge of the Legends connected with the principal towns, churches and castles along its banks."

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The Hymnal

FOR THE USE OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES

issued by the

Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society

The Demand For Such A Book

For several years there has been a demand, which has found expression through the denominational papers and in discussion at our National Councils, for a Hymnal suited to the needs of Congregational Churches, published under denominational auspices and sold at a moderate price. The Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society has been repeatedly asked to issue such a book but has not felt warranted in doing so heretofore in view of the large number of good hymnals already before the public and the knowledge that others were in preparation which promised to be even better. Much study has been given to hymnology in recent years and in many of our churches a taste has been developed for music of a higher order than the old hymn-books usually contained, so that books which were reasonably satisfactory twenty years ago are no longer so when compared with the latest and best collections. On the other hand, a large number of churches, while desiring the best possible collection of hymns, are not sufficiently well equipped musically to make profitable use of a hymnal containing exclusively tunes of the highest order from the musician's standpoint.

Modern Requirements In a Hymnal

To meet all requirements, therefore, it is necessary that many favorite hymns and tunes be retained, even if not up to the very highest standard in musical or literary merit, while it is equally desirable to include modern music of the highest class for such churches as are in a position to make use of it. In other words, a hymnbook to meet the requirements of Congregational churches generally must have both the popular and the classical tunes, both the stately and the evangelistic hymns, so that something may be found suited to all occasions, and meeting equally well the requirements of the home missionary church and the great city congregation.

Proof That These Requirements Are Here Met

It is believed that this Hymnal for Congregational Churches better than any other fulfills these conditions. It was prepared by Dr. LOUIS F. BENSON and WILLIAM W. GILCHRIST, Mus. Doc., with the aid of many eminent musicians and writers, with the needs of the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches constantly in mind, and is published jointly by the Presbyterian Board and the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society.

The Presbyterian edition has already been before the churches long enough to demonstrate its eminently satisfactory character. It has within the past few months been adopted by scores of Presbyterian churches, some of them among the most prominent in that denomination, and those who are using it are enthusiastic in its praise. The Congregational edition contains all its valuable features, differing chiefly in the style of the binding and in the Responsive Readings, which in our edition are taken from the Revised Version.

WHAT IS SAID ABOUT IT

"A decided success."

Says The Congregationalist: Now comes this new Hymnal, in many respects in advance of all its predecessors and competitors. In its mechanical make-up and appearance it leaves nothing to be desired, while the good judgment of its editors is to be seen on every page. . . . For comprehensiveness, for poetic merit as well as religious feeling, for adaptation to all the moods and phases of Christian experience, and for practical use in the services of the church this book seems to us a decided success.

"Made no mistake in our selection."

In reply to your letter asking my opinion of The Hymnal sent for examination there is but one response I can make, and that I make as gladly as I do sincerely. It is the best Hymn and Tune Book ever published. I know whereof I speak, for during the last twelve months I have examined all the later publications in this line, and some of earlier date, and I know of but one which will compare with your Hymnal. That is one which will not answer for congregational services. Yours is the best, and could I have my wish it would be placed in the church I serve immediately.—CHAS. K. HINKLEY, Organist, First Congregational Church, Gorham, Me.

Second Communication. I have this to say for The Hymnal, that I have never seen or used a hymn-book which suited me better. The more we use it the better we like it. We made no mistake in our selection.

The introduction of The Hymnal will mark an epoch in church music. —Rev. H. A. MACKUBBIN, Elizabeth, N. J.

It surpasses our most sanguine expectations.—Rev. JAMES GALE INGLIS, Petoskey, Mich.

Embraces as many excellencies as it is possible to gather into one book. —Rev JOHN P. MOFFAT, Scranton, Pa.

The Hymnal is the strongest argument against cheap, trashy music. —Rev. L. WILLIAM HONES, Roscoe, N. Y.

"Away ahead of all other books of its kind."

My opinion is confirmed that The Hymnal is away ahead of all other books of its kind. First, musically, as to its up-to-dateness, taste in selection, and correctness of harmony; secondly, in its musical and literary typography, which is peculiarly clean and distinct.—J. REMINGTON FAIRLAMB, Organist, Church of the Redeemer, Paterson, N. J.

"An admirable book."

I have examined the book with some care. It is undoubtedly a collection of decided excellence. . . . It is an admirable book.—E. D. EATON, Pres. Beloit College, Beloit, Wis.

"The tunes have melody."

It is a very good book. The tunes have melody. There are fewer without character than in most books.—Rev. REUEN THOMAS, D.D., Harvard Congregational Church, Brookline, Mass.

"Inspiring and musician-like."

It seems to me a most admirable collection on the whole, excelling especially in the large proportion of inspiring musician-like tunes it contains and in the general tone of its hymn collections.—Prof. B. C. BLODGETT, School of Music, Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

The devotional and poetic qualities of The Hymnal are of the highest order.—Rev. JOHN M. STEPHENS, Jenkintown, Pa.

Many points of excellence over former collections.—Rev. W. C. ALEXANDER, D.D., Georgetown, D. C.

It contains so much real poetry and genuine music.—Rev. GEORGE B. STEWART, D.D., Harrisburg, Pa.

A distinct advance over anything we have heretofore used.—CHARLES E. MACKEAN, Goodrich Avenue Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.

NET PRICES

for Introduction, including Responsive Readings.

Cloth, $1.00; Half Leather, $1.35; Full Leather, Gilt, $2.00.

Names stamped in gold, 15 cents each. Name of Church stamped on 100 Copies for $3.00, or on 50 Copies for $2.50. Old Books taken in exchange if usable.

Descriptive circulars and returnable sample copies sent on application to pastors or committees either from Boston or Chicago.

J. H. TEWKSBURY, Gen'l Agent,
Congregational House, Boston.
New York, 23 Bible House.

The Pilgrim Press
Beacon St Boston
A.D. 1620

E. H. BROWN, Chicago Agent,
175 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.
Minneapolis, Phœnix Building.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 13 May 1897 Number 19

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 666.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 14, Memorial Day.
No. 15, Children's Sunday
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

THE decision of the directors of the Congregational Association with reference to building plans was ratified at the meeting of that body last Thursday, and further steps were taken with reference to carrying the decision into effect. It ought to be thoroughly understood that the new structure will not be a source of expense to the denomination. The sale of the present building will largely offset the cost of the new site and edifice, and the present debt of the association will not, probably, be materially increased. Moreover, it is expected that from the rents of the new building will accrue annually a much larger sum than now is derived, and so a sinking fund will be created which will eventually provide for all outstanding obligations. Indeed, the financiering of the undertaking has been so prudent and far-sighted that the gratitude of the denomination is due to those who have had it in hand. We shall have a handsome and creditable denominational home. In time, also, the association will be able through its handling of the property to make, year by year, substantial contributions to the work of each of the benevolent societies.

National religious assemblies render important public service by making persons of different sections acquainted with one another. People in the East and in the West need to know one another better, and this is becoming more important every year. Every one ought to be a better citizen through the education of seeing the length and breadth of our vast country. For these reasons, as well as for the religious inspiration to be gained, we hope the attendance will be large at the Christian Endeavor convention in San Francisco next July. Its officers and the railroads have offered a rare opportunity for travel under exceptionally favorable circumstances. From all Eastern points tickets may be purchased to Chicago or St. Louis at a single fare for the round trip, while single tickets from those cities to San Francisco are $25 and $23, respectively. Single tickets for return may be had at the same rate. This makes the railroad fare from Boston to San Francisco and return only $72. Westward tickets will be on sale on several days from June 22 to July 2, with stop-over privileges; and to return, from July 12 to Aug. 9. No doubt, as enthusiasm grows, the number of Christian Endeavor travelers will increase to a great army.

It does not follow because our way succeeds that it is the best way. We may be accomplishing the desired result with far too much expenditure of time and strength, as a man might reach his journey's end on foot who ought to take the train. Economy in the use of resources is perhaps the greatest practical problem of the churches. It is by the study of new methods that business nowadays is kept at the front, and if new methods can make the pastor's work more effective he must be ready to employ them. It is, indeed, really not a question of new or old, as our inertia or our restlessness would persuade us, but simply of effectiveness. The great ends of church activity—testimony, fellowship, growth in knowledge and in character—never change, but the conditions of the times are always changing, and the circumstances of service vary with the situation and individuality of the churches. Nothing could be worse than a dead uniformity, and nothing is more wholesome than a living variety. To have an open mind for new opportunities and methods is an essential qualification of the active servant of Christ, while the desire for something new, for no other reason than simply because it is new, is the fruitful mother of a weak sensationalism which always defeats its own ends. If effectiveness is the mark of a desirable new thing, dignity is one of the marks of permanent effectiveness. Undignified methods of work cannot long hold their own in a world where ridicule is so effective a weapon.

The awakening of the Negroes of the South to their present condition, needs and opportunities of progress is a valuable service to the whole country. It is a work along lines which have been heartily approved thus far both in the South and in the North. Straight University, New Orleans, has undertaken a series of public meetings in this direction which promise to be very useful. The opening meeting was held last week Monday evening with an address by the mayor, Hon. W. C. Flower, and several papers by physicians and others on The Causes of Unusual Death Rate Among Colored People. Next Monday there will be a discussion of their industrial condition and progress, and the week following the subject will be Education, with special reference to the public schools for colored children. Prominent persons of both races will participate in these discussions, bringing facts gathered as the result of thorough investigation. It is proposed to maintain a permanent organization and hold a series of meetings each year. They can hardly fail to attract public interest and to secure good results.

Rev. W. H. Noyes of Japan has returned to this country and is now in Oregon. His application to the American Board in 1886 to send him as a missionary, it will be remembered, became the occasion of a long controversy because of his belief in a possible probation after death for those who have not heard the gospel in this life. Having been rejected by the Prudential Committee, he was in 1888 sent to Japan by the Berkeley Temple Church of Boston, largely through contributions from outside friends. Upon his case the controversy in the Board turned, and, by its vote at Worcester in 1893, the Prudential Committee was requested to commission him. Grave complications were thus avoided and harmony was restored. Interest in the question then apparently at issue has quite passed away. But we understand that Mr. Noyes finds himself in doubt concerning more vital doctrines of the Christian faith, and therefore he has offered his resignation, which the Board has accepted. While this step will be a disappointment to many of his friends, they will respect him for laying down the work which he could no longer carry on in sympathy with those who sent him, and they will hope he may fully recover his faith in Christ and in his gospel of salvation for the world.

What changes are wrought in human lives by the teachings and surroundings of childhood! Edhem Pasha, the leader of the Turkish army against the Greeks, ought by inheritance to be fighting in the Greek army. He was born in Chio, which lies a few miles distant from Smyrna. When in 1838 that beautiful island was overrun by Turks, and its inhabitants pillaged and massacred, Edhem's parents were killed. He was then a little boy and was sold as a slave to a Turkish general, who took him to Constantinople and sent him to Paris to be educated. He became a captain in the Turkish army, an instructor of the present sultan and rose to be minister of foreign affairs. His brother became a Roman Catholic priest in Constantinople, where he died a few years ago. Edhem has always been a bitter hater of foreigners and Christians. His history is strikingly suggestive and no doubt has many parallels. Neglected children of Christian homes in our own towns and cities have fallen into the ranks of the enemies of civilization and Christianity, and on the other hand many children born into surroundings of sin and crime have been rescued by kind hands and made honored leaders of a Christian community. No better service is rendered to the country and the kingdom of God than that which saves and blesses the children.

The picture of the German emperor—successor, by courtesy at least, of Frederick Barbarossa—personally congratulating the sultan of Turkey upon his success in slaughtering Christians in the defiles and on the plains of Thessaly under the instruction of Germans is not an edifying one. It illustrates, however, the change in the point of view for the European Governments since the Crusades. Christendom, in the old sense which recognized a religious unity and fellowship for all Western Europe, which he who broke was at least ashamed of treachery to his best convictions, has disappeared. The present point of view is purely political and purely selfish. The "concord of Europe" has proved itself a concord of subservient impotence, and the headstrong and brutally frank German emperor is the best exponent of the new system as Frederick Barbarossa was of the old. Frederick led an international army for the relief of the Christians of Palestine and the recovery of the Holy Sepulcher from purely religious motives supported by the public opinion of all Christian Europe, and died in the attempt. William the War Lord sends artillery officers to instruct the Turks and congratulates their sultan on his success, and when some criticism comes to his ears replies, "Well, why didn't the Greeks ask for German instructors? They might have had them if they had only asked."

Our Handbook topic for June missionary meetings, Saving the City, is one of the most interesting and vital in the list for the entire year. In the department Progress of the Kingdom we set forth various phases of the general subject, bringing together considerable valuable information touching what is actually being done for the redemption of our great cities. Practice is better than theory in every department of Christian work and until one looks around one does not realize the vast amount of productive activity in almost every city of the land. Much of it we believe is the fruit of the discussion and agitation of recent years concerning reaching the masses. Such an article, for instance, as that of Rev. M. H. Williams in the current number of the Open Church on The New Era of Church Work in Philadelphia points out the way in which old and representative churches of different denominations have adapted themselves to changed conditions by making their pews free, by multiplying their pastoral forces and by reaching out after men through reading-rooms, week night classes and other forms of practical ministration. Few of these churches have assumed the name "institutional" but week in and week out their devoted, untiring laborers are ministering to the needy and the fallen. We are impressed by the notable spiritual results already signalizing this new era in church work. Philadelphia is certainly rich in aggressive, far-seeing ministers like Drs. Chapman, Baker, Richards, J. R. Miller and Wood, and in similar minded laymen like John and W. H. Wanamaker, Robert Ogden and ex Governor Pattison. The Open Church magazine, by the way, abounds in material that cannot fail to be of service to earnest Christian workers in both city and country. Among the other valuable articles in the number to which we have alluded is one on the Federation of Churches in New York, another on the Spirit of the Institutional Church and a timely editorial on Church Settlements.

More than 1,300 actors have united in an effort to have the theaters closed on the Lord's Day. One of them says, "It is an outrage to be compelled to face the audiences that come to the theaters on Sunday." Judging from the crowds we saw moving toward the theaters on a recent Sunday afternoon in Chicago, the actor's estimate of them was appropriate, but perhaps they could say as much of those who consent to play for them on Sunday.

THE FAILURE OF THE ARBITRATION TREATY

No great disappointment was felt by the public because of the rejection of the treaty by the Senate last Thursday. Practically it had been rejected already through the amendments which had emasculated it. The disappointment felt when the Senate began to show a disposition to defeat the original treaty was more profound and widespread than has been displayed in this country concerning any legislative measure during the present generation. But many who favored the principle of arbitration did not believe it would be promoted by the enactment of the measure which was finally voted on.

Yet there can be no question that a very important advance has been made in the last sixteen months in the direction of peace and unity between the two great English-speaking nations. This period will have peculiar significance in their history. In both countries the people have faced immediate possibilities of war with each other. They recoiled from these possibilities because of ties of blood, of common trusts and united aims. They have realized what war between them would destroy. They have considered what it means for Christians to fight one another. They have weighed the possibilities of reasonable settlement of difficulties that may arise between them by referring them for decision to able and experienced judges. It would be far more difficult to involve Great Britain and the United States in war today than it might have been two years ago. The people in both nations understand one another better, have deeper mutual respect and desire more earnestly one another's welfare.

That there should be in each nation distrust of the governing power in the other is not strange. If the vote against the treaty was influenced, as probably it was, by England's recent attitude toward the Transvaal and Crete, resentment of its policy is perhaps hardly less strong in England than here. In each nation there is always a degree of disapproval of its own governing policy. Many of our own citizens have often condemned the attitude of our Government toward other nations, as when it attempted to restore the Hawaiian monarchy. Such a sentiment toward either nation is no real make-weight against arbitration. But there are also distrust and hatred of England fostered by a good many Americans, especially in the West and South. We do not now propose to discuss the causes of these feelings. It is enough to say that we do not share in them. Perhaps the vote in the Senate on the treaty, forty-three for to twenty-six against it, fairly represents popular sentiment, a two-thirds vote being necessary to adopt it.

But that almost two-thirds of the people of this country are friendly toward Great Britain, and in favor of a treaty to submit to arbitration all disputes which may arise with her, is to us a profound reason for gratitude. Especially do we rejoice that the sympathy of educated men and women, so far as expressed, has been almost unanimous in this matter. We believe that that feeling is still more general in England toward us. In both countries it is steadily growing. The progress of Christianity will strengthen it. Enlarged mutual acquaintance will extend it. Increasing popular intelligence will give the principle of arbitration so firm a hold in both nations that it will either become embodied in a permanent treaty or be sure to be employed in any case which may threaten conflict. The arbitration treaty has failed, but the consideration of it has done much to make war impossible and to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the people of our nation and of our mother country, whose language and history and faith and aims are ours.

WHAT IS THE REMEDY

Two interesting articles appear in the current number of the Atlantic Monthly on the conditions of country life in New England. One describes a remote village, the other a farming community. In both the influence of the church has for many years been growing less prominent. In the former moral decay has become chronic, and the writer expresses alarm for the future of the country, so far as this condition is becoming general. In the latter, while the church is not dominant as it once was, religion finds expression in many ways, and the minister, adapting himself to present conditions, holds the confidence of the community and is the leader in moral and philanthropic movements.

These two pictures seem to be typical. We believe they represent fairly the country life, not of New England only, but of other parts of the land as well. The feature to which we especially direct attention is the decline in church attendance as compared with that of thirty years ago. This, we think, is generally recognized as a fact. We believe it is regretted by many who share in the responsibility for it. The causes are too varied to permit space to discuss them now. Suffice it to say that a decay of faith, absorption in present affairs and increased opportunities for amusement on the Lord's Day have destroyed interest in public worship for many who once found inspiration in it, while many more have not yet learned what that inspiration is.

What are the remedies for this moral decay? First, a better educated ministry. The idea has become too prevalent that a man or woman may be sufficiently equipped to be a minister for a country church by a short course of study or none at all. Is it claimed that educated men cannot live on the small salaries which can be raised by such churches? Then we need a more consecrated ministry of educated men—men brave and devoted enough to suffer privation for Christ's sake till they can create the larger constituency which will give them reasonable support.

Next, the number of churches in many country towns needs to be reduced. A community of a thousand people is ordinarily worse off with four or five churches than with only one. Each one of four ministers in such a place, struggling to hold together his little congregation, often becomes less than a fourth of a minister in ambition, opportunity, the fruit of his labor and the respect in which he is held. Is it claimed that denominational rivalries will not permit the consolidation of churches in these places? The need is great enough not only to lift educated ministers to a hight of consecration sufficient to do large service on small salaries, but to move lay Christians to sacrifice what is often little more than a name that they may join in one church for worship and work. The solemn question which many a redeemed soul in a morally decaying town ought to put to himself and his neighbors is, How can we save our own community? In the effort to answer that question these suggestions cannot fail to come before them.

Once more, the methods of worship and work must be adopted which best suit the people. In many places where church attendance is meager it is not difficult to gather larger numbers into the Sunday school, while Christian Endeavor societies are popular centers of religious life. Let the minister and his fellow-laborers make these services the best possible. If formal prayer and sermon are not attractive, let worship and teaching become informal. No prescribed order of church service is divine. The Sunday school hour may take on the dignity and value of the church meeting, and in some places may wisely be substituted for it. A strongly led Bible class may hold together adults who fall away from the regular church services. The best ways for people to get religion are the ways in which they most readily seek it. Some men who will not pray in meeting will do a Christly service to a neighbor in need. Recognize that as religious. To visit the widows and fatherless in their affliction is pure religion. All work for the uplifting of the community may take on the character of service to God with the wise co-operation of those who love God supremely.

Do not the conditions in many communities call loudly for such remedies for moral decay as we have named? Are not patriotism, humanity, love to Christ still strong enough to move some men and women to undertake them? Will not God bless them and lift them into such moral revolutions as will make glad the angels in heaven?

THE SACREDNESS OF SECULAR WORK

Distinctions between the sacred and the secular are not emphasized as much as formerly. Indeed, there is a tendency to do away with them wholly. From one point of view this is dangerous and wrong. To treat the Lord's Day like any other day is as impolitic and mischievous as it is sinful. It is given chiefly for rest, worship and Christian service. But from another point of view it is equally wrong not to do away with these distinctions. For instance, to suppose that because farming, engineering, or serving at a shop counter or an office desk, are not occupations nominally and directly aimed at saving souls, as the ministry is, they therefore are not sacred but secular is a mistake. They are, and ought to be understood to be, sacred in the truest sense.

All work, unless it be positively evil in its nature or purpose, is divinely meant to be regarded as sacred. It is sacred in that it is a means through which God may be served and glorified. Our work is God's appointed way of Christian usefulness for us. Whether one runs a sewing-machine, a ship, a bank, a college or a commonwealth, the same holds true. God's gift of opportunity for work renders the work truly sacred. The doing of the work faithfully for his sake also renders it sacred. It is well that this has come to be realized so generally, even though the realization lead for a time to extravagances of theory and mistakes in conduct. To identify Christ with our lives in all their details, to do our work as in his sight and for his sake, this is to look at the sacred and the secular as he looks at them.

CURRENT HISTORY

The Decision in General Martin's Case

The facts in the investigation of the chairman of the Board of Police Commissioners of Boston, Gen. A. P. Martin, were set forth by Governor Wolcott to his council last Thursday. The sons of the commissioner engaged in business, in which they solicited and obtained patronage from liquor dealers on the ground that they could secure favors from their father for those dealers. General Martin is himself president of the Pearl Hill Lithia Water Company (of which his son is treasurer), a corporation one-half of whose capital was mainly subscribed by liquor dealers, the remainder being principally a lot of land contributed by him. The governor says that "the circumstances under which the Pearl Hill Lithia Water Company was organized, and the nature and methods of its business, leave no room for doubt that in that instance General Martin knowingly permitted the use of his office in a manner inconsistent with the standard of duty required by Massachusetts of her public officers." That General Martin disapproved of the unworthy conduct of his sons was made evident by his testimony and that of others. No proof was furnished at the investigation that he profited or helped them to profit by that conduct, but it was admitted that he was unable to restrain them, and that his connection in business with one of them continued after he became aware that his reputation was suffering by it. The governor's council refused, by a vote of six to three, to comply with his request for General Martin's removal.

The reasons urged by those who voted against removal were that, while they admitted that he had been indiscreet, they found no official misconduct had been proved against him or suspected; that he had done conspicuously successful service in behalf of law and order during his administration; and that lawbreakers generally would welcome his removal. These, we believe, are facts generally admitted. Under General Martin's administration gambling, open licentiousness and illegal liquor-selling and other lawlessness have been effectively suppressed. His task has been a difficult one, with many opposing elements, and many of those who have sought his removal are not friends of good government. The city cannot be ungrateful for, and can ill afford to spare, such service as he has rendered to the cause of righteousness. Yet that he has committed serious indiscretion is beyond question, which cannot fail to impair his influence should he continue in office. This aspect of the case Governor Wolcott has not stated too strongly, though, as it seems to us, he should have recognized more fully General Martin's commendable services. We understand that the commissioner intends to hold his office till the expiration of his term.

Public Institutions Bill

The efforts of friends of humanity to provide separate departments for the care of the children, insane, paupers and criminals in the public institutions of Boston have been vigorously opposed in the legislature. It is difficult to say why. That such provision ought to be made is not open to question by any one who believes that our dependent classes should be humanely treated. It would surely be difficult, for example, to give a good reason why dependent orphan children should be kept under the same management as criminals. At the hearing before the committee on metropolitan affairs, though full notice and opportunity were given, no one appeared against the bill, while a large number of citizens whose judgment and knowledge on the subject are unquestioned testified in its favor. The arguments presented in the legislature for postponing the matter have little weight. They seem to be prompted chiefly by the hope that at some future time the appointments which are to follow the adoption of such a measure may be made in the interest of a political party not now in power. The bill has been carried through the House and is before the Senate with every probability of final passage as we go to press.

The Tariff in the Senate

The Senate Committee, under the lead of Senator Aldrich, has treated the country to a genuine surprise with which it must be confessed that much relief is mingled. Mr. Dingley's bill, which the House forced through practically without amendment, was objectionable not only upon the ground of its excessive rates upon certain lines of goods, but also because of grave doubt whether it would raise the revenue needed for carrying on the Government. Goods must be imported in order to pay a tax and many of the rates proposed in the bill seemed likely to be prohibitive. The Senate Committee has made practically a new bill in which the addition of a tax of forty-four cents a barrel on beer, the withdrawal of the rebate on beer and whisky stamps, together with a duty of ten cents a pound on tea are expected to provide upwards of thirty million dollars additional revenue. These are taxes for revenue only, and in order to make them palatable to the Republican majority are treated as emergency measures, to be discontinued in 1900. The rates of the Aldrich Bill are generally lower than in the House bill, old books and art objects are restored to the free list, hides are made dutiable at one and a half cents a pound, the reciprocity clauses disappear from the bill and the objectionable retroactive clause is abandoned. The duties on hides, fruit and certain grades of wool were added at the dictation of Senator Jones of Nevada, without whose vote the measure could not have been carried through the committee, and may probably be continued in the bill in order to secure the vote of the senators from the far West. The sugar schedule is a puzzle which only the Senate experts or the sugar trust can explain, but is said to be unduly favorable to the trust. On the whole, the bill is more promising as a revenue measure and less dangerous to the future supremacy of the Republican party than the one which originated in the House. It has yet to pass the gauntlet of the full Senate and of a conference committee and it would be vain to prophesy what its fate will be. But it may be confidently asserted that any measure which fails in practice to raise revenue or has the suspicion of being dictated by selfish private interests will bring popular condemnation upon the party which enacts it.

The Rejected Treaty

If the arbitration treaty with England was rejected by the Senate, it is well to remember that a large majority was recorded in its favor, even though it did not reach the two-thirds required by law. And if it be true, as some of the papers have stated, that a few of the votes cast in its favor were in opposition to the real opinion of the senators voting in order to meet the wishes of constituents, it is only one more proof that the best public opinion everywhere was in favor of the treaty. We comment on the subject in our editorial columns. The authors of the treaty, ex-President Cleveland and ex-Secretary Olney, have maintained a dignified silence. They had no need to speak, their fame is secure. The English newspapers are naturally bitter in their expression, not always of disappointment, but of astonishment that there should be so little unity of action among the governing powers on this side the sea and so much weight given in a matter of the first importance to personal dislikes and national prejudices. "In its amended form," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "the treaty was not worth preserving, but the principle, like the soul of John Brown, goes marching on." The defeat of ratification had been so fully expected in America that there has been comparatively little comment from any quarter. When the United States Senate is through talking, the people of the United States are usually pretty well tired out.

The Forest Reservations

The good which President Cleveland did in setting apart large tracts of forest reservation in the far West the Senate has done its best to undo by an amendment to the sundry civil appropriations bill revoking the order. We discussed this matter at length in our issue of April 15, and see no reason to modify the opinions then expressed. In the changed conditions induced by the Senate's action, it behooves the friends of the forests to exert themselves to the utmost lest the good work accomplished should be wholly undone.

The Universal Postal Union

The congress of the Universal Postal Union, representing all the nations of the world except China, Korea and the Orange Free State, met for the first time in America in Washington on Thursday last, and organized by the election as president of Gen. George S. Batcheller, the senior delegate from the United States. Fifty-five countries, nearly all in the union, are represented. The last meeting of the congress was held six years ago in Vienna, and the executive headquarters of the union between meetings is at Berne, Switzerland. The congress was welcomed by Postmaster-General Gary. President-elect Batcheller made an address in French, which is the language of the congress, and a tribute was paid by Camille de Lessert, director of posts for Switzerland, to Dr. Von Stephan, the organizer of the union, whose death occurred since the last meeting. Propositions for a new universal postage stamp, available in all countries of the union, and for an increase of the weight allowance of letters are to be considered, together with other propositions which have accumulated since the last meeting. Here is a department of practical governmental activity in which the civilized governments of the world are directed by a few experts meeting at long intervals and without parade.

The Second City of the World

Governor Black of New York has signed the bill which consolidates at the mouth of the Hudson the largest city of America and the second largest of the world. From the beginning of 1898 New York, Brooklyn, Staten Island and parts of Long Island and of Westchester are combined into a city of about 3,200,000 people, or three-quarters of the population of London on less than half the territory. It was hardly to be expected that the governor would refuse to sign the bill, in spite of the veto of the mayor of New York, the opposition of the leaders of the bar, the commercial bodies and most of the city newspapers, but the manner in which the work has been accomplished is creditable neither to him nor to the party leaders. The bill was twice forced through the legislature without amendment or debate, and Governor Black, following this example of contemptuous silence, neither defends his action nor takes notice of the objections of the bar association and the newspapers. The charter, by the confession of those who helped frame it, is hastily put together, carelessly worded, cumbersome and perhaps unconstitutional in some of its provisions. It perpetuates the divided responsibility of police control, from which New York has suffered so much, and the scandal of which has only just been checked by the election of a president after a protracted deadlock. It establishes a clumsy and dangerous municipal assembly. It is said to be very unjust to New York, which must bear the chief burden of taxes, in its financial arrangements. These are admitted facts, and the only answer which has been vouchsafed by the boss and his lieutenants is "that it can be amended."

Ideals Worth Striving For

The governor's action has thrown upon the Citizens' Union of New York a task as difficult as it is important. It is to overthrow machine politics and substitute a system of municipal government on business principles for the greater city. The union has mapped out its work in a practical way, proposing to establish headquarters in each assembly district, to create a thorough organization and to carry forward a house-to-house canvass for the purpose of giving every voter an opportunity to enroll himself for good government or against it. It will have to overcome the opposition of those who profit by bad government, the resistance of those who have all their lives been affiliated with political parties, and the indifference of those who prefer good government, but who exert themselves only in crises, besides the differences of those whom it may enlist as to which of them shall hold offices in the government they seek to establish. Yet the union has some important object lessons to which it can point. For the first time in many years the streets of the city are clean, because Colonel Waring has been employed to do that business, has been given full power to do it, and has done it honestly on non-partisan principles. The object of the Citizens' Union is to extend the same principles throughout the entire administration of the city, and honest and persistent effort will some day be rewarded by the triumph of having brought the majority of the citizens to see that this is essential to their interests. Startled into action by threatened nominations by the union, Tammany has announced "free silver and home rule" as its battle cry, and Senator Platt has declared that there must be union of all forces against Tammany—but only under Republican (i. e., Platt) leadership.

The Progress of Municipal Reform

A successful conference of the National Municipal League was brought to a close at Louisville on Friday last. A number of local organizations in different cities of the country were received into membership, and papers of much interest were read. The most important direct action was that authorizing the appointment of a committee "to report on the feasibility of a municipal program which shall embody the essential principles that must underlie successful municipal government, and which shall also set forth a working plan or system consistent with American industrial and political conditions for putting such principles into practical operation." Mr. Woodruff, the national secretary of the league, in his interesting annual review of progress and events took an encouraging view even of the recent municipal contest in Chicago, where of twenty-eight aldermen condemned upon their record by the Municipal Voters' League only two secured a re-election, while he regards the present council as the best the city has had for years.

The Death of Veterans

The survivors of the struggle between the States are growing fewer. Rear-Admiral Richard W. Meade died May 4, in Washington, after an operation for appendicitis from which he failed to rally, at the age of sixty-seven. Born in New York, he entered the navy in 1850, and began active service with the Mediterranean squadron, where he served under Commander Ingraham, whose firmness and tact rescued Martin Koszta, who had claims upon American citizenship, from an Austrian prison. Meade began his service in the War of the Rebellion as an instructor in gunnery to volunteer officers, took efficient part in the blockade, the recovery and control of the Mississippi, and in the combined operations of the army and navy along the South Atlantic coast. With the return of peace, under the rotation system of the navy, a wide range of activity including the negotiation of a commercial treaty in Samoa fell to his lot. A fine type of the combination of technical knowledge and practical efficiency which the naval training at its best often gives, he was a man also of strong individual convictions, which he did not hesitate to express upon occasion, in defiance of the formal etiquette of his profession.

Hon. Elbridge Gerry Spaulding, well known as the "father of the greenback," died at Buffalo, N. Y., May 5, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. As the author of the legal tender and national currency bank acts, he will be remembered in the political and financial history of the country. His History of the Legal Tender Money Used through the Great Rebellion, and his well-known address before the Banking Association at the Centennial Exposition, on One Hundred Years of Progress in the Business of Banking, are standard authorities in American financial history.

The Collapse in Thessaly

The story of the Greek war repeats itself with a change in the names of places. From Milouna and Tyrnavos to Larissa, from Larissa to Pharsalos, and from Pharsalos to Domoko, the Greek forces have been driven back, winning here and there a battle, but overwhelmed by numbers and having no leaders to compare with the trained German officers who are acting as staff officers and artillery commanders for Edhem Pasha. On one side of the peninsula on the Gulf of Salonica Volo is in the hands of the Turks; while on the other the Greek forces have retired from Epirus, and are threatened with attack on their own side of the frontier at Arta. The Greek navy has ceased to be a factor in the contest, and the real centers of activity are at Domoko and in the political circles at Athens and Constantinople. Colonel Vassos has returned from Crete announcing that the union of the island to Greece is an accomplished fact in spite of the Powers, but in Athens the abandonment of Crete is already accepted as a necessary prerequisite of the mediation that has been asked for. It becomes more and more evident that Turkey has been used by the Powers as a rod to chastise Greece for her patriotic but presumptuous hopes, and that her troops are restrained by their nominal master in fear of the results at home and abroad of too sweeping victories. Turkish fanaticism has been fanned into a flame by the triumphs in Thessaly, and if there be anything in the report that the Sheik ul Islam has taken action foreshadowing a "holy war," the rulers of Europe may find that they have been playing with a fire, in which all their plans of an enforced peace and a continuing Ottoman Empire may be burned. In the meantime the Turks refuse an armistice and are pushing on, and King George is suing for help to his worst enemies, William of Germany and the Russian Foreign Office.

Paris in Mourning

All the elements which go to make fire terrible and destructive seem to have been gathered in the temporary structure in which the fashionable world of Paris was holding its annual charity bazar. A low wooden shed, extending for a hundred feet between high buildings and transformed into the semblance of an ancient city street by means of tapestry hangings and fresh paint, threaded by live electric wires and filled with booths of the most inflammable materials, the crowded passage ways, in which without a panic it was difficult to move, only needed a spark of fire to kindle into a swift inextinguishable furnace, from which few attendants or visitors escaped. Many who might have got clear of the fire were caught and crushed in the panic-stricken crowd. Clothes were torn from the backs of even strong men, who were powerless either to reach the doors or to help others. In twelve minutes the work of the flames was done. The wounded were rescued and carried away for treatment, while the dead were most of them burned so as to be unrecognizable. The body of the Duchesse d'Alencon, who remained in her stall with cool and generous courage to allow the visitors to escape first, was identified by her dentist by the fillings of her teeth, and others by the remains of jewelry or a fragment of clothing. The list of the dead is a long one, and includes many of the best known names in the aristocratic and fashionable circles of France. The police excuse themselves for allowing such a fire trap to be erected upon the ground that the building was on private property with which they had no right to interfere. No such excuse would be admitted for a moment in one of our American cities, and the public opinion of Paris and the world will undoubtedly hold the police authorities to a strict account.

Briton and Afrikander

The tension of feeling in South Africa has been somewhat lessened during the week by the repeal in the Transvaal legislature of the obnoxious immigration act, with the special announcement, however, that it was done in deference not to British but to Dutch African influence. The reserves have been notified to be ready in Natal, and the Transvaal is carefully watching the frontier lest a sudden attack similar to the Jameson raid should be attempted. The return of Cecil Rhodes with all the airs of a triumphant vindication from his English visit has not tended to tranquillize the feeling of the Afrikanders, which has found significant expression in an appeal widely circulated in Cape Colony and the Orange Free State, calling for help in the Transvaal. "We do not want your money or moral support," it says, "we want you to come and help us." British action of some sort, determined by a fixed purpose at least to maintain the London Convention and the paramount influence of England in South Africa, is probable, and talk of the cession of Delagoa Bay or, at least, a station at its mouth continues. Those who look for a war say that matters are not to be pushed to a crisis just yet on account of the queen's jubilee, which it would not be seemly to disturb by a bloody war. If the Dutch retain their often proved courage and ability with the rifle, the English are likely to find that delay will only increase their resources and determination, and that they are not to be conquered but must be overwhelmed.

NOTES

Knowledge waits upon war. The excavations of the American Archæological Society at Corinth have come to a stop while the Greeks are holding back the enemy.

The revolution in Honduras has assumed proportions threatening enough to induce our Government to send the cruiser Marblehead to protect the interests of American residents at Puerto Cortes.

The United States Supreme Court denies the application for a re-hearing in the case of the Trans-Missouri Freight Association case. It confirms the findings of the lower courts affirming the validity of the Berliner patents, upon which the monopoly of the Bell Telephone Co. in long distance telephony depends.

The international monetary commission, consisting of ex-Vice-President Stevenson and Messrs. Wolcott and Paine, sailed for Havre on Saturday last. With Japan added to the list of nations having a gold standard, and Austria and Russia hoarding gold to strengthen their financial position, we fear that the commission's reception is not likely to be encouraging.

The nomination by President McKinley of Col. H. A. Thomas to be postmaster of Boston is a deserved recognition of meritorious service. He entered the post office as clerk at the age of 17, and has spent the most of his life in that business. When a man has earned promotion in a public work in which he is thoroughly competent, it is not to his discredit that he understands politics well enough to secure his promotion. His nomination was promptly confirmed by the Senate.

Following on the news of the Paris holocaust comes that of the death of the Duke d'Aumale, which was induced by the shock of the disaster in which so many of his friends and relations perished. He will be remembered as the French leader in the subjugation of Algeria, as a scholar and historian, and especially for his splendid gift of the chateau of Chantilly with its magnificent collection of art treasures, which by his death comes into the full possession of the Institute of France, in trust for the French people.

The most pathetic of the series of disasters connected with the collapse of the New Bedford Mill corporations was the finding of the body of Treasurer W. D. Howland in the water at one of the docks of that city last Thursday. He was in the prime of life, public spirited and in many ways an excellent business man and citizen. He was driven to take his own life by mistakes for which others no less than himself deserved blame. Better laws for the supervision of corporations might have kept him from such a fatal disaster, and surely they ought now to be enacted.

Protracted drought has driven the Australian colonies to public prayer. In Western Australia especially the situation is so threatening as to imperil the future of the colony. The fringe of cultivated land near the coast has contracted until it is within less than a hundred miles of the coast. In some parts of the colony there has been no summer rain since February, 1892. The interior country is more arid than the driest parts of our own central plain, and its future seems to depend entirely upon the unproved possibility of irrigation by means of artesian wells.

Mr. Charles W. Spaulding, president of the suspended Globe Savings Bank, and treasurer of the University of Illinois, three assistants in the bank and one of its directors have been indicted for embezzlement and dereliction in duty. Mr. Spaulding has been unable to secure bail and is therefore in prison. The others were more fortunate and are still at large. Meanwhile the depositors, on the ground that the State bank examiner failed to do his duty, and that therefore the State is responsible, have petitioned the legislature to appropriate $410,000 to meet their claims, in which case they will consent that all the assets of the bank be turned over to the university, whose losses aggregate nearly, or quite, half a million. The assets may prove more valuable than now appears probable. Mr. Spaulding insists that they will pay all liabilities, if rightly handled, and leave something for the stockholders. Others do not seem to share his opinion.

IN BRIEF

The program for the Saratoga meeting of the Home Missionary Society, June 1–3, published on page 689, ought to attract many to the gathering, which this year is one of no ordinary importance.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate has our sympathy in the loss of its files and library in a recent fire. Its record and its spirit, fortunately, are incombustible, and its financial loss is covered by insurance.

We are glad to be able to promise our readers in next week's issue a special article by Dr. John Henry Barrows on his India lectureship, which has occasioned such widespread interest. He is due in California this week and expects to begin a course of lectures at Chicago University May 23.

Colorado College is hardly through celebrating the successful outcome of its effort to secure the Pearsons' endowment and now a friend, who does not wish his name made known, gives $10,000 for a hall to house the young women's club. This particular assistance was greatly needed, and the best thing about the gift is that it came entirely without solicitation.

Nearly $5,000 less than in April, 1896, were the total receipts of the American Board last month, and the showing for the eight months just ended is a decrease of $52,687. There are still four months in which to change the balance to the other side of the ledger, but only energetic and self-denying efforts of many givers can save the missionaries from great disappointments.

Now then, steamship Paris, do your prettiest and bring to us speedily and safely the precious literary freight which ex-Ambassador Bayard has in keeping for the governor of this commonwealth! There are already plenty of claimants for Bradford's invaluable manuscript, and no doubt the building committee could promise a special alcove for it in the new Congregational library.

The Presbyterian says: "One would have to go to perdition to find a language in any sense adequate to describe the Turk's nature and characteristics." No, no! friend, only to the Westminster Confession. It is original sin developed into actual transgression under the influence of a lopsided and fanatical religious system which makes the Turk, and the English language is powerful enough to describe him.

Our April Handbook, Turkey and the Turkish Problems, is receiving even more attention than we anticipated. Mr. Byington's clear and dispassionate treatment of his theme has been commented upon in Brooklyn, New York and Montreal papers, while individuals in sending their orders for it have taken occasion to say that nowhere else have they been able to obtain the light which this Handbook throws upon the complicated Eastern situation.

The Supreme Court of the United States upholds the police power of the States in the case of Rev. William F. Davis, who was arrested for preaching on Boston Common in June, 1894. Mr. Davis's plea and appeal were made in the name of personal freedom and the liberty of prophesying, but inasmuch as a permit was at his service for the asking and his success would have opened the public parks to evil as well as good, it carried little weight with sober-minded people.

The Congregationalist's pilgrims of last summer remember Wells with as much satisfaction as any place they visited in England. Central in their thoughts of that charming old cathedral town is the figure of the venerable and beloved Rev. T. J. Kightley. The pilgrims will learn with sadness that he died March 22, after an illness of twelve days. He had filled out life's measure of threescore years and ten. His was a devout and gentle spirit, a true and worthy minister of Christ.

"Have we a baker's dozen there who accomplish any more than they used to in one New England town meeting?" So writes a Mt. Holyoke College graduate, now residing on the Pacific slope, concerning that august body known as our national Senate. This query was put before the rejection of the arbitration treaty, but is not devoid of pertinence now. Senator Hoar will have to write another article for the Forum defending his colleagues, the majority of whom, it must be admitted, stood with him in supporting the treaty.

Having sampled with considerable care and thoroughness what Boston has to offer in the way of Sunday services, Deacon Dudley and his good wife have decided not to be religious tramps any longer—at least not for this season. They have found, as this week's account shows, a pleasant temporary harborage, and they will return to their home at Peaceville in season for the early strawberries and the annual observance of Children's Sunday. We understand that the superintendent of the local Sunday school has asked the deacon to organize and conduct a class in comparative religions.

England is lovingly reluctant to let our late ambassador, Mr. Bayard, go, and has given him all sorts of final assurances of esteem and regard. The American Society in London made him its guest last Friday evening at a reception at which the new ambassador, Colonel Hay, his wife and all the members of the American embassy, with many eminent English men and women, were present. A loving cup in the form of a pumpkin was presented to Mr. Bayard surmounted by a bust of himself. Could this have been intended to suggest that in spite of criticism from the Yankees who love pumpkin pie the ambassador remains on top?

Few men in the Connecticut Valley have been so long and widely known, and few have been so useful citizens in all that region, as Mr. S. E. Bridgman, who was born in Northampton seventy years ago, and whose neighbors to the number of several hundred called at his hospitable home last Saturday to celebrate his seventieth birthday. His is the "college bookstore," which all Smith College girls know. All the institutions of learning in that region owe much to him. Many a man and woman of literary fame on both sides of the sea knows and loves him and has enjoyed his hospitality. His constant cheerfulness and overflowing spirits promise him yet many years, which are the reward of the righteous.

The Review of Reviews for May publishes its usual forecast of the great summer gatherings of the year, some of which will be of special interest to our readers, as, for example, the National Educational Association at Milwaukee, July 6–9, and the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Toronto, Aug. 18. At Northfield there will be three conferences—that of the students, June 25–July 4, the Young Woman's Christian Association Conference, July 9–20, and the General Conference for Christian Workers, July 29–Aug. 16, with a Y. M. C. A. camp open through July and August. Of the Christian Endeavor Convention we have frequently spoken. In connection with the Nashville Exposition there will be a series of conventions and congresses, beginning with a National Good Citizens' Convention May 18.

Whatever misgiving may have anywhere existed concerning Mr. Moody's attitude in recent years toward the late Professor Drummond is altogether put to rest by the beautiful tribute in the Record of Christian Work for May, of which bright little monthly Mr. Moody's son has just assumed the editorship. The evangelist, writing from Cincinnati, evinces the keenest sorrow over the loss of his friend, and the characterization of Professor Drummond is so true and at the same time so delicately drawn that we cannot forbear a quotation or two. Says Mr. Moody:

> Some men take an occasional journey into 1 Cor. 13, but Henry Drummond was a man who lived there constantly, appropriating its blessings and exemplifying its teachings. As you read what he terms the analysis of love you find that all its ingredients were interwoven into his daily life, making him one of the most lovable men I have ever known. Was it courtesy you looked for, he was a perfect gentleman. Was it kindness, he was always preferring another. Was it humility, he was simple and not courting favor. It could be said of him truthfully, as it was said of the early apostles, "that men took knowledge of him, that he had been with Jesus." . . . He was one of the easiest men with whom to work, for he thought more of the common object than of aught else. . . . My own feelings are akin to those of David on the death of Jonathan.

Another noteworthy estimate of Professor Drummond is that of Ian Maclaren in the May North American. It is written in his best literary vein, is full of striking antitheses and breathes the devotion of a friendship covering more than thirty years. Upon two points Dr. Watson and Mr. Moody are absolutely agreed. Says Watson, "He was the most perfect Christian I have known or expect to see this side the grave." Says Mr. Moody, "Never have I known a man who lived nearer the Master or sought to do his will more fully." The other trait which both of his friends noted in Drummond was his consideration of others. "Never," says Dr. Watson, "did he say one unkind word of the world which condemned him. It was impossible to quarrel with Drummond, although you might be the hottest tempered Celt on the face of the earth." And Mr. Moody confirms this by saying, "Never have I heard Henry Drummond utter one unkind or harsh word of criticism against any one. He was a man who was filled with love to his fellowmen, because he knew by experience something of the love of Christ."

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK

Greater New York

Well, it is a fixed fact at last. The governor has signed the charter bill and on the first of January next New York will become in the number of its people the largest city in the world, except London. Now begins in full earnest the strife for spoils for which politicians have been maneuvering ever since the project was first talked of. It is no small prize, this that they are after. For a single item, the officials to be appointed by the mayor of the new municipality are several thousand and their salaries will run up to many millions. Whether, therefore, the coming mayor shall be another Tammany robber of the Tweed type, or such a man as Mayor Pat. Gleason, or some high-minded, honorable, incorruptible, patriotic gentleman, who would accept the trust at a personal sacrifice for the people's welfare, is a matter of vast moment on which the best minds here are now intensely pondering. An immense amount of patriotism finds expression in speech and writing, and honest citizens are asking, How much of this will be seen in act at the critical hour?

The Citizens' Union

More or less hope, according to the individual temper, is being placed upon the purposes and plans of this new combination. Its declared object is the separation of our city political action from that of the State and nation, and the holding of municipal upon different days from general elections. The aim is to select for officials of every grade in the greater city the very best man for every place to be filled, and to secure his election thereto without regard to his national or State party affiliations. The theory is old enough and has always been loudly approved here in words, but has rarely succeeded in practice, and then only for the briefest time. Many most excellent men are in the body; it is absorbing good government and other clubs seeking the same ends; its numbers are growing daily and they are getting plenty of advice and warning from all sides—the warning being mostly to this effect: Check your enthusiasm; don't be too sanguine; count and weigh your adversaries; and go slow. So good a cause in the hands of so wise, able and experienced leaders of tried integrity, with such a following, ought to succeed. It could hardly fail except in a community long accustomed to a despotism like that of Tammany, which with these great prizes before it will naturally do its worst.

Old Trinity

Trinity Church's celebration of her 200th anniversary, begun Sunday, May 2, has continued through the week with unabated interest. Many of our noted city magnates, clerical and lay, were in attendance. The historic church was richly decorated with flowers, banners and various adornings. Grand church music from organ, choir and chimes, with solemn clerical processions, gave dignity to the services. The principal addresses were by the rector, Dr. Dix, Dr. E. N. Potter, Dr. Rainsford, Dr. Huntington, Dean Hoffman and Bishop Potter. The bishop's historical discourse was delivered Wednesday, the beginning of the church's third century, when the house was thronged and the services were of an imposing character. On Sunday, the 9th, all the pulpits of Trinity parish were occupied by Bishops Doane, Littlejohn, Coleman, Walker, Neely.

Another Eloquent Scotchman

Rev. John McNeill, the Scotch evangelist, continued his two daily services through the week in Chickering Hall at noon and Dr. John Hall's church in the evening. Next week the noon service will be continued and the evening meetings will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle. The noon audience has grown daily until the lower floor is filled with men, mostly business men, whose favor he has largely won, and the galleries are filled with women. He pays little attention to homiletic rules, but is direct, simple and earnest as is Moody. Every blow tells. Best of all, Christ is the goal to which his every line of thought comes at last.

Brooklyn Lectures

Brooklyn is seldom troubled with lack of good lectures, and the closing season has been fully up to the average. One of the pleasantest and most instructive was that of Lieutenant Peary, given to school children, on Arctic Explorations. Several ladies have taken the platform with marked success; among them were Mrs. W. A Roebling, who gave an account of her attendance on the coronation of Czar Nicholas II., in May, 1896. Her talk was illustrated by a tableau representing the scene.

Miss Kate E. Oliver, a cultured Scotch lady, indorsed by Dr. Watson, Barrie and others, is illustrating Scottish character, dialect and manners in a way scarcely less attractive than Maclaren's own.

And then came a woman doctor all the way from Michigan to tell Brooklyn people of the Evils of Habitual Wrong Posture, whether in sitting, standing, walking or sleeping. School children, authors, editors, scorching bicyclists and other flagrant transgressors against the perpendicular were shown the errors of their ways with unsparing frankness.

Personal

Dr. and Mrs. R. R. Meredith sailed on the Kaiser Wilhelm on Saturday for the proposed six months' rest and recuperation from the effects of the grip. They go direct to Naples for a ten days' voyage, later visiting Switzerland and such other parts of Europe as shall seem best.

Dr. W. S. Rainsford left, this week, for the Virginia Hot Springs, suffering from an attack of gout.

Rev. M. B. Taylor, chaplain-in-chief of the G. A. R., began his pastoral service of the Park Church, Brooklyn, May 1. The surgeons are talking of using the "X rays" to find the rebel bullet under the chaplain's shoulder blade.

Mr. William R. George is showing upon both sides of the river the plan and working of his Junior Republic, using as an object lesson its sixteen-year old president, "Jakey" Smith, whose speeches and manner favorably illustrate the bearing of such training on "the small boy problem," which Mr. George is trying to solve, and with fair prospect of success.

HUNTINGTON.

BYPATHS OF EUROPEAN TRAVEL

III. THE BICYCLE

BY H. W. DUNNING, YALE UNIVERSITY

Bicyclists go to Europe in yearly increasing numbers. Probably this is the most satisfactory way for a party of young men who wish to travel at a minimum expense. Its use, however, is by no means confined to young men. Many ladies take their machines with them, and testify to the enjoyment of a bicycle trip. The greatest objection is that one is so dependent upon the weather. It is an inexplicable fact that the bicyclist in a shower always thinks he is getting much wetter than if he were walking.

Many steamship lines charge from two to five dollars for the transportation of bicycles. This is an imposition upon the cyclist. The plea that the bicycle requires careful handling is useless, for, despite the extra charge, they insist upon its remaining at the owner's risk. It is merely a small way to make an extra dollar. In addition to this they require that it shall be crated. This costs $3 more each way, and takes a day's time besides the trouble and expense of sending it by express to the steamer. I generally ride my machine to the dock, and there, if necessary, take the two wheels out of the frame and tie the three pieces together. The Wilson and the Leyland Lines make no charge or unnecessary trouble for cyclists.

Denmark has always treated the bicycle hospitably. No duty has ever been levied on it and the rider is well treated by the public and at the hotels. Every dog barks at him, but he seems to do it as a matter of duty, for he rarely goes any further. The country has good roads, plenty of daylight in summer and comfortable hotels in all large towns. If one can escape the frequent showers he will have a very pleasant trip. Sweden has more fine scenery and in some respects a more interesting people. But the distances are long and sometimes the country is monotonous. Norway is more mountainous and a trifle more showery. In both these countries the cyclist will have to deposit a small sum (about eight dollars) which will be receipted for and returned upon his departure. Holland furnishes splendid riding, and enjoyable trips can be taken in all parts of Germany. Belgian roads are often paved for miles with unridable cobble stones. France has good roads and in the southern part excellent weather in spring and fall. The peasants, unfortunately, have their shoes filled with heavy-headed nails. These drop out on the road and, as they are always found with the point up, punctured tires are not uncommon. The French peasant is not inclined to be more than civil to the cyclist. In these countries a bicycle accompanied by its owner can usually be taken in free of duty, but if it is exacted, he can reclaim it on leaving. Switzerland is too hilly to attract many riders. Austria and Italy require the deposit of a heavy duty. The former country has excellent roads and an interesting trip can be planned in the Tyrol. In its southern portion the Dolomites offer a field not yet opened by the railroad. Italy is hot and dusty in summer, but this does not deter every one. I have had no experience in Russia but met a couple of Finlanders in Sweden last summer who informed me that bicyclists were numerous there, and it is probable that they do not meet with more trouble and restrictions than other travelers.

It is best to take a good American wheel. Foreign ones of equal quality are no cheaper and considerably heavier. The machine should be carefully tested before starting. The rider should understand it thoroughly and always be able to superintend and, if necessary, to do any repairing. If you require assistance go to the best shop and explain that you wish its facilities at your immediate disposal and are willing, if necessary, to pay a trifle extra. Then take charge of the work yourself. The tool bag should contain a pump, wrench, pair of small pliers and a tire repair kit. I regard a double tube tire as a necessity. A puncture made by a nail or tack is easy to repair in a single tube, but a cut or rent is another matter. It is almost impossible to do anything in this case except to get a new tire. In this country, where single tubes are common, repairers can usually be found who are able to vulcanize the rent, but in Europe they are practically unknown. I used a Hartford single tube tire last summer, cut it with a piece of glass in Denmark and had no end of trouble. In such a case the guarantee of the maker is of little practical value. I regard the Morgan and Wright quick repair tire as the best now on the market for a long tour. The repair kit is light and simple and punctures are quickly mended. Should you be so unfortunate as to get a puncture near a former one, the quick repair principle will not work, but the tire can be treated as an ordinary double tube. A good brake is a necessity in an unfamiliar country. A foot brake on the front wheel weighs but a few ounces and is very efficient. It is unpleasant to have to work back-pedaling going down hill, and the brake will often save the machine and its rider from accident. A bell is also required. I have found hickory handle bars very satisfactory. They are stronger than metal ones and much more elastic. Care should be taken to have a good and well-fitting saddle. Most European cities have special laws pertaining to bicyclists, but these are liberally construed in the case of tourists. Be sure always to have a good road map and familiarize yourself with the names of the villages on your route. It will do little good to inquire the way to Berlin when but a few miles from Paris. Every one, especially bicyclists and pedestrians, should take pains to be civil to people whom they meet. It costs nothing and pays well. In most parts of Europe it is customary on the road for travelers to salute each other in passing. It is a pleasant custom and should not be suffered to die out.

The Cyclists' Touring Club has done much for tourists. Special privileges and prices are accorded to its members at many hotels, repair shops and custom houses. They have access to specially prepared roadbooks. It has a representative in many places in Europe. The Touring Club of France holds a similar position on the Continent. There are also local organizations, sometimes covering a large territory, which it is advisable to join if one intends to cycle there for some time.

The Spiritual Dangers of Theological Study

By Prof. George Harris, Andover

There is a prevailing impression that theological study in the seminaries has a tendency to dull or deaden spiritual feeling. This impression finds definite statement in a recent number of The Congregationalist, where a cultivated layman is reported to have said that the atmosphere of a divinity school is apt to be unfavorable to the development of the spiritual life; that theology is approached as a science would be, and so much strength is necessarily expended upon criticism and investigation that the men have little time and inclination for real soul culture.

This candid view deserves and calls for candid consideration. My constant association with theological students has given me favorable opportunity of observation, and my opinion may therefore be regarded as of some value. I am not disposed, merely because I am instructor in a divinity school, to deny the criticism, but, being in some measure responsible, I am all the more concerned to ascertain the truth, and to attempt the correction of any dangerous tendency which may exist.

The criticism really goes farther than to the time and strength which intellectual studies consume. The danger to spiritual life from that reason alone is inappreciable. There is nothing in the study of chemistry, for example, to affect the religious spirit. It may absorb time, but otherwise has no relation, or, at most, a remote relation to faith and duty. But theology is not exactly like the natural sciences. It pertains to the spiritual life. It has to do with God's revelation in Christ for the redemption of men from sin to holiness. It is a sacred science, a spiritual philosophy. Spiritual things must be spiritually discerned. The critical examination of such truth may rob it of sacredness. The intellectual study of religion may destroy reverence and trust and zeal. The layman would doubtless agree with me that the danger arises, not so much from the time devoted to study, as from the habit of subjecting the sacred truths of Christianity to purely intellectual investigation.

The criticism is not so indiscriminate, however, as to assume that there is no intellectual element in religion. It will not be maintained that Christianity appeals only to unintelligent emotion. Religion without knowledge is superstition, or mysticism, or physical excitement. No Protestant supposes that ignorance is the mother of devotion. The best and strongest faith is intelligent faith. The layman thinks it no reproach that he is called a cultivated layman. The intellectual and emotional are mutually dependent in religion. Knowledge and faith combine to create Christian character. Feeling is to be informed with knowledge; knowledge is to be infused with feeling, as with the oratory of Fox, of which it was said that his thought seemed to be all feeling and his feeling all thought.

Danger to spiritual life exists, then, only if the study of theology is exclusively or predominantly intellectual, only if the ethical and spiritual significance of truth is ignored, only if students assume that spiritual things are completely discerned when they are critically discerned. Now, whatever the case may have been in the past, the studies and lectures of a theological course at the present time are characterized by reverence, by spirituality, by recognition of the moral and religious motive power of Christianity, by inquiry concerning the needs of men and by the application of the gospel in preaching, in pastoral work and in missions at home and abroad.

There are some necessary studies which require the intellectual rather than the religious method, such as the Hebrew and Greek languages. Grammar and etymology are matters of knowledge. The religious spirit appears chiefly in thoroughness, patience and faithfulness. But the study of a language need have no unfavorable effect on the spiritual life. The authorship, date, and occasion of the composition of the books of the Bible, as of any other literature, are critical inquiries, although they throw light on the religious significance of the writings. But a student is not disinclined to pray because he has learned that the book of Isaiah was written by two authors. That knowledge, indeed, may clear his mind of confusion, and may give added power to the truth contained in that immortal book. After the language and history of the Bible are understood, its meaning is studied. Interpretation is the principal object. Half of the entire theological course is devoted to the careful, intelligent, complete comprehension of the truth contained in the Old and New Testaments. Instead of the purely textual, atomistic exegesis which formerly prevailed, study is now broadened to include the theology of the Bible, the beliefs and teaching of each writer, the progress of doctrine, the history of Israel, the life of Christ, the planting and growth of the church and of the kingdom of God.

Critical study merely furnishes the tools by which the religious significance and power of revelation can be apprehended. As a competent teacher of the classics does not confine instruction to grammar and etymology, but brings out the literary quality and beauty, the poetry and the philosophy of the writers, so the Biblical teacher transcends that which is technical and critical to bring out the moral and religious values of the sacred Scriptures. The practical uses of criticism itself are not overlooked. In Andover Seminary a course of lectures is given on the pastor's use of the higher criticism. The effect of Biblical studies, to my certain knowledge, is such that the young men would gladly subscribe to the fine article of the Westminster Confession concerning "the heavenliness of the matter, the efficacy of the doctrine, the majesty of the style, the consent of all the parts, the scope of the whole (which is to give all glory to God), the full discovery it makes of the only way of man's salvation, the many other incomparable excellencies, and the entire perfection" of the Bible.

The study of sytematic theology is supposed to be especially unfavorable to spirituality. It is thought of as controversial, hairsplitting, rationalistic. It is believed that it does more to create doubts than to strengthen faith. That it has been open to this reproach under some instructors cannot be denied. When the object was to construct a system invulnerable to attack, to set new school against old school, Calvinism against Arminianism, consistent Calvinism against illogical Calvinism, a governmental theory of atonement against an Anselmic or a moral influence theory, dynamic against verbal inspiration, the eternal co equality against the eternal generation of the Son, then, indeed, the study of theology was arid, profitless, confusing, and foreign or hostile to spiritual life and to the simplicity which is towards Christ. A theological class was an anvil on which the professor hammered out his opinions and his opponents, when for such purposes it would have been enough to give him leave to print.

The theological instruction of today may not be as brilliant and exciting as the controversial discussions which have died out. But it is constructive, positive, reverent, and has some sense of proportion. It studies the actual revelation of God in Christ, the real facts of sin and heredity, the historical person of Christ, the love of God in redemption, the Christian character, and the kingdom of God. There is no stifling of questions and doubts which arise. But they are the doubts and questions of modern times, of the science and philosophy of today rather than scholastic quiddities and the microscopic differences which distinquish phases of evangelical belief. Let one read the theological works of Prof. Samuel Harris as an example of present methods of teaching, and one will see that the spiritual life of young men is promoted and deepened, rather than hindered and arrested, by the study of theology. Much depends on teachers at any time. But in all American lecture-rooms the tone is now devout; there is earnest search for the truth, and the theology is that which can be preached as well as that which can be defended.

Space does not permit me to describe other studies. Church history, covering the development of doctrine, the forms of worship and the progress of Christianity, confirms faith; and homiletics, devoted to the art of preaching, is eminently practical.

The distinctively religious life and work of students is not neglected. Besides daily prayers and services on Sunday, there are class prayer meetings every week, addresses by pastors and missionaries, work in neighboring churches and preaching during the summer vacations.

Life in community is certainly different in some respects from life elsewhere. Its separateness has some dangers and likewise some advantages. The constant fellowship of young men who have kindred aims is generous and inspiring. It does not depress but raises the spiritual tone.

Theological students are unlike in character as they are in intellect. But the type is good. The men have high ideals; they are deeply in earnest; they are generous to one another and are willing to work wherever they can do good. Their improvement during the three years is, in most cases, marked and gratifying. Some of them mature wonderfully in mind and character. They enter as boys from college. They go out as men and as able ministers of the gospel. Although they have much to learn from experience, yet in point of character, of devotion and of noble purpose a graduating class of twenty or thirty students would compare favorably with an equal number of ministers who compose a local Association.

Occasionally students stray away into the Unitarian body or abandon the ministry. That is true of five students in the last fourteen classes of Andover Seminary. But it is not due to their studies, as they have themselves admitted, but to other influences. Nor have any of them been pre eminently distinguished for critical scholarship and intellectual ability. On the other hand, it is the rule that the best scholars have the deepest spiritual insight and religious earnestness.

The fact is that there are spiritual dangers in all pursuits. The pastorate itself is not free from danger to high ideals. The mechanism of church work, the secularities of the parish, the competition of churches and their pride in numbers and outward success, the worldliness of Christians, the criticism of sermons, the routine of visitation are conditions against which a minister must guard himself lest his high spiritual and intellectual standards be lowered.

There may be some danger to spiritual life in the studies of a theological course. I am not apprehensive, however, on the side of excessive intellectuality. A symmetrical education is aimed at, which shall produce healthy, sensible, well-informed, cultivated, earnest, noble and sympathetic men. With that aim constantly in view, thorough knowledge of the Bible, of Christian theology, of the history of the church, and of the needs and demands of men will not hinder but will surely promote religious character and spiritual power.

DEACON DUDLEY'S SUNDAYS IN BOSTON

IX

BY ALDEN ENDECOTT

"It seems to me this list of churches and meetings and ministers and subjects and music is exactly the same every Saturday night," said Deacon Dudley, as he laid the Transcript on the table, "and nothing in it looks very inviting."

"Perhaps," remarked Mrs. Dudley, "we haven't been looking in this list for the things that would satisfy us most. We've been so much engaged in hunting up interesting things in churches that maybe we've come to care too little about worshiping in them."

"I shouldn't wonder," sighed the deacon.

With the quick intuition of a loving wife Mrs. Dudley detected her husband's homesick mood, and a bright idea came to her. Laying her hand upon his shoulder—the nearest approach to a caress in which she ever indulged—she said with her most engaging smile, "Suppose we settle down at the Old South again for mornings and go to these other places afternoons."

The proposition was favorably received and they fared forth the next morning feeling, as the deacon expressed it, "like Christians once more."

They were early, but there were familiar faces in the vestibule, and one or two quiet, pleasant greetings they received made them feel that they had come into a home and were known by the family. The pew they sat in was restful. The harmonious colors and rich carving made an impression on them like quiet, solemn music and the choir of angels in the stained glass window over the pulpit seemed as though they were just ready to break forth in singing, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men." That sentiment grew every moment in their thoughts, till before the service began they realized the home feeling which is among the choicest and most helpful experiences in public worship. The galleries, which are free, were first filled, and the Dudleys were impressed by the preponderance of young men in them. Students, artisans, clerks, intelligent and manly, appeared ready for a message to inspire them and expecting to hear it. Entire families kept coming quietly up the aisles, led by substantial looking men, till almost every seat was filled. There was an atmosphere of cheerful reverence, as though they all felt that they were one company, united in one purpose. The homogeneousness of a family church impressed the Dudleys as never before. Their experiences elsewhere, all unconsciously, had enlarged their horizon of thought, for they no longer felt a sense of loneliness or neglect as they sat among the worshipers. They wondered why they had been oppressed that first Sunday by the beautiful surroundings and dimly realized that the fault was their own. The conditions were unchanged, but O, how different everything seemed!

"Somehow," whispered Mrs. Dudley to her husband, "I think God is smiling on us for coming to worship where we belong."

Just then a sweet soprano voice from the choir rose with the organ notes, which for some time had been softly falling on their ears, and voiced their thoughts:

> The Lord my pasture shall prepare
> And feed me with a shepherd's care.

And from that time they forgot themselves, absorbed in the service. The chapter in the Acts which Dr. Gordon read brought home to them a new sense of Paul's triumphant march through the nations with a conquering gospel. The pastoral prayer interpreted their own sense of gratitude to God and need of forgiveness, and brought to them the assurance of it. It voiced their aspirations and at the same time it was all-embracing. It made them feel that their own life was hid with Christ in God, and that he who had saved them died for the whole world and was reconciling the world to God.

When the choir sang the deacon looked at the angels in the window as though he knew it was to them he was listening, and when the congregation sang he looked at Dr. Blagden's bust in front of the platform as though he wondered why that venerable pastor did not lead the people.

"That's what I call a meaty discourse," said Deacon Dudley to a gentleman as they passed out. A hearty assent was given, and before the Dudleys were aware they were talking glibly with several in the vestibule.

"What nice, sociable folks they are here, Jacob," exclaimed Mrs. Dudley, with charming naïveté, as they walked home together.

"So they are," said he. "I never should have thought they were not if I'd been sociable enough myself to find out what they are. I pity people that don't belong somewhere in church, even if they're only spending a few weeks in the city. I tell you, Hannah, I've gone far enough about this town hunting for the Lord. I'm content to worship him in the Old South Church."

And Hannah breathed a devout Amen.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, May 23-29. Peace—When to Seek It, and How. Gen. 13: 5-18.

If we are followers of the Prince of Peace, if the beatitude, "Blessed are the peacemakers," means anything to us, then we are in duty bound to seek peace at all times. Hence the answer to our first question must be, "now." We certainly want at this very moment peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. We want to live today at peace with all men. And O, how much we want, in these days of tumults and wars, the prevalence of peace throughout the earth. But, first of all, we must understand the nature of peace and the only effective means of securing it.

Upon that massive tomb, just dedicated in New York in honor of General Grant, the only inscription is that memorable sentence uttered by him at the conclusion of the war, "Let us have peace" Significant indeed it is that upon the mausoleum of one of the greatest soldiers the world has ever known should be no token in carving or epitaph of the glories and the pomp of war. Those who rejected for this tomb every adornment that savored of the shock of battle understood well the character of the hero there buried. The best thing about this soldier, whose praises have been rehearsed afresh all over the land of late, was that he was essentially a man of peace. He hated war. It was only, in his thought, the necessary means to an end. Awful as are the horrors of carnage they are to be allowed—so General Grant believed—if thereby wrong is overthrown and righteousness established. This explains why he sent battalion after battalion in what seemed at first only reckless and fruitless assaults upon the enemy. He meant to fight it out, if it took all summer. When other generals lagged and vacillated Grant, knowing just where he wanted to strike, moved forward persistently and to victory.

There is a lesson here for our Christian lives. In the interest of a false peace we are often tempted to compromise with our spiritual enemies when instead we ought to fight them to the bitter end. There is one thing of greater consequence than peace, and that is righteousness. It may be that if we are seeking first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness we shall not be able, even though we try our best, to live at peace with all men. Peace that is the outcome of an easy, good-natured temperament, which hates to have any trouble with anybody, is no peace at all. Certain phases of what has passed during the last year as peace in Europe have been more disgraceful to the Christian Powers than war. We should often get on better in human relationships if we were not quite so anxious to be on pleasant terms with everybody. There come times in our life—perhaps it will come in your life or mine today or tomorrow—when, if we would see the right thing done, the true word spoken, the wronged man dealt fairly with, the unpopular cause decently treated, we must take issue with our friends, our neighbors, even with those at our own fireside.

But such action as this, even if it cause temporary friction, must be taken in the interest of peace and with the spirit of the Prince of Peace in our hearts. He had to do and say many things that caused an infinite amount of commotion, but he did and said them calmly and tenderly. He wanted peace to prevail, but he knew it could only come as the result of the enthronement of righteousness and truth and purity in the hearts of all men and in all human relationships. Let us always seek for peace, but let us seek as zealously the things that make for peace.

Parallel verses: Ps. 34: 14; 119: 165; Prov. 3: 1, 2; Isa. 32: 17; 48: 18 22; 2 Tim 2: 22; Heb. 12: 14; Jas. 3: 18; Rom. 12: 18; 14: 19.

The Home

A SPRAY OF APPLE-BLOOM

Sweeter to me than rarer flowers
  This spray of pinky apple-bloom,
That sheds throughout these morning hours
  Its delicate perfume.

Beneath me, like a foamy sea,
  The pear tree blossoms toss their snow;
A robin sings exultantly
  Upon his perch below.

I mark the stately elm, whose boughs
  Are feathered with the fairest green,
The maples, where the wrens carouse,
  The lilac's budding screen;

I note the nodding wealth of grass,
  Dewed with the drops of opal rain,
Syringas stirred by winds that pass,
  The ivy's slender skein;

Yet naught so holds my heart in snare
  As doth this spray of apple-bloom,
Freighting the amber morning air
  With delicate perfume.

From it I glean a prophecy
  Of joy for summer's golden day,
When there fulfillment fair shall be
  Of all the hopes of May.

—Clinton Scollard.

In line with the article in Mothers in Council on Twilight Talks with Children is the advice given to a young mother to begin very early to teach her baby to pray. Consequently before he was able to walk or talk she took the little one in her arms, when he was ready for bed, and sang a simple little prayer in rhyme. To the mother herself this beginning of evening devotions with her child was infinitely sweet and precious, and she was surprised, as time went on, to notice how soon the little fellow seemed to grasp the spirit of these earnest moments, to stop his laughter and frolic and to cuddle down soberly in his mother's arms. It was but a step to teach him to repeat his own prayer as soon as the baby tongue could frame the words, and now the sturdy boy of four years joins in the Lord's Prayer at family worship.

The Japanese have a pretty custom of celebrating the blossoming of the fruit trees by a general holiday. They go in parties to the plum and cherry gardens and give themselves up to the enjoyment of nature. Practical Americans, whose thought of a holiday is almost inevitably associated with a national event, the celebration of which shall serve to cultivate the spirit of patriotism, may perhaps fail to understand the enthusiasm of their æsthetic and nature-loving cousins. But an excursion into the country when our own orchards are pink and white with exquisite beauty can hardly fail to impress the most sordid, making them wish that Memorial Day might come in apple blossom time. The Japanese love their plum and cherry blossoms, as almost every decorated article they send us can testify; indeed, they have artists who make the painting of these flowers their life work. Yet our apple blossoms are quite as beautiful and worthy of as true and general appreciation. Now that cheap electric cars bring the country within easy reach of all city dwellers, it would be a pity for any one to miss seeing the world in its blossoming time, when present beauty is linked with the promise of future fruit-bearing.

PARENTS IN LEAGUE

BY ELLEN CONWAY

"The parents are really the only ones who can do anything about it," said the member of the school board to the anxious mamma who was making her wail to him about graduating expenses. "The teachers may talk and the committee may talk, but the scholars will do pretty much what they please in spite of them. But the parents could nip the whole business in the bud if they chose. Why not?"

Is there not really a deal of force in the suggestion? Every thoughtful person must deplore the increasing expense which the graduation seasons are bringing, not only in the colleges and high schools, but even in the grammar grades. Those who are not personally inconvenienced by it realize the inconvenience which it means to others. Indeed inconvenience is a very inadequate word for it. For many families it has required the most rigid economy and self-denial to carry the child through the course at all. To provide, at the end, a dress too delicate to be of substantial use again, with gloves, slippers, fan and all the other accessories, and perhaps a carriage to convey the finery in safety to the hall, several dozen photographs, tickets to an elaborate reception with the cost of music and refreshments, programs, and what not to be met by their sale, badges, batons and ribbons for ushers, a class pin—all this is more than "the last straw." It is enough, in anticipation, to deter many parents from making the attempt to send the child to school at all. There are no statistics—it is not a matter for the census taker—but it is undoubtedly true that a great many boys and girls are losing a college education, and many more a high school course, because their parents cannot meet just such needless expenses as these. By their loss the whole community loses.

But all this is trite enough. We all recognize the evil. The only question is as to the remedy. And, as to that, was not the member of the school board right?

The periodical literature provided for young people fairly teems with tales and arguments intended to bring them to a better mind in this matter. We all know how Mabel, whose father is worth his hundred thousand, conspires with Edith, whose father counts by millions, to forego the lovely silk and elegant satin they had set their hearts on, and dress for their graduation in plain white muslin, and how charming the two girls—a beautiful blonde and a brilliant brunette—appear in their simple attire. Doubtless their example has been of some use. But why should such decisions be left to Mabel and Edith and their coterie of followers? Why should not Mabel's mamma and Edith's mamma have ruled out silks and satins in the first place? And why, to come down to a much more practical question, should not the mammas of Katharine and Margaret, and Louise and all the rest, whose incomes range along in the modest hundreds, have insisted from the very beginning on plain gowns for their girls, irrespective of what Edith and Mabel might elect to do?

"Why?" The reason is not far to seek. Because none of them knew what the rest were planning, and none of them had the heart to insist on her own dear girl's doing what might make her seem peculiar. Here is the great opportunity for our league of parents. We are suffering for want of "organization." All the other classes in the community are "organized." Our young people, by the very fact of their constant, daily association, are practically "organized." That familiar expression of theirs, "all the boys" are going to do this, "all the girls" are going to wear that—what is it but the summons of organized juvenile opinion? And how often does mature parental judgment—isolated, unsupported, helpless—attempt anything but unconditional surrender to it?

Seriously, might not a little judicious consultation among parents accomplish something quite worth the trouble it would cost? It need not involve a formal canvass. Just a little, simple, natural planning together among mothers who often meet, and perhaps an attempt on the part of each of these to make it in her way to see a few more, and the problem for one year's class would be solved. If there were still a few who stood out for extravagance and display, no matter. If once the majority are on the side of simplicity the point is gained.

Our boys and girls are not ambitious—not most of them—to outshine each other. They only have the natural dislike for being conspicuous by their plainness. It is not strange that a girl does not want to be the only one without a bouquet, but if the fashion of the year is once set against bouquets she will be almost as willing to follow that fashion as the other. No boy likes to have his father thought stingy. But the stinginess of a whole classful of fathers would cease to be counted stinginess at all.

The league of parents would find opportunities for usefulness at other times than graduation. The presents to teachers, which are forbidden in some schools and in almost all are felt to be burdensome, might be done away with by a little concerted action on the part of those parents whose means and social standing place them above the suspicion of niggardliness. The endless entertainments, which teachers find such an interference with the legitimate work of the school, could not go on in the face of such a league. Even athletics—but who would be rash enough to predict the result if once an irresistible force should meet an immovable mass?

A multitude of minor social perplexities would disappear if there could be a more general understanding among parents. Late parties, long bicycle rides, clubs that take time needed for study, muslin dresses on winter evenings, spring coats put on by the calendar instead of the thermometer—every mother knows that these things are coveted, not so much for their own sake, as because "everybody else" has them. Do let us begin to use a little of our tact and diplomacy in seeing to it that "everybody else" hasn't!

When Elijah was utterly depressed in mind and believed that his brave attempt to create a reformation in Israel had completely failed, and that there was nobody left that cared for the true God, and was ready to die of a broken heart, then God gave him a quiet desert, far from distraction, then a good sleep, then a comfortable meal, then sleep again, then more food and then a six-weeks' vacation. After that he recovered his spirits, and was greatly improved in his faith in God, as well as in bodily condition. One's religious moods, if not his religious life, may often depend on the condition of the body.—Canada Lancet.

Camera Hints for Young People

By Clifton Johnson, With Illustrations by the Author

An amateur photographer of considerable reputation once said to me that out of the many hundreds of pictures he had made there were only about three which he thought really good. But those three were a satisfaction that repaid all his labor and anxiety with the others. This striving for perfection, this willingness to give all that one has for the pearl of great price, is a good attitude to take. It imparts zest and interest to the work. Few lines of endeavor are more subject to accident than photography that deals with life and nature, and the failures and half successes that strew one's course are like the débris that marks the retreat of a sorely beset army. But, if one is a true enthusiast, this does not discourage. That will-o'-the-wisp, perfection, still dances on before, and the buoyant hope of catching him is never lost. As to the failures, learn what you can from them and let them go. They are to be expected and regrets are wasted.

In the matter of subjects there are few things that cannot be made interesting, and, if one has a gift for seeing, the material is almost inexhaustible, even in prosaic surroundings. The amateur of whom I spoke in the opening paragraph was tramping with me one day when we came on a brushy pond at the edge of a wood. It was just an ordinary stagnant little sheet of water less than a quarter of an acre in extent, and in dry summer weather it sank away to almost nothing and was overgrown with reeds and grasses. Yet this amateur thought it a gem, and declared that if he lived near he would buy the pond and the land surrounding and keep it expressly for his picture making. He saw material for many days' work on the borders of this pond, and was confident that right there, give him time, he could add one more to his list of perfect photographs. No doubt he was right. The scene changes with every footstep, and each passing season makes the whole aspect new. A friend suggested recently that an interesting series of pictures could be made by selecting a pleasant scene and photographing it each month through the year on the same day of the month and from the same point of view. As an entertaining bit of out-of-door study this is a very good idea. I mention it, and the distinguished amateur's longing to own a pond, to show what possibilities a person of imagination can discover in humble material.

In its broader meaning the word "artist" includes every one who exercises selective power and puts individuality into his work. The term in this sense includes the photographer, for selection underlies all he does. In choosing subjects and making exposures he is essentially an artist, even though a very bungling one; and it is worth his while definitely to realize that he is working in art, not simply mechanics, and to treat his material accordingly. The principles that apply in making a picture are just the same for a photograph as for a painting on canvas.

In the first place, the subject should have a meaning, and it should be properly balanced and composed. Notice the pictures in art galleries and in our best magazines and weeklies, and see how trained artists treat their material. The foundation requisite is that the bit of life or nature selected for a picture should be something more than commonplace—it should be beautiful, or odd, or in some way characteristic and possessing real interest and story-telling quality.

Let me indicate briefly the main points in composition. The chief feature of the picture, its center of attraction, should be near the middle, yet not exactly, lest the effect be mechanical. If too far to one side the balance is lost. Avoid having the horizon line run through the middle of the picture, unless it is much hidden by objects that intervene. The effect is less stiff if it comes either above or below that point. In the same way any prominent lines that run through the picture, either horizontally or perpendicularly, and divide it into equal sections are bad. The same unpleasant effect is often the result of having two equally important objects of the same sort, like two trees or two houses, appear, one on each side of the picture. You tell two stories, which is always a mistake, or else repeat two commonplaces. Avoid as far as possible having two objects come against or over each other. For instance, a man on a roadway ought not to be pictured in line with a tree trunk, or, if the man is in his house yard, he ought not to stand in line with a piazza post or house corner. Usually, when a figure is the chief feature of a picture, there should be more space left on the side toward which the person faces than behind.

But, having avoided these defects, which savor of the mechanical, instead of making for variety and ease and charm, I believe in a good deal of freedom. Take what interests and pleases you, and if a subject does not attract you don't take it, even if it seems theoretically just right. In the latter case something is sure to be lacking, and the picture, if made, would be cold and unsatisfactory. A photograph should be something more than a record of facts. It should have sentiment. This sentiment is largely dependent on the atmosphere and the lights and shadows. One of the common superstitions among amateurs is that you must not aim sunward when you take a photograph. Of course care has to be taken, or you will find "ghosts" on the negative. But it is well worth while to take risks, for in no other direction do you get such good shadow masses and such gentle contrasts and gradations. So shade your lens and be cautious, and take the sunward prospect whenever it pleases you most.

Probably it is in figure pictures that amateurs oftenest fall short of good art. Indeed, the figure picture that has a purpose and is true to life is rare. In most cases the photographer has one end in view—he wants a picture that will be a portrait of the person or persons who pose and in his intentness upon this purpose forgets all accessories. If he attempts a composition with a meaning, his effort is given to producing a "pretty" picture, when he should try to make a real one. There is not much art left when truth is sacrificed to prettiness.

Every photograph should be a little transcript of life. The people you picture should be in the photograph just what they are in their everyday work or leisure. Portraiture should not be the chief motif, usually, but incidental. As a rule the persons pictured should not be looking at you. The effect is too apt to be self-conscious and to lack repose. What you photograph should be exactly the same as it would have been had you not been around at all. Such results are not easy to accomplish, but they are worth undertaking and they raise what you do at once to a higher plane. These life studies, too, have an increasing value as time goes on. Ways change, friends leave us; ten, twenty, fifty years hence pictures of the right sort that show these friends in the old surroundings will possess an interest not easy to imagine now.

Pleasing and characteristic bits of life abound—children at work and play, the various vehicles on the streets, the many phases of human labor in doors and out, the domestic animals—and now is the time to begin picture-making. In our climate there is no better season for photography than spring. In winter the light is too weak and the tendency is to make the picture flat and dull. In summer the light is too bright and there is too much glitter in contrast with black shadows. But in spring and in the later autumn months the light has plenty of force without losing its mellowness.

One thing more I wish to speak of. It is this—that there is a moral and ethical side to photography just as there is to everything else. In your pictures there is always something of your personality, not only in the selection of the subject, but in its more delicate aspect of atmosphere and sentiment. If you are cold and unsympathetic your pictures will reflect the same qualities. Meanness, untruth, coarseness, all such blemishes of character will hurt your photographs. There is every reason for uprightness, for cultivating the graces, for loving the high things of life and for aiming at refinement and wholesomeness in one's pleasures. Goodness alone does not make an artist, but it never hinders, and sound qualities of heart and mind have a real art value even to an amateur photographer.

The three pictures that illustrate this article illustrate also some of the principles I have tried to make clear. They are Scotch photographs, taken in the region now known as "Drumtochty" in the writings of Ian Maclaren. The first is of the shoemaker's lassie, scrubbing the stones of the path that leads from the street to the house door. One often sees the women in all parts of Britain at such labor, and this little girl had a fondness for work, and went at the scrubbing of her own accord. I found her just as pictured one Saturday morning, and I took her in the same position as when I first noticed her.

Next, there is the stone schoolhouse viewed from the schoolyard. The master has just given the signal, and the children have left their games, formed in line, and are marching in to their studies.

The third is a schoolroom corner in Glenalmond College. The college is wealthy, and it has several hundred pupils, who come to the glen from the families of the gentry all over the kingdom. It has a noble square of buildings on the banks of the Tochty and spacious grounds, yet here are these ancient, battered desks, that suggest the interior of a penal institution. Both students and faculty are very proud of these desks. They take pains to show them to all visitors, and call attention to the fact that there are very few schools in Britain that can boast of anything older or more defaced by boyish knives. The boys sit facing each other, and are supposed to be partitioned apart, but they always keep a friendly hole cut through the partition. In marked contrast with the desks are the modern electric lights in the wall above. Pride in antiquity does not go to the length of studying by candlelight.

Comes the lure of green things growing,
Comes the call of waters flowing—
  And the wayfarer desire
Moves and wakes and would be going.
Hark the migrant hosts of June
Marching nearer noon by noon!
  Hark the gossip of the grasses
Bivouacked beneath the moon!

—C. G. D. Roberts.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

A New York fashion expert estimates that the modest sum of $25,000 will suffice to make a woman presentable among her friends in the best society circles.

The craze for whist has reached such proportions that American women have held a whist congress in Philadelphia. One has a feeling something akin to pity for the several hundred delegates from women's whist clubs who came from cities and towns in all parts of the country.

Of the nine Seniors at Cornell University, recently elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa, six were girls. When it is remembered that elections to this fraternity are based entirely upon the standing of the candidates at or near the end of their college course, the triumph of these young women will be appreciated.

An authority on children's diet says that the craving of boys and girls for pickles is not unnatural and should be satisfied by supplying them with nature's acids. At this season of the year it is well to give them in the morning half a dozen thin slices of lemon powdered with sugar and in place of the everlasting oatmeal offer plenty of rhubarb.

The Parents' Congress which met in New York is worthy of note, not only because it was the first of the kind ever held in that city, but because, as Mrs. Noah H. Chapman, the presiding officer, remarked, it might properly be called a trinity of fathers, mothers and teachers, the audience being about equally divided into these three classes.

By direction of the Omaha board of education boys in the public schools are asked to sign, of their own free will, a pledge to abstain from the use of tobacco during their schooldays, with the provision that they can be released from their promise at any time on request. The teachers report that very many pupils have signed the pledge and kept it honorably, with visible results.

The summing up of the past year's work shows that the Massachusetts Emergency and Hygiene Association has shed sweetness and light into the lives of several thousand women and children. Indeed, nearly 200,000, averaging over 1,000 daily, enjoyed the park of the Charles River gymnasium, and half that number was the daily average at the gymnasium proper. As for the children's summer playgrounds, opened by the association in the public school yards, over 1,800 poor tots had the unnamable joys of playing in sand heaps instead of hanging upon their mothers' skirts or squabbling on hot pavements. This was done at something less than an average cost of $1 per child for the entire summer.

Closet and Altar

Humility teaches us the necessity of prayer, fervor gives it flight and endurance, trust provides it with an immovable foundation.

The careworn are so moody and gloomy that they have no eye for the wild flowers, and no ear for the song of birds or for the music of rippling brooks or autumn winds. But Jesus had an eye and ear for all sights and sounds of nature. "I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Inquire not curiously of what flower he spoke, as if it must needs have been some exceptionally lovely flower of gorgeous hue that called forth such an encomium. Jesus, I believe, would have said the same thing about the simplest wild flower that grows in the meadow or by the wayside—the snowdrop, the primrose or the daisy.—A. B. Bruce.

Lord, to thy signal-light the trees
  In leaf and flower reply;
Let not my heart, more dull than these,
  Alone unwakened lie.

—John B. Tabb.

Grand as nature is, it only typifies something grander in man; unconscious hights and breadths and depths within him, waiting to embosom themselves within the life and light of God. Seeking that ineffable oneness with him, man and nature send up together one yearning response through the holy silence: "Grant us thy peace!"—Lucy Larcom.

One Spirit—His,
Who wore the plaited thorns with bleeding brows,
Rules universal nature. Not a flower
But shows some touch in freckle, streak or stain
Of his unrivaled pencil. He inspires
Their balmy odors, and imparts their hues,
And bathes their eyes with nectar.
Happy who walks with him! whom, what he finds
Of flavor or of scent, in fruit or flower,
Or what he views of beautiful or grand
In nature, from the broad, majestic oak
To the green blade that twinkles in the sun,
Prompts with remembrance of a present God.

—Cowper.

O Lord God! whose ways are most wonderful, receive our thanksgiving for the renewed beauty thou bringest into the earth. For thou hast so fashioned us that, when the west wind blows and the summer comes, the river of God is at its fullest. Into our senses and, if we are wise, into our heart and spirit comes the joy of God; and we, beholding this outward beauty, are called to meditate touching the very ways and works of the Lord. O God, lift us up for this time, if it be but for an hour, above the things that have too much sway over us, and cause us to have communion with nature. May we question the meanest and simplest flower that grows as to the thought of its Maker when it went forth from the hand of God. If thou makest a feast, give us grace to be thy guests in thanksgiving and gladness. Let none of us turn sullenly from thy splendor. Let none of us be weak enough to suffer even the shadow of death to shut out thy joy. Fill us with great thoughts and give us the skill, courage and patience to make those thoughts become good acts, lest they end in themselves as blossoms that are followed by no fruit. Amen.

Mothers in Council

Blessed Lord, thou art infinite in love and tenderness, and dost comfort us even as a mother comforteth. Thou dost long and wait with patience day by day for the unfolding of thine own nature within us. Thou dost rejoice in every sign of victory over the lower and every up-reaching toward the higher. And so thou art by our side continually, our divine Inspirer and never failing Friend. We pray thou wilt make this love of thine more real to us. Help us who are mothers to realize that we are the children of a King and that thou dost include in thy dear family the children's children, that the yearning of our hearts for them is but the echo of thine own, and that nothing which touches their welfare is unnoticed by thy watchful eye. We rejoice, O Lord, that thine ear is always open to our prayers for our dear children. O bless them this new day! They have not passed this way heretofore. We commend them in faith to thee. May they be responsive to thy leading in right and pure ways. And when the evening shades gather about us and the curtains of night are drawn, may we all with unsoiled feet come around the family altar with songs of praise and thanksgiving to thee, our Father, who hast blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, in whose name we pray. Amen.

TWILIGHT TALKS

It was my privilege a short time ago to listen to a helpful lecture to mothers; among other practical suggestions given was this: "Make much of the twilight hour." The lecturer appealed to us earnestly to keep the twilight hour sacred to our children. This meeting hour of day and night, let it be a meeting hour of hearts, the children's and your own. Give the outside world to understand that no interruptions are permitted, you are keeping the most important, the most precious, of engagements—that with your children.

Arrange the home life in order that there may be "a pause in the day's occupations"; let the children feel the pause, the cessation of hurry and rush. They will soon look forward to it as a time peculiarly their own. The "children's hour," the time which Longfellow dedicated especially to the little ones of our nurseries, will thus become not only a beautiful ideal but a living reality, and no memory will be sweeter than this as we look back into the past. Looking at the suggestion from a physical standpoint, could anything be more restful to tired little nerves than a quiet cuddle in mamma's lap before the nursery supper?

If you have a westerly window available, consider it the place of all others for the little chairs and your own comfortable rocker. Tell the story of the dear old sun who peeped at us from the eastern sky in the early morning, shone on us all day long and now is saying "Good night," so that we may go to sleep in the darkness and be bright and fresh to welcome him when he comes again in the east. This thought may be enlarged upon and made more accurate by a verse of the kindergarten song, Good Morning, Merry Sunshine:

I never go to sleep, dear child,
  I'm shining all the night,
But as your earth goes turning round,
  It hides me from your sight.

Direct the attention of even the smallest tot to the soft, rosy color that spreads itself over the sky and touches the hills and treetops, and encourage the little ones to give free play to their imagination in connection with it. Notice the stars as they appear and give the children the names of some of the planets, so that later on, when they take a last peep before going to bed, they may say "good night to Venus." It means more than we think to these little minds to know the stars by name. It means companionship while they are lying alone in the darkness waiting for sleep to come to know that Venus, Mercury, or some other shining little body, is watching them.

Catch the first glimpse of the young moon and let the children sing with you,

O, mother, how pretty the moon looks tonight.

Often allow the children to sit quietly just looking into the heavens with their wondering eyes. Emerson tells us that "if we only saw the stars once in a thousand years men would believe and adore, and preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God which had been shown." But because the vision comes so often it need not become commonplace. You may implant in these little souls such an appreciation of the beautiful in nature that it may not only be a source of happiness, but provide them with one of the greatest resources of life.

By far the greatest result of these talks with your children will be the creation between you of a common interest, which will bind you to them as nothing else can. As they grow older you will find a tendency to treasure up the little experiences of the day to weave into the evening hour. Confidences that you could not win in the glare of day will come forth unbidden under the gathering darkness. It is not too rash a prophecy to say that the hearts of both mother and children will turn back in later years to these hours as one of the experiences that made all life richer.

E. J. W.

A BAPTISMAL COVENANT FOR CHILDREN

As Children's Sunday draws near this quaint old baptismal covenant, prepared by Philip Henry, father of Matthew Henry, the commentator, may prove suggestive to other parents. This father required his children to repeat it every Sunday evening, and when they were grown he had them "all write it out severally with their own hands and solemnly set their names to it, which he told them he would keep by him, which he did."

"I take God the Father to be my chiefest good and highest end.

"I take God the Son to be my Prince and Saviour.

"I take God the Holy Ghost to be my Sanctifier, Teacher, Guide and Comforter.

"I take the Word of God to be my rule in all my actions and the people of God to be my people in all conditions.

"I do likewise devote and dedicate unto the Lord my whole self, all I am, all I have and all I can do. And this I do deliberately, sincerely, freely and forever."

DISCIPLINE IN THE HOME

At the Parents' Congress recently held in New York city considerable discussion was called out by the address on Government of Children by Rev. Dr. McConnell of Holy Trinity Church. Some of his views are set forth in this brief extract:

> I never knew a child and never want to have an intimate acquaintance with one that did not need punishment. This punishment need not be harsh and should never be humiliating, or such as to lower the dignity of the child. I believe that a child may be spanked with dignity. It always irritates me to hear a mother say that she cannot trust her temper to punish a child when the fault is committed but waits until next day. I do not know of any more diabolical punishment than this fad of weak mothers. Trifling physical punishment when the offense is committed is less trying than delayed punishment which keeps the little one on the rack and tries its nerves. . . . In closing let me say a word about the so-called decay of family discipline. I do not believe in it. There is less of the decorous behavior of children toward their parents than was customary a generation or two ago, but there is more comradeship and a better understanding between the individuals making up the family group, and society in consequence is better for it.

The Conversation Corner

ONCE in a while we must hang out our Corner sign at the head of the column to remind both our correspondents and our readers of the real object of our Corner—which we have tried to stick to from the beginning—namely, to ask and answer the children's questions. Stories and poems, however appropriate for them, we have no room to print on this page, so that very many letters and requests have to be ruled out, although I usually try and answer them all—always excepting those which are without signature or address! But when children ask something which they wish to know about, or tell something which other children have asked about or ought to know about, those letters go in. On May days children always go out hunting flowers. Childhood is the May Day of life, when we are seeking all sorts of good and beautiful things—things which, like flowers carefully placed in a herbarium, we shall keep in our minds and enjoy for many years to come. And scarcely ever is such a question asked or answered that I do not have a dozen or a score of letters from other children—young or old—about the same thing. An old teacher told me yesterday that she specially liked that about our Corner, that it led the children to observe and think and ask for themselves.

Some time ago (I find it was Feb. 18) a question was asked as to the disappearance of Juan Fernandez, and the wish expressed that we might visit that famous island, and now a lady in California writes that she has been there:

What the facts are about its reported destruction by an earthquake I do not know, but I can testify that I saw the island fifty years ago today, lying like a gem on the bosom of the great Pacific Ocean. I not only saw it, but was permitted to step on its shore. This was a great treat after the weary months of seasickness on the voyage around Cape Horn. One object in stopping there was to get water, as it was the last chance before reaching the Hawaiian Islands. We found a few Spanish families there, and saw a grave said to be that of an American lady. I got some peaches and quinces, though they were not quite ripe. I did not see Crusoe's cave, but saw caves that had been excavated for the use of convicts sent there at some previous time. MRS. G.

Besides this interesting personal reminiscence the lady, whose husband was an early commander of the Morning Star (which we children of forty years ago owned!), sends to the Corner Cabinet a little box of curiosities, including lava dipped from "Kilauea's fiery lake" on Mauna Loa in a molten state, fossils from a California mountain, 7,000 feet high, tinted coral from Pacific reefs and, most curious of all, a fish-hook made of polished shell, the two parts tied together with a bit of native string, and resembling our Corner sign above! I think our boys would raise the ? at once what kind of fish there must be in the Gilbert Islands stupid enough to be caught with such a hook!

That same number of the Corner had a Worcester boy's question about the Mayflower chest on which was signed the famous compact of the Pilgrims, which you remember the historian, Bancroft, said marked the "birth of popular constitutional liberty." These letters answer it:

AUBURNDALE, MASS.

Mr. Martin: I saw in the Conversation Corner [Feb. 18] you did not know where Elder Brewster's chest was, and I think I can tell you. My mother owned the chest for many years, and sold it to the Historical Society, Hartford, Ct. Whether the compact was signed on this chest I cannot say, but it came to her from a great-great-great-granddaughter of Elder Brewster. The chest was taken from Hartford once for some celebration in Plymouth and returned. If Cornerers go there they can see it. MRS. H.

NEW HARTFORD, CT.

Mr. Martin: I think Elder Brewster's chest can be found in the Wadsworth Athenæum, Hartford, Ct. ANTOINETTE G.

HARTFORD, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: This afternoon, while I was at the Wadsworth Athenæum, I found Elder Brewster's chest. It may be found in the Connecticut Historical Society's room. Though I have passed through the room before, I do not remember seeing the name on the chest. ALDEN W.

Do not forget to save in your scrap-books, by the way, some of the newspaper notices of the gift to this country of the manuscript of Governor Bradford's History of Plymouth Plantations—very incorrectly called "the Mayflower Log"—which disappeared from the Old South Church in Boston when occupied by the British soldiers in the Revolution, and after many years was found to be in the Archbishop's palace in London. I have just read in the morning paper that it has been formally presented to Mr. Bayard, our late ambassador to England, to be brought to Massachusetts. I suppose it will ultimately be deposited in Boston or Plymouth, and I hope that some day we may get a peep at this original history of our Pilgrim Fathers by their own distinguished governor.

I shall expect now a line of letters from children who are descended from Brewster and Bradford! If they were all known, the number of our Cornerers who are descendants of the Pilgrims and patriots of New England would be a long list. Read this:

LANSING, MICH.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am very much obliged for that 1858 cent you sent me. Israel Putnam was my great-great-grandfather. In answer to your question where I got my name, I received it from Dr. Stephen T., who was my grandfather. TRACY McC.

A letter from Ohio mentions the interest of children there in the story of Putnam and Mrs. Mary Putnam Sharpe's version of the "wolf story" in the Corner of Nov. 26, and says that paper will be preserved for "the Ohio baby, the fifth Israel Putnam in direct descent, to read when he is older." A Norwich, Ct., boy, representing another line of descendants, says Mrs. Sharpe's tradition exactly agrees with theirs. He sends a photograph of the den in Pomfret!

And now Philip C., another Ohio boy, nine years old, writes that he is a descendant of Hannah Dustin of Haverhill, whose story was told in the Corner of March 25, and wants to know where he can get a copy of "Mather's Magnalia," with the account of her capture and return. But the great thing is for us all to have the patriotism, the bravery and the goodness of the ancient men and women, whether we have their names and blood or not.

Who can answer this question?

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Dear Mr. Martin: Can you tell me where I can find a book called "The Milk White Dove"? HARRY C.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

"Our Home Maker." A considerable correspondence has arisen from the question of the Providence lady on this page of Feb. 11 in regard to the origin of Mrs. Whitney's beautiful poem. The matter is fully settled by this letter from the author:

MILTON, MASS.

. . . The verses, "Our Home Maker," were written after the death of Mrs. Emily B Gibson of Alstead, N. H., in whose pleasant summer home I spent several happy seasons with my family and friends. The verses were printed later in the Christian Register and sent to the family. I am glad their simple comfort has gone so far. Very cordially yours, ADALINE D. T. WHITNEY.

Letters from the New Hampshire town add that the copy of the poem sent there had the date of May 30, 1879—three days after the death of her friend, in whose memory they were written. They also speak of Mrs. Whitney's "Odd and Even" as having been written mostly in the Gibson place barn.

"Why Alexander Was Called Great." This quaint old "dialogue," put down in some readers as anonymous, and thought by some to have been an English piece, was really written by a "Down East schoolmaster."

PORTLAND, ME

. . . It was in my grandfather's kitchen in Brewer, Me., that a young man, the author of those lines, was sitting before the great open fire, when the "hired man" came in, saying that he had been to Bangor and had "seen the governor." The "hired girl" asked, "Well, how big was he?" That gave the inspiration for the poem, which was presented soon after. I think that he, Mr. Elijah Jones, was at that time teaching the winter school in his district and "boarding round," as the custom was in those days. He was ordained in 1823 at Minot, Me., where he preached nearly fifty years. E. F. S.

As Maine was a part of Massachusetts until 1820, and as Mr. Jones began to preach at Minot in 1821, the man who suggested "Alexander the Great" must have been either Governor King or Governor Williamson, probably the latter, as he resided in Bangor.

Lines on Wolfe and Montcalm. E. B. of Lowell has replied in part to the query in March 25, and the full poem has been made out with the music. It was published in a book called "Popular Songs" about seventy-five years ago, and the last stanza ran thus:

His aide-de-camp replied, "Goes in our favor,
Quebec in all her pride, nothing can save her.
She into our hands must fall with all her treasure."
"Ah, then," replied brave Wolfe, "I die with pleasure."

Quotations About Stars. A New Jersey girl asks: "Where in Carlyle's writing is this lament to be found, 'Why did not my father teach me the constellations when I was a boy?' That he said it, I am sure, but where?"

Who can answer this? I can remember when my father showed me the plainest of the constellations—the "Great Dipper," and how to find the North Star (in the "Little Dipper") by following the "pointers." A few weeks ago I passed on the knowledge to a Corner boy with whom I had a short evening walk in Rhode Island. That is a good place for boys and girls to begin studying the "geography of the heavens." Look up in the northern sky the first clear evening—a little east of north—and you will see the seven great stars making a "great dipper," turned upside down. Curiously enough, while writing this page a boy brings a question from an older person, wishing to know about an old poem on the "Ursa Major," having this line,

Tell me, ye stars, that on your nightly round.

I declaimed when a boy Henry Ware's fine poem on the "Ursa Major," which began:

With what a stately and majestic step
That glorious Constellation of the North
Treads its eternal circle!

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for May 23 Acts 15: 1–35; Gal. 2: 1–10

THE CONFERENCE AT JERUSALEM

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The first foreign missionary enterprise of the church at Antioch gave great encouragement to Christians there. It showed to them a door set open before them by the Holy Spirit, through which they might go forth to win the world to Christ. It not only strengthened their faith in the power of the gospel, but it greatly enlarged their views concerning what it could accomplish. They soon came to believe that it was given to men, not to change Gentiles into Jews, but into Christians loyal to their own peoples. The way by which the church was brought to this view is wonderfully suggestive in its application to the belief and work of Christians today. I propose, however, to state briefly the facts, and leave the applications to suggest themselves. Let us note:

I. The criticism of missions by Jewish Christians. For a while the tidings brought by Paul and Barnabas seem to have awakened only rejoicing, without dissent [ch. 14: 27, 28]. But after a time men came down from Judæa and taught that the work of Paul and Barnabas had amounted to nothing. Then there were lively meetings. Some took the part of the apostles, and others, no doubt, denounced them as heretics. Each party warned the people against the teachings of the other party. There was "no small dissension and questioning." We can well understand that statement. The Judæan disciples declared that, since Paul and Barnabas had not caused their converts to "be circumcised after the custom of Moses," they would not be saved. The two apostles stoutly affirmed that their converts would be saved without circumcision.

II. The council called to consider the question. The church in its perplexity finally decided on the Congregational way of settling the matter, which otherwise threatened to divide it by opposing sects. It elected Paul and Barnabas and several other delegates and sent them to Jerusalem to meet the representatives of the churches of Palestine and consider what ought to be done. Paul afterwards gave a description of the council and what followed it to the Galatian churches whose case was there discussed [Gal. 2: 1–21]. Peter, James and John were there with the other apostles. Judas and Silas and other elders represented the Jerusalem church. This matter was not settled by any pope or body of bishops. All the churches shared the debate and in preparing the result, and voted for the delegates who were to bear the result to the Gentile churches. Thus the Holy Spirit guided the churches to a decision. That is the Congregational way of settling important questions now.

III. The argument against the criticism. This is the only argument stated at length. The position of the losing side is only briefly given in v. 5. But this assertion of the conservatives rested on very strong grounds. That was the way in which the Scriptures had always been interpreted. The change proposed would overturn established and cherished beliefs and customs. It would take away the necessity for the temple and undermine the Jewish nation, for though Paul admitted that Jews ought still to obey the laws of Moses and observe the customs he had created, it must have been evident that the liberties allowed to Gentile Christians would in time be claimed by Jewish Christians also. Two different standards of faith and living could not continue in the same church.

The case of the missionaries was wisely managed. Paul first privately interviewed the chief men, and made them understand what was the gospel he had been preaching [Gal. 2: 2]. Then came the public meeting. After considerable discussion Peter spoke in behalf of the missionaries. He told again of his own experience with the Gentiles at Cæsarea, "a good while ago," which they already well knew. He gave again his testimony of the evidence that the Holy Spirit had been given to Gentile as well as to Jewish believers, cleansing their hearts, not through their obedience to the law of Moses but through their faith. Neither Jewish Christians nor their fathers were able to keep that law. Why should they attempt to impose that unbearable yoke on these new disciples? He declared that Gentiles would be saved by faith, and that he believed Jewish believers also would be saved in the same way. That must have met with strong dissent. But Paul and Barnabas followed with the story of signs and wonders which God had wrought among the Gentiles through their preaching of Christ without insisting on the law of Moses. Thus the people were brought under the sway of their eloquence, supported by facts more than by argument.

Then James, the moderator of the council, summarized the testimony of Peter and the missionaries to the fact that God had gathered these converted Gentiles into churches bearing his name. He gave a free translation of the Greek version of Amos 9: 11, 12, as foretelling that, after apostasy and disaster had befallen the Jews, God would so rebuild his church that the Gentiles would bear his name, and said that the wonderful work of which they had heard was the fulfillment of their own Scripture prophecies. That speech clinched all the arguments which had gone before.

IV. The decision of the council. James gave his opinion as to what action the council ought to take, and it was unanimously accepted. It consisted in:

1. Repudiating the preaching of the Jewish Christians who had insisted on the obedience of Gentiles to the law of Moses. The council said, We gave no commandment to these men. They "have troubled you with words, subverting your souls." The moral principles which Moses taught, Christ taught also, and Jews and Christians alike acknowledged their force as law. But the rites and ceremonies and national regulations of Moses, though Jesus had observed them, these disciples solemnly declared not binding on Gentiles.

2. Hearty commendation of Paul and Barnabas. These men, the council said, are our beloved brethren. They have hazarded their lives for the Master whom we serve. We approve of their preaching and their work.

3. A statement of rules to be obeyed, in connection with the teachings of Christ in whom they trusted for salvation. Four things were forbidden, three of them for the sake of harmony with Jewish believers. As James had said, Jews were to be found in every city. It would be a matter of conscience with them not to eat food which had been offered in sacrifice to idols, nor blood, nor flesh of animals put to death by strangling, in which the blood remained. Paul, a few years afterward, said that these things were of no consequence in themselves. "Neither, if we eat not are we the worse; nor, if we eat, are we the better." But the converted Gentiles were asked to accept these restraints because, though Jewish consciences were weak, that is, uninstructed, yet to offend them unnecessarily would be to sin against Christ [1 Cor. 6: 12–20].

When the consequences of this decision came to be understood, though the Jewish disciples had agreed that it was adopted through the guidance of the Holy Spirit [v. 28], nearly all of them shrank from it and were disposed to repudiate it. Peter "dissembled," and carried the rest of the Jews and even Barnabas [Gal. 2: 11–14]. But Paul stood firm for the decision of the council. It was the act of a hero. Ultimately he brought Peter to his position, and with Silas and Timothy he went throughout Galatia declaring to the churches the decision of the council as laws for their guidance [Acts 16: 4].

Thus ended an event not second in importance even to the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. It made Paul the foremost teacher of Christianity among the apostles. It taught and illustrated the method by which the Holy Spirit guides the church through the deliberation and action of its members as a body, and it assured the churches for all time of his presence with them when, with individual judgment but with common purpose to do his will, they seek his guidance.

For potpies, biscuit, dumplings, puddings,
muffins, waffles, use

Cleveland's
Baking Powder

BEARS THE PALM
FOR PURITY AND EXCELLENCE LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT
OF BEEF.

This famous product has stood the test of over 30 years and is still unapproached in quality, fine flavor and popularity.

It is the original, as invented by the great chemist, Justus von Liebig. All other kinds came later and are, practically, imitations.

Ask for Liebig COMPANY'S Extract of Beef with this signature

Jv Liebig

and see that you get it.

A Spoonful of Somatose
GIVES
Vigor and Health.

Somatose is a Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative. It contains the nourishing elements of meat. Prepared for invalids and dyspeptics and those needing nourishment and a restored appetite. May be taken dry, or in water, milk, &c.

At druggists, in 2 oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate—each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

Our Readers' Forum

Hints on Prayer for Others — Sunday School Lesson Helps — A Reminiscence of Dr. Drummond — A Response to Dr. Behrends — A Thought on Heaven

WHY PRAY FOR OTHERS

The person who signed the inquiry ("C. B. H.") on which your recent editorial with the above title was based seemed to claim that a true earthly fatherhood would be somewhat discredited if it failed to give what the child needed until urged to do so by some other one. Your reply seemed to acknowledge that claim, but it very conclusively showed the reasonableness and the duty of intercessory prayer upon Scripture example and command, regardless of what human fatherhood might suggest. Now an earthly father must be, of course, a very inadequate epitome of God, and the main motive of praying for others must always be the one you have stated; nevertheless human fatherhood does contain sensitiveness to intercessory prayer such as our divine Father confesses in his Word. Where is the earthly father whose heart does not feel an additional incentive to action when the plea for it comes on behalf of one child from the lips of another? And is that fatherly impulse wrong? No, for now it is plain that two of his children are hanging upon his heart at the same place, and the weight of two is more than the weight of one. The deed which could not in righteousness be done for one may properly be done perhaps for two.

God is always hemmed about in his providences by a great network of collateral interests too intricate for any of us to appreciate, and it may be that frequently his predicament is broken and his mercy to any particular person released by the changed pressure of some sympathetic brethren.

Our natural instincts as children of earthly parents lead us to suspect, not their weakness, but their goodness, in counting each child's desires as a motive additional to the rest. The fact that God knows our needs before our friends think of praying for us is very obvious; but the prayer of our friends is a new fact in the universe which changes the situation of those things which God knows, and upon any particular occasion the change might possibly be enough to bring relief to a hitherto yearning need.

The fact that God is our best Friend does not make it presumptuous for earthly friends to think their desires add to his motives of mercy toward us. For he is also their best Friend and he cherishes their wishes on our behalf. Who of us have not felt the sweet sense of being drawn out of some slough by the invisible hands of intercessory prayer? And this thing comes to pass not because God is a machine that needs one more drop of oil which a brother may administer to it, but because he is a great Father whose many children are so many loved ones whose desires are not vain before him in behalf of each other.

Cohasset. E. VICTOR BIGELOW.

THE STATE OF MIND A FACTOR IN THE CASE

The question, Why pray for others? resolves itself into, Why pray at all for those things we need? Why does not God give them to us without our asking? God's conferring of blessings upon us depends upon our fitness to receive them at his hand. Pardon, grace, or especial help as a Father and Saviour, God cannot confer upon those who are unbelieving and unrepentant, and so unprayerful. He cannot treat as children those who oppose themselves to him and rebel against him. "He could not do any mighty works because of their unbelief." A selfish and worldly and sinful state of mind debars from us the rich blessings and gifts of God's hand. "Ye receive not because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts," while ye do not thank and praise and glorify the Giver. True prayer tends to increase within us those dispositions of love and of trust, a sense of our sinfulness and need and of God's glory and grace, which are the very conditions on our part of his giving and of our receiving. And this applies also to prayer for others. Our believing and importunate intercessions for them tend to bring them into that condition in which God can consistently help and bless them.

Barkhamsted, Ct. A. ALVORD.

A HELPFUL BOOK ON PRAYER

In The Congregationalist, April 15, I was much interested in the editorial Why Pray for Others? May I recommend to C. B. H. a work by Rev. Andrew Murray, With Christ in the School of Prayer, published by A. D. F. Randolph of New York? It is exceedingly rich in helpfulness and clear in explanation and an exhaustive treatise on the subject.

E. L. H.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE WRITERS OF LESSON HELPS

Permit me, as a Sunday school teacher of many years' experience, to make a few comments upon your articles in the different weekly and monthly Sunday school papers. Many of your writings show much study and research, but do you always consider the class of readers whom you seek to instruct? To those who have not had your educational advantages some of your forms of expression and your illustrations, will, I fear, often be unknown quantities.

For instance, during the past year the changes have been rung upon technical and secular educational phrases, from the abstract and the concrete, deduction, induction, philology, primary pedagogics, psychology, sociology, and as to illustration, everything in the heavens and on the earth and in the waters that are under the earth has been called into play, even the chemic art has been invoked.

There are departments in some papers in which specialists discuss these abstruse subjects; cannot we all profit by their writings?

The articles of two of the best known and gifted writers, one of whom, at least, is of international reputation, are models of simplicity and directness; even a wayfaring man can understand and find instruction from them. I quote the following, as having a direct bearing upon what I have written: "To abandon error, and come out boldly into new light is religious heroism, but God, not self, must lead." Remember, friends, you are seeking to throw light on God's word and not to exploit educational theories.

JANE CROMWELL.

NORTHWESTERN CONGREGATIONALISTS TO DR. BEHRENDS

Making the distinction between the doctrine and the theory of the doctrine, between essentials and non-essentials, there is little evidence that our churches are drifting from evangelical standards. They do not understand the theory of the atonement; they reject theories which once were deemed perfectly satisfactory. They feel that while on its divine side there is a mystery in the atonement, on its human side it is clear and self-evidencing. They accept the great truth that Jesus Christ died for sinners, but do not attempt to say how his death satisfies divine justice. This is not rejection of the atonement. With respect to the divinity of our Lord, I believe that our churches hold to it more tenaciously than ever before. They have felt that there is no explanation of him or of his mission or of the results which he has produced except that he is divine; at the same time they reject explanations of the Trinity which once were deemed satisfactory. They do not attempt to explain something which, after all, is inexplicable. More and more our churches and ministers are emphasizing that to preach Jesus Christ is to preach so as to produce in others the life and character that he inculcated and exemplified, but we feel that to produce this life and character in others one must preach Jesus Christ as the divine Saviour and Teacher and Lord of men.

We do not feel that we have in this age the whole system of divine truth. We see the mistakes of theological systems; we have been too minute and specific in all the details of doctrine. We are content to say that we do not know many things and believe that in the great theological unrest of the times the Holy Spirit is at work leading the church and leading humanity to a better grasp of the truth and to better lives, both of which are to be used in regenerating humanity.

We separate between the great body of our ministers who hold the truth in loyalty to Jesus Christ, and a few who have crude views of the truth and preach negation rather than the strong affirmation of the gospel. The great body of our ministers and churches are loyal to the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Minneapolis. JOHN H. MORLEY.

HE WAS AN EPISCOPALIAN

In a recent issue you say, "We cheerfully yield to our Baptist brethren the honor of rearing Robert Raikes." I always had the impression that Robert Raikes was an Episcopalian. Your remark made me doubt my impression, so I turned to the Religious Encyclopedia, edited by Rev. J. Newton Brown, Baptist. He calls Mr. Raikes "a worthy and liberal Churchman." Which is right?

A. B. S.

HEAVEN NO MORE REAL THAN HELL

How inconsistent that the best of our race to whom the revelation comes from the same source should resort to every method, ransacking the whole vocabulary of the human language, making use of the beautiful in nature, of prose and poetry, of fact and fiction to highten our expectation of the coming blessedness of the righteous, but passing by or lightly treating those awful teachings of him who came from the unseen world to reveal the condition of the finally impenitent.

Would it be strange if some of those who sit under such preaching should at no distant future be pleading that some might rise from the dead to testify to the living lest they also come to that place of torment?

If I cannot believe all that the Saviour said about the one condition neither can I the other, and if I cannot believe the worst of God's threatenings, neither can I believe the best of his promises. T. L. B.

A CHARACTERISTIC INSCRIPTION

Your loving tribute to the late Professor Drummond recalled to me an incident which emphasizes the character of this saintly man. While he was delivering his lectures in Boston, some four years ago, on The Ascent of Man, I met him every day and thus had an opportunity to become more intimately acquainted with him. One day he asked me for the loan of a pencil. Instead of it I handed him my fountain pen (which he had admired previously), with the request to keep it and to write with it a line in my memorandum. These are the words he jotted down: "God is love—Pax vobiscum—your friend, Henry Drummond, Hotel Brunswick, April 25, 1893"

A. G.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

SAVING THE CITY

OPEN AIR SERVICES. RELATIONS OF URBAN AND SUBURBAN CHURCHES. DISPENSARIES. WORK OF DEACONESSES. PRACTICAL FORMS OF CHURCH UNITY

(Parallel with The Congregationalist's missionary topics for June.)

No topic for a missionary meeting could come home more directly to all interested in the modern conquests of Christianity. If we live in or about a great city we are forced day by day to see conditions which call for the greatest wisdom and the most untiring energy on the part of Christian workers. If we live in the country, but strive to keep our eyes open to what is going on in the great world, the scope of our vision can include no more stirring field of action than the great metropolitan centers in which the forces of good and evil are joining battle as never before. When Christianity was new upon the earth its leaders were keen enough to discern the importance of planting it in the great cities of Asia Minor and Europe. And through the centuries that have intervened the strength of Christianity in the world could be judged at any moment by the hold which it had upon great cities. Recently the unparalleled growth of urban communities and the intensifying there of life in all its range and expression have forced the church to consider as never before how it can meet the emergency.

For our present purposes the best results from the consideration of this topic can be obtained if we can get our eyes opened to the amount and kind of good work now going on with a view to saving the city. In order to adhere to our subject we can only allude in passing to the more familiar forms of active Christianity in the city, such as institutional churches, rescue missions and social settlements. They have now been in operation a number of years and have, in the main, demonstrated their worth. Hampered as these movements have been for lack of funds, and naturally forced to proceed along experimental lines, they have, nevertheless, accomplished a vast deal, and if they were eliminated it would be a grave question what could begin to take their places. Concerning institutional churches and their correlated activities, we know of no better single compendium than Rev. G. W. Mead's book, recently published by Dodd, Mead & Co., Modern Methods in Christian Work, an admirable and up-to-date summary of the various undertakings of this character and furnishing besides much valuable information touching other kinds of aggressive Christian work. For a current record of institutional movements we would heartily commend the periodical The Open Church, started this present year in New York.

If one would inform himself with reference to college settlement movements, the Hull House in Chicago, South End and Lincoln Houses in Boston, the Delancey Street settlement in New York and, in fact, nearly all the older settlements publish annual reports and additional documents, sometimes as often as once a month, setting forth various phases of their multifarious endeavors. One of the finest tributes recently paid to college settlements was Bishop Potter's utterance soon after the presidential election of last autumn. The gist of it was, that if the masses and the classes are to live together in amicable relations, such stations midway between them as college settlements are essential for a more sympathetic understanding by all parties of the social and industrial questions now so rife and vital.

To return now to our sub-topics. Open air work has never established itself so thoroughly in this country as in England, where weather conditions are more favorable and where there is more out-of-door speaking of every sort. However, certain cities in the United States are furnishing, summer by summer, fine illustrations of what can be done in this direction. Gospel wagons in Washington, Brooklyn and Hartford have furnished a portable pulpit from whence thousands have been addressed. In the latter city that maintained by one Congregational church alone, the Wethersfield Avenue, conducted last season fifty services at each of which the audience averaged over 500, while nearly twoscore conversions were reported. Upon the beaches around Boston wagons have been used with good results. In Chicago, Boston and a number of cities every summer there is a good deal of open air preaching. On Boston Common even the Unitarians have resorted to this method, while the Salvation Army and rescue missions make free use of it.

Churches have been somewhat slower to erect platforms or to utilize their doorsteps, but here and there in different parts of the country this custom is practiced and the advantage of it is that after a stirring outdoor meeting, perhaps at twilight, it is an easy and natural transition for a congregation, at the pastor's invitation, to come within for a continuation of the service. The standard book on this topic is Rev. E. H. Byington's Open Air Preaching, the paper edition of which can be bought from the Hartford Seminary Press for fifty cents. There is a vigorous Open Air Workers' Association with its membership drawn from the whole country. Its secretary, Miss E. P. Prentiss, 77 State Street, Brooklyn, will gladly furnish much interesting literature.

Touching the relation of urban and suburban churches much might be said. The subject is coming to the front everywhere. It is being realized that unless strong suburban churches can be leagued together in the support of depleted and struggling down-town organizations it will be impossible to maintain centers of Christian life in the sections given over to business or largely occupied by foreigners. The recent formation in Boston of the Congregational Church Union was due to the realization of this fact. There is already considerable generous aiding of down-town churches by their wealthier sisters. The need in most cases, however, is not only of larger beneficence but of a better understanding, by virtue of which the brains and intelligence of business men in suburban churches shall be constantly and directly applied to the progress of city evangelism. In amplification of this thought see Rev. R. F. Horton's article in The Congregationalist of Sept. 19, 1895, on Suburbanity, as well as an article in the same issue by Prof. Amos R. Wells.

Dispensaries and deaconesses are valuable and often almost indispensable allies in saving the city. Ruggles Street Church in Boston maintains a dispensary, and they are quite common in the large institutional churches in New York city, like Dr. Judson's Memorial Baptist Church, and at St. Bartholomew's and St. George's. If medical missionaries are considered a necessary part of a well equipped foreign missionary undertaking today, they seem almost as necessary in practical ministration to the suffering poor in our great cities. To the Methodists is due the most credit for their maintenance of the order of deaconesses. Episcopalians are also discerning the usefulness of these women and not long ago in Trinity Church, Boston, one was ordained with impressive ceremonies. Our own City Missionary Society in Boston employs about twenty women who are practically deaconesses, though not called by that name. The work which these godly, self-sacrificing women do in visiting the poor and in relieving physical, mental and spiritual distress is one of the noblest and most productive going on anywhere in the world today. Such leaders in our denomination as Rev. H. A. Schauffler, D.D., of Cleveland and Samuel B. Capen of Boston are desirous of having our churches, as a body, indorse the formation of an order of deaconesses and recommend their more general employment.

Our sub-topic, Practical Forms of Christian Unity, calls attention to such federated movements as that initiated by the Evangelical Alliance in a number of cities in recent years, and to such canvassing of distinct districts in great cities as was done in New York last autumn in the Fifteenth Assembly district, where surprising conditions were found as respects the crowding of people, the absence of proper sanitary facilities and the alienation of the people from the churches. Such conferences as are being held from time to time at the South End House in Boston, attended by the pastors of all the denominations in that part of the city, help to remove possible grounds of friction and to promote more effective co-operative endeavor. The city problem is altogether too vast a one for waste or extravagance. Every measure which promises to league together all those who are working to redeem the slums, to bring light and air into the dreary cheap boarding house section, to overcome the corruption in politics, to promote parks and baths and better tenement houses, and most of all to save men individually—any such measures ought to be joyfully welcomed by the church.

Sources of Information

Modern Cities and Their Problems, by Samuel Lane Loomis.

Our Country, and The New Era, by Josiah Strong.

The Spiritual Life of a Modern City, by Pres. W. J. Tucker in The Congregationalist, Dec. 31, 1896.

Reports of the national conferences of the Evangelical Alliance, to be obtained from Dr. Josiah Strong, Charities Building, New York.

Reports of the annual convention of the Christian Workers, to be obtained from John C. Collins, New Haven.

OBERLIN'S ANNIVERSARY

Twenty-two men graduated last Thursday, seventeen being members of the classical course and five of the English course. All the exercises of anniversary week were attended by unusually large numbers. On Sunday evening preceding Commencement the baccalaureate sermon was preached in the First Church by Prof. E. I. Bosworth. Thursday morning the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered in Council Hall Chapel. Individual communion cups were employed for the first time, and gave general satisfaction. In the afternoon Prof. W. D. McKenzie of Chicago Seminary gave the Commencement address on Evolution Theories and Christian Doctrine. The address was exceedingly thoughtful, and will be published in the Bibliotheca Sacra.

The alumni tea given by the women of First and Second Churches was the social event of anniversary week. Nearly 200 persons sat down at the tables, and for an hour after tea listened to short addresses from various alumni and other visitors. Rev. J. G. Frazer, D. D., presided with his usual geniality and grace. The sermon before the alumni was preached in the evening by Pres. W. G. Frost of Berea, Ky. It was in his happiest style, simple, eloquent, earnest, and was listened to with the closest attention. The text was from Luke 14: 13, "When thou makest a feast."

The closing exercise of the week, though not part of the anniversary program, was an able address by Dr. Ballantine on My Winter in Greece. He pictured vividly and beautifully for the large audience gathered in the college chapel some of the stirring experiences of the past winter in Athens. B.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, May 16–22. The Sacredness of Secular Work. Luke 19: 11–27; 1 Peter 4: 7–19; Zech. 14: 20, 21; Rom. 14: 1–13.

What times are sacred? What times are not sacred? What does our stewardship require?

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

In and Around Chicago

The Chicago Association

The semi-annual meeting was held Tuesday, May 4, with the church at La Grange. The attendance was unusually large. In addition to routine business Dr. Noble preached a notable sermon on Soul Culture, which ought to go into print as a booklet. Rev. Mr. Fifield pointed out the way in which young people can aid their pastor. Rev. Mr. Silcox read a paper on The Theology of Robert Browning, Rev. Mr. Dunlap of Maywood gave an account of his personal experience while pastor of the First Church, Springfield, O., to meet the wants of men and win them for Christ and the church, and Rev. Mr. McMillen spoke of the work to be done with the children, and the possibility of keeping them under such influences as to bring them into the kingdom of God unconsciously. The hospitality of the La Grange people was generous. The day was fine. The village never looked more attractive, and the delegates present gave indication of a strength and piety in these churches which it does one good to contemplate. At such an association as this troublesome questions are always sure to come up. We were fortunate in the new moderator, Dr. J. G. Johnson, who, while ruling firmly, is uniformly courteous, and also in our business committee, so that most matters were disposed of speedily, if not in every case just in the way which to some seemed desirable. The matter which gave most anxiety was the application for membership in the association by Dr. C. O. Brown, late of San Francisco. He presented a letter of dismissal from the Dubuque Association and of recommendation to the Chicago Association. Accompanying it was a protest, signed by members of the Dubuque Association, against his reception, and requests from the Bay Conference to take no action till letters have been received from them. The Green Street Church desired immediate action. So did Dr. Brown and his friends, who were present in large numbers. Without discussion the application was referred to a committee of five, of which Dr. E. P. Goodwin is chairman, with instruction to report during the sessions. The committee found itself unable to come to any decision in so brief a period, and therefore, while reporting progress, asked for time, and that when the association adjourn it adjourn to hear this report early in June. There is certainly no intention on the part of any member of the association to injure Dr. Brown, but many of its members fail to see how they can act in accordance with Congregational principles and receive a man into their fellowship who is under suspension by the only ecclesiastical body which is responsible for his ministerial standing, or what value a letter from another association has while the decree of censure on the part of the first named body remains in force. It would seem as if the regular method of procedure would be wisest, namely, appeal to a council of brethren familiar with the accusations brought against Dr. Brown, and held in California, where witnesses can be obtained and their testimony thoroughly sifted. It does not seem fair that the Chicago Association should be compelled to come to any decision in this unfortunate case. This association wants to act intelligently, but, while taking into consideration the condition of Dr. Brown, it cannot be indifferent to the courtesy it owes to the Bay Conference, as the only party which has had all the facts before it, and therefore in a situation to pronounce an intelligent decision. The committee of the association will probably find some way out of present difficulties, it is hoped to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Political

It is long since there has been so much dissatisfaction with our representatives in the State and in the city as now. First the Humphrey Bill received a large majority in the Senate. Even if defeated in the House, or vetoed by the governor, the vote of the Senate in its favor will always remain a dishonor. On the heel of this proceeding comes a bill making it a crime for a newspaper even to criticise a boodler or an unfaithful public servant. The bill has passed the Senate and may pass the House. Then Senator Mason, fresh from the people who have made known their desire for the approval of the Arbitration Treaty, is one of the three Republicans who voted against it. The course of the mayor in removing two faithful civil service commissioners to replace them with persons who would carry out his wishes was anticipated, but his charge against them of "incompetency and neglect of duty" is, one might say, as insolent as unreasonable. While pretending to be in favor of civil service, it looks much as if the mayor had begun its destruction. Mr. Clark, who was the strong man among the commissioners, who was instrumental in securing the passage of the law and in framing the rules of the service, would not violate his sense of justice and accept the decision of the mayor's attorney in regard to the offices brought under the operation of the law. Mr. Clark does not believe, neither do the friends of the law, that it was framed for such partisan purposes as the present municipal powers seem to assume. Already the saloon element is showing its power in the new government and the old era of open vice is returning. At this there need be no surprise. The present mayor was elected by the vicious elements of the city. He can do no less than heed their wishes in whatever he does. It would be strange were they to favor civil service or any other reform in political or municipal life. The legislature has also authorized additional taxation for the completion of the drainage canal, although several of the trustees declared the present rate would furnish enough for its completion if the contracts were strictly carried out and unjust demands for extras set aside.

Dr. Hillis's Sermon

It was in view of matters like these and of dangers still more serious that Dr. Hillis Sunday morning preached one of the most scathing sermons he has ever delivered. People who have been in the habit of listening to Dr. Goodwin and Dr. Noble are well aware that they have spoken again and again with equal plainness, but the philippic of Dr. Hillis is a surprise even for Central Music Hall. The worst of the matter is that the charges he brings against men in high places, the series of defalcations, robberies and moral lapses to which he refers, the mistakes and follies of labor agitators or leaders, and the greed of the rich, which he points out, are all true. It does not mend matters to be told that we are no worse now than we were a quarter of a century ago. We ought to be far better. Present conditions, Dr. Hillis asserts, are accountable for the fact that there are so many vacant houses in Chicago, that the increase in our population is less rapid than statistics of former growth would lead us to anticipate by 250,000, that crime is rampant, that taxes are wasted, that families whose presence is desirable leave the city and that capital is becoming shy of investment here. He believes this indictment to be true, and he believes that in spite of present dangers and tendencies there is vigorous enough life here to remove the dangers and make the prevailing sentiment of the city morally healthful. He is careful to insist on the need of obedience to the teachings and life of Jesus Christ and of justice to all. The sermon made a sensation during its delivery and has been a theme of conversation during the week.

A Richly Deserved Sentence

Editor Dunlop, the columns of whose paper, The Dispatch, were formerly notorious for vicious allusions if not for absolutely vicious expressions, and who had the reputation of employing his columns for blackmail, has at last gone to Joliet, where he has been condemned to spend two years. The President at the last moment gave him four days' respite in order that he might arrange his affairs, but refused to interfere with the decision of the courts.

India Relief

An immense meeting was held Monday evening in the Auditorium on behalf of the sufferers from famine in India. The principal address was made by Dr. Talmage, although Hon. C. C. Bonney, Miss Margaret Leitch and several others spoke briefly. It is hoped that at least $10,000 will be secured in Chicago and some shiploads of corn. An overflow meeting in Central Music Hall was also addressed by Dr. Talmage. Hard as are the times here, a cause like India's will not make its appeal in vain.

Chicago, May 8. FRANKLIN.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MAY 7

The exercises of the morning were in charge of Mrs. S. B. Capron, who, after reading Rev. 1: 4-6, and giving a running commentary in her stimulating way, dwelt particularly upon certain characteristics of the beloved disciple which might also be ours.

The topic was: Prayer for a new appreciation of the high privilege of being called to serve. Miss Monroe spoke of the blessedness of keeping close to Christ, and of having to serve him sometimes by giving up active work. Mrs. Noyes gave the thought that faithfulness is success. God will take care of results. Mrs. Greene told of a new thought given her last winter by Mr. Meyer in illustrating what Paul meant when he prayed that he might not be a castaway. It is not one utterly lost and reprobate, but cast aside as not doing satisfactory work, and so condemned as useless to God.

Extracts were given from letters written by Mrs. Parsons of Bardesag, Miss Cole of Monastir and Miss Cull of Haskeuy. The first, after years of faithful service, is now losing her eyesight, yet still works on, "because," she says, "it is easier than not to work." Miss Cole's letter was full of rejoicing over the return of her associate, Miss Matthews, and the new strength and energy infused into duties that had weighed heavily upon overtaxed heart and nerve. Miss Cull wrote of increased opportunities for usefulness, of the distress among the survivors of the late massacres, of the difficulties encountered in arousing them from total discouragement, and of the danger that many may become hopelessly pauperized.

Mrs. Schneider mentioned the reading-room recently opened on Tyler street for Armenians, and gave a touching account of a refugee from Turkey who, sick and homeless, and knowing no language but his own, had been cared for in the Consumptives' Home till the end came. Yet his faith had remained bright, and the voice of prayer was his joy and comfort to the last. He came from a small village in the Harpoot field, and he might not even have been known to the missionaries as a convert, yet he was a saved soul. We may believe that many more such will be found at the last day to have crowned the faithful labors of our missionaries.

Prayers by Mrs. Goodell, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Abell and Mrs. Weston contributed to fill the hour.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

DR. BUCKLEY'S HISTORY OF METHODISM IN THE UNITED STATES

Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, editor of the Christian Advocate, and widely known, not only in the Methodist body but among Christians of all names, as a scholarly and versatile writer, preacher, editor and man of affairs, has prepared in these two volumes a work of surpassing value to the Christian Church. Beginning naturally with a chapter on the origin of the Methodist movement in England, and continuing with two chapters on the personality and work of John Wesley, his relation to the development of Methodism and the general process of its growth are treated in what follows, and the narrative is then transferred to this continent. The history of the church through the Revolution and subsequent years down to the present time is narrated clearly and impressively. The men who have been prominent in the denomination are sketched briefly but successfully. The discussions which have come up about great public questions, such as slavery, alterations in the form of denominational government and polity, the bisection of the church, etc., are outlined, so that a consistent and well-proportioned delineation is furnished of the intellectual and spiritual history of the body.

The establishment of theological seminaries, colleges and other institutions of learning is described. The various means used in extending the membership and influence of the denomination are indicated, and the book is pervaded throughout by that denominational enthusiasm which is conceded to be a notable characteristic of Methodism, and which, in fact, sometimes has been more conspicuous temporarily and in localities than real spirituality. But no one can read such a work as this without realizing that the divine hand was at work in the origin and growth of Methodism, and that this branch of the church has done wonderful things in the name of the Master. Dr. Buckley has done his work with intelligence and discrimination, and, although the limits of his space have somewhat cramped him, the result is sufficiently comprehensive and detailed to justify the inclusion of the work among standard histories. It has been handsomely printed and bound, and it is lavishly illustrated, especially with portraits. [Christian Literature Co. $5.00.]

HARNACK'S HISTORY OF DOGMA

Our neighbors of the firm of Roberts Brothers are rendering a worthy service to Christian scholarship by publishing the English translation of this monumental work. As less than a third part of the original is embraced in these two goodly octavos, we may prepare to welcome about five more volumes of the same size. Nor should this be a perfunctory welcome, for the author stands foremost among living church historians, and his opus magnum may well bear the same relation to American thought as Neander's held a generation ago. The second volume, just issued, possesses special value on account of the critical relation of the period covered to the whole subsequent history. It treats of the foundation of ecclesiastical dogma, while subsequent volumes will take up the development. One may set forth the course of thought without subscribing to the author's reasoning, which is not always his forte.

Christianity started in the spiritual enthusiasm of disciples, but gradually hardened into a church where the secular element predominated. This appears in three particulars—creed, canon and polity. The simple confession of Jesus Christ was developed into an elaborate rule of faith; from the mass of free writings current in the early church a certain number were selected and made co-ordinate in authority with the Old Testament; the voluntary assemblies of brethren where all were equal gave place to the hierarchical constitution. Parallel to this movement was a doctrinal development, due largely to contact with educated heathen, and proceeding by reflection and antagonism until the plain message of the gospel had become transformed into a philosophical system of the universe. The volume covers only a part of the second and third centuries, but the author clearly shows the fundamental importance of this period.

The point in our view most open to criticism is the supposed selection of the New Testament books by the church under the stress of controversy with various heretics. Undue force, we think, is laid on the parallel drawn from the creed to the canon, and again from the polity to the canon. The analogy is plausible, but by no means convincing. In the two other cases tangible evidence is accessible; in the third case the argument is largely ab ignorantia. On Harnack's theory there was nothing to distinguish these books from some of those rejected, except that they were wanted for a purpose. The reply is still valid that this assumption goes beyond the knowledge of the present age.

A word should be said in conclusion on the relation between this book and the author's Outlines of the History of Dogma, the English translation of which was published in New York in 1893. The word "outlines" expresses that relation precisely. The two works are on one and the same plan, carried out into the minutest detail. Readers who have struggled through the dense compactness of the small book will find the present series unexpectedly luminous. That is the finder and this the telescope. [Vol. 1, 1896; Vol. 2, 1897. Each, $2 50.]

RELIGIOUS

In The Place of Death in Evolution [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25] Dr. Newman Smyth argues skillfully that death is necessary to life in nature and in human nature, and that, instead of being the end of life in the sense in which it often has been supposed to be, it is but a natural step in the preparation for and the development of the higher processes of life. The author thinks it probable that death ultimately will disappear, its work being done, and that not only death but that human suffering and sorrow will be, and indeed already in an important sense can be demonstrated to have been, essential features of a plan in the mind of the Almighty, wise, beneficent and at last thoroughly satisfying to us. The book is novel, striking and ingenious, and discusses certain of the great profundities of human existence with unusual success. It is reverent and spiritually uplifting. If the argument be labored anywhere it is in the effort to show that the evolutionary theory and the doctrine of the fall of man are not inconsistent.

The Supernatural [Lee & Shepard. $1.50], by Katholikos, is offered as a rational view of the divine world and of the dual nature of man. The author apparently belongs to the Church of England, and Prebendary Reynolds of St. Paul's has supplied the introduction. It discusses the reality of the supernatural, the great sacrament, i. e., God in nature, the great procession of humanity and the great kingdom which is and is to come. It is written with the intent of meeting the needs of thoughtful unbelievers. It may avail with some of them. For others it seems to us that the author has practically written in vain, having unconsciously assumed too much which should have been demonstrated. The spirit is devout, and while we cannot call it one of the most able works of its class, it is one of those books which many people find lastingly helpful.

The Transfiguring of the Cross [Brewster & Packard. $1.50], by Rev. T. P. Sawin, D. D., is made up of nine sermons taken from a series on the fourth gospel, and dealing with events recorded in the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters. They are good examples of the more thoughtful and scholarly style of expository discourses, and are at once simple and polished in style and spiritually suggestive in a high degree.——Talks to Young Men and Talks to Young Women [Century Co. Each $1.00] are by Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D. Each is a reprint, the former having been published one year ago and the latter two. They illustrate the author's terse, pithy and stimulating way of treating practical matters and bringing them home to the mind and the conscience of his hearer. They rank with the best books of their class in existence.

The Four Pillars of the House [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents] is a little book by Dr. R. F. Horton of London, in which purity, love, unselfishness and discipline are inculcated in a simple, practical and tenderly spiritual manner. It is a helpful little devotional book.——The Unity and Symmetry of the Bible [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents], by Rev. Dr. J. M. Gibson, is a little treatise, the outgrowth of a lecture, which is well suited to everyday readers and will prove enlightening and helpful.

STORIES

Flames [H. S. Stone & Co. $1 50] is by Robert Hitchens. In many respects it is revolting; in others it is inspiring. The plot hinges on the vampire-like possession of one person's body by the soul of another, the soul of the possessed being expelled, and of the ruin wrought by a malevolent spirit which has thus stolen its human abode. The author seems to have some purpose, but it is not clear. The concluding chapter, in which apparently he seeks to reveal it, leaves the reader quite in the dark. The noble and heroic side of life is largely illustrated, strangely enough, by a woman of the street, who is the only heroine and whose relation to the plot is managed with much skill and so as to enkindle profound sympathy. The story will interest psychologists chiefly, but it is too long, especially in its minor descriptive parts, and its general tone is morbid and unhealthy. Yet we have a half formed impression that the author means, if one could see his purpose clearly, to intimate the ultimate victory of goodness over evil. The book exhibits literary ability, but also grave faults in both construction and style. We like many things in it, but we certainly cannot commend it for general reading.

In Golden Shackles [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25], by Alien, is an Australian story in which the two principally contending forces are love and greed. The plot is well worked out, the characters well sustained and the book, as such, interests without being precisely engrossing.——Christine of the Hills [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25] is by Max Pemberton. The scene is in the region of Montenegro and the Greek Islands. The story is one of love and tragedy, chiefly among the peasantry. The characters are drawn vividly and the picturesque and exciting occurrences narrated have a certain novelty due to locality. The book is interesting and perhaps may be accepted as fairly descriptive of popular life in that part of the world. It has considerable literary merit. ——Mrs. Barry Pain's St. Eva [Harper & Bros. $1.25] tells the familiar tale of the disappointment of a woman's love through the selfish thoughtlessness of an English nobleman, and is a rather depressing story written with some ability.

Rosa Nouchette Carey has added another book, Dr. Luttrell's First Patient [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1 25], to the long list of her productions. It is a wholesome and pleasant story, simple in outline, written naturally and following the familiar lines along which, out of hardship and anxiety, come good fortune and happiness.——In Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's An Inheritance [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents] there are true knowledge of human nature and considerable skill in manipulating material into a simple but effective story, which is both graphic and usefully suggestive. Without being a profound or thrilling narrative it is genuinely interesting and makes a lasting impression.——Mary A. Denison's Captain Molly [Lee & Shepard. $1.00] is offered as a love story but is quite as truly a portrayal of the work and usefulness of the Salvation Army. It deals with high life and low alike in an appreciative and enjoyable manner.

POETRY

Mr. Gilder has rendered a genuine service to his readers quite apart from the delight which they will have in reading in preparing his new volume, For the Country [Century Co. $1.00]. It contains patriotic poems from his pen, and although they are mostly short they are ringing and inspiring. Some of them have been read upon public occasions and most of them probably have been printed. Among them are those on Washington at Trenton, To the Spirit of Abraham Lincoln, The Burial of Grant, Sheridan, Sherman, and A Hero of Peace, inspired by the death of Robert Ross.——The Builders and Other Poems [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 50] is a new book by Dr. Henry van Dyke. The author, more than most of our modern poets, blends the meditative and suggestive with the musical in his verse. Most of it is in the minor key. Many of the poems are poems of nature. One of the long poems, The Builders, is the ode read at the 150th anniversary of Princeton College, a dignified and worthy utterance for such an occasion. Dr. van Dyke speaks to the heart rather than to the fancy, and writes for serious readers rather than for the passing moment. His work is of that kind which long retains its interest.

The Voice of St. John and Other Poems [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00], by Rev. Dr. W. W. Newton, contains perhaps a score of the author's poems, chiefly if not wholly religious in character. Some of them have been published before, we believe. They vary considerably in excellence but we like them all for one or another reason. They are religiously uplifting and illustrate a good degree of skill in composition and expression. Some of them are especially rhythmical. The author's portrait serves as a frontispiece.——Messrs. Copeland & Day of this city have brought out a pretty little volume of Lyrics [$1 00], by John B. Tabb. They are partly religious and partly poems of nature, of friendship, and there are a number of quatrains and sonnets. Father Tabb, also, is one of the poets who appeal to the higher nature and who make their appeal with a delicacy and a power which receive willing recognition and admiration. We like the book very much.

The second series of Cap and Gown [L. C. Page & Co. $1 50], selected by F. L. Knowles, contains a long and diversified list of selections from the publications of between thirty and forty American universities and colleges, such as the Yale Record, the Harvard Advocate, the Brunonian, Bowdoin Quill and the literary monthlies of the different institutions. College poetry mainly is light but bright, and not only college men but a much larger public will read this charming little book with appreciation and amusement. Now and then a graver vein comes to the surface, but in general the quality is superficial although the execution is graceful and sparkling. The book is handsomely gotten up.——Blue and Gold [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00] is by W. S. Lord. The author writes on familiar themes with considerable power of poetical appreciation and expression and the book deserves to be received with favor.

Ruth the Gleaner [A. J. Rowlands. 25 cents], by Mary F. McKean, is a pleasant attempt to tell the story of the Book of Ruth in verse so as to bring out emphatically one or two of its principal lessons, but we are constrained to add that much of it is better prose than verse.——Echoes [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50], by Josephine C. Woodbury, is a volume in which a few poems of no great poetical merit are so set off by paper, type and pictures as to make a somewhat imposing book. The verse is somewhat uneven in quality, but never rises to a very high level.

MISCELLANEOUS

The second volume of Mr. George H. Putnam's Books and Their Makers During the Middle Ages [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2 50] deals with the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and comes down to 1709. This was a period of the utmost importance in literary history, for not only was there a large increase in the production of books, but a very great number of the important books of the past then appeared in the department of theology and the literature pertaining to the Bible and the church fathers and in that of philosophy and jurisprudence, as well as in that of the great essayists and poets. Mr. Putnam's purpose, however, is to deal not so much with authorship as with manufacture. That is to say, he describes the makers of books rather than their writers. The first volume contained Part I. of his work as a whole. This volume opens with Part II., relating to the earlier printed books, and it describes the first printer publishers of France and their successors, William Caxton and English printing, the Kobergers and Nuremburg, Froben and Basle, Plantin and the Elzevirs, and also Erasmus and Luther, who are considered also from the point of view of authorship. The third part of the book takes up the beginnings of property in literature and leads up to and contains a description of the history of property of this sort, and of the development of the theory and practice of copyrighting. The book illustrates ample and accurate learning and embodies material not elsewhere available in so scholarly and convenient a form. It is a credit to the author and will be a source of gratification to every one who has occasion to use it.

Philip and Alexander of Macedon [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2 50] contains two essays in biography by D. G. Hogarth. He furnishes an elaborate sketch of the life, character and career of each of his subjects, and without adding much, if anything, which is new, he has succeeded in imparting a certain pleasant freshness to his pages which will be appreciated. He brings out forcibly the special causes of the pre-eminence of his heroes—the skill of Philip, for example, in revolutionizing the unwieldy formation and discipline of his army and developing it from a loosely organized body into a thoroughly disciplined army. The military feebleness of Athens and the incapacity of her great men to encounter such opponents as Philip also is made very clear. And with the same lucidity the history of Alexander's famous march into Asia with all its adventures, perils and disasters, as well as its successes, is narrated with good effect. The two men are portrayed as living personalities and not merely as figures of history, so that one takes interest in them as he reads, and this is a result not often attained so successfully. The book is a good piece of work throughout.

The children of the late John Hopkins Morrison [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50] have prepared a memorial volume about their father. Dr. Morrison was a Unitarian clergyman of eminence and popularity. He was one of the prominent figures in the Unitarian body during the greater part of the closing century, and became known to a considerable degree, and always favorably, outside of his own denomination. His life covered the years between 1808 and 1896, and his pastorates were in New Bedford and in Milton, Mass. The story of his life is told in this volume with good judgment and good taste, and it is an excellent addition to the literature of its class.

NOTES

—— The new New York Public Library building is to occupy the site of the present reservoir in Bryant Park.

—— The recent giver of the Riant Library of Scandinavian works to Yale University is Mrs. Henry Farnam of New Haven.

—— Harvard University has just been given a life-size bronze bust of Socrates, the work of Barbedienne, by Dr. J. A. Coles of Newark, N. J.

—— The proposed new English copyright bill will amend the law so as to protect practically all literary matter, except current news, which appears in any newspaper or magazine.

—— More than 200,000 copies of Miss Rosa Nouchette Cary's story, Not Like Other Girls, have been sold in England alone. She is called "the ideal writer of the English girl of the great middle class."

—— Mr. F. A. Munsey, who led the way with his magazine in selling monthly issues at ten cents a copy, is to try the experiment next autumn of selling for a quarter of a dollar apiece books ordinarily sold for at least a dollar.

—— Two pictures have been stolen from the National Picture Gallery at Buda-Pesth and are likely to be offered for sale in this country. One is a supposed Murillo, representing Joseph and the child Jesus; the other is a Van der Neer, showing a burning city beside a river, ships and a wind-mill.

—— The literary editor of the New York Tribune, Miss Ellen M. Hutchinson, who has done much to make the creditable reputation of the literary department of that journal, has resigned and is to marry her successor, Mr. Royal Cortissoz, the Tribune's art critic and one of its writers on literary topics.

—— The first part of the famous Ashburnham Library is to be sold in London, June 25–July 2. The books included are from A to F, and there will be nearly 1,700 lots. Bibles, missals, breviaries, nineteen editions of Æsop, ten of Ariosto, thirty of Boccacio, and a practically complete series of Chaucer are special features of the collection.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

The Wisdom of Fools. By Margaret Deland. pp. 248. $1 25.

Miss Archer Archer. By Clara L. Burnham. pp. 312. $1.25.

Silver, Burdett & Co. Boston.

Some Aspects of the Religious Life of New England. By George Leon Walker. pp. 208. $1.25.

A. D. F. Randolph Co. New York.

Doctor Tucker. By C. W. Knauff. pp 351. $1.50.

The Voice of St. John and Other Poems. By W. W. Newton. pp. 128. $1.00.

Branded. By Mrs. Ballington Booth. pp. 49. 25 cents.

Look Up and Hope. By Mrs. Ballington Booth. pp. 45. 25 cents.

Faith in the Power of God. By Andrew Murray. pp. 49. 25 cents.

Macmillan Co. New York.

The Pilgrimage of the Ben Beriah. By Charlotte M. Yonge. pp. 321. $1.25.

Maynard, Merrill & Co. New York.

Chesterfield's Letters. With Introduction, Biographical Sketch and Notes. By H. H. Belfield, Ph. D. pp. 159. 24 cents.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

His Fortunate Grace. By Gertrude Atherton. pp. 210. $1 00.

F. A. Stokes Co. New York.

The Mutable Many. By Robert Barr. pp. 372. $1 50.

Henry Holt & Co. New York.

The White Hecatomb. By W. C. Scully. pp. 252. 75 cents.

Merriam Co. New York.

A Fiance on Trial. By F. T. Black. pp. 310. $1.25.

F. Warne & Co. New York.

God's Witnesses. By Arthur Jenkinson. pp. 312. $1.25.

Funk & Wagnalls Co. New York.

The Old Testament Under Fire. By A. J. F. Behrends, D. D. pp. 246. $1.00.

Mayflower Pub. Co. Floral Park, N. Y.

Lost Lineage. By Carrie G. Childs. pp. 410.

C. W. Bardeen. Syracuse.

History of Education. By W. H. Payne, LL. D. pp. 93. 50 cents.

Editor Pub. Co. Franklin, O.

When, Where, Why? By Allan Nicholson. pp. 189.

American Baptist Pub. Society. Philadelphia.

Christianity and Property. By A. E. Waffle. pp. 106. 50 cents

The Conservative Principle in Our Literature By William R. Williams, D. D. pp. 91. 50 cents.

PAPER COVERS

Bureau of Education Washington.

Report on Introduction of Domestic Reindeer into Alaska. By Sheldon Jackson, D. D.

Brentano's. Paris.

Washington and the Mother Country. By Rt. Hon. Sir Edmund Monson, G. C. B., G. C. M. G.

MAGAZINES

April. Fortnightly.—American Journal of Theology.—Charities Review —Review.

May. American Colonial Tracts —Monthly.—Preacher's.—Homiletic —New England.—Art Amateur.—Month.—Review of Reviews.—The Young Man —Our Animal Friends.—Century.—American Kitchen —Forum —Treasury.—Educational Review —Chap Book.—Temple.—Young Woman.—North American Review.—McClure's.—Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.—Home Messenger.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Boston Ministers' Meeting, May 17, a joint meeting with other ministers in Channing Hall, 10.30 A. M. Speakers from both bodies.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

American Congregational Association.—The annual meeting for the choice of officers and for other business appropriate will be held in Pilgrim Hall on Monday, May 24, at 12 M. Joshua Coit, Secretary.

Massachusetts Home Missionary Society.—The annual meeting for the choice of officers, hearing of reports, and the transaction of business appropriate will be held in the Plymouth Church, Worcester, on Wednesday, May 19, at 2 P. M. There will be an address by Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., followed by an open discussion of the question, What shall be the policy of this society in regard to the foreign population of this State? Joshua Coit, Secretary.

Woman's Board of Missions.—Essex North Branch, annual meeting. Memorial Church, Georgetown, May 19, 9.30 A. M.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society.—The Seventy-first Anniversary will be held in Saratoga, N. Y., from Tuesday to Friday, June 1 to 3. A meeting of secretaries and superintendents will be held Tuesday afternoon, June 1. In the evening there will be an address by the president of the society, Maj.-Gen. O. O. Howard, and the annual sermon by Rev. Frank T. Bayley of Denver, Col.

On Wednesday, June 2, there will be addresses in behalf of the society's auxiliaries by Rev. Alexander McGregor of Rhode Island, Rev. William H. Moore of Connecticut and Rev. T. O. Douglass, D. D., of Iowa; the fifteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Department, Mrs. H. S. Caswell, secretary, presiding. Addresses by Mrs. R. B. Wright, The Day of Small Things; Rev. R. B. Wright, On the Frontier; Mrs. James B. Gregg, Woman in Colorado; Miss Marie Zoltak, With the Slovak. In the afternoon the coöperating societies will be represented, and there will be addresses by the secretaries of the Congregational Church Building Society, the Congregational Education Society, also the Ministerial Relief Committee. The annual meeting of the society for the election of officers will be held, hearing reports and other business. In the evening a paper by Sec Joseph B. Clark will be read, entitled A Year of Distress, and there will be addresses by Rev. A. F. Sherrill, D. D., Illinois: Supt. J. H. Parker, Oklahoma; Supt. H. A. Schauffler, D. D., Ohio; Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, Eastern field secretary.

Thursday morning, June 3, a paper by Sec. Washington Choate will be read, entitled Fixed Factors in Home Missions. Addresses will be delivered by Supts. A. K. Wray, Missouri; Harmon Bross, D. D., Nebraska; E. H. Ashmun, New Mexico; Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., Detroit, Mich.; Rev. H. H. Kelsey, Hartford, Ct Thursday afternoon there will be addresses by Supts. L. P. Broad, Kansas; W. H. Thrall, South Dakota, T. W. Jones, D. D., Pennsylvania; T. G. Grassie, North Wisconsin. These addresses will be followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Thursday evening there will be addresses by Rev. A. H. Bradford, D D., Montclair, N. J., Rev. Reuen Thomas, D D, Brookline, Mass., and Rev. John L. Scudder of Jersey City, N. J.

TRANSPORTATION

The Trunk Line Association, which covers territory from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Salamanca, N. Y., Erie and Pittsburg, Pa., and all points east thereof except New England, will pass over its roads for one-third fare in returning all certificates of attendants on the meeting who pay full fare in going. All rates on this basis require that certificates be obtained from the ticket agent at the starting point or the nearest station issuing through tickets to the place of meeting, and to be valid for reduction of return fares must be indorsed by special agent of the Railroad Association, who will be in attendance at Saratoga. This condition is necessary to secure one-third return fare. Round trip tickets will be furnished at the following rates: Boston, $6.75; Ayer, $6; Fitchburg, $5.50; Worcester, $4.90; Gardner, $4.90; Greenfield, $4 15; Shelburne Falls, $3 50; North Adams, $2 50. These tickets will be good going from May 29 to June 3, inclusive, and good to return until June 15. The People's Line of steamers on Hudson River, leaving New York, Pier 41, North River, foot of Canal Street, offer a rate of one fare and a third, or $3.60, from New York to Saratoga and return to delegates attending the annual meeting.

HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES

The figures in parenthesis indicate in each case the number of persons that can be accommodated.

$1.00 to $1 25 per day. Miss D. A. Pierce, 103 Circular St. (25); Mrs. Walker, 53 Spring St. (18); Mrs. M. G. Fitzgerald, 135 Circular St. (10); Mrs. Tracy Record, 3 Batchelor Row, Regent St. (12); Mrs. Vine, 186 Regent St. (12); Mrs. Laura Allen, 48 Phila. St. (10); Mrs. M. Ingalls, 63 Franklin St. (8); Elmwood Hall, Maple Ave. (40); Congress Park House, opposite Congress Park (12); Waring House, 33 Franklin St. (80); Washburn House, 41 Washington St. (40); Mrs. J. Abel, 73 Spring St. (15); Mrs. Orvis Carpenter, 38 Walton St. (20); Mary E. Moore, 75 Spring St. (30); the Old Homestead, Franklin St. (30); Mrs. Wm. R. Hills, 120 Grand Ave. (8); Summer Rest, 75 Spring St. (30).

$1.00 to 1.50 per day. The Franklin House, Church St. (80); Broadway House (40); Everett House, South Broadway (150); Miss L. R. Hunter, 49 Phila. St. (6); the Vermont House (125).

$1.25 to $1.50 per day. Columbian, South Broadway (15); the Lafayette, 109 Circular St. (100); Mrs. W. H. Corbine, No. 1 Papineau Building, cor. Broadway and Washington Sts. (8); the Linwood, South Broadway (50); the Hill Side Trim Cottage, 61 Phila. St. (25).

$1.50 to $2.00 per day. Huestis House, South Broadway (125); Worden Hotel, Broadway (50).

$2.00 and upwards per day. American Adelphi (400). The above rates are for two in a room. Persons desiring further information as to accommodations may address the local committee of arrangements, of which Rev. William O. Wark, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., is chairman.

General Association of Massachusetts.—Annual meeting at Plymouth Church, Worcester, beginning Tuesday, May 18, at 3.30 P. M. Organization; addresses of welcome by the pastor and response from the moderator; reports of the secretary and treasurer and of the committees on temperance and gambling. 7.30. Sermon by Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, followed by the communion, with collection in behalf of the ministerial aid fund.

Wednesday, 9 A. M. Devotional service, led by Rev. Isaac C. Smart. 9.30. Work of the Churches—report. (a) Relation of the Pulpit to the Spiritual Life of the Church Rev. William G. Davis; (b) Of the Prayer Meeting, Rev. William W. Jordan; (c) Of the Sunday School and Y. P. S C E., Rev James L. Hill. 10.30. General discussion of these subjects. 11 30. Board of Pastoral Supply-report. Business. 2.30 P M. Annual meeting of Massachusetts Home Missionary Society. 7.30. The Church in Modern City Life. (a) The Church and Secular Societies, Rev. Charles P. Mills; (b) The Church and Spiritual Power, Pres. Merrill E. Gates.

Thursday, 9 A. M. Devotional service, led by Rev. John L. Sewall. 9.30. Ministerial Relief, Rev. Nathan H. Whittlesey. 10. Reports of committees on (a) Home Evangelization; (b) Religious Literature; (c) Sunday Observance. 10.50. Addresses. (a) Divine Authority for the Observance of the Lord's Day, Rev. Edward M. Noyes; (b) What Can Pastors, Churches and Sunday Schools Do to Promote It, Rev. Reuen Thomas; (c) The Sunday Protective League, Rev. M. D. Kneeland. 11.50. Business. 2 30. Pentecostal Power in the Church of Today, Rev. A. H. Plumb. General discussion. 4. Adjournment.

The railroads will sell round-trip tickets, good May 18-21 inclusive, at two cents per mile for less than 25 miles; $1.00 for distances from 25 to 35 miles; and one and one-half cents per mile for greater distances. Entertainment can be had at the Bay State House for $2.50 per day; at $2.00, $1.50 and $1.25 at various other hotels, varying in some cases as one or two occupy a room; and at boarding houses for $1.00. Write to Rev. A. Z. Conrad.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Illinois,	Peoria,	Monday, May 17.
Iowa,	Algona,	Tuesday, May 18.
Massachusetts,	Worcester,	Tuesday, May 18.
Michigan,	Saginaw,	Tuesday, May 18.
Ohio,	Sandusky,	Tuesday, May 18.
New York,	Brooklyn,	Tuesday, May 18.
South Dakota,	Vermillion,	Tuesday, May 18.
Rhode Island,	Newport,	Tuesday, June 8.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

The statement made at the Missouri Association, comparing the scope of the educational work of the American Board with that under Congregational care in this country, helps us to realize the magnificent opportunity of the Board, as well as the imperative necessity of generous sums to carry on its work.

It is quite usual that reports of large benevolences in a church are followed directly by the announcement of great growth in spiritual life. A number of instances are recorded this week in different sections. Such a sequence of facts is a certainty in any quarter.

The close of the seminaries is near at hand, and is already a recorded fact in a few instances. Doubtless the event is hailed with joy in country parishes, where the advent of the theologues as summer supplies is anticipated through the long winter.

Connecticut items this week show the benefits of a cradle roll, gifts from deceased and living members, interesting children in the work of the church, enterprising work among Italians.

The layman who preaches Sunday evenings in a Minneapolis church, thus enabling the pastor to strengthen a neighboring enterprise, deserves a large share of credit for the good accomplished.

A New Jersey church, besides rejoicing in the increase of spiritual force, will see that its members are hereafter provided with the means of physical and mental development.

Of Special Note

A new adaptation of C. E. principles to church work in a Bay State church.

Two fifty-mile fields and three new churches in the State of Washington.

Another prominent church member elected mayor in a western city.

The enviable record of a pastor in the Northwest as a soul winner.

A rich ingathering for a pastorless church in Nebraska.

BOSTON WOMEN PLEAD FOR GREEKS

A characteristically Bostonian audience gathered in Faneuil Hall last week to take some measures in response to Queen Olga's appeal to the women of America to help provide food and clothing for Christian refugees from Crete and hospital supplies for the sick and wounded from battlefields. Noteworthy features of the meeting were the decorations in the Greek colors, blue and white; the patriotic music, rendered by the band from the South Boston Blind Asylum; the appearance at an enthusiastic moment of a Greek in native costume bearing a handsome Greek flag; the presence on the platform of a score or more of eminent literary and philanthropic women; and the interesting personnel of the audience itself.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe presided, and her son-in-law, Mr. Michael Anagnos, made a stirring address on behalf of his countrymen. Mrs. Livermore pointed out practical ways of raising money, and Mrs. Abba Goold Woolson reviewed Grecian history and emphasized our indebtedness to Greek poets, dramatists and patriots. Other speakers were Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Miss Julia Osgood and Mr. Frank Sanborn. At the close of the meeting $500 were pledged for the suffering Greeks, and Mrs. Isabel C. Barrows, 5 Park Square, Boston, is authorized to receive additional contributions, small and large.

THE MISSOURI STATE ASSOCIATION

The twenty-third meeting was held April 27 at Compton Hill Church, St. Louis, with the largest attendance for many years. An additional element of interest lay in the fact that the Women's State Home and Foreign Missionary Boards met for the first time in joint session with the association. Seven or more hours of the program were given to these causes. Mr. W. B. Homer, president of the St. Louis City Missionary Society, acted as moderator. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Henry Hopkins, D. D., and then the communion was observed.

The meetings were distinguished for the time given to missions, especially those of foreign lands, and the boards and agencies of the church. Miss Abbie Child of the Woman's Board gave two addresses, in one of which she emphasized the need and character of the work by presenting leading incidents of her tour about the world. Miss Gertrude Cozad of Kobe, Japan, characterized that country as a "land of contradictions." She represented that the present struggle is to keep the work from going backward, and that the cause of the crisis is the independent thinking of the Samurai class—the gentlemen retainers of feudal times—and the forty young men who started on their way to education and the gospel ministry under Captain James. Most of the church members are true to the old standards and wait for a leader.

Rev. A. N. Hitchcock, D. D., spoke in a hopeful strain of the retrenchments and needs of the American Board. He showed that in educational institutions in this country under Congregational care there are 28,000 young people, but in those of the American Board there are 53,000. These are perhaps not of the same grade as the students at home, but their education means as much to their people.

Mrs. W. M. Jones spoke upon the Decay of Self-denial, and touched upon the real difficulty in all work, both home and foreign. Dr. Brand was right, said she, when years ago he cried, "We want an insurrection of Christian conscience," and with it a great revival in pulpit and pew of the spirit of self-sacrifice. This, and not merely a multitude of schemes, will prove the ultimate solution of our difficulties.

In behalf of home missions there were many papers and addresses, most prominent among them being those of Supt. A. K. Wray and Rev. Wolcott Calkins, D. D., now of Kansas City. They brought out in a striking manner the situation in the home missionary churches and how it could be relieved. The cause of education was well represented. Dr. J. H. George spoke for the committee of education, Dr. Michael Burnham and Pres. H. T. Fuller for Drury College, and Rev. C. R. Bliss gave an able synopsis of the work of the Education Society since 1815. The association decided to establish Nobel Academy as a Christian school under the care of the Congregational churches, to consolidate Worcester and Rogers Academies, and to suggest to the trustees of Drury the establishment of a chair to teach the English Bible. The ladies' board, which had undertaken to secure $25,000 to endow a chair in Drury, reported that $11,000 had been raised, and that $10,000 of it was well invested.

Rev. J. E. Roy gave news of the A. M. A. work from Alaska to Chicago and the South, and Miss Youmans of Fisk University graphically presented the character of the work in that institution. To the Church Building Society but little time was given, but Rev. C. H. Taintor made the most of it. Addresses in the interest of Sunday school work were made by the State superintendent, Rev. W. H. Sutherland, who urged upon the pastors their duty with regard to the primary department, and Rev. O. M. Stewart, D. D., presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church, who displayed a large map giving the census of an entire county. Mrs. M. F. Bryner spoke upon Sunday Schools and Home Missions.

During the association Rev. J. H. Crum, D. D., delivered an excellent address on Crime and Criminals. Dr. Calkins gave an able and conservative address on the Bible under the title Our Text-Book—Is It Divine? and Dr. A. R. Thain of the Advance brought greetings to the associatien. The State secretary, Rev. E. F. Wheeler, reported eighty churches with 9,462 members and 11,626 Sunday school scholars. The gain in membership was greater than that of the previous year, being 237, and in the Sunday schools 809. Benevolences have fallen off $10,090, but home expenditures have increased $19,802. Rev. W. H. Sutherland reported as to the state of the churches.

The association indorsed the Anti-Saloon League and appointed a committee to attend its next convention. It was voted to recommend that Prison Day be observed, and that at the next meeting methods of prison reform be discussed. A foreign missionary committee was appointed for one year pending the report of a committee to which was referred the proposition to organize a State foreign missionary society. The association decided to meet next year with First Church, Kansas City.

The brethren were splendidly entertained. The women served dinner and supper in the church dining-room on each of the three days, and the large building with its multitude of rooms furnished ample accommodations.

J. P. O.

THE NEW MEXICO ASSOCIATION

The recent annual meeting, held at Gallup, is called the fourteenth, this being the fourteenth year since the association was organized, though the meetings have been intermittent for a part of this period. This was the first attempt for several years to meet outside of Albuquerque, the most central point. The success in point of attendance was gratifying, it being the largest for several years. Measured also by the quality of the papers and addresses, the delightful fellowship enjoyed and the spiritual impression, the meeting has not been equaled by any of recent years.

J. M. Moya, teacher of the New West school at San Mateo, and Sebastian Hernandez, pastor at Ranchos de Atrisco, were approbated to preach by the association. These young men are natives of Mexico, converted at the ages of twelve and fourteen, respectively, in Chihuahua under missionary Rev. J. D. Eaton—the first fruits of Congregational mission work in that country, and one of them a charter member of the first Christian Endeavor Society formed in Mexico. Educated for the work of the ministry in the El Paso Training School, they may be called foreign missionaries to this country. They are bright, winning young men, earnestly consecrated to their work and have already proved their efficiency.

Spiritual Culture was well presented by Rev. P. A. Simpkin, who spoke on Its Law of Development, and by Rev. F. H. Allen, whose topic was Means of Grace. An afternoon session was devoted to The Church and the Community, Rev. G. E. Birlew answering the question, What Should the Church Do for the Community? and Mr. H. E. Fox considering How to Get the Best Help from the Community. That these papers were both practical and suggestive was evidenced by the earnest discussion that followed, in which the danger was repeatedly pointed out of the church being made the end rather than the means. Rev. E. H. Ashmun spoke of the Responsibility of the Church to the Larger Community through the Denominational Organizations. The sermon was preached by Rev. N. W. Hankmeyer, who was welcomed to this association for the first time. The reports from the churches and schools are always listened to with eagerness, special interest being manifested in the Mexican work. This is in a hopeful condition, though the actual progress is slow. One church has been organized during the year at San José with eleven members, the council of recognition being held the day before the association.

Mrs. L. A. Collings, who last year presented a history of Congregational mission schools in the territory, this year gave a history of the churches. Want of sufficient data made her work incomplete, but she has a special genius for this service, and was continued as historian for another year.

The Woman's Missionary Union occupied an afternoon session with strong papers on both home and foreign missions. Mrs. Collings and Mrs. Birlew related stirring incidents of their work among the Mexicans, and Mr. Hernandez, who has a fair knowledge of English, gave an interesting description of Congregational work in Mexico. E. H. A.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Bangor

The Bond lectures for 1898 will be given by Prof. E. H. Griffin of Johns Hopkins University on the subject Relation of Modern Philosophy to Theological Thought and Progress.——President Hyde of Bowdoin will deliver the annual address before the Rhetorical Society the evening of May 18.——The following members of the Senior Class have been approbated to preach for three years by the Penobcot Association: F. H. Baker, C. N. Davie, M. A. Farren, W. Ganley, B. A. Lucas, R. H. MacPherson, E. H. Newcomb, D. E. Putnam, E. S. Rivard; of the Middle Class for one year, D. F. Atherton, H. A. Beadle, J. T. Berry, J. R. Boardman, A. Cullens, G. A. French, S. Goodwin, E. E. Grant, T. W. Harwood, A. B. Hunt, C. P. Marshall and J. E. Newton.

Andover

The course in the Life of Christ has been completed and an examination held.——Essays for the honorary scholarships are due May 22.——Dr. Torrey is preaching in the seminary church this month.——In the course on the History of Missions Dr. Torrey has been discussing the history of the formation of the A. B. C. F. M.——Professor Moore has begun the discussion of Mohammedanism in his lectures on the History of Religions.

Hartford

Rev. G. M. Boynton, D. D., spoke at the missionary meeting last week on the Work of the Sunday School Society.——Professor and Mrs. Gillett gave a reception to the Junior Class last Saturday evening.——The elective courses offered for next year have been posted.

Yale

Thursday evening of last week Hon. St. Clair McKelway of the Brooklyn Eagle lectured on Modern Leaders.——The Christian Apocrypha was the subject at the closing meeting of the Biblical Club Monday evening.——The Middle Class tendered an enjoyable reception to the other classes in the Lowell Mason Social Room Thursday evening.——Class preachers last week were Messrs S. R. Myers and R. W. Stimson.——Commencement exercises and the alumni meeting will be held May 19.——The former will include an address by Dr. Henry Van Dyke.——The anniversary address before the school will be given on Sunday evening, May 16, by Dr. A. J. F. Behrends.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

MASS.—The 76th annual meeting of the Brookfield Conference was held at Warren, May 4, 5. The attendance was large and the exercises of more than usual interest. The topics were: Present Day Parish Visiting, How Far and How May the Prayer Meeting Be Worked Up? Are Present Missionary Debts Signs of an Acute or Chronic Disease? Child Study and Child Conversion, How Women Should Use Sunday Afternoons, How Should Women Be Clubbed? and Woman's Privilege in Interesting Children in Church Work.

Norfolk Conference, meeting at Hingham, May 4, discussed Some of the Great Christian Truths Which Need To Be Emphasized Today, Christ and the Inner Life of the Christian, Practical Comradeship.

N. Y.—Hudson River Association met in Saugerties, May 4, 5. Among the topics were: Temperance Reform, The Stars in Opposition, How to Win Young Men. The missionary societies were quite generally represented. Rev. T. N. Owen preached the sermon.

MICH.—The Genesee Association held its spring meetings April 27, 28 with the newly organized church in Durand, which is one of Michigan's greatest railroad centers. The meetings were among the best ever held. The topics were: What the Pew Reasonably Expects from the Pulpit, Readjustments, The Kind of Parishioner I Like, Henry Drummond and the Harmony between Science and Religion as He Saw It, Business Principles Exemplified by the Minister, Scriptural Teaching Concerning the Second Coming of Christ, How Can the Sunday School Be Benefited? (a) Through Interdenominational Work, (b) Through Organization, (c) By the Pastor's Co-operation? The sermon was preached by Rev. H. L. Hoyt.

NEB.—The Omaha Association held its annual meeting at Blair, May 4-6. Nearly every church was represented by pastor or delegate or both. Rev. M. B. Harrison preached the sermon. Among topics considered were; The Preaching Needed in Our Day, The Mid-Week Meeting, The Church Choir, Loyalty to Our Churches in Hard Times and The Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Association. The woman's missionary hour was replete with interest, the addresses and papers being bright and strong. Resolutions were passed in memory of Rev. G. W. Wainwright, formerly pastor at Blair; whose death has occurred since the last meeting, also one commending the claims of Doane College in connection with its forthcoming 25th anniversary. The town, which is among the oldest and prettiest in the State, had on its bright spring dress, the weather was perfect, the hospitality hearty and ample and the meeting delightful throughout.

CLUBS

MASS.—At the May meeting of the Essex Club in Beverly, May 10, Rev. Sherrod Soule of Naugatuck, Ct., gave the address on The Pilgrimage. Special music was furnished.

IND.—The May meeting of the Indianapolis Club was held in Plymouth Church May 4, with a large attendance. Prof. H. C. Garvin, the retiring principal of the Bible School of Butler College, gave the address on: The Sure Foundation on Which All Christians Can Stand—Can It Be Found? Rev. G. L. Mackintosh, a Presbyterian minister, followed. A number of the Irvington Disciple people were present at the club, and Professor Garvin's address was stimulating and helpful regarding the principles of Christian unity.

MINN.—At its April meeting the Minnesota Club considered Educational Interests in the Twin Cities, each department, from the kindergarten to the public library, being treated by experts. Supper was served by the women of Oak Park Church. The attendance was large and much interest was awakened.

QUEBEC.—The Montreal Club met in the Immanuel Church May 6. The subject was Christian Victories the Inspiration for Conquest, and it was opened by Rev. C. H. Daniels, D. D., secretary of the American Board, who was the guest of the club.

NEW ENGLAND

Massachusetts

WEYMOUTH AND BRAINTREE —Rev. H. S. Snyder began work in his new field last Sunday, preaching to a large congregation. He is a graduate of Yale and of Yale Divinity School, and has been pastor in Williamsburg nine years.

LOWELL.—First Trinitarian A church Endeavor Society has been formed with 22 charter members, taking the same pledge of attendance and participation in the weekly prayer meeting which the younger people take for their Christian Endeavor meeting. A lookout committee is formed to see that members keep the pledge; only those not members of the Christian Endeavor Societies are eligible for membership.

NORTH CHELMSFORD.—A council was held at Vesper Heights, May 6, to consider the expediency of organizing a church there. Rev. W. A. Bartlett was moderator. After a patient and prolonged hearing given Rev. P. A. Bradford and the friends interested in the movement, the council unanimously voted that it was inexpedient to organize a church. The council advised the people to retain for the present their membership in the neighboring churches, and through their co-operation to secure, as in the past, the continuation and increasing success of the religious services needed for the welfare of the community.

FALL RIVER.—Central. The additions last week make 21 received during the year. The church is still without a pastor, but the work for the most part continues as usual. The Sunday school includes large classes of Armenians, Syrians and Chinese. At the mission chapel there are at times eight services on Sunday. It is open seven days in the week, with exercises of some kind each day. Outside of the Sunday school services are conducted for Germans, Swedes, Finns and Armenians, both Protestant and Gregorians. Rev. E. A. Buck's assistant, Mr. J. B. Richardson, who has been here the past six months, is a valuable helper.

WORCESTER.—C. F. Carroll, superintendent of schools, gave an able address before the Ministers' Meeting on The Moral Training of the Young.——Union has voted to assume the support of Rev. J. C. Perkins of the Madura Mission, India.

LITTLETON has been enjoying special blessings during the last few months. The pastor, Rev. Amelia A. Frost, has been doing a steady, quiet work for some time. She has had the united sympathy and effort of the church and the result has been 20 decisions for Christ since Jan. 1. Of these 16 were received into membership last week.

Maine

ELLSWORTH.—Interest awakened by the Gale meetings continues. Mr. Archibald of Montreal is giving great help, and is introducing his method of Sunday school teaching.

KENNEBUNK was supplied on a recent Sunday morning by Rev. H. L. Hastings of Boston, who also assisted in the dedication of a chapel for Christian missions.

TURNER.—The foundations for the new vestry are being put in. The new building will be connected with the meeting house on one side.

New Hampshire

KEENE.—Second. Fifteen persons, nine on confession, were received to membership May 2, making 65 in 15 months. Prosperity is continually with the church and the Sunday school is flourishing. A Men's League for social and literary work was recently organized, also a chapter of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip and an organization called The Daughters of Queen Esther, for work among young women, directed by the pastor's wife, Mrs. Archibald McCord.

DUNBARTON, assisted by Rev. M. W. Plummer, has held a two weeks' series of special evangelistic services resulting in the spiritual quickening of Christians and an interest among others. Fifteen persons have avowed their purpose to begin the Christian life. Personal work is to be continued. A weekly Bible class has been formed, and the pastor, Rev. A. K. Gleason, has begun to give five-minute sermons to the children at the morning service.

CENTER OSSIPEE.—The recent death of Deacon Joseph Hodsdon, for 56 years one of the most active members of the church, is a great loss. He was deeply interested in reformatory movements for the public welfare, and twice represented the town in the legislature. He was deacon 33 years and S. S. superintendent 43.

WAKEFIELD'S church attendance during the present year has averaged better than for the corresponding time during the last four years. Religious interest is increasing and the Sunday school has gained in numbers. Fourteen dollars have lately been contributed for the famine in India.

MARLBORO.—After a little over four years of pastoral service Rev. J. S. Colby has resigned, to take effect Oct. 1. He has received 77 persons into the church, mostly on confession, 24 coming at the May communion. Every year has witnessed a gain.

Peterboro has sold its parsonage and bought another.

Vermont

FERRISBURGH has raised money for a new organ, bringing encouragement to the church and stimulating it to special effort to secure the pastor, Rev. O. G. Baker, for another year.

POWNAL, NORTH.—The first year's work of Rev. F. V. D. Garretson has resulted in rallying the Congregational forces here and securing a parsonage. He will remain another year.

LONDONDERRY.—The Ladies' Aid Society has secured new church windows, some of them being memorials. The year has been prosperous under the ministry of Mr. Frazee.

A children's birthday party in Orwell netted $14 for missions.——Edwin Rose is to close a five years' pastorate at Jericho Center in July.

Rhode Island

RIVER POINT.—As some of the results of the past season's labors 10 persons were received May 2, eight being heads of families. The Sunday school, which numbers 300, contains more adults and heads of families now than at any time in the past. Rev. F. H. Adams is pastor.

PROVIDENCE.—Pilgrim. The Volunteers of America were present in good numbers at last Thursday evening's meeting. The aid-de-camp in charge of the city work explained the rise of the movement and others took part. A collection for the local port was given.

PAWTUCKET held the annual pew rental last week in connection with a concert. Over $2,200 in premiums were realized. The first choice brought $500. At the May communion 16 were received on confession and two by letter.

Connecticut

HARTFORD.—First. The popular subscription for the widening of Gold Street and the consequent throwing open and improving the old Center Church burying ground now amounts to over two-thirds of the sum required. Another subscription is being raised among the members of the church to pay the betterments. The cemetery contains the remains of the founders of the city and runs back to the 17th century. A kindergarten has been started in Warburton Chapel through the generosity of Miss Louise M. Lee.——Swedish has secured five handsome pulpit and altar chairs and has beautified its grounds with trees.

TORRINGTON.—A debt of $468 is covered by uncollected pledges. The primary department of the Sunday school raised $40 in gold Easter Sunday towards the building additions and repairs.——Third. Forty-four persons joined the church last week Sunday, 21 being young men and eight being by letter.——West. The same day 20 joined this church. The ingathering is the fruit of Evangelist Bliss's work.

EAST AND NORTH WOODSTOCK.—Rev. F. H. Viets completed, May 2, a 10 years' pastorate with these churches. During this time 97 have been received to membership, 55 on confession; a new manual and form of admission has been adopted for both churches; nearly $4,000 have been given for benevolences; and a new and modern house has been built at North Woodstock in place of one destroyed by fire.

NEW BRITAIN.—First. An excellent quartet will hereafter render music as a leading feature of the church services.——South. Dr. J. W. Cooper will preach Sunday evening sermons the next two months on The Physical Man.——Swedish. Rev. E. G. Hjerpe received a surprise from the members of his church recently, and was presented with a contribution of $70.

NORWICH.—Second. At the beginning of the fifth year of Rev. C. W. Morrow's pastorate a week ago Sunday he referred in a brief sermon to the progress of the church during that time. The most remarkable point was that during those four years 142 have united with the church, 87 on confession, while comparatively few of the resident members have been lost.

SOUTH COVENTRY.—Rev. B. F. Perkins, the pastor for five years, has tendered his resignation, to take effect June 30. The people lose an earnest pastor and a zealous pastor's wife, who is president of the Ladies' Missionary Association, the W. C. T. U. and the Junior Endeavor Societies. She also teaches a large S. S. primary class.

SOUTH GLASTONBURY.—Last year's receipts were $1,085 and the expenditures $1,020. The meeting house was shingled and new mats purchased for the halls at a total cost of $185, nearly all of which has been raised. Other improvements are planned. The free pew system will be used another year.

NEWINGTON.—Rev. Herbert Macy has secured the services of A. de Salvio, an Italian missionary, for every Sunday afternoon, who will speak to the laborers of the new electric road in their own language. The meetings are held in the chapel, under the auspices of the State H. M. S.

MERIDEN.—First. In addition to the large number received at the last communion, 10 were added a week ago Sunday. The cradle roll rally and mite box opening were attended by about 50 little ones under six years of age. The mite boxes yielded $20.

EAST NEW LONDON.—The chapel owned by the Y. M. C. A. has been purchased by Mrs. C. W. Chapell, who will have it thoroughly repaired and maintained for religious purposes as a memorial to the late Deacon E. H. Wheeler.

HOCKANUM.—The church debt is totally wiped out by the gift of $400 from Mrs. C. H. Smith and $200 from Mrs. E. H. Gilman—both of Hartford. Rev. F. B. Bachelor is the pastor.

NEW LONDON.—The result of recent revival services is shown in the large number who joined the various churches a week ago Sunday, First gaining 17 and Second 23.

CENTRAL VILLAGE.—By the will of the late Mrs. Mary Jacobi, the church receives a legacy of $1,200. It may be used for a parsonage which is sorely needed.

HADDAM.—Sixteen were received into membership a week ago Sunday. The oldest communicant is Miss Larissa Shailer, who was admitted 73 years ago.

COLLINSVILLE celebrated its 10th anniversary April 28. Letters of congratulation from members and a former pastor were read.

NEW HAVEN.—United. The income from pew rentals for the ensuing year will amount to about $7,000.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

NEW YORK.—Manhattan. A concert this week is given to provide silver for use at the church receptions. A social gathering, with refreshments, came at the close of the concert. The rain of last week Sunday cut down the congregation and interfered with the offering for the building fund, which, however, under the circumstances, was large. The Young Men's Club had an important meeting that evening at the house of the pastor, Dr. H. A. Stimson. The club is completing plans to act in co-operation with the Young Women's League in opening rooms in the autumn for outside work in the community. It is planned to establish apartments for a sewing school, a working girls' club, a young women's club and, it is hoped, a kindergarten. Plans will be matured at the next meeting, the last Sunday in May.

BROOKLYN.—Plymouth began last Friday evening the celebration of the semi-centennial of its organization and the call and settlement of its first pastor, Henry Ward Beecher. Papers relating to its early history were read and reminiscent addresses made. This meeting commemorated the first meeting out of which Plymouth Church grew. Next Sunday historical sermons are to be preached by Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. A. H. Bradford, that day being the anniversary of Mr. Beecher's first sermon in Brooklyn. In the autumn further recognition services will be held.

EAST ROCKAWAY.—Bethany. Reports at the annual meeting just held show substantial growth and healthy activity along all lines. Sixteen members have been added during the year, 15 on confession. The S. S. home department has 62 members. The senior and junior C. E. Societies have worked actively, the junior having a membership of 72. The Ladies' Society has been an important factor in the general prosperity. Rev. T. S. Braithwaite is pastor.

MAINE.—The young people are making a laudable effort to assist in maintaining the finances of the society. In the death of Mrs. Orrilla Curtis the first week in May the church lost an old and valued member. In the list of her bequests is one of $500 for the church.

NORWICH.—The King's Daughters are doing a grand work in collecting clothing and money for the people of Whitney's Point, who were recently rendered homeless by fire.

New Jersey

PATERSON.—The spiritual condition is better than for some time, and the social life is hearty and harmonious. The church is free from debt. Sunday morning congregations have increased a third, the evening attendance has increased threefold. The pastor has been giving a course of theological and Biblical sermons Sunday evenings with opportunity at the close for questions and comments from the congregation. A young men's club has recently been organized for social, literary and athletic purposes. One of the basement rooms will be fitted up as a gymnasium.

PLAINFIELD.—Additions have been received at every communion since early last fall. The formal installation service of the Sunday school, at which the church recognized its officers, has given a great impetus to the work. A "Leather Club," organized by the pastor, raised quite a sum for the Armenian fund by carving articles and selling them. The church finances are in unusually good condition, and the beneficence this past year has surpassed all previous amounts.

BOUND BROOK has raised $1 200 for renovating its house, which will be closed for at least two months. The pastor, Rev. J. O. Jones, will go abroad for needed rest. Missionary offerings this past year have exceeded all previous records. Two native preachers are supported in India. The congregations are growing, and the spiritual condition is good.

NEWARK.—First has just secured a parsonage. The attempt is being made to unify and concentrate the many organizations of the church, which now are more active than for some time. The attendance at public worship is increasing.——Bethlehem. Regular house to house visiting by members of the church is working out good results.

ORANGE.—A home department has been organized in the Sunday school. In the prayer meeting also for some time the Bible has been studied systematically, separate books having been considered through a month.

THE SOUTH

Georgia

ATLANTA.—First took an Easter offering of $150 and the Ladies' Aid Society netted nearly $200 from its annual fair. Some needed improvements are contemplated. Four were added to the membership at the April communion and three at the May. A club for Congregational Work has been formed.

MACON has made a successful rally to remove an indebtedness hanging over the church. The pastor, Rev. J. R. McLean, was assisted in a special service by Rev. H. H. Proctor of Atlanta.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

GENEVA dedicated its house of worship May 2. Addresses were given by Dr. J. G. Fraser, Rev. A. D. Barber and others besides the pastor, Rev. R. S. Lindsay, who also preached the sermon. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Rev. A. D. Barber. Congratulatory remarks and choral music were added and excellent features.

Illinois

[For Chicago news see page 686.]

COBDEN.—May 2 nine persons were baptized and 12 were received into fellowship on confession. Evangelist Ben Deering closed a profitable 16 days' series of meetings the last of April.

Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS.—Plymouth. The McCulloch Club in a body visited Hon. G. W. Julian, the son-in-law of Joshua R. Giddings, the famous anti-slavery leader, the evening of his 80th birthday. He is in good health and is often at church.——People's. Rev. O. D. Fisher is absent in the East. He preached last Sunday at Park Street, Boston. Rev. N. A. Hyde, D. D., is supplying the pulpit for a few Sundays.——The old Beecher church, known as Circle Hall, is being demolished to make way for a palatial hotel. It is just 50 years since Mr. Beecher closed his work here in 1847. His famous lectures to young men were given as sermons during that time.

WHITING.—The resignation of Rev. B. F. Sewell creates a vacancy in an important field. He has been active in evangelistic lines during his short pastorate and has labored successfully with the young people. A kindergarten in the basement of the church has been finished. The Junior Bible Class and Junior Endeavorers give encouragement for the future, and the Sunday school is growing. With the aid of a young man from the Moody Institute two missions among the foreign population and others have been carried on.

ALEXANDRIA.—A central corner lot has been purchased for $2,300 and it is proposed to fit up a chapel on the rear of the lot as soon as possible. The young city at present is involved in the great excitement attending the recent discovery of oil.

Michigan

DETROIT.—Mount Hope has organized a Boys' Brigade with 32 members. The church realized $25 through a May sale of the Ladies' Society.——German has added 10 members and is enjoying a fair measure of prosperity.——Boulevard Chapel took preparatory steps toward organization last Tuesday afternoon and evening. It is expected that this young enterprise will start out with over 60 members.

LANSING.—Plymouth. The pastor, Rev. C. F. Swift, is giving a series of sermons on The Nineteenth Psalm. The Ladies' Society is busy raising $2,000 towards the debt on the church.——Pilgrim. The fund for the new building is increasing steadily. The number of givers will be large, though the amounts may be small.

CARSONVILLE.—Last week Sunday was a great day for this church, when it celebrated its 10th anniversary. Rev. B. F. Brundage preached morning and evening. The enthusiasm of this occasion and recent additions of 44 members gave this church a great impulse forward. The pastor is Rev. J. F. Hutchinson.

MUSKEGON.—The Sunday school raised $28 Easter Sunday and the church added $13, all of which is to be spent for missionary work. The meeting house will be closed in August for needed renovation.

PORT HURON.—First has published a new manual. The advance sheets have been used by the pastor in conducting two classes of boys and girls with good results.

Wisconsin

SHEBOYGAN.—Secretary Carter spent April 25 with this church and received a collection for home missions. Letters had been sent by the pastor to each family in the parish, calling for a generous offering. A flourishing Young Men's League and a Boys' Brigade are great accessions. The Sunday school is unusually large.

BRANDON, under Rev. Robert Paton's urgent appeal, has generously responded for the sufferers of India. The Springvale church under the same pastoral leadership has voted to take a collection every

The Royal—White and Pure as the Driven Snow.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

inday for the same object, while the famine lasts. ev. Joel Martin begins a series of revival meet- gs here this month.

IRVINGTON.—The council for organizing a church as held May 4 in the gospel tent. Rev. H. W. Car- r preached the sermon and Rev. Alberoni Kidder fered the prayer of recognition. Thirty members, l but three on confession, were received.

THE WEST

Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS.—Pilgrim. Rev. C. B. Moody has st begun his sixth year of service here. During s pastorate he has received 300 members, about vo thirds on confession. The Sunday school is eadily growing and is among the first in the ate. The church is in the midst of a large mid- e class population and is doing excellent work. —Plymouth. The women's society entertained e Minneapolis Ladies' Missionary Union. The pers and addresses given included three by re- rned missionaries A collation was served in the urch parlors.——Mayflower. Rev. S. J. Rogers Robbinsdale has begun work here with prospect increasing the congregation and strengthening e finances. His own pulpit is supplied in the ening by a layman, thus releasing him for other rvice.——Oak Park. The acceptance of a call to e pastorate by Rev. F. L. Moore greatly cheers e people. All indebtedness has been cleared ex- pt that to the C. C. B. S.——Mizpah has been pas rless on account of the closing of some of the anufactories, but is supplied every Sunday after- on by Rev. William Hardcastle of Union Church.

ST. PAUL.—Plymouth. Rev. W. B. Millard closed s work here May 2. The church will not call a stor during the summer, but expects to do so in e autumn.——Atlantic. Extensive repairs are anned upon the church building. Financial ringency has affected many of its members, but ey are giving liberally and the outlook is hopeful. e C. H. M. S. is unable to assist, but aid in re- iring the building is expected from the C. C. B. S.

EDGERTON.—Rev. Elijah Carter has been suffer- g from poor health, and has resigned the pastor- e, though intending to live in town. During his ness the members have assisted in the services. hirteen accessions have recently been received, d the church expects to secure a pastor. Since e coming of Mr. Carter a meeting house and par- nage have been secured.

GRACEVILLE.—The resignation of Rev. H. A. Cot- n was not accepted, and he consents to remain r the present. During his ministry a parsonage s been secured, work opened at two out-stations, one of which a building has been erected, and e home church has been greatly strengthened.

VERNDALE.—Rev. R. W. Harlow has closed his ork on account of infirm health, but a new pastor s been called, and, though the membership has en depleted, more money than heretofore has en raised. This church will be yoked with Bertha der one pastor.

FARIBAULT.—Rev. G. S. Ricker began his fourth ar here May 2. Since his coming accessions have en received at nearly every communion, 104 in l. Hon. A. D. Keyes, a prominent member (Dart- outh, '71), was recently elected mayor.

HALSTED.—A Sunday school has been organized. is hoped to secure a pastor who can preach in th Scandinavian and English at this and several estitute points in the neighborhood.

FERTILE.—The pastorate of Rev. Benjamin Iorns ens encouragingly, with good congregations. The robable division of Polk County will make Fertile county seat.

At Garvin a parsonage has been secured during e year. Rev. R. P. Upton consents to remain for other year here and at Custer.

Kansas

OBERLIN, Rev. E. B. Boggess, pastor, is fitting up s new audience-room attractively. The carpet as procured from Boston at a low price, a friend that city contributing $10 towards its purchase. lready $150 have been raised toward paying for ats, organ and chandelier. The Junior C. E. So- iety is working to pay for a pulpit. This enter- rising frontier church was organized in 1893.

TOPEKA.—Mrs. T. E. Bowman will erect at once a indergarten building as a memorial of her hus- and. It will be located on the lot of the Central hurch and connected with its main audience- om. The material will be stone and the building will be a model of its kind, adapted to accommodate about 100 children.

Rev. A. S. Henderson, pastor at Wellington, conducted extra services for two weeks in April, which resulted in much spiritual benefit.

Nebraska

CORTLAND.—May 2 was a memorable day. The C. E. Society, which had been active during the union revival meetings, found answer to many prayers and reward for their labors. As the church is pastorless, Superintendent Bross spent the day here for the reception of members and the communion service. A baptismal service was held at the water side at 9 A.M., 18 persons being immersed. The S. S. hour, from 10–11, was pervaded by a tender and delightful spirit. After the public service 38 persons united, 35 on confession, eight of them being baptized by sprinkling. The C. E. meeting in the evening was of rare power, 65 persons participating. Mr. D. O Bean of the graduating class, Yale Seminary, is invited to spend four months with this church and Pickrell with a view to settlement.

DAVID CITY.—The many friends of the pastor, Rev. W. A. Schwimley, and his wife, gave them a genuine surprise at the parsonage the evening of April 30. Hearty words were spoken by Judge Reynolds and a social time was enjoyed by all. At the May communion service 10 persons united, eight on confession. Several have promised to join at the next communion. The Y. P. S. C E. has been reorganized and the church is strengthened along all lines.

BLOOMFIELD.—The evangelistic meetings which closed here with the May communion brought a great blessing. Evangelist Henson, who assisted Rev. E. J. Sarkis, commended himself to all. Thirty persons testified publicly their acceptance of Christ; 10 have united and many more will come. The interior of the edifice is to be renovated and an organ and new hymn-books purchased.

BURWELL.—At the ordination service of the pastor, Rev. J. E. McKenney, April 14, the audience-room was tastefully decorated and the people manifested a deep interest in the event. Rev. S. I. Hanford preached the sermon. A new pulpit has been procured, an organ will soon be purchased, and a sidewalk has been laid in front of the building.

LINWOOD.—A series of meetings in which the pastor, Rev. W. A. Davies, was assisted by Rev. W. A. Schwimley and wife did great good. A Y. P. S. C. E. has been organized and the Sunday school has received an accession of strength and interest.

North Dakota

INKSTER.—The friends of Rev. C. Y. Snell will be pained to learn that his 22-year-old son, Fremont, is

Continued on page 695.

That Tired Feeling

Afflicts nearly every one at this season. You know just what it means — no energy, no ambition, without spirit, life, vitality. Some men and women endeavor temporarily to overcome That Tired Feeling by great force of will. But this is unsafe, as it pulls powerfully upon the nervous system, which will not long stand such strain. Too many people "work on their nerves," and the result is seen in unfortunate wrecks marked "nervous prostration," in every direction. That Tired Feeling is a positive proof of thin, weak, impure blood, for if the blood is rich, pure, vitalized and vigorous it imparts life and energy. The necessity of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for that tired feeling is, therefore, apparent to every one, and the good it will do you is equally beyond question. Take it now.

Weak Nervous

"I was afflicted with That Tired Feeling and general debility and had no appetite and my blood did not seem to circulate. I took different kinds of medicine without much benefit and finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and it gave me a good appetite and That Tired Feeling is gone. I heartily recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. I find it is a cure for weakness and unsteady nerves." JOHN C. SEAMANS, Cortland, N Y.

Dull Languid

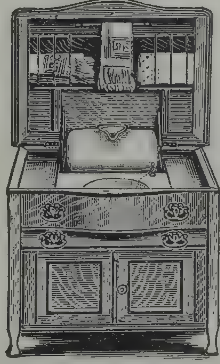
Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the one True Blood Purifier. Insist upon HOOD'S; take no substitute.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Price 25 cents.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

BATH LUXURY.



The only accusation that can be brought against this piece of furniture is that which is expressed by Artemus Ward's famous protest: "This is 2 mutch!"

The designer has ingeniously contrived to inclose a perfect bathroom in a single piece of furniture. For city residences this washstand is already in great demand, while its low price will carry it into scores of country cottages this summer.

The top has racks for a dozen towels, with a separate rack for towels in use. Water is carried in a large urn, which is lowered into the base when the cover is shut. It is hung so that it never need be lifted by hand, and it pours very easily.

The marble basin and slab are of the latest pattern, with waste passing into a large jar in the base, easily accessible from the front. There are two side shelves for toilet articles.

Our new Catalogue of Summer Furniture mailed on receipt of two 2 cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY. 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The movement of general merchandise continues to be somewhat less than it should be at this season of the year. The month of May has so far been unusually cold and this circumstance has, of course, retarded business. With more seasonable weather it is probable that the movement of merchandise would show considerable increase.

In the money market rates continue low. As yet the export movement of gold has not resulted in strengthening monetary rates. Factory paper will sell at three per cent. and the best commercial names at four and five per cent. Commercial paper is not making to any extent and the supply is light, although there is a ready demand for this paper if it is good.

At many centers a better demand for staples is noted and also a revival of activity among central Western merchants. Prices of Bessemer pig iron and steel billets have further declined this week and the production of pig iron is ahead of consumption. For this reason it is thought that a number of furnaces will be blown out to cut down production.

As regards the retail demand in this section, it has been hurt by the cold temperature. For instance, one concern has had a hot weather hat ready for some time, but has held it back on account of the unfavorable temperature.

In the stock market there is no increase in activity, although there has been some in strength. It looks to us as though security values were headed up and would gradually attain momentum and higher prices. As prices advance the outside public will be attracted and this will furnish the buying power so much needed at this time.

EDUCATION

—— Edinburgh University, Scotland, has given to Rev. C. F. Gates, D. D., president of Euphrates College, the degree of Doctor of Laws. Last year the degree of Doctor of Divinity was given him by Knox College, Illinois.

—— The International Institute for Girls in Spain, founded by the Woman's Board of Missions, has now a Board of Trustees in America, whose fifth annual meeting was held in Boston, May 5. Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, the resident director in San Sebastian, spoke for an hour with remarkable vigor and enthusiasm upon the work accomplished by the institute and its value as an evangelical and educational agency in Spain. A good beginning has been made toward securing funds for much needed buildings in San Sebastian to meet adequately the requirements of the institution and a vigorous effort is to be made to complete the required amount. Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer is president of the board of trustees and Mr. Edwin H. Baker of Greenwich, Ct., is treasurer.

A true Christianity must include the convergence of all high aims by whatever names they may call themselves —Prof. F. J. A. Hart

Have You Boys to Clothe?

You are invited to visit our Young People's Department and inspect our Spring and Summer Garments for 1897.

Boys' Reefers, School and Dress Suits, Blouses, Sweaters, Shirts, Underwear, Hosiery, etc.

Spring Overcoats and Ready-to-wear Suits for Young Men—Correct styles, fair prices.

MACULLAR, PARKER COMPANY,
400 Washington St.

THE PRUDENTIAL

Issues Life Insurance Policies for CHILDREN, WOMEN, and MEN

Ages, 1 to 70—$15 to $50,000

Under

PROFIT-SHARING POLICIES

Premiums payable Weekly, Quarterly, Half-Yearly, Yearly.

...HAS...
Life Insurance in force
$320,453,483
under nearly 2,500,000 policies

...HAS...
Assets,
$19,541,827
Income,
$14,158,445
Surplus,
$4,034,116
Claims Paid, over
$26,000,000

FIVE YEARS' STEADY SWEEP ONWARD.

	Dec. 31—1891.	Dec. 31—1896.	Increase in 5 Years
Assets	$6,889,674	$19,541,827	$12,652,153
Surplus	1,449,057	4,034,116	2,585,059
Income	6,703,631	14,158,445	7,454,813
Insurance in force . . .	157,560,342	320,453,483	162,893,141
Interest Earnings	290,348	825,801	535,452

$1,260 of Assets for Every $1,000 of Liabilities.

THE PRUDENTIAL INSURANCE COMPANY OF AMERICA
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President. Home Office: Newark, N. J.

8% NET FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES on Improved Red River Valley Farms. Loans to actual settlers only. 15 years' experience in business. Send for formal applications, list of references and map showing location of lands. Over $100,000 invested. None but SAFE, PROMPT PAYING loans on my books.

WILLIAM T. SOUDER, Financial Agent,
303 Century Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

WESTERN MORTGAGES
DEFAULTED AND OTHERWISE,
Bought for Cash
CHAS. E. GIBSON, 45 Milk St., Boston.

8% Do you want your money to earn it safely? If so write for highest bank testimonials. Rob't E. Strahorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston.

CHURCH REMODELING.
THOMAS W. SILLOWAY, Church Architect,
10 Park Square, Boston.

Mr. Silloway's long practice in building or remodeling over 400 church edifices enables him to save and utilize all the valuable parts, and for a comparatively small outlay produce a building preferable to a new one of much greater cost. He proposes to continue the work of remodeling as a specialty, and tenders his services to committees who would practice economy, and where the means are limited.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Guaranty Trust Co. of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS subject to check or on certificate.

STERLING DRAFTS ON ALL PARTS OF GREAT BRITAIN BOUGHT AND SOLD. COLLECTIONS MADE.
COMMERCIAL LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
August Belmont,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Alexander E. Orr,
Walter G. Oakman,
Henry H. Rogers,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

Continued from page 693.

o better, and all hope of his recovery has been iven up.

MICHIGAN CITY.—Rev. U. G. Rich has decided to emain on this large field for the summer at least, reaching four times each Sunday.

South Dakota

YANKTON.—The heart of Rev. E. M. Williams was laddened by 27 accessions at Easter, 25 on confession. These are the first fruits of recent meetings nder Evangelist Rowland.

Colorado

GREELEY.—Park Prof. E. S. Parsons, of Coloado College, a former pastor, spent April 25 with is old friends here, preaching both morning and vening. The past week the Women's Society gave cantata, which was so popular that it was repeated, and added nearly $100 to the treasury. The bsence of the pastor and wife at the spring association was taken advantage of by the women to dd to the comfort and beauty of the parsonage interior by paper and calcimine.

HIGHLAND LAKE held a joyful service April 25, t being the double dedication of church and paronage. Toward the cost of the former, $2,600, New ngland friends contributed $500 and the C. C. B. S. 500 more, while $50 came from individuals in reeley and Longmont. Other gifts were: a lot, a arpet, lights, labor and part of the cost of a bell. Miss Mary G. Bumstead, the pastor, was the inspiation of the movement. The parsonage was the ift of Mrs. Taintor.

PACIFIC COAST

Washington

SNOHOMISH.—The Granite Falls Branch has reoranized as the Granite Falls Church and will build house of worship at an early date. Rev. W. E. oung, the pastor, will also preach at Silverton. ifty miles of territory on the Monte Christo raiload is included in this charge. A field equal in exent and similar in character is given to Rev. Richrd Bushell, who has a parish of over 50 miles on he S. & I. railroad, with the exception of a single oint, which is occupied by other denominations. Within its limits a church of six members has been rganized at McMurray.

GREEN LAKE.—The people who were so revived ast winter by special meetings in which Mrs. L. T. ailey assisted have organized an independent ongregational Church.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK

Episcopal clergy and laymen in large numbers elebrated at Trinity Church, Boston, last Friday, he centennial of the consecration of Bishop Bass, he first Episcopal bishop of the diocese of Massahusetts. Bishop Lawrence preached an interestng historical sermon, and after the public services he Episcopalian Club gave a breakfast at which several addresses were made. Other celebrations were held at St. Paul's Church, in South Boston and in other places.

The new edifice of the First Parish Church of Dorchester on Meeting House Hill was dedicated last Thursday. Rev. Dr. Arthur Little of the Second Church offered the opening prayer, a pleasant recognition of friendly relations between two bodies which were sharply arrayed against each other at and after the time of the Unitarian departure. The successive meeting houses of this ancient church have been conspicuous landmarks of Dorchester for more than two and a half centuries.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 9-15. All men or women who are, or have been, foreign missionaries in any field of any evangelical denomination constitute the only membership of the union, and will be entertained without cost during the week. Missionary candidates under actual appointment will, as far as practicable, be hospitably entertained. Board at private houses at low rates can be secured by other persons attending. Further information can be obtained by addressing Mrs. C. C. Thayer, Clifton Springs, N. Y.

FOR APARTMENT HOUSES.—The ingenuity of scores of designers is constantly taxed by the problem of combination furniture. The multiplication of apartment houses, with their small rooms, makes a demand for abridged and combined furnishing. The headquarters for this class of furniture is at the Paine warerooms on Canal Street, and one of their latest and best examples of this class of work may be seen in another column. A whole bathroom outfit has been introduced into an ordinary-sized washstand. It is ingenious and thoroughly practical.

A MAN who is tired all the time, owing to impoverished blood, should take Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify and enrich his blood and give him vitality and vigor. This condition of weakness and lack of energy is a natural consequence of the coming of warmer weather, which finds the system debilitated and the blood impure. A good spring medicine is a necessity with almost every one. Hood's Sarsaparilla is what the millions take in the spring. Its great power to purify and enrich the blood and build up health is one of the facts of common experience.

$500.00 in CASH
A 25c. PATTERN FREE!
Of this New Princess Tea Gown

HOW many words do you think you can make from the letters in the word "INCIDENTALS"? Use each letter as desired, but not more times than it appears in "Incidentals." Verbs, pronouns, adjectives, nouns, adverbs, plurals allowed. Words spelled alike but having different meanings count as one word. Use any standard dictionary. All legitimate English words count. Proper nouns, prefixes, suffixes, absolete and foreign words do not count. Work it out as follows: Cent, net, tale, date, late, ant, dance, ale, din, nail, etc.

Our Offer.—We will pay $100 for the largest list, $50 for the second largest, $25 for the third, $10 each for the next five, $5 each for the next ten, and $1 each for the next twenty five. To the next two hundred we will give $1 each in the form of a year's subscription to MODES. That is to say, we will divide among two hundred and forty-three contestants the aggregate sum of $500, according to merit. Don't you think you could be one of the two hundred and forty-three? TRY It.

Our Purpose.—The above rewards for mental effort are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to MODES, by May Manton, the most popular, up-to-date Fashion Magazine in the world. Its 36 pages, replete with beautiful illustrations of the latest styles in ladies', misses' and children's garments, make it a real necessity in every household; The Designs and Fashion Hints, being by May Manton, render it invaluable as an absolutely reliable Fashion Guide.

Our Conditions.—You must send with your list of words in one fully prepaid package, 25 cents (stamps or silver) for a Three Months' Trial Subscription to MODES.

Our Extra Inducement.—Every person sending 25 cents and a list of 15 words or more will, in addition to a three months' subscription, receive by return mail a pattern of this stylish Tea Gown, No. 7057 (illustrated above), in any size from 32 to 42 inches.

Our Aim.—The present monthly circulation of MODES exceeds 200 000. We aim to make it 250,000.

This contest will close June 15th next, so the names of successful spellers may be published in August issue of MODES, mailed July 15th, but SEND IN YOUR LIST AT ONCE. For our responsibility we refer you to any Mercantile Agency. Address:

MODES FASHION MAGAZINE
Dept. 798. 130 White Street, New York.

GAIL BORDEN EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK.
TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE FOR THE "EAGLE BRAND"
THOUSANDS OF MOTHERS TESTIFY TO ITS SUPERIORITY.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE. NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. N.Y.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.
ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Parties will leave Boston June 3, July 15 and 29, for Grand Tours (under personal escort) through that Land of Marvels,

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK,
THE WONDERLAND OF AMERICA.

Visits will be made to the Mammoth Hot Springs, orris Geyser Basin, Lower Geyser Basin, pper Geyser Basin, Yellowstone Lake, and he Canon of the Yellowstone; also to Chicago, t. Paul and Minneapolis.

Choice of the All-Rail route eastward from Minneapolis, or the route from Duluth to Buffalo via

THE GREAT LAKES.

Independent Railroad and Steamship Tickets o all points.

☞ Send for descriptive circular.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
96 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
THE LAFAYETTE will entertain 100 guests during the Home Missionary Meetings t $1.25 and $1.50 per day. Elegant and convenient locaion on Circular St. Very pleasant modern house, elecric bells, excellent bill of fare. Rates good until June 5. Our 15th season. Send for circular.
GEORGE E. BATES, Prop.

PASSACONAWAY INN,
ORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st,
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

Hotels and Travel

Going To . . . EUROPE?
H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

HUESTIS HOUSE,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Headquarters for Congregational Home Missionary meetings, held May 31st. For rates and rooms address
W. B. HUESTIS, Prop.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
Hotel American-Adelphi.
Fine brick building; spacious halls; light and airy rooms; steam heat and passenger elevator. Best located hotel in Saratoga. Within two minutes' walk of all the LEADING SPRINGS and is the nearest hotel to church where meetings are to be held. A special rate given for the American Home Missionary Meetings. $1.50 and $2.00 per day.
Free coaches to and from the railway stations.
Please make application for accommodations at an early date.
GEO. A. FARNHAM, Prop.,
SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

DR. STRONG'S SANITARIUM,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Offers a special net rate to those attending the Missionary Meetings June 1, 2 and 3, of $2.00 per day. Elegant Turkish and all Baths; Massage, Electricity, etc.; Electric Bells; Suites with Bath; Sun-parlor and Roof Promenade. A first class table. Send for Illustrated Circular, and Special Announcements for 1897. Entertainments, Bicycle Paths, etc.

French Organdies

37½c.

NEW ARRIVALS
DAVID AND JOHN ANDERSON'S
GINGHAMS

In bright Plaids, Checks and Stripes. Patterns that we sold out in January, and now have received again, made to our special order.

Send for Samples.

R. H. STEARNS & CO.
BOSTON.

Fine Millinery
At Lower Prices Than Elsewhere

Ladies' and Misses' Trimmed Hats, equal in style and quality, cannot be had at any other store at our low prices. Special in Ladies' Trimmed Hats.

TURBANS, FRENCH SAILORS and MEDIUM SIZED SHAPES, in black straw, trimmed with fine imported Flowers, Ribbons, Gauzes, etc., at $4.50

Would be $7.00 anywhere else.

Trimmed Millinery—Second Floor.

Flowers. Street Floor.

3,000 bunches Roses, 12 in bunch, in Pink, Shaded Pink, and Yellow, at Only 15c. Bunch.

MAIL ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Fine Country Home in Northfield, Minn.

Carleton College, Academy and School of Music, St. Olaf College and Graded Schools all within easy walking distance. Beautiful location. Six acres in lawn, garden and pasture. Modern house, nearly new, thirteen rooms, hard wood finish, mantels, water, bath on two floors, cement cellar and furnace. Good barn. Central High School, five squares. Five churches within seven squares. Post Office, eight squares. Two R. R. Stations, ten squares. Property cost about $14 000. Owing to removal of owner, will be sold for $7 000 Easy terms, if desired. Write to First National Bank, Northfield, Minn.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES

A certain society promotes its committee work by having every two weeks a meeting of some one committee with the executive committee for prayer and consultation, besides the regular meetings of the executive committee.

At the 10th anniversary of a society in Traverse City, Mich., it was shown that the total number that had been on the roll was 425. Through these members 30 other societies have been started, also two district, seven county and two local unions.

California is preparing to welcome all convention delegates at the borders of the State, while the reception committee will be at Fresno and Sacramento to make assignments. Alameda County is planning a flower festival, to be held at Oakland the day after the convention closes.

The Tennessee Endeavorers were assured of the money needed to erect their building in connection with the Tennessee Exposition, but the authorities in charge of the celebration having decided to allow the sale of liquor on the grounds, the Christian Endeavorers of the State will not hold C. E. day in connection with the exposition, and will return money contributed for the building.

The attendance at Scotland's third convention was 2,000, about one sixth of the total in Scotland. Of the 393 societies 100 have been added during the year. One society reported five of its members as having gone as foreign missionaries, and several of the societies are supporting native workers. One of the speakers was a secretary of the Scotch Congregational Union. Two representatives will be at San Francisco.

The California legislature has passed a resolution of greeting to the convention, and an order has been given for printing 30,000 copies of the resolution in a fully illustrated booklet to be distributed by the convention committee. The society of Plymouth Church, San Francisco, will issue a souvenir booklet for delegates. The chorus at the convention is to be drawn from different parts of the State, and weekly rehearsals are held for the various sections. They propose to render several musical masterpieces. The Endeavorers of Oregon City, Ore., are thinking of hiring a house in San Francisco for the time of the convention and going there in full force.

◆

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND

Amount received during the week ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$57.80
Previously acknowledged	24,547.62
Total	$24,605.42

◆

Revere Lay College is in need of fresh, modern missionary literature. Those who can spare such books or the money to purchase them should communicate with Rev. Silas P. Cook at the college, Crescent Beach, Mass., or Rev. James M. Gray, Boston.

POND'S EXTRACT has won a great reputation. Spurious imitations are dear at any price.

Memorial Day.
Children's Sunday.

The Congregationalist's Services Nos. 14 and 15 are perfectly adapted for the use of churches proposing to hold services on the above days in which it is desired that the congregation should participate. These Services have been used very widely and have been most pronounced successes.

100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.

Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
BOSTON.

MOST WELCOME WEDDING GIFT.

"Mother's Machine"
With Latest Improvements. Lightest Running, Easiest Managed.
Greatly aids domestic bliss.
The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

WHY
WE SELL
Superior
Phætons at much lower prices

than any other firm in the world is explained in our Art Catalogue. Send for it!

The above cut illustrates "The Colombo," one of our popular styles. A low priced Phæton, with beauty, grace and strength. Can be fitted (if desired) with ball-bearing axles and rubber tires.

Columbus PHÆTON CO., Columbus, O.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F 1
Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

ALLISON, Alex. L., recently of Wolverine, Mich., to Rosedale and Pine Grove. Accepts.
BARBOUR, Mary L., to Weston, Vt.
BEAN, Dan'l O, Yale Sem, to Cortland and Pickrell, Neb., for four months, with a view to settlement.
BROWN, Frank J., lately of Aitken, Minn., to Verndale.
BUSH, Allen S, recently Asst. State Supt. of S. S. work in Kansas, to Newton. Accepts and has begun work.
CLARK, Wm. D, Springfield, Ill., to Billings, Mon. Accepts.
DICKINSON, Cornelius E., recently of First Ch., Marietta, O., to Windham. Accepts.
DONOVAN, David, Madison, Minn, to Aitken.
EVANS, David E., to Larchwood, Io., for an indefinite period. Accepts.
FENANGA, Melmon J, to Hammond, Ind., in connection with his studies at Chicago Sem. Accepts, and will move his family there.
FUESSLE, Chas. A., Chicago Sem., to German Ch., S. Milwaukee, Wis. Accepts.
GALLAGHER, Geo. W., Dickinson, N. D., to Brainerd, Minn, and Tacoma, Wn.
HALL, Archibald M, Yale Sem., to Taylor Ch., New Haven, Ct
HILDRETH, Edward, Los Angeles, Cal, to Albany, Vt.
JOHNSON, Peter A, Yale Sem., declines call to Taylor Ch, New Haven, Ct., and accepts invitation of Dwight Place Ch., same city, to remain another year as assistant pastor.
KELSEY, Francis D., professor of botany in Oberlin College, accepts call to Central Ch., Toledo, O., and will begin July 1.
LOVEJOY, Geo E., Stoneham, Mass., to Pittsfield, N. H.
LUARK, Marcellus J., Murphy's, Cal., to the permanent pastorate.
MOORE, Frank L., Chicago Sem., accepts call to Oak Park Ch., Minneapolis.
NEWCOMB, Edward H., Bangor Sem., to Richmond, Me. Accepts.
PERRY, Alfred T., librarian and asst. professor of Bibliology in Hartford Sem., declines call to Second Ch., Winsted, Ct.
RILEY, Chas. C., Irvington, Ind., formerly a Disciple minister, declines call to Portland, Ind.
ROBERTSON, Albert A., Chicago Sem., to supply for a year at Hobart, Ind. Accepts.
ROSS, David C., Nova Scotia, to his former charge at Marlboro, Ct. Accepts.
STUTSON, Henry H., Chicago Sem., accepts call to Second Ch., Winona, Minn.
TAGGART, Chas. E., to the permanent pastorate at Elk Point. S. D., where he has been supplying.
TURNER, B. R., to Independence, Okl.
TURNER, Leonard A., recently of Second Ch., Plymouth, Neb., accepts call to Indianola.
WEST, R. B. (layman), now preaching for Christian Ch., N. Shrewsbury, to Bridgewater, Vt.

Ordinations and Installations

ASHDOWN, Chas. R., o. Emmanuel Ch., Montreal, Can., May 6, as missionary of the American Board to Eastern Turkey. Sermon, Dr. C. H. Daniels; other parts, Prin. W. M. Barbour, D. D., Rev. Messrs. E. C. Evans, D. D., E. M. Hill, Robert Hopkin and J. S. MacAdie.
BERCKMANN, Wm. O, i. New Fairfield, Ct., April 27. Sermon, Rev. Dr. Frank Russell; other parts, Rev. Messrs. C. W. Francis, F. A. Hatch, C. F. Luther, J. S Ives and Pierce.
GRIESHABER, Chas. O., o. Island Pond, Vt., May 6. Sermon, Rev. C. E. Fay; other parts, Rev. Messrs. C. H. Merrill, J. C. Langford, H. M. Perkins.
HAZEN, Austin, o. and i., Thomaston, Ct., May 5. Sermon, Prof. M. W. Jacobus, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Carleton Hazen, A. W. Hazen, D. D., and J. W. Backus, D. D.
McKENNEY, Jas. E., o. Burwell, Neb., April 14. Sermon, Rev. S I. Hanford; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. F. Smith, Josiah Poeton, W. C. Phipps.
SULLENS, Arthur J, o. p. Grand Ave. Ch., Chicago, May 2. Sermon, Prof. W. B. Chamberlain; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. C. Armstrong, W. H. Hopkins, S. I. Curtiss, D. D., H. B. Harrison, T. J. Woodcock, A. E. Beddoes.

Resignations

BRIDGMAN, Fred. B., Spring Valley, Wis., to go to South Africa under the American Board.
CALHOUN, Newell M., Canandaigua, N. Y., as president of Keuka College. His address is unchanged.
CARTER, Elijah, Edgerton, Minn. His address is unchanged.
CLEWORTH, Wm C., Willow Lakes, S. D.
COLBY, John S. Marlboro, N. H., to take effect Oct. 1, after a pastorate of four years.
DeCOW, Chas. J., Osseo, Wis.
GALLAGHER, Geo W., Dickinson, N D.
GRUPE, Chas. W., Saybrook, O., withdraws resignation.
HALBERT, Chas. S., Meckling, S. D.
MINTIER, Jas. H., Udall and Douglass, Kan., to engage in missionary work in Venezuela.
PERKINS, Benj. F., S. Coventry, Ct., to take effect June 30.
ROBINSON, Wm. J., Ashby, Mass.
ROSE, Edwin, Jericho Center, Vt., to take effect in July, after five years' service.
SEWALL, B. Frank, Whiting, Ind.
WEBBER, Edwin E., Centerville, S. D.
WILLIAMS, Wm., Milltown, N. B.
WINSLOW, Jacob, Fremont and Jamestown, Ind.

Dismissions

SHIRLEY, Arthur, Old Lyme, Ct., April 27.
WOMER, Perley P., Somersville, Ct., April 27.

Churches Organized

GRANITE FALLS, Wn., 30 April, 22 members.
GREEN LAKE, Wn.
IRVINGTON, Wis., org. and rec. 4 May, 30 members.
McMURRAY, Wn., 2 May, six members.

Supplies for the Summer

GUILFORD, Vt., Clarence P. Emery of Bangor Seminary.
MECKLING, S. D., David J. Perrin of Chicago Seminary.
NIAGARA, N. D, Neil P. McQuarrie, formerly of Hillsboro.
TUNBRIDGE, Vt., John K. Moore of Yale Seminary.
WEATHERSFIELD, Vt., William C. Prentiss of Hartford Seminary.

Miscellaneous

ADAMS, Joseph M., recently pastor at Rochester, N. H., is studying missionary work in the London slums.
ALVORD, Fred., who has been supplying at Vernon, Ct., for a year, removes to Boston.
EMBREE, Jehu H., of Brookville Kan., while transferring his goods to the new parsonage, April 1, was thrown from a wagon and his right leg was broken just above the ankle. His condition is improving and he hopes to resume preaching this month.
EVANS, Geo. S., and wife of Hudson, S. D., are about to spend three months in England, their old home.
FAY, Walcott, has been engaged as temporary supply by the North Avenue Ch., Cambridge, Mass., and will also take charge of the midweek prayer meeting.
GREENE, Dr. Dan'l C., of Tokio. Japan, with his family, is expected to arrive at Seattle, Wn., May 20, and after spending a few days with his two brothers, Rev. Samuel and Hon. R. S. Greene, will go on to Boston via St. Louis, Mo., and Champaign, Ill., where a son and a daughter reside, the former a professor in Illinois State University.
HALEY, Frank, Milton, N. H., will supply at Union until a regular pastor is found HODGDON, Frank W, Andover, Sem., has closed his work at Newcastle, N. H., where he has supplied for a year.
PERKINS, Geo. G., Blair, Neb., has been granted four months' vacation, which he will spend in the East.

BIOGRAPHICAL

REV. JOHN L. HARRIS

Mr. Harris's death occurred at his home in Everett, April 7, in the sixty sixth year of his age. He was ordained in 1860 and engaged in pastoral service in Essex, Quincy and Neponset, Mass., and Derry and Newmarket, N. H., retiring from active pastoral work at the expiration of his service in the latter field. He was a man of decidedly friendly bearing, and simple and genuine in his faith and practice.

For Seasickness
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. Fourness Brice, of S. S. Teutonic, says: "I have prescribed it in my practice among the passengers traveling to and from Europe, in this steamer, and the result has satisfied me that if taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

MORTGAGES.

Every holder of a Kansas Mortgage is vitally interested in the new assignment law passed by the last Legislature. Trustees, or others in a fiduciary relation, failing to observe it, would be negligent of their trust. Mortgage Companies or their receivers are not apt to advise you of it.

HENRY R. WILSON,
41 WALL ST., N. Y.
The care of Western and Southern Interests a Specialty.

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD" Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.
packages 25 cents.
GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Busy Women should use— WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

JERSEY CREAM
WILLIAMS' JERSEY CREAM TOILET SOAP
WILLIAMS' JERSEYCREAM TOILET SOAP
THE J. B. WILLIAMS Co. GLASTONBURY CONN USA Proprietors of WILLIAMS FAMOUS SHAVING SOAPS

Williams' JERSEY-CREAM TOILET SOAP

Absolutely Pure. Delicately Scented.
THE PERFECTION OF TOILET SOAP.

Just Like Cream in its Soothing, Healing Effect Upon the Skin.

A BEAUTIFUL
TRANSPARENT WINDOW THERMOMETER
Carefully packed with each dozen cakes of the soap
will be given away for a limited time only . . FREE.

Any druggist or dealer in Soaps can supply you, but, if unable to obtain it for any reason, we will deliver to any express office in the United States, all charges paid, a package of this soap (one dozen cakes), with Thermometer, on receipt of $2.00.

SAMPLE CAKE (full size) FIFTEEN CENTS, Post-paid.

Address Department Y,
THE J. B. WILLIAMS COMPANY
Glastonbury Conn.

Manufacturers for over half a century of Williams' Celebrated Shaving Soaps.

Size 12 x 3 inches.

"WHERE DIRT GATHERS, WASTE RULES." GREAT SAVING RESULTS FROM THE USE OF . . . . . SAPOLIO

AN EMINENT PHYSICIAN

Well Nigh In Extremis From Bright's Disease of the Kidneys Restored to Perfect Health by

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Dr. G. A. FOOTE, of Warrenton, N. C., ex-President State Medical Society, formerly Member of the State Board of Medical Examiners and also of the State Board of Health: "I had a violent attack of Grip, followed by Ascites, Cardiac Trouble, etc. Repeated examinations of my urine showed by volume fifty-five per cent. albumen, casts and low specific gravity. My general health rapidly declined and with but little, if any, hope of relief from any remedy; in this condition I visited the Buffalo Lithia Springs of Virginia, where I used the waters freely for eight weeks. Analysis from time to time while there showed a gradual diminution and finally a total disappearance of albumen and casts and the urine in normal condition. In the meantime my general health was restored and I am now, after the lapse of several years, in perfect health. With this experience I have no hesitancy in expressing my preference for this Water in this malady over all other remedies known to me."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally. Pamphlets on application.

PROPRIETOR, BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VA.

PIMPLY FACES

Pimples, blotches, blackheads, red, rough, oily, mothy skin, itching, scaly scalp, dry, thin, and falling hair, and baby blemishes prevented by CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath, and nursery.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Beautify the Skin," free.

BLOOD HUMORS Permanently Cured by [illegible]

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA
Los Angeles, Bethlehem,	8	10
Redlands,	4	4
San Francisco, Bethany,	4	5
CONNECTICUT
Cheshire,	4	4
Glastonbury,	—	5
Haddam,	14	16
Hartford, Asylum Hill,	24	28
Fourth,	1	5
South,	2	3
Windsor Avenue,	1	6
Meriden, First,	4	10
Middletown, North,	—	5
South,	—	5
Naugatuck,	9	13
New Britain, South,	—	12
New Haven, Center,	—	5
Ch. of Redeemer,	6	14
Plymouth,	—	6
United,	—	5
Howard Ave.,	6	8
Newington,	6	8
New London, First,	14	17
Second,	16	23
Plainville,	14	16
Stony Creek,	2	4
Torrington, Third,	36	44
Trumbull,	7	7
Waterbury, Second,	5	7
W. Torrington,	—	20
Wethersfield,	—	3
Whitneyville,	12	13
Willimantic,	1	4
Wilton,	3	5
ILLINOIS
Beardstown,	9	16
Chicago, Douglas Park,	3	5
Waveland Ave.,	36	36
University,	—	14
Cobden,	12	12
Dallas City,	19	19
Galesburg, Knox St.,	—	9
Jefferson,	5	5
La Salle,	7	8
Mendon,	18	19
Ottawa,	18	21
Roberts,	4	4
Western Springs,	9	10
IOWA
Chapin,	8	8
Clear Lake,	—	7
Dunlap,	60	60
Elma,	16	16
Manson,	3	5
Nevinville,	2	4
Reinbeck,	3	6
Strawberry Point,	—	9
Union,	1	5
KANSAS
Kirwin,	4	5
Louisville,	8	12
Seneca,	7	15
Topeka, Central,	5	18
Wakefield,	—	4
MAINE
Bangor, Hammond St,	21	21
Deer Isle,	3	4
Foxcroft and Dover,	20	25
Kennebunk,	3	4
Skowhegan,	—	5
Thomaston,	10	10
MASSACHUSETTS
Boston, Dorchester, Central,	4	7
Brockton, Porter,	2	8
Granby,	8	8
Littleton,	—	16
Marlboro,	—	24
Needham,	—	3
Pittsfield, Pilgrim Memorial,	—	11
Rowley,	4	4
Williamsburg,	—	5
MICHIGAN
Bangor,	4	4
Carsonville,	42	42
Clarksville,	10	10
Clio,	—	6
Detroit, Mt. Hope,	7	8
German,	—	10
Douglas,	6	8
Hart,	—	7
Orion,	5	5
Potterville,	15	15
Rochester,	9	10
Saginaw,	8	10
Stanton,	—	3
Traverse City,	—	4
MINNESOTA
Faribault,	5	5
Garvin,	5	5
Glenwood,	—	8
Mapleton,	—	16
Owatonna,	6	9
MISSOURI
Kansas City, First,	2	6
St. Louis, First,	9	13
Central,	—	3
NEBRASKA
Arlington,	—	9
Cortland,	35	38
David City,	8	10
Nebraska City,	—	4
Omaha, St. Mary's Ave.,	8	13
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Barrington,	—	3
Brentwood, East,	3	5
Exeter.	3	3
Second,	3	4
Hopkinton,	—	7
Keene, First,	14	16
Second,	9	15
Manchester, First,	—	4
S. Main St.,	12	13
Marlboro,	—	24
Nashua, Pilgrim,	5	11
Tilton,	3	4
Newington,	—	4
NEW YORK
New York, Manhattan,	—	24
Syracuse, Good Will,	27	38
Watertown,	3	5
NORTH DAKOTA
Harwood,	—	7
New Rockford,	—	8
Valley City,	5	5
OHIO
Chardon,	—	6
Cincinnati,	9	14
Hudson,	5	6
Toledo, Second,	—	8
OKLAHOMA
Newkirk	16	16
Tryon,	6	10
RHODE ISLAND
Newport, United,	10	12
Pawtucket,	16	18
River Point,	—	10
SOUTH DAKOTA
Armour,	8	8
Canton,	6	6
Huron,	6	6
Rapid City,	4	10
Yankton,	25	27
VERMONT
Barre,	7	17
Brattleboro, West,	3	4
Bridport,	2	3
Burke, East,	4	4
Burlington, College St.,	—	8
Newfane,	—	3
Rutland,	5	7
Center,	4	4
WASHINGTON
Granite Falls,	—	22
Kalama,	15	15
McMurray,	4	6
Seattle, First,	2	6
WISCONSIN
Eau Claire, First,	6	7
Fulton,	2	3
Irvington,	27	30
Janesville,	10	23
Pittsfield,	5	6
OTHER CHURCHES
Atlanta, Ga.,	—	7
Greeley, Col., Park,	—	6
Indianapolis, Ind., Union,	—	8
New Decatur, Ala.,	4	5
Portland, Ore., Hassalo St.,	1	6
Churches with less than three,	46	67

Conf., 1,064; Tot., 1,752.

Total since Jan. 1: Conf., 8,274; Tot., 15,097.

IT'S TALKED ABOUT.—A cured man has a quick memory, and those who have once tried Adamson's Cough Balsam, think of it, talk of it, and get it for themselves and their friends, whenever troubled with coughs, colds, or other throat and lung complaints.

THE International Navigation Company announce in another column a delightful summer cruise in northern seas. For this cruise the stanch and comfortable steamship Ohio will be used, sailing from New York, June 26, for Southampton. From there the cruise includes visits to Iceland, the North Cape, Norway, with its wonderful coast scenery, Sweden and Russia. The success of the cruises of previous years to the North Cape has induced the organizers to make the one for this season more extended, so as to include places seldom visited by tourists. They have issued a very attractive booklet giving the trip in outline.

A POINT TO REMEMBER.—If you wish to purify your blood you should take a medicine which cures blood diseases. The record of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla proves that this is the best medicine for the blood ever produced. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures the most stubborn cases and it is the medicine for you to take if your blood is impure.

HOOD'S PILLS are the best after-dinner pill; assist digestion, cure headache. 25 cents.

The Spring storms strike hard those who are thin in flesh, whose system is weak and nerves irritable. The sharp, cutting pains of neuralgia tell when the blow has taken effect. Why wait for the signal? Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites will feed and strengthen weak nerves. It should be taken as a preventive in every case of weakness and nerve exhaustion. "Early prevention is better than cure." So says the wise man. For sale by all druggists at 50 cents and $1.00.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

FUN MAKING

and health making are included in the making of HIRES Rootbeer. The preparation of this great temperance drink is an event of importance in a million well regulated homes.

HIRES Rootbeer

is full of good health. Invigorating, appetizing, satisfying. Put some up to-day and have it ready to put down whenever you're thirsty.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia. A package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

One-Half Off

the price on Buggies, Carriages and Harness. Highest quality. Fully guaranteed. Freight paid. Illus. Buyers' Guide mailed free. 8th year in business.
MIAMI MFG. CO., 104 West 4th Street, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

BLANCARD'S PILLS AND SYRUP OF Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE, for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.

None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.

E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

BARLEY CRYSTALS

New Diuretic, Renovating Tonic Cereal. Endorsed by physicians in cases of weak and irritable Digestive Organs, and Kidney troubles. Emollient, attractive, palatable. Unsurpassed in the whole range of cereals.

PAMPHLET AND COOKING SAMPLE FREE.

Unrivalled in America or Europe. Ask Dealers, or Write to Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED by announcements in our ADVERTISING COLUMNS, please mention that the advertisement was seen in The Congregationalist.

Marriages

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

WHITE—DAVIS—In Acton, May 6, by Rev. Bernard Copping, John White and Evelina Davis, both of Acton.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

ALLEN—In Moosup, Ct., April 29, of meningitis, Charles Morss Allen, aged 16 mos., son of Dr. Charles N. and Grace Morss Allen.

CLARKE—In Dubuque, Io., May 1, Dr. Rodolphus Clarke, formerly of Conway, Mass., aged 82 yrs.

FLETCHER—In Hagan, Ga., April 11, Mary A., wife of Rev. J. B. Fletcher.

PIERCE—In Suffield, Ct., April 16, Deacon Nathan Pierce, aged 96 yrs., 1 mo. and 15 dys.

POOR—In Andover, May 3, of typhoid fever, Ray, youngest son of J. W. Poor and brother of Rev. W. G. Poor of Keene, N. H., aged 22 yrs.

DEACON WILLIAM V. SESSIONS

Deacon William Vyne Sessions was born in South Wilbraham—now Hampden—Sept. 14, 1801, and died at his home on "Hillside Farm," April 9. He was descended from a patriotic ancestry, his father, Robert Sessions, belonging to that now notable "tea-party" of Boston Harbor, which did its work so effectually in 1773. He was the brother of Deacon Sumner Sessions of saintly memory, who died in 1880.

Converted under the preaching of Rev. Dr. Nettleton, he was the last survivor of all the large company who, seventy years ago, confessed the Lord Jesus Christ in connection with the great revival which at that time blessed the church in South Wilbraham, the late Dr. Ezekiel Russell being another of that number.

The life of Deacon Sessions was quietly spent in tilling the ancestral acres, holding an honored place in the church for nearly three-quarters of a century, and filling the office of deacon with singular fidelity for many years. In a very large degree he possessed the confidence of the community, serving the town and the county in various positions of trust and responsibility. Of him to a remarkable extent might it be said that, until nigh the close of his long and eminently active life, "his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated." His intellectual faculties remained with little diminution till very near the end, and his interest in all public affairs, both political and religious, seemed as intense as ever.

His love for the essential doctrines of the gospel was intelligent and fervent. They were his comfort and stay in his declining days. Till within four years he and his companion had walked together, each helper of the other's joy, both living fourteen years after celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage day, now reunited in the mansions of the blessed.

Two children were spared to reach maturity, Hon. William R. Sessions, secretary of Massachusetts Board of Agriculture, and Mrs. Lydia Sessions, widow of the late Rev. W. W. Woodworth, D. D., of Berlin, Ct.

Deacon Sessions was a subscriber and constant reader of The Congregationalist from its starting. Few men in his sphere have been more useful and honored. Few men have done their work more faithfully and conscientiously. Few men leave behind them when they die a fairer record of a life well spent, both towards God and towards man. M. S. H.

WESLEY IRESON

Was born in Thompson, Ct., and died in Boston, March 25, aged 74 yrs. and 5 mos. In the death of this good man Boston has lost a worthy citizen, the Eliot Church a devoted member, and a large circle of acquaintances a true and trusted friend. Attractive in person, gentle in manners, faithful to every least and largest trust, it is doubtful if he had an enemy in the world or a friend who received anything but good at his hands. In his tongue was the law of kindness, in his heart a love for whatever is beautiful and good. Flowers, children, the passive virtues and that faith which works by love were especially cherished by this gentle soul. His was a religion, not of words, but of deeds, not of exhortation, but of ministry. The son of a clergyman and a professing Christian for more than half a century, he had not missed attending church a single Sabbath for thirty-seven years—a fact made possible by that vigorous health which enabled him to dispense with the services of a physician until the day before his death.

For thirty-eight years he was the efficient secretary of the Eliot Sunday School, working in fullest harmony with its beloved superintendent, Deacon Charles W. Hill, who entered the heavenly rest only four months before him.

Pastors and people, teachers and scholars, extend tenderest sympathy to his bereaved family and join with them in cherishing the memory of this just man which is blessed. B. F. H.

PRIZES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS.—The announcement of winners for the month of March of the Sunlight Soap monthly wrapper competition in what is known as District No. 4, consisting of the New England States, has come to hand. Messrs. Lever Bros., Ltd., have awarded the first prize of $100 to James A. Donoghue, 216 Main St., Springfield, Mass. The five second prizes, each of a $100 Pierce Special Bicycle, have been awarded to Newton Greenwood, 853 S. Water St, New Bedford, Mass.; Andrew Beaumont, 48 Rivet St., New Bedford, Mass.; Harry Phillips, 216 Main St., Springfield, Mass; Chas. E. Lord, Chester, Middlesex Co., Ct.; Miss Gertrude L. Johnson, 278 Crescent St., Waltham, Mass. The ten third prizes, each of a $25 gold watch, have been awarded to Roberts H. Bishop, 182 E. Broad St., Norwich, Ct.; Mrs Helen Grimshaw, 24 Jomvette St., New Bedford, Mass.; Geo. E. Smith, 17 Pitkin Court, Montpelier, Vt.; B. F. Bean, Clinton, Kennebec Co., Me.; Henry Bremner, Clinton, Kennebec Co., Me.; Mrs. E. H. Grose, Stratton, Franklin Co., Me.; Fred. G. Greenwood, 80 Laurel Hill Ave., Johnston, R. I.; Mrs. Wm. H. Claxton, 354 East Main St., Waterbury, Ct.; Mrs. Wm. F. Mulvey, 431 Atwell's Ave., Providence, R. I.; M. V. Ruggles, Care of G. W. Gilmore & Co., Market Sq., Lynn, Mass. See advertisements in this paper from time to time for particulars, or write to Lever Bros., Ltd., Hudson & Harrison Sts., New York.

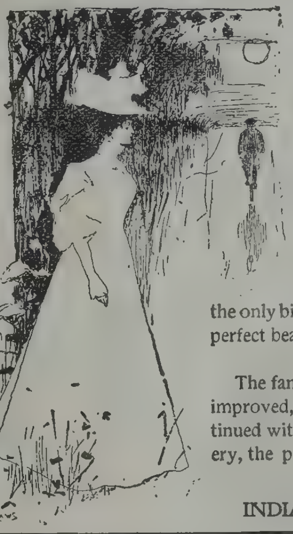
ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR ECKSTEIN	Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC BRADLEY BROOKLYN JEWETT ULSTER UNION	New York.
SOUTHERN SHIPMAN	Chicago.
COLLIER MISSOURI RED SEAL SOUTHERN	St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

YOU will find that painting properly done with Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil is a good investment—more than the cost will be added to the attractiveness and value of your property. Make sure that the brand is right. (See list of brands which are genuine.) Avoid the "just-as-good," "sold-for-less-money" sorts.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

A Pleasant Surprise ✿ ✿



Pleasing sensations are experienced by every rider of

The Waverley Bicycle

The new '97 model, with its matchless workmanship and finish, the result of costly experiments and machinery, is the only bicycle with absolutely true and perfect bearings. Its price to everyone is $100

✿ ✿ ✿

The famous Waverley of last year has been greatly improved, and as its construction is continued without the purchase of new machinery, the price is reduced to $60

Send for a Catalogue.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

A Vacancy In many a household there is an empty chair that ought not to be empty. Hosts of children have been carried off by croup when there was no need for it at all. Croup comes along without any warning. Usually it comes in the night-time, when the drug stores are closed. That is why every mother ought to have at her elbow a bottle of : : : :

Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam

It never fails to cure Croup if taken at the first symptom. Usually it cures after the disease has made considerable progress. But it is wise to keep a bottle on the shelf all the time.

This good remedy also cures Coughs, Colds, Pneumonia, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, Whooping Cough, Influenza and all diseases of the breathing organs. It cures, remember.

Large Bottles, 75c.
Small Bottles, 35c.
Trial Size, 10c.
At all good drug stores.

Made only by F. W. KINSMAN & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Druggists,
6th Av., cor. 39th St. and 4th Av., cor. 25th St., N.Y.

"A Perfect Type of the Highest Order of Excellence in Manufacture."

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast

Cocoa

Absolutely Pure.
Delicious.
Nutritious.

Costs Less Than One Cent a Cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article, made at DORCHESTER, MASS., by

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd.

Established 1780.

All the Old Virtues

Durability, Speed, Good Work, Easy Touch, etc., augmented by Many Notable Improvements, in the NEW MODELS of the

REMINGTON

STANDARD TYPEWRITER.

WYCKOFF, SEAMANS & BENEDICT,
327 Broadway, New York.

THERE IS ONLY

ONE

POND'S EXTRACT

A SAMPLE LETTER.—ONE OF MANY.

"Almost twenty years of medical experience have led me to know that Pond's Extract is of greater clinical value than any commercial Witch Hazel that I have seen."

G. E. POTTER, M.D.

Newark, N. J., March 30, 1897.

Sold only in bottles with buff wrappers and our landscape trade-mark thereon.

POND'S EXTRACT CO., New York & London.

Volume LXXXII Number 20

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 20 May 1897

In connection with PARABLES IN PICTURES, Part VI., in Home Department.

I·have·found·my·sheep

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established. 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100 paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Choice between two courses of study. Classical and English Biblical, in Junior year; one course in Middle and Senior years. Optionals in Hebrew and Cognates, and in Greek. Entrance examination on Wednesday, Sept. 2, 9 A. M. Apply to Prof. C. A. Beckwith, or Prof G. W. Gilmore, Bangor, Me.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD.
HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
HARTFORD, CT.
64th Year Opens Oct. 6, 1897.
Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates
Full information on application to Prof. E. K. Mitchell.

WHEATON SEMINARY

FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated. 28 miles from Boston.

Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 9, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, EASTHAMPTON.
WILLISTON SEMINARY.
Prepares boys for any college or scientific school. The most advanced methods. Library; physical, chemical, biological laboratories; gymnasium, etc. Founded 1841. Opens Sept. 9, 1897. JOSEPH H. SAWYER, M. A , Principal, Easthampton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, Worcester, Mass Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering and Chemistry. 176-page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 30th year. J. K. MARSHALL, Registrar.

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph. D.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 13 and 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and chaperonage for special students.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M , Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address
C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.
Summer Courses.
Third Session, July 5-August 13. Twenty-nine courses in Mathematics, Science, Languages and Pedagogy. A delightful suburban locality in New York City. For announcement write to CHAS. B. BLISS,
University Heights, New York City.

Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.

Habits of industry and accuracy come only by insisting on industry and accuracy.

We have no room for boys whose parents will not help us in carrying out this principle.

We gladly send our catalogue, but much prefer that parents should visit the school.

J. G. MACVICAR, Head Master.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.
THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.
University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all post-graduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Established 12 years. Address
F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

College Songs

And Glees, including the Most Popular Songs, New and Old, used in American Colleges.

EDITED BY
THOMAS G. SHEPARD,
Instructor of Glee Clubs for Twenty-five Years.

TWO EDITIONS:
Mixed Voices. Male Voices.
PRICE OF EITHER EDITION 50 CENTS.

While all books of this class before have included, beside the songs supposed to be found in them, many not at all to be classed as college songs, this contains only those that have been adopted for use in some college or university, either by its students as campus songs, or by its Glee Club as concert pieces, or both.

It includes the present songs of a larger number of different colleges than any book yet offered. Among them are several very popular glees that have never before appeared in print.

Both editions contain a complete and easy piano accompaniment to every song, so that a player not accustomed to reading from vocal parts, may be in a position to accompany the voices without difficulty.

For Sale by Music and Bookdealers, and the Publishers,
THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
Cincinnati. New York. Chicago.

Are You Going Abroad?

You might take, or read before you go,

Legends of the Rhine.

By H. A. GUERBER.

12mo, 350 pages, 40 illustrations, $1.50 net.

"The interest of a Rhine pilgrimage is more than doubled by a knowledge of the Legends connected with the principal towns, churches and castles along its banks."

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

HIS LATEST AND BEST.

The Social Law . . . of Service.

By Prof. Richard T. Ely,
University of Wisconsin.

Commended unreservedly by critical press reviewers and indorsed by Drs. Lyman Abbott, H. Clay Trumbull, and other leading thinkers on social problems as a masterly contribution to the literature of Sociology.

12mo. Cloth. 90 cents.

EATON & MAINS, Publishers,
150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Our Children's Day Service

FOR 1897.

"THE MISSION OF THE FLOWERS."

By HUBERT P. MAIN and FANNY J. CROSBY.

16 pages. 5 cents each or $4.50 per 100, by mail, post-paid; $4 per 100, by express, not prepaid.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
Chicago House, Lakeside Build'g. 76 E. Ninth St., N. Y.

CHILDREN'S DAY

COMPLETE SERVICE.

VOICES FROM THE SUMMER LAND. By MARION WEST. With music.
SHINING FOR JESUS (Primary and Junior). By Mrs. OTIS ATWOOD.
Either of above 5 cents each, $4 00 per hundred.
CHILDREN'S DAY RECITATIONS, post-paid 15 cents. Many others. Complete catalogue free.

HENRY D. NOYES & CO., Publishers,
13½ Bromfield Street, Boston.

The Hymnal

For use in Congregational Churches

What is said about it.

"Dr. Martin, President of our College, has asked me to give you my critical opinion of the new Hymnal. It is with pleasure that I say it is undoubtedly the best hymnal now on the market. By profession I am an Episcopalian, and you know how dear the hymnal of my own Church is to me. When I tell you that I think that your work is superior to our late hymnal, I know that you will see the praise is sincere."—J. EMORY SHAW, Director of Music, Wilson College for Women, Chambersburg, Pa.

"A very satisfactory book. The authors, composers, editors and typographers have all done their work splendidly."—W. B. CHAMBERLAIN, Professor of Music and Rhetoric, Chicago Theological Seminary.

Issued by the
Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society,
NEW YORK. BOSTON. MINNEAPOLIS. CHICAGO. SAN FRANCISCO.

The Congregationalist's Services.

MEMORIAL DAY, No. 14.
CHILDREN'S DAY, No. 15.
WHITSUNTIDE, No. 28.

The Congregationalist's Services are perfectly adapted for the use of churches proposing to hold services on the above days in which it is desired that the congregation should participate. These Services have stood the test of actual use in multitudes of churches.

100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.

Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND·BOSTON RECORDER

he Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

DITORIAL:

Paragraphs 705
The Sultan Triumphant 706
Going a-Maying 706
The Peril of Intemperate Speech 707
Current History 707
In Brief 709

TAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

London 710

ONTRIBUTIONS:

The India Lectureship. Rev. J. H. Barrows, D. D. 711
Sixteen Months in America. Rev. A. Holden Byles 712

HE HOME:

The End of the Game—a poem. Isaac Ogden Rankin 715
Paragraphs 715
Parables in Pictures. VI. Estelle M. Hurll 715
Anniversaries of the Heart. Mrs. M. E. Sangster 715
Amaryllis. Emily Tolman 716
Gladstone's Schooldays. Janet Sanderson 716
Closet and Altar 718
Tangles 718
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 719
Corner Scrap-Book 719
UNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for May 30 720
P. S. C. E.—Topic for May 30-June 5 729
Notes 731
ITERATURE 721

EWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

The Indiana Association 724
The Kansas State Meeting 725
Accessions to the Churches 733
Weekly Register 734

ISCELLANEOUS:

A Tribute to Dr. Quint 713
In and Around Chicago 714
In and Around Boston 723
Notices 724
The Business Outlook 731
The People and Civil Service Reform—a selection 731
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 732
Deaths 732

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
ER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
WO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

n Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

ECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

ISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

DVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

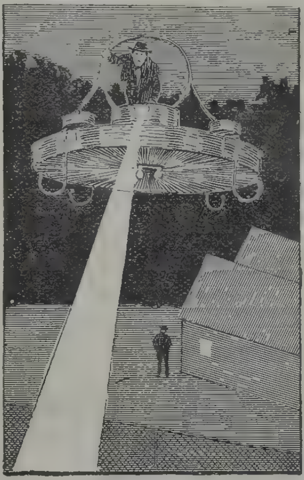
W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

ntered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS
A NEW NOVEL
By FRANK R. STOCKTON
A humorous romance of twentieth-century inventions

A salient feature of this story is a submarine expedition to the North Pole.

The illustrations, by Peter Newell, are in rare sympathy with the author.



A BURGLAR AT SARDIS

HARPER'S FOR JUNE

BEST INVESTMENT ON EARTH!!

They earn more money, in proportion to cost, than any other product of human ingenuity.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

INDIVIDUAL
COMMUNION SERVICE.

The most approved form, convenient, attractive, inexpensive, and commended by all using it for sanitary safety. We shall be glad to show samples at our office or send on approval. Correspondence solicited.

E. B. FLOYD & CO.,
419 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON,
Selling Agents.

Dr. Dunning's
Congregationalists
in America.

With Introductions by R. S. STORRS, D. D., and Gen. O. O. HOWARD, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. ROY, Dr. A. H. QUINT, Dr. F. E. CLARK, and Rev. H. A. BRIDGMAN 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in CHICAGO or NEW YORK, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address
THE CONGREGATIONALIST
1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

Hyomei.

A Safe and Profitable Investment in $100 Shares.

To the Public:

In order to further extend the interests of the R. T. Booth Company, both by the addition of cash capital (for the extension of the business; there are no debts to be paid) and by financially interesting in the business a number of small investors throughout the country, the Directors have deemed it expedient to place a limited amount of its Treasury Stock on the market.

The Company is organized under the Laws of the State of New York with a capital of $500,000 divided in shares of $100 each, full paid and non-assessable. The organization was effected in 1895 for the purpose of the manufacture and sale of Booth's Hyomei, the Australian Dry Air treatment (by Inhalation) of Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Rose Colds, and all similar diseases of the respiratory organs.

Hyomei is entirely a vegetable compound. An infant can inhale it with benefit.

Mrs. Thos. E. Cox, of Cullowhee, Jackson Co., N. C., writes under date of April 9th, 1897:

"I am using Hyomei for my infant 10 months old and my little boy, and find it has done them great good. I do not want to be without it."

The sale of Hyomei, it is conceded, has multiplied in greater proportion within a given time than the sales of any other proprietary article ever placed on the market. That Hyomei is an article of genuine merit, is known to hundreds of readers of this paper, and to hundreds of thousands throughout the country who have derived lasting benefit from its use. That the proprietors have the utmost confidence in the efficacy of Hyomei is proven conclusively by the fact that each purchaser of Booth's Hyomei Pocket Inhaler Outfit is protected by the Guarantee herewith shown.

Shirley, Mass., Feb. 20, 1897.

Gentlemen:

I presume you are receiving letters of praise for the best remedy on earth, Hyomei, every day, but I wish to say to you that I have been troubled with Catarrh in very bad form for many years, and during the past year have been attended by local physicians, also have bought all kinds of remedies, yet none of them have afforded me any relief. When in Springfield, Mass., last week, I purchased one of your Hyomei Pocket Inhalers. I have used it faithfully one week, and now I would scarcely know that I ever had such an affliction as Catarrh. $100 would not buy the little Inhaler if I could not get another, and I shall at every opportunity recommend it to all afflicted with catarrhal trouble in any form.

Sincerely yours, A. B. Sparrow

[Mr. Sparrow is of the firm A. B. Sparrow & Co., publisher of Directories in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts.]

Scientifically, the mode of treatment receives the highest endorsement as the rational method of attacking the diseases for which it is intended.

Guarantee: I will refund the money to all persons purchasing Booth's Pocket Inhaler Outfit anywhere in the United States, during 1897, who will say that Hyomei has done them no good, on condition that they apply direct to the head office, 23 East 20th St., New York City. (Signed) R. T. Booth

The rapid, steady growth of the business from its foundation — the great success it has already achieved as a commercial enterprise — bespeaks for the future, satisfactory earnings and large dividends for its stockholders.

The management of the company is in the hands of five directors, elected annually by the stockholders. Mr. E. G. Wyckoff, of Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict, proprietors of the Remington Standard Typewriter, is President.

3048 Cases.

April 17, 1897.

Since October 22, 1896, we have bought 3048 packages of Hyomei for the cure of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis, etc., and while we agree to refund the money to any dissatisfied customer, we have as yet not been asked to return one dollar.

The Bolton Drug Co., Brooklyn.

Of the stock offered at par there are 1000 shares at $100 per share, which will leave unsold in the Treasury of the Company 1000 shares, to be kept for the benefit of the stockholders. 1000 shares only are offered at par. $25 per share is payable with the subscription, the balance to be paid on the allotment and issue of certificates. The right is reserved to reject applications, and to allot smaller amounts than those applied for. Subscriptions by mail will receive prompt acknowledgement and careful attention.

3,500

regular practicing physicians in the United States endorse and prescribe

HYOMEI.

The subscription books will be opened on the morning of June 1st, 1897, and closed at noon on June 5th, 1897, at the office of

R. T. Booth Co., 23 East 20th St., New York, to whom all applications should be addressed, and from whom further information may be obtained by intending subscribers, on application.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 20 May 1897 Number 20

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 703.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 14, Memorial Day.
No. 15, Children's Sunday.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

AFTER Christmas and Easter no Sunday in the year has been by common consent so generally set apart or special services as the second Sunday in June for Children's Day. It might appropriately be called Family Sunday, since the Christian idea of the household and its reation to the church is then emphasized as at no other time. As an object lesson holdng up the duty of the church to the children and to the home, the observance of his day is of great value. It is not less important that in connection with it the obligation of the churches to give the gospel to neglected children should find expression. Without this the meaning of the day to the children themselves would be much obscured. In every Congregational church we trust that a generous gift will be made, June 13, to our Sunday School and Publishng Society, and that the use to be made of he gift will be clearly explained. The work of giving the gospel to the children of our own country is not second in importance to any other.

Dr. Barrows's account of his experiences and observations during his recent memorable lecturing tour through the great cities of India, which we print this week, will bring the problems of missionary work and the difficulties of native thought in considering the claims of Christianity very close to our readers. There is evidently no lack of hearing or of interested consideration for the man who goes to speak to the educated English speaking Hindus with a competent mental endowment and the assured but loving spirit of his Master. Christ has already a great place in the thought of India. It is important that he should have an acknowledged and authoritative place, not merely in the thought but in the life of the people. It is interesting to recall in this connection an earlier work in the same line, accomplished by the late President Seelye of Amherst College in the course of a journey round the world a quarter of a century ago. Passing through Bombay he was invited and urged to remain, and his addresses there and elsewhere were widely influential and were published in book form both in Bombay and Boston. Hindu thought under the influence of Christian mission work and native unrest, guided by the divine Spirit, has evidently ripened fast toward a harvest since that time.

If any one can make a louder cry over a smaller matter than some religious newspapers are making over certain arrangements for supplying pulpits during the Christian Endeavor meeting next July in San Francisco we should be pleased to hear it. The program committee of that society in Boston selects the preachers for those churches which wish to hear ministers attending the convention. A local committee in San Francisco, of which Rev. William Rader is chairman, arranges the distribution of the preachers thus selected. But Mr. Rader, pastor of the Third Congregational Church in that city, has been preaching to his own people some sermons on the Bible in which he has proclaimed his belief in some of the conclusions of the higher critics. The Occident, a Presbyterian paper, raises the cry of alarm that Mr. Rader's agency in arranging for preachers in Presbyterian pulpits may bring in a flood of heresy which will sweep the Endeavorers from their foundations. It warns Presbyterians that unless he be compelled to resign his position disastrous consequences loom up. Other newspapers, taking up the note of warning, call on the General Assembly to protect the lambs of the Presbyterian fold from this Congregational wolf in sheep's clothing. The Outlook, in a leading editorial, calls on the Congregational ministers and churches of California to make this issue their own and summons the entire denomination, whether or not they agree with Mr. Rader, to resent this attack on its liberties. Thus Congregational freedom, in its last onward march far from Plymouth Rock, is to face Presbyterian orthodoxy in a deadly struggle at the Golden Gate. If Mr. Rader succeeds in assigning to a Presbyterian pulpit some minister selected by the Boston committee orthodoxy will be throttled. If he is prevented liberty will die. We can only watch this momentous conflict from across the continent and tremblingly hope the right will win.

During these weeks our theological seminaries are sending out a company of educated, consecrated young men ready for the ministry. Most of them have spent ten years in preparation for their calling. They represent the choicest treasures of the churches, and those without pastors ought to be eager to secure the services of these men. If our churches are wise they will show honor to an educated ministry and will encourage young men who enter that profession to equip themselves worthily for it. There are indications that the churches are not looking to the seminaries as much as formerly for ministers, and are not as willing to give a hearing to those ready to begin their first pastorate. So far as this is true it is a grave mistake and one of the causes for decline in spiritual life. When our churches become indifferent to the thorough equipment of their leaders, they will lose prestige and power. Give these young men the opportunity for which they have made themselves ready.

The 109th General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church, which meets at Winona, Ind., May 20, promises to be a love feast—unless there is a preliminary quarrel over the election of a moderator. The number of candidates seems to exceed that of any previous year. For the central West ex-President Harrison has been nominated. Dr. Minton is the candidate of the newspapers on the Pacific slope, with Dr. Sheldon Jackson of Alaska as a promising competitor. In the East Dr. Sample of New York, ex-Governor Beaver of Pennsylvania and ex-Postmaster General Wanamaker have been mentioned. This nomination by the denominational organs has apparently awakened less ill feeling than usual, although one Pennsylvania presbytery has expressly requested its commissioners not to vote for any man whose name has been proposed by the newspapers. There is some question about the propriety and constitutionality of electing any but a minister to the moderator's chair, and many are reluctant to raise the question or create a precedent which may help to rule the laymen out. Winona, where the assembly meets, is an Indiana watering place and camp ground of the Chautauqua order, and a competitor, therefore, of Saratoga, where the Western commissioners are always delighted to have an assembly meet. The promise of a peaceful session seems to be disturbed neither by danger of acrimonious theological debate nor of heresy trials. The condition of the boards and the payment and avoidance of debt will probably be the most difficult questions to which the assembly must give its attention.

Southern Baptists have been for some time agitated over a case of heresy which seemed to us so absurd that we have made no comment on it hitherto. Prof. W. H. Whitsitt of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., some time ago published the statement that English Baptists did not begin to practice immersion till 1641, which seems to be a well-established fact. He also advised one of his relatives who had married a Methodist minister to join her husband's church. He was charged with these two enormities and the war over his case has waxed fierce in newspapers and conventions. At last the trustees of the seminary passed the following among other sensible resolutions:

> That we cannot undertake to sit in judgment on questions in Baptist history which do not imperil any of those principles concerning which all Baptists are agreed, but concerning which serious, conscientious and scholarly students are not agreed. We can, however, confidently leave to continued research and discussion the satisfactory solution of these questions.

Dr. Whitsitt, being informed of the action of the trustees, sent them a letter in which he said in substance that he thinks it was a mistake for him to have made public the result of his historical research about baptism, but that since he has said it and it is true he can only reaffirm his conviction; and that, as to the lady relative, he believes that she ought to obey the Baptist Church before all things. When these resolutions and statements were communicated to the Southern Baptist Convention, in session last week, the whole assembly rose to its feet, and, while those who could reach Dr. Whitsitt shook hands with and embraced him, the rest shook hands with each other and all sang together,

> Amazing grace, how sweet the sound,
> That saved a wretch like me.

So the heretic, Dr. Whitsitt, was saved to the seminary, and the convention gloried in peace restored.

The shrinkage of estates is hinted at in the large falling off in receipts from legacies of all the missionary societies. But the extent of this shrinkage can only be guessed at. An illustration is given by a writer in the New York Evening Post describing the collapse of the real estate boom in Kansas. The last three legislatures have dissolved the corporate existence of more than 400 town sites and additions which had been platted and put on the market in lots. When a bank failed in 1889, among its assets were a large number of these lots, the average price of which a short time before was $70. They were appraised at $30 each. A short time ago these lots were sold at auction by the receiver of the property, the majority of them bringing fifty cents each—some selling at thirty cents. Many thousands of lots like these were mortgaged to Eastern investors at the value originally placed on them. One hundred names taken at random from the lists of a mortgage company show who these investors were, who have been described as plutocrats and gold bugs. More than a third of them were widows, the sums loaned by them ranging from $500 to $4,800, probably the greater part of their means. Twelve loans had been made from funds held in trust from estates. Nine of the lenders were unmarried women. Many of the others were sea captains, country storekeepers and small traders. From such persons as these many small sums used to be given to benevolent objects, which made a large sum in the aggregate. A vast number of little fortunes loaned on Western mortgages have during the last ten years completely vanished. The story of the loss and the consequent suffering will never be told.

◆

A correspondent of the Church speaks of the inopportune raising of the question of elevating Charles I. of England to a saintship and adds, "This might be a matter of little importance were it not that eight bishops of the church have indorsed it." The setting up of the machinery of canonization in the Protestant Episcopal Church will be rather an interesting process to watch, and perhaps American ingenuity can make some improvements in the process. Taking Charles for a first subject seems to the lay mind, however, too much like obeying the old medical advice, Fiat experimentum in corpore vili—make the experiment on a worthless subject.

THE SULTAN TRIUMPHANT

The ablest ruler in Europe is the sultan of Turkey. However reluctantly we may admit it, we cannot deny it. His career during the last three years has been a marvel of diplomacy and audacity. He has defied Christendom and kept it at bay while he has destroyed internal foes of his government and roused mighty forces to his support. Three years ago the Armenians were among the most thrifty and progressive people in the empire, awaking to ideas of self-government and coalescing into a unity of sentiment strange to Turkey. Public opinion in an Oriental despotism was beginning to find expression. But the sultan has crushed it for a generation at least. More than 100,000 Armenians have been massacred, as many more have starved to death, villages, cities and whole districts have been devastated, and the inhabitants who remain have been stripped of everything and left in terror of their lives. Incipient signs of rebellion among the younger Turks have been quelled, and the leaders of possible movements toward independence have been purchased or killed. The Greeks, who were numerous and enterprising, have been to a considerable extent impoverished or driven out of the country.

The sultan has aroused slumbering fanaticism throughout the empire, has rewarded it with the spoils and blood of Christians and has rallied it to his support. He has inspired millions of his subjects with new faith in his power. His armies, reorganized, are flushed with victory. Conspirators among his followers have been defeated, and he is master of the situation. His success is mainly the triumph of his own personality.

How has the sultan achieved this victory, in defiance of the Christian public opinion of the world? He has shrewdly understood and boldly handled the political conditions of Europe. The news of the Sassoun massacres in 1894 were regarded as incredible. When, after several months, the truth in part became known, England, France and Russia joined in an investigation—Germany, Austria and Italy, the Triple Alliance, looking on as neutrals. The ambassadors of the first three nations prepared a system of reforms which they presented to the sultan. He accepted them readily enough. The question with him was simply, Would these governments compel him to enforce them? He soon discovered that Russia would oppose coercion and that France would follow her, while England would not act alone. From that point the way was plain before him. He promised whatever was demanded. He did as he pleased. His answer to the threats of the ambassadors was to order a massacre in September, 1895, which deluged with blood, under their very eyes, the streets of Constantinople. He proved to the subjects of his tyranny that Christendom was powerless to help them.

The "concert of the Powers" which has arisen out of these conditions is simply a tacit understanding of the six nations we have named that they will maintain the integrity of Turkey. Its service is purely negative—a purpose not to permit any part of the empire to be taken from the sultan. The action of the Powers is decided, as Mr. Gladstone said, by the two youthful despots, the czar and the emperor. France must follow Russia's lead, or become isolated and helpless. Austria and Italy depend on Germany. Lord Salisbury has declared that it is the policy of England to assent to what the other five Powers agree upon. Russia wants a free entrance to the great seas for her ships. The other governments dare not permit this. Therefore they maintain the integrity of Turkey, while Russia joins them in maintaining it till she can gain what she wants. Thus any movement to weaken the power of the sultan is vetoed by one or the other of the governments. When public opinion in Greece forced that government to interfere in behalf of Crete, the "concert" hindered and thwarted the little nation till it was evident that Turkey could win the fight. The Powers allied themselves with Turkey.

What now is the outlook? It is more hopeless for righteousness than at any time since the Sassoun massacres became known. On one side is the victorious sultan. Against him is the Christian public opinion of Europe and America. Between them is the concert of the Powers, the sultan's bulwark. Against that, thus far, public opinion has thrown itself in vain. In the diplomatic struggles which are to follow the close of the war between Turkey and Greece the sultan stands to gain much in prestige at home and to lose little in territory or in influence abroad.

Still, in this gloomy and storm-clouded sky, there are portents not wholly baleful. The sultan's victory may force new combinations of the Powers, which will make it impossible for them to continue to resist the dissolution of Turkey. The sultan may die. If he should his government, which depends mainly on him, would fall, though what elements of fanaticism would rush in to possess it cannot be foreseen. Public opinion may yet compel the Powers to act in the interests of humanity. While it does not exist in Russia, and is largely suppressed in Germany, in England and the United States it was never more potent than now and never more united, in spite of the efforts of politicians to divide and ignore it. The sultan fears the power of public opinion more than all the other Powers. Finally, God reigns. The Christian, as he reads again the bloody record of these three terrible years, the darkest in the century, cannot but turn with hope to the words of the world's Redeemer: "Shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily."

◆

GOING A-MAYING

Life is too short not to go a-Maying when chill winds cease and blossoming trees invite. If it were only that we might lay up delightful memories in store for soberer months to come, and for restricted days of winter, one glimpse at least of the world in its awakening beauty, one hour absorbed in the swift current of joy that runs before and makes possible the harvest, ought to be secured at any expense short of the sacrifice of duty. Whether it be when cherry trees are laughing with their fragrant snows in glad release from winter's long restraint, or in the days when the returning oriole explores the blossoming apple trees and lays his first plans for the daring nest that mocks at peril from its hanging bough, or when the trees have fully opened out their leaves and the homes of the birds are sheltered from curious and from hostile eyes, the spirit of the May has a welcome for every comer and lavishes her treasures at his feet.

Even the airs that waft through city streets carry an invitation. Tired eyes welcome unaccustomed green upon the boughs of discouraged city trees. The squares and parks are gay with flowers, set with foreseeing care among the restful lawns. Wise men deflect their homeward walks or take an earlier morning start to share the beauty that is provided at the cost of all for the service of every one. Those who are wiser or more fortunate secure a Maytime holiday, a day in the free woods and fields.

Not in the whole circuit of the year—not even in the splendor of October—does the fleeting hour call so invitingly for the receptive eyes. Without hasting, without resting, May moves on touching the world with beauty. Take her when you will, you shall never lack surprise as well as delight. Always the drama of unfolding life, but always with new actors pushing in which yet, so fine and subtle is her art, can never overcrowd the stage. Every roadside has its offering of tender green on long denuded boughs to charm the eye and stimulate the thought. He who will see sees clearly, for it is the time when all things tend without reluctance toward their appointed end. He who is weary and will only passively accept his share of the enjoyments of the time is made welcome and learns to observe with what apparent ease and grateful absence of loud clanging blows and dissonant machinery unhurrying nature brings about her great results. He who has lived content in the lower chambers of his soul feels the calm rebuke of the tree's aspiration and the putting forth of the leaf which serves its generation gladly for a single summer before it falls on sleep.

In her every mood May is the most restful and delightful of companions. When rain is falling and the pavements shine at night with gleaming pools, and shadows of overhanging boughs are softly beautiful under the lamps, the cool air brings restful thought. When showers are like a drifting mist among the boughs the woods are doubly fascinating to him who dares to venture through dripping paths, where the catbird comes and goes like an elusive spirit, and the columbine in the rock clefts has lost the sultry glow it holds under a burning sun. And when the storm drifts over and the sky is shaded from misty gray in the track of the rain to warm blue where the full sunshine glows, when the soft wind awakes and the air is sweet and birds so busy they can hardly stop to sing, happy indeed is the mortal who can give an hour to the wooing and the winning of the happy thoughts of May.

Now, more than ever in the whole year's course, we feel the glamour of the time and long to arrest the progress of the year. It all goes by so swiftly and so irrecoverably! We can ask for nothing better, and we ask, knowing too well that our petition is in vain, that the moment of perfection may remain until we have grasped more of its meaning and our hearts grown strong to know its final charm.

April lends her younger sister half her violets, but the fruit tree blossoms are the unshared crown of May. Shall we enjoy the fruit as fully if we have missed the blossoms? Are there not savings of which the tax collector and the cook take no account? O ye men, who were children once with chubby hands clasped tight about the flowers of spring, is there no economy in happy memories as well as hard milled dollars or doubtful promises to pay? O ye good housekeepers, ye practical women of affairs, ye careful mothers, slaves of the dusting brush and the dressmaker and the social round, have you imagined that the fragrance and delight of May, distilled through thought and speech and smile, will not prove more nourishing and grateful to your menfolk than any other gift or saving that the time allows? Will not the common memory of that green slope where sunlight fell on yellow cinquefoil and white strawberry flowers, while the innumerable company of anemones nodded at the thicket's edge, that music from the hollow of the singing brook, that shared fragrance of sweet fern and apple bloom, count in the family happiness of months to come? May is too evanescent, life is too brief, not to go a-Maying, unless stern duty stands with warning and forbidding finger at the door.

THE PERIL OF INTEMPERATE SPEECH

Strong language is not always to be condemned. Sometimes there is occasion for it. The man who never feels intensely or speaks otherwise than in measured phrase generally is a poor sort of a fellow. But such strong language is not necessarily intemperate. Intemperate speech is that which is not justified by its cause. It is this lack of correspondence between the utterance and the occasion which we recognize as a fault.

One peril attending it is that of the loss of influence. It reveals some lack of poise, some error of judgment or of accuracy in statement, which inevitably subtracts from confidence in the speaker. His influence thereby is diminished, or, at any rate, is altered for the worse. This means to him also some loss of good reputation. We do not respect him as highly or refer to him as an authority in the same manner as before.

But a graver peril involved is that of losing something of one's own self-respect. Many a sin causes us humiliation but there is hardly another after which we are apt to feel so foolish as this. It is realized too late that to have bartered dignity and influence for a momentary indulgence in passion, which has afforded no lasting gratification and was not truly enjoyable, even for the moment, does not pay. This is true too not only of hasty, hot-tempered words, but also of those exaggerations which are become so customary to many that ordinary terms hardly seem to them to have much meaning. They are at once absurd and mischievous. They injure our friends and ourselves, and they are unworthy of every courteous and well-bred, not to say every Christian, man or woman.

CURRENT HISTORY

The Week's Legislation

The Senate debate upon the amended tariff bill has been postponed, but the Republican party leaders hope to secure its ultimate passage, with some modification dictated by public opinion, the hope of party advantage or the necessity of securing the votes essential to a majority. The passion for tariff tinkering seems to have taken possession of many senators, and it may require time to allow it to run its course. As the election of a senator from Florida leaves the Republicans one short of a working majority this element of individual obstinacy is one which must be reckoned with. The House has honored itself by refusing to join in the revocation of President Cleveland's forestry order, and the fate of the measure will be determined in conference committee, where we hope the friends of the forests will stand firm. The House has also rejected, after a sharp debate, the appropriation for the improvement of Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, thus further loosening our hold upon the islands and weakening the hands of the Hawaiian government in its difficult and delicate negotiations with the Japanese.

Cuban Affairs

The jingo senators have made an attempt to force the hand of the President in his treatment of our relations to Spain and Cuba, with no result thus far except that of learning that he is considering the matter and has unofficially sent an agent to Havana to report upon the condition of affairs. He has recommend, in a special message, a national grant of $50,000, to be expended in the purchase of food for the Americans crowded in the towns of Cuba and the free transportation of those who desire to return home, without departing from the pacific tone which has thus far marked his treatment of the question. That the long war has had the cruelest effect upon the fortunes of the resident Americans there can be no doubt and there must some day be a reckoning, but Mr. McKinley is evidently not to be hurried and has probably intimated to the troublesome senators that his mind is very much preoccupied with tariff matters just now. So far as can be learned, the Spanish army of occupation makes no real advance in pacifying the island.

The Bradford Document

Ex-Ambassador Bayard reached New York on Saturday with the Bradford "log" in his possession. If the spirit of the author could have followed his book he would have noticed some differences between the steamer Paris and the Mayflower, whose voyage is chronicled in three short pages of his diary, and between the Plymouth of 1621 and the New York of 1897, but we should despair of the republic if we did not believe that the essential spirit of the original Pilgrims was still at work in the developing America of today. Its genuine faith in God, sturdy independence of man-made opinions and unconquerable purpose to shape a State according to its highest convictions have never ceased their work. Governor Wolcott and Mr. Bayard are in correspondence in regard to the time of the formal presentation of the manuscript, which will take place in Boston soon. We hope, however, that none of our readers are looking for fresh light upon the history of the Plymouth colony from this manuscript, verbatim copies of which are to be found in several public libraries of America.

A Set-Back for Impartial Civil Service

Governor Black of New York seems to be utterly lacking in the instincts of a gentleman. It was to be expected that he would sign the bill—of which he was the putative author—which, in his own phrase, was intended "to take the starch out of" civil service reform, but he has appended to his signature a memorandum making an utterly uncalled-for and abusive attack upon the citizens who opposed the bill, and especially upon Carl Schurz, which strips him of the last vestige of a reputation for good feeling or courtesy. New York has had men of doubtful reputation in its governor's chair, but never before an utter boor. The bill is a cunningly planned attack upon the competitive system, and an evasion of the spirit, if not the letter, of the State constitution. We call especial attention to an extract from the speech of Mr. Schurz, at the hearing before the governor, printed elsewhere in our columns. It states with clear precision the real point at issue—the "aristocracy of influence" against which is set the democracy of merit. Under the civil service law supported by the reformers the door is freely open to superior fitness; under Governor Black's law admittance and advancement depend upon a "pull" with the politicians. Upon this issue the determination of the people will be unmistakable so soon as they understand it and evident self-interest comes to the aid of clear common sense. Governor Black has mistaken the feeling of the people—a fatal blunder for a politician of his ambition.

Inheritance Taxes

The Illinois Supreme Court has decided that the State law providing for a graduated tax on inheritances above $4,000 is constitutional, reversing by its action the decisions of the lower courts. The emphasis of this enactment is laid upon degrees of consanguinity rather than the mere amount which passes from the testator to his heir, but there is a measure pending in New York, suggested by the controller of the State and needing only the governor's signature to become a law, which taxes legacies increasingly according to their amount, superseding a much simpler law which exempted $2,000, and taxed collateral at a higher rate than direct inheritors. There is an outcry against the bill both on the part of those who expect to feel its effects in their own person and from students of political economy, who believe that it will drive capital from the State. In the meantime the estates of deceased millionaires subject to taxation prove to be unexpectedly small, and New Jersey, whose laws are favorable to corporations and which imposes no inheritance tax, gets many immigrants. The people, by whose will laws are finally shaped in spite of all evasion, have evidently made up their minds that great estates which have largely escaped taxation in the lifetime of the owners shall take their share of the burden when they come under the review of the probate courts.

War upon Trusts

A decision of Judge Gibbons in Illinois declares the American Tobacco Company, known as the "Cigarette Trust," an illegal corporation, and prohibits its agents from carrying on its business within the State. The decision is grounded on the reserved power of self-preservation inherent in Statehood. There appears to have been no attempt on the part of the defendants to show that their business was not in restraint of trade. The case goes to the Supreme Court of the State on appeal. Attorney General Hancock of New York has undertaken a test of the anti-trust law just enacted by the legislature in asking for a referee, before whom the presidents of the coal-carrying roads terminating in New York have been cited to appear. This is old straw, the coal roads having been investigated on the same charge of unlawful combination within a few years, but there has long been a popular distrust of these roads, fostered by some of the newspapers. The presidents profess their entire willingness to testify, but the question is so large and the number of witnesses so great that a decision is not to be expected soon, which may be just what the politicians desire.

The River Floods

The Middle South has made a gallant fight against the unprecedented Mississippi floods and, in spite of great losses, has for the most part held its levees intact. The negro farmers of the river bottoms are relatively the largest losers because their little property was so completely at the mercy of the inrushing waters. There has been a co-operation of citizens, railroads and State and city officials in the work which can result in nothing but good in creating a sense of common interests and duties which is the true strength of a commonwealth. But is it not time that this great problem, of which the forest reservations at one end and the rich river lands at the other are parts, should be considered as a whole and a definite national policy adopted in dealing with its necessities?

Broker Chapman's Plight

When a tariff bill was last before the Senate (the Wilson Bill) there was an investigation of the speculations in sugar stock, alleged to have been carried on by certain senators while the bill was pending. A New York broker, E. R. Chapman, was found guilty of contempt for refusing to give testimony in regard to the transactions in which he had been an agent, and condemned to a month's imprisonment, which, after so long a time, he is at last to undergo. It is a poor vindication of the law, of course, which punishes the intermediary and lets the principal go free, but while we respect the man who keeps the secrets of his clients, we cannot feel that much sympathy needs to be wasted on Mr. Chapman for his enforced thirty days in Washington, which carries with it such an unstinted amount of free advertising for his business.

Long Distance Electrical Railroading

An experiment of great interest to the public as well as to the transportation companies was brought to a successful termination in Connecticut. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, through its control of the New England road, has two lines between Hartford and New Britain, one of which it has equipped with a third rail carrying the power on the plan of the successful line at Nantasket Beach near Boston. The whole distance from Hartford to Berlin by way of New Britain is nearly thirteen miles, and the current for the whole distance is supplied by a single power house at Berlin. This is a much longer distance than has ever been thought practicable for the transmission of electric power, and the entire success of the experiment, in the opinion of President Clark of the New Haven road, foreshadows an extended and increasing substitution of the third rail system for steam and successful competition of the old roads with the trolley lines. Complete isolation of the track with its dangerous surface current and the elimination of grade crossings are conditions of success. The light cars ran smoothly and at a rate, for part of the distance, of more than a mile a minute.

The Rehabilitation of Turkey

The last effect which the Powers intended should come out of the war with Greece was probably that Turkey should reappear upon the scene as one of the great military forces of Europe, and yet, however transiently, this is just what has happened. They have opened the bottle that the demon might do their bidding; he has felt his old strength revive and refuses to return. The Powers stand morally committed to the defense and protection of Greece by her complete surrender to their demands. They ordered the sultan to agree to an armistice, and he replied that he was keeping the greater feast of Beiram and would think of the matter when he got through. Then he demanded impossible concessions as the price of peace—the reannexation of Thessaly, a free hand in Crete, an enormous indemnity, the abolition of the treaty by which Greek subjects in Turkey are tried in their own consular courts—and a meeting of plenipotentiaries to consider the terms he offered at Pharsalos within the Turkish lines in Thessaly. For the moment this uprising of Moslem pride seems to have really united the Powers in principle, if not committed them to a method. Even the well-drilled Russian newspapers, the Novoe Vremya, for example, protest that the Powers will have to take practical measures "to preserve Greece from the pretensions threatening her national existence."

In the Field

A few partial Greek successes in Epirus have been more than overbalanced by another great defeat at Domokos in Thessaly. The Greeks fought with stubborn courage, but were overwhelmed at last. Behind the Greek army are the mountain passes of the old frontier, which they may be able to hold until the Powers come to their relief. What the inhabitants of Thessaly think of the Turks is shown by the complete abandonment of villages and the crowding of refugees in the Greek towns and frontier valleys.

The Liberal Triumph in Quebec

The tide of Liberal success, which put an end to the long control of Canada by its Conservative party nearly a year ago, continues to flow with increasing power. In the provincial legislature of Quebec the situation of the parties has been more than reversed by the recent elections, in which the Liberals have gained twenty-eight constituencies and now have fifty-one members to twenty-one for the Conservatives. This victory has been won in the face of intense clerical opposition, largely by the awakening of a true national feeling independent of strictly clerical leading. What the Montreal Witness rightly calls "the emancipation of the people of this province from clerical thraldom" is largely due to the influence of emigration to New England, which has changed the type of piety without destroying it and taught the people of Quebec that political freedom is not necessarily irreligious. The Liberals of Quebec are pledged to reform of the common schools and to the investigation of subsidy scandals, which have been only too common in the history of the Province. The result is full of warning for those who have been attempting to reopen the question of the Manitoba schools. "It may be a blessing in disguise to the Conservative party," says the Toronto Evening News, "if it helps to sew that question up in its shroud."

NOTES

The ice has gone out of Mooslocmeguntic Lake. When it gets through Molechunkemunk and Umbagog to the Androscoggin we suppose spring will be fairly started in northwestern Maine.

There will be general regret among those who have occasion to write to foreign correspondents that it has been found impracticable by the Postal Congress to arrange for a universal postage stamp.

Senator Platt of New York complains that in the new distribution of committee appointments New York has received only scanty recognition. Perhaps if he will examine the public record of the senators from New York he may discover the reason.

Philadelphia is to be congratulated on its new and splendid Washington monument, the gift of the State Society of the Cincinnati to the city, unveiled last Saturday in Fairmount Park with appropriate ceremonies and a befitting address from Washington's latest successor in the presidential chair.

We do not envy the feelings of the workman who has confessed that it was his carelessness in upsetting a lamp which started the fire in the Paris charity bazar, but it is always to be remembered that the moral quality of carelessness is not to be measured by its actual, but by its potential and probable, results.

The completion of the great tunnel in the Nashua River basin marks a further stage in the progress of the metropolitan system by which Boston and its neighborhood are to be supplied with water. The tunnel is two and a half miles long, over thirteen feet wide and ten feet high, and has been finished in a little more than a year, most of it through the solid rock.

Judge John Lowell of the famous Massachusetts family of the name, who died in Newton, May 14, was graduated at Harvard in 1843. Appointed to the Federal district bench by President Lincoln in 1865, he retired to private practice after nineteen years of continuous service as judge in the Federal courts. His decisions fill an important place, especially as authority upon the law of bankruptcy, and he will be greatly missed in the law circles of the State.

The election of a senator in Florida after twenty ballots gives the Democrats one more vote. Ex-Representative Mallory, the senator elect, has been known as a gold Democrat but after his election expressly indorsed the Chicago platform with special emphasis upon the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, regardless of other countries. The other vacancy, in Oregon, to which ex-Senator Corbett holds the governor's ad interim appointment, is not likely to be filled by the action of the Senate admitting him to a seat.

In answer to the indictment for "keeping an ill-governed house" at the Salvation Army barracks in New York (the offense alleged being that of noisy all-night meetings), Commander Booth-Tucker pleads not guilty and claims a speedy trial. This looks like persecution, and there seems to be no evidence of a protest preceding the complaint. Surely it was not necessary to take up the time of the grand jury, and put a busy religious administrator to the discomforts of a criminal prosecution, in order to abate a little extra enthusiasm.

IN BRIEF

Our next week's issue, published only a few days before Memorial Day, will contain considerable material pertinent to that anniversary, which is every year growing in public regard. Miss Alice Brown has written for us a story peculiarly appropriate to the thought of the day. We shall have a contribution from Ian Maclaren, the second in the series The Companions of the Sorrowful Way, the first of which, published a few weeks ago, brought comfort to so many hearts. A Scotchman, who was a student under Professor Drummond, will furnish a delightful sketch of his methods as a teacher in and out of the classroom. Miss Ednah Proctor Clarke writes on the passing of the old-time darkey. Other features of interest insure an issue of exceptional value.

It is hard to wean editors from their congenial tasks. Rev. Dr. J. N. Hallock replies to a loud call to Denver by saying he would rather be editor of Christian Work than be president—of a Western university at a large salary.

Some of the spring meetings have been highly appreciated this year. "Did you have a good conference?" said a stay-at-home to one who always goes. "Excellent," was the answer; "the ham was as tender as the chicken."

Let those who sneeringly assert that missions are a failure, and that it is an impertinence to offer Christianity to the ancient civilizations of the East, take notice that the present minister of the Chinese emperor at Washington is a Christian.

The "Mark Twain of India" is Dr. Barrows's latest characterization of that interesting Hindu known as Swami Vivekananda, about whom he speaks more fully elsewhere in this issue. Still, our American humorist deserves better treatment than that.

Rev. Richard Lovett, secretary of the London Tract Society, is making a flying visit to this country, taking in New York, Boston and Chicago. He is leaving us this week, just as we had begun to realize what a welcome visitor we had in this representative of English Congregationalism.

Theological seminary anniversaries are the order of the day. Bangor and Yale are celebrating this week, but Hartford and Andover do not conclude their terms until June, anniversary exercises at the former taking place on the 2d and at the latter on the 10th instead of on the 17th, as the Year-Book states.

One effect of the increased inheritance taxes in New York and elsewhere seems to have been a sudden diminution of the fortunes rich men leave at death. This is accounted for by gifts and distributions before death, a method which we have always advocated in the case of gifts to charitable and benevolent work.

Some of our readers may be interested to know why the new tax on beer was fixed at the seemingly odd figure of forty-four cents. The whole tax per barrel, old and new together, will be $1.44, which is twelve times twelve and divisible without remainder by 2, 3, 4, 6 and 8, which are the brewer's divisions of quantity.

One sign of returning prosperity is the abundance of circulars in our mail offering stock in newly organized mining companies at very low rates, with promise of large dividends. But we suspect that the prosperity of which these are the sign will return mostly to the promoters of these companies, while the investors will get much experience and little money.

The lynching of women seems a thing incredible in America, and yet it happened in one of these United States this very week. But then the girls were black. In the interests of that respect for women without which no civilization can endure, we shall watch for signs of indignation and repentance in the proud State of Alabama, whose honor is smirched by the deed.

The mistake of a single word by the inadvertence of a copying clerk makes so serious a change in the meaning of a constitutional amendment in New Jersey that Governor Griggs has been obliged to call the legislature together in special session to rectify it. A costly change, but many a young man has found that substituting yes for no in the presence of temptation has cost him relatively more.

Those who have feared for the consequences of Dr. Lyman Abbott's course of sermons on the Bible, which have awakened so much interest and criticism, may be relieved to know that the report of Plymouth Church, presented at the Manhattan Brooklyn Conference, included a statement that sixty-five persons were received into membership May 2, forty-one on confession, and that these accessions were largely the result of that course of sermons.

That a well-known citizen of Boston, who had escaped the risks of world-wide travel and the storms of the South Atlantic again and again, should be killed by the falling of a rotten branch on his way from business to his own peaceful home is a commentary upon the fancied security in which some of us live and think of risk and fortune. If there be any of our readers who have arranged their lives with reference to present pleasure and postponed repentance, let them consider it, and recognize the risks which they have assumed.

Many a school and college youth has gained nobler ideals from reading Tom Brown at Rugby and Oxford. Money has been raised in England for a statue to the author of those books, Judge Thomas Hughes. It is to be placed at Rugby. The presidents of Harvard and Yale and other American institutions have sent out a circular letter asking for subscriptions to complete the memorial by endowing the mission schools which Mr. Hughes planted in London and Birmingham. He would ask no better tribute from those who have been helped by his books than a gift for his favorite schools for the children of working people.

An additional instance of the enterprise and ambition of the Philadelphia churches to which we made reference last week is found in the plans of the Second Presbyterian Church, which proposes to erect a tent with a seating capacity of 1,200 in which to hold meetings through the summer. "The services," the pastor, Dr. Charles Wood, says, "will not be essentially Presbyterian, but will be of such a character as to attract to the church thousands of men who never enter a church the year round." Would it not be possible, we wonder, to make the church itself attractive by services of the same kind?

Of the current situation in South Africa the Cape Town correspondent of the London Times writes:

> Of the two white races of South Africa one is backward and slow in movement, while the other is essentially progressive. Over the greater part of South Africa the progressive section is in power, but the richest portion of the country is held by the unprogressive section. If the Boers had Bechuanaland instead of the Transvaal, or if the Transvaal were as devoid of mineral wealth as is the Free State, there would be no more tension between the Dutch and English than there was between the two in the Free State before the raid. The disturbing factor in the situation is the wealth of the Transvaal.

This illustrates once more the truth of the old saying that the love of money is a root of all evil.

Societies of one sort and another multiply, and it is not every one of the newer candidates for public attention and support that is so worthy of commendation as the American Society of Religious Education, at whose recent anniversary in Washington Justice J. M. Harlan of the Supreme Court presided. Two study courses have been established—the Sunday Teachers' Normal College, which has a total enrollment of 10,186, and the Bible Readers' Union, with 1,491 members. The expositions of the International lesson by the secretary were published last year in secular papers, whose combined daily circulation is 710,000 copies. The family and college departments have also been prosecuted vigorously. Gen. John Eaton is elected president and Rev. J. E. Gilbert, D. D., secretary.

Lady Henry Somerset is always welcome in this country, and the announcement that she expects to spend the summer with Miss Frances Willard raises anticipation of renewing acquaintance with one who has already carried so many hearts by storm. The two great leaders of temperance reform will spend the summer quietly together. One of Lady Henry's chief appointments on this side is the preaching of the sermon before the National W. C. T. U. Convention, which meets in the autumn at Buffalo. Miss Willard, by the way, continues to be passionately fond of the wheel, and plans her outings with a view to securing good opportunities for cycling. No doubt she would echo the remark of one of our eminent younger women story writers, "There is no bliss like bicycle bliss."

The Christian Observer has a suggestion for the Y. M. C. A. which seems worth attention. "One main object," it says, "is to get a firm hold on young men from the country when first they come to the city." For this purpose it suggests that membership should be free to any young man from the country during the first year after he comes to the city, and that a notice to this effect should be posted in the railroad stations from ten to a hundred miles distant, so that the young men would feel sure of a welcome. The method is certainly worth considering, though the time suggested for free membership is probably too long. At Springfield, Mass., there is some apparent confession of present failure in attractiveness, if not of efficiency, in the proposal to add billiard and pool tables to the equipment of the building.

A singularly noble and generous giver was Mr. Roland Mather of Hartford, Ct., who died in that city May 10 at the ripe age of eighty-eight. He was a descendant of Rev. Richard Mather, well known in Puritan annals. He began business as a boy in Boston, but has lived in Hartford nearly seventy years. His career has been remarkably prosperous, and he has been in the habit of dispensing his money quietly and unostentatiously, where it would do the best service. His gifts to educational institutions have been large. Last year he gave to the Education Society $80,000, and his benefactions while he was living aggregated more than half a million dollars. His main bequests to benevolent societies are, to the American Board and to the Home Missionary Society $15,000 each, to the A. M. A. and to Hampton Institute $10,000.

It is pleasant from time to time to hear the comments of thoughtful Englishmen upon American institutions and ways. The writer of the article in this week's paper, Rev. A. H. Byles, did not form his impressions of this country by looking out of car windows or by spending a few hours at Niagara Falls. On the contrary, he settled down in Omaha, where he preached for the First Congregational Church, and was active in many good causes pertaining to the welfare of city and State. In addition he traveled widely through the more distant West, and also lingered for a number of weeks in the East before returning to England last autumn. He is one of the best known of the Nonconformist ministers, and his prominent share in the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement has given him something of the reputation of an expert regarding modern Christian activities. We are sure our readers will welcome his suggestive and discriminating criticisms on American life.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM LONDON

Queen's Day

It is generally expected that a large number of Americans, with their wives and daughters, will make a point of being in London on June 22 to view the Diamond Jubilee procession. The procession, which will be about a mile in length, will start from Buckingham Palace and proceed through main thoroughfares to St. Paul's Cathedral, outside which a thanksgiving service will be held. Most elaborate and careful arrangements are being made, and experiments and rehearsals are taking place to insure the success of the celebration and to prevent any hitch or accident. One perplexing problem that has greatly exercised the mind of high officers of state is how to get her Majesty to the top of the steps in front of the cathedral; it is impossible for the venerable lady to walk up and she objects to being carried. The solution of the difficulty will probably be found in making an artificial slope from the top of Ludgate Hill to the level of the cathedral floor. At this moment the road is being taken up, and further developments are anxiously awaited by an expectant populace. As can be imagined, the spectacle in front of the cathedral on June 22, when exalted personages from all parts of the earth will be present, will be phenomenally brilliant and memorable. Only a comparatively few ordinary mortals will be privileged to witness the ceremony. Many thousands of pounds are being offered for the use for the day of warehouse fronts overlooking the churchyard. Some tenants will clear a year's rent in one day. Along the line of route windows are fetching higher prices than ever before, and it is doubtful whether it will be possible to secure anywhere within sight of the pageant a single seat for less than five guineas. Americans, therefore, who desire to view the procession should be well ahead in making arrangements.

The august personages responsible for the accommodation of those who have a right to participate in the thanksgiving service overlooked the existence of those insignificant people called Nonconformists, or, as they now prefer to be styled, Free Churchmen. A polite reminder, in the form of a dignified but plainly worded resolution of protest from the committee of the Congregational Union, resulted in a due, if tardy, recognition of their claims. There is little doubt that the denominational commemoration, now being discussed by the union committee, will take the form of church extension in the large centers of population.

A Memorable Scene

The representative of The Congregationalist was among the twenty or thirty persons who witnessed the transfer of the Bradford manuscripts. It took place in the bare and cheerless dining-room of the gloomy Episcopal residence, in which the late bishop never lived but where his successor proposes to take up his abode. Dr. Creighton, wearing Episcopal cross and ring, sat halfway down the table; on his left, in wig and gown, was Dr. Tristram, chancellor of the Consistory Court, and on his right the registrar of the court, similarly arrayed, Mr. Bayard, looking sunburnt and hale after his continental holiday, occupying a seat at one end of the table. The registrar "called the case" and read, with amazing rapidity, the chancellor's elaborate decree, fixed inside the brown, time-worn volume, under which it was handed over. Then the chancellor himself took the field. Delivering judgment on the appeal of Colonel Hay that the book should be handed over to him and not to another on the ground that Mr. Bayard had ceased to be American ambassador, the chancellor set forth at length, with much display of learned lore and citation of precedent, the reasons why he should and why he shouldn't and finally why he did decide in favor of Mr. Bayard. Then up rose my lord bishop, and, with courtly manner and stately phrase, he personally handed the precious document to Mr. Bayard—not, be it observed, as ambassador, but as an individual acting as a delegate of the court—who, with equal courtliness, received the book and acknowledged it with his accustomed grace and felicity of diction, though "without premeditation of language." So the picturesque incident ended. On the face of it, there seems to be a want of graciousness in the attempt to deprive Mr. Bayard of the honor of bearing the log across the Atlantic, but possibly Colonel Hay merely desired to contribute to the gayety of nations by adding to the complexity of an already involved transaction. Mr. Bayard carries from our shores not only Bradford's chronicle, but the sincere admiration and esteem of practically all the inhabitants of these islands.

The Arctic Hero

Nansen has been the lion of the season. It is long since any visitor excited so much enthusiastic admiration in all classes. He is deeply impressed by the unstinted welcome he has received, untainted by either national or personal jealousy. Had he been one of our own countrymen he could not have been more honored, and the most generous tributes to his achievements have come from those whose efforts in polar fields he has eclipsed. All who meet Nansen are delighted with his singular modesty, his simple manners, his transparent nature. He is an excellent after-dinner speaker; his little post-prandial orations have all the charm of spontaneity, and are all the more enjoyable because of his occasionally quaint English. He receives £100 per lecture, so that, with the £10,000 he received for Farthest North, and the £3,000 or so from the London Daily Chronicle, the most enterprising of British journals, for exclusive telegrams and articles, the explorer's purse is filling. He deserves every penny he gets. Dr. Nansen's tour in America will probably begin between Oct. 10 and Nov. 1, and will extend to all the principal cities of the United States and Canada east of the Mississippi. The demand for hearing him is very great, and all pressure will be brought to bear upon him to extend his tour to the farthest limits, although the monetary inducement, while large, is not with him the chief consideration. He will unite with his lecturing a study of the American country and people, which cannot fail to interest him as a Norwegian. Coming from a country where law is supreme, where the individuality and independence of each voter are respected, where business of all kinds, whether refining oil or sugar, making rubber goods or dressing meat, is free, untrammeled and open to every one with the necessary capital, he expects to find the conditions of American commercial and industrial life a fascinating subject for study.

May 1. ALBION.

The India Lectureship

By Rev. John Henry Barrows, D. D.

Our white steamer is smoothly gliding over the China Sea, and within a week we hope to touch at Hong Kong, the Island of Fragrant Streams. It is almost a year since I promised an editor of The Congregationalist to give some account of the India lectureship, and I am not sorry to have waited until I am able to write history instead of forecasting plans and probabilities. The purpose of the lectureship, as is well known, is to furnish to the numerous and rapidly increasing population of India familiar with the English language biennial courses of Christian lectures in leading cities like Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Poona, Delhi, Bangalore, Lahore and Madura. Provision for this object has been assured by the munificence of Mrs. Caroline E. Haskell in connection with the University of Chicago.

On Dec. 24, in the hall of the General Assembly's Institution, Calcutta, and under the chairmanship of Mr. P. C. Mozoomdar, the first lecture was given. On March 5, in Tinnevelly, southern India, beneath a pandal or pavilion constructed by native Christians and under the chairmanship of a highly respected Brahman judge, the last lecture was delivered. Before beginning this voyage I gave two lectures in Wesley Hall, Colombo.

After three months of constant speaking I realized how wide is the demand for this lectureship, how ample is its sphere. However numerous, varied and effective are the missionary agencies in India, there is room for still another, in some respects supplementing the rest. It was impossible to speak in all the places to which I was invited. The full course of lectures was given only in Calcutta, Poona and Madras, although the entire course might have been given with advantage in most of the other cities which were visited. In India Americans are classed as Europeans, and the time for the transient European visitor is restricted to the so-called "cold weather," a period of three months. Many of these winter days, in Madras and elsewhere, were the hottest specimens of torrid temperature that I have ever known.

Had the climate been changed for my benefit, and the friendly invitations all accepted, and the desires of Christian missionaries all fulfilled, my three months' mission, such is the greatness of India, might have been prolonged three years. But actually I spoke a hundred and thirteen times, making five journeys across the peninsula. The task for my successors will be one of selection. It was my good fortune to have our itinerary arranged by Dr. Robert A. Hume, whose painstaking care and unlimited kindness were a great help to the comfort of our journeyings. While in India we never spent a single night in a hotel, but were passed on from bungalow to bungalow, wherein warm-hearted Christians bestowed upon us the favor of their most gracious hospitalities. Our last Indian experience of this sort was in the home of a Christian Brahman of Palamcotta, himself the honored mayor of that municipality.

The lectureship has given me a wide knowledge of missionaries of many churches, a wide acquaintance with missionary activities and brought me into intimate friendly relations with hundreds of educated non-Christians. Although my stay in India was so short, I met with few missionaries who have seen so much of India and mission work there. I was constantly hearing the Christian and the non-Christian side of many of the great questions now discussed. How ridiculous appears the claim sometimes made in America that men of intelligence and that members of the Brahman caste are never converted to Christianity. Have I not seen a Brahman preaching Christ in the bazars of Benares? Have I not seen a whole row of Christian Brahmans in the pews of a native church in Ahmednagar? Have I not sat for an hour in Poona with a Brahman who told me the story of his conversion to Christ? And have I not listened to addresses from native Christians in India, addresses so able and vigorous that I longed to have such men and women stand before our churches in America?

It is well known that American and European travelers, bent on seeing Hindu temples, Moslem mosques and the varied and brilliant life of the bazars, usually miss a sight of what after all is most hopeful and most important to the present life of India—the homes, schools, churches, hospitals and printing houses of the Christian missionaries. No believer in the gospel can look for three months on what filled for the most part my thought and vision without a new sense of the strength, effectiveness and assured coming triumph of Christian effort.

Of course I heard many criticisms of missionaries, but I never heard a Hindu, Brahman or Moslem say, what ignorant and prejudiced Europeans have sometimes said in my hearing out of India, that the missionaries were doing no good. Frequently the chairmen at my lectures, or the Hindu gentleman who moved the vote of thanks, spoke with grateful appreciation of the work which missionary educators are doing. I shall never forget how the famous Hindu ascetic, the Holy Man of Benares, said to me: "I think Jesus Christ was a very good man. He must have been something like Mr. Hewlett," a deceased veteran of the London Mission Society. Missionaries are often foolishly criticised by natives, but they are trusted by them, and this is the highest praise which a Hindu can pay to mortal man. I know a missionary of the American Board in southern India who was asked to take charge of the funds of one of the greatest of Hindu temples.

One advantage may be rightly said of the lectureship—that it has already brought the claims of Christianity to the hearing of tens of thousands of educated Hindus. Indirectly it has reached a much larger number through the press, which has often quite fully reported the lectures. An edition of 5,000 copies has been issued from Madras. Many who have heard the lectures, I am told, never attend a Christian service. Some, including one of my most eminent chairmen, have confessed entire ignorance of Christianity. Others have said to me: "We listen to you because we know that you will not abuse our religion." It is not a wise or winning method for a Christian to say to a college of Hindus, as was once done in Calcutta: "If your gods were alive now they would be shut up in the penetentiary!" When infidel orators in America say the same about Abraham we protest, feeling that the whole truth has not been told. A Maharajah and others have said to me: "The missionaries are constantly abusing our religion."

Such criticisms show great ignorance of the prevailing spirit and general methods of missionaries today. I have no doubt that Dr. J. P. Jones of Madura expresses the convictions of most of our missionaries in claiming, as he has recently done, that the brighter aspects of Hinduism should be gladly and fully recognized. Dr. Ewing of Lahore informs me that American mission work in that region has from the beginning been conducted in the "temperate, friendly and conciliatory spirit" prescribed for the Indian lectureship. Doubtless, as Bishop Thoburn has said, Hindus are not to be won to Christianity merely by a few concessions. But it is also true that educated Hindus will not be won without these concessions. A refusal to acknowledge the truths discoverable in other religions is a bar to the progress of Christianity.

After my two weeks in Calcutta and the friendly action of the missionary conference there the Indian lectureship no longer appeared as an experiment. By Feb. 8 I had completed the journey to the north, reaching as far as Lahore and down through Poona, where the lectures originally designed for Bombay were given to the proud Brahman hearers in that city. Then came a month of work in southern India, where Christianity has the greatest number of converts and where Hinduism is vigorous and active and most alive with the spirit of the present national revival. That revival, which has been going on for a decade, is due in part to the work of government colleges and of Christian missions. It is an uprising of the national spirit, a protest of national pride. Too enlightened not to perceive the fallen condition of India and some of the errors and abominations of popular Hinduism, it yet resents European influences and vigorously expresses its dislike of a Christianity which it has been taught to identify very largely with "British oppressors" and the sins and shortcomings of Christendom generally. Its tendency is to go back to the purer teachings of the Vedas and to maintain that Hinduism can reform itself and restore the glory of India. It interprets the Hindu Scriptures in the light of Christian truths and often claims as its own what it has largely taken from Christian sources.

On the whole this national revival is one of the most hopeful signs in India. Any serious attempt to quench the thirst of the human soul at the springs of Hinduism is a pre-destined failure. There is no unity in Hinduism. All sorts of faiths are mixed together in it and caste, the social system which binds all into an external uniformity, is a cruel tyranny which Hindus themselves are learning to abominate. Rival philosophies divide the thinking portion of the community. The Brahman priesthood is denounced by the native press as corrupt and selfish. Leadership is absolutely needed by this people, but leaders divide more than they unite. Vivekananda has had a great following since his return and has spoken some wholesome truths. But he has attacked so many classes of the community with violence that a reaction has already set in. A Hindu scholar writes me: "The millions of India do not approve of Vivekananda's Vedantism." But when I reached southern India the enthusiasm which welcomed the Swami was high pitched. This, however, appeared to add to the interest with which the people listened to my words and certainly did not detract from the cordial kindness of their welcome.

My readers may be interested to hear of the usual way by which a friendly guest is received in India. There is first a welcome at the station, sometimes accompanied by gifts of flowers and garlands, then the presentation of a printed address of welcome with more garlands, either at the house where the stranger is entertained or in the public hall where he delivers his first lecture. After this, as I recall with grateful remembrance, comes a reception by Hindu Club, Brahmo Society, Missionary Conference or native Christian church, and when he departs he finds at the station representatives of all these communities kindly waiting to bid him good-by.

One of the rules of the lectureship which I found the experienced missionaries particularly pleased with was this, that the lectures should not be followed by controversy. It was the purpose and hope that after a patient and candid hearing nothing should intervene to distract the mind from the consideration of the truth. But once in Delhi, once in Poona, twice in Madras, once in Coimbatore and twice in Tinnevelly either the Hindu chairman or the person moving or seconding the resolution of thanks was stirred to utter words of dissent. Sometimes this action promoted a calmer and friendlier feeling. It gave the opportunity for the pent-up emotions of the Hindu hearers to vent themselves. After the last lecture that I gave in India so much had been said and so many inquiries made that I thought it best to speak, perhaps half an hour, in reply to questions and in order to bring the meeting back to the mood prevailing at the close of the lecture.

The inquiries most frequently put, either in private or public or by newspaper interviewers, I give to show what are the mental difficulties of the Hindu mind or what are the areas of darkness that need to be illuminated: "Is faith in the historic Christ essential to salvation? If so what became of those who lived before the advent of Christ or who have never heard of him?" "How can the sacrifice of Christ's mere body atone for the sins of the soul?" "Is not God omnipresent in stones and animals, and if so what evil is there in so called idolatry?" "Is man an isolated creation at a particular time and on this earth?" "Why should there be only one Saviour?" "Why should not man come to God directly, without the intervention of a mediator?" "Do you not believe in the ultimate salvation of all souls? If not, is not your Christianity inferior to Hinduism, which provides for the final salvation of all?" "Why should a religion which claims to be universal have originated so late in history?" "What are the characteristic differences between Hindus and Americans?" "Will Christianity make progress against a religion so highly eclectic as Hinduism?" "Is not material improvement an impediment to religious improvement?" "Have we not the highest conception of God, since with us he is not only Father, but Husband, Brother, Mother, Friend?" "Had Christianity ever to contend with a religion which had a sound philosophy for a basis?" "Can a religion resting on a historic foundation be as permanent and satisfactory as a religion resting on ideas?" "Is there salvation for those of us who have heard of the historic Christ, but to whom he is not so attractive as our own saints and sages?" "Why should we study the Bible when we have not yet mastered our own scriptures?" "Does not the Almighty give to every man that religion which he sees is best fitted for him?"

I think that, on the whole, this is a typical series of questions. It brings before us much of the mental stock in trade of the dissenting Hindu mind. I should also add that the current reports of the many immoralities and of the general failure of our Western civilization are additional hindrances to Christian progress in India.

My purpose was not to argue primarily the truth of Christianity, but to show its fitness to become the universal religion and the many evidences that it is certain to gain world-wide prevalence. While doing this I was, of course, careful to acknowledge whatever excellencies are discoverable in the non-Christian faiths—excellencies also found in Christianity. But the claim that the Christian religion is essentially universal, was meant to be so from the beginning and is sure to cover and dominate the earth is very disturbing to Hindu pride, and arouses his dissent much more violently than the claim that Christianity is true. The Hindus believe that they can absorb everything that is true and remain loyal to Hinduism!

Among other things I endeavored to show that Christianity, being a missionary religion, must, by the very law of its being, seek world-wide acceptance. I showed its remarkable contrast in this respect with Hinduism. On one occasion I was amused when an excited young Brahman came to me and said, "I acknowledge that Hinduism has not been a missionary religion in the past, but it is going to be in the future!" This determination to absorb everything is characteristic. But is a religion which for 4,000 years has been national likely to transform itself and become missionary? Do not rigid custom and ceremonial law forbid the crossing of the seas? I put the inquiry to a Brahman priest in the great temple of Parbati overlooking Poona, "How can I become a Hindu?" "It is impossible," he replied. "One must be born a Hindu."

The forces which make for Christianity in India are growingly strong. I do not remember meeting a missionary doubtful of the final result. The failure of Hinduism to furnish peace and moral healing to the individual and regeneration to its millions of votaries is becoming apparent to Hindus themselves. The reforming sects are an emphatic announcement of this social and religious failure. The Hindu spirit today is strangely stirred and restless, and there never was a more favorable time for a large re enforcement of the various departments of Christian work.

I deem it one of the chief privileges of my life that I have been permitted to set forth some of the evidences of the supremacy, sufficiency, ultimate prevalence and essential truth of Christianity, in the light of comparative study, before so many of those minds that are certain to shape in large measure the future of India. The kindness with which I was received will make life richer and memory sweeter for years. But my chief joy is that I have striven to obey the commands to set forth the claims and to illustrate, however imperfectly, the loving spirit of Him who, lifted up on his cross and throne, will yet draw all men unto him.

On the China Sea, March 22.

SIXTEEN MONTHS IN AMERICA

BY REV. A. HOLDEN BYLES

Having had a small share in American social and religious movements, I want to play the part of the candid friend and record a few of the impressions made upon me as an English Congregationalist. That we have much to learn from each other is a fact which few will deny. When I had been only a few weeks in the country I became profoundly impressed with the ignorance of Americans regarding England, but after the first six months I became even more impressed with the ignorance of Englishmen regarding America. I now think that the Americans know the English better than we know them.

Nor is this altogether surprising. America moves so rapidly that it is difficult for ordinary mortals to keep pace with her. It is not merely that America is more progressive and less conservative than England, for this is only partially true. Within certain lines there is probably as much conservatism in New England as in old, while as regards political and institutional changes the old country is quite as progressive as the new. The difference lies rather in those habits of mind which do more to determine the pace of a nation's life than Parliament or Congress. There is in the Englishman an inbred conservatism, a traditional reverence for what has been, which has no place in the American. In the old country character is more or less steadied by its links with the past—every historic scene, every abbey and castle and cathedral, is a reminder of centuries of struggle and upheaval. In America there are but few of these old moorings. A second-hand bookstore is in some of the Western cities almost the only refuge from the unvarying newness; life is always in the present. America is not only a new country with new conditions, but she is a country with the most marvelous kaleidoscopic changes. New problems are constantly presenting themselves—problems so vast that the mind is ever being expanded with new ideas. It is as difficult for an American to run upon old lines as it is for an Englishman to leave them.

There is a buoyancy and hopefulness about the American people which I have never found in any European nation. Though now there is much poverty and many are unable to find employment, yet America has no pauper class as we have in England. Pauperism is not inbred as it has been with us by centuries of doles administered by a dominant political church. Woman occupies a higher position. Occupations degrading to her womanhood—such as the serving of liquor—encouraged in the old country, would not be tolerated in the new. Those odious terms, Churchman and Dissenter, which mean so much and which forge such iron rings of caste in England, are absolutely unknown in America, and those unseemly religious squabbles which in England are such a hindrance to social and educational progress are entirely absent. Americans have become so accustomed to the blessing of perfect religious equality that they scarcely appreciate it, but to me it was an atmosphere so refreshing that I was often tempted to change my nationality in order to enjoy it. As to the comparative morality of the two nations I do not express an opinion, but I have no hesitation in saying that there are fewer open and flaunting temptations to intemperance and vice in American cities than in English. Even the great drink curse, bad as it is, is not in America the terrible evil that it is with us. The saloons are not to be compared in vileness with our gin palaces. I cannot be blind to the fact that America has many breakers ahead in the rapid growth of her cities without healthy and adequate control, in the apparent failure of so many of her best citizens to realize the responsibilities of citizenship, in the growing separation of classes and the increasing power of gigantic monopolies; but when I remember that in the past wise and fearless leaders have been called out by the people's vote to steer her through equal, if not greater, perils, when I mark the cool judgment, the quick intelligence and the living faith of the American citizen in the principles of democracy, I seem to foresee the fulfillment of Mr. Gladstone's prophecy: "She will probably become what we are now, the head servant of the great household of the world, because her service will be the most and the ablest."

There is a magnificence in the scale on which all religious work in America is projected (if not on which it is actually carried on) which forms a pleasing contrast to the small things with which we too often content ourselves in the old country. The many stately and costly church buildings, their sumptuous fittings and the liberal provision that is made for the comfort of church workers, fill us with astonishment, if not envy. In some instances, especially in the newer cities of the West, this may have been carried to excess and churches are now groaning under debts which ought never to have been contracted, but probably there is no other country in the world that can show such a number of handsome private residences as are to be found in American cities, and it is a pleasure to note that a people who have built for themselves houses of "cedar wood" have not been unmindful of the glory due to the house of God.

It seemed to me that in Western churches especially the tie between pastor and people is much looser than it usually is in England, and this notwithstanding the most elaborate arrangements for tightening it, such as the church council furnishes. I lived in one of those cities for fifteen months. When I went there were seven Congregational ministers who were pastors of as many churches; when I left six of these had been replaced by others and the seventh had resigned. In another month I might have been the oldest Congregational minister in the city! They speak of "hiring" a minister. If that be the relationship one cannot wonder at the result, "The hireling fleeth when the wolf cometh," and the wolf has certainly been at the door of many of those churches.

I cannot say that I altogether like the services in American churches. There seemed to be an "appreciation" of the choir and a "depreciation" of the congregation, which weakened that sense of fellowship in worship which is essential to its true helpfulness. In English Congregational churches a musical performance, either by the choir or by a soloist, is rarely tolerated, except on anniversary occasions, when a certain license is allowed for the sake of the collection. It is possible that in this we have gone to extremes in the other direction, but, to my mind, this even is preferable to the American plan of relegating to the choir the larger part of the service of praise.

I incline to think that even the arrangements are not as advantageous as with us. In England there is some attempt at continuity, some attempt to distribute our work and worship throughout the day. In the morning the church service is preceded by the Sunday school; in the afternoon the Sunday school, often followed by the meeting of the P. S. A.; at 6 30 (or at the latest 7 P. M.) the evening service. But in America the wide gap that is left between 1 P. M., when the Sunday school closes, and 7.30 or 8 P. M, when the evening service is announced, leaves a fine opportunity for Satan to try his skill on idle minds. His success becomes painfully evident before the day closes. The Sunday paper in the afternoon—or some other even less Sabbatical amusement—has dissipated the devotional feelings of the morning, and the difficulty of making an evening congregation has been found to be so great that either it has been abandoned in despair or sensational and undevotional performances have been tried to secure it. This tendency, common to both countries, to adopt sensational methods to attract congregations, is one of the greatest perils that beset the church of Christ in the present day. The temptation to abandon his reliance on purely spiritual methods and to resort to baser artifices in order to gain his end was the last temptation that came to our Lord in the wilderness.

I think I was more surprised with the Sunday schools than with anything else I saw of the religious work in America. In America—speaking broadly—the sphere of Sunday school work seems to be Congregational; it is an extension of the teaching of the church—a sort of elongation of the morning service. Some few children and young people belonging to families in the congregation, who in England would have been at the church service, drop in and swell the numbers, but in most of the schools that I saw there were but few others. In England the Sunday school is distinctly a mission agency; its sphere of work is mainly among the children of parents who "never darken a church door"; the children belonging to the congregation will often attend, but very few of the parents except as teachers. The hour most commonly chosen in America—from 12 to 1 P. M.—is evidently selected in order that those who have attended the morning service may not have to make a double journey. But in England that hour would be altogether unsuitable. There is no double journey to prevent, and the hour of noon is just the time when parents who have been to no morning service are providing the family dinner. In the conduct of the American schools generally, and especially in one where I constantly attended as a scholar, I found much that was pleasing and helpful, yet I could not but feel that the great and much needed work of gathering in the outsiders was being sorely neglected. I have no exact statistics of the Sunday schools of the two countries, but I am sure that in our English towns there is a much larger proportion of the children under religious instruction by this agency than there is in America. An estimate may, however, be formed from the fact that in Massachusetts the average number in the Congregational Sunday schools is 200, while in those of all England it is about 350. Probably the difference will be found to be mainly in the adult and infant classes, which seemed to me to be much smaller in America than in England. The former can only be successfully carried on in classrooms and the latter with infant galleries and other appliances, which I seldom saw in the schools I visited. In America, with a system of public schools in which no religious instruction is given, this larger work of the Sunday school seems a paramount necessity. It is only by this means that there is any hope of checking that materialism which always grows side by side with commercial enterprise. The great problem that faces America today is expressed in the alternative—"God or Mammon." The answer rests largely on the Sunday schools.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. QUINT

A few gentlemen, understanding that the widow of the late Dr. Quint was left with very small means, invited by circular a number of his friends, in view of the large amount of unrequited service he had given to individuals, churches and other organizations, to give a money testimonial to Mrs. Quint as an expression of gratitude and honor to the memory of her late husband. About $1,600 has been received and handed to Mrs. Quint, given by churches Dr. Quint had served, Masonic orders with which he was connected and personal friends. The chairman of the committee, Rev. F. W. Merrick, has received the following note from Mrs. Quint:

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I acknowledge the receipt of the very generous testimonial which you and the other gentlemen of the committee have been instrumental in securing for my benefit. Such a substantial expression of esteem for Dr. Quint and of sympathy for me makes a proper acknowledgment exceedingly difficult. No verbal thanks can adequately express the depths of my inward feelings. But, poor as my words are, kindly accept them as containing more than they are able to disclose.

Will you accept these expressions as intended for all the members of the committee with whom you were associated? And through the committee I wish to thank every one who has contributed to the generous amount which has been placed at my disposal.

Yours very truly, REBECCA P. QUINT.

Dr. Hillis of Chicago writes enthusiastically in the Record of Christian Work of Mr. Moody's preaching. "If preaching is man-making and man-mending," he says, "then Mr. Moody is a veritable prince among preachers. . . . Taken all in all, for the work of an evangelist this man represents more culture and more thought about the problem of reaching the common people than any man in his generation." This is interesting as a successful preacher's appreciation of successful preaching, and all the more so because of Dr. Hillis's pronouncedly liberal theological views.

In and Around Chicago

Optimism versus Pessimism

Two weeks ago Dr. Hillis gave his congregation a strong dose of pessimism. Last Sunday, as an antidote, he furnished the same patients a dose of optimism. He did not retract anything he had said concerning the conditions prevailing in the city, but in its location, in the readiness of its people to consider the dangers which threaten them and provide against them, and in its great vitality he saw reasons for hopefulness as to the future. Reports in the Monday morning papers indicated that several clergymen, while agreeing with Dr. Hillis's criticism of present conditions, and affirming as strongly as he does that civic righteousness can alone form the basis of the city's permanent prosperity, are yet unwilling to paint in so dark colors as he does. Probably there is little real divergency of opinion between those who are familiar with the history of Chicago for the last ten or fifteen years. In spite of all that has been lost the gain is considerable. While the Civic Federation is not always wise in its methods of procedure, it has furnished citizens with an instrument of criticism and of attack on bad men and bad measures whose value cannot be easily overestimated.

Defeat of the Humphrey Bill

Undoubtedly in its present form this bill was a menace to the rights of the city. That it was killed in the House at Springfield, Wednesday, May 12, by the significant vote of one hundred and twenty-three to twenty-nine is another proof of the tremendous force of public opinion, as well as of the daily press. It is not altogether certain that some legislation in reference to the city railways is not desirable. While the rights of the city are to be protected, capital should be protected also. Nor is it to be assumed without proof that corporations are always in the wrong or without justification when they seek legislation in their favor. While there is great rejoicing over the defeat of this particular bill, it may be needful a year or two later to secure the passage of a bill embodying some of its principles. At present the public is ready to condemn without examination any proposal which the managers of the street car lines recommend.

The Mayor and Civil Service

True to his promise to give the city a "good Democratic administration," Mr. Harrison removed, ten days since, on the charge of "incompetency and neglect," two of the three civil service commissioners. Although the appointees of the mayor, he cannot remove them save for cause. Hence his effort to bring forward proofs which would justify his accusation. It was not to be expected that the statement presented by the mayor to the Common Council would pass unchallenged. Messrs. Clark and Holz, in a calm and dispassionate reply, point out the inaccuracy of the mayor's statements, and make it clear that there is not the least show of reason in the charges he brings against them. More exasperating to the mayor is the fact that Mr. Kraus, the Democrat in whom the mayor had placed his chief reliance, and whom he had put into Mr. Clark's place, now comes forward and declares that, with trifling exceptions, the rules of the old commission are correct, and that he and his associates will not set them aside for the opinions of the mayor's counsel. The mayor is allowed to appoint the heads of certain departments, as the city engineer, the superintendents of the streets, the sewers, the telegraph, the map and special assessment departments, but may not remove the captains of the police. This unexpected decision is a severe disappointment to those who were preparing to set aside civil service regulations and substitute for them the old principle that to the victors belong the spoils.

Strikes

It is estimated that not far from 10,000 men are now out of employment as the result of the refusal of the journeymen plumbers to continue their work except at wages as high as those paid in the flush times of the World's Fair, and an agreement on the part of their employers to allow but one helper to a shop. This decision alone would throw out not less than 800 young men. At present it is impossible to buy even a bath tub or to have any considerable amount of plumbing done. Building operations are nearly at a standstill. City officials are alarmed. But with so many houses and stores for rent it might not injure property were building to cease entirely for a year or two. But it seems strange that labor should demand increased wages in the face of present conditions, or attempt to compel employers to accept conditions which may easily be made an excuse for declining to make new contracts or even to complete those already undertaken.

Ministers' Meeting

The attendance last Monday was large. Many came in order to hear Miss Wheeler of Harpoot. She described in a way peculiar to herself, the massacres in Turkey whose horrors she had witnessed, the fidelity and self-sacrificing spirit of members of the native churches, the needs of the schools and the college, and the providential opportunities now furnished our missionaries. She pleaded for larger contributions from the churches in America and chided the ministers for their apparent lack of interest in missionary service. Her words were not a whit too severe. Miss Wheeler was at Dr. Goodwin's church Sunday morning and at the Warren Avenue Church in the evening. It is expected that she will return to Chicago from Iowa and the West, where she has engagements for a few weeks. Chicago has also been favored with a brief visit from Sec. J. L. Barton.

Return of Dr. John H. Barrows

A telegram from Dr. Barrows early this week announces his safe arrival at San Francisco, and contains his promise to give the Congregational Club of Chicago Monday night an account of his experiences in India. The members of the club and their friends are congratulating themselves that they are to be the first to extend him a formal welcome back to Chicago, and to hear from his own lips a sort of official report of what the Haskell lectureship may yet do for India. Sunday afternoon he will deliver one of the lectures in his course before the students of the university. He has an appointment also to address the General Assembly during its sessions at Winona, Ind.

A Great Attraction

The Northwestern University at Evanston has been so fortunate as to secure for its students six lectures on subjects connected with the literature and art of Greece by Prof. Basil L. Gildersleeve of Johns Hopkins. These lectures have been given the past week and have been heard with ever growing interest. Their subjects are tantalizing to those who could not hear them—A Grammarian's Spectacles, An Evening with Odysseus, An Hour with Sappho, A Talk with Aristophanes, Poet and Potter, Hellas and Hesperia. It is needless to say that the professor believes in the thorough study of Greek as a means of culture, and that he has little sympathy with those who would confine their attention to modern languages and science.

A Notable Anniversary

Sunday, May 9, the First Church, Rockford, Ill., celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of its organization. It has enjoyed a vigorous life from the beginning, and although it has been difficult at times to obtain all the funds which were desired for its work, that work has gone steadily forward, and never with greater success than under the pastorate of Dr. W. W. Leete. A thank offering was made, and the church turns to the future with renewed confidence in the truth and power of the principles for which it stands and which it has long advocated and illustrated in the lives of its members. As the church which most of the teachers and pupils in the Woman's College attend its pastor has a position of rare influence.

Ten Years' Work

Sec. W. F. McMillen, whose headquarters are in Chicago, has just completed his tenth year of service with the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society. A portion of this time was spent in Ohio, with headquarters in Cleveland. During this time he and his assistants have organized about 200 Sunday schools, of which eighty have grown into churches. This is a record upon which one may look back with pleasure. If the results, as they already appear, are gratifying, what will they be a score of years hence?

The Work of the Society in Chicago

Although the society is expected to expend its money and its energies chiefly on frontier fields, it has not hesitated to do what it could for cities like Chicago. Here it has been coöperative in its character. Out of 126 schools in the association eighty-eight have received aid from the society, fifty-two of them from the beginning of their history. Forty of these schools have become churches. Of the eighty-seven schools within the city limits sixty-three have at one time or another received aid. Not less than $10,000 have been spent in and about the city, to say nothing of the service which the representatives of the society have rendered. Four papers with headquarters here have also been aided—The Pravda (Bohemian), The Evangelisten (Norwegian), The Kirchenbote (German) and The Segensquelle (also German). This influence has been far-reaching. It has been one of the bitterest regrets of the society that its means have not permitted it to make such grants to these papers as their needs have seemed to demand.

Hard times have compelled a reduction in the missionary force employed, from forty-eight to thirty five, yet during these three years of stringency 1,565 schools have been established, 1,500 schools given aid each year, and out of these schools 203 Congregational churches organized. Secretary McMillen organized thirty-eight schools in his district last year, aided eighty-four schools, made grants to 177 schools and arranged for sixty institutes and conventions. In this latter branch of the work he has had the assistance for several months of Mrs. Mary F. Bryner, whose gifts and experience have fitted her in a very remarkable manner for the service she is rendering. Demands for her help in conventions and institutes are far in excess of her strength and time. Rev. James J. Watson and his daughter are doing excellent work in the Southern Association of Illinois, where their labors have not only been fruitful in results but have been highly appreciated by the people of that region.

While the society has no debt it should not be forgotten that this condition is due to its refusal to spend more than is given it, and that in consequence of lessened receipts it has been obliged to curtail its work essentially. It looks forward with confidence to increasingly large contributions Children's Day and to contributions from more of the churches. For the amount of money it uses it can show results of which no one need be ashamed. The wonder is, not that it does so little but that with so little it accomplishes so much.

Chicago, May 15. FRANKLIN.

The Home

THE END OF THE GAME

BY ISAAC OGDEN RANKIN

e looks for larger life that somewhere waits
s home and love await the closing day.
vels and gold and pleasures and estates—
hese are but counters wherewith children play.

d whether of the palace or the street,
o the same eager passions they appeal.
r weak hearts burn with the same withering heat,
nd the same thirst unsatisfied we feel.

t, as the child who, moody, stands apart,
corning the game, no perfect manhood gains,
, too, must learn to play, in field or mart;
Velcome life's effort and endure its pains.

t while we follow through the varying game emember still, howe'er the counters fall, ither we go, and by whose will we came;
nd at His summons gladly turn from all.

◆

The relation of secret societies to the me is touched upon in an impartial arti-
in the North American Review for May.
hile admitting that there are many ele-ting and ennobling elements in these ternities, the writer declares that "the oad, rich acres of man's selfishness are where more carefully fertilized, tended, led and reaped than in the lodge-room."
is selfishness is seen, not only in seeking easure which cannot be shared with their ves, and in shutting them out from their nfidence, but also in spending enormous ms of money for personal gratification.
e estimate of the author is that probably t less than $250,000,000 are annually
ent in this way. Shall wives and daugh-rs insist on their right to spend dollar for llar for adornment or pleasure the amount ven by the men of their household for es, regalia, uniforms, plumes, banners, nquets and traveling expenses? What all the "women attached" to the 5,400,- 0 members of secret orders in the United ates do to maintain or reclaim their equal ivileges of companionship, expenditure
d conviviality?

Referring to over devoted and too-indulnt mothers a distinguished educator re-ntly said: "The trouble with these moths is that they treat their boys as though ey were going to be boys all through fe. They seem to forget that in a very w years these lazy, careless, happy-gocky lads must take their places in the eat army of bread-winners, and that their aining and education ought to be planned ith this end in view. Let a mother thor-ghly realize the relation between boyhood
d manhood, and she will do less petting d coddling and will give more thought to tting her child for the responsibilities of fe. A certain charity school, which has e entire charge of boys between the ages
f eight and eighteen, has a remarkable proortion of successful and useful men among s graduates. The reason lies largely in e fact that the boys, all through their mpressionable and character-forming years, re under the influence of earnest men and omen, who look upon them, not simply as oys, but as prospective husbands, fathers nd citizens." We do not believe that any-ne can do more for a boy than the right ind of a mother, but such a statement as his ought to impress mothers anew with he serious nature of their work.

◆

If a man will but plant himself on his in-tincts the great world will come round to im.—Emerson.

PARABLES IN PICTURES

VI. THE LOST SHEEP

BY ESTELLE M. HURLL

In the fifteenth chapter of St. Luke we have a group of three parables, all centering in the great theme of God's love for the sinner. One recounts the story of a lost sheep, another tells of a lost piece of money, and the third relates the experiences of a lost son. The emphasis in every case is upon the fact that the loss is of great consequence to the Loser, and there is much rejoicing over the recovery.

The parable of the lost sheep is the subject of our cover illustration, reproduced from the miniature by Liberale da Verona in the Siena Cathedral Library. It is an ornamentation of an initial N, which frames it very closely. In the foreground, and occupying the greater portion of the letter, is a group of three shepherds. At the right a winding road leads to a hill, where a row of four sheep represents the ninety and nine who were safely pastured. The shepherd at the left carries over his shoulders the lamb which he has recovered. His simple, honest face glows with satisfaction, and his pleasure is reflected in the faces of the neighbors rejoicing with him.

The parable is not left without its spiritual application. On a distant hillside stands a tiny figure clasping his hands and looking up to heaven. This is the repentant sinner who is prefigured in the lost sheep. In the upper air float three winged angels rejoicing over the rescue of a lost soul. Each bears a different musical instrument, to the accompaniment of which they sing their songs of praise. This heavenly choir will be remembered as an important feature of the old Italian pictures of the nativity, singing the Gloria in Excelsis to the Judæan shepherds. The connection starts a pleasant train of thought in regard to our Lord's special fondness for the pastoral life. It may be traced from the annunciation of his birth to the shepherds to that wonderful tenth chapter of John's gospel, in which he declares himself the Good Shepherd. The parable of the lost sheep contains the gist of the whole matter, and carries a message of joy and comfort to every stray lamb of the Good Shepherd's fold.

◆

ANNIVERSARIES OF THE HEART

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Beside the anniversaries which we keep among our friends and at the fireside, most of us have other days sacredly set apart which, it may be, only God knows of, and of which we do not often speak. A little mark in our every-day book, a penciled line under a text, a furrow in the earth where a bed has been made for all that was mortal of one of God's saints, a date which means for us more than for others, and the whole past awakens, the present drops away, we are back again in the sweet fields of youth. A waft of perfume, a strain of music, a chance word in conversation have power to revive a whole sheaf of memories at any time, but our special personal anniversaries do not require these reminders. Always for some of us there is a month, and a day of the month and an hour in the day when life is sadder colored than its usual wont, when we have need to lay hold on strength that is greater than ours, and when, indeed, we enter into our closets, and shut our doors, and pray to our Father who seeth in secret.

Few lives there are which, having been extended beyond youth, have not known the molding touches of pain. In God's economy pain comes as the gracious refiner, so that the noblest and most lofty souls we know seem to have had most of its discipline. Pain accepted as God's gift, pain looked upon as God's angel, in the last analysis brings out all that is best and most abiding in character. Only when we fret at pain and gird at it, quarrel with it and resist it in fierce rebellion does it produce bitterness and sharpness rather than sweetness and strength.

Of these heart anniversaries the larger part have to do with gloom and sorrow of some sort. There was one, dear as our own lives, but the time had not come for the love to be told to the world, and even our own world of home knew nothing, suspected nothing. To friends and acquaintances the attentions seemed mere commonplaces, and no deeper sentiment was so much as thought of, so that when death came suddenly there was no knowledge that one was taken and the other left—the other left, not to the royal purple of widowhood, but to the sober gray of a life out of which color and flavor had gone, but which must be quietly borne alone. There are such bereavements, and their anniversaries are kept all the way on till old age comes and death reunites.

Some of us must number among our heart anniversaries the mistakes of judgment into which we were once impulsively led, and which, so far as we were concerned, had results impossible to foresee and were stepping-stones to inevitable disaster. "If I could only put myself back where I stood one summer day, ten, twenty years ago, at the parting of the ways, how thankful I would be, and how differently I would act." We say this, but the summer day will never dawn when we can retrieve our mistake. Always, as it returns with the scent of honeysuckle and the song of the robin, we live it over and are troubled in spirit, and sometimes remorseful, and sometimes half despairing.

But about such an anniversary it is better to heap violets of tender penitence than to wreath it with the bitter rue. After all, we probably acted as we then thought best, and with what light we had, and as our ways and words are under God's over-ruling Providence, it is not right to mourn too heavily over anything which is done with. To leave it with God is better, and to go on, to "act, act in the living present, heart within and God o'erhead."

"Such or such a one has gotten over her grief," we remark, observing that the grief is put bravely in the background where, after the first, it should always be, and that the sufferer has taken up her life again. But nobody ever quite gets over a great grief or is ever the same again, even though she wear a smile and join in mirth and walk with uplifted head. A great grief sets its stamp on the life once for all. Nobody speaks of little Aleck or Joe, who was snatched away so suddenly seven years ago, but his mother keeps both his birthdays always in her heart—the one when he came to her arms and the one when he began the heavenly life. The father remembers, though he seldom speaks of the son who passed from his side in the pride of his early manhood. The wound heals, but the scar sometimes aches still after long years have gone. More pitiful, more charitable, more able to help, more willing to comfort, we learn in time that the rending process was not in vain, and we rest head and heart on that softest pillow ever felt, "God knows, God cares."

"How does it happen," it was asked of a rarely lovely woman not long ago, "that Miss —— always understands people, and never hurts them, and says the right thing at the right time." The answer might have been that she had gone to a school where the Master himself takes peculiar pains with the scholars and had sat at his pierced feet and learned of him.

I am fain to believe that in heaven itself, beside the river of life and in the peace that passeth understanding, we will still, being ourselves and having in fullest perfection the qualities which here are only elementary, remember with sweet and blessed tenderness some of our earthly anniversaries of the heart.

AMARYLLIS

BY EMILY TOLMAN

"I have found Amaryllis!" exclaimed the Professor, triumphantly.

You might have supposed from his tone that he had discovered a gold mine, but I knew the Professor of old. As he stood in his dusty boots fanning his moist brow with one of those white helmet hats, which, however comfortable, cannot be called becoming, I inquired with as much interest as I could command on so warm a day: "Pray, who is Amaryllis, and where does she reside? Is she a foreign princess boarding at the Hygeia, or a Negro baby over on Sugar Hill?"

"Come and see," was the reply. "I shall have a horse and buggy here in a few minutes. Will you go?"

"It is pretty hot," I replied, feeling somewhat disinclined to leave the shady piazza, across which was blowing a refreshing breeze from Hampton Roads.

"It is worth the effort," returned the Professor, confidently.

"Well, then, I will be presented, if you think Amaryllis will not mind a shade hat and the absence of gloves."

The Professor looked smilingly at his turned-up trousers and replied, "I shall go as I am, with your permission. You would better take a sun umbrella," he added. "There is a plowed field to cross, and we shall have to walk a few steps."

At the last piece of information I felt half inclined to change my mind, but the buggy was at the gate. Curiosity and the Professor's enthusiasm prevailed.

The smooth oyster-shell road stretched out before us dazzling and dusty. It was May 19, but unusually warm for the season, even in Virginia. We soon left the main road and drove farther and farther from the blue waters of the bay back among the Negro cabins. On either side were neglected hedgerows, a tangle of wild shrubs and vines, where the fragrant rose reigned supreme, but which a few weeks later would be ablaze with scarlet trumpets. At last we stopped on the edge of a plowed field, in the midst of which stood a small thicket. Having lived in Virginia several years I at once concluded it to be an old family burial ground. Scattered here and there over the southern country may be seen these little cemeteries left to the protecting care of nature, which does better for them than our monumental art, with its cold granite and lifeless marble. Those to whom this was once a sacred spot have probably died or moved away, but the superstition of the Negro preserves the place from intrusion, and its unrestrained, luxuriant vegetation makes it a favorite haunt of the oriole and the mocking-bird.

After a short walk, if an undignified scramble over fresh furrows can be so called, we arrived, flushed and panting, at an apparently impenetrable wall of verdure. My companion, knowing a weak spot, made a breach and ushered me into the presence of Amaryllis. I dropped on my knees. The Professor looked satisfied. He thought it wholly the result of admiration. Truth compels me to confess that it was partly fatigue. Yet verily this was one of the sights of a lifetime. In the green inclosure, which gave no suggestion of sorrow or death, stood amid the tall grass, fair and stately, scores of Atamasco lilies (Amaryllis Atamasco).

"A very princess!" I exclaimed. In truth the thicket might have been a fortress into which a company of beautiful ladies had fled for refuge. Friendly locusts afforded them protecting shade. Lusty young maples extended strong arms for their defense. Stalwart trumpet creeper and prickly catbrier, armed cap-a pie, had woven an almost impenetrable barricade.

The Amaryllis, while not a true lily, much resembles that flower. It belongs to a family represented in our gardens by the narcissus and the daffodil, and in our northern meadows by the star grass (Hypoxys). Where could one find a flower more exquisitely lovely or more deserving of so poetical a name? It is about three inches long, funnel-shaped, spreading above and formed of six petal-like divisions of the most delicate texture, white faintly tinged with pink. Its six anthers, swinging on slender filaments, scatter a golden pollen. But of what use are words in describing a flower with a soul?

"Do you not feel like a criminal?" I asked, as the Professor placed one after another between the leaves of his botanical press.

"Not at all," he replied, complacently. "On the contrary, I feel like a benefactor. All these lovely flowers might have faded without gladdening a single human being but for my discovery."

"Are we the only creatures who appreciate the flowers?" I rejoined. "Who knows whether the mocking-bird that sings so rapturously from the maple bough may not have been inspired to sweeter strains by the very blossom you hold in your hand? Perhaps his song will cheer some lonely passer-by, who may in turn incite to nobler life multitudes of his fellowmen. Victor Hugo affirms: 'The radiance of the stars benefits the rose; no thinker would dare to say that the perfume of the hawthorn is useless to the constellations.'"

"If that be true, then surely this flower has not lived in vain, and can well afford to die in the interests of science."

"Who loves the flowers best, the poet or the botanist?" I inquired.

"The poet, I suppose you would say," returned the Professor, "and perhaps you are right if the botanist is, as you assume, a mere scientist. But suppose he is also a poet, not necessarily writing poetry, but feeling it. Suppose he looks upon a beautiful flower, not merely as a specimen, but as a friend. Will his knowledge of its botanical structure prevent a thrill of genuine emotion? Does the physician love his child the less because he understands its anatomy? No. Even so the poet-botanist will love the soul of the flower. Who could ever again be quite the same sordid creature, having knelt in the presence of the Atamasco lily?"

"Do you miss one blossom?" he added, as he closed his press a few minutes later.

Looking upon the fair and radiant company I confessed that I did not.

"Nor will the mocking-bird," he replied.

I have not seen Amaryllis since that day, ten years ago, but the memory of its matchless loveliness is enshrined in my heart of hearts forever.

GLADSTONE'S SCHOOLDAYS

BY JANET SANDERSON

One day at election time in Liverpool, many years ago, there was a cheering crowd in front of a large, old-fashioned, twc-storied house, from the balcony of which the great English Canning was speaking. Near the speaker stood a nurse with a little three-year-old boy, who was destined to fill a larger space in history than the man addressing the cheering crowd. The little fellow was born in 1809, and he himself tells us that he remembers when he was four years old that his mother took him to visit Hannah More, who gave him one of her little books because, as she told him, he had just come into the world and she was just going out; and he recalls visiting Edinburgh the next year and hearing the glass rattle in the windows of the Royal Hotel with the roar of the castle guns as they announced one of the steps in the progress of Napoleon to Elba.

William Gladstone's boyhood was passed in the midst of associations calculated to foster and encourage the natural development of his special genius. His father took great pleasure in talking with his clever little son about the public questions of the day. William heard both political and commercial matters discussed by his father and friends, and his quick intellect was early trained to a recognition of many important principles and a familiarity with current topics, which did him good service in after life.

Before the child emerged from nursery teaching in the old-fashioned Liverpool home, where he had lived nine years, his family moved to Seaforth House, a residence more in accordance with the position of a wealthy merchant. Of this place William says more than eighty years afterward: "I used as a small boy to look southward along the shore from my father's windows at Seaforth to the town. Four miles of the most beautiful sands that I ever knew offered to the aspirations of the youthful rider the most delightful method of finding access to Liverpool." He does not forget to mention also the wild roses that grew by the wayside.

William's first schooldays were spent at the vicarage of Seaforth and his teacher complains of the boy's dullness in arithmetic. Dean Stanley tells in his happy way that "there is a small school near Liverpool at which Mr. Gladstone was brought up before he went to Eton. A few years afterward another little boy who went to this school, and whose name I will not mention, called upon the old clergyman who vas the head master. The boy was now a oung man and he said to the old clergyman, 'There is one thing in which I have ever in the least degree improved since I vas at school—the casting up of figures.'

"'Well,' replied the master, 'it is very exraordinary that it should be so because ertainly no one could be a more incapable rithmetician at school than you were; but will tell you a curious thing. When Wilam Gladstone was at the school he was ust as incapable at addition and subtracon as you were; now you see what he has ecome. He is one of the greatest of our nanciers.'"

Even though William was dull at figures, e was an active, clever lad who showed bility in other studies which his father vas not slow to recognize, and one bright norning, when only eleven years old, the oy with pale face and brown, curling hair eft his Seaforth home, his able father, his entle mother, his vicarage school and the everend teacher who had failed in teachng the rules of arithmetic for Eton, where ne of the masters called him "the prettist little boy that ever went to Eton." There were two older brothers here at chool and he went to board with them at Irs. Shureys. Opposite her house s the wall where he carved his ame, which may still be seen. t Eton we find him imbued with love of work and not ashamed o fulfill the purpose for which he vas sent to school, which earned im the name of "Sap." He took p Greek and Latin, divinity from he Greek Testament, Tomline n the Thirty-nine Articles, Engsh literature, ancient and modern eography, all of which he readily cquired and soon distinguished imself by his success in Latin ersification.

It seems strange to learn that his future chancellor was taught o mathematics here and only the hree first rules of arithmetic; either did he receive any religious nstruction. On Sunday the boys stayed in ed till ten o'clock and at half past ten atended chapel service, where the parishioners omplained that the boys did not enter chapel ill the last stroke of the bell, then rushed n helter-skelter, shoving and pushing each ther, laughing and making all the noise ossible. Between two and three o'clock n the afternoon the pupils had to muster n the upper schoolroom, where subjects or the week's Latin theme were given out nd pages read from Blair's sermons or naxims of Epictetus.

William was not inclined to athletics, only t times sculling, playing cricket and hockey. One of the school boys often declared he vas never seen to run without challenge or contradiction, but he loved long walks with is congenial friends.

He was a God fearing, orderly, conscientious boy and exercised an influence for good even in these early years, for the Bishop of Salisbury writes, "I was a thoroughly idle boy at Eton, but I was saved from worse things by getting to know William Gladstone." He was not only pure-minded and courageous, but humane. He took an active part in protesting against the cruel practice of cutting off pigs' tails by the Eton boys at the fair on Ash Wednesday and dared them, if they were proud of their work, to sport the trophies in their hats. On the following Ash Wednesday he found three freshly-amputated pigtails hung in a bunch on his door with a paper bearing this inscription: "Quisquis amat porcos, porcis amabitur illis: Cauda sit exemplum ter repetita tibi." Gladstone wrote underneath a challenge to the mutilators of the pigs to come and take a receipt, which he would mark in good round hand upon their faces.

The Eton Society in his day was a remarkable group of brilliant boys. There were Arthur Henry Hallam, whose friendship with Tennyson and early death produced one of the noblest poems of our time—In Memoriam—George Augustus Selwyn, afterwards the famous Bishop of New Zealand and who died Bishop of Lichfield, Francis Hastings Doyle, who became professor of poetry at Oxford, Milnes Gaskell and Charles Canning. With these men Gladstone formed lasting friendships.

GLADSTONE AND HIS SISTER*

In the last year of his schooldays at Eton he took part in launching the Eton Miscellany, under the pseudonym of "Bartholomew Bouverie," and was editor and its most prolific contributor. Thirteen papers appeared from his pen in the first volume, among them a poem in heroic couplet, celebrating the achievements of Richard Cœur de Lion. To the second volume he contributed seventeen papers. He turned his hand to every kind of authorship—prologues, epilogues, leading articles, essays, satirical and humorous, poetry and classical translation. The Miscellany would have been given up but for his untiring energy and tact. He stupefied his co-workers by his prodigious capacity for work.

At the age of eighteen William bade farewell to Eton. Few of the pupils were so well grounded in that classical learning chiefly valued there, and his ability was recognized by his companions. James Milnes Gaskell said: "Gladstone is no ordinary individual, and perhaps if I were called upon to select the person I am intimate with to whom I should first turn in an emergency, and whom I thought in every way pre-eminently distinguished for high excellence, I think I should turn to Gladstone." And Hallam prophesied: "Whatever may be our lot, I am confident that Gladstone is a bud that will bloom with a richer fragrance than almost any whose early promise I have witnessed." Gladstone himself, looking into the future from out these Eton days, wrote: "A successful début, an offer from the ministry, a secretaryship of state, and even the premiership itself are the objects which form the vista along which a young visionary loves to look."

A pleasant glimpse of the young man at this period is given us in a home letter of Arthur Stanley, then a boy:

> William Gladstone is at home now, and last Tuesday I and one of the other boys were invited to breakfast with him. We had breakfast in grand style, went into the garden and devoured strawberries, unchained the great Newfoundland and swam in the pond; we walked about the garden, went into the house and saw beautiful pictures of Shakespeare's plays and came away at twelve o'clock. It was very good fun and I don't think I was very shy, for I talked to William almost all the time about all sorts of things. He is so very good-natured and I like him very much. He lent me books to read when we went away.

Gladstone next became the pupil of Dr. Turner. He applied himself to learn what he had not been taught at Eton, and after some months entered Christ Church, Oxford, with a goodly knowledge of mathematics. Few young men with a taste for languages, literature, writing and speech-making would have cared to take up a new and difficult branch of study merely to achieve a perfect self-education. During his first year he had rooms in the old library near the hall, but he passed most of his student days in the Canterbury Quad, in the rooms where were held the brilliant assemblies of the Weg, a select debating club which took its name from the initials of the founder, W. E. G.

There was a fast set at Christ Church and students were under strong temptations, but Gladstone was so reasonable and steady, and took such pleasure in healthy amusements, cheerful society and vigorous study that he was quite able to overcome them. Naturally robust and muscular, he cultivated his bodily powers by regular active exercise, and his high moral nature kept him from the temptation to indulge in enervating luxuriousness. A brisk walk of thirty miles was a small matter to the handsome, resolute student of strongly marked features, with pale complexion, masses of dark hair and eyes of piercing luster. He allowed nothing to interfere with his regular morning's work. He read four hours, then took a long walk, and read again two or three hours before bedtime. He attended the lectures of Dr. Burton on divinity and Dr. Pusey on Hebrew, and read classics privately with the Bishop of St. Andrew's.

The Oxford Union, that famous debating society where so many of England's greatest statesmen, lawyers and divines trained their oratorical powers and learned their first lessons in practical politics, offered great attractions to Gladstone. He was its secretary and later its president.

Oxford laid greater stress upon a knowledge of the Bible and of the evidences of Christianity than upon classical literature, and some proficiency was required also in mathematics or the science of reasoning. The course of study was comprehensive, the method of examination searching, and Gladstone achieved no small triumph when, in 1831, he completed his academical career by attaining the highest honors of the university—graduating double first class. Thus honorably he left Oxford and his schooldays to enter a wider field in the world's school. How able and masterly a pupil he has become all the world knows.

---

*Reproduced from Harper's Magazine by permission. Copyright, 1882, by Harper & Brothers.

Closet and Altar

Humility teaches us the necessity of prayer, fervor gives it flight and endurance, trust provides it with an immovable foundation.

The real distinction between Jesus and his disciples was his incredible approachableness, that he could get nearer to men than men could. The Son of God because he would almost rather have been called the Son of Man, he abolished forever the divinity of distance and made fellowship the supreme attribute of God. With heroic simplicity he risked his mission on earth and founded his title to be ruler of men upon letting them be familiar with him. The gospel consisted in knowing him. Redemption consisted in living with him. Salvation, impossible as an act, became inevitable as an acquaintance, and the whole New Testament wins our hearts because our hearts are woven into it.—Gerald Stanley Lee.

O, Jesus Christ, grow thou in me,
And all things else recede;
My heart be daily nearer thee
From sin be daily freed.

In thy bright beams which on me fall
Fade every evil thought;
That I am nothing, thou art all,
I would be daily taught.

Make this poor self grow less and less;
Be thou my life and aim;
O, make me daily, through thy grace,
More worthy of thy name!

You cannot trace Jesus; you cannot analyze Jesus. His intense spirituality of soul, his simplicity of thought, his continual self abnegation and his unaffected humility descended on a worn out, hopeless world like dew upon the dry grass.—John Watson.

If we truly feel that the Lord liveth before whom we stand we shall want nothing else for our work but his smile; and we shall feel that the light of his face is all we need. That thought should deaden our love for outward things. How the things that we fever our souls by pursuing and fret our hearts when we lose will cease to attract! How small and vulgar the "prizes" of life, as people call them, will appear.—A. Maclaren.

We present ourselves to thee today, our Father. Prepare us for what thou seest to be waiting for us in the valley of the day, now veiled in mist. Let not sin have dominion over us. If temptation assails, may it find no foothold in our hearts; if we pass through scenes where the infection of evil is strong, may we not be susceptible to it; if we are strongly provoked, may we not yield. If thou goest not with us carry us not up hence. Apart from thee we can do nothing. Be nearer to us than our dearest friend; be closer to us than the most insidious craft of the enemy. May we put on the Lord Jesus, so that he shall be the vesture of our souls. Be with us as our Shepherd, keeping us; as our Captain, leading us; as our Friend, warning and helping us. Let the secret place of the Most High be our home and the shadow of the Almighty our abiding place. Do more than go with us: dwell in us, walk in us, possess us, use us. When we are most absorbed in our necessary business, may thy presence not withdraw itself, but be permanent and abiding. We ask t in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Tangles

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

46. ENIGMA

Since my hard career in the world began,
Faithful servant I've been to my master, man.
Now a child was given to my tender care,
And how safely and warmly 'twas cherished there!
A pale artist, toiling in poverty,
Found a faithful helper and friend in me;
A fair ship was builded—whose arm but mine
Helped to shape and fashion each graceful line?
And when gleaming acres of yellow grain
For the scythe were ripe on the rolling plain,
With the weary reapers, from sun to sun,
How I worked till the harvesting was done!

But to love and toil and be cast away—
'Tis a common thing in our careless day.
Soon the child I held in his infancy
Scorned that clasp—he no longer needed me;
And the artist, winning both wealth and fame,
Threw me down, unthanked, when the bright days came;
My fair ship set out for a far-off shore,
Coming back to my outstretched arms no more;
And the night the last of the sheaves were stored,
And the reapers sat at their well-filled board,
All alone in the stubble I lay forgot—
It is only a humble servant's lot!

MABEL P.

47. A PRIZE MENU

At a recent lunch party considerable amusement was excited by the menu, which was made out in the following blind manner, and was puzzled out by the diners, to whom prizes were awarded by the hostess for the most complete and next best solutions of its mysteries. [In order that our readers may share in the interest of the diners the prize offers are now repeated. That is, Tangles will give an Oxford Teachers' Bible to the sender of the best list of the articles, and another fine prize for the next best list. The answers must be received within twelve days from the date of this issue.]

Soup

Town in Wisconsin.

Fish

Cape in Massachusetts. Bay in Lake Superior. Lake in Michigan. River in Idaho. Rock at mouth of Firth of Forth.

Entrees

Town in Illinois. River of Montana.

Roast

Lake in California and Oregon. Country in Europe. River in Tennessee. Islands in the Grecian Archipelago.

Vegetables

River in Vermont. River in Alabama. County in Mississippi.

Pudding

Town in Illinois.

Pie and Cake

Post village in Alabama. City in New Jersey. Creek in Alabama. Town in Illinois. River in Michigan.

Drinks

County in Alabama. Post village in Florida. River in Montana. City in Michigan.

RUTH HALL.

48. DECAPITATIONS

The loud winds blew, the foam wreaths flew.
High tossed the briny ONE;
The frightened crew began to TWO
As though all hope were done.
No eye could see a single THREE
From sun or moon or stars.
"Helm hard a-lee!" cried Captain Free;
"FOUR, FOUR, sir!" cried the tars.

DOROTHEA.

49. PRESIDENTIAL PUZZLE

(Give the names of the presidents, with States, which are those of birth, and complete the dates.)

1. "Tippecanoe," of "The Old Dominion," was inaugurated in 1*4*. 2. "The Son of His Grandfather," of "The Buckeye State," was inaugurated 88. 3. "The Father of the Constitution," of the "Mother of States," was inaugurated 19. 4. "Old Hickory," of "The Turpentine State," was inaugurated 9. 5. "Rough and Ready," of "The Mother of Presidents," was inaugurated 4*. 6. "Unconditional Surrender," of "The Buckeye State," was inaugurated 18*9. 7. "The Man of Destiny," of "The Garden State," was inaugurated 15. 8. "The Colossus of Independence," of "The Old Bay State," was inaugurated 17. 9. "The Railsplitter," of "The Blue Grass State," was inaugurated 1*6*.

DOROTHEA.

ANSWERS

40. Educate (Ed-you-Kate).

41. 1. NRG (energy). 2. NME (enemy). 3. NV (envy). 4. XLNT (excellent). 5. IV (ivy). 6. SX (Essex). 7. IOU. 8. DK (decay). 9. EZ (easy). 10. MT (empty). 11. FEG (effigy). 12. KN (Cayenne). 13. SA (essay). 14. XS (excess). 15. RA (array).

42.
M
M A D
M E T A L
M A T U R E D
D A R E D
L E D
D

43. 12,801 square feet. (The area includes a quadrant having a radius of 100 feet; two sectors, each with a radius of 100 feet and an arc embraced between the radius of the quadrant and a parallel line 25 feet distant; and two right-angled triangles, each with a hypothenuse of 100 feet and a perpendicular of 25 feet.)

44. "But what has been, has been, and I have had my hour."
(Dryden's Imitation of Horace, Bk. III., Ode 29.)

45. 1. General Depression. 2. General Debility. 3. General Prosperity. 4. General Health. 5. General Appearance. 6. General Impression. 7. General Good Time.

Recent tangles have been hard, but the solvers include: Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt., 35, 36, 37, 39; S. R. T., Portsmouth, N. H., 36, 37; Marguerite H. Rogers, Bar Harbor, Me., 36, 37; Annie, Cambridge, Mass., 36. Nobody answered 38. One solver conquered 39, which was a "very ingenious puzzle," Nillor declares.

Our young tanglers will be interested to learn that the winner of the first prize in the last solving contest is only fifteen years old.

* * *

An idle poet, here and there,
Looks round him; but for all the rest,
The world, unfathomably fair,
Is duller than a witling's jest.
Love wakes men; once a lifetime each,
They lift their heavy lids, and look;
And lo! what one sweet page can teach
They read with joy, then shut the book.
And some give thanks, and some blaspheme,
And most forget; but, either way,
That and the Child's unheeded dream
Is all the light of all their day.

—Coventry Patmore.

* * *

The measure of manhood is the degree of skill attained in the art of carrying one's self so as to pour forth upon men all the inspirations of love and hope and to evoke good even from the meanest and wickedest of mankind. —W. D. Hillis.

Don't blame the cake-box if your cake dries up quickly. It will keep moist and fresh if you use Cleveland's Baking Powder.

The Conversation Corner

DEAR CORNERERS: I know very well that you will read that letter in the middle of the page the very first thing! Aren't we all glad to hear from Pomiuk? Although the letter was written three months ago—coming by the one winter dog-team mail—we will hope that he is still alive and happy, and that before long we shall get fuller news. He wrote the letter with a pencil on a common sheet of note paper. A lady friend of the Corner traced it over with India ink so that it could be photographed for you. It is reduced in size about one-half.

I think I can hear the echo of your laugh as you read his account of Sister Cecilia's making his trousers. The poor little fellow is so much deformed by his hip disease that it must require a very skillful tailoress to fit him! The accident which made "I very frightened" was doubtless on Dr. Grenfell's passage across the Straits of Belle Isle when homeward bound late in November—much too late for any vessel to be on that coast. In rounding Cape Bauld, on the northern end of Newfoundland, a rivet blew out in the engine of the Sir Donald and, although the engineer narrowly escaped, the little steamer was at the mercy of the winds and waves. Fortunately, a St. John's steamer hove in sight and towed them into a neighboring harbor, where the damage was repaired.

The captain's last injunction to the doctor was to get under way as soon as ever he could, as ice was forming fast. But Dr. Grenfell had many sick folk to attend to in that settlement, and when he had finished performing some operation necessary to save the life of a boy and returned on board at four o'clock in the morning he started at once—just in time to get out of the harbor. A letter in the London "Toilers" from the missionary surgeon left on the shore says Dr. G. had the same experience a week before when at night he had to cut his way out of the Labrador harbor—"and by morning it was one solid sheet of ice, so that the people talked for the next few days of the narrow escape the doctor had from being frozen in."

You will all be glad to hear a word from our good friend of the Deep Sea Mission, who writes both from London, and from Great Yarmouth among the fishermen. He gives a touching instance of the loss of one of the North Sea workers.

> . . . A man brought me yesterday the front cut out of a jersey, with our badge—Mission to the Deep Sea Fishermen—in bright red letters on the dark blue wool. It looked quite new. "Where did you get that?" I asked. "It was cut from the breast of Harry Brown's jersey, who was washed overboard from the Alice Fisher on Dec. 17 last." Thirty-four days he was washed about on the bottom of the sea, when the great net of the smack Alert swept him up. He was only twenty-three years old. He is the eleventh called home direct from his post of duty in our mission.
>
> . . . Have just returned from a big conference at Grimsby and Hull with the fishermen. God blessed us much at Easter. I am off to sea next week, but return for our annual meeting May 20, at which Lord Kinnaird presides. Meanwhile I send on a vessel to Shetland to await me, and then I go straight up [by rail evidently to the north of Scotland] and join it, and cruise between Faroe's and Iceland for a bit. My love to all the Cornerers. You all made such a warm, snug corner for me in America, I feel as if I had a "bit o' hame" out there. So now I will say good-by to you in its old English sense—God be wi' ye! Yours affectionately, W. T. G.

The Master's blessing go with the doctor as he cruises in the Master's name among the fisher folk of the far North. With his love for them, and his Anglo-Saxon love of the sea and of adventure, I do not suppose he will be satisfied until he hoists his mission flag to the top of the North Pole! Meanwhile a young Christian worker from Newfoundland, already familiar with "the Labrador," and whom Dr. Grenfell met providentially one day in the Faneuil Hall meeting, has just started this week for St. John's to accompany the Deep Sea Mission vessel to the coast, being in special charge of the "co-operative work," from which Dr. Grenfell expects so much. By him I have sent a package to Gabriel, with letters, a scrap-book full of beautiful pictures made by children interested in him, also a box of painting apparatus, which Dr. G. thought would be useful to him, a small writing desk, etc. Keep your northern ear open for his laugh about July 4!

Battle Harbour.
Feb. 6th 1897.

Aushenai Dr Grenfell.

I'm very glad that I can walk with crutches now. not much yet. Sister very good. make me trowsers. very warm. trowsers hard to make, Sister says me funny shape. One got a nice little slipper. Sister make she make me a coat soon. I very frightened When me hear "Sir Donald" almost lost. I am knitting braces Aushenai very much Dr Grenfell. Gabriel. POMIUK

WAKEFIELD, KAN.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have been very much interested in hearing about Pomiuk. I send —— for him. I should have liked very much to have been in Boston and heard Dr. Grenfell tell about him, but the next best thing is to read about him in the Corner. I think you will be pleased to know that I have found the history you sent me two years ago [as a prize] of great help in my studies. JULIA G.

IOWA.

My Dear Mr. Martin: Theodore has such an interest in Pomiuk that he persuaded me to tell our Sunday school children about him, and, although I didn't ask for any money for him, I have been receiving small sums all the week. MRS. B.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

What the Old Children Say. Two things they said were left out of a recent Scrap-book column, but they were good enough to keep over:

YPSILANTI, MICH.

. . . I feel myself almost too old to be a "Cornerer," but I heartily enjoy the good things I find every week in the "Corner Scrap-book." I well remember the story of "The Two Lambs" [see March 11], which in the form of a primer—with a blue cover—my father gave me when a small boy, away back in the early forties. Children's books of those days were mostly in the form of primers and tracts, and as you say were "far too old for children" usually. But as we children of pioneers in the Michigan wilderness had nothing more suitable and had plenty of time to read them over and over, we generally mastered the thoughts and received impressions for good that were lasting. They were as a "nail in a sure place"—golden nails that never corroded nor lost their strength, but held us through a long lifetime firmly to the "sure foundation." J. W. A.

HOLLIS, N. H.

. . . Thanks for the little worn copy of the "Two Lambs." I have not seen it since I was a bit of a girl, perhaps four years old, when my mother used to read it to me, in her sweet, pathetic voice, on Sunday afternoons. I think I took into my heart then the great tenderness and compassion of God for his inexperienced and wayward children, and have never since doubted his forgiveness for our "sins, negligencies and ignorances," if we only come back to him. MRS. A.

An Old Book Wanted—by a lady in Florida:

My Dear Mr. Martin: Your Cornerers seem to have a little knowledge on almost every subject that is brought up. I wonder if I can get any light on the title of a book of poems which was the delight of my four-years-old heart, but which disappeared mysteriously. I can give few titles—"Meddlesome Mattie" is the only one I recall at present. Other pieces contained the lines:

You are old, father William, the young man cried;

An old apple tree, healthy and green,
Which bore the best codlins that ever were seen;

Two good little girls, Marianna and Maria,
As happily lived as good girls could desire.

Another concerned Brunette and Bianchidine. It would be a great satisfaction to know the name of the book, a still greater one to see it, although that I do not expect. LOWELL.

An Old Fable Wanted. It is this:

ANDOVER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: When a boy in school I read in some book the fable, The Turkey and the Rattlesnake. In the colloquy one is made to say, "Did not my grandfather swallow an alligator alive, and can I not swallow such a little insignificant thing as you without winking?" After that was a battle resulting in the death of both combatants. The rest of the fable and its moral I cannot recall. Can you throw any light on the subject? C. H. G.

I cannot. All I can say is that I wish some rattlesnake or alligator would appear and swallow up the real Turkey of the present day!

A Chicago Lady's Question. Can any one answer it?

Dear Mr. Martin: I am delighted that the Corner page furnishes us with so many things that might otherwise never be recalled. And now I desire assistance in regard to a poem that I could once repeat, but can now recall only two lines of:

Goodness untried is no goodness at all,
Angels turn demons when tempted to fall.

ADMIRER OF CORNER PAGE.

Another Query. A lady brought it into the library a few days ago. These are the first lines—what is the rest?

The human heart is a wondrous thing;
Its chords are touched by the thoughts that swing
From that hidden fount, the soul;
Who hath power to wake in its strings
A song of love and hope
Wields a scepter strong,
A power that few may hold.

L. H. M

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR MAY 30 Jas. 2: 14–23

CHRISTIAN FAITH LEADS TO GOOD WORKS

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The lesson from this epistle is placed at this point in the series because it is believed to have been written by the moderator of the council whose action was the theme of the last lesson.

In order to understand a letter we must know something of the author, of those to whom it is addressed, of the time and circumstances under which it was written, and of the author's aim. Of the author and the date not much can be learned outside of the letter itself and the book of Acts. The first step then for the student is, with such knowledge as he has of the circumstances and the people concerned, to read carefully the entire epistle. Then, with the outside aid at his disposal, he may form his judgment as to the meaning of the passage before us.

The author of this letter bore the name of the patriarch Jacob, which through various changes has become in English James. He was not the brother of John, for that James had been killed by Herod years before there were Christian Jews scattered abroad to be addressed by such a letter as this He was probably the son of Alpheus [Luke 6: 15], who married the sister of the mother of Jesus. He was therefore the cousin, often called the brother, of the Lord. Jesus appeared to him after his resurrection [1 Cor. 15: 7]. He was the man whom Paul interviewed on his first visit to Jerusalem after his conversion [Gal. 1: 19]. Paul was at that time introduced by Barnabas to James and Peter, who received him into fellowship in the church. This James, surnamed the Just, was not only the moderator of the Jerusalem council, but the man whose words had the greatest weight in it.

There are good, though not conclusive, reasons for believing that this epistle was written not far from the time of that council. It has been argued that the letter could not have been written immediately after the council, for if it had been it would have contained some reference to it. Some allusions in the letter have been thought to indicate a later date, for example, chap. 5: 1 has been supposed to refer to the impending destruction of Jerusalem. To my mind, a day not far from the council is most probable. Paul had explained to James privately [Gal. 2: 2] the gospel he had been preaching to the Gentiles, in which he had urged them to believe on Jesus Christ as the only thing necessary to salvation. James assented to this as genuine gospel for Gentiles, but he made a distinction between Gentiles and Jews. He held that the former needed only to observe Jewish customs so far as to keep them in harmony with Jewish Christians, and the council adopted his view [Acts 15: 19–21]. The new faith kindled in Gentiles would move them to live to please him whom they had begun to trust for their salvation. But there were also converted Jews in all these communities where Gentile churches had been formed who had based their hope on their obedience to the law of Moses, which commanded them to live righteously. What would be more natural than that under Paul's preaching they should fall into the error of supposing that by believing on Jesus they might be saved without making further effort to live in obedience to divine laws?

James the Just would naturally fear this danger for this class of disciples, to whom he addressed this letter. He understood their peculiar trials and sympathized with them. He knew their temptations and against these he warned them. Some of these temptations are still characteristic of Jews, though all Christians need to be taught to avoid them. One was fatalism, laying the responsibility for their sins on God [chap. 1: 13, 14]. Another was fanaticism, which made them quarrelsome in defense of their religious views [chap. 1: 20]. Their coarseness and malice in arguing for these views needed to be supplanted by Christlike utterance of truth springing from a new spirit within [chap. 1: 21]. But mere hearing of such utterance, even with formal assent to the truths proclaimed, while their own speech continued unbridled, did not make their religion of value. Not formal ceremonies, such as Jews had been trained to practice, but hearty service to the needy, would make their religion acceptable to God [chap. 1: 23–27]. Further, these Jews were tempted to be insolent to the poor and meanly subservient to the rich, though the rich oppressed them and blasphemed their name of Christian [chap. 2: 6, 7].

As Jews they had been peculiarly liable to be deceived by thinking that descent from Abraham was in itself sufficient to make them acceptable to God. John the Baptist had indignantly swept that false prop from under such persons [Luke 3: 8, 9], and had told them that their character would be tested, not by their pedigree, but by the fruit they produced. Paul was now telling the Gentiles that Abraham, while he was yet uncircumcised like themselves, was counted righteous because he trusted in God. We may infer this from what he later wrote [See Rom. 4: 1–12]. What more natural than that converted Jews should think they could be disciples of Christ simply by believing that Christ would save them? But James told them that Abraham's faith was proved to be genuine by its influence on his life. His trust in God made him equal to the task of laying his only Son on the altar [v. 21]. Believers are saved by the grace of God. Faith appropriates that grace. The life of obedience to God shows that faith has appropriated the grace that saves. Good wishes are empty words without deeds to make them effective. When a man says to a sufferer, May you be relieved, and simply looks on with idle hands when he has power to make his wish a fact, who cares for his hollow words and empty heart [vs. 15–17]? So when a man says, Christ is my Redeemer and dishonors Christ by his life, who respects the man? Not his fellowmen, certainly; much less God.

But in Christian history these two sides of Christian character have seldom been equally honored at the same time. In Luther's time the faith side received undue emphasis. He called the letter of James "a right strawy epistle," though he seems later to have withdrawn this statement. He laid the chief emphasis on belief, and so did his successors. Yet this epistle is more like the teachings of Jesus than any other in the New Testament. Many of its sentences are almost reproductions of those in the Sermon on the Mount. Its doctrine was an essential thing in Peter's preaching, who said, "God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to him."

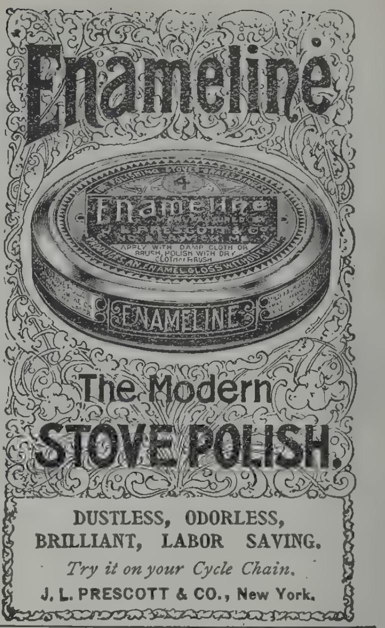
The prevailing tendency today is to lay the chief emphasis on the ethical side of religion, as James did; and to neglect, as he did not, the importance of believing in Christ as the abiding motive to good works. The time will come when Paul's doctrine of justification by faith will again come to the front, with a tidal wave of grateful emotion in contemplating redeeming grace. But the poise of Christian character is only reached by those who can say, with Paul, "By grace have ye been saved, through faith: not of works"; "but faith working through love."

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, May 23–29. The Peril of Intemperate Speech. Jas. 3: 1–18; Ps. 39.

Peril to ourselves. To our friends and neighbors. To the honor of Christ in the world.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]



DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

"All Wool and a Yard Wide."

That means honest material and measure that will give you good service and perfect satisfaction in every way.

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH is all shine and no scratch. That means that its an honest material for cleaning Silver and the only one that will give you perfect results.

It's unlike any other Silver Polish.

The proof can be had for the asking.
Send your address to us. Grocers sell it.
The Electro Silicon Company, New York.

"Sanitas" Book Free.

"How to Disinfect," an illustrated book giving practical instruction for disinfection in everyday life and during cases of infectious illness, sent free.

Every one having the care of a house or an institution should have it.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.
636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

GRANULA
Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.
Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.
The Perfect Health Food

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.
Pure, Delicious Flavor. Mix with boiling milk or water, and it's made.
Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

SOME ASPECTS OF RELIGIOUS LIFE IN NEW ENGLAND

In this volume are embodied the lectures delivered on the Carew Foundation before the Hartford Theological Seminary last year by Rev. G. L. Walker, D. D. They are five in number and have special reference to Congregationalists. They deal primarily with religious history and life rather than ecclesiastical. They contain a study and résumé of theological development in this country, which illustrate the learning and skill of an expert student, the graphic power of expression of a master of utterance and a conscientious candor. They bring out primarily the prevalent Calvinism of the early Colonial settlers, and emphasize the fact that this type of faith existed generally in England also. They sketch the development of formalism everywhere and point out its causes. It is indicated with exceptional clearness and power that they who had fled from a state religion practically established one themselves. The influence of the Halfway Covenant in developing religious formalism also is pointed out, and never, to our knowledge, has it been described so forcibly before.

The Great Awakening and its sequels are portrayed concisely but lucidly, and the national and evangelical reawakening which followed and the development of the Unitarian controversy also are outlined perspicuously. In regard to the current period, that including the last forty years, the important facts are narrated, but much caution is exhibited in drawing inferences from them, for the very good reason that matters still are in a transitional state, so that it is too soon to determine what the outcome is to be. The author, however, does not lack confidence in the continuing power and ultimate triumph of the gospel, appreciating the fact that although the type of piety today is largely different from that which prevailed half a century ago, it none the less abounds in evidences of genuineness. The book is an important addition to those which relate to the spiritual history of our country, and it will go far to impart not merely knowledge of the past, but also of the proper spirit in which to deal with such subjects as those which it discusses. [Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.25.]

THE EVOLUTION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

This book, by Sydney G. Fisher, has special importance in two respects. In the first place it is a careful and skillful exposition of the origin and development of our national Constitution. Secondly, it is a thoroughgoing refutation of the claims of the late Douglas Campbell and others that almost everything of any importance in our political system is due to Dutch influence. Mr. Fisher's theory is that the Constitution, to use his own words, "is neither an invention nor an imitation, but almost exclusively a native product of slow and gradual growth." This theory he demonstrates satisfactorily and fully. His method is to begin with the earliest American Colonial documents, and, studying every material clause of each, to come down through charters, constitutions and plans of union to the Constitution itself, and to show in this way how the different provisions of successive documents grew out of the local or national conditions, were developed by changing circumstances almost wholly domestic, and finally bore fruit in the most natural and inevitable manner in the Constitution.

It is not too much to say that he has demonstrated his position triumphantly. No candid reader, we are confident, can fail to accept his conclusion. This portion of the book is rather a political study than an ordinary narrative and will be most appreciated by the student of legal and political affairs, although it is sufficiently readable to be comprehended by any one. It contains abundant citations from various documents and every point appears to be thoroughly fortified. The latter portion of the book deals directly with Mr. Campbell and his claim, and in a frank and direct fashion which is often amusing and usually, if not always, justified by the facts. Mr. Campbell's claims are treated with entire fairness, even if fun sometimes is poked at them with some freedom, and if Mr. Fisher's method frequently is the reductio ad absurdum it is not to be wondered at when Mr. Campbell's positions are considered.

Mr. Fisher is not always a polished writer, but he is terse, forceful and candid, and he has pursued Mr. Campbell relentlessly, showing the general untrustworthiness of his fundamental principles and also the errors in detail, the inconsistencies and the mischievousness of his view. Great patience and pertinacity are illustrated in following up these errors, and the task may be safely said to have been accomplished once for all. He points out with conspicuous effect the fact that the Dutch government, even in New York, was lacking in some of the most important features which Mr. Campbell commends at New Plymouth and cites as evidences of Dutch influence. The only distinct instance of the Pilgrims' appropriation of a Dutch custom seems to be that of marriage by magistrate instead of by minister, and for this credit is frankly given. The book is a very strong and successful piece of work. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.]

RELIGIOUS

The Chief End of Man [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50], by Mr. G. S. Merriam, is a finely written volume, thoughtful and at times profound and uplifting. It is an expression of moral and religious belief and aspiration from the point of view of a somewhat radical yet devoutly minded Unitarian, although we do not know that the author calls himself a Unitarian. The keynote of the book and of its theory of life is that one should do his best conscientiously, living day by day up to his ideal, accepting all new spiritual light which seems to be true light and obeying it regardless of consequences, and thus attaining peace for the present and fearlessness for the future. Mr. Merriam apparently regards Jesus as the noblest and holiest of men, but not as embodying deity. And, if we understand him aright, any sense of fellowship with God as a personal being, although agreeable and desirable, is unessential. If you prefer to conceive of God as a personal being—helper, friend, father—do so. There is no harm in that. In fact, to do so is good. It will help you. But if you feel impelled to live under the influence of a mere sense of duty, make the best of that. This seems to be Mr. Merriam's teaching. It is good as far as it goes, but it offers but a poor substitute for the Christian's faith and sense of divine fellowship. We see no great difference between Mr. Merriam's belief, as here declared, and that of the gentler, more exalted and refined paganism of the past—we say it in all courtesy—and, while we admire and respect all there is in it of nobility and helpfulness, we cannot accept it as sufficient for the enlightened soul. The latter part of the book is filled with meditations and suggestions, many of them prompted by the natural world. From beginning to end the volume is a choice example of literary beauty.

Prof. A. H. Newman's History of Anti-Pedobaptism [American Baptist Publication Society. $2.00] outlines in a scholarly and readily comprehensible manner the history of Baptist belief and teaching. It is written in a kindly and temperate spirit, abounds in sketches of the personalities and achievments of honored men, is well proportioned and discriminating and, for a short history of its subject, covers the ground in excellent fashion. It incautiously states, however, that William Bradford and William Brewster were members of John Smyth's church in Gainsborough. Nobody knows whether they were or not, and the probability is somewhat adverse. It also admits that John Smyth baptized himself, frankly confessing that "some Baptist writers have vainly attempted to weaken the force of the evidence and to repudiate the charge as calumnious."

Leo XIII and Modern Civilization [Eskdale Press. $1.50], by J. B. Miller, contains a somewhat detailed estimate of modern Roman Catholicism with some reference to ancient documents, but depending especially upon the utterances of the present pope and his predecessor, Pius IX. It points out that the Roman Catholic Church has been Jesuitized, largely owing to the Jesuit education of Pope Leo, and that its purpose now is to Jesuitize the world. It establishes some strong points against Roman Catholicism and is deserving of study and reflection. Nevertheless, we think it underestimates the corrective influence of American institutions and of the American spirit, and fails to do justice to the enlightened and independent spirit of many modern Roman Catholics, who, although loyal in spiritual things to their church and its leaders, refuse to be dictated to in matters outside of the strictly spiritual.

Gospel Questions and Answers [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents], by Dr. James Denney, is another devotional book, simple, telling and adapted to ordinary comprehension, yet dealing with many of the profundities of religion in a wholesome and inspiring way.——This volume, with Dr. Gibson's The Unity and Symmetry of the Bible, noticed last week, belongs to a series of four, similar in their tasteful type and binding. The third is Why Be a Christian? [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents], by Dr. Marcus Dods. It is offered to young men and discusses the trials of youth, the reasons for being a Christian, the hindrances, etc.——The last of the series is Dr. George Adam Smith's Four Psalms [Dodd, Mead & Co. 50 cents], i. e., the 23d, 36th, 52d and 121st. Dr. Smith interprets them for practical service. The book abounds in spiritual vitality which is contagious and beneficent.

In The Overcoming Life and Other Sermons [F. H. Revell Co. 50 cents] are nine sermons by Mr. Moody illustrating his best characteristics as a terse and telling exponent and enforcer of religious truth.——Kadesh-Barnea, or the Power of a Surren- dered Life [F. H. Revell Co. 50 cents], by Rev. J. W. Chapman, D. D., will be found helpful as a devotional interpretation of Israelitish and later history, and will do good.——The Heaven of the Bible [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50 cents], by Ida C. Craddock, is a study of the probable condition and character of heaven and its life, based upon intimations drawn from the Bible. It is intended to be reverent, but is much too literal and positive in its inferences. Sometimes it becomes ludicrous. The author believes that marriage, family life and society in general will continue in heaven as on earth, only in a purified condition. The extravagant extent to which she sometimes pursues her conclusions, however, may be illustrated by her mention, among utensils probably common in heaven, of "tooth brushes to be used after each luncheon from the tree of life" and "special implements for cleansing the wings of the cherubim and seraphim and also for smoothing the feathers," etc. On the whole, we hesitate to accept all her inferences without further reflection.

STORIES

The Mistress of the Ranch [Harper & Bros. $1 25] is by F. T. Clark. It is a picture of life in the far West and the plot is daring yet simple, and not especially incredible. The portrayal of character is exceptionally strong throughout the book, in fact, it consists of little but character sketching, but all in all it is one of the strongest of recent novels and has a psychological interest in more than one way.——The Sign of the Wooden Shoon [F. Warne & Co. $1.25], by Marshall Mather, is a remarkable book. The author, whom we understand to be a Nonconformist minister in England, is a master of Lancashire character and dialect, and the homely life of the little town here depicted has its picturesque and even its dramatic elements, and reveals many of the profundities of human nature. The author has made his characters live before the reader, and some of them take a strong hold upon the sympathies. The book is the work of an exceptionally able and promising mind.——In The Jessamy Bride [H. S. Stone & Co. $1 50], by F. Frankfort Moore, we are introduced to Dr. Johnson, Goldsmith, Garrick and their compeers, and brought into close and interesting touch with them in the London of their day. Goldsmith more than any one else is the hero of the story, the heroine of which is the Jessamy Bride. The love element in the book is skillfully handled and, while this story, too, has not much plot and is principally a series of skillfully drawn character sketches, it is entertaining from cover to cover and is written with conspicuous ability. It deserves a hearty welcome.

The Pomp of the Lavilettes [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.25] is another story by Gilbert Parker, not equal to his best previous work, but not by any means lacking in strength, brilliancy or interest. The French Canadian type of civilization and character is that described. The narrative is dramatic and a distinct and valuable moral lesson is inculcated, and the book has a vivid charm. It is also so compact in form as to be easily carried in the pocket, which will render it convenient to be read while traveling.——The Spirit of an Illinois Town and The Little Renault [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25] contains two stories of Illinois of different periods, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood. The former story is modern and represents the doings of ordinary people in an average town, among whom a somewhat striking and distinctly individual young woman becomes prominent and is made to serve as a heroine. The latter is a historical sketch of the time of Tonti and his comrades, and again a girl, less conventional and even more fascinating, is the central figure of the tale. The two stories go well together.

When the Century Was New [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00] is by Dr. C. C. Abbott, and is a readable story of the period indicated by the title, but not so successful, either in construction or in style, as the author's books on out-of-door life are in their different way, yet it is so readable that it is likely to be popular.——Charity Chance [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25], by Walter Raymond, appeared not long ago in our columns, and our readers doubtless remember it too well to need more than this brief announcement of its appearance in a volume. It is issued prettily.

SHORT STORIES

A Merry Maid of Arcady, His Lordship and Other Stories [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50] contains eight of the short stories of Mrs. Burton Harrison, who is at her best in work of this character, and the skill and gracefulness of whose sketches are too well known to need extended comment. These stories vary in scene, subject and treatment sufficiently to secure agreeable variety, and the book will be a favorite.——The Impudent Comedian and Others [H. S. Stone & Co. $1 50], by F. Frankfort Moore, contains half a dozen short stories dealing with actors and actresses of reputation in England some time ago, and written so brightly and amusingly as to be more than ordinarily entertaining. How far they are founded upon fact we do not know, but they are likely to be largely true and are striking pictures of exceptional men and women in circumstances of special interest.——The Dominant Note and Other Stories [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25] is by Mrs. W. K. Clifford. These are well constructed stories with a certain freshness of idea and some grace of expression. They are not likely to win the author eternal fame, but the present generation will pay them a fair tribute of respect.

The American Claimant and Other Stories and Sketches [Harper & Bros. $1.75] contains this well-known production and a number of others from the pen of the illustrious Mark Twain. The book abounds, of course, in illustrations of his peculiar vein of humor, and, while there is rather too much of it at once for our taste, there is no doubt about its general acceptability, and those who enjoy it will be glad to possess so much of it at once in so substantial and handsome a form.——A Willing Transgressor, and Other Stories [Roberts Bros. $1.25] is by A. J. Plympton. They are connected by the fact that they have a common scene and they deal somewhat effectively with several different types of moral and social progress. They are good examples of the successful short story.

The Ape, the Idiot and Other People [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25], by W. C. Morrow, contains a number of brief sketches, most of which, if not all, have previously been in print and which are characterized by a decided individuality which is striking and generally somewhat disagreeable. They are certainly powerful stories and quite out of the common, but originality seems to have been studied too much at the expense of agreeableness, not to say of good taste.

In A Story Teller's Pack [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50] eleven of Mr. Frank R. Stockton's short stories are grouped, and although most, if not all, of them have been printed before, the public will enjoy again the smiling audacity of the author in creating incredible situations and shaping them to his own results. The suave geniality of his style never fails, and the reader, if he do not break into actual ripples of laughter, and many readers will, can depend upon continual enjoyment from beginning to end.

The White Hecatomb and Other Stories [Henry Holt & Co. 75 cents] contains a dozen Kaffir and other African tales which are full of local color, and some of which are striking in their picturesqueness and power. They reveal much of the native character and superstitions and throw considerable light on life in that part of the world among the different races. They all are more than ordinarily interesting.——Six short, graphic and readable stories for boys and girls make up the pretty book called Sunbeam Stories and Others [Bonnell, Silver & Co. $1.00], by Annie Flint. They are charmingly told and prettily illustrated and bound.

MISCELLANEOUS

A volume of Letters from the Scenes of the Recent Massacres in Armenia [F. H. Revell & Co. $1 25], by J. R. Harris and Mrs. H. B. Harris, has been compiled and it throws vivid light upon the massacres and their consequences. Mr. and Mrs. Harris made a tour in Armenia about a year ago for the purpose of relieving distress, going out officially for that purpose from England. The book consists of their letters home, which are published without much alteration. It contains glowing accounts of both the awful occurrences themselves and of the philanthropic and Christian attempts to afford assistance and consolation. It has some illustrations.——Might Have Been [F. A. Stokes & Co. $1.25] is by Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker of London, and consists of notes suggested by occurrences in his career or by persons whom he has met. They are short and sketchy for the most part, are written in a genial and sometimes amusing manner, and deal with all sorts of subjects which are treated in many different manners and are rich in that peculiar individuality which renders Dr. Parker always striking and picturesque, whether one agrees entirely with his views or not.

Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons have brought out a very handsome volume to aid in beautifying one's grounds and garden, entitled Lawns and Gardens [$3.50], by N. Jonsson-Rose. The author is an expert, being at present in charge of Morningside and Riverside Parks in New York, and he has dealt with his subject in this volume at once scientifically and practically. The scientific element predominates, but the book is sufficiently popular to serve the needs of men who have no technical education. Its suggestions are judicious and its illustrations are attractive. Professional gardeners will prize it and amateurs may learn much from it.——The final volume of the New American Supplement to the Latest Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica [Werner Co. $3.00], edited by Prof. D. O. Kellogg, D. D., completes that work. It illustrates the ame knowledge and judicious skill which ave made its predecessors so valuable.

NOTES

—— The recent awakening of public inter-st in Grecian affairs has caused something of revival of the demand for Byron's writings.

—— The anti-cartoon bill in the New York egislature finally was killed by amendment. It is a pity that some measure of the sort was ot passed.

—— An elaborate scheme for the stealing of mportant historical documents from the library of Congress at Washington has just been detected, and the guilty parties are on rial.

—— The average sale of the nine books of he late Prof. Henry Drummond was 121,000 opies. The greatest Thing in the World sold o the amount of 330,000 copies. He was the most popular Scottish author of our time.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Lamson, Wolffe & Co. Boston.

Pictures of Russian History and Russian Literature. By Prince Serge Wolkonsky. pp. 283. $2 00.

Zuleka. By Clinton Ross. pp. 222. $1.50.

ames Clarence Mangan: Poems and a Study. Edited by Louise I. Guiney. pp. 361. $1 50.

Pilgrim Press. Boston.

Helpful Thoughts. Compiled by Sarah F. Day. pp. 384. $1.75.

Harper & Bros. New York.

A Loyal Traitor. By James Barnes. pp. 306. $1.50.

The Missionary Sheriff. By Octave Thanet. pp. 248 $1.25.

Leonora of the Yawmish. pp. 310. $1 25.

Flowers of Field, Hill and Swamp. By Caroline A. Creevey. pp 564. $2.50.

John Halifax, Gentleman. By Mrs. Craik. pp. 575. $1.75.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

Athletic Sports. By D. A. Sargent, M. D., and others. pp. 318. $1.50

The French Revolution and English Literature. By Edward Dowden. pp. 285. $1 25.

Mountain Climbing. By Edw. L. Wilson and others. pp. 358. $1 50.

Thomas Whittaker. New York.

Reconsiderations and Reinforcements. By James M. Whiton. pp. 149. 50 cents

In This Present World. By George Hodges. pp. 223. $1.00.

Eastman Lewis. New York.

Mammon. By Louis M. Elshemus. pp. 126. $1 25.

"Lady" Vere and Other Poems. By Louis M. Elshemus. pp 126. $1.25.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

General Grant. By J. G. Wilson. pp. 390. $1.50.

Macmillan Co. New York.

The Choir Invisible. By J. L. Allen. pp. 361. $1 50.

Contemporary Publishing Co. New York.

Nursery Problems. Edited by Dr. L. M. Yale. pp. 345. $1.00.

Longmans, Green & Co New York.

The Bible, Its Meaning and Supremacy. By F. W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S. pp. 359. $2.00.

American Baptist Pub. Society. Philadelphia.

The Problem of Jesus. By Geo. D. Boardman. pp. 62. 50 cents.

PAPER COVERS

Damrell & Upham. Boston.

The Church Army. By Montague Chamberlain.

Church Social Union. Boston.

The Saturday Half Holiday. By James Yeames.

Massachusetts Agricultural College.

Ninth Annual Report of the Hatch Experiment Station.

Edw. H. Rogers. Chelsea.

Product Sharing at Provincetown. By E. H. Rogers.

Law and Love. By E. H. Rogers.

Bible House. New York.

Report of the 38th and 39th Years of the New York Sabbath Committee.

Department of Labor. Washington.

Bulletin No. 10.

Bible Colportage Institute. Chicago.

Jessica's First Prayer. By Hesba Stratton. pp. 123. 15 cents.

Kingdom Pub Co. Minneapolis.

A Foe to American Schools. By George A. Gates, D. D., LL. D. 15 cents.

American Baptist Pub. Society. Philadelphia.

Should There Be an Invitation? By Prof. Arthur Jones, D. D. Five cents.

Christian Literature Co. Madras, India.

Introduction to Barrows's Lectures on Christianity the World-Religion. By R. A. Hume, D. D.

MAGAZINES

May. Hartford Seminary Record.—Musical Record.—Book Buyer.—Journal of Hygiene.—International.—Bookman.—Monthly Bulletin of the Public Library.—Unitarian.—Kindergarten News.—International Studio.—Travel.—Biblia.—Good Words.—Sunday.—Philosophical Review.—Christian Literature.

In and Around Boston

The May Meetings

Anniversary week is close upon us again, and beginning next Monday and continuing through the week will be a series of public gatherings, each of which is sure to draw interested participants. The share of Congregationalists as a denomination in anniversary week has been whittled down to a minimun, owing to the change in the method and place of holding our great denominational gatherings. The Congregational Club's May Festival, however, in Tremont Temple on Monday, promises to be an uncommonly pleasant affair. No big guns from a distance have been imported but a dozen members of the club will speak five minutes each upon themes of practical importance with which they are supposed to be familiar.

The Unitarians are relying, as usual, upon representatives high in official life, like Governor Wolcott, Sherman Hoar and others, to furnish the oratory for their special gatherings. The meeting of the Moral Education Association in Lorimer Hall, May 27, at 10 A. M., is one of the most important, though not usually one of the most popular of the gatherings of the week. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore is to be one of the speakers. The annual meeting of Ten Times One (union of Lend-a-Hand Clubs) will be held in the vestry of Park Street Church, Wednesday, May 26, at 3 P. M. Reports and addresses upon the various departments of work will be given by Dr. E. E. Hale, Rev. R. B. Tobey, Mr. J. K. Anderson, Mr. Bernard Whitman, Miss Sarah P. Brigham and others.

An Interdenominational Love Feast.

At the invitation of the Unitarian Association the ministers of Boston met last Monday morning in Channing Hall. There they discussed Our Mutual Affirmations, the speakers being Rev. C. G. Ames, D. D, Unitarian; Rev. J. D. Pickles, D. D., Methodist; Rev. D. M. Hodge, Universalist; and Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., Congregationalist, while Rev. C. F. Dole, Unitarian, presided.

It was a catholic assembly of Protestants, a sort of ecumenical council, and within the broad limits of Christianity a parliament of religions. The speakers, standing under Channing's portrait, aimed to overlook differences and to produce a composite photograph of fundamental Christianity. The spirit of denial was cordially condemned. Theists and Christian theists, they all accepted the teaching of Christ as to the divine Fatherhood. Religious men and teachers of religion, they all declared the necessity of religious life and spiritual culture. All alike believed in right character, and in right character as the product of the divine life. All, without exception, acknowledged the fact of human sinfulness. All accepted Christ as the unveiling of the Father, the disclosure of the human life of God, the Saviour of the world. "Salvation is character" was their common maxim, but they declared that there was no other name save the name of Christ whereby a man might be saved. Again, each speaking for all, expressed belief in a future life with issues dependent upon character. Said Dr. Ames, "Let us include those who exclude us. God bless them all." Dr. Barton's closing sentences seemed to sum up everything that had been said before: "We are learning measurably to accept the affirmations and deny the negations of both sides in controversy, and thus enlarge the area of truth in our possession. All things are ours—Paul, Cephas, Apollos, Calvin, Wesley, Milton, Huxley, Channing, things present and things to come. And in this liberty and fellowship we stand today."

Music by a Negro quintet from Clafin University added appreciably to the catholicity of the occasion by suggesting some native tenets of plantation theology. The song, Who Did Swallow Jonah, was, in the light of recent controversy, peculiarly timely.

Gifts to the Boston Public Library

At the annual meeting of the trustees last week Hon. F. O. Prince was re-elected president. Rev. James De Normandie will serve as clerk in the absence of Librarian Putnam, who goes to Europe to purchase valuable photographs in Italy. The several hundred volumes of the library of the Boston Browning Society have been presented to the library, to be used for reference purposes only. A gift of $1,000 is made by the Papyrus Club for a John Boyle O'Reilly fund. The late John C. Paige made the library residuary legatee of the trustees' part of his estate, which includes nearly the whole of it. The exact amount is not yet known, but it is likely to be a handsome one and to be used especially for children's books or accommodations. The Bacchante statue has not been replaced and the trustees have as yet taken no farther action on it.

Rescue Work at the North End

The thirtieth anniversary of the North End Mission was celebrated in Trinity Church last Sunday evening. Organized by the late Dr. Eben Tourjée, it has accomplished much. Six services a week are held in the chapel. The praise service on Sunday afternoons has been crowded the past year. During the year a visit was received from a man who, twenty-one years ago, was converted at this same mission. There is also a rescue home for women. During the year 204 women passed through it; 174 were given good positions, twenty-three returned to their friends, and the rest were sent to other institutions. The children's home at Forest Hills contains thirty or forty children from two to twelve years old, many of them half orphans

At the meeting Sunday night Hon. John L. Bates, speaker of the Massachusetts House, presided, and addresses were made by Rev. C. G. Ames, D. D., and Rev. A. A. Berle, D. D. The treasurer's statement showed a falling off in the usual amount of gifts for the year of about $1,500.

Old Music Hall Organ Sold

The sale, on May 12, for $1,500, of the old Music Hall organ to the Methuen Organ Company closes an interesting period in the history of one of Boston's most noted possessions. To be sure, the case of the organ will be preserved and probably set up at Methuen, Mass, in a hall to be erected there by the multi-millionaire, E. F. Searles. New works will be supplied, however, as the old pipes are hardly in good enough condition to warrant any repairs.

This organ was suggested in 1856, and was first used at a grand concert Nov. 2, 1863. At that time, and for many years afterward, Mr. B. J. Lang was one of the skillful organists who used it most. It was built practically by subscription, and Walcker of Ludwigsburg, now of Stuttgart, Germany, was the builder. Its cost was $60,000. After a time the room on the Music Hall platform was wanted for the Symphony Orchestra, and a removal of the organ was suggested. At this some of those who had been most active in procuring it objected, and even went to the court for an injunction. Dr. Tourgée, then director of the New England Conservatory, had a scheme to build a large music hall for the conservatory, and induced W. O. Grover to buy the organ for $11,000, to be set up in this projected hall. The plans were not completed; both men died and the estates had to be settled. Hence the forced sale at auction. The case was of solid black walnut, and the complete instrument contained 6,500 pipes, 89 stops and weighed 70 tons. The front panels and ornamentations included some of the best German wood carvings, representing musical instruments and themes. For the last thirteen years the parts had been stored in a temporary shed erected in the New England Conservatory yard.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Boston Ministers' Meeting, Pilgrim Hall, May 24. 10 A. M. Speaker, Albert L. Blair of the Boston Journal, Topic, The Press—What Does It Represent? Pres. W. G. Ballantine of Oberlin College will be present and speak later.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

American Congregational Association.—The annual meeting for the choice of officers and for other business appropriate will be held in Pilgrim Hall on Monday, May 24, at 12 M. Joshua Coit, Secretary.

The Annual Meeting of the Boston Seamen's Friend Society will be held at 287 Hanover Street, on Wednesday, May 26, at 3 P. M.
C. F. Stratton, Secretary.

Plymouth Association, Kingston, May 25, 10 A. M.

Hampden County Conference, First Church, Longmeadow, May 26.

American Tract Society.—The eighty-third annual meeting of the American Tract Society, Boston, for the election of officers and the transaction of such other business as may come before it, will be held in the Tract Rooms, 54 Bromfield Street, Wednesday, May 26, 3 P. M. Jeremiah Taylor, Secretary.

Woman's Board of Missions.—The semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions will be held in South Church, Salem, Mass., on Thursday, May 27. Morning session at 10; afternoon session at 2. Addresses are expected from Miss E. M. Stone and Miss Kara-Ivanova of Bulgaria, Mrs. Caroline P. Fowle of western Turkey, Miss Mary B. Daniels of Japan, Mrs. Sarah Smith Garland of Micronesia, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick of Spain and others.
Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The annual business meeting of the Massachusetts Convention of Congregational Ministers will be held in the Supreme Judicial Court Room, Pemberton Square, on Wednesday, May 26, at 5 P. M. Public meeting of the convention will be held in the South Church (Dr. Hale's) on Thursday, at 11 A. M. The sermon by Rev. J. M. Greene, D. D., of Lowell, Mass. The public is invited. B. F. Hamilton, Scribe.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society.—The Seventy-first Anniversary will be held in Saratoga, N. Y., from Tuesday to Friday, June 1 to 3. A meeting of secretaries and superintendents will be held Tuesday afternoon, June 1. In the evening there will be an address by the president of the society, Maj.-Gen. O. O. Howard, and the annual sermon by Rev. Frank T. Bayley of Denver, Col.

On Wednesday, June 2, there will be addresses in behalf of the society's auxiliaries by Rev. Alexander McGregor of Rhode Island, Rev. William H. Moore of Connecticut and Rev. T. O. Douglass, D. D., of Iowa; the fifteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Department, Mrs. H. S. Caswell, secretary, presiding. Addresses by Mrs. R. B. Wright, The Day of Small Things; Rev. R. B. Wright, On the Frontier; Mrs. James B. Gregg, Woman in Colorado; Miss Marie Zoltak, With the Slovak. In the afternoon the co-operating societies will be represented, and there will be addresses by the secretaries of the Congregational Church Building Society, the Congregational Education Society, also the Ministerial Relief Committee. The annual meeting of the society for the election of officers will be held, hearing reports and other business. In the evening a paper by Sec Joseph B. Clark will be read, entitled A Year of Distress, and there will be addresses by Rev. A. F. Sherrill, D. D., Illinois: Supt. J. H. Parker, Oklahoma; Supt. H. A. Schauffler, D. D., Ohio; Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, Eastern field secretary.

Thursday morning, June 3, a paper by Sec. Washington Choate will be read, entitled Fixed Factors in Home Missions. Addresses will be delivered by Supts. A. K. Wray, Missouri; Harmon Bross, D. D., Nebraska; E. H. Ashmun, New Mexico; Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., Detroit, Mich.; Rev. H. H. Kelsey, Hartford, Ct Thursday afternoon there will be addresses by Supts. L. P. Broad, Kansas; W. H. Thrall, South Dakota, T. W. Jones, D. D., Pennsylvania; T. G. Grassie, North Wisconsin. These addresses will be followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Thursday evening there will be addresses by Rev. A. H. Bradford, D D., Montclair, N. J., Rev. Reuen Thomas, D D, Brookline, Mass., and Rev. John L. Scudder of Jersey City, N. J.

TRANSPORTATION

The Trunk Line Association, which covers territory from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Salamanca, N. Y., Erie and Pittsburg, Pa., and all points east thereof except New England, will pass over its roads for one-third fare in returning all certificates of attendants on the meeting who pay full fare in going. All rates on this basis require that certificates be obtained from the ticket agent at the starting point or the nearest station issuing through tickets to the place of meeting, and to be valid for reduction of return fares must be indorsed by special agent of the Railroad Association, who will be in attendance at Saratoga. This condition is necessary to secure one-third return fare. Round trip tickets will be furnished at the following rates: Boston, $6.85; Ayer, $6.05; Fitchburg, $5.60; Worcester, $5.60; Gardner, $4.90; Miller's Falls, $3.85; Greenfield, $3.60; Shelburne Falls, $3.15; North Adams, $2.50. These tickets will be good going from May 29 to June 3, inclusive, and good to return until June 15. The People's Line of steamers on Hudson River, leaving New York, Pier 41, North River, foot of Canal Street, offer a rate of one fare and a third, or $3.60, from New York to Saratoga and return to delegates attending the annual meeting.

HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES

The figures in parenthesis indicate in each case the number of persons that can be accommodated.

$1.00 to $1 25 per day. Miss D. A. Pierce, 103 Circular St. (25); Mrs. Walker, 53 Spring St. (18); Mrs. M. G. Fitzgerald, 135 Circular St. (10); Mrs. Tracy Record, 3 Batchelor Row, Regent St. (12); Mrs. Vine, 186 Regent St. (12); Mrs. Laura Allen, 48 Phila. St. (10); Mrs. M. Ingalls, 63 Franklin St. (8); Elmwood Hall, Maple Ave. (40); Congress Park House, opposite Congress Park (12); Waring House, 33 Franklin St. (80); Washburn House, 41 Washington St. (40); Mrs. J. Abel, 73 Spring St. (15); Mrs. Orvis Carpenter, 38 Walton St. (20); Mary E. Moore, 75 Spring St. (30); the Old Homestead, Franklin St. (30); Mrs. Wm. R. Hills, 120 Grand Ave. (8); Summer Rest, 75 Spring St. (30).

$1.00 to 1.50 per day. The Franklin House, Church St. (80); Broadway House (40); Everett House, South Broadway (150); Miss L. R. Hunter, 49 Phila. St. (6); the Vermont House (125).

$1.25 to $1.50 per day. Columbian, South Broadway (15); the Lafayette, 109 Circular St. (100); Mrs. W. H. Corbine, No. 1 Papineau Building, cor. Broadway and Washington Sts. (8); the Linwood, South Broadway (50); the Hill Side Trim Cottage, 61 Phila. St. (25).

$1.50 to $2.00 per day. Huestis House, South Broadway (125); American Adelphi (400); Worden Hotel, Broadway (50).

The above rates are for two in a room. Persons desiring further information as to accommodations may address the local committee of arrangements, of which Rev. William O. Wark, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., is chairman.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Rhode Island,	Newport,	Tuesday, June 8.
Vermont,	Middlebury,	Tuesday, June 8.
Conn. Asso.	New Haven,	Tuesday, June 15.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

In an appreciative tribute to Dr. McLean, who has just celebrated the completion of 25 years of pastoral work, the Pacific calls him the Bishop of the Pacific coast—the "Oakland Greatheart, to whom struggling churches and perplexed pastors from far and near have turned for counsel and help, and never in vain." Is it not worth while to live bravely and generously if one can deserve such a tribute as this?

We commend the courageous and practical effort of the home missionary churches in "Bleeding Kansas" to attain self-support in 1900 to other States, few of which can have a larger Goliath of debt to overcome, or slenderer resources with which to work. May the "smooth stones" so wisely and carefully prepared at the State association be divinely guided and do their work surely and swiftly.

One excellent result of the hard times is the consolidation of small churches in communities where one organization well manned can work to better advantage than two weak ones. On the other hand, a minister has organized a religious society in the same town where he has been serving as pastor. Both these examples of contraction and expansion come from Minnesota.

Evidently the State of Washington can boast at least one altruistic layman, who prizes the general good above his personal advantage. May his tribe increase!

An Ohio city rejoices that all its Congregational pulpits are now filled. If any of the pastorates just begun become equal in length and value to one which has just terminated in that city, they will take on a remarkable character and influence.

The six married couples who recently joined an Iowa church are laying foundations for happy Christian homes which ought to exert a powerful leavening influence in the community.

A novel idea comes from the church in Carpentersville, Ill., which is trying the experiment of weekly "At Homes," held in Library Hall, with a view to extend the acquaintance of members with outsiders in the community. An attractive program is provided.

The various Bible societies in different States find a woeful lack of possession and use of the Scriptures, as the results in a New England field illustrate. The distribution of the Word is a work in which all denominations can join without hesitation. Our own people have labored earnestly in this undertaking to provide thousands of families with the Bible.

Of Special Note

An aged Ohio veteran pressed into the service of a local conference.

A San Francisco church celebrates the completion by its organist of a quarter of a century of harmony.

A Nebraska association, after listening to a sermon by a woman, approves her purpose to enter the ministry.

THE INDIANA ASSOCIATION

The annual meeting was held at Kokomo, May 11–13. Nature was propitious and there was bright sunshine and a genial, bracing air. The city was beautiful in its verdure and flowers, their freshness being undimmed by smoke or soot. The edifice presented as distinquished an appearance as did the select company which gathered under its wide approaches. It is centrally located among the population of 16,000, and occupies a quarter of a large square. In anticipation the prosperous and enthusiastic people had expended $4,000 in repairs and improvements. Skill, taste and judgment were manifest, and the outcome within and without was an inspiration.

The traditions of past years in having an Indiana pastor preach the sermon were broken by the expected coming of Dr. Washington Gladden, who discoursed to a large congregation Tuesday evening on The Present Opportunities and Responsibilities of the Churches. It was a baptism of power.

The brief reports of the registrars Wednesday morning were tuned to the keynote of hopeful, vigorous and self-realizing Congregational life in Indiana. The jubilee celebration at Michigan City in 1896 marked the conscious embodiment in ministry and churches of the spirit of occupancy, conquest and reinforced power. The impulse received by the accession of valued brethren from Butler College and the Disciple fellowship has strengthened indigenous life and is a stimulus enabling the dimmest vision to discern the embodying activity of the unifying spirit. A few facts are: Four new church organizations, Elkhart, Indianapolis, Gas City and East Mount Carmel; the new Kokomo Association; three new buildings and others in progress; one new parsonage; enlarging areas of power in different places and the magnetic presence of full-furnished men.

A certain intensifying of the spirit of the association followed the appreciative and discriminating review, by Rev. F. E. Dewhurst, of the life and writings of Dr. John Patterson Coyle. The paper was headed The Preacher and the Age and was followed by The Church and the Age, an up-to-date evangelistic throb of Christ-passion by Sec. A. M. Wight of the Fort Wayne Y. M. C. A. The discussion videned horizons and disclosed hights and lepths of feeling and service. A splendid udience gathered Wednesday evening. The est musical talent in the city rendered artisic selections and soul-inspiring hymns. Selfacrifice for the Homeland and the Prospects f Christianity in Armenia and Japan were he themes of Mrs. H. S. Caswell and Dr. . L. Barton.

Thursday morning dawned bright. Recreaion at an early hour gave visitors a glimpse f the city, its fine, modern buildings and reat industries. The Diamond Plate Glass Works, the manager of which is a loyal Congregationalist, attracted many visitors. Devotional exercises prepared hearts for a day f spiritual training and thereafter the entire norning was given to a symposium on The Church and the Kingdom. Carefully preared papers on Its Idea and Scope, Modern Social Problems and The Spiritual Life and Culture of the Individual were given by some f the ablest minds and clearest thinkers of he association.

Wednesday afternoon, and also a full day receding the association, was given to the arious phases of missionary work, with reorts of the women's organizations and addresses by the representatives of the various ocieties. Mrs. Caswell's services throughout vere highly appreciated. Secretaries Taintor, McMillen, Bliss, Mrs. M. F. Bryner and everal missionaries from the field were heard.

Rev. N. A. Hyde, D. D., the Nestor of Indina Congregationalism, who in 1898 will close is fortieth year as secretary and treasurer, nd who is always an attractive and admired igure in the various conventions, presided at he meeting of the Home Missionary Society. The usual officers were elected, and reports vere made. Mrs. E. R. Cheney was made by he W. H. M. U. State organizer in homeland vork. Receipts by the State H. M. Society vere $1,107, a decrease of $44 from last year. Provision was made for a more thorough canass and enlarged receipts.

The visiting brethren spoke many complinentary words of "the best meeting ever eld." The social part was emphasized Wednesday by a six o'clock dinner served by he Kokomo ladies in the parlors. It was a lelightful occasion, and the speech-making ave opportunity for bright, genial and wise emarks.

The irenic spirit was manifest throughout, nd there is a growing sense of real unity and o-operation. Strength in Indiana is largely result of the attractive influence of gifted reachers. Consequently the churches are ot alike in type. The meeting disclosed the apacity to be baptized by a spirit of unity which is needed to make organic the spirit of nissions. May its fullness soon be realized.

The association will meet with Hope Church, Anderson, next year. E. D. C.

THE KANSAS STATE MEETING

The association convened, May 6-10, in the hriving city of Ottawa, with its prosperous itizens, high standard of public morals, deightful homes and the far-famed Kansas Chautauqua, which is located in the beautiful rove on the bank of the Marais des Cygnes. The Baptists, who have the finest church uilding in the city, fraternally opened the loors of their main audience-room for the arger sessions. The attendance was 200, including several ministers from the frontier. In intellectual and spiritual strength the neeting was the peer of any of its predecesors. The speakers came with "beaten oil" nd the Spirit's impulses, and the listeners ame to think and to pray.

Congregationalism, the main theme, was ot treated as a mere method, but as a thing f life, growth, power and high destiny. Whence Came Congregationalism and Its Historical Development engaged the thought f the first session in two able essays. Loyalty to Congregationalism with Our Means ave opportunity for the statement of principles and rousing exhortation under the heads, The Right Motives in Acquiring and Holding Our Means and The Right Standard and Method of Giving. During this discussion the unpremeditated questioning of the popular pastor and writer, Rev. C. M. Sheldon, on the practicability of regarding everything we have as belonging to the Lord was one of the association's best features. Loyalty in Teaching the Word brought out the encouraging annual report of S. S. Supt. W. L. Sutherland and a strong address by Mrs. Preusner on Primary Work. Loyalty to Our Educational Ideals gave us the comprehensive report of the committee on education and the first associational address of Pres. G. M. Herrick, on Washburn College—Its Idea and Ideals. Loyalty to Congregationalism and Its Relation to the Conquest of the World was the theme of Dr. Wolcott Calkins, who stirred us with hope that Christian men endowed with talent to accumulate great wealth would consecrate it to Christ.

The effective speakers on Loyalty to Congregationalism in Its Relation to Ultimate America gathered up the principles of the preceding discussions for immediate practical use in Christianizing our own land and called upon spiritual Congregationalism so to work its principles that the Christian forces in our country would be unified for co operative work, society become rectified and permeated with the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount, and America become the source of redeeming energy for the world. This theme was treated in intimate connection with the annual meeting of the Kansas Home Missionary Society, which was one of the most important and enthusiastic in its history. The main theme was the inquiry presented by H. M. Superintendent Broad in his annual report: Shall we reaffirm our purpose announced in 1892 to assume State self-support in 1900? He discussed the present condition of the missionary churches, the probable amount of missionary money urgently required for the coming three years and the giving capacity of the churches, and closed by proposing a plan for graduated increase in Kansas contributions to the C. H. M. S. till 1900 brings the State to self-support. Thoughtful and stirring speeches were made upon the subject by pastors, after which the motion to reaffirm the decision of 1892 was unanimously carried. This vote was followed by an address on Home Missions and the Republic, by Rev. W. H. Walker of Emporia, which was generally regarded as one of the ablest home missionary addresses ever delivered in Kansas.

We were favored with the presence and addresses of Mrs. Caswell and Secretaries Roy, Barton, Taintor and Ferguson. The hours of devotion were the best of all. The home missionary experience meeting and the communion on Sunday afternoon were as seasons "on the mount" with the Lord The last evening was given to carefully prepared addresses on Loyalty to Christ, in which Rev. Messrs. Howard, Hogbin and Cordley, representing successively the younger, maturer and older ministry, led us to see the blessedness of loving devotion to the living Christ. L. P. B.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Bangor

The Middle Class gave a banquet to Prof. C. A. Beckwith last Friday evening. The occasion was very enjoyable.——The regular review work for the year closed May 14.

Andover

Last Thursday evening Dr. G. A. Gordon of Boston addressed the Society of Inquiry on Phillips Brooks, giving reminiscences of his public and private life. After the address Dr. Gordon was questioned by the students on matters relating to the work of a pastor.——The examination for the course in Romans will occur May 25.——The public examination will be held this year June 7-9 and the graduating exercises June 10.——The exercises in vocal culture have been suspended for two weeks.

Hartford

Dr. A. C. Thompson of Boston is giving the Senior Class a course of lectures on Missions.——The subject of discussion at the meeting of the Junior Debating Society last Saturday evening was, Resolved, That the present tendency of Sunday observance is detrimental to the highest welfare of the people. ——In the annual tennis tournament in singles Mr. N. C. Weeks of the Senior Class was winner.——The students and the faculty and their wives enjoyed a picnic at East Windsor last week. One of the events of the day was a baseball game between members of the faculty and the Middle Class.

Yale

Special lectures were given last week on The Working Man's Side of the Labor Problem, by Mr. E. H. Crosby of New York, and on Arctic Travel, by Lieut. R. E. Peary.——Mr. H. R. Marshall of New York spoke before the Philosophical Club on Instinct and Reason.——The Hooker fellowship, providing for two years study in Germany, has been awarded to H. F. Rall, a graduate of the University of Iowa and a Methodist.——Messrs. M. B. Fisher, P. A. Johnson, C. S. Macfarland, W. E. Page, A. M. Hall and G. L. Schæffer of the Senior Class will remain for graduate work next year.

CLUBS

N. Y.—The Central Club varied its meetings by omitting the usual gastronomic features and assembling on the evening of May 3 in Plymouth Church, Syracuse, with several hundred invited guests from the teachers, ministers, professors, members of historical and other organizations of the city to hear a lecture by Dr. W. E. Griffis upon the Footprints of the Pilgrims in Three Continents. The lecture was illustrated by 60 splendid lantern slides, most of which had been obtained by Dr. Griffis. It was a rare treat to the audience.

PA.—The Pittsburg Club met last at Allegheny. The subject, Egypt, was opened in papers by Miss Butler of Allegheny Church and Rev. H. M. Bowden.

O.—A club of 40 members was organized May 11 in Toledo. All six churches of the city were represented. Last month Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., addressed in an able discourse the representatives of the churches. The permanent organization was affected with Rev. G. A. Burgess, D. D., temporary chairman, and Rev. G. W. Belsey, scribe. The election of officers will occur in June, when an increased membership is expected.

MO.—The May Festival of the St. Louis Club, which was also its 36th regular meeting, was held at the Southern Hotel, May 10. The speaker of the evening was Rev. D. N. Beach, D. D., pastor of Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, who delivered a strong and impassioned address on The New Outlook on Life. The club also enjoyed an excellent musical and literary program, including recitations by Mr. E. P. Perry of Washington University.

CAL.—The San Francisco Club held its spring meeting with Third Church. The general theme was Interdenominational Comity. Addresses were made by Professor Jefferson of the Berkeley Bible Seminary (Christian), Dr. Dille (Methodist), Professor Landon (Presbyterian), Rev. T. G. Bronson (Baptist) and by Rev. J. R. Knodell and Dr. J. K. McLean (Congregational).

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

MASS.—Essex South Conference met, May 12, with the Maple Street Church, Danvers. The subjects were: Lessons to Be Learned from the Institutional Church, Our Lack of Denominational Esprit de Corps, The Spirit Filled Teacher, The Crisis in Missionary Affairs, and Some Inferences from the Annual Statistics of the Churches of the Conference. There was a loss in membership of 65, a less number of additions by six, a greater number of removals by 75 than during the previous year. The Sunday schools showed an increase of 51 and the total benevolent contributions were $27,378, a decrease of $219. Home expenditures were reduced by over $20,000.

North and South Berkshire Conferences met together in Pittsfield, May 11. Among the subjects were: Responsibility of the Stronger Churches Toward the Weaker, The County Missionary, Evangelistic Work and the Support of Missions. Nearly all the churches were represented.

Worcester Central Conference met, May 11, in Boylston Center with an attendance that exceeded the capacity of the house. Dr. J. E Tuttle gave the principal address on Power from on High: Its Necessity and the Condition of Receiving It. Other topics were: Sabbath Observance, Some Dangers Threatening the Christian Endeavor Movement, Teaching Adult Classes in the Sunday School, Junior Sunday School Work, The Work of the Churches and Home Missions.

N. Y.—The Oneida, Chenango and Delaware Association met, May 4, 5, with the Franklin church.

Rev. N. S. Aller preached the sermon on The Power of an Ideal Life. The topics were, Does Christianity Impose upon the Citizen Any Duty as Regards Obedience to Law and Enforcement of Law? The Master We Serve, How to Develop Greater Interest in Our Church Benevolences, Popular Neglect of Religious Worship—Its Cause and Cure, The Holy Spirit Preparing the Church for Evangelistic Work, The True Mission of the Church, The Ministry Demanded for Our Times, Why the Young Men Are Not in Our Churches and How to Reach Them. Dr. W. A. Farnsworth and Mrs. Asadoorian of the Turkish missions represented the foreign work and Sec. C. W. Shelton the H. M. S. The meeting was exceptionally profitable.

Manhattan Conference held its spring meeting with Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, of which Dr. Lyman Abbott is pastor. Thirty-eight churches were represented by over 200 delegates. Special interest centered round the fact that the church entertaining the conference has just completed the semi centennial of its history. Hearty resolutions were passed congratulating the church on its remarkable history and its present prosperity. Addresses were made at the evening session by Drs. A. J. Lyman, A. C. Dixon and Lyman Abbott.

The recent session of the Central Association at Phœnix was made specially interesting by accounts of Work Among the Men. At Elbridge, a country town, there has been held for months a union Sunday afternoon meeting of men; at Homer a men's chorus of 40 has been helpful; at Camden there has been established a week day Men's Social, with occasional refreshments; the Men's Club in the Danforth Church, Syracuse, has secured full congregations for a year or more. For enterprise nothing is more striking in this region than the long, flourishing pastorate of Rev. John Cunningham at West Groton, a hill town in Cortland County. Forty six were added to the church there at a recent communion, including many leading men of the village and heads of families. Mr. Cunningham read a delightful paper upon Reminiscences of a Long Pastorate. He has been 49 years in the service and 20 in his present home.

Ohio.—Plymouth Rock Conference met at Huntsburgh May 11, 12. The sessions were rich in devotional and missionary flavor, the work of five societies being presented. The sermon was by Rev. George Martin. The addresses were on The Supply of the Ministry, The Evolution of the Sunday school, The Administration of Our Benevolent Societies and Systematic Beneficence. The meeting began the 50th year of the conference and Judge Lester Taylor, nearly 99 years old, the first moderator, was elected moderator for the current year.

Minn.—Owatonna Conference met at Dodge Center, May 11-13. Topics discussed were Art and Religion, The Inspiration of the Scriptures, Church Finances—How to Provide for Them, How to Increase Benevolences, The Need of Organization Within the Church, Prayer Meeting Methods, Question and Answer Method, Program Method, Testimony Meeting, Duties of the Churches to Benevolent Societies, Social Theology, The Social Settlement at Home and Abroad. Rev. J. H. Chandler preached upon the Renewed Church and the New Era. Reports from the churches showed progress. At Lyle a parsonage has been secured and the church is approaching self-support. At Spring Valley the church is united and prosperous under the new pastor, Rev. W. A. Warren, notwithstanding the formation of a new society led by the former pastor.

Mankato Conference met at Mapleton May 12, 13, with large attendance. Reports from the churches showed progress. Topics discussed were, Work in Rural Districts, The Problem of Christian Self-denial, The Ground of Christian Certainty, Congregational Fellowship in the Light of Liberal Tendencies in Creed, What Shall We Do with the Saloons? Christian Education, National Evangelization.

S. D.—Black Hills Association has just closed a profitable meeting at Lead. Papers were presented on Pastoral Purpose, Ideal Aspiration of a Young Pastor, What Constitutes Success in the Ministry, Is Christ a Divider? and Home Missions. Dr. J. E. Roy gave an inspiring address on the work of the A. M. A.

Neb.—Lincoln Association met at Syracuse, May 10-12. The sermon was by Miss Laura H. Wilde, secretary of the Women's Christian Association, Lincoln, who was afterward approbated to preach. The annual letters from the churches reported good interest on most fields. Papers were read on Congregational Principles, Hard Times as Affecting Church Interests, Religious Papers, The Home Department of S. S. Work, Modern S. S. Methods. Addresses were made on The Academy Idea, Christian Education, The Mayflower Compact, Our Polity as an Educator. Resolutions were passed indorsing Weeping Water Academy and expressing appreciation of the present urgent needs of the C. H. M. S. The woman's missionary hour was one of exceptional interest.

Wn.—Northwestern Association held its annual meeting May 4, 5, in Coupeville. The general theme was The Great Teacher. Papers were read on The Great Teacher in Relation to Old Truths, to New Truths, to Wealth, to Socialism; The Training of Ministers. The theological seminaries were freely discussed. Rev. H. C. Mason preached the sermon. The theme of the meeting was suggested by the fact that Puget Sound Academy is located in Coupeville. Pastors and delegates had a good opportunity for an acquaintance with the academy, which is gaining favor, and now has among its students five sons of home missionaries, all bright, promising young men. The sentiments of the association were formulated in various resolutions relating to ministerial training and credentials, home missions, education and other Christian work. The German churches, with their pastors, were transferred to the German Pacific Association. The church of Granite Falls was received to membership, also Rev. Messrs. T. H. Henderson, E. P. Dada, and P. C. L. Harris. Mr. Ernest P. Fewster was approbated to preach for one year, and the license of Mr. J. J. Tompkins was renewed for the same time. The next meeting is to be in Columbia City.

Cal.—Sonoma Association, held the last of April, was well attended. Interesting papers and discussions were enjoyed upon the general theme The Church. Sub-topics were: The Church and the Children, The Holy Spirit, The Critics, The State, The Young People, The Membership.

San Joaquin Valley Asssociation was held at Tipton. The discussions were upon: Influence of Lodge Life on the Church, The Boy Question, The Need of Distinctively Theological Preaching.

NEW ENGLAND

Massachusetts

[For Boston news see page 723.]

Chelsea.—Central. The May issue of the Visitor is a souvenir of the Lenten services which were so helpfully conducted for three weeks as to merit a lasting remembrance. As a partial result of this effort 55 new members were received May 2, the largest number received at one time since the organization of the church in 1851. Since the September communion, last year, 97 accessions have been received, and lately they have been organized into a class which will hold seven meetings, alternate sessions being lectures by the pastor on the topics, Our Church Privileges, Government, Covenant and Confession of Faith. The other meetings will be led by the deacons, deaconesses and others. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Jefferson, is now preaching sermons helpful to persons starting in the Christian life. The Sunday evening meetings from Jan. 1 until now had a larger average attendance than ever. Until Easter an after meeting followed each evening.

Salem.—Tabernacle observed its 67th Sunday school anniversary May 9, with appropriate exercises. Addresses were made by ex-superintendents, the pastor and Dr. A. P. Foster. The present membership is 565, besides a large home department. Dr. D. W. S. Clark is pastor.

Stoneham.—The pastor, Rev. G. E. Lovejoy, has decided to accept a call to Pittsfield, N. H. During the four years' pastorate just closing 147 persons have joined the church and in general the pastorate has been progressive and vigorous. At the last communion 29 new members were received, 17 being baptized. The total membership is now 290. The benevolences of 1896 were $1,270; the home expenses amounted to $12,049, both amounts being largely increased over those of four years ago.

Concord.—Trinitarian. The Sunday School Missionary Association, an organization connected with the church, held its 60th annual meeting Sunday evening, and reported a flourishing state of its entire affairs and the amount of its contributions during the past year. Miss Mary Munroe was reelected secretary and treasurer, having held that office for over 30 consecutive years.

Lowell.—Swedish. The new pastor, Rev. A. P. Nelson, improved the opportunity of his installation, which occurred May 14, by keeping five of his Swedish brother ministers for a series of special services lasting two days. The church is feeling much encouraged under the new leadership.

Worcester.—Union. The organist is giving a series of three high class free organ recitals.——Hope. The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip held a fellowship meeting May 13 It was a union service, in which Congregationalists, Baptists, Episcopalians and Disciples united. Dr. Alexander Lewis spoke on Four Essentials of Success and Rev. R. A. Nichols on Young Men's Power.

Housatonic.—The South Berkshire Association, meeting April 27, passed resolutions of congratulation and appreciation on account of the long, faithful pastorate of Dr. L. S. Rowland, who has just closed a period of 20 years in Lee. The expression noted especially the mutually helpful relations which have existed between pastor and people and commended in general longer pastorates than usual within the bounds of the association.

Maine

Deer Isle.—The farewell service of Rev. J. S. Richards was an affecting occasion. He has been here six and a half years and part of the time had the work at North Deer Isle and Little Deer Isle under his care also. All the churches together received during his pastorate 155 members beside 16 at Stonington. A thorough organization of the church has been effected and a system of benevolence adopted by which the sum given has increased from $10 in 1890 to $333 in 1893 and $260 in 1896.

Andover.—The meeting house is now one of the handsomest in this part of the State. It has been remodeled and new pews have been put in. Rev. J. C. Young is pastor.

Hallowell.—This church and four other local churches have each received a bequest of $100 from the late Mrs. Catherine Hill of this place

Auburn.—High Street has given one of the missionary churches in Aroostook County an organ.

The 87th annual meeting of the Maine Bible Society occurred in Portland, May 11. The reports showed 13,000 families visited. About 5,000 homes with 1,000 children were destitute of a Bible. Over 4,000 Bibles were sold and 1,280 given away. All bills have been met and a balance remains.——Lightning did considerable damage to the South Bridgton church by striking the spire.

New Hampshire

Marlboro.—Trinitarian. At a specially called meeting, to act upon the resignation of the pastor, Rev. J. S. Colby, a majority voted not to accept it. But this will not change his purpose to withdraw next October, which will complete four and one-half years of service.

Raymond.—The late visit of the New England Band of Christian Crusaders for union evangelistic services has awakened much interest and resulted in a few conversions.

Nashua.—Pilgrim. The Sixty-Minute Society, as partial proceeds of its May Day sale, has given to the Kinsley Street Mission $25 for books for the S. S. library.

Rev. J. S. Curtis of Hopkinton acknowledges gratefully an increase of salary.——Campton has lately collected $15 for famine sufferers in India.——During 1896 churches in the State received 24 legacies, ranging from $25 to over $8,000.——Rev. W. A. Rand of South Seabrook has just completed his 30th year as pastor, having been called in 1867, the year the church was organized.

Connecticut

New London.—Second. Rev. J. W. Bixler's pastoral report, rendered at the recent annual meeting, contained a tender tribute to Deacons J. N. Harris and E. H. Wheeler, who died during the year under review. Their constancy in attendance upon religious services and their willingness to help the church in large or small matters were commended to the rising generation. The spiritual results of the year were also commented upon by Mr. Bixler, due in part to special revival services, but quite as much to the stated endeavors of the various organizations connected with the church and of individuals whose zeal needs no quickening from without Torrington.—Third. A remarkable feature of the large ingathering of converts to church membership at the last communion service was the number of young men. With a few exceptions the age of those received was from 16 to 25. This addition carries the membership up to about 500. Over 100 persons allied themselves with the three churches within a few weeks as a result of revival services.

Windsor Locks.—A committee has been appointed to investigate the different plans of church seating and report at a special meeting. At the recent thank offering of the Ladies' H. M. S. the envelopes yielded over $75. Roderick Kendall, Esq., has resigned as secretary of the society after 45 years' continuous service.

Ansonia.—The people are working for the raising of the church debt through the offer of Mr. Egbert Bartlett to give $500 for that purpose provided the remainder, $2,250, be subscribed within two years. The pastor, Rev. W. F. Markwick, is giving a series of six sermons on Christianity.

West Stafford.—The Tolland County Conference desires to awaken a deeper interest among the hurches in its membership, and to that end a spe-ial meeting was held May 5, which was largely ttended.

The foundation of the front part of the First hurch edifice at Waterbury has settled, necessi-ating repairs.——Rev. W. W. Wallace has closed is year's engagement at Bridgewater.——The par-onage at Huntington is being painted.——The peo-le at Washington have given $30 to the India elief fund.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

New York.—Manhattan. The second Sunday in ay was observed as Children's Day. An exquis-tely printed program was provided by Mr. G. F. ushnell. Four infants were baptized and seven hildren received Bibles. Several exercises were endered by the children. Dr. Stimson, the pastor, reached an excellent sermon. A collection was aken for the Sunday School Society.

Phœnix received 43 persons last week Sunday, all n confession. All the churches of the village have howed the benefits of a 10 days' revival meeting. ev. N. J. Gulick is pastor.

Pennsylvania

Braddock opened its doors for a week of evan-elistic meetings for the Swedes, of whom there are bout 1,000. The services were conducted by the wedish Free Church of McKeesport.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

Cleveland.—Pilgrim received 43 new members t the May communion, 34 on confession, of whom were from the Sunday school. In place of the sual preparatory lecture a special welcome service as held, seats were reserved for the new members, rief words of welcome were spoken by the pastors nd several officers of the church and an opportu-ity was given for social acquaintance.——Cleve-nd ministers made their May meeting an all day athering, and were the guests of the beautifully cated suburban church on Archwood Avenue, now ejoicing in its enlarged and beautified church ome. The women served dinner between sessions. he theme of the day was What Does the Church eed in Order to Win a Great Victory in the Twen-eth Century? Addresses of earnestness and power ere made by Rev. D. Y. Thomas, Dr. J. T. Hedley, well-known lecturer and member of Archwood venue Church, and Rev. L. A. Banks, D.D., re-ently come to the First Methodist Church. The ntire afternoon session was devoted to a discus-ion of the morning addresses.

Toledo.—First. Dr. W. W. Williams has just losed an active pastorate of 42 years. The church as had great success in its early history in soul-inning and church-planting. The new pastor, Rev. . M. Hyde of Greenville, Mich., comes June 1.——entral. The pastor elect, Prof. T. D. Kelsey of berlin, is already supplying the church and will ettle July 1. All the churches in Toledo then will e well equipped with pastors.

Elyria is considering plans for a new institu-ional church building and already has about half he necessary cost subscribed. The church and ociety have voted unanimously to make all seats ree the coming year. Rev. W. E. Cadmus, recently f Hingham, Mass., is proving himself a strong and ise leader in this important field.

Illinois

[For other Chicago news see page 714.]

Streator.—First, since reorganization a few onths ago, is renewing its youth and promises to ecome a spiritual force in the city. At the last ommunion 12 new members were received and here are more to follow. New features have been ntroduced; a juvenile choir sings and the classes f the Sunday school, in turn, recite portions of cripture at the morning service. A new edifice is necessity now. Rev. Howell Davies is pastor.

Plano is much encouraged under the leadership f Rev. W. T. Ream, who has served during the ast year while finishing his course in the seminary. very department of church work has increased in nterest and efficiency. The people are united and earty in their support. At his ordination he re-eived a warm welcome and strong assurance of ppreciation and co-operation.

Chicago.—Trinity has entered upon an era of un-sual prosperity. During the present pastorate of 8 months 84 new members have been added, a ajority being on confession. The church is situ-ted in a growing part of the city. Rev. Theodore lifton is pastor.

Indiana

Indianapolis.—Southside. Rev. F. E. Jeffrey nd wife, who returned from India three years ago n account of ill health, have decided to return to the foreign field. For a number of years they were missionaries under the A. B. C. F. M. Mrs. Jeffrey's eyesight, which had become impaired, is now completely restored. Mr. Jeffrey closed his connection with this church May 9, and will spend the summer in supply work and preparing to leave in the fall.——Plymouth. The King's Daughters, assisted by Mrs. Dewhurst, gave a concert for the Southside Church May 7.——Brightwood. Rev. C. E. Grove is taking a short vacation among his friends in Michigan. The special meetings closed with good results. Preparations are completed to dedicate the edifice May 23.

Gas City.—Welsh. A trial came upon this church in the defection of a part of the membership because of its controversy regarding baptism. Part of the Welsh colony had been previously connected with immersionist churches. An effort was made to coalesce that element. It apparently succeeded for a time, but the people have since withdrawn and connected themselves elsewhere. This deprives the church of nearly half its strength, but the Congregationalists are going forward, and it is hoped that the work of Rev. J. R. Evans, just begun, will result in renewed strength.

Fremont.—Rev. John R. Mason is assisting in special evangelistic meetings. The pastor, Rev. Jacob Winslow, closes his work at the end of his year. It is hoped that Mr. Mason may be able to take up the work permanently.

Michigan

Detroit.—Old First. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton has been drawning large evening congregations to hear his course of evening sermons on The Sabbath—Its Principles and Observance.——The Congregational ministers of the city and vicinity held their regular monthly meeting last week at the Ste Claire Hotel. Supper was served, after which a lengthy, informal discussion took place on How to Develop Congregational Interest in Detroit. Nine pastors were

Continued on page 728.

The Royal—White and Pure as the Driven Snow.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Covered with Boils

Also Had Sore Eyelids—Little Girl Completely Cured by the Faithful Use of Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"My little girl was covered with boils on her head and face. She also had sore eyelids. We began giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla one year ago, and for some time we could not see any change in her condition, but we were persistent in the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in a few weeks more I noticed some improvement. After she had taken three bottles she was perfectly well. Her face is now entirely free from any marks or scars. I think it is no more than right to give this testimonial for Hood's." Mrs. Milton Beamsderfer, 35 Hazel Street, Lancaster, Pa.

If you have decided to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other. Get Hood's and only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills easy to take, easy to buy, easy to operate. 25c.

Summer Millinery

We are now displaying artistic and exclusive models in Leghorns, White Straws and Fancy Hats in delicate colorings, for Summer Costumes and to match Class and Graduation Day Gowns, showing the newest arrangements of Flower and Chiffon Effects and the Latest Shapes for this season.

Prices the lowest possible consistent with the best work.

Untrimmed Hats—every shape that is stylish is here.

Flowers—best assortment in Boston.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E.W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BAMBOO.

Houses, bridges, carts and water pipes are all made of Bamboo in the East Indies. And China gives us the cue for Bamboo furniture.

In that land of low cost Bamboo furniture is especially popular because of its cheapness. Then, too, it is light, weighing only about half what ordinary furniture would weigh. It is neat in appearance; there are no corners or crevices for dust, and it may be washed when desired.

Bamboo has been transformed this year into two new art colors—forest green and sealing wax red. There are many rare shapes and novel pieces—divans, tea tables, screens, easy chairs, tabourets, etc.

The coverings may be of cloth or Oriental matting. The new coloring is a treatment which will not rub or chip off. Bamboo furniture is very artistic and very cheap. A great display of it here this week.

Our new Catalogue of Summer Furniture will be mailed on receipt of two 2 cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Continued from page 727.

present.——Boulevard. The churches of Detroit and vicinity met in council recently for organization and recognition of this new church, with 32 members, 15 on confession. A number more, who were unable to be present, will unite later as charter members.

Cadillac.—May 9 was a great day in the history of this church. The pastor, Rev. N. S. Bradley, baptized 42 adults and received into the church 86 new members. This ingathering is in a large measure the result of a series of union meetings recently led by Rev. E. E. Davidson. His culture and judgment give him a peculiar fitness for his work, and his ability as a preacher of the gospel compels the intellectual respect of all classes.

Grand Rapids.—Smith Memorial. Rev. F. G. Blanshard has closed a year of service. Thirty-three members have united, and the church has made excellent progress in every way.——Park. Rev. D. F. Bradley has closed his fifth year as pastor. In this time 406 new members have been received, 176 on confession. The net gain has been 213.

Pontiac.—Plymouth Club closed its lecture series last week. A farewell reception was tendered Rev. B. F. Aldrich last week. Many attended and the regret at losing the pastor and his wife, who are much beloved, was deeply felt. Mr. Aldrich begins work at once in Ypsilanti.

South Lake Linden.—Rev. H. J. McClements has tendered his resignation, but the church has requested that he reconsider, and a largely signed petition of those outside the church also urge him to stay. The church is in a good condition.

Howard City has been encouraged by a revival by which 30 have received good and united with the church.

Wisconsin

Clintonville.—During the three years' pastorate of Rev. W. A. Gerrie a commodious edifice has been erected, the congregations have more than doubled, the church membership has increased largely, and the Sunday school has been efficiently manned. Since Jan. 1 there have been 20 additions to church membership. A large training class and the prayer meetings are well attended.

Clinton has its membership and congregations the largest in the history of the church. The Sunday school is also in a flourishing condition. The pastor is Rev. William Moore.

Harris Ridge, organized in 1896 with 30 charter members, has just received 19 new members on confession. Rev. J. W. Hadden is pastor.

Berlin, through its Sunday Evening Club, has had a course on Denominational Standpoints.——Rev. L. W. Winslow of Hayward has held special meetings with the aid of Evangelist Terry, a number of hopeful conversions resulting.

THE WEST

Missouri

Kansas City.—Ivanhoe Park. The members were pleasantly surprised Easter morning to find that their meeting house had been neatly tinted during the week as a gift from their pastor, Rev. M. F. Luther, and his wife.

St. Louis.—Tabernacle. A series of interesting revival meetings was held during the week ending May 2, in which members of the St. Louis C. E. Union rendered valuable assistance.

Iowa

Marion.—The Davenport Association, May 12, on the ground that abundant and conclusive evidence had been presented to that body against Rev. J. W. Geiger, to prove his immoral conduct and unfitness for the Christian ministry, unanimously adopted resolutions declaring him guilty of the charges preferred against him, and expelling him from membership in the association.

Decorah has received 63 accessions since Jan. 1. Of these 53 united May 2, in part the result of the recent revival. Among them were six married couples.

Minnesota

Mapleton has received large accessions during the year, the Sterling Church with which it was yoked having been absorbed into its membership, The parsonage debt has been paid and the work is prospering. Revival meetings a few months ago helped a number of the young people.

Fairmont.—A subscription has been raised for a new house of worship, which is greatly needed. It is hoped to complete a $5,000 building in the autumn.

Nebraska

York celebrated its 25th anniversary May 12. Historical papers, letters from former pastors, impromptu speeches and the presentation of a Columbia bicycle to the present pastor, Rev. R. T. Cross, were interesting features. The annual benevolences during the last 18 years have averaged about $800, and the membership in the quarter-century has increased from six to 271. About 600 persons have been members at one time or another, more than half of them uniting on confession.

North Dakota

Rev. J. L. Maile, one of the field secretaries of the Education Society, has been appointed by the Home Missionary Society as its superintendent in the State. Mr. Maile has had a thorough training for this work, both as State Sunday school superintendent and home missionary superintendent. He filled the former office efficiently in Colorado and Missouri, and the latter in Nebraska before entering upon the service of the Education Society.

PACIFIC COAST

California

San Francisco.—The Morning Star has arrived from Honolulu—22 days out. This is her second visit since 1883, the year she was built.——First. On a recent evening a large audience enjoyed the musical service given in celebration of 25 years' service of the organist, S. D. Mayer, after which a good sized check was presented to him.

Oakland.—First. The 25th anniversary of Dr. J. K. McLean's pastorate in this suburb was fittingly celebrated by a special service April 25 and by a reception the following Tuesday evening. In 1872 First Church had only 247 members, the city having 15,000 inhabitants, with 11 churches and 1,100 communicants. Since then 2,500 persons have joined, but of the original 247 only 24 still live, and of these but 15 are residents of Oakland. Congregationalists in California have increased in number from 2,486 to 14,881; the S. S. membership from 5,603 to 16,972; benevolences from $6,295 to $43,529. Five other Congregational churches have been organized in Oakland in the last quarter of a century under the fostering care of Dr. McLean and First Church.

Washington

North Yakima dedicated an attractive house of worship May 9. This brings the church to the center of the town and gives opportunity for growth The old building was badly located, far to one side and away from the residential portion of the city.

In a community in Central Washington where there was no money to continue the public school beyond a three months' term, a member of the Congregational church, instead of sending his daughter away from home, used the money to employ a private teacher and opened the public school for another term at his own expense.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK

The Evangelistic Association of New England will hold its 10th annual conference of pastors, evangelists and business men in the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, May 25, 26, with addresses by Rev. J. W. Conley, D. D., of St. Paul, Minn., Rev. W. N. Brodbeck, D. D., Francis Murphy, Miss E. S. Tobey, Mrs. A. J. Gordon and others.

"Blood Will Tell" in the long run, in man or woman. Success or defeat "runs in the blood." The blood that counts in this Republic is pure blood, not blue blood. Purity is power. Galahad might well sing, "My strength is as the strength of ten, because my blood is pure." Impure blood can be purified. The weak can be made strong. You may make a century run in the race of life if you purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic May 30–June 5. That Ye Bear Much ruit. John 15: 1-14.

When Jesus was putting before his disciples is beautiful allegory, his eyes might have een resting upon a strong and graceful vine hose lustrous leaves but partly concealed e rich clusters of grapes. With that marelous deftness which he possessed of turning account the incident of the moment, he ompares himself to this vine. How simple ust have seemed to him the relation between imself and his followers when he could find typified in the climbing, productive vine. they would only do as he bade them, would bide in him, the outcome would be just as re and satisfactory as the product of the ine. As God furnished the sunshine and the esh air and the moisture for the ripening of e grapes, so would he watch over, tend and rune the soul that had given itself to Christ, nd thereby secure from it fairest blossoms nd the most luscious fruit.

We need constantly to go back to the simlicity of this thought, to remind ourselves hat living with Jesus is the only way to obain beauty and symmetry of character. We ay go to a dozen schools and academies that each good manners, we may read Lord Cheserfield's suggestive letters to his son, we ay enter upon a stiff regimen designed to vercome our vices and develop our virtues, ut not until we have been permeated with he spirit of Christ shall we reach our best tate as men and women.

Christian fruit-bearing is not confined to ny particular form of endeavor. Probably esus was thinking, not only of active effort n his behalf, but quite as much of the exhiition of certain traits of character which are, fter all, the best guideboard to the kingdom f heaven. Noisy and demonstrative underakings meant less to Jesus than the daily nastery of self, the constant outgo of faith nd hope and love, the unnoticed self-sacrices, the humility and the patience which nake life easier for those with whom our lots re cast. You always know Christian fruit f this sort when you see it. It cannot be ied onto a life as we fasten pretty knicknacks upon Christmas trees. It springs nly from a life rooted in Christ.

"They shall still bring forth fruit in old ge," says the Psalmist, and now and then ve fall in with a life far on toward the sunset vhich exhibits sweetly and quietly the gifts nd the graces of the spirit. What a testimony such a life is to the gospel. How preious a value it affixes to the few earthly ears that comprise even the longest life. But t is only lives that begin in youth to bring orth fruit that present in after years to the world this evidence that Christ is still the inspiration and the power of noble living.

The success of the Tennessee Centennial Exhibition at Nashville seemes to be assured. The partial success of an air ship, which has made several voyages, has attracted wide attention. It must be gratifying to the city pride of Nashville at this time to have the new gunboat of the same name make a fine record for speed on her official trial. The exhibition will remain open until October and we shall take note of its development and the special gatherings convened from time to time.

For inflammation and pain, try Pond's Extract. Do not be deluded by spurious preparations.

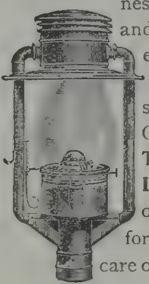
MESSRS. GILCHRIST & CO. make quite an extraordinary announcement in another column of this issue. They offer to make up, free of charge, a dress skirt, if five yards of material costing fifty cents or over per yard, with linings and bindings, are purchased. Perfect satisfaction is guaranteed or money refunded. This offer is for this week.

BEAUTY IN BAMBOO.—Every one who can afford the time should certainly visit the warerooms of the Paine Furniture Company on Canal Street this week and see the new colored bamboo furniture. It opens up a new field for bamboo and, as the latest discovery, it is having a tremendous sale. There is everything in its favor—low cost, novelty, great beauty and all round luxury. Our readers should see this furniture without delay.

AN UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY.—In view of a number of changes in the business of Joel Goldthwait & Co., consequent upon the recent death of one of the members of the firm, their complete stock of carpets, rugs, mattings, etc , is offered at a large reduction from regular prices. This well known firm have always enjoyed the reputation of carrying the very best quality of goods, and a chance to purchase them at prices which shall insure their immediate sale is an opportunity which not only seldom occurs, but which we do not doubt will be at once taken advantage of. No firm is more favorably known throughout New England in its line, and early callers will have the advantage of the most varied selection.



Outdoor Light

Nothing adds so much to the attractiveness of a village or home, and safety from night prowlers, as well lighted streets and grounds. This is secured by the STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN CO.'S Tubular Globe Street Lamp, which is cheap, ornamental, burns 4 hours for a cent, and almost takes care of itself; will not blow out.

We make Tubular Porch, Carriage and Stable Lamps besides, and all of them are as good as the Street Lamp. Your dealer has, or can get them. Send to us for detailed description. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY,
Syracuse, N, Y.

WEDDING INVITATIONS.

Stylish, popular, first quality. 100 for $4.00; 50 for $2.75; express prepaid by us. Samples free. J. & P. B. MYERS, 85 and 87 John Street, New York.

A GREAT OCCASION

...IN OUR...

Dress Goods Department.

Having made extraordinary arrangements with one of Boston's largest and best Dressmaking Concerns, we make this most unusual proposition to all our customers: Each day for one week we will make to order a

Dress Skirt Free of Charge to every person who buys a five-yard length of any material, either plain or fancy, black or colored, at 50 cents or more, with the linings and binding.

We shall guarantee perfect satisfaction in every respect or refund the money.

GILCHRIST & CO.
WINTER STREET, BOSTON.

French...
...Challies

New and Beautiful Designs
Just Received.

.....

Chandler & Co.
WINTER ST., BOSTON.

"XII"
Spoons

have three times the usual thickness of silver on the places most exposed to wear, as indicated in the illustration. They wear three times as long as ordinary spoons, and cost but little extra. The full trade-mark (stamped on each piece) is

1847 Rogers Bros. XII

For sale by dealers everywhere. Made by
MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO.
MERIDEN, CONN.; 208 Fifth Ave., NEW YORK.
The largest manufacturers of high-class silver-plated ware in the world.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Hotels and Travel

HOLIDAYS IN ENGLAND.

Embracing the district made famous by Tennyson's scenes of his "Farmer and Maud," Dickens' "Home of Copperfield and Peggotty," the Birthplaces of the early founders of New England and Virginia, this district appeals to every American. The Cathedrals of Ely, Lincoln, Peterborough, Norwich, York, and Durham and Cambridge Colleges. Send five cents (postage) for 63-page book profusely illustrated describing above districts. Illustrated pamphlets FREE, describing Cathedral Route. Liverpool and Glasgow to London and Harwich Route to the Continent via Hook of Holland, Rotterdam, or Antwerp. Rates and Information cheerfully furnished by

H. J. KETCHAM,
Gen'l Agent Great Eastern Ry. of England,
362 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of ten years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist

White Mountains. To rent, a private house for summer months; 14 rooms, with stable. Address Thorn Hill, Jackson, N. H.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Cottage to Rent at Amagansett, L. I. Containing 8 rooms, kitchen and bath. Fine ocean view. Ten minutes' walk to R. R. depot, five minutes to ocean. Address E. B. LEEK.

Wanted, by lady of middle age, the care of an invalid in vicinity of Boston. References all that would be required as to character and ability. Address Mrs. M., office of The Congregationalist.

Board and Rooms A desirable location at Old Orchard, Me. Ten minutes' walk from the beach. Country and seashore advantages. Electric cars. Terms reasonable. Address Box 190, Old Orchard, Me.

For Summer Guests. A Congregational pastor opens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious rooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; first-class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York or Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted, position as housekeeper in an elderly widower's Christian home, by a refined, middle-aged lady, who understands the care of a nice, quiet home. Not over twenty miles from Boston. Address, A. R., The Congregationalist.

To Let for the Summer. First floor (six large rooms) and two chambers, well furnished, for general housekeeping, in house on a farm bordering on Lake Winnepesaukee, 1½ miles from Wolfeboro village and R. R. station. Location and scenery unsurpassed. Good water, piano, etc. Terms reasonable. Address Box 116, Wolfeboro, N. H.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

THE P. O. address of Rev. Frederick Alvord is Newton Center, Mass., instead of Talcottville, Ct.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

EARN A BICYCLE

600 Second Hand Wheels. All Makes. GOOD AS NEW. $5 to $15. New High Grade '96 models, fully guaranteed $17 to $25. Special Clearing Sale. Shipped any where on approval.

We will give a responsible agt. in each town free use of sample wheel to introduce them Our reputation is well known throughout the country. Write at once for our special offer

N. C. MEAD CYCLE CO., Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HANDBOOK FOR APRIL

Turkey and Turkish Problems.

☞ 100 Copies, $1.25, postpaid ☜

4 cents each; 50 copies, 75 cents; 25 copies, 50 cents.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

Hotels and Travel

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Parties will leave Boston June 3, July 15 and 29, for Grand Tours (under personal escort) through that Land of Marvels,

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK,

THE WONDERLAND OF AMERICA.

Visits will be made to the Mammoth Hot Springs, Norris Geyser Basin, Lower Geyser Basin, Upper Geyser Basin, Yellowstone Lake, and the Canon of the Yellowstone; also to Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Choice of the All-Rail route eastward from Minneapolis, or the route from Duluth to Buffalo via

THE GREAT LAKES.

Independent Railroad and Steamship Tickets to all points

☞ Send for descriptive circular.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opposite School St., Boston.

Going To... EUROPE?

H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd).

The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out

30 ESCORTED PARTIES

Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.

W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.

ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,

BY THE

AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"

Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.

Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to

International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

DR. STRONG'S SANITARIUM,

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Centrally located. Elevator, Steam, Suites with Bath, Sun Parlor and Roof Promenade, Elegant Turkish and Russian Baths. A first-class table. We offer a special rate to those attending the Home Missionary meetings of $2 00 per day. Send for illustrated circular and announcements for 1897. Entertainments, bicycle paths, etc.

Hotels and Travel

THE ELMS.

(Former private residence of Jason W. Mixter.)

First Season of this New, Select and Attractive Hotel "THE ELMS"

PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS.

Beautifully located on Court Street, the main street of the town; two minutes from R. R. Station and Seashore convenient to post office, churches, golf links, bathing beach, and all places of interest and attraction. Electric cars pass every half-hour; rooms elegantly furnished large and airy; hot water heating; nine open fireplaces chance for fire in every room. All appointments of the house are of the very best; perfect sanitary arrangements, two bathrooms, three toilet rooms, eight lavatories; rooms frescoed throughout and hard-wood finish Excellent service, good, refined family table. Will be opened June 1. For photographs and information address The Elms, Plymouth, Mass.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

HOTEL AMERICAN-ADELPHI

On Broadway, in the very Center of the Village.

Fine brick building; spacious halls; light and airy rooms; steam heat and passenger elevator. Best located hotel in Saratoga.

THE NEAREST HOTEL TO CHURCH WHERE MEETINGS ARE TO BE HELD, AND WITHIN TWO MINUTES' WALK OF ALL THE LEADING SPRINGS A SPECIAL RATE GIVEN FOR THE AMERICA HOME MISSIONARY MEETINGS. $1.50 and $2.0 per day.

Free coaches to and from the railway stations.

GEO. A. FARNHAM, Prop.

HUESTIS HOUSE

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Headquarters for Congregational Home Missionary meetings, held May 31st. For rates and rooms address

W. B. HUESTIS, Prop

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

THE LAFAYETTE will entertain 100 guests during the Home Missionary Meeting at $1.25 and $1.50 per day. Elegant and convenient location on Circular St. Very pleasant modern house, electric bells, excellent bill of fare. Rates good until June 15. Our 15th season. Send for circular.

GEORGE E. BATES, Prop.

PASSACONAWAY INN,

YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st

ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

St. Denis

Broadway
& 11th Street
NEW YORK.

Opposite Grace Church.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.

William Taylor & Son.

Enquire of Ticket Agents or at Principal Offices:
212 Clark St., CHICAGO. 423 Broadway, NEW YORK.
5 State St., BOSTON.
Or address the General Passenger and Ticket Agent at Chicago.

COLORADO
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND
SALT LAKE
ALASKA
DAKOTA HOT SPRINGS

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK

AND THE HEALTH AND PLEASURE RESORTS OF THE WEST AND NORTHWEST

MILWAUKEE
ST. PAUL
MINNEAPOLIS
DULUTH
ASHLAND
MARQUETTE

LOW SUMMER TOURIST RATES

VIA THE

NORTH-WESTERN LINE

Chicago & North-Western Railway.

SPECIALLY LOW EXCURSION RATES

TO MILWAUKEE { On account of the N. E. A. Convention July 6-9.

TO ST. PAUL and MINNEAPOLIS { The occasion of the Annual Meeting B. P. O. Elks July 6.

TO SAN FRANCISCO On account of the Christian Endeavor Convention July 7-12.

SOLID VESTIBULED TRAINS
SUPERBLY EQUIPPED

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The feature of the week has been the reopening of the Cuban question in Washington. The mercantile community is not much disturbed over the matter, but Wall Street professes to experience pangs of fear. Wall Street can get up a scare out of very light material. The belief is general that the McKinley policy with regard to Cuba will be extremely temperate, and that consequently no precipitate action need be expected.

General trade continues quiet, with prices fairly steady. It is thought that the rush to import foreign merchandise in anticipation of the tariff has reached its hight, for the reason that business is quiet, and there is so much uncertainty regarding Senate amendments to the bill. For example, the Aldrich amendment to the wool duty takes off three cents per pound from the Dingley rate. Of course those people who have loaded up with wool do not like such amendments, and it is the fear of similar ones which will very likely keep down imports.

The conspicuous examples of falling prices this week were print cloths, wool and particularly pig iron and steel billets, which are now at the lowest on record. Cotton goods continue inactive and the mills are accumulating stocks. Merchants in all lines buy for immediate wants only and the whole situation may be summed up as very unsatisfactory.

In the stock market there is no particular change. Prices rise one day and fall the next. However, they are on such a low basis that the writer cannot help thinking that stocks are a purchase to hold for a long pull.

THE PEOPLE AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM

In the hearing before Governor Black of New York upon the bill intended to "take the starch out of" the competitive civil service system of the State Carl Schurz said:

> I maintain that an honest competitive system breaks the aristocracy of influence distinctly for the benefit of the people—to secure justice to the people. Only when public places are to be reached by free and open competitive tests accessible to all, and are conducted with honest impartiality—that is, when the element of personal or political favor or influence is entirely excluded from selections for office, when the favor of the millionaire and of the party chief combined weigh nothing against a simple demonstration of merit—only then will the poor man, the man without influential backing, the man who depends entirely upon his own worth, be sure to have his fair and equal chance. Only then will public office be truly open to the people. Only then will our public service be administered upon principles truly democratic.
>
> If the lowly, the laboring men, the men without influence, understood this competitive system—as some day, I trust, they will understand it—they would be aware that this alone opens to them and their children the road to public employment consistently with their self-respect and dignity as men, and that, without it, they will never be able to attain office unless becoming the political slave of somebody. They would be aware that every place withdrawn from honest competition and put within the discretion of the appointing power is, as a rule, put beyond their reach, because it can be attained only by persons having the favor and influence of the powerful behind them. And, knowing this, they would jealously watch every place removed from the honest competitive rule as a place stolen from them; and they would hold to stern account every political party seeking to transfer offices from competitive examinations conducted by independent examiners to the discretion of the appointing officer, and thus to expose it to political pressure and arbitrary favor; for they will have a right to denounce that party as seeking to rob the poor, the lowly, the men without backing, and their children, of their equal chance, and as playing directly into the hands of the aristocracy of influence.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES

Toronto Endeavorers have been considering the need of effort for those employed in the theatres.

Spanish schools have half-holidays on the Roman Catholic festal days, but a Junior Society voted unanimously against postponing their meeting in order to take advantage of the holiday.

The success of the work for those in the Kentucky State prison has led to the undertaking of work for those in the jails The Hopkinsville Union has a jail committee and at its first meeting 12 or more prisoners asked prayers and six promised to lead a better life.

A committee of a division of Chicago Union has asked the pastors of the societies through circulars for information as to any special encouragement in regard to the work, any weaknesses noted, the attendance of Endeavorers at the midweek meetings and suggestions as to possible improvements.

Landing in Durban, Natal, March 23, Dr. Clark attended, that evening, the first of seven meetings held in the city. Time was taken for a visit of three hours to Amanzimtote, where a wonderful revival was in progress. Meetings of much interest were held in Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, and in Ladysmith, and then the journey was made to Johannesburg. Some of the South African papers had circulated the statement that there are 8,000,000 Endeavorers.

Over Exertion of Brain or Body. Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It is a wholesale tonic for body, brain and nerves. Wonderfully quick in its action.

Lamps to Burn
At the Seashore.

In our Lamp Department will be found lamps adapted to seashore and mountain homes, including the quaint old blue Canton China bodies mounted with wrought iron feet, and having the safety American burners. All grades from the low cost to the expensive specimens.

In our Cut Glass department will be seen the newest designs of rich American Cut Crystal Glass pieces, adapted to Bridal Gifts, costing from $5 up to $90 each.

In the Dinner Set Room are new shapes and decorations as well as the old standard shapes and patterns, Dinner Sets or parts of Sets from the ordinary up to the expensive services.

China Bedroom Sets, new tints and colors to harmonize with modern interior decorations. Extensive variety to choose from.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
China, Crockery, Glass and Lamps,
120 FRANKLIN.

For
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES COLD IN HEAD CATARRH ROSE-COLD HAY FEVER DEAFNESS HEADACHE
TRADE-MARK
ELY BRO'S NEW YORK
Catarrh
Hay-Fever
Cold in Head

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 10c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City.

Printed India Silks

Both the Genuine Eastern Silks with Lyons Printing, and the Genuine French Foulards with Lyons Printing in the colorings and designs which Paris indicated as correct for the coming summer, and which have proved correct, judging by sales to our customers who can be relied on in matters of fashion and good taste.

Recent arrivals keep our assortment full.
Prices range from
55c. to $1.75
Send for Free Samples.

R. H. STEARNS & CO.
Tremont St. and Temple Place,
BOSTON.

8% Absolutely Safe Municipal Security. Bought largely by best Banks and Trust Companies Write for details. ROBERT E. STRAHORN & CO., Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE: NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Seventh Semi-Annual Statement, Jan., 1897.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$306,032.86
Real Estate	1,748,857.41
United States Stocks	1,497,762.50
State Bonds	25,000.00
City Bonds	821,974.81
Rail Road Bonds	1,624,495.00
Water Bonds	83,500.00
Gas Stocks and Bonds	115,925.00
Rail Road Stocks	2,476,595.00
Bank Stocks	311,500.00
Trust Co. Stocks	85,150.00
Bonds and Mortgages, being 1st lien on Real Estate	423,786.71
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	183,100.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	602,866.76
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1897,	55,678.34
	$10,362,224.39

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,280,827.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims,	735,128.68
Net Surplus	2,346,268.71
	$10,362,224.39

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, } Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries.
NEW YORK, January 12, 1897.

BLANCARD'S
PILLS AND SYRUP
OF
Iodide of Iron
THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE,
for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.
None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.
E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

"Knowledge is folly unless put to use." You know . . SAPOLIO? THEN USE IT.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MAY 14

God's Guidance was the subject, and the leader, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, who, after reading from Deut. 32 and John 16, gave as special thoughts for consideration: "How to understand the guidings of the Spirit?" "Does God lead us in temporal things?" and "Are our desires indications of God's leading?"

Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick spoke of the difficulty, even on missionary ground, of knowing when we were under God's guidance. She regarded sincere consecration as an element essential to this knowledge, and felt that it is easier to recognize the guiding hand of God after the event than before. In giving personal reminiscences, showing how she had been unconsciously led of God, Mrs. Gulick told of her childhood, during which, though in a missionary atmosphere, she had no thought of ever becoming a missionary. When she was twelve years old she took from the Sunday school library the Life of Mary Lyon, supposing it to be some sort of a story. The book made so much impression upon her that when the time came for her to go from home to school she chose to go to Mt. Holyoke. There, spending her last year of life on earth, was the sainted Fidelia Fiske, who rested not until she had brought this young girl to Christ. Every after event of Mrs. Gulick's life had pointed to mission work, and when the final decision was made she learned for the first time that while yet in her cradle her father had consecrated her to the foreign missionary work. "He leadeth me" is the motto of their school in San Sebastian.

Miss Kara Ivanova of Bulgaria thought that one had only to look in one's own life in order to believe in the miracles of God. When several ways are offered, or when duties conflict, then it is sweetest to be alone with God, to rest on him and to remember "one step's enough for me."

These and other thoughts brought out by several speakers were gathered up at the close by Mrs. Fessenden, who showed them as all facets of one precious jewel, while prayers that were offered by Mrs. J. H. Stuckenberg, Mrs. Kellogg and Mrs. Nathaniel Greene deepened the impression of the hour.

The ladies were reminded of the semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Board, to be held in the South Church, Salem, May 27, when a rare feast will be offered in the presence of Mrs. Gulick from Spain, Mrs. Fowle from Cæsarea, Mrs. Garland from Micronesia, Miss Daniels from Japan and Miss Stone and Miss Kara-Ivanova from Bulgaria.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

HARRIS—In Everett, May 7, Rev. John L. Harris, aged 65 yrs., 11 mos.

HERRICK—In New York, May 13, Abbie Stephenson, daughter of Rev. George F. and Helen M. Herrick, of Constantinople, Turkey, aged 22 yrs.

HOLTON—In Kodeikanal, India, April 1, Clara, daughter of Rev. Edward P. and Gertrude S. Holton, of the Madura Mission, aged 18 mos.

MARSHALL—In San Bernardino, Cal., April 28, Rev. John W. Marshall, of Portage, Wis. He was a graduate of Beloit College in 1887 and of Chicago Seminary in 1891, and was ordained pastor at Mankato, Minn., in 1892.

YELLOWSTONE PARK TOURS.—Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb announce their thirteenth annual series of sight-seeing trips through the Yellowstone National Park, the dates of departure of the parties from Boston being June 3, and July 15 and 29. In these trips the park is made the main objective point, the journeys to and from that region being broken, however, by several visits to the cities and points of picturesque interest en route. The plans for the round of travel through the park are made upon a generous scale, involving extra days within the park, extra stage service, and ample time for rest as well as sight-seeing. An interesting feature this season is the opportunity to return by steamer through the Great Lakes from Duluth to Buffalo. A descriptive circular will be furnished free by Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington Street, opposite School Street.

4 These competitions will be conducted monthly during 1897

First Prizes, each of $100 Cash	$ 400
20 Second Prizes, each of $100 Pierce Special Bicycles	2,000
40 Third Prizes, each of $25 Gold Watches	1,000
Cash and Prizes given each month	$3,400
	12
Total given during 12 months 1897	$40,800

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM. Competitors to save as many "Sunlight" Soap Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating competitor's full name and address and the number of coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with Number of the District competitor lives in. The districts are as follows:

NAME OF DISTRICT.

1 New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, and New Jersey.

2 New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).

3 Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.

4 The New England States

SEND THIS TOP PORTION

$3,400.00 GIVEN AWAY EACH MONTH IN CASH. BICYCLES AND WATCHES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS

The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First-class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

LEVER BROS., LTD.,
NEW YORK.

RULES. 1. Every month during 1897, in each of the four districts, prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.00.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Bros., Ltd., as final.

See Him Coast.

The famous Waverley Bicycle of last year—made famous by its sterling qualities—has been greatly improved, and as new machinery was not necessary to continue its manufacture, the price has been reduced to $60.

The Waverley Bicycle

of a higher grade, for those who want the very best, costs $100. It has the only perfect bearings, and is constructed on a new and expensive principle. It cannot be sold for less. Write for a catalogue. Indiana Bicycle Co., Indianapolis, Indiana.

ITCHING SKIN DISEASES

Instant Relief for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin and scalp diseases with loss of hair, in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), and a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER D. AND C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Itching Skin Diseases," free

RED ROUGH HANDS Healed, Softened, and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF
CURES CATARRH

It has never been equalled for the instant relief of Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Headache. Cures Deafness, restores lost sense of smell. Sixty yrs. on the market. Price 25 cts. at all Druggists or by mail postpaid. F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

The Electropoise

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.
Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.
General Agent for the New England States.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THAT THE ANNOUNCEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA
Benicia,	—	4
Pomona, Pilgrim,	8	15
San Francisco, First,	5	7
Olivet,	3	3
CONNECTICUT
Bristol,	7	12
Ekonk,	9	13
Hartford, Zion,	4	4
New Fairfield,	10	13
New Hartford,	4	4
New Marlboro,	10	13
New Milford,	—	7
Ridgefield,	—	6
Westbrook,	6	9
West Haven,	4	4
ILLINOIS
Aurora, First,	8	11
Carpentersville,	1	3
Chicago, Bowmanville,	5	9
Central Park,	3	4
Douglas Park,	3	5
Immanuel,	4	6
Lincoln Park,	6	6
Maywood,	13	18
Pacific,	1	10
Ravenswood,	5	9
Trinity,	—	23
Metropolis,	—	8
Oak Park, Forest Ave. Branch,	4	7
Rockford, First,	4	5
INDIANA
Elkhart, First,	4	4
Indianapolis, People's,	—	5
IOWA
Cromwell,	5	5
Decorah,	53	53
Des Moines, Pilgrim,	12	12
MASSACHUSETTS
Bedford,	2	4
Clinton,	7	12
Housatonic,	5	5
MICHIGAN
Cadillac,	80	86
Detroit, Boulevard,	15	32
Grand Rapids, East,	3	3
Plymouth,	2	3
Smith Memorial,	—	33
South,	2	5
Harrison,	8	8
Helena,	26	26
Howard City,	30	30
Hudsonville,	1	3
Ula,	—	26
MINNESOTA
Edgerton,	—	13
Merriam Park, Olivet,	—	9
Moorhead,	6	11
MISSOURI
De Soto,	3	6
Grandin,	3	5
St. Louis, Compton Hill,	2	8
Fountain Park,	6	8
Hope,	4	6
Hyde Park,	3	3
Immanuel,	2	5
Valley Park,	—	3
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Concord, South,	4	12
Hancock,	3	3
Hillsboro Bridge,	3	5
Hopkinton,	11	11
Littleton,	6	9
Newport,	—	3
Raymond,	5	5
NEW YORK
Brooklyn, Plymouth,	41	68
Phœnix,	43	43
OHIO
Cleveland, Pilgrim,	34	43
Oberlin, Second,	5	13
VERMONT
Rochester,	5	7
Springfield,	3	3
WASHINGTON
Genessee,	29	29
Seattle, Plymouth.	5	16
WISCONSIN
Clinton,	1	5
Harris Ridge,	—	19
Hayward,	8	13
Mt. Zion,	—	2
Platte,	—	5
Poller,	—	15
Milwaukee, North Side,	—	5
Wheaton,	17	17
OTHER CHURCHES
Bloomfield, Neb.,	10	10
Bryant, S. D.,	4	5
Great Bend, Kan.,	31	31
Churches with less than three	32	56

Conf., 711; Tot., 1,123.

Total since Jan. 1: Conf., 8,985; Tot., 16,220.

OUR readers and their friends who contemplate visiting San Francisco to attend the annual convention of Christian Endeavorers, to be held in that city July 7th to 12th, 1897, will be pleased to learn that the Chicago & Northwestern Railway announce that they will sell one way tickets from Chicago to San Francisco at rate of $25. Returning, tickets can be purchased from San Francisco to Chicago at same rate. Tickets will be on sale from Chicago June 29th to July 3d, inclusive. All lines from the East, connecting with the Chicago & Northwestern, will sell at one fare for round trip to Chicago, in connection with above rate from Chicago. Full information can be had by addressing W. B. Kniskern, general passenger and ticket agent, Chicago, Ill; H. A. Gross, general Eastern passenger agent, 423 Broadway, New York; J. E. Brittain, New England passenger agent, 5 State Street, Boston.

THE NEW SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE, advertised on another page, is worthy the attention of all our readers. It is the result of an effective combination of two brilliant and original ideas—the one to profusely illustrate the sacred Word by photographic reproductions of the actual scenes and actual places made memorable in the Scriptural narrative, and by placing these illustrations directly opposite those passages or portions of the text to vividly illuminate and make real the incidents to which they refer; the other was to gather up in a single comprehensive work the best that has been written by Biblical scholars in all ages, in criticism, comment upon and elucidation of the Scriptures. The illustrations, 440 in number (size of page 9 x 11½), are the work of American artists who, with competent assistants, journeyed at large expense through Bible lands for the express purpose of procuring this remarkable series of views. The editor of The Congregationalist, referring to these pictures some time since, characterized them as the best ever produced. This is his opinion today, and the enterprise which now places the Bible thus adequately illustrated within reach of all receives his heartiest approval. In taking up this new Bible, Bethlehem and Gethsemane, Jerusalem and Damascus, Galilee and the Jordan, which before have been little more than names upon the map, become real places. It is not pictorial fiction, but photographic reality. When there is added to the really wonderful help of the illustrations the encyclopedic character of the commentaries and explanations, this edition of the Bible would seem to have large claims upon the Christian public. The method of procuring this work makes it easy of purchase.

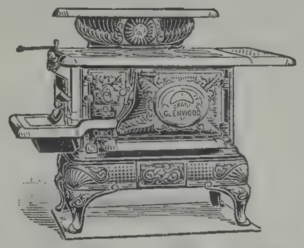
ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR ECKSTEIN	Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC BRADLEY BROOKLYN JEWETT ULSTER UNION	New York.
SOUTHERN SHIPMAN	Chicago.
COLLIER MISSOURI RED SEAL SOUTHERN	St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

IT is a significant fact that responsible dealers sell and responsible painters use Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Pure Linseed Oil. They know their business. Those who don't know, try to sell and use the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," &c., &c.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

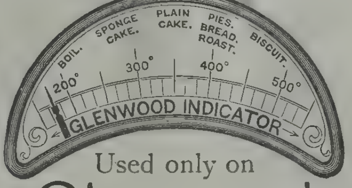
National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

WHY Don't You make cooking A Delight with the



GLENWOOD

Patent Oven Thermometer



The "Greatest Help" to modern cooking ever invented.

Used only on Glenwood RANGES.

The Glenwood agent in your town has them.

Fresh Canton and Japanese Mattings of an EXTRA QUALITY, just received.

Just the thing for Spring and Summer Furnishing.

Also by the STEAMERS CEPHALONIA, KANSAS and ROMAN some TWENTY BALES of Oriental Carpets, Rugs and Mats which we put into Stock and Offer for Sale at LOWER PRICES than ever before.

JOEL GOLDTHWAIT & CO.,

163 to 169 WASHINGTON STREET (NEAR CORNHILL), BOSTON.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BEARD, Wm. S., Yale Sem., accepts call to Durham, N. H.
BELL, Sam'l, late of Pittsfield, N. H., accepts call to Deerfield.
DAVIES, Henry, New Haven, Ct, to Rocky Hill.
DAVIS, A. A., declines calls to North Branch and Sunrise, Minn., and accepts invitation to remain at Lakeland.
DUTCHER, Norman H, Andover Sem., to Vergennes, Vt.
EDWARDS, Rosine M., Pacific Sem., to Hillyard, Wn., where her father has previously had charge.
EVANS, J. Lewis, Derry, N. H., accepts call to Rochester.
FOSTER, Frank, lately of Shandon, O., to Memorial Ch., St. Louis, Mo.
GALLAGHER, Geo. W., Dickinson, N. D., declines call to Tacoma, Wn., and accepts that to First Ch., Brainerd, Minn.
HALL, Archibald M, Yale Sem, accepts call to Taylor Ch., New Haven, Ct.
HENRY, Miss E. K., who has been supplying at Highmore and Holabird, S. D., to Waubay. Declines.
HJERPE, Erik G, Bethany Ch. (Swedish), New Britain, Ct., to his former charge in Galesburg, Ill. Declines.
HUCKEL, Oliver, First Ch., Amherst, Mass., to Associate Reformed Ch. (Independent Presb.), Baltimore, Md.
JONES, Hugh W., formerly of Barneveld, Wis., to Ipswich, S. D., for three months, with a view to permanence. Accepts.
LYMAN, Elias F., Chicago Sem., to Waubay, S. D. Accepts, at least for the summer.
MARTIN, B. F., to remain another year at Fulton, Wis. Accepts.
MASON, Jas. D., late of Forest City, Io., to Pioneer Ch., with residence at Clear Lake. Accepts.
MENZI, Ernest U., Oberlin Sem., to Bowdle, S. D. Accepts.
STERLING, Geo., Manomet, Mass., to Windsor. Accepts.
THOMAS, David L., declines call to remain at Bowdle, S. D., and is called to Gettysburg.
UPTON, Rufus P., to remain a second year at Custer and Garvin. Minn.
VAN OMMEREN, Hendrik, recently of Grass Lake, Mich., to Presb. Ch., Mt. Pleasant. Accepts.
WOOD, Edwin A., Ipswich, S. D., to Presb. Ch., Sweetland, Io. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations

BORG, L. G, o. Swedish Ch., Washington, Ct., Apr. 25.
DE PEU, John, i. North Ch., Bridgeport, Ct., May 4. Sermon, Rev. F. S. Child, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Arthur Goodenough, J. S. Ives, A. F. Pierce, Frank Russell, D. D., H. A. Davenport.
FRAZEE, Fenton E., o. Londonderry, Vt., May 12. Sermon, Rev. E. H. Byington, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. O. S Davis, J. E. Fullerton, C. H. Merrill, H. L. Ballou.
GUILD, Roy B., o. p. Woodstock, Ill., May 3. Sermon, Rev. W. H. Day; other parts, Rev. Messrs. W. R. Gaylord, C. E. Thompson, J. E. Roy, D. D., J. D. Wyckoff, Jas. Tompkins, D. D., Profs. W. B. Chamberlain and E. T. Harper.
HOLTON, Chas. S., i. First Ch., Newbury, Mass., May 11. Sermon, Prof. Geo. Harris, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Drs. J. D. Kingsbury, W. H. Bolster, Rev. Messrs. A. W. Hitchcock, F. W. Sanborn.
MARSH, Edward L., i. Waterville, Me., May 11. Sermon, Rev. David Reid; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. S. Williamson, Edward Chase, J. L. Quimby, W. H. Spencer, C. D. Crane, Thos. Williamson, J. C. Gregory.
NELSON, Andrew P., i. Lowell, Mass., Swedish Ch., May 14. Sermon, Rev. C. W. Holm; other parts, Rev. Messrs. O. G. Tingloff, G. B. Johnson, Emil Holmblad, C. L. Merriam and John Axelson.
REAM, Wm. T., o. p. Plano, Ill., May 4. Sermon, Prof. H. M. Scott, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Jas. Tompkins, D. D., J. M. Lewis, F. L. Sanborn and Prof. W. B. Chamberlain.

Resignations

EGGLESTON, F. O., Aurora, O.
HILL, Chas. J., Stonington, Ct.
JEFFERY, Franklin E., Southside Ch., Indianapolis, Ind., to complete preparations for departure for the foreign field.
JOHNSON, Orrin H., Eagle Harbor, Wn., withdraws resignation and remains another year.
LONGENECKER, Geo. W., W. Andover, O.
LOVEJOY, Geo. E., Stoneham, Mass., to accept call to Pittsfield, N. H.
McNAIR, David C, Mine La Motte, Mo.
ROSS, Albion H., S. Dartmouth, Mass. He has been appointed a lay reader at Grace Episcopal Church, New Bedford.
STOCKWELL, Cyrus K., Litchfield, Mich.
WALLACE, Wm. B., Bridgewater, Ct.
WINTER, Paul, Burdette, S. D.

Churches Organized

DETROIT, Mich., Boulevard, 14 May, 32 members.
SEATTLE, Wn., Independent Ch.
ULA, Mich. (formerly a branch of Alpine and Walker Ch.), 3 May, 26 members. Rev. W. P. Wilcox is pastor.

Supplies for the Summer

AMBOY, Ill., Corry S. Baird, Chicago Seminary, to assist Rev. W. J. Warner in outlying districts.
AMHERST and AURORA, Me., Archie Cullens, Bangor Seminary.
BANGOR, Me., Essex St., Ralph E. Gleason, Bangor Seminary; North and East, Jas. T. Berry, Bangor Seminary.
BLANCHARD, Me., Geo. E. Lake, Bangor Seminary.
CLERMONT, Io., Geo. B. McClellan, Chicago Seminary.
DEAD RIVER, Me., Chas. P. Marshall, Bangor Seminary.
DEER ISLE, Me., Little and North, David F. Atherton, Bangor Seminary.
FREEDOM, Me., Sherman Goodwin, Bangor Seminary.
FRENCHBORO, Me., Geo. A. French, Bangor Seminary.
GARLAND, Me., Thos. W. Harwood, Bangor Seminary.
GAS CITY, Ind., John R. Evans, Oberlin Seminary.
MEDWAY, Me., Edwin E. Grant, Bangor Seminary.
NORRIS CITY, Ill., Sam'l H. Seccombe, Chicago Seminary.
NORTHFIELD, Me., Arthur B. Hunt, Bangor Seminary.
PLYMOUTH, Wis., Francis C. Bliss, Yale Seminary.
SANDY POINT and FRANKFORT, Me., Jas. G. Fisher, Bangor Seminary.
SUNSET, Me., Dan'l E. Putnam, Bangor Seminary.
UPTON, Me., Ronald H. MacPherson, Bangor Seminary.
VANCEBORO, Me., Walter T. Sparhawk, Bangor Seminary.
VEAZIE, Me., Harry A. Beadle, Bangor Seminary.

Miscellaneous

ALDRICH, Benj. F., and wife were given a largely attended farewell reception, May 4, by the church in Pontiac, Mich., who bestowed upon them many beautiful gifts.
BECKWITH, Prof. Chas. A., of Bangor Sem., and his wife, who are about to leave for a year's absence in Europe, were given an enjoyable reception by the people of First Ch.
CRANE, Chas. D., of Machias, Me., will supply at Marshfield during the summer and fall.
HOLWAY, Theo. T., was given a reception and pound party Apr. 26. in recognition of his completion of a year's service.
JULIEN, Matthew C., New Bedford, Mass., has been elected to membership in the American Authors' Guild.
NORTON, Milton J., Chicago Sem., has begun work at Grandin, Mo.
PECK, Henry P., who, owing to ill health, has for some time been unable to occupy his pulpit in Milford, N. H., is visiting relatives in Princeton, Mass.
PHELPS, Lawrence, has been appointed by the Boston Seamen's Friend Society as its field secretary. This organization has a large opportunity to help the multitude of sailors along the New England coast. Mr. Phelps is well fitted both to arouse interest in them and to plan ways of promoting their welfare.
ROTCH, Caleb L., of Stoughton, Mass., is to spend the summer in various forms of missionary work in North Dakota.
SWARTZ, Joel, formerly of Steubenville, O., has taken charge of a promising mission work at Devon, a suburb of Philadelphia.
WHEELWRIGHT, Joseph, of South Byefield, Mass., formerly supply at Rochester, has been invited to supply at Hebron, N. H.

That Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood and relieves a vast amount of suffering is not a theory but a well-known fact

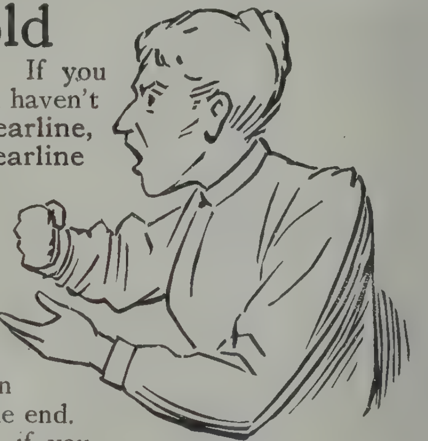
The new pitchers at Jones, McDuffee & Stratton's from the Doulton's Lambeth Pottery, London, have various legends woven into the decoration, one of which is:

Those who have money
Are troubled about it.
Those who have none
Are troubled without it.

Go to your doctor for advice; he is the best man to tell you what medicine you need. Go to your druggist for your medicines; he knows more about drugs than a dry goods man.

Stick to your doctor and to your druggist if you are a sick man, but don't go to your druggist for advice. If your doctor tells you to get Scott's Emulsion it is because he knows it to be the remedy in all conditions of wasting, the one reliable, permanent preparation.

Get what you ask for.



Don't Scold

about washing powders. If you feel like it, it's because you haven't got the right kind. Get Pearline, and see the difference. Pearline has been imitated — but never been equalled. There are all kinds of imitations; powders that save work, but ruin clothes; powders that don't hurt, and don't help you; powders that are cheap to begin with, but dear enough in the end. Try them all for yourself, if you won't take our word for it. But don't get them mixed up in your mind with Pearline.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 319 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Who opened that bottle of HIRES Rootbeer?

The popping of a cork from a bottle of Hires is a signal of good health and pleasure. A sound the old folks like to hear—the children can't resist it.

HIRES Rootbeer

is composed of the very ingredients the system requires. Aiding the digestion, soothing the nerves, purifying the blood. A temperance drink for temperance people.

Made only by
The Charles E. Hires Co., Phila.

A package makes 5 gallons.
Sold everywhere.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F 1

Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

GREAT BIBLICAL LIBRARY.

REV. A. E. DUNNING, Editor CONGREGATIONALIST, says:—"Last spring I traveled over nearly all the ground where these photographs were taken; they bring back again the real scenes more vividly than any pictures I ever saw."

REV. DR. LORIMER, Pastor Tremont Temple, says:—"If one cannot visit the Holy Land, this Bible must prove a good substitute."

REV. DR. MINOT J. SAVAGE (formerly of Boston), says:—"It is the completest and most interesting Bible I have ever seen. It is the only one which has the right to be called 'illustrated.' The pictures are wonderful, and they give a natural and human interest to the book."

REV. DANIEL MARCH, D. D., Author "NIGHT SCENES OF THE BIBLE," says:—"The photographs set before the eye the actual scenes of the greatest life ever lived in the world—the scenes of the old Bible Story."

REV. JOHN WILLIS BAER, D. D., Sec. SOCIETY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, says:—"I wish it might have a sale of a million copies among our young people"

We are gratified to announce that, by a very fortunate arrangement, we have secured the entire first edition of that important new work,

THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE,

This new Bible is a bold and brilliant conception, typically characteristic of, and possible only to, our own day. Nothing like it—nothing approaching it—has ever before appeared.

"THE ONE TRUTHFULLY ILLUSTRATED BIBLE."

The magnificent series of photographs from the actual scenes and places made famous in Biblical history illuminate and make real the Scriptural narrative as no other work has ever done.

These are not imaginary pictures, but from the original photographs taken on the spot.

This is, indeed, the one truthfully illustrated Bible ever published.

LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

SUPERB COLORED PLATES

FOUR SUPERB VOLUMES—OVER 2,000 QUARTO PAGES,

440 FULL PAGE PHOTOGRAPHS,

Size of Page 9 x 11½ Inches.

At the Cost of an Ordinary Bible.

It is Uniquely Great.

Think of a Bible whose events are as real as if you stood with the Prophets or the Disciples in the Holy Land itself; whose memorable incidents and famous scenes are illustrated from original photographs of the actual places where they occurred; whose obscure passages are all explained by a wonderful series of graphic notes and commentaries which illuminate every page and chapter of the Scriptures; whose difficult names are all pronounced; which is, indeed, a veritable encyclopædia of Biblical knowledge; a Bible that is, in short, more real, more plain, more interesting than the most accomplished Bible teacher can make it.

It is not merely a book for scholars and expositors—though it is a wonderful aid to these; it is still more—a Bible for the home, for the family circle, for the children; a Bible which young and old will read with a new and deepened interest, with a larger understanding, with a new sense of the marvelous power of "The Book of Books." Nothing could better describe it than the title which it bears, the

SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE.

Why Self-Interpreting. Because its splendid illustrations from actual photographs (each placed directly opposite the passage to which it refers), its countless commentaries and helps, set in direct connection with the text, and its invaluable historical features, Harmony of the Gospels, its exhaustive Dictionary of the Bible, and many other aids and features make every page and paragraph of the Sacred Word perfectly clear to the understanding of every reader; they indeed explain, vivify and make real the Bible as no other work has ever done.

A New Revelation. This new Bible is, in truth, "like unto a new revelation." It lends to the Scriptures that clearness and real interest absolutely necessary to make Bible reading entertaining and profitable in the highest degree.

You cannot understand its unique power or its wondrously illuminating effect until you have seen it and read it. Then you will understand that you cannot do without it, that you must have it

Its Supreme Excellence. It is the one truthfully illustrated Bible ever published. It presents not pictorial fiction, but large, beautiful photographs of actual Biblical scenes. These were taken on the spot by a special photographic expedition sent out to Palestine and the East solely for this purpose, and costing over $25,000. There are four hundred and forty of these, 8 x 10 inches in size, covering every spot of memorable interest throughout the entire Bible. In themselves these constitute a possession of almost priceless value.

It is the most fully, vividly and comprehensively annotated Bible ever published None other can compare with it for clearness and ease of understanding. This alone would make it the most desirable edition of the sacred Word known.

A Complete Biblical Library. Taken together these unique and remarkable features, combined as they are with all the aids that typographical art can supply—large, clear type and bindings that allow the volumes to lie flat when opened—make this unquestionably the most valuable, necessary, helpful and entertaining Bible yet published in the history of Bible-making.

A Magnificent Opportunity. When the publishers of McClure's Magazine became acquainted with the fact that this superb work was nearing completion they immediately arranged for the entire first edition, making especially favorable terms, on the condition that only a limited number of sets were to be offered in each section of the country. These are to be used for the purpose of introducing a few sets into each community, preparatory to the regular subscription canvass (when the price of the books will be nearly double that at which they are now offered).

At last this remarkable work is complete, and as a special inducement to those who subscribe for the magazine now we make this,

Our Truly Great Offer. Send $1.00 to McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB, 141 East 25th Street, New York, and the entire set of Four Superb volumes of this Magnificent Biblical Library in cloth binding will be forwarded to you at once, the balance payable at the rate of $1.25 monthly for one year. The Half-Morocco binding, which we strongly recommend, is only 25 cents a month extra, and the full Morocco style, especially desirable for presentation, is 75 cents a month extra. REMEMBER $1 00 secures immediate possession of the entire set in any style of binding.

PROMPT ACTION NECESSARY. Under the terms of our contract this offer is strictly limited to A PORTION ONLY OF THE FIRST EDITION and this opportunity can therefore remain open but a few days at most. The demand will be great, and those who wish to secure these choice first edition sets should send in their orders immediately, or it will be too late. Under no circumstances can we exceed the limit allowed us to be distributed at the low introductory price

BEAR IN MIND that it is practically the same as the superb Edition de Luxe, sold at $65.00 It is printed from the same new, fresh plates, its illustrations are from the same new blocks, it is on superfine paper and is, indeed, a de Luxe Edition at the price of an ordinary Bible.

WE HAVE IMPLICIT FAITH that the volumes will not only meet, but surpass, expectations, and in order that purchasers may feel that they are taking no risk whatever, if any one who receives a set finds it is not in every way satisfactory, he may return the same, within one week from its receipt, and his remittance (of $1.00) will be promptly refunded.

WE INVITE INSPECTION. Outside orders we shall file and fill according to their date and postmark, so that all, including the most distant, will be upon an equal footing.

Therefore, do not delay, but send in your dollar today, and secure one of the valuable and desirable First Edition Sets.

USE THIS ORDER BLANK.

McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB

Inclosed find $1, for which please send to my address a complete set of THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE, in ....binding, including a year's subscription (or renewal) to McCLURE'S MAGAZINE.

I agree to pay the balance in 12 equal monthly payments.

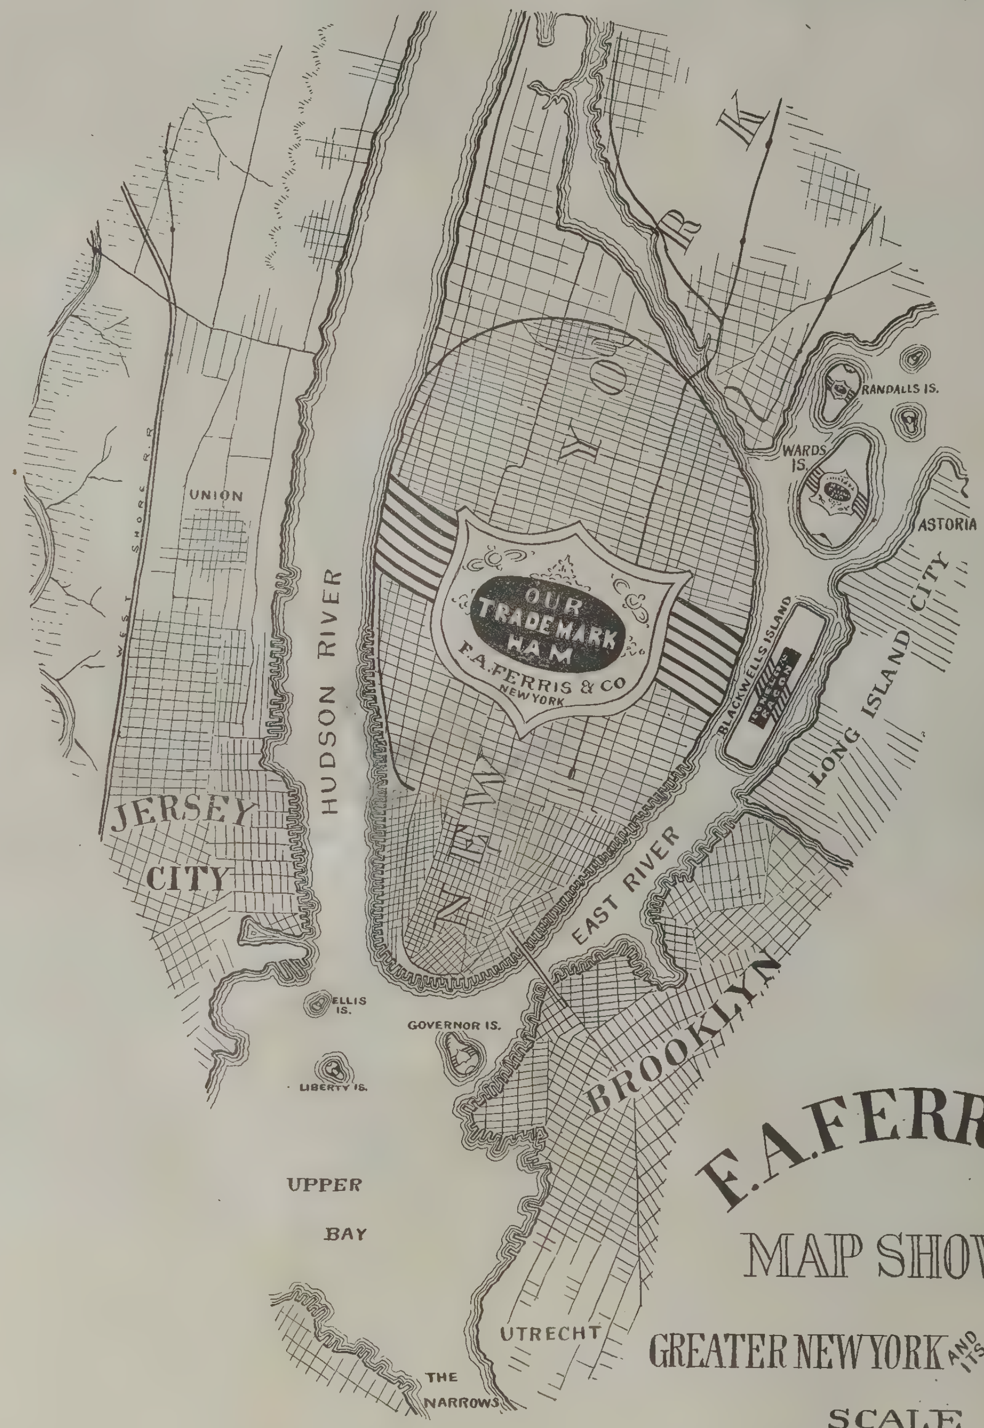
NAME..

OCCUPATION..

ADDRESS ....

McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB, 141 East 25th Street, New York, N. Y.

GREATER NEW YORK AND ITS HAMLETS



F.A.FERRIS & Co

MAP SHOWING

GREATER NEW YORK AND ITS HAMLETS

SCALE

SHOWS GOOD WEIGHT

Pro Patria—a story by Alice Brown Ian Maclaren on Three Intimates of Jesus

Volume LXXXII Number 21

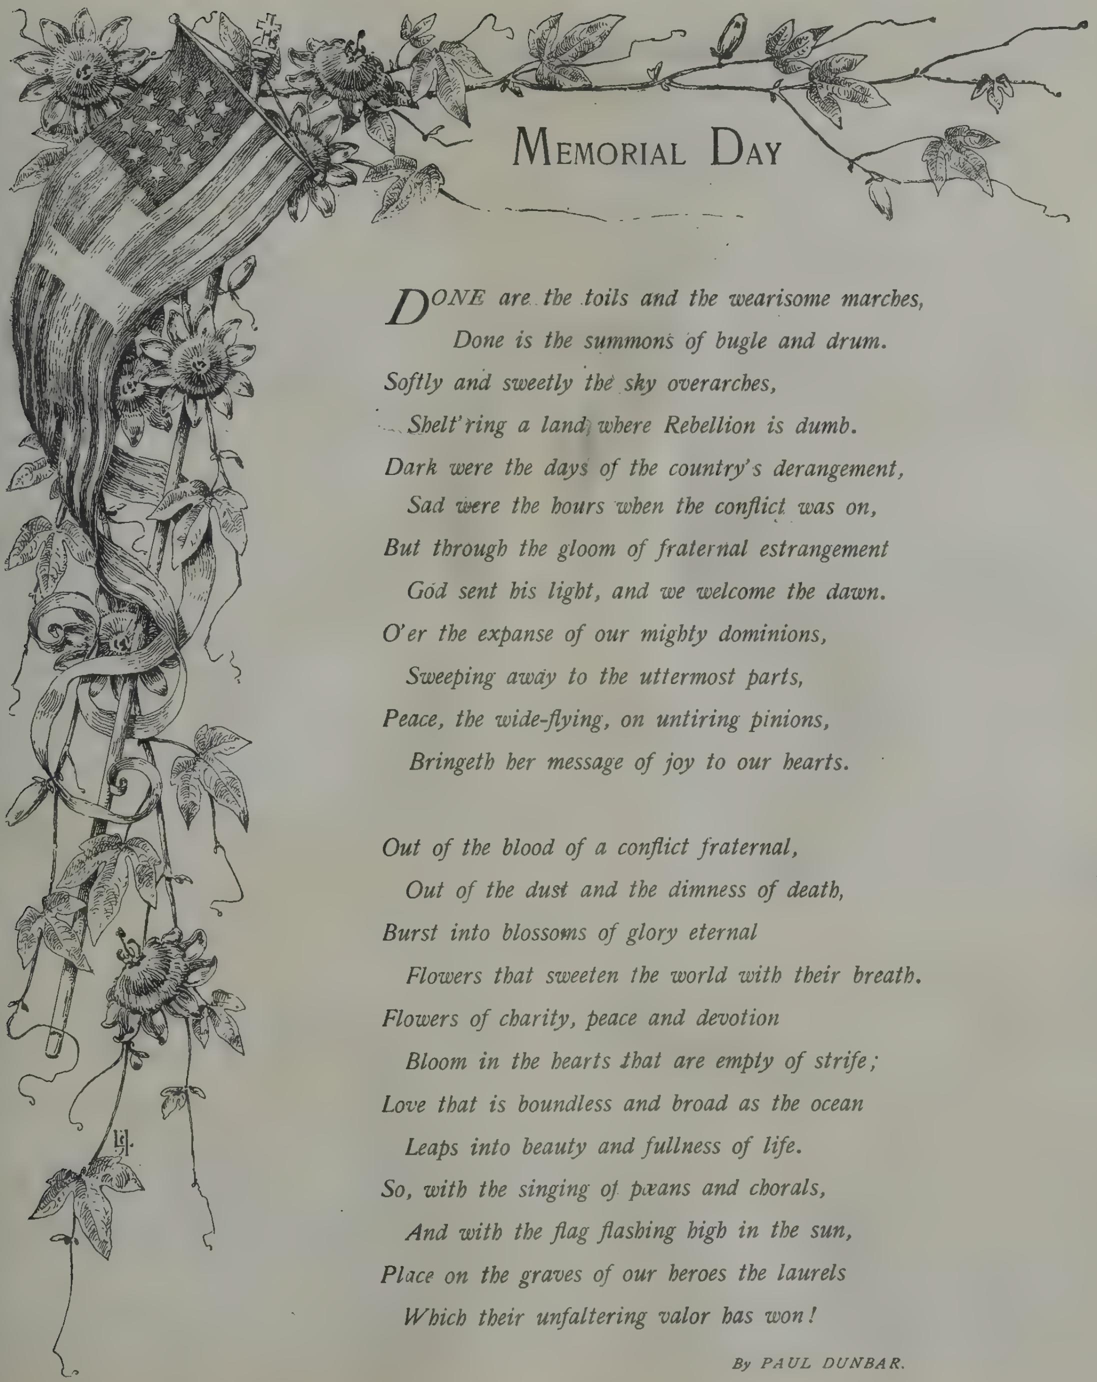
THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 27 May 1897



MEMORIAL DAY

DONE are the toils and the wearisome marches,
Done is the summons of bugle and drum.
Softly and sweetly the sky overarches,
Shelt'ring a land where Rebellion is dumb.
Dark were the days of the country's derangement,
Sad were the hours when the conflict was on,
But through the gloom of fraternal estrangement
God sent his light, and we welcome the dawn.
O'er the expanse of our mighty dominions,
Sweeping away to the uttermost parts,
Peace, the wide-flying, on untiring pinions,
Bringeth her message of joy to our hearts.

Out of the blood of a conflict fraternal,
Out of the dust and the dimness of death,
Burst into blossoms of glory eternal
Flowers that sweeten the world with their breath.
Flowers of charity, peace and devotion
Bloom in the hearts that are empty of strife;
Love that is boundless and broad as the ocean
Leaps into beauty and fullness of life.
So, with the singing of pæans and chorals,
And with the flag flashing high in the sun,
Place on the graves of our heroes the laurels
Which their unfaltering valor has won!

By PAUL DUNBAR.

Longmans, Green & Co.

HAVE NOW READY,

NEW WORK BY DEAN FARRAR

THE BIBLE

ITS MEANING and SUPREMACY.

By F. W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S.

DEAN OF CANTERBURY.

Author of "Darkness and Dawn," "Gathering Clouds," etc. Large crown 8vo, gilt top, 376 pages, $2 00.

"Dean Farrar's work, in the clear light of modern thought, is not deserving of blame, but of praise. The author, feeling the power and truth of modern scientific criticism, comes to the hither edge of orthodoxism and fairly reaches out his arms across the church pale to the larger thought of the time. His spirit is liberal and kindly and earnest, his literary style is limpid and charming, and his volume is sure to be more or less helpful to all.

The book is the work of a man who is a master of clear English, who is not afraid to let himself think, and who dares to let the breath of the times blow through his pages." —Chicago Tribune.

A Woman's Part in a Revolution.

By Mrs. John Hays Hammond.

12mo, cloth, 144 pages. $1.00.

"To the American public, whose sympathy was my chief support, through days of bitter trial, this book is gratefully dedicated. My personal experience forms the subject of my story. The causes of the revolt in Johannesburg and the ensuing political questions are but lightly touched upon, in deference to the silence enforced upon my husband as one of the terms of his liberation by the Boer Government."—Author's Dedication.

By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

The Procession of the Flowers, and Kindred Papers.

With Photogravure Frontispiece and Index of Plants and Animals Mentioned. 12mo, cloth extra, gilt top, 178 pages, $1.25.

"They will be of interest to any one anywhere who enjoys birds and plant life, in the country or city. The charming frontispiece, which adds to the beauty of the book, is designed by the child described in one of the papers. The volume should be very popular."—Times, Boston.

Sold by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,

91-93 Fifth Ave., New York.

KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA.

6 vols.

This important Life of Jesus now reduced to $1.80 per vol.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston.

WEDDING INVITATIONS.

Stylish, popular, first quality. 100 for $4 00; 50 for $2.75; express prepaid by us. Samples free. J. & P. B. MYERS, 85 and 87 John Street, New York.

Camp Idlewild For Select Boys, Lake Winnepesaukee, N.H. For a beautifully illustrated 28-page booklet address JOHN M. DICK, B.D., Box 62 (Back Bay), Boston, Mass.

College Training for Women

— BY —

KATE HOLLADAY CLAGHORN, Ph. D.

16mo. Cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

CONTENTS: What the College Can Do—The Preparation—Choosing a College—Life at College—The Graduate Student—Alumnæ Associations—The College-Trained Mother—The College Woman as a Social Influence—College Training for the Wage Earner.

The rapid spread of higher education among women imperatively demands just such a book as this.

T. Y. CROWELL & COMPANY

New York and Boston

A POWERFUL NEW BOOK
ON THE "HIGHER CRITICISM."

The Ancient Hebrew Tradition

As Illustrated by the Monuments

A PROTEST AGAINST THE

Modern School of Old Testament Critics

By DR. FRITZ HOMMEL,

Professor of Semitic Languages at the University of Munich.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN BY

EDMUND McCLURE, M. A., & LEONARD CROSSLE

Prof. Hommel in this important work demonstrates the utter inadequacy of the purely literary methods employed by the so-called "higher critics" of the Old Testament. He has amassed a large body of new material against the Graf-Wellhausen hypothesis, which he has set forth in a most clear and convincing manner.

12mo, cloth. Price, $1 75.

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO.,

Cooper Union, Fourth Avenue, New York.

HIS LATEST AND BEST.

The Social Law of Service.

By Prof. Richard T. Ely,

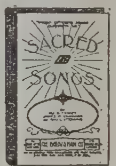
University of Wisconsin.

Commended unreservedly by critical press reviewers and indorsed by Drs. Lyman Abbott, H. Clay Trumbull, and other leading thinkers on social problems as a masterly contribution to the literature of Sociology.

12mo. Cloth. 90 cents.

EATON & MAINS, Publishers,
150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

SACRED SONGS No. 1



Contains 236 pieces. 100 are new and over 100 are choice selections from Gospel Hymns, etc.

Over 150,000 Copies already sold.

An excellent collection for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc. Issued in Round and Shaped Notes.

$25 per 100 by Express, charges not prepaid; 30c. each if sent by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

Chicago House, Lakeside Build'g. 76 E. Ninth St., N. Y.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of ten years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist.

White Mountains. To rent, a private house for summer months; 14 rooms, with stable. Address Thorn Hill, Jackson, N. H.

An old-fashioned pulpit can probably be secured without cost by applying to Rev. D. W. Waldron, 19 Congregational House, 7 A Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

Wanted, boarders in an American family, 10 miles from Boston. Every accommodation for comfort, good beds, home table. References given and required. Box 34, Braintree, Mass.

To Let. Furnished Cottage on Lake Whitney, New Haven, Ct. Furnished Cottage on Money Island, off Stony Creek, Ct. Howard Sherman, Whitneyville, New Haven Co., Ct.

Cottage to Rent at Amagansett, L. I. Containing 8 rooms, kitchen and bath. Fine ocean view. Ten minutes' walk to R. R. depot, five minutes to ocean. Address E. B. LEEK.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Wanted, by a refined, middle-aged lady, thoroughly competent, a position as matron, or lady in charge, in a private school or seminary for the ensuing school year. Address B. F., Northampton, Mass.

Wanted, by lady of middle age, the care of an invalid in vicinity of Boston. References all that would be required as to character and ability. Address Mrs. M., office of The Congregationalist.

Board and Rooms A desirable location at Old Orchard, Me. Ten minutes' walk from the beach. Country and seashore advantages. Electric cars. Terms reasonable. Address Box 190, Old Orchard, Me.

Cottage to Rent. I would like to rent my furnished cottage for the season. Located on high hill, with fine view. Five minutes' walk from post office, one mile from R. R. station. Address M. W. Leach, Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Ct.

Wanted, refined Christian lady for housekeeper in Christian home. May have one girl over six years old. Graded schools and academy, in beautiful, healthy county town. Only two in family. References required. State wages wanted. Address Box 54, Monson, Me.

For Summer Guests. A Congregational pastor opens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious rooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; first class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York or Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted, position as housekeeper in an elderly widower's Christian home, by a refined, middle-aged lady, who understands the care of a nice, quiet home. Not over twenty miles from Boston. Address, A. R., The Congregationalist.

Boarders Desired at Hillside Farm, two and a half hours' ride from Boston. Location high and healthy. Good rooms and table. Wide verandas, shade trees, pine grove. Lake near by. House open in May. Adults preferred. Terms reasonable. For further information address Box 94, Greenfield, N. H.

To Let for the Summer. First floor (six large rooms) and two chambers, well furnished, for general housekeeping, in house on a farm bordering on Lake Winnepesaukee, 1½ miles from Wolfeboro village and R. R. station. Location and scenery unsurpassed. Good water, piano, etc. Terms reasonable. Address Box 116, Wolfeboro, N. H.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

THE P. O. address of Rev. Frederick Alvord is Newton Center, Mass., instead of Talcottville, Ct.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

The Hymnal

For use in Congregational Churches

"Dr. Martin, President of our College, has asked me to give you my critical opinion of the new Hymnal. It is with pleasure that I say it is undoubtedly the best hymnal now on the market. By profession I am an Episcopalian, and you know how dear the hymnal of my own Church is to me. When I tell you that I think that your work is superior to our late hymnal, I know that you will see the praise is sincere."—J. EMORY SHAW, Director of Music, Wilson College for Women, Chambersburg, Pa.

Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society,

NEW YORK. BOSTON. MINNEAPOLIS. CHICAGO. SAN FRANCISCO.

The most direct, forceful, and enthusiastic PROHIBITION NOVEL we have ever read. —Hartford Post.

THE STAND-BY

By EDMUND P. DOLE.

A novel with a purpose, but full of action and romance.

It is the strongest presentation of the PROHIBITORY CAUSE which we remember to have seen.—Congregationalist.

THE author, Edmund P. Dole, a New Englander by birth, is now the assistant attorney-general of Hawaii. The Boston Advertiser says that he has treated the temperance question fairly. The Christian Instructor says that "This is one of a class of books greatly to be desired, which shall array the power of sound fiction against the drink habit." It is a very strong novel in itself. Order it of your bookseller. Just published by The Century Co. of New York. Price $1.25.

✠ ✠ ✠

Dr. Dunning's Congregationalists in America.

With Introductions by R. S. STORRS, D. D., and Gen. O. O. HOWARD, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. ROY, Dr. A. H. QUINT, Dr. F. E. CLARK, and Rev. H. A. BRIDGMAN 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in CHICAGO or NEW YORK, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

✠ ✠ ✠

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

- Paragraphs 741
- Statutory Suppression of Religion 742
- A Growing Meaning of Memorial Day 742
- Should He Enter the Ministry 743
- Remembering the Days of Old 743
- Current History 743
- In Brief 745

CURRENT THOUGHT 746

CONTRIBUTIONS:
- Memorial Day—cover poem. Paul Dunbar 737
- Pro Patria—a story. Alice Brown 747
- Companions of the Sorrowful Way. Ian Maclaren 750
- Drummond Amongst His Students. W. Mackintosh Mackay 751

THE HOME:
- In May—a selected poem 753
- Paragraphs 753
- Sensitiveness alias Selfishness. Alice Hamilton Rich 753
- Bicycle Philosophy. Helen Ainslie Smith 754
- Dog's-Tooth Violet—a selected poem 754
- The Passing of the Old-Time Darky. Ednah P. Clarke 754
- The "Puttering" Woman—a selection 755
- A Nice Discrimination 755
- Closet and Altar 755
- Mothers in Council 756
- Chat About Women 756
- Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 757
- Corner Scrap-Book 757

SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for June 6 758

Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for June 6-12 759

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 759

LITERATURE 760

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:
- The Massachusetts State Association 764
- The Association of New York 766
- The Ohio Association 767
- The Illinois Association 767
- The Michigan Association 773
- Bangor Seminary Anniversary 773
- Weekly Register 774

MISCELLANEOUS:
- Open Air Workers in Conference 746
- At Yale Divinity 752
- Across the Border 752
- President Tucker on Democracy 762
- In and Around Boston 763
- Chips from Worcester 765
- Notices 766
- The Business Outlook 771
- Deaths 771
- Our Armenian Orphans' Fund 772
- Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 775

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.

TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.

IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.

ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.

CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
63d year opens Sept. 22. With special advantages from the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

VERMONT.

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.
ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, M. A., Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRIDGEWATER.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Bridgewater, Mass. Regular and special courses for the preparation of teachers. Entrance examinations June 24, 25, Sept. 8, 9 For circulars address
ALBERT G. BOYDEN, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG WOMEN.
Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

This entire building, and two annexes, are devoted exclusively to the work of the
NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.
Accessible to musical events of every nature. The best masters in music, elocution and languages that money can command. George W. Chadwick, Musical Director. Prospectus free.
FRANK W. HALE, General Manager, Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address
C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.
Summer Courses.
Third Session, July 5-August 13. Twenty-nine courses in Mathematics, Science, Languages and Pedagogy. A delightful suburban locality in New York City. For announcement write to CHAS. B. BLISS.
University Heights, New York City.

NEW JERSEY.

Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.
A good gymnasium takes the place of a school physician with us. General and special gymnastic training is a part of the daily routine.
We gladly send our catalogue, but much prefer that parents should visit the school.
J. G. MACVICAR, Head Master.

AN ESSENTIAL IN ALL HOMES.

SIMPLE STRONG

SILENT SPEEDY

13 Millions Made and Sold.

Always improving.
Never better than now.
See the Latest Model.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

For comfortable and inexpensive riding—

The Waverley
Bicycle

... $60 ...

These are better than our wheels of last year. The marked difference in price is because we do not have to buy any new machinery.

The matchless Waverley Bicycle for 1897, with absolutely true and dust-proof bearings—a marvel in skill and workmanship—cannot be sold for less than the price we ask—$100.

Catalogue free.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

FOR SALE.

PIPE ORGAN

Built by Hilborne L Roosevelt. Magnificent instrument, built for owner, never used. Three manuals, full set of pedals, 2,800 pipes, 46 speaking stops; couplers, combinations, etc., added make 75. Suitable for church, college, hall or large private music room. Was built for latter. Cost $15,000. Will be sold at a sacrifice. Further information, with printed description, can be obtained by letter or personally, 13 West 821 St., New York. Owner can be interviewed Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays till June 25th, from 11 till 2.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Bookkeeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Shorthand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c.

BRYANT & STRATTON,
47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR, ECKSTEIN } Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC, BRADLEY, BROOKLYN, JEWETT, ULSTER, UNION } New York.
SOUTHERN, SHIPMAN } Chicago.
COLLIER, MISSOURI, RED SEAL, SOUTHERN } St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THERE is no getting away from the fact that Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil make the best paint.

Properly applied, it will not chip, chalk or scale off, but will outwear any of the mixtures offered as substitutes. It is, therefore, by far the most economical.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

Williams

WILLIAMS' JERSEY CREAM TOILET SOAP
WILLIAMS' JERSEY CREAM HEALING

Jersey Cream
Toilet Soap

Is the result of many years of CAREFUL AND COSTLY EXPERIMENTING, and is especially recommended to all who have DELICATE SKINS, having the SOFT, HEALING EFFECT of . . . . SWEET, RICH CREAM.

In connection with this Soap will be given away for a limited time only a beautiful FREE

Transparent Window Thermometer.

Carefully packed with each dozen cakes of the soap.

WILLIAMS' JERSEY CREAM TOILET SOAP
THE J B WILLIAMS CO.
GLASTONBURY CONN. USA
WILLIAMS FAMOUS SHAVING SOAPS

SIZE 12X8 INCHES.

Any druggist or dealer in Soaps can supply you, but, if unable to obtain it for any reason, we will deliver to any express office in the United States, all charges paid, a package of this Soap (one dozen cakes), with Thermometer, on receipt of $2.00.

SAMPLE CAKE (full size) FIFTEEN CENTS, POST-PAID.

Address Department G,

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., GLASTONBURY, CONN.
MANUFACTURERS FOR OVER HALF A CENTURY OF WILLIAMS' CELEBRATED SHAVING SOAPS.

"One year borrows another year's fool." You didn't use SAPOLIO last year. Perhaps you will not this year.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 27 May 1897 Number 21

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 739.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 14, Memorial Day.
No. 15, Children's Sunday.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

It is but once a year that the churches of a State as members of a great local sisterhood meet together through their representatives to look each other in the face and exchange greetings. Such a gathering should be an annual benefit to its attendants and to that intent the details of the program should be carefully planned. It should be an inviting occasion to the pastor who lives in the flood of Congregationalism, social and spiritual, from one year's end to the other and it should also offer a season of rare fellowship and uplift to the minister of a rural neighborhood, whose denominational inspiration comes through single, thin streams, perhaps not always flowing. Evidence from the Massachusetts meeting at Worcester last week shows that some of the time and thought might have been more profitably engaged. On the other hand, some hours were replete with strong and helpful utterances. The opening sermon and closing address will be remembered with thanks for blessings received, and other similar impressions will be recalled. There might have been more had not various causes contributed to eliminate somewhat the free interchange of thought on other than business topics.

The friends of the C. H. M. S., we hope, are planning to be present in large numbers at its anniversary in Saratoga next week. Never was there greater need than now of their presence at such a meeting, nor was there ever a time when they could do greater service by attending. The society has been compelled to cut down its work so much as seriously to impair its usefulness. It reported a heavy debt last year and, after extraordinary efforts to raise the money to pay it, it must report a larger debt this year. Because of reduced appropriations some of its best men are being compelled to abandon fields of much promise. It has very serious problems to settle. The weakening of our home missionary enterprise is not only a grief to the churches but a peril to the nation. This is the time when our society is in sore need that its friends should rally to learn its condition, to consider its prospects, to assure its officers and missionaries of their continued confidence and support and their expectation of better things. A large and enthusiastic meeting at Saratoga would do much to strengthen courage and restore prosperity to the work which as Congregationalists and Christian citizens we must not permit to languish. Go to Saratoga next week if possible. For the attractive program see page 766.

The season of college and seminary Commencements has already begun, and the alumni of these institutions turn with interest unabated to learn what the last year has wrought, who of their number revisited the alma mater, what wise and witty words were spoken and what are the plans and prospects for the coming year. We are admonished that we ought to furnish more information about these matters. There are forty-three Congregational colleges and seven theological seminaries, and each of these has friends who read The Congregationalist and who are more interested in news from their own institution than from any other. Other schools of learning also claim some share of our space. We remind our readers that we regret our limitations more than they do. No event of the year is more interesting and important than the issuance of the annual army of educated young men and women into the fields of labor which they have chosen. We shall chronicle its facts and point to its significance as well as we are able. It ought to furnish inspiration to prayer and themes for sermons in all our churches. Never were the responsibilities, privileges, duties and opportunities of educated men and women greater than now. May this year's company be welcomed, encouraged and guided to the highest success!

When one professing Christian tells another that an absent brother has a prejudice against him, or is misrepresenting him, the presumption is that the informer is not trustworthy. When he communicates his information in confidence and will not allow himself to be quoted to the absent brother, the presumption becomes a practical certainty. He is also a mischief maker and a sneak. Only through weakness will the brother who listens to him in turn be prejudiced. Occasionally letters are written and words spoken simply with the motive to create unhappiness and distrust among brethren. Those who receive such letters and listen to such words, if they feel called on to do more than to receive them in silence, may do real service by saying, frankly, "Get thee behind me, Satan."

The friends of home missions are to be congratulated upon the election of Sheldon Jackson as moderator by which the Presbyterian General Assembly has honored itself. His civil position as United States Education Commissioner for Alaska was earned by the hardest of missionary work in the great territory of the Northwestern Pacific, and in the face of opposition from all the elements of greed and corruption in Alaska. To him also the natives of the Arctic coasts owe the successful introduction of reindeer, by which they have escaped the imminent peril of starvation. The moderator has never been in Europe, but few Americans have traveled so far as he or in such little known regions. The opening sermon by the retiring moderator, Dr. Withrow, was irenic and catholic in tone. The vexed question of the new Presbyterian building in New York seems to be set at rest by the nearly unanimous report of the large committee, of which ex President Harrison, John Wanamaker and Justice Harlan were members, approving the action of the boards that erected it. The building already pays its way in spite of the hard times, and it is hoped by further rentals to reduce the debt from year to year. The experiment of meeting at Winona Park, Indiana, a little more than 100 miles from Chicago, has been watched with much interest. The hope has been cherished that these grounds, which belong to Presbyterians, would prove attractive enough to make them the place where all future assemblies shall meet. Reports are not altogether satisfactory as to the outlook. It has been a work of no inconsiderable magnitude to provide for more than 600 commissioners and the two or three times as many visitors whom this annual gathering of the church attracts.

The number of the poor who deserve respectful sympathy not less than help was probably never larger in this country than during the past winter. The report of the overseers of the poor for the city of Boston lays special emphasis on the class of worthy, self supporting persons whose savings have been gradually exhausted by long continued lack of employment. Generous responses are made to appeals for the famine-stricken and misgoverned and robbed of other lands. But it is a question if the more thoroughly systematized charities of our larger towns and cities have not done away with much of the neighborly kindness which is as important to the character of the givers as to the relief of receivers. To keep the self-respect and sense of dependence of such American citizens as through no fault of theirs, but through the stress of long continued business depression, have become poor is of great importance to the community. These are the unknown families in our own neighborhoods who will feel, when at last compelled to make their poverty known, that they have surrendered the last possession which makes life precious. Organized charity has in recent years made great improvements in caring for the recognized poor. But it is more important than ever that the needed service it cannot render should not be neglected by neighbors.

STATUTORY SUPPRESSION OF RELIGION

The laws of most of the States forbid the appropriation of public funds to the support of institutions under the control of any religious sect, and prohibit sectarian teaching in any form in the public schools. We heartily approve of these laws. They are not inconsistent with reverent recognition of God in national affairs and of the obligations of all men to obey him.

But without such recognition we believe it is impossible to maintain confidence of men in one another or stable government. Bismarck once said, in reply to the suggestion that the state should take toward all religion an absolutely agnostic position: "A people that gives up God is like a government that gives up territory—it is a lost people. There is only one folly greater than that of the fool who says in his heart, There is no God, and that is the folly of the nation that says with its head that it does not know whether there is a God or not."

Toward just this folly we seem to be drifting. A recent decision of the Circuit Court at Detroit illustrates this drift. The constitution of Michigan declares that "no person can of right be compelled to attend, erect or support against his will any place of religious worship or to pay tithes, taxes or other rates for the support of any minister of the gospel or teacher of religion." It would appear to the mind not legally trained that this was intended to prevent any religious organization from compelling the attendance of any person on its meetings, or from exacting money from him against his will. But it is now construed in quite a different fashion. The School Board of Detroit introduced into the schools a book entitled Readings from the Bible. Judge Carpenter, in the decision above mentioned, held that a public school teacher who permits readings from the Bible is a teacher of religion, even though he may make no comment on these readings. "The constitution," he said, "prohibits all religious teaching in the public schools or it prohibits none." He declared that "the proposed use of readings from the Bible . . . is in direct conflict with constitutional provisions." This is in substance declaring that all religion must be eliminated in the public education of the American people. That no particular form of religion should be advocated is one thing, but that our youth should be carefully kept in ignorance of the religious principles of the people who founded this country and of the people with whom they are to live is quite another thing. We believe that our Government should maintain a position of neutrality toward religious sects. We do not believe it should suppress by law in its schools the knowledge of religion. Without that knowledge history, philosophy, political science and other studies most important to mental and moral development are emasculated. The object of public education, to make good citizens, is defeated.

In the same direction is a proposed amendment to the constitution of Massachusetts which has been referred by our legislature to the next General Court. It prohibits cities and towns from allowing schoolhouses to be used for religious worship. The opinion of the attorney general, given to the legislature at its request, was to the effect that the amendment would prohibit any use of schoolhouses for religious purposes, even if granted without discrimination to all sects applying.

Such legislation as this which is proposed in Massachusetts and such interpretation of law as that given in Michigan are not merely against sectarianism, nor only against Christianity; they are against all religion. They are a notice to the people and a warning to the rising generation that the thought of God is a useless or a dangerous thing, and is therefore forbidden by law to be introduced among the subjects proper to be considered in our public schools. They practically put the State in an attitude of hostility toward religion, and it is only a step further to awaken prejudice against teachers who profess religion.

There is no more dangerous tendency, none fraught with more fatal consequences than this. Worst of all is the fact that it is caused mainly by the narrow prejudices of religious people, who prefer to banish religion from the public training of youth rather than run the risk of having tenets mentioned which they themselves do not hold. If there are not great religious principles on which there is as general agreement among intelligent citizens as there is agreement on great political principles, then we have little encouragement to hope for prosperous or even stable government. If there are such principles, they ought to be understood by the people and faithfully taught to our children. At least, the nature of Christianity, its influence in history and in the formation and growth of our own country should be fairly and sympathetically explained. Not to do this is as unpatriotic as it is un Christian. It is time to call a halt on legislation which places the state in an attitude of open and determined hostility to religion.

A GROWING MEANING OF MEMORIAL DAY

The popular feeling in regard to our national holiday of remembrance has come almost to the parting of the ways. The ranks of the living who fought in the great contest grow thinner and thinner; the multitude for whom the holy day is become merely a holiday is continually increasing as the years of battle recede. If the peculiar impress which the day was intended to have is to be maintained, there must be an enlargement of its scope and a deepening of its meaning. It must not cease, indeed, to be sacred to us as a memorial of those who died upon the battlefield and in the hospital or prison, but it must also give expression to our treasured memories of lives which were dear and efforts which have been fruitful in all parts of the great battlefield of life. Patriotism must not merely join with civic pride; it must be kindled also by the fires of personal affection if we are to hold the day to its appointed use.

In the broader view war is an accident of civil life and its sacrifices stand upon no higher plane than those of many of the devoted ones who never wore a uniform. Even when the trumpet sounds and men spring up from shop and field and fireside to fling back the foe, the sacrifice of those who give them up—of mothers, sweethearts, wives and friends—in its quiet, unpretending heroism, is worthy to be measured with the excited feeling and the self-surrender of the camp and battlefield. Men go to meet, they hardly can know what—risks of the march and battle—but women know too well what loneliness and impotence to help in dreary days will mean to those who cannot go. It is time that the mother's heroism and the wife's ungrudging sacrifice should have their true place in our thoughts as we come to the resting places of the dead with flowers. Love grows by access of other true and loyal loves. There will be no loss of honor to the soldiers of the war, if those who kept or waited for the soldier's home, waiting, too many of them, alas, in vain, are honored.

And war is but an incident of civil life, again, in the summing up of all the heroisms which are put down in the recording angel's book. Think of the men who in these thirty years of peace would willingly have given life for their country's need! Shall we imagine that there has been no opportunity in quiet days for self denial and self sacrifice as memorable as any war reveals? Who knows the heroes of his own neighborhood—the men for whose contest no bugle blows and no chevron leads in the exhilarating charge, women who endure without applause, and even without sympathy? That is a poor heart which cannot be stirred to memory and admiration except by waving flags, the blare of trumpets and the orator's exultant periods. War reveals heroic hearts—it cannot create them. The peril is that in the following of low ideals, in ruling heroism out of common life and commonplace surroundings, we may hurt the type of man so that there will be no brave hearts ready when the swift summons of the war cry comes. If the Memorial Day is to be continued in its intended meaning it must grow to be the time of happy memories for all our heroic dead.

So it must come inevitably to have its deepest meaning with reference to those who were nearest and dearest. Each has his own horizon of immortality in which a few stars shine—our own, our fellow-combatants in life's great struggle, whose quiet heroism has touched our hearts and nerved us to self-sacrifice, whose struggles and defeats and victories we have seen and wondered at. Some went down after long years with the white crown of honor. Others fell in what our lack of faith calls an untimely overthrow. These are the heroes of our closest memory, and these shall link our thoughts to all the glorious names which went before.

Who that will stop to meditate but finds a treasure house of such pathetic, yet delightful, memories—perhaps unknown to any other, but held in companionship of knowledge with the all-seeing God. Perhaps it is a veteran who wears the army blue, whose one glimpse of the wide world was in the glorious days when he bore arms to maintain the nation's life, whose eye kindles at the name of Lincoln or of Grant, and who has shown a soldier's patience ever since the mustering out in drudgery of steady toil. Perhaps it is a young girl cut off in her fresh bloom of beauty and of sensibility, having served her generation for a few brief years with delicate ministration of gracious kindness. She was ready in self-denial, swift in thoughtful deeds, mellowed by sorrow and radiant with promise of happy days, until in God's good pleasure the summons reached her, and, without a murmur at laying down her life of hope and beauty, she fell on sleep. These are all ours and God's, heroic if not heralded by blasts of fame, and through their courage we are helped to hights of courage in our own perplexed and troubled days.

The glory of the springtide that brings us flowers for the graves of our beloved brings also the prophecy of hope. We cannot remember good in human lives without anticipating something better yet to come. The day is at the turning point of spring. So much beauty, often checked and broken, is behind, but beyond is summer with her harvest time. In these sacred memories of lives departed, as in the stories of the heroes of the faith of old, much that is written is for our example. And as we think of them the fellowship of knowledge and of love with God is strong upon us that we sorrow not, even as others who have no hope.

SHOULD HE ENTER THE MINISTRY

A young man, a college graduate with average ability, an earnest Christian spirit, an attractive personality, a sympathetic and affectionate nature, but not very strong physically, desires to enter the ministry. Other vocations of a more healthful nature are open to him. He is not by any means an invalid, and with proper care of himself enjoys good health, but is obliged to favor himself in some ways. Intense nervous strain or overwork would probably tell severely. Under the present conditions of our ministerial supply what would you advise?

The circumstances under which this inquiry was sent to us show that it was prompted by deep anxiety. Some suggestions may help not only this young man, but many others, to decide their future.

He need not go into the ministry because more men are called for in that profession. A generation ago the question was pressed on every Christian young man of good ability, Why should he not become a minister? There were pressing calls from mission fields at home and in foreign lands. The burden was laid on young men that multitudes were perishing for lack of knowledge of salvation and that in every direction there were opportunities for ministers to preach the gospel. It is still true that there are vast multitudes without the knowledge of salvation through Christ. But it is also true that wherever means of support are provided, ministers are ready to preach. Any Congregational church in this country that can pay a salary equal to the average income of its members can have its choice from a score or more of applicants for its pulpit. Any home mission field can get a minister if, with the aid of the Home Missionary Society, it can offer him a reasonable support. The chief difficulty of the American Board at present is not to find new laborers, but to furnish means of living to those already in its employ.

He should not enter the ministry expecting a large appreciation of his services. Exceptional gifts have a high value in that profession. But this young man is of average ability. If that statement correctly represents him he will probably be most in demand from the age of thirty-two to forty-five. If he is a diligent student, wisely accumulating knowledge and power as a public teacher, he may hold his own after that time. But increasing knowledge will be offset by increasing age if present conditions continue. The churches generally which are in search of pastors are looking for young men who have had a few years of experience. Some ministers continue in their fields till they are sixty or older. A few with exceptional oratorical gifts are called to pastorates when they are not far from threescore years. But the average minister at a time when intellectual abilities increase in value in other callings finds himself at a discount. At an age when it is difficult to take up a new calling he may find himself crowded out of the profession in which he has been trained.

He need not enter the ministry in order to preach the gospel. Men of Christlike power are needed in the pews more than in the pulpit. The time has long since passed when the ministry monopolized preaching and teaching the Christian faith. Many laymen through Sunday school and Bible classes, through Y. M. C. A. and other organizations, are bringing the influence of Christian truth to bear directly on more lives than the preaching of many ministers. The presence of educated and consecrated men is needed in the walks of business as never before, and many such men have as truly responded to the call to Christian service as they could have done by entering the ministry.

The question for this young man, to whom other vocations are open, is not, Why should he not enter the ministry, but, Why should he enter it? If he finds his mind turned toward that calling more than to any other, if he is absorbed with the desire to help men to know Christ and to live his life, if he believes he can do this service better in the ministry than anywhere else, if he is willing to bear its burdens and face its difficulties, then we advise him to enter it. He need not then hesitate because of want of physical strength. He has probably learned so to care for his health that he will endure more and longer than many robust young men who have not learned the value of sound bodies.

But if the inclination toward the ministry is not the strongest, is not supported by steadied convictions and by a passion to care for souls of common mold in Christ's name, we advise him to turn to some other calling. Yet we assure him that if his choice to enter the ministry is wisely made, with the knowledge of what it involves, and is confirmed by experience, he will find in his work rewards unsurpassed in any calling, both in its fruits in other lives and in his own.

REMEMBERING THE DAYS OF OLD

The tendency to believe the past to have been happier and better than the present is common, especially among elderly people, but has little justification. And the correction of it is promoted largely by the study of the past. The modern development of interest in history, of more correct historical perceptions and of scientific theories of investigation and narration, has revealed not only the glories of the past but also its faults and failures. But to go to the other extreme and disregard the past would be as grave an error as to overestimate it.

The same thing is true in respect to Christianity. The past has for us the most solemn and eternally significant lessons. It is true not merely that the great events of sacred history lie in the past, but also that the record of religious development down to the present time is full of instruction and profit. To understand how the gospel has won its way in the earth, what hindrances it has had to overcome, what assurance of final victory it has, its adaptation to all races and conditions of men, and the reasons why now one of its vital features and then another has been emphasized distinctively, it is necessary to remember the days of old and to study them.

Especially, too, are the fatherly and beneficent dealings of the Almighty with his human children to be realized thus. When doubt overshadows us, when evil seems to be triumphant and we are tempted to believe that righteousness is vanishing from the earth and that the saving power of vital religion has been overestimated, then we need to turn our gaze back into the past and refresh our courage by studying the historic evidences of God's wisdom and power and of his presence with his own in their darkest hours, and of his signal interpositions in their behalf. We can appreciate only thus that what seems to us the actual drying up of the ocean of goodness is merely a brief ebbing of the tide.

We must make this consideration of the past more personal too. We must remember the blessed days of old in our own histories. Who of us has not some precious memories of occasions when God seemed specially near, loving and full of help? Who of us cannot recall some experiences of deep penitence, the revival within us of faith and purpose, and the enlargement of the horizon of our spiritual outlook, after which life took on a new and nobler meaning because we had learned better to understand and love and serve our Lord?

We can only suggest thus briefly some of the elements of value in the study of the past to the Christian heart. It means information, warning, encouragement, stimulation, inspiration. It is only by thus using the spiritual riches of the past that we can learn properly how to appropriate those of the present and the future.

CURRENT HISTORY

Cuban Affairs

Mr. Calhoun, the President's personal agent, is still gathering information in Cuba and until he returns the Administration evidently does not mean to act. Senator Morgan's resolution, passed by the Senate but not likely to reach a vote at present in the House, expressly commits the country to the recognition of Cuban belligerency. If adopted by the House and signed by the President, it would have all the force of an executive proclamation to that effect. The recognition of belligerency is a public recognition of the existence of a state of war, but also an explicit declaration of neutrality. Is this what the friends of the Cubans want? Its effect would be, first of all, to expose every American ship passing by Cuban waters to search by Spanish cruisers, thereby immensely increasing the irritation of the public mind. It would deprive us of all claim for damages to American property in Cuba, which under the present status holds good against Spain, because officially we still recognize the Spaniards as the responsible rulers of the island. It would make the sale of munitions and other contraband of war and the fitting out of filibustering expeditions a ground of claim against the United States. This is fully understood in Spain and Cuba, and the reported interview with Captain-General Weyler, in which he said that the declaration of belligerency would relieve him of all responsibility, can hardly be pleasant reading for the supporters of the resolution. The practical difficulty, as ex-Senator Edmunds clearly points out, is that the insurgent cause has not reached that stage of authority in any well-defined territory which makes it practicable to hold it to an account, and that the recognition of belligerency at this time plays into the hands of Spain.

Recognition or Intervention

The Senate debate has brought to light an earlier attempt at intervention, in which a vigorous statement, by Secretary Olney, of the condition of the island and the apparent hopelessness of pacification by the Spanish forces was met by a refusal to consider the matter on the part of the Spanish Government, and similar overtures made since the new Administration entered upon its duties seem to have met a like reception. The Spanish purpose to conquer the insurrection seems to be yet unshaken, though the Liberals in Parliament have abandoned their attitude of passive support for the government and have practically confessed defeat, while the strain of the war tells more severely month by month. There have been angry scenes in the Spanish Chambers. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Duke of Tetuam, resigned after boxing the ears of an opponent in the lobby of the Senate, but has been persuaded to withdraw his resignation. A cabinet crisis seems to be imminent and the difficulty of raising money grows ever more pressing. In the meantime the island is not pacified, the fields are not tilled, the people are crowded in the towns and the insurgents continue their policy of teasing guerrilla warfare, with an occasional blow when they can take their enemy at an advantage. If the new Spanish ministry will hear reason, peaceful intervention followed by autonomy on the model of the English colonies will solve the problem. If not, the mere recognition of belligerency will only tie our hands. At the right time it will probably be necessary for us to intervene—peaceably if possible, forcibly if we must—but the initiative ought to be left to the Executive, where it properly belongs.

The Tax on Inheritances

The Connecticut legislature is wrestling with a law imposing a succession tax. The proposed exemption is $5,000, the rate is doubled upon collateral inheritances but the bill includes no feature of progressive taxation. As the State needs money and the alternative is the unpopular one of a direct levy upon the towns, the law will probably be enacted. In New York the governor has vetoed the inheritance tax bill of which we spoke last week, taking the broad ground that there ought not to be a tax upon success but that every dollar should be taxed alike, whether it is the first or last of a man's accumulations. From the American point of view the proposed tax was no doubt excessive, but even the heavy rates of the vetoed bill, it should be noted, are less than the rates imposed in England, where the succession duties are paying the enormous expenses for naval construction and other preparations for possible war.

The Municipal Problem in New York

The canvass for nominations to office in the greater New York grows daily more interesting. The threat of an early nomination by the Citizens' Union precipitated action in all quarters, called out Senator Platt's interview containing grudging and ungracious confession of the necessity of fusion between the Independents and Republicans, forced Tammany to show its hand, and brought out the menace of the silver forces that if the financial question is ignored the free silver Democrats will bolt the ticket. A conference of Republicans with Senator Platt in Washington failed so ignominiously that those who took part are denying that there was any purpose of a conference. The absence of Jacob Worth, the Republican leader in Brooklyn, and his subsequent declaration that the citizens' nominee for mayor should have the Republican indorsement, seems to have wrecked the plans of the machine leaders, for the only hope of Republican success was in the Brooklyn vote. The most prominent candidate thus far mentioned has been Pres. Seth Low, whom the politicians hate for his record as the first reform mayor of Brooklyn sixteen years ago, but the Citizens' Union does not stand committed to any candidate as yet.

The Tailors' Strike

The strike of the tailors in New York and its neighborhood has called out an unusual amount of sympathy. Ample financial preparation seems to have been made for the struggle, and both the wholesale contractors and the retail dealers seem to be on the side of the strikers, feeling, perhaps, that the trade would be in a more wholesome condition if a living wage were paid and better work done. The distress among the workmen has been greatly aggravated by the incoming of laborers from eastern Europe—Jews from Poland and Russia and Slavs from the Austrian provinces—who are herded together in close quarters and held down by the sweaters. Their competition has driven most Americans out of the trade, and the process of making Americans of them and of their children can hardly be hopefully begun until they are emancipated from the tyranny of the sweat shops.

Diplomacy at Work

The armistice of seventeen days, granted by the sultan at the personal intercession of the czar of Russia, drags along, while the Powers are at work abating the swollen pretensions of Turkey. A neutral zone has been established between the armies, but Turkey is pouring re-enforcements into Thessaly, and it is by no means certain that her leaders will be content without a blow at Athens. A slight rectification of the frontier and a reduced war indemnity to be secured by a European control in Athens are said to be the terms fixed upon by the Powers. The Greeks have been warned that the intervention of the Powers is rather on account of the dynasty than of the nation, and the feeling that they have been deceived and betrayed is growing among the people. In Crete the officers of the foreign ships have been fired upon. The Christians are still bent upon driving out the Moslems, who are crowded in the seaports under the guns of the fleets and protest vigorously against an autonomy which would leave them helpless in the hands of the majority. It is a difficult problem which the Powers have set themselves to solve, and the astute sultan plays his old game of delay and division with all his wonted skill. To the German emperor, for example, he expresses the hope that "advice, which was founded upon the strong friendship uniting them, would show Turkey the way to obtain the full recognition of her rights as a victorious Power."

Japan and Hawaii

The blunt remark reported to have been made by the commander of the American war vessel now at Honolulu at a social meeting to a Japanese officer, to the effect that we want Japan to keep her hands off Hawaii, no doubt expresses the general feeling of the United States. The present trouble arises over the increasing proportions of the Japanese immigration to the islands and a step taken by the Hawaiian Government which looks like an attempt for its restriction. The law requires that companies shipping laborers should send whites in a definite proportion to Asiatics, that certain preliminary formalities should be complied with, and that every emigrant should carry with him at least $50 of his own money. The difference between the governments is over the question of fact whether these formalities were complied with, and especially whether the money shown by certain immigrants who were sent back to Japan was properly in their possession or was lent to them by the shipping company to be returned after landing. The provocation arose from the return of 488 passengers out of 600 on board a single ship. The matter will no doubt be settled by diplomacy, and the sending of a war ship is to be regarded as a concession to Japanese public opinion rather than as a threat. Japan is sensitive to slights in her foreign relations, as is shown recently by the complaints in the native press that the European countries, with the exception of Belgium and Spain, neglected to order a period of formal mourning for the recent death of the Japanese empress dowager.

England Before the Jubilee

English politics and English social life seem to be completely dominated by the impending jubilee at the completion of the sixtieth year of the queen's reign. Part of Lord Salisbury's subservient foreign policy is, no doubt, to be attributed to his reluctance to disturb the time with rumors of trouble. A bill for the compulsory insurance of working men against accidents in business at the cost of their employers has given rise to wide interest and debate. The government proposes to meet the difficulties of the Irish question by measures relieving the landlords and the county governments of the cost of caring for the poor, which will be assumed by the imperial treasury, and a plan of local self government is to be introduced which, it is hoped, will at once prove more efficient and satisfy the craving for home rule. The festivities and social functions planned for the jubilee are on a great scale, and the charitable gifts have been large. Upon their protest and appeal the Free Churchmen of England have been accorded a subordinate recognition in the jubilee services, from which by the first arrangement they had been wholly excluded. England is prosperous and personal good will toward the queen is nearly universal both at home and in the colonies, so that it is likely that the celebration will go by with very few discordant notes. The good will of America is assured, but we hope the mistake of magnifying the occasion into something like a national participation on our part, which has been urged by a few injudicious people, will be dropped. Good will is not allegiance, and Americans can best help the occasion by remembering their own national and republican dignity.

Germany and Emigration

Germany is impatient with the limitations of her sphere of influence and the continual drain of lifeblood to feed the strength of other peoples—a feeling which largely accounts for her recent jealousy of England. Her colonies are nearly worthless as homes for men bred in the temperate zone, and her sons in the English colonies and the United States lose in a single generation their language and distinctly national traits and feelings. She is interested, therefore, in supervising and directing the stream of emigration which is constantly leaving her shores so that it shall count in the extension of her influence and trade, and this she has attempted to do by the recent enactment of legislation requiring the special permission of the imperial chancellor, with the assent of the Bundesrath, the council representing the German states, for the transportation of emigrants. This permission can only be obtained by German subjects or German companies having business with German territory. This means that the all-powerful official classes intend to divert the stream of German emigration to their own colonies or to the countries of South America, where the Germans maintain their language and national feeling against the weaker attraction of the Latin-American races.

Spanish-American Revolutions

In Honduras the revolution appears to have failed. In Uruguay the insurgents have been defeated, but seem to have so far carried their point that some of their leaders have been admitted to office by the government. From Ecuador it is reported that President Alfaro, in consequence of clerical activity in the recent unsuccessful revolution, has issued an order expelling from the country "every member of all the orders of priests." Bishop Andrade, under arrest for treason, is also to be expelled. Of the clerical interference in South American politics there is, we suppose, no question, but so sweeping an order in one of the most bigoted countries of the world would certainly produce a reaction. The offending priests might be sent for instruction in righteousness to the United States, where Roman Catholic interference in politics is —repudiated. The probable interpretation of the matter is that it is priests attached to the so-called religious orders and not the parish priests who are to be expelled.

NOTES

By a law just enacted train wrecking which results in the death of passengers becomes a capital offense. Why should it ever have been anything else, we wonder!

The increasing importance of the Pacific trade is indicated by the establishment of a new line of steamers between Tacoma and the French colony of Tahiti in the south Pacific.

The appointment by Governor Wolcott of President Franklin Carter of Williams as a member of the Massachusetts State Board of Education is an admirable one, and has met with universal commendation.

The world-wide influence of the Universal Postal Union is nearly completed by the addition of Korea and the Orange Free State. China alone remains outside, but the world moves even in China nowadays and probably her accession will not be delayed beyond the next meeting.

Popocatepetl has passed into the hands of an American syndicate, which plans to carry sulphur, ice and wood to the city of Mexico and carry tourists up to the crater. The volcanoes of the mountain rim of the valley of Mexico have supplied ice to the city ever since the days of Montezuma.

The English national fund for the Greek wounded, as reported by the London Chronicle, has reached a total of nearly $50,000. It has been to some extent a party rather than a national subscription, and its success is all the more gratifying as proof of a feeling not apparently shared by the government leaders.

After all their talk about entire willingness to testify, the presidents of the coal railroads have brought the reference of which we spoke last week to a pause by carrying the constitutionality of the anti-trust law into the courts. They may be willing to testify, but their time is valuable and they pay their lawyers by the year.

The Supreme Court decides that the Interstate Commerce Commission has no power to fix rates for the railroads. It may declare that rates are unreasonable, but not state what they shall be. The Nebraska case, covering still more important questions affecting the railroads and the public, goes over to the next term of the court.

The late Mr. Charles F. Lawrence of New York by his will left $100,000 to the town of Pepperell, Mass., for an art museum and library, with his own books and art treasures as the nucleus of a collection. To this he added $7,500 for the care of the churchyard. Every gift of this sort has an enormous influence in conserving and increasing the civic spirit.

The vexed question of the building of a Roman Catholic chapel at West Point seems at last to be settled by the opinion of United States Attorney-General McKenna that the Secretary of War has no authority to permit the erection of buildings for private uses on property under exclusive control of the War Department. As the Attorney General is a Roman Catholic, this decision cannot be said to be prejudiced.

Packed with the utmost care in soft flannel and tissue paper and carried in a special parlor car, the great lenses of the Yerkes telescope, made by the Clarks in Cambridgeport, were safely transported to the observatory of the University of Chicago last week and set up in place. The completed instrument was set at work on the first clear night, and much is hoped from it as the largest refracting telescope yet constructed.

An important ruling of the Roman Catholic authorities just promulgated practically declares that English is the tongue for church purposes of the United States. Children born in America of foreign parents are to be free to join English-speaking parishes and immigrants of all classes are to have the same liberty. This is good sense and good policy and tends toward that unity of church life which is the ultimate aim of every religious denomination.

Camden, N. J., just across the Delaware from Philadelphia, has long been known as a resort for runaway couples who desired to evade the strict marriage license law of Pennsylvania. By a law, which was opposed to the last in the New Jersey legislature by some of the Camden ministers, this bad notoriety will be abated after July 1, the new law, oddly enough, requiring licenses only of non-residents. It is high time that State jealousy should yield to a uniform system of legislation for marriage and divorce.

Ex-Postmaster-General Horatio King, who died in Washington, May 20, was born in Paris, Me., where he began active life in the composing-room of the Jeffersonian. Becoming owner and editor of the paper, he moved it to Portland. In 1839 he became a clerk in the post office department at Washington and rose through the grades of the service until he was appointed Postmaster General in the Cabinet of President Buchanan in the last month of his term. He was an outspoken Union man in a time of official doubt or silence.

The rising tide of woman's claims has met a barrier in the ancient English University of Cambridge, where the proposal to confer degrees upon women was defeated by much more than a two-thirds majority. We do these things better in America, without rowdyism on the part of students. We doubt whether there is a college in America where the hanging in effigy of a woman in bloomers opposite the college center would be possible, nor do we make purchases of antiquated eggs as weapons with which to keep back our sisters from degrees.

IN BRIEF

So the idea of an officially established and indorsed State bureau of ministerial supply is finding favor with our Illinois brethren. Massachusetts stands ready to commend the plan.

The New York State law prescribing a governing body for Congregational churches has been amended. It was not as it stood a measure of bigots, as some of the newspapers asserted. It was the work of an ignoramus.

The decision of the board of trustees of Bangor Theological Seminary, last week, to discontinue the English course was a step which will win the general approval of those who believe a thoroughly educated ministry is a necessity, in order that the churches may maintain and increase their influence.

Our cover poem this week has a peculiar interest and appropriateness in view of the fact that its author, Paul Laurence Dunbar, is a Negro whose father and mother were slaves. The verses were taken from Lyrics of Lowly Life, the book which Mr. Howells says entitles him to be ranked as the first poet of his race in our language.

In the Spanish Senate last week the action of the United States Senate on the Cuban question led a noble duke to box the ears of a noble senator, who responded in like fashion. Wise men decided that no duel was necessary, as each man had hit the other. We are thankful that the dignity of our Senate still ranks higher than that of Spain.

The most interesting feature of the Baptist home missionary anniversary at Pittsburg was the offer of Mr. John D. Rockefeller to contribute $250,000 toward the extinction of the missionary debt upon condition that an equal amount was subscribed by others. More than $200,000 have already been pledged for the purpose, and we may safely congratulate our Baptist brethren upon the acquirement of free hands for their work.

We have heard until we are weary of it about the "courtesy of the Senate," but now Mr. Dingley, smarting under the rough treatment which his bill has experienced, ventures another phrase, "The courtesy which usually prevails among tariff makers," which is a contribution to the gayety of the nation. The courtesy due to the tariff payers, whose business waits for stability upon a selfish and dilatory Congress, would be more to the point.

It must not be forgotten that Broker Chapman in his comfortable prison, waited upon by his valet and interviewed by the reporters, is a confession of speculation in stocks affected by their official action by senators of the United States. The sugar schedule is again under debate and there are more rumors of senatorial money-making. Will there be another broker to be jailed for keeping the secrets of his clients some years hence?

The Old South Church of Boston is prepared to establish a valid claim to the famous Bradford MS. The document was taken from its Prince Library, as the writing on the flyleaf and the records of the library show conclusively. The Old South Church does not desire the custody of the volume, but naturally wants its rights acknowledged. The governor receives the MS. on Wednesday of this week, and the claims of the church, we understand, have already been placed before him.

Mr. Thomas Todd's abilities in the printing line are known far and wide among Congregational folk, and our own readers have abundant opportunity week by week to mark the carefulness with which work in his establishment is done. But the public ought to know also that our genial friend and associate of many years can do several things equally well. His moderatorship of the Massachusetts State meeting last week was universally praised. His tact and courtesy as well as his knowledge of parliamentary law were put to unusual tests, but they never failed.

The health of Dr. George Leon Walker of Hartford is a matter of so much concern to many that a report from his sickroom will be eagerly scanned even though it does not bring as much encouragement respecting his recovery as could be desired. He spends a part of his time, when the weather is warm enough, on his piazza, and it is hoped that he can be removed to his summer home at Brattleboro before long. He maintains a lively interest in all that is going on in the world, and his patience and gentleness evidence the reality of his Christian faith.

In his brief address at the Alumni Club dinner of Union Theological Seminary, President Charles Cuthbert Hall, as reported by the Evangelist, summed up the requirements of the time upon the ministry as follows: "A ministry of intellectual sincerity, of deep reverence in worship, of great practical wisdom in affairs, intense spiritual life and sustained fervor and penetrated also by the missionary spirit." If Union can secure material and put this stamp upon it there will be no question of a "dead line" for its graduates.

Not less stimulating than President Hall's words at Union was Dr. van Dyke's beautiful address to the Yale theologues last week. He pleaded for godliness and manliness, and his short, pregnant sentences carried inspiration. He urged his hearers not to claim any deference because of the cut of their coats. "Any tailor," said he, "is willing to do the same thing for anybody on the same terms, which you have doubtless had set forth to you abundantly in circulars." He exhorted particularly practice of the manly virtues of truthfulness and trustworthiness. "Many a man of spiritual power," said he, "falls by the way because he cannot keep a secret." Urging independence of thought he counseled them not to become obstreperous. "A man who is independent for the sake of being independent is either a congenital idiot or too immature to be a public teacher." We wish Dr. van Dyke's address could be read and applied by every theologue in the country.

The little church at Stoke Poges, near Windsor, England, needs repairs. The rector appeals to the American people to furnish the money for the reason that Gray's Elegy is connected with the country churchyard in which the building stands. The little church at Austerfield, now externally the same and still representing the Anglican Establishment as it was when William Bradford left it for more congenial associations, is being restored to its ancient beauty by taking away its outer walls and the American people are told that they may erect a brass tablet to Bradford's memory in the church if they will give a substantial sum toward the repairs. In these and other little churches looking this way for collections brass enough can be furnished for tablets if Americans will furnish the gold.

Somewhere in all processes of business trust in human nature comes in, and it is, after all, betrayed in astonishingly few cases as it was by the lad King, who ran off with about $30,000 belonging to the Boylston National Bank of Boston. He had three days of exciting vacation before he was run to earth by the police, and seems to have found out that a great temptation, if yielded to, is sure to bring repentance in its train. He spent about $300 and does not seem to have had a very good time, and he will probably have abundant leisure hereafter to meditate upon the old saying that the way of the transgressor is hard. It is a lesson to employers that temptation ought to be kept as far as possible out of the way of those whom they employ, but it tells us nothing new about human nature or the need of God's help in time of trial.

The emphasis with which the speakers at the Illinois State meeting who referred at all to the socialistic movements of the day insisted upon the conversion, or the regeneration of the individual as the indispensable condition of any permanent improvement in social conditions, was remarkable, and to believers in the New Testament method of dealing with men encouraging. Another characteristic of the Peoria gathering was the deep and genuine love constantly manifested for what may be called the fundamental truths of the gospel, and the confidence cherished in the ultimate triumph of the Christian principles the world over. It was also apparent that while brethren differ very widely from each other in many of their personal opinions, they are anxious to work together and to make all reasonable allowance for that diversity of opinion which is not inconsistent with devotion to the same Master.

The Christian Register thinks the demolition of the buildings on the ground to be occupied by the new Congregational House might furnish a text for a sermon. It suggests that the destruction of the well-built houses recently standing there was only a step toward the building of elegant proportions, the picture of which lately appeared on our cover page. The inference is that the downfall of old doctrines in the midst of the dust of controversy only "removes that which conceals the spiritual temple already existing and imperishable." Perhaps, however, it is yet too soon to proclaim such a sermon with dogmatic confidence. We see thus far on the grounds no movement toward the promised building. A structure on paper hardly suggests "a spiritual temple already existing and imperishable." We are not ready to say good-by to the old in our system of faith till the promise of the new has at least begun to be realized.

CURRENT THOUGHT

AT HOME

The Watchman says, suggestively, with reference to the relaxed conscience of America in regard to the conduct of public business: "A conclusive evidence of the low tone of civic morality is afforded by the lavish praise which good men award to a public official who simply does the things that his oath of office binds him to do. A mayor or a police commissioner who impartially enforces the law is such a rare phenomenon that the public feels called upon to extol his fidelity in unmeasured terms. If a man in public life does what he solemnly agreed to do when he accepted office, with its honors and emoluments, men who ought to know better agree in treating him as if it were a matter for general congratulation that he had not turned out a rascal."

With reference to the recent memorial of the American Federation of Labor, the editor of Harper's Weekly says: "What makes a clear and amicable understanding between working men and other social classes sometimes peculiarly difficult of attainment is the circumstance that many of the working men have evolved out of their own inner consciousness certain vague ideas of rights and duties and live mentally in a world of their own, which is far away from the social conditions actually existing, and that they reason from premises that are out of touch with the present state of things. This is apt to render argument between them and persons living in the actual world mutually unintelligible and fruitless. All the more welcome should be propositions coming from an organization of working men which, even if open to question, form a fair ground for useful discussion between them and the social conservative. And it will certainly be admitted that the demands put forth by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor are so free from socialistic imaginings that they can be debated on terms of mutual understanding and confidence."

ABROAD

China has been one of the strongholds of those who believe in the advantages possessed by a silver using country, but Talcott Williams, in the May number of the Annals of the American Academy, shows that the price of silver has fluctuated and continues to fluctuate in China as much as in America, to the destruction of that stability which is the first condition of a satisfactory market. "Chinese retail prices," he says, "of whose steadiness as measured in silver, in that blessed haven of arrested monetary laws, we have heard so much in the last ten or twenty years, are really measured in cash. The value of cash in silver becomes, therefore, of interest, for whatever of steadiness silver has in regulating retail prices in China rests on its convertibility into cash. The character and rapidity of these fluctuations can be best estimated by the fact that Chinese cities have had, certainly for forty years, and probably for centuries, exchanges in which silver futures are regularly bought and sold under all the concomitants of speculations in gold in this country during our war, a time when certainly no one would have spoken of gold as an unvarying standard of retail value in the ordinary transactions of life."

OPEN AIR WORKERS IN CONFERENCE

The fifth annual convention of the Open Air Workers' Association of America was held in Philadelphia, May 19. The dominating thought was the relation of open air work to the churches. It was felt that the two were too much divorced. Pres. T. S. Hamlin, D. D., of Washington protested against the custom, prevailing at many open air meetings, of abusing the churches as cold and indifferent. Such words simply confirm non-church-goers instead of winning them to Christ. He said he was solicitous that open air work should not be identified with its peculiarities. It means no new gospel. We should not have one gospel for the church and another for the street corner. There must always be adaptation to circumstances, but ever the same message from God to man.

Rev. J. B. Pidge, D. D., thought that services having no relation, directly or indirectly, with the churches would be largely barren of permanent results. Rev. George Elliott, D. D., said that the present historic spirit now pervading Christian thinking would stimulate the church to more evangelistic effort. It will make clear how all the great forward movements of the past have been inspired with this spirit. The church has two functions, teaching and evangelizing. The former she is now doing splendidly; for the latter she is beginning to arouse herself, and instead of delegating evangelistic work to the Salvation Army, the Volunteers, missions and evangelists, she will do more of it herself.

Other speakers were Rev. J. C. Collins of New Haven, Mr. G. D. Moore of Bridgeton, N. J., Rev. Llewellyn Caley, Rev. J. R. Westwood, D. D., Rev. J. W. Weddell, Rev. W. C. Webb, D. D., J. P. Hall and others of Philadelphia, Mr. Frank H. Marston and Rev. E. H. Byington of Brooklyn. The denominations represented in the discussion were Baptist, Episcopalian, Congregational, Presbyterian, Quaker and Methodist. Persons desiring additional information should write to the secretary, 123 Amity Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., inclosing stamp for postage, and some of the association's literature will be forwarded.

B.

Pro Patria

A Memorial Day Story by Alice Brown

It was a May Sunday in a pleasant land: a morning so roundly beautiful that it shone like June, as a bourgeoning girlhood foreshadows its own prime. The sky was wonderfully blue, though without a hint of the heat fired by later summer; and to those who looked up from below, the apple branches lay against it in a delicate tremble of pink. All the world was in bloom and alive to the thrilling of its own strength. Even the cows, not yet used to pasture-going, kicked up their heels in clumsy overflow as they left the yard, presently to remember their age and state and to fall into a sober cropping of roadside grass; and two dogs, comrades from youth, were trotting across a field, bent on some pleasure undiscovered, they hoped, by dull human things.

A little house at the end of a long, curving path stood bowered in the pink of apple trees sown with that morning luster. The unshaded path was itself the last estate of what had once been a drive; but since the Pelhams had, years ago, given up keeping a horse, it had grown slowly up to grass, and now only one brown thread remained to mark its course.

In the first freshness of the morning a tall, lank lad came out of the house and stood looking up at the dazzling sky. He blinked his eyes at the brightness and a slow smile gathered upon his lips. This was Timmy Pelham, mildly denominated "shackled" among the neighbors; and his smile remained something mysterious even to them. It had none of the emptiness belonging to the poverty of his mental estate. It exhaled a soft radiance; it had, moreover, something awesome, in that its power and fineness were so overwhelming compared with any experience Timmy could possibly have had to call them forth. As he stood there under the apple boughs, his mother, Linda Pelham, came softly out and waited, her passionately anxious gaze fixed upon his back. She was far below the ordinary hight of woman, but she had more muscle than many a man; and her sharpened face, with its sandy hue and light eyes, held a spiritual force that sometimes met the observer with the impact of a blow.

Behind her in the doorway stood another woman, her daughter Anstiss, taller than she and wearing an odd look of superior age, possibly because she seemed poorer and more pinched. Her threadbare calico was covered with a multitude of patches, skillfully inserted, and her apron had been pieced in irregular patterns. But everything belonging to her was rigidly clean, and though the white band about her neck was only the hem of an old sheet, it had been exquisitely starched and ironed. The two women stood there looking at Timmy's back, and Timmy smiled at the smiling sky. His long arms hung loosely at his side, and his feet twitched as if they felt themselves called. He formed no ignoble part of the bounteous day. You felt chiefly his difference to the things of this earth, not his inadequacy. His coloring was pink and delicate, like the apple blooms. His heavy masses of dun, light hair hid the possible lack of symmetry in the shape of his head, and his blue eyes were lighted by some hidden ecstasy. Suddenly he stretched out both arms and began a low, rhythmic sound, like the humming of a wheel; he paused there a moment, atilt on tiptoe and then went dancing away.

"There!" said the elder woman. She drew the long sigh of an expectation fulfilled. "I thought he'd forgot it. I never knew him to oversleep on a Sunday mornin', an' I couldn't help prophesyin' 'twould upset the rest o' the day. Well, there!"

Timmy ran with a regular step, incredibly rapid and yet full of intention, straight down the bank and round the apple trees one by one. He did not touch them; he only circled them at a uniform distance, keeping always the low rhythm of his chant. It was his Sunday morning custom, an unvarying salute to the one still day among the seven, and it came to life with the melting of the snow and the brighter sun. All winter Timmy drooped; but when the buds began to stir, something stirred also in his heart. Then at daybreak it called him broad awake, and he threw on his clothes with none of the fumbling which hampered him at other times and ran forth to his strange ceremonial, so like a fantastic worship of the unknown God. His eyes were fixed upon the sky, his arms outstretched, and he ran with the security and precision of one walking in sleep. Having circled the trees about the house, he took to the little path and ran out into the country road. There he turned down toward the little river and sped on, circling all the trees by the way. When he reached the river he would wheel and trot back. As the neighbors told newcomers, with a gravity equal to their ignorance of nature's reasons, Timmy was "stopped by running water."

The two women returned to the house and sat down again at the breakfast table. Anstiss finished her piece of johnnycake and carefully picked up all the crumbs within her reach. She did this with the air of one called to an exacting task in which there is no hardship. So might she have pondered and striven over some piece of delicate work well worth the doing. At length, spying one last unnoted crumb upon the tablecloth, her face quivered into satisfied yet stealthy delight. Anstiss was saving and she loved to save.

"More tea?" asked her mother, looking up briefly, after filling her own cup. Anstiss gave hers an anxious examination; it had been drained to the last drop.

"There's a mite o' sugar left," she said, apologetically, with one quick look at her mother. "Jest a drop o' hot water to rense it out!"

Question and answer were, as even the neighbors knew, "reg'lar as the day." Anstiss always "rensed" her cup, and her mother acceded to the habit with the callousness of usage. Years ago Linda had been fretted by it, but at some points time had welded her armor more firmly and more strong. Now she sat looking out of the window through the strings where the climbing beans were presently to twine.

"Well," she said at last, "we set up so late there wa'n't no time to talk it over. What think of her?"

The night before, David, the eldest son, had brought his betrothed from Saltash, where she taught school, to take tea and be approved. He had driven her home again and there he was to spend Sunday.

"She's real pretty," said Anstiss, peering into her spoon for a possible grain of sugar. "I guess she's a highflyer, though. Them white feathers were pretty gay. I hope she never'll come to want."

"Want! The cat's foot!" exclaimed her mother, recklessly. "Anstiss, you know what I told you. You're luckier'n most of us. You've sensed your besettin' sin an' you've got odds to fight ag'inst it."

Anstiss set down her cup very meekly. "I will, ma'am, I will," she responded, like a humble child. "I'm goin' to try all day an' see'f I can't be lavish."

"See't you do," said the widow, ruthlessly. "It's like drawin' your eye-teeth, but you'll be glad when it's over. Now, Anstiss, I'm goin' down to the judge's an' you feedthe hins. Give 'em a good passel, now!"

The younger woman's face contracted in the lines of an honest grief. It was a heavy cross to care for living things. They were dear to her and she could not stint them. Yet stinting was in her blood, and nature goaded her on until her very soul lay faint under the necessity of resisting. "I'll feed 'em," she said at length, with the gentleness of an unwilling submission. "You goin' to alter the will? Don't seem's if I would."

"I've got to," answered Linda, conclusively. She went into the clockroom and returned with her good black bonnet and a little crape shawl. Had it not been Sunday she would simply have tied on her garden "flat"; but some deference was due the time. "I dunno's he'll 'tend to it at all Sabbath Day, but 'twon't do no harm to try. I never put off anything yet without gittin' ketched."

She hastened away with her brisk, capable step, but midway "down the road," as every one called the stretch of highway between hamlet and church, she paused. The judge himself was coming in his carryall and the entire family with him. They were going over to Saltash to spend the day. There would be no making of wills till Monday morning. Linda stood waiting by the roadside. She lifted an imploring hand, but the judge only gave Old Gray a little flick on the shoulder and, bowing suavely, passed her by.

"The old torment!" said Linda to herself. "He knows well enough what I wanted. I'll bet a dollar I shall die 'fore night!"

She turned about on her way homeward, but just then the doctor came driving along in an open buggy. He drew up, and threw away his cigar.

"Ride?" he called. "Going home, aren't you?"

Linda climbed into the buggy with all the alacrity of her little feet.

"Yes, I be," she said, "now. I was goin' down to the judge's to git my will altered over, but he's harnessed up an' gone. My, ain't I glad Anstiss wa'n't by to see you do that!"

The doctor quieted his horse into a walk.

"What?" he asked.

"Throw away that piece o' cigar. You know she never can abide waste, an' she'd ha' had to pick it up. An' then she's so set ag'inst tobacco, she'd ha' felt called on to bury it. It's a mercy that affliction's passed her by!"

"I just met Timmy," said the doctor, tentatively.

"Yes," said Linda. She folded her hands outside her shawl in anticipated enjoyment. She dearly loved a chat with the doctor. His knowledge seemed to her almost supernatural in one so young. He was the perfect confidant. His accumulated experience gave him understanding, and his manners, said the country people, were "as easy as an old shoe." "'Twas about him I was goin' down to the judge's. You see, when I found out how 'twas with Timmy, I made my will."

The doctor had many a time heard from the neighbors the story of the will and its remaking, but he liked to hear it again. He turned upon her a glance of cordial interest, the like of which had thawed many a colder heart. Linda had thought of little for years save the drama of her life and the greater drama wherein it had been absorbed. She was ready to rehearse them both.

"You see," she continued, her eyes traveling through the aisle of elms before them, "when the war begun I was possessed. Nothin' ever stirred me up like that. I didn't know how to git along." Her eyes filled with hot, painful tears. A fever flush rose in her cheeks. "I dunno why it was I didn't take it like other folks. All I know is I didn't. Sammy says—he's my brother's youngest, gone into a bank in Boston—'twas because some of our folks fit in the Revolution an' some in 1812. I dunno. I never paid much heed to that. But I was possessed. I wanted to go an' take care of the soldiers; but Davie was a little boy then an' couldn't be left. Besides, he wouldn't let me He was terrible tender of me!" Two tears trickled slowly down the fiery hollow of her cheek. The love of her dead husband was yet living, and sometimes in spite of rigorous restraint it rose and walked. "But he was jest as crazy as I was. We were jest alike. Don't you never heed folks when they tell you man an' wife have got to be different so's to fay in. They ain't. We were alike as two peas—eyes, hair and disposition—an' we wanted the same things, down to sage cheese an' riz doughnuts. Never had a word. Well, he went. We were terrible keyed up. He wa'n't drafted. 'Twas his own will an' pleasure; there wa'n't no blowin' hot an' cold. Right in the midst of the fust uprisin', when the Elder boys give out they had sciatica, an' one hoppled round an' tother went on crutches, an' Squire Beane on the Saltash Road got so used to offering bounty they said he'd be thankful to buy off the hins an' cats, he went straight off an' enlisted. He didn't give me warnin', but I knew. I knew as well as you could ha' told me. He put on a clean dicky an' harnessed up without a word, an' soon as he drove off I shet myself up in the shed chamber an' fit it out. I was possessed for him to go; I should ha' drove him out o' the house if he hadn't, but that was the minute I found out war'd begun. Well, they went tootin' out o' town an' all the women with 'em to the cars, an' then we that had got to stay settled down to keep castle."

They had reached her gate, and the doctor drew his horse to a standstill. Linda came hastily back to the present world and looked about her with bewildered eyes. He laid his hand on hers.

"Say on," he counseled. "Sit here and talk."

"There ain't much more to tell," she said, clasping her thin hands tightly, one upon the other, "except we lived pretty near the wind, an' the only let-up we had was when he come home once on furlough. I carried on the farm, an' I raked an' scraped to keep soul an' body together. Davie wa'n't old enough to help, an' I didn't have time to learn him much of anything, except to eat potatoes an' salt. I've seen the day I was thankful to git the salt. I pieced an' mended an' made. One spell I hadn't a shoe to my foot except what I botched up out o' some old felt. Once in a dog's age, when Davie couldn't stan' it any longer, I'd hatch up a pie. The neighbors used to say I could git pie off'n a rock. I shouldn't dast to offer you them pies; they never had one mite o' sweetenin'. Then Anstiss come an' she was—marked." Her voice fell awesomely on the last word.

"I know," said the doctor. "Yes, I know."

"She wa'n't more'n two year old when I found out how 'twas goin' to be," continued Linda. Her eyes sought his now and a strange and pitiful look crept in about her mouth. "When she was a little mite, no higher'n that, she'd hide her luncheon so's to save it. Once she carried a piece of butter out o' her plate to a little hoard she'd got out in the woodpile, an' I ketched her crying as if her heart would break because it melted there. She wa'n't more'n ten year old when I talked it all out with her. 'Anstiss,' says I, 'it's your cross. It's what you gi'n the war. It's your cross an' you've got to bear it, same as Joe Coles does losin' his arm, or that fellow to Sudleigh his stiff knee.' That tickled her for a little while. She felt sort o' important over it, an' I didn't know but pride'd carry her through. But byme-by that got dulled an' the heft o' the time sence she's had to fight with nothin' but clear grit to back her. I wisht you could see her chamber cluzzet, filled up to the door with little mites o' things she picks up, no use to her nor nobody else—pieces o' lamp chimbley, old tinware, spools, I dunno what all. Once a month reg'lar we go through it together, an' clear it out, an' sometimes she'll stan' by with the tears runnin' down her cheeks. Well, we rubbed along, an' byme-by the war ended an' he come home. An' he come with both his arms shot off, crawlin' into the gate. 'Lindy,' says he, fust thing, 'I never shall mow another swathe.' I hadn't shed many tears, but then I broke down. I didn't cry. I laughed. 'Well,' says I, 'we'll take to raisin' beans. You can tread 'em out.' He laughed, too, an' little Davie come toddlin' down the path. 'Ma'am,' says he, 'what you laughin' at?' An' I hil' him up so's't his father could kiss him. I dunno's I ever had such a good time as I did that year. There was the country safe, an' he'd helped to save her. I never put the victuals to his lips without gloryin' in it. P'r'aps I was too much lifted up; for long in the year Timmy was born, an' he was born—so."

"Yes," said the doctor again. "Yes, I know."

Linda came out of her trance, and turned her to the barren present. Her eyes lost their softer veil; they took on the hardiness of resolve.

"I says to myself, when I found he was so, that I must see he was provided for. The minute he was took away I made my will. I left Timmy to Aunt Bethiah, an' if she was dead to David, if he should be growed, an' then to Cousin Blake, an' then to Anstiss. I put her off some ways, ye see, for I knew how 'twould cross her to keep him fed an' clothed. Then there was Mis' Barker, down to the Mills; she said she was willin' to take him. So I've kep' puttin' in one an' another as they give their consent. You can't have too long a string, thinks I. They might all be carried off in one day, an' then where's Timmy?"

"Don't you want to put me in?" asked the doctor.

Linda looked round at him in an outshining glory of gratitude.

"I do so," she responded. "That is complete. That makes two new ones in less'n a couple o' days. You see I've got Marcia, an' I was goin' to the judge's this very mornin' to ask him to put her down."

"Marcia?"

"Yes," said Linda, proudly, "that's my son's girl. They've been going together nigh onto two months, an' last night he brought her over to tea. She's a sweet, capable creatur', an' David worships the ground she walks on. Timmy took a terrible shine to her, too; an' soon as I see him cuddlin' down by her, I says to myself, 'I'll put her in after Aunt Bethiah.' So I took her into the clockroom an' asked her, an' she never deliberated a minute. 'Yes,' says she, 'yes! who should he go to if not to his own brother an' sister?' There! my tongue runs fast enough to turn a mill. Pox take it! I don't talk so free to everybody, but I guess you've kep' a close mouth before this." She rose, and descended to the ground with the bird-like alacrity of her mounting.

"I guess I have," said the doctor. "Now don't you forget to put me in. There's Timmy. These long runs aren't very good for him, you know. I went over him pretty thoroughly the day he had the cold, and I should say he'd better be moderate."

Linda laid a hand on the wheel. Her forehead puckered itself into the frown of anxious consideration.

"I dunno what I can do," she said. "Years an' years ago I tried to put a stop to't, but he took on so I gi'n it up an' let him have his will."

The doctor had reconsidered. He repented his hasty speech.

"That's right," he said, with reassuring warmth. "Let him have all the good times he can. You won't be sorry."

Linda took her hand from the dusty wheel, and he drove on. She waited there while Timmy came up the shaded road, very bright now in the light of later morning. He came droopingly, his head low and his long arms swinging. His face was purple. Linda passed an arm about his shoulders and he leaned upon her.

"Poor sonny!" she said, drawing him toward the house.

Anstiss was sweeping the floor, scrutinizing every rolling of dust for a pin or a crumb for the fowls. Her mother made her a signal of silence, and Anstiss responded with an uplifting of the eyebrows and a sympathetic smile. The mother passed to an old rocking-chair in the corner and Timmy followed, his dull eyes fixed upon the floor. There she sat down and he threw himself at her feet.

"Put a hand on a head," he crooned, "an' say, 'Poor Timmy!'"

"Poor Timmy," said the mother, her hand on his flaxen locks, "poor Timmy!"

There he sat resting, as he did every morning after his Sunday tree-worship, murmuring from time to time, "Put a hand on a head an' say, 'Poor Timmy,'" until he lulled himself off to sleep.

On Monday morning Linda had ample time for the washing, because Timmy was entertaining himself bravely according to a fashion he followed in fine weather. Out under the woodshed was a recess devoted to tools, and midway across it stretched a bar hung with old horseshoes. Timmy stood before them, with a little rusty hammer in his hand, and struck one shoe after another, evoking a melodious clink. All the sounds appealed to him, yet he had his favorites among them. He called them forth after a system of his own, weaving a formless minor melody; with certain notes, especially beloved, a look of rapture flashed over his face, and again the delicate features settled into a mildness of expectancy. Whenever his mother heard the lingering clink, clink from the shed, she possessed her soul in peace—Timmy was happy and out of harm.

At ten o'clock David drove into the yard, late for his day's work but conscious of ample excuse. His mother came to the door, her dripping arms rolled in her apron, and Anstiss followed. Timmy left his happy occupation and came forward, too. David looked very straight and strong and handsome in his Sunday clothes.

"Well," said his mother, proudly, "how'd you leave her?"

David had a delicate skin; he colored rapidly like a girl. "Pretty well, I guess," he said, laughing. "Don't bother me now till I get this collar off. It's tighter'n a drum." But as he advanced toward the house Timmy ran before him. He pulled a little wad of paper from his pocket, and opened it laboriously, breathing hard.

"What you got there, sonny?" asked David, kindly.

His mother pressed forward and Anstiss, espying a pin on the ground, pounced on it in delighted eagerness. Timmy kept on working in his fumbling way. Presently he came to a little curling wisp of black hair. He held it up, and his face ran over with radiance not unmixed with a certain malicious challenge of them all. David flushed crimson. He made a passionately clumsy movement toward the curl; but Timmy held it out of reach.

"By George!" said David, "she told me he cut one off, but I never believed it."

"Who told you?" asked Anstiss.

"She—Marcia. She said he come up behind her an' she thought 'twas me. Then she heard a little snip an' see him run. An' she missed one of her curls. Here, Timmy, you give that over!"

Timmy rolled it rapidly in the sodden paper and concealed it in a tightening fist. He still smiled, but warily; he looked like a forest creature ready to flee. But his mother flushed high with pride. "Now, ain't that cute!" she exclaimed. "Anstiss, ain't that cute? Davie, you let him have it. He's earnt it by bein' so clever. Do let him have it! If you've got Marcia Lee, you needn't begrutch a spear or two off'n her head."

But while David deliberated, Timmy darted away. He skimmed over to the sweet-bough tree and dropped upon the ground. There he unrolled his treasure and began crooning over it softly. Once he laid it against his cheek, then his lips.

"My soul an' body!" said Linda, in solemnity of wonder, "if he ain't kissin' of it! I didn't know he could. He never learnt so much as to kiss me."

Anstiss put a hand on her shoulder and the two women stood there in silent grief. They were dominated by the maternal and they seemed to forget David: for the moment he was outside. He knew it from old experience, and in some dim fashion he could understand.

"Here, mother," he said, gently, "you let me get by you an' I'll change my things. Don't bother him about it. He shall have it if it'll do him any good."

The week went on with the even tread marked by duties done. Linda made her will, and "put in" Marcia and the doctor. She was glad to have it over before the rain began It set in on Tuesday in a gray downpour and continued through the three following days. Timmy drooped, as he always did when skies were dark, and his mother's eyes mourned with him. It was a dull week to David, also, and when on Saturday the sun assumed palpable sway his heart responded to the signal of bright weather.

"I guess I'll ride over Saltash way, tonight," he remarked, shyly, to his mother. "Maybe I'll bring her back."

"Well," answered Linda, "I'm glad you spoke of it. I'll try to dig a few dandelions afore dark."

It was late when David drove into the yard with his hired horse. There was nothing to say, but he was rich in joy, and longed to shed it on his path. He looked at Timmy out under the sweet-bough tree.

"Say, Timmy," he called, "I'm goin' to bring her back with me. You hear, sonny? I'm goin' to bring her back! Anstiss, tell mother good-by. Tell her she needn't sit up; only leave Marcia a candle."

He turned, and rattled out of the yard; but meantime Timmy had slipped down into the orchard and fled so fast between the trees that when David drove by he was waiting beside the elder bushes in the road. He darted out of the shadow, caught the buggy behind, and followed it with an even trot. The beauty of the night came fast. The storm had wholly gone; there grew to be a deep significance in the phrase that the moon had "carried it over." She was regnant now, a disk of mellowed gold. The fresh earth smell rose in a moist, impalpable cloud. The senses were drenched with the fragrance of new vegetation, and hints of other springs came thronging upon the mind until she swooned in a remembered rapture. David was in haste to be there. His blood stirred under the intoxication of the night and, bearing within himself the accumulated experience of the men who had loved and longed before him, he felt it blossom in his own nature and recognized with wonder the greatness of it all. Yet he was only conscious that he thought of Marcia, and he urged the horse onward.

They were bewildering half-thoughts that were moving vainly within Timmy's mind and quickening his steady tread. Once or twice David fancied he heard something behind, and slackened his speed to listen; but Timmy only hung from the buggy and rested before going on. When they drove into Saltash and turned down the maple-bordered way, he dropped off and staggered up to a lilac bush, where he curled himself in the shade to rest. But his quick eye scanned the house. He saw Marcia come forward to meet her lover. He watched her as she went in, and noted the gleam and darkness at her chamber window. Then she reappeared, and there came a clash of pleasant voices bidding her good-night. The two entered the carriage and drove out again into the road; and Timmy, with a little laugh all to himself, followed them. Now the sense of his good fortune turned the muddy highway into a path of light. David and he had got her: she was theirs. By some sympathy stronger than that of the regulated mind, sworn to see things as they are, he was very near the night, nearer, even, than the lovers, in all their budding wisdom. What if he failed to tell one syllable of all he heard? The whole heart of life might lie in the uncounted throbbing of a pulse, and life itself goes on in silent corners. Nature, at least, knew her child. She was kind to him, and not with the clumsy kindliness of men.

Anstiss and her mother had not missed him. Often he crept up to bed in the dusk, and tonight, excited by the prospect of their coming guest, they thought and talked of nothing else. They were watching on the steps, in the brilliant darkness, and before the carriage came, they had risen and were waiting.

"Why, what made you sit up?" rang Marcia's fresh voice. "You needn't."

"You didn't s'pose we'd let you poke off to bed by yourself?" said Linda, with a new sweetness in her tone. "Here, David, git her out, an' then you take the horse home. Why, Timmy child, where'd you come from?"

Mud-besplashed, panting, his thick hair tossed over his head, he staggered forward into the light. He caught at Marcia's dress, and she, with some swift intuition, threw her strong arms about him and held him up.

"Put a hand on a head"—began Timmy, and then, in spite even of David's bewildered grasp, he yielded and sank. But now Anstiss was holding the light, and she and her mother had the comfort of his fleeting look. Their minds, in swift accord of anxious love, went flashing back over the Sunday mornings of his life: for this was his look of joy.

. . . .

It was the doctor who helped David to lay him in his coffin. Linda stood near at hand, but she did not cry. Her face had fallen into the lines of an acquiescent humility. "I'm real glad," she kept whispering, while she cleared her throat at intervals and tried to speak aloud. "I'm real glad. I guess if there is any such place, his father'll look out for him."

David went out of the room and the doctor seized upon the moment. "You know what you said once," he reminded her, with a significance grave enough to dominate even the ear of grief. "It was true of Anstiss; it's true of Timmy. You gave them to the war. Look! I'll put it where nobody'll see it, and nobody shall ever know but you and me."

He unrolled a little parcel he had brought and folded the fabric reverently. It was a flag, and he laid it over Timmy's feet.

The Companions of the Sorrowful Way*

The Three Intimates of Jesus

By Ian Maclaren

It may not be given unto the devout heart to enter into certain of the Lord's sorrows. There are others which even St. John or Mary of Bethany can only imagine. When his fellow-townsmen would have taken his life, or Pharisees from Jerusalem dogged his steps, or the foolish multitude wearied of him, or even Judas Iscariot sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver, the vexation is within our understanding. When Jesus withdrew into the shadow of the olive trees and threw himself upon the ground and besought his Father time after time for relief, and sweat great drops of blood in his agony, the tribulation is beyond what even chief saints can think. Sensitive natures have moments of utter horror, when the naked shape of some loathsome sin is forced upon their gaze and they cry out in their outraged purity. Yet the finest nature is callous beside the soul of Christ and its purity is black beside his whiteness. When the sin of the race into which he had been born and whose lot he chose to share came to a climax in his rejection and betrayal; when our rebellion, unbelief, our selfishness, pride, treachery, our hatred, envy, falsehood—all the impieties of all the members of the body—came upon him, the head; then his strength was nigh breaking and he shrank from the cup.

When any one is called unto Gethsemane he must leave his nearest intimates and drink this cup alone. In the supreme temptations and sorrows of life the soul is isolated, and it were unbecoming and impious that any human eye should peep upon its agony. Yet even in that awful privacy, when God's hand leads us into the secret place of grief and curtains us with darkness we hunger for human sympathy, and we are disheartened if there be none to feel with us. One is comforted to know that near by a brother man is praying for him and waiting till haply he be delivered from his straits. Jesus was intensely human, and although he had spent many nights alone in this garden in communion with the Father he could not do without fellowship when he wrestled with temptation. He called aside his three intimates in the college of apostles and led them to the verge of the great mystery. Some came of their own accord into the sorrowful way, as that young man in the linen cloth, and Pilate's wife; some are dragged into this way by the violent hands of men, such were Simon the Cyrenian and the penitent thief; some found themselves in the way by the accident of circumstances—of them were the daughters of Jerusalem and the Roman centurion—but certain were called directly by the Lord to join him at the very beginning of his way, the two sons of Zebedee and Simon Peter.

If the apostles be taken to represent the church, then the three stand for that inner circle of choice souls who chiefly understand the mind of the Lord, who chiefly feel with his heart. One was the type of vision, to whom the very heavens would yet be opened; one was the type of action, who should declare Christ's name before councils; one was the type of heroism, who first of the apostolic band sealed his testimony with his blood. They were the spectators of Christ's most wonderful works, the witnesses to his glory, the companions of his passion. When Jesus called back Jairus's little maid from the dead by his kindly word, they stood beside the couch. When the veil between the seen and unseen dissolved, and Jesus' garments shone white as no fuller on earth could white them, they were on the mount; when he drank the bitter cup of this world's sin, they saw his hands tremble at the lifting thereof. He is your intimate to whom you turn in those solemn moments of life, and this was the honor set by Jesus on the three apostles.

Friendship can never be judged amid the ordinary circumstances of life—when we nod to our friend as he hurries past, when we are silent to him for months, when we chide him for some fault, when we give him careless advice. Friendship is proved when he is in the big black straits of life, and we remember nothing save our loyalty and his need. If three keep guard beside him in his Gethsemane, he is not to be pitied; but the three on whom Jesus put his faith watched for a while and then slept. The sleep of the three is the shame of the gospels, and there be some to whom the failure of St. John is sadder than the crucifixion. The people left Jesus—they were ignorant; the Pharisees slandered him—they were bigots; Judas betrayed him—he was a knave; Pilate crucified him—he was a place hunter; for each an excuse can be found by charity. If even the eight slept, they were not his intimates. "Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" was a keen reproach, but there was in it no complaint like this, "Could ye not watch with me one hour?" It was the cry of a wounded heart which in its hour of need had trusted its friends and been disappointed. When St. John could not keep vigil during his Friend's hardest hour, although Jesus used no upbraidings but found a kindly reason, the nails of the cross could not have been so bitter an affliction.

The church will ever make her pious pilgrimage to the garden of the Lord's passion, and under the shadow of the olives she will ever learn the secret of sacrifice, but the Lord has not yet abandoned Gethsemane. While his flesh and blood throughout the world and in all ages endure cruel wrong and suffering, he cannot be indifferent or untouched. The far distance of heaven does not dull his ear to the crying of his kinsfolk, nor does the glory of the Father blind his eyes to the martyrdom on earth. Into his heart is it all poured in virtue of his holy incarnation and eternal priesthood. The battlefields soaking with the blood of his brethren, the shameful wrongs of women and children, the sufferings of the prisoners who have done no wrong, the hunger and oppression of the poor, the torture of the dumb animals which have no appeal except to their Lord, are his present Gethsemane. His is an eternal passion, and a cup still refilled from day to day.

With the Lord is joined in this ministry of sympathy a band of companions who are the flower of the church, and who have not slept on their watch. They are his chosen friends, and belong to all times and creeds and callings—being as different one from another as St. John was from St. Peter, and finding their unity in the vision of the Master beneath the olives with his agonized prayer and his sweat of blood. Some are missionaries of the Lord, who carried the cross in their hearts rather than in their hands—from St. Paul, who poured out life as a drink offering, and Xavier, who stretched out his hands to the East and prayed for more sufferings, unto that pure spirit Brainerd, who grasped for multitudes of souls from his loved red Indians, and Livingstone, who in his patience and charity carried the light of the divine love into the dark places of the earth. Some are lovers of their fellowmen, such as that heroic monk who, by an impulse of sacrifice, brought to an end the gladiatorial conflicts, and St. Vincent de Paul, with his devotion to the slaves of the galleys; such as Howard, who reformed the prisons of Europe; and Elizabeth Fry, who carried the evangel to the prisoners. Some are rather deliverers and reformers and patriots and martrys, like John Huss and Hugh Latimer and Lord William Russell and that knight-errant, General Gordon. They kept their vigil carefully, and drank Christ's cup without complaining, and filled up what remained of his sufferings for the salvation of the world.

What the Lord's companions have suffered with him cannot be imagined by those of us who are of the outer circle. Theirs was not a passing feeling of kindly pity, nor the service of a few empty hours. They tasted the very pain of the victims; they surrendered the joys of life; they strained their reason in the keenness of their sympathy; they counted not their life dear in their devotion. The world's sorrow has so overcome pious and sensitive natures that in their measure they also have besought God that the cup might pass. This has been their trial, and this has been their strength. In this secret fellowship with the Man of Sorrows they were thoroughly cleansed from that unconscious callousness of heart which secures us against the appeal of suffering, and that secret taint of selfishness which, as by an instinct, safeguards our personal interests. It is in this travail of soul over the world that saints are formed and men reach the hights of holiness; it is in this shadow that pious hearts are led into the mysteries of the soul and into the secret things of God. The agonies of life grow luminous and beautiful to those who are taken apart and keep watch with the Lord.

It is not by the way of learning, but by the way of suffering, that we come unto knowledge, and he was right who, being asked how he came to know so much, pointed to the crucifix. They who sail on the surface of a summer sea gain no treasures, but they who, weighed down with sorrow, fear not to sound the depths, return to the light with pearls in their hands. One vigil in Gethsemane with Christ teaches more than can be heard in all the synagogues, than all we gather in our pleasant days. We learn at last to say, "Thy will be done," and to make our last surrender; and if it be that hearts pass through misery's presses, heaven is already bending over us in benediction, and the angels of God are making haste to be our ministers.

---

*Copyright, 1897, by John Watson, in the United States of America.

DRUMMOND AMONGST HIS STUDENTS

BY W. MACKINTOSH MACKAY

To young men Professor Drummond was always a very interesting personality. More than most in our day he had learned the secret of perpetual youth. He died at forty-six, yet to those who knew him he seemed little more than thirty. To the readers, then, of The Congregationalist these recollections of one of his old students may perhaps have a certain interest. A young man himself to the last, he had the privilege, such as few have today, of being "a young man's man."

My first near view of Drummond carries me back to a Saturday in a winter session in Glasgow in 1884-85. That was the year of his return from Africa, when he "awoke" from his journey in the Dark Continent to find himself famous. He seemed to bear his honors with a modesty approaching unconsciousness, but it was not till one day, when he took us all on a geological excursion to a limestone quarry some twenty miles from Glasgow, that we got to know him. What fossils we discovered that day I have quite forgotten; I only know we discovered a very live, brilliant specimen of nineteenth century man; we discovered Drummond. He was unlike all other professors we had known. These had hitherto been to us awful personages, and our interviews with them were few and fearful. Drummond disclosed himself to us as a young man like ourselves—almost a boy in spirit, indeed more youthful than many in his class.

If what Froude says is true, that there is "a certain lightness and elasticity about all men of genius," then Drummond had this quality above all men I have known. There was a starry radiance about him. In his company you could never feel dull.

I remember towards the end of the day we students had got hold of some empty trucks lying on a side piece of rail which led into the quarry. There was a pretty steep incline, and we thought it would be fine fun to have a run on these trucks. But would the professor like it? We looked silently to him. To our surprise the professor, with a solemn twinkle in his eye, said he would come in too! As we were deliciously dashing down the incline, the professor began to philosophize. What was it made this so glorious, while we had been somnolently riding in a railway train going at a far greater speed? One of the students suggested, "Because we are doing what is against the law." "No," said Drummond, "I think it is rather the sense of motion. In a train you are shut up, while here the wind is all about you, and you feel you are going. In that, I think the stagecoach beats the locomotive."

The "boyishness" of our new professor was still more discovered to us at the end of the session, when we had a holiday with him in the Island of Arran. It was his generous habit to take his class down every year to Brodick, and there at his own expense keep them for three days. Never were days more pleasant! At the end of the winter session we were longing for the country, and with the Arran hills for that country and Drummond for our guide we had a combination almost as near paradise as this earth can supply. It was our custom to spend the days in excursions to Goatfell, Glen Sannox and other points of geological interest in that geologically very rich locality. With the geology, of course, there was a good deal of fun intermixed. There is a tradition of one student sending a telegram to the college librarian, a rather stern gentleman, never known to joke, with the startling news, "The earth's crust is in capital condition."

Pleasant, however, as the days were, I think the nights with Drummond were almost pleasanter. After the evening meal it was our custom to meet in one of the largest of the houses in which we lodged and there spend the evening in talk of all kinds. It was then the professor fully opened himself out to us, and what a revelation that was! He was one of the most interesting conversationalists I have known. Not that he was specially brilliant, but his wonderful magnetic personality came into play. With his low, mellow, yet piercing tones he held you entranced. I remember one evening the conversation turned on mesmerism and the "occult science" then just coming into vogue. Drummond had been a great mesmerist as a student, and he told us some very striking stories of his "inhibitory power." One student he had so often mesmerized that he could influence him at a distance. On one occasion, however, his gift, he told us, had led him into a somewhat dangerous position, and had almost deprived the world of Natural Law in the Spiritual World. He had put a poker into the hand of the student with the "suggestion" that it was a gun. Then, pointing to a bunch of feathers on the floor, he said, "Shoot that bird!" The man raised the poker and shot. "It is not quite dead," said Drummond; "see! it is moving" (a gust of wind had rustled it). "Strike it with your gun." The man struck it with his gun. "Now," said Drummond, "shoot me!" The man pretended to shoot, and Drummond fell, but just as he was about to rise he saw to his horror the man above him with the poker raised in his hand and ready to strike him to the ground. He had just time to remove the "suggestion" by a swift word, or the consequences might have been serious.

Of course, stories like these roused in our minds a strong desire to see an experiment of his powers and we eagerly offered ourselves to his hands. But Drummond steadily refused. Without going the length of saying that such things were absolutely wrong, he seemed now, on the whole, to think it a questionable action to deprive any man (even in jest and for a moment) of the powers of will and self-determination. For in truth, behind all his geniality and humor, it was easy to see that there was a strong, deep current of serious thought and religious faith. It was that made the ripples on the surface so attractively beautiful. At this very moment he was beginning that grand movement among the students of Scotland which some think the most permanent work of his life.

After our first year we did not see much of Professor Drummond, as our curriculum carried us into other subjects and science was never again taken up. That was a thing many of us deeply regretted, for his lectures were a joy to listen to, partly from the beautiful Stevensonian English in which they were written, but chiefly from the unnamable attractiveness of the man himself.

We had, however, an occasional opportunity of meeting him at the college dinner table, at which in rotation with the other professors he presided from time to time. Our conversations with him there were always a stimulus. One of these I may recall, as it may interest lovers of literature. The talk had drifted on to the subject of the essay as a form of literary composition, and we were speaking of the leading English essayists of the century. "I regard," said Professor Drummond, "Mr. Hutton's essay on Goethe as the finest essay of the century."

"The finest of the century!" I said, with an incredulous look, as hosts of great names flashed through the mind.

"Yes," he replied. "I know it is a big thing to say, but I believe it to be true. If you have not read it you should, and you will find it, at all events, a splendid piece of work."

I did read it and found it, as he had said, "a splendid piece of work," though one might not go quite the length he had gone.

There was one thing I noticed in the essay which seemed to me true of the professor himself. Mr. Hutton refers there to a certain "demonic power" in Goethe—a kind of magnetic attractiveness which made him dominate all he came in contact with. The same, of course with a difference, seemed to me true of Drummond. He had a wonderful power of magnetizing you when in his company, so that you were ready to assent to things which when away from him you might be disposed to call in question. This I found was the opinion of others, too—especially of his power as a public speaker. "Drummond," said one to me, "mesmerizes his audiences"—a statement true and yet not the whole truth. I mean, if the "mesmerizing" was there, it was, I believe, quite unconscious on his part. It was his noble personality, interpenetrated as it was with a wonderful devotion to Christ, that thrilled his audiences and made him, in some respects, the most persuasive orator I have heard.

Drummond was evidently a great admirer of Mr. Hutton. Another of these essays which he recommended us to read was that on The Hard Church. A man, he said, might be a Broad Churchman or a High Churchman or a Low Churchman, and in any of these positions he could find points of contact with him, but "the Hard Church" was the worst of all heresies.

The last time I saw Professor Drummond was at a great missionary meeting in Glasgow. He was then still in perfect health, and his speech that night was a triumph of refined oratory. Without raising his voice in the least, his weird, piercing tones held the audience from start to finish like a tense wire, and you could have heard the proverbial pin fall to the floor. He was speaking of missions in the South Sea Islands, and his closing passage was a perfect example of his skill as a protagonist. It was the objection that the people of these islands were a decaying race, and not worth the labor that was spent upon them, that he was dealing with, but it was noticeable he did not argue the point; he simply made it the crown of his appeal.

"And people tell us," he said in his closing sentence, "that the race for whom our missionaries are thus giving their toil, their talents, their life, is a decaying race, and that in fifty years not one of them will be left—that I consider the noblest example of the sacrifice of Christ."

The words which Martineau has said of all great men are true in a very special sense of Drummond: "The noblest workers of the world leave behind them nothing so great as the image of themselves."

AT YALE DIVINITY

Whatever New Haven reserves in the way of scenic beauty for the larger throngs of visitors who attend the June Commencement festivities, it is certain that May hath its charms no less than the month of roses, and May bestows them with liberal hand upon the returning sons of Yale, who drop parochial cares for a day or two in order once more to salute their alma mater in divinity and to see another installment of embryonic ministers started on their professional career. The green was never more velvety, the great elms were never robed in such leafy loveliness, nor did the rich purple clusters of the wistaria ever droop more gracefully over the pleasant homes in which the university city abounds.

One did not have to be long in town to learn that Dr. Behrends had been there on the previous Sunday and in his address to the graduating class had stirred the waters of debate, not to say of dissent. Whether the Brooklyn divine fancied himself in a hostile theological environment, or whether he felt that the place and the occasion furnished a rare opportunity for another of those deliverances for which he has become famous of late, at all events he was in a decidedly vigorous mood and planted himself squarely on fighting ground which has the merit of being clear-cut and intelligible. The point of his address was such an interpretation of Harnack's recent utterances concerning the books of the New Testament as would put the German divine at odds with the higher critics and would therefore invalidate many of the conclusions which have come to be extensively accepted in scholarly circles. Harnack Dr. Behrends looked upon as a mighty protagonist in behalf of traditional views, and he urged his audience to take passage with "Roadmaster Harnack," "who," said Dr. Behrends, "has come along with his hammer, and struck the wheels of higher criticism and pronounced them cracked and weak."

We observed no great alacrity on the part of the thirty-four members of the graduating class, or, indeed, of the other members of the seminary or of the faculty themselves to engage passage with "Roadmaster Harnack," as Dr. Behrends interpreted him. It could hardly be expected that men who had been imbibing from Professors Porter, Curtis and Bacon views in regard to the Bible quite unlike those for which Dr. Behrends contended would throw away, even under the influence of his eloquence, so many results of their seminary course.

What Harnack holds, according to his recent book, was discriminatingly set forth by Professor Porter at the alumni dinner. The welcome which he received from the students and visitors and the eager attention with which his fifteen minute paper was followed showed what confidence is placed in him. He made it clear that while Harnack has in some particulars reasserted the traditional views respecting the authorship and date of the New Testament books, he in other particulars has reaffirmed the critical as over against the traditional view and has not ceased to be himself a higher critic. Best of all, Professor Porter emphasized the fact that the drift of the best modern criticism is to assure us that we have in the gospels and the epistles a trustworthy record of facts relating to the historic Jesus.

This Commencement marked the end of seventy-five years since Yale Seminary was established, and fittingly enough two or three departures from precedent were made. Instead of addresses from eight or ten members of the graduating class, only four were heard, each being allowed from twenty to thirty minutes. The class had tried to secure the total abolition of the custom of Commencement speaking. The faculty was not prepared to take this radical step, and the compromise seems to be a happy one. Certainly returning graduates are glad in this way to form an estimate of the caliber of the outgoing class, and to learn what they are thinking about. The four addresses in such totally different lines showed how broad is the training at Yale, and how conversant the men are with questions outside the beaten track of theological research. Mr. C. C. Merrill made a temperate plea for the right kind of revivals. Shepherd Knapp, Jr., characterized with remarkable acumen the portrayal of religion in current fiction. Mr. Austin Rice, a son of Rev. C. B. Rice, D. D., spoke on the minister as a patriot, while Mr. H. F. Rall, the Hooker fellowship man, treated the theory of evolution in its bearing upon the doctrine of a fall. He took issue with Dr. Lyman Abbott at several points, and his paper was mature and masterly. Then came the address to the graduates by Rev. Henry van Dyke, D. D. The exercises were held for the first time in the College Street Hall, once the house of worship of the College Street, now the Plymouth, Church.

Another innovation this year was the alumni dinner. It proved so successful that it will become a stated feature of future Commencements. Tables were spread in the chapel of the United Church and about 125 men gathered about them. The occasion was delightful from a social point of view, while the speaking, which lasted for about three hours, was uncommonly good. Rev. T. T. Munger, D. D., president of the Alumni Association, organized last year, presided, and unless he had confessed the fact that he never before served in such a capacity no one would have suspected that he was anything but a veteran. There was a proper amount of badinage and repartee, particularly between him and Dr. J. L. Jenkins, a classmate, who described the Yale Seminary of the fifties. Reminiscences, too, abounded. Professor Fisher and President Dwight called to mind the days of meager equipment and of a faculty consisting of two men. The personal peculiarities and the graces of character of such former lights in theology as Professors Taylor, Goodrich and Gibbs were charmingly set forth. There were ringing speeches, also, from Rev. F. R. Shipman on the work of the parish minister, Rev. E. M. Chapman on Yale's position in theology, Rev. L. H. Thayer on Congregational worship, and from Rev. J. M. Whiton, D.D., on social problems. An atmosphere of good cheer brooded over the assembly from start to finish. Next year it is expected that, the news of the change being in wider circulation, this alumni dinner, which the faculty generously provides, will be an even more striking feature of the week.

The year just closed witnessed the broadening of the work of Professor Blackman's department of sociology, who has not only taken the students to New York on an investigating trip, but set several of them at work examining the conditions in which the Italian and Polish Jew elements of New Haven's population live. Professor Bacon, the new occupant of the chair of New Testament Greek, is giving eminent satisfaction. There is a growing affiliation of the school with the university through the membership of the theologues in the university debating clubs, and in other organizations made up of representatives of all departments in the university.

Twenty-six of the thirty-four graduates expect to become Congregational ministers, several already having accepted positions in New England, while five or six go West, one, in particular, to a conspicuously self-denying field in a mining region. Several men return for post-graduate work and perhaps half a dozen are still awaiting calls.

Something of the stability of Yale Seminary seems to communicate itself to the life of the local Congregational churches. How many cities can boast pastorates of the length of Drs. Meserve, Smyth, Munger, McLane, Twitchell and Mutch? It is reassuring in these days of frequent changes to find on returning to New Haven these popular and esteemed pastors at their old posts. Signs of growth, to be sure, are not lacking, as for instance the handsome new chapel in which the Plymouth Church now worships, and the thriving Congregational Club. And just as Yale Seminary moves on quietly year after year, avoiding controversy but standing for freedom and the truth, so the strong sisterhood of churches that surround this ancient school of the prophets is maintaining and extending the same hisoric faith. H. A. B.

ACROSS THE BORDER

Liberal Triumphs

The Liberal cup of rejoicing should be more than full. The Dominion by-elections brought large gains to the government, while the two provincial elections just held leave little else to be desired. Three weeks ago the Conservative party in Nova Scotia was almost annihilated, only four members being returned to the legislature. May 11 Quebec wheeled into line, when a Liberal majority of thirty took the place of a minority of twenty. Such verdicts are unprecedented in Canada. The Dominion Government and six of the provincial legislatures are now of the same political complexion, and with British Columbia captured the Liberal triumph will be complete from Atlantic to Pacific.

Mgr. Merry del Val

The widespread interest in the coming of the papal ablegate, Mgr. Merry del Val, has largely subsided, and outside of Roman Catholic circles little notice is taken of his presence. Protestant and Catholic alike are pleased with his dignified and courteous demeanor, but at the same time are declaring by their votes that the Manitoba school settlement is finality. Mgr. del Val, no doubt, must see that though cordially welcomed there is yet no disposition to brook any papal or foreign dictation in school affairs.

Diamond Jubilee

Canada will join with England in the observance of the diamond jubilee of Victoria's reign. The annual denominational gatherings are arranging for a jubilee session, and already preparations are being made for a general observance of the occasion. Various schemes have been mooted for a lasting commemoration of the year, and the one likely to be attempted is the Victorian Order of Nurses. Lady Aberdeen is the originator, and the order, if practicable, will be a great boon, placing trained nurses in all the municipalities of the Dominion.

The Prohibition Cause

The temperance agitation goes on. The Ontario legislature, as hinted in a former letter, has further amended the license law by the adoption of several stringent and restrictive clauses. Nova Scotia since that time has practically prohibited the retail of intoxicating liquors, and Manitoba, through the legislature, has reaffirmed her allegiance to prohibition principles. Now all eyes are turned to the Dominion plebiscite, and so alarming is the situation to the liquor men that a strong deputation waited on Premier Laurier May 13, and urged that the question of direct taxation for loss of revenue be also submitted to the electors.

Sunday Cars in Toronto

The vote on this question was taken May 15, and this time the electors decided in favor of cars by a majority of over 500. The result is a surprise all round. Great meetings were held by both parties, the final one of the opponents packing Morsey Music Hall with an audience of nearly 6,000 persons. It is now in order to inquire into the reasons of this unexpected result, and some causes that have contributed to the change will not be hard to find. It was the first vote under the city manhood franchise act, and the promise of an extra day's work each week no doubt greatly influenced hundreds of the unemployed. Toronto can no longer be quoted as a city without Sunday cars. J. P. G.

The Home

IN MAY

Grief was my master yesternight;
Tomorrow I may grieve again;
But now along the windy plain
The clouds have taken flight.

The sowers in the furrows go;
The lusty river brimmeth on;
The curtains from the hills are gone;
The leaves are out; and lo,

The silvery distance of the day,
The light horizons, and between
The glory of the perfect green,
The tumult of the May.

The roads far off are towered with dust;
The cherry-blooms are swept and thinned;
In yonder swaying elms the wind
Is charging gust on gust.

But here there is no stir at all;
The ministers of sun and shadow
Hoard all the perfumes of the meadow
Behind a grassy wall.

An infant rivulet wind-free
Adown the guarded hollow sets,
Over whose brink the violets
Are nodding peacefully.

From pool to pool it prattles by;
The flashing swallows dip and pass
Above the tufted marish grass,
And here at rest am I.

I care not for the old distress,
Nor if tomorrow bid me moan;
Today is mine and I have known
An hour of blessedness.

—Archibald Lampman.

In a company of a dozen men and women, recently gathered by chance in a hotel parlor, there was only one who had not crossed the ocean, yet he had seen more of America than all of the others put together, and he was not one whit behind them in general intelligence and culture. Two or three had the contemptuous tone in talking of America which is often affected by European travelers, and which grates upon the ears of a true home-lover. The European trip is valuable in the complete rest and change which it gives to the overworked and nervously tired, and in its educative influence through comparison between our new land and the older countries with a great past behind them. But when its effect is to teach people to despise their home, then it has defeated its own end. At this season of the year, when half the world seems to be going abroad, it is well to remember that there are some things worth seeing on this side of the water.

Treatment of woman is generally supposed to mark the difference between the gentleman and the boor, but the severest test of courtesy and character comes with a terrible emergency. A fire, a shipwreck, a railroad accident are sure to reveal innate selfishness or to prove capacity for unhesitating sacrifice. Stories told by the survivors of the Paris fire, concerning the shameful and cowardly conduct of several men in fashionable circles, who kicked and maltreated women in the most brutal manner, make us almost despair of the ennobling power of long social training. The well-known Parisian, who was seen slashing right and left with a stick at ladies standing in his way, finds an effective contrast in the noble magnanimity of the unfortunate Duchesse d'Alencon, who remained at her table in order to allow her visitors to escape first. According to all accounts the men who showed the greatest heroism belonged to the humble classes. The praise of Paris for unselfish bravery is now being given to the workmen of the neighborhood and to the personal attendants of the victims.

There was a suggestive sight at the last communion service in a certain metropolitan church when a gray-haired man, apparently upwards of sixty years old, stood among those who were admitted to membership on confession of faith. He knelt on receiving the rite of baptism, and those sitting near observed traces of unusual emotion on the man's face. When the candidates to be received by letter came forward he was joined by his wife, and one could not help conjecturing whether this act of consecration on his part was the fruit of her prayers. Or had some common household sorrow brought them thus together? And at how many other altars, that Sunday morning, were similar scenes being enacted? We like to think that a wife's beautiful life, no less than her prayers, is a powerful magnet in all such cases. The multitudes of women who suffer on account of spiritual estrangement from their husbands will be comforted by Harriet Prescott Spofford's latest book, An Inheritance. There is something more than an artistic literary touch in the way Dr. Donner's spiritual perceptions are awakened. The whole experience is a fresh illustration of the truth that if Christ be lifted up in an individual life he will draw others unto him.

SENSITIVENESS ALIAS SELFISHNESS

BY ALICE HAMILTON RICH

How often we hear the expression, "I am so sensitive," when, if the truth were told, it would be, "I am so selfish." By sensitiveness is usually meant more than usual refinement. This may be true if we substitute refinement of selfishness, or inordinate self-consciousness. More often it is the woman, still oftener the young girl, who prides herself on her sensitiveness. If it is the little child, the foolish mother speaks of this quality as something of which to be proud, and because of which her child at home, in school, in society ought to receive special consideration. This is either given or not given as teacher or friends see fit. If it is given the child grows more selfish. Friends still politely call it sensitiveness as years are added to the young life. If mothers could but realize what obstacles to success and happiness they are themselves placing before their children, they would help their children to be sensible and unselfish, the two qualities which will, if planted early and closely to the sensitive plant, choke out the weed, for it is a weed.

While selfishness is at the root of sensitiveness, self-consciousness is often the immediate cause. The one who most fully forgets self is least likely to see reasons to be sensitive. It is really an inordinate appreciation of self which makes one live in the look-out tower and invite the shafts of the enemy and bare his bosom to the smiter. If a woman busies herself in home, church or philanthropic work, if a man, when not occupied with business duties, interests himself in his own children and becomes absorbed in some recreative study, there will be little time to give thought to unpleasant criticisms, still less for the imaginary slights of neighbors and friends. The real gentleman and lady are unconscious of self, and hence perfectly at ease. The true man and woman are unselfishly desirous to be helpful to others. Not that they may receive their own with usury, but because the heart of the giver is overflowing with a wealth of blessed helpfulness which must find objects and places for its expression and overflow.

The so-called sensitive woman unites with the church, either taking upon herself the duties of membership for the first time or coming from a sister church. Usually such an one is pleased with the immediate welcome accorded to her. In a general way she is invited to the meetings of the church. Very soon some members of the various women's societies ask her to join them. Perhaps she comes once or twice and is cordially welcomed. Only a few of the busy workers find time to call upon her. She is sensitive, thinks she is not properly looked after, ceases to put herself in the way of the working women, making no place for herself in the church work, remains at home and is soon really and truly forgotten.

Whose fault is it? No doubt partially that of the older members, but more truly her own. She was given an opportunity to become acquainted with her sisters in the church and to make herself a power, if not an aggressive element, in church work. But, as she says, she was too sensitive to push herself where she was not wanted. Most likely her sensitiveness was pure selfishness and an exaggerated estimate of her own value. She was wanted. There was a place waiting for her, as for any one who earnestly seeks after it, but busy women have no time to run after those who will not meet them half way. The woman who is so sensitive she needs coaxing is too sensitive for any use. She may as well step aside into her small corner to brood at her own sweet will over fancied slights, while the women who put themselves into the working circle widen and broaden their influence as the circle grows larger and larger, until the influence which they exert is truly marvelous.

One often hears women say, "I cannot become an officer in a society or a prominent member of a committee I am so sensitive about what others say of me."

Which is the more important, the needed work or the possible criticism of the worker? Is it sensitiveness or a selfish putting of one's own ease and comfort paramount to the good which needs to be done? If in the judgment of wise women one is suited for a special work, why not accept the work, do one's best, and take no anxious thought of what "they say." Very likely mistakes will be made, criticisms be given, but why should you and I keep ourselves apart from the workers lest we be so unfortunate as to make mistakes or be misunderstood? After all, each one of us as individuals is of little consequence save to ourselves and immediate friends, and doubtless less is said of us than we in our egotism think.

I would not give the impression that I do not appreciate natural timidity and that sweetness and gentleness which are most beautiful in woman, that I do not believe in a refined sensitiveness, which is like the delicate coloring in spring blossoms. A ruthless gathering of these flowers by rude hands would be a symbol of the rough carelessness of some men and women in their contact with these frail blossoms of humanity. It is not of such I am writing. Not all sensitive natures are selfish. Moreover, there is a sensitiveness to the good, a sensitive shrinking from evil and a sensitive spiritual insight which cannot be overestimated. One's nature cannot be too closely in touch with the thoughts of God as expressed in the natural world or unexpressed, but nevertheless understood by those who are sensitively alive to the forces of the spiritual world. Let us care less for what others think or say of us, be less self-conscious and more sensitive to divine influences, more ready to be used in God's way, not our way, in the service of humanity.

BICYCLE PHILOSOPHY

BY HELEN AINSLIE SMITH

No sermon out of church ever did a certain person more good than her first bicycle lesson, taken figuratively.

"It won't do, ma'am, to think you know anything about it when you don't. Now, you don't know the first thing. The sooner you realize that and leave it all to me the better. There! You must get on this way. No, I didn't say that way. You'll have to pay strict attention to what I do say or you'll only hurt yourself and break your machine."

How truly spoken! Of course the only intelligent thing for a learner to do is quietly to listen to all the different directions that must be applied at once and altogether for the mount. Just as soon as that very simple act of pupilage was performed the mount was mastered.

"That's wonderful, ma'am. Why, I'll be four days sometimes getting ladies to leave off trying to have their own way and just do what I tell them."

Heaven ha' mercy! Are not most of us wasting our time and that of our teachers by the same stubborn density to the day of our death?

"You must mount yourself to a good, comfortable seat in your saddle. Can't ride well if you are uncomfortable. Must have a firm, solid seat, too; got to feel as if you belonged there, sort of as if you'd never want to get off and couldn't very easily be shook off. Don't start till you have a good, easy seat, from which you can straighten your backbone and square your shoulders as if you knew you were all right. That's where you get your power, that's how to get your poise and keep your balance."

"Does the man know what great law of life he is laying down to me?" wondered the humbled pupil. "Have not I been sitting on the ragged edge of endeavor all my life until this morning? I believe I have."

"Now pedal," continued the instructor. "Sit right up to get the good of it and pedal for all you are worth, but slowly to begin with. Pedal right on! Just remember that you must keep the pedals going as long as you're riding. Beginners forget that. They see a stone, or a rise of ground, or a rut, or some one coming, and they stop pedaling to think what to do, but you must just keep on and pick out your safest course as you go."

It seemed to the pupil that this was one of the most profound utterances she had ever heard and that all the mistakes of her life had come from an instinct to stop pedaling at sight of a stone in the road. But the greatest lesson was yet to come.

"Now, guide yourself. You'll have to do it sooner or later, and you'd better begin at once. Steering is nice work. The great points are to know where you want to go and to keep your hands easy on the handle bars—unless you're going up hill. Then pull hard."

The contrariness of human nature seems to impel all novices to put their greatest effort where it is least needed. The bicycle learner will grasp the handle bars for dear life and forget to pedal.

"Never saw a beginner yet who didn't try to hold herself on by the handles, as if the machine had no seat and she fancied that she was a professional acrobat. The handles are only to guide the wheel, not necessary even for that when you learn how to do without them, yet there you are, ma'am, clutching your handles like grim death, straining the muscles of your arms, all doubled over, too, and twitching the machine every which way. Take hold hard and you can't help from running into a barn, but keep sitting up, maintaining your balance, steering with easy hands, and you can often find and follow a hair line of smoothness through a rough road."

"Young man, you are my Socrates," commented the pupil to herself. "What good intentions gone wrong have I to lament from doubling over the handle bars with a death-like grip. How often have good plans miscarried because the hands which should have guided lightly closed heavily and twitched things every which way, wasting the strength on the steering that should have been used in pedaling. How many"—

"When you've got your seat, your pedaling, your poise and a light hand on the handles, there's just one thing more before you're ready to learn to ride."

"Only to learn!"

"Yes, ma'am, just ready really to begin to do whatever you want to on the machine. That one thing is where to look. Even scorchers have to keep their heads up enough to look ahead. But lady and gentlemen riders always want to sit up straight and easily and look about them. You must not keep your eyes on the ground immediately in front. As sure as you do, just so sure you'll go over, unless you're an expert. Then you can do 'most anything, for the fun of it."

"But one must see where one is going."

"You see all the better if you don't look too hard. It's one of the beauties of bicycling that you must have your head up, seeing your road while you are looking forward, seeing the country, taking everything in—including the fresh air. You can turn this way and that, from side to side, but you can't afford to look back when you're beginning, and never much any way. You can't afford to be afraid, either. You can shoot ahead, you can slip through a small space, and you can always get off and stand still in a tight place, but you've got to take in the situation and keep cool. You see, ma'am, first it's all a matter of learning how in a few details, keeping your balance, guiding yourself quickly and easily, and pedaling right along, fast or slowly, till you want to get off. That's a detail again, but you'll break your neck if you don't know just how and do it lightly."

The teacher "dismounted" the pupil. The face she saw as she thanked him made her wonder if, after all, the philosophy were not his, and he merely happened to be applying it in a "bicycle academy" at the time for practical purposes.

DOG'S-TOOTH VIOLET

Of all the glad surprises of the spring—
Each year renewed, yet each year new again—
None sends a quicker thrill through every vein
None speeds the fancy on a swifter wing,
Than the first vision of thy loveliness,
O, lily of the mead, stray child of June!
Dear runaway, thy sisters will come soon;
Meanwhile I take thee to my heart. Confess
Thy pranks. Why didst thou steal the violet's name?
Why stain thy pale green robe? Didst thou surmise
Feigned name or motley cloak could e'er disguise
Thy beauty? Lily art thou just the same.
Yet little heart have I thy masque to blame:
I love thee; thou art here: let that suffice.

—Emily Shaw Forman.

THE PASSING OF THE OLD-TIME DARKY

BY EDNAH P. CLARKE

The "Juggernaut of Progress" is fast crushing beneath its uncompromising wheels the old-time Southern Negro. They are dying out, those darkies of the old régime, born and brought up in slavery, bound in heart as well as body to the master who owned them, feeling themselves identified in love and loyalty with the family interests and the family pride. The new generation, with liberty of franchise and a sensible public school education, in spite of the absence of the close intercourse with and the refining influence of the white race, which were possible in former times, may in time work out its own salvation. The possibilities of the future for the Negro are yet unknown; he has made many strides forward in these thirty years, but many phases of the transition stage are so unpleasant one turns to any representative of the vielle noblesse with interest and delight. Fortunately, some record of them, written with tender and discriminating touch, is being preserved in literature; but one needs to come in contact with the genuine article in order to realize fully the loving devotion, the dignity of servitude, the real delicacy of feeling and of manner hidden under the dusky skin and grizzled hair of the former slave.

The first time I visited my mother's home in Virginia, my grandmother's coachman—then a man over eighty, who lived in the county poorhouse—walked ten miles to catch a glimpse of "Miss Fanny's gran'-chile," and presented me with a basket of chinquapins he had scoured the woods to find, telling me, with tears in his eyes, that he had nothing else to give me as a "comemoration" of him. And the prettiest compliment I ever received was from an old servant who announced my arrival to a friend: "Dey's a young laidy down stairs toh see you, Miss Louise. I disremembers her name, but she's one of de Lawd's people."

Of course the old Negroes are at times exasperatingly inconsequential. A friend of mine, seeking a genuine "plantation" player of the banjo, consulted one of the wrinkled "aunties," who in quilted hoods and gay plaid shawls, with splint baskets containing "yarbs" and a few "aigs" to sell, crouch all day outside the market-house in Washington.

"Lor' honey!" said the woman addressed, "I knows de berry man you wants. He can pick de banjo, pat jubba, clack de bones, ebry sorter music you ebber heared."

"That's what I want," said my friend. "Where can I find him?"

"He's de berry man," went on the old woman, "dey nebber wus such a nigger fo' music."

"Well, tell me his address," insisted the questioner, opening her note-book.

"Lor' honey!" was the response, "he's daid."

And, again, they are despairingly indefinite. I penetrated recently into the kitchen of a Baltimore cousin to learn from the ancient sibyl presiding over its mysteries the recipe for a certain delectable pudding. Mary, highly flattered and beaming with smiles, laid down her dishcloth and began the directions: "I teks some milk"—

"How much milk, Mary?"

"O, jes' as I happens to have, Miss Anne, sometimes mo', sometimes less. An' I teks some cawn starch"—

"How much corn starch, Mary?"

"O, I uses my jedgment, Miss Anne, I uses my jedgment."

It is needless to say that, "jedgment" not being a measure obtainable at the tinner's, Mary's pudding is still unachieved. But logic and accuracy are matters of accident. I can hire many a modern cook who can pore over Miss Parloa and weigh and measure and reason, but the nameless deliciousness that issues from Mary's hands is as impossible for her to attain as is the devotion to the family interests and identity with the family joys and sorrows that fills the heart of my cousin's servant.

Another friend of mine is the happy possessor of a real Virginia "mammy," who measures scarcely five feet, even with the added inches of her gorgeous Madras handkerchief, and whose face is as deeply lined and as glistening brown as an old Chinese bronze. To see her surrounded by the dimpled blonde babies, hushing their sorrows and cultivating their manners, is a picture not soon to be forgotten.

She has no use for the modern darky, with his arrogance and impudence, and says, tossing her turbanded head very high: "Ise allus got on wid de white folks. My ole missess she sez toh me, 'Matilda, be honorable and justifiable an' stan' on yo' indignity.' De trouble wid dis brack trash is dey ain't got no indignity to stan' on."

Perhaps another old mammy summed up the pretension and unrest of the present generation most conclusively when she said: "De matter wid dese free-born niggers is deys so momentary."

THE "PUTTERING" WOMAN

A capital pen portrait of this unhappy individual, by Frederick Stanley Root, recently appeared in Good Housekeeping. The truthfulness of the sketch and its moral will at once be recognized in the extract which we quote:

> To "putter," which is essentially the derivative from "potter," is a word hard to define and easy to understand. It means to busy one's self about trifles and to work to little purpose. It means a vast expenditure of nervous energy on matters that might be lightly dismissed or relegated to others, and the consequent failure to gain "power through repose," or culture through the elevation and concentration of the life. And one of the saddest sights in the world is to see a woman occupied strenuously with innumerable and self-imposed household nothings!
>
> I do not of course refer to "the trivial round, the common task" of duties inseparable from household management, the rearing and training of children, the economics of the commissariat and the like. Women of capacity discharge such duties with promptitude and thoroughness and still find leisure for church and social obligations, for the writing and reading of books, for healthful recreation. I mean rather by "puttering" the over-emphasis which is put upon trifles of little or no importance, trifles that may as well be left to servants, the exaggeration of household details, the gradual contraction of a woman's life to such pettiness of environment as will ultimately dwarf the higher powers and faculties. And this baneful tendency is not confined to any particular class of women. It is not a question of poverty or wealth whether a woman shall become a mere household "putterer." It is a question of intelligence, of will power, of management, of innate capacity. Not infrequently, as pastor of a church, I have found that the women in my congregation who read the best books, lend a helping hand to philanthropy, respond to appeals for workers and keep abreast with their husbands in knowledge of current and weighty topics are those having but one servant and from two to three children.
>
> The "puttering" woman may possess excellent qualities of mind and heart, but they are in danger of being swallowed up in the sea of the infinitesimal. She comes down to breakfast forecasting muddy coffee; she goes to bed at night anxiously debating whether the raspberry jam was stored away on the second or third shelf of the pantry. Now it is worry as to what shall be done with an accumulating mass of daily papers, which the ragman will jump at the chance of calling for regularly once a week. Now it is a bad quarter of an hour because she decided to let Jack go to school without his reefer. Now there is a crease of irritation in the white forehead if the servants are five minutes late in putting on the dinner, and the habit of exaggerated concern is so fixed that if her husband fails to arrive promptly from the office he must surely be mangled by a cable car or overcome by apoplexy.
>
> The "puttering" woman is never able to get away from herself. In the maelstrom of the self-centered she cares less and less for social enjoyment and recreation, for books and reading, because her whole mind is taken up with determining whether the family ark of a trunk shall go up garret or remain in the back entry, or a hundred trifles of equal moment. Poor soul! Her originally fine nature may be warped or twisted by this failing until the good housewife grows unbearably petulant and rasping. . . .
>
> There is a family likeness in all portraits of the "puttering" woman. Her type is one of the most unvarying in all creation. But the encouragement of the situation is that the present athletic, out-of-door life for girls is building up a race of young women who, when married, will begin their careers with a reserve fund of strength, energy, buoyancy and accumulated power to which their mothers were strangers. And the mothers themselves who "putter" may win back much that has been lost of larger interest in larger worlds by resolutely building a new physical life on the modern scientific basis of physical culture.

A NICE DISCRIMINATION

Three-year-old Richard snuggles down in his nurse's arms for a five-minutes' rock every evening after being undressed, while she sings to him his favorite hymn:

Blest be the tie that binds.

About Christmas time the little fellow received from a young cousin of his, who is in Rome this winter, the gift of a Roman necktie or scarf. After wearing it about his neck for a time he cheerfully complied with the suggestion that he should take it up stairs and put it away to keep it nicely until he should be a bigger boy. On the way, however, it floated off from the little shoulders and fell to the floor. When his attention was called to the fact that his new tie seemed neglected there, the baby answered, with a manner of lofty indifference, "Well, Jenuie, that isn't the tie that binds!'"

Closet and Altar

Humility teaches us the necessity of prayer, fervor gives it flight and endurance, trust provides it with an immovable foundation.

Two things are urgently required of us modern Christians—to see Jesus truly and to show him just as we see him. Try to get a fresh sight of Jesus, to behold him "with open face." Then what you have seen show with absolute sincerity, not hiding your light for fear of men who are religious but not Christian. Clear vision, heroic, uncalculating sincerity, how scarce in these times of time-serving! And what power goes with them!—A. B. Bruce.

So search we, Lord, not for some rare
  Far visions of thy face;
In present loves and joys and toils
  Let us thy presence trace;
In brave contentions for the right,
  Forgivenesses of wrong,
The fears that hope, the tears that smile,
  Weak lives by faith made strong.
—Denis Wortman.

Only let us love God and then nature will compass us about like a cloud of divine witnesses, and all influences from the earth and things on the earth will be the ministers of God to do us good. The breezes will whisper our souls into peace and purity, and delight in beautiful scenery will pass into sympathy with that indwelling, though unseen, Spirit of whose presence beauty is everywhere the manifestation—faint, indeed, because earthly. Then not only will the stars shed upon us light, but from on high they will rain down thoughts to make us noble. God dwells in all things, and, felt in a man's heart, he is then to be felt in everything else. Only let there be God within us and then everything outside us will become a godlike help.—Euthanasy.

To live, to live, is life's great joy—to feel
  The living God within—to look abroad,
And, in the beauty that all things reveal,
  Still meet the living God.
—Robert Leighton.

Father of all, graciously look upon us as a family now seeking to behold thy face. As the morning light is thine, so the blessing of the whole day must come from thee. Guide us with thine eye, we humbly pray thee, and give thine angels charge concerning us, lest at any time we dash our foot against a stone. Above all, grant unto us large gifts of the Holy Spirit. We do not pray for bread alone, but for the bread of life that cometh down from heaven. For one another and for our absent friends we would fervently pray. Bless the old and the young, and with the sick and the fainting be thou very gentle. Watch over those who are full of care and speak comfortably to those to whom wearisome days and nights are appointed. Sanctify our successes, and may our failures teach us that it is not in man to direct his way. Go with the child to school and with the man to business, and may those who stay at home feel themselves under the constant care of God. The Lord undertake for every one of us according to our heart's necessity and multiply unto us his grace, so that beyond all our want there may be an overflow of divine love. Amen.

Mothers in Council

CHILDREN'S SERMONS

In my childhood I lived in the country and regularly attended church with my parents at a small town three miles distant. No matter what was the weather Old Tom was hitched to the wagon or pung at nine o'clock in the morning and the five members of our family made their way toward that old, white-washed shrine where my Presbyterian grandfather had ministered for upwards of half a century. Two long sermons followed, with intermission between for Sunday school and luncheon. We usually reached home at about four o'clock.

When my parents removed from this neighborhood I was ten years old, but I have to confess that of some 500 sermons which I must have heard not one sentence remains in my memory. I remember well the arrangement of the church, faces which I saw there, the vestibule where we ate our lunch, and, best of all, dear old Jemima and Nancy Henderson, maiden ladies, who often gave us children caraway cookies when we visited their pump to quench the thirst provoked by our dry lunch. I believe, however, that a subtle, helpful influence came to me from these sermons, although at the time I was inattentive and forgetful. When I became a minister I resolved that in my preaching I would never ignore the children of my congregation. This thought has led me to the practice of giving them a talk, five to eight minutes in length, just before the hymn which precedes the sermon. Here is a recent one which will serve as an example:

"In Charlestown, Mass., is an old United States navy yard where they used to build war ships and mend those which had been injured. At one side of this navy yard are rows of great black cannons and piles of round cannon balls. Near the cannon is a piece of ground as large as our churchyard, covered with anchors taken from old vessels. Most of you know that an anchor is a large piece of iron with a double hook at one end and a ring and cross-bar at the other, which is fastened to a chain and let down from the ship to the bottom of the ocean. The anchor hooks into the ground and holds the ship, so that neither wind nor wave can move it. Every ship has an anchor. No captain would dare to sail without one. I remember of traveling on the ocean once three days and three nights, and of waking the last morning to find that our ship had stopped. I looked out through my little round window and saw, a mile beyond the sparkling water, a beautiful country, whose hills were covered with pine forests. When I had dressed and come on deck, I learned that the ship had cast anchor and was waiting for the tide to cover the bar at the mouth of the St. John's River, up which we were to sail. An anchor is not used all the time, of course, for ships are made to sail and anchors are made to keep ships from going. But it is used whenever the ship loses its way in the fog or darkness, or when wind or tide bears it toward a dangerous place.

"Now each of us is somewhat like a ship, for we are sailing on the sea of eternity toward the heavenly haven, and many a storm lies between us and the home port. But that we may be prepared in time of danger God has given to each of us the hope of heaven, 'which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast.' That is, whenever we are uncertain which way to go, we can just let down this anchor of the soul, and stop where we are until the mist or darkness has rolled away. And when disappointments drive us back on our course, or temptations hurry us on toward shipwreck, we can use this anchor which Jesus has given to hold us in the right place until the danger is past. My dear little friends, when you lose your way, or when sin drives you toward danger, remember your soul's anchor, cast it, and trust God that it will hold you safe until the eternal sunshine lights up once again the way to that heavenly haven, where the anchor of hope will be needed no more, because there your voyage will end."

Another Sunday I showed the children a dragon-fly, walking-stick and spider, each specimen being mounted on a large white card. I stated numerous facts concerning their powers of locomotion, strength, dexterity, sight, hearing and instincts, making it quite evident that they were, in many respects, our physical superiors. Then I asked why God cares for us more than for his creatures when many of them can go where we cannot, can travel faster, see, hear and smell better, are stronger and larger, build perfectly without rule or compass and know without studying what we get with great labor from books? It was then easy to show them that man with his superior mental powers and a heart susceptible to the love of Jesus is above animals and just below angels, and that the only way to please God is to strive with all our might every day to be wise and good.

Each New Testament parable is the nucleus for a good sermon for children. Many doctrinal texts, if rightly presented, will interest the youngest child as much as any piece of narrative. I took the promise, "Them that honor me I will honor," and put it on the blackboard. In response to my questions the children gave me the simple analysis as fast as I could record it. The fables of Æsop and La Fontaine also furnish useful material. Their teaching is often identical with that of some familiar Scripture, e. g., The One-Eyed Deer and "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." The Thief and His Mother goes helpfully with "Train up a child in the way he should go," etc.

The preparation of a children's sermon requires as much care as the ordinary sermon or even more, for boys and girls are more critical than adults. It is a help to have them come forward to the front pews. I always ask this when I illustrate my talk with objects. H. N. P.

A MISTAKEN MOTHER

"Why don't you let Helen do that sewing?" I said to my wearied friend, who was nodding over a bit of mending. "Surely she knows how to mend a plain garment like that."

"She never has learned to sew," was the reply. "She is always busy with her books, and I hate to worry her. She will have a hard enough time by and by. I mean to make her life as easy as I can while she is with me."

It was so with the dish-washing, the bed-making, the cooking. "Helen doesn't like to do this, that or the other. She is out with her friends. She is reading. She is tired. I don't like to make a drudge of her. I don't wish her hands to look like mine." These were some of the sayings of the mistaken mother as apologies for the fact that Helen never helped in household affairs though there was no servant. Poor Helen! I pitied her from my heart. She was learning algebra and geometry, French and Latin, but was deprived of the sweet lessons in loving help, self-denial, womanliness and thoughtfulness that only a mother can give in the school of home. Helen was listless, idle, thoughtless, except in school, dependent upon others for the service that every woman should know how to perform.

What of Helen's future home and the husband whose life she would largely make or mar? What of the possible children whose teacher and trainer she must be? The untrained girl finds endless difficulties before her when she is at last separated from the mother who has waited on her from babyhood. She has no skill, no deftness, no pleasure in duties for which she is utterly unprepared. The smallest service seems irksome. A slender income seems a great misfortune. She envies the ease of the rich, who can buy the service of trained helpers. She is deprived of the joy of development, of self-mastery, of power in a domain which especially belongs to her.

I know a home in which from their earliest years the girls and boys are taught to work through play. Bringing in wood for mamma is turned into a game. Washing the dishes is the foundation for a story. Baking day sees little cooks with little kneading boards and little pans and tiny cakes and loaves for dolls and baby tea parties. The mother is a child with her children, a girl with her young girls, a comrade with her boys, but always life is a merry school with an unselfish thought for the responsible life in the great grown-up world. M. F. B.

CHAT ABOUT WOMEN

To the short list of women who have received the degree of Doctor of Laws has been added the name of Lady Aberdeen. She is the first woman in Canada who has been thus honored.

The recent death of Mrs. Sarah Richards of Milton, N. Y., at the age of eighty-six leaves only two widows of soldiers of the American Revolution on the Government pension rolls.

Harriet Beecher Stowe's children protest against a bronze statue of their mother. Her son, Rev. C. E. Stowe, suggests a scholarship at Hampton, Fisk or Tuskegee, as a more fitting memorial.

The Baroness Bertha von Bulow has been warmly welcomed by the kindergartners in America. She comes to this country in the interests of the free kindergarten work and has been addressing, in English, meetings of the New York Kindergarten Association.

It is a sign of the times that Harper's Bazar has established, as a regular feature, a department called Club Women and Club Work. Almost every newspaper one picks up bears witness to the enormous growth of women's organizations and the wide and varied range of their activities.

A Paris paper reports that the Countess Castellane née Anna Gould has decided to give, in memory of her mother, $200,000 for a building to be devoted to various charitable purposes. If her benevolent impulse is carried out entertainments like the Charity Bazar would no longer need to be held in a temporary structure, and the repetition of the recent horrible tragedy in Paris would be prevented.

Georgia women have succeeded in making their room one of the most artistic and attractive in the Woman's Building at the Tennessee Exposition. A studio scheme was decided upon, and the decorations and furnishings and general arrangements were in the care of Mrs. J. Wells Champney, who has drawn upon her knowledge of unique and beautiful effects in the celebrated studios of Paris and New York.

Dr. S. W. Abbott, secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Health, considers it a significant fact that a uniform reduction in the rate of women's death from consumption began five years ago—about the time when women began to ride the bicycle extensively. Another physician, who was an enthusiastic advocate of bicycle riding for growing girls and women when the exercise first became popular, says that now his opinion is the same with one qualification—moderation.

A Boston girl, Miss Harriet A. Boyd, is winning praise in Greece for her courage, skill and executive ability in caring for the wounded soldiers at Volo. She is a graduate of Smith College of the class of '92 and has for the past year been studying at the American Archæological School at Athens. On the day after the outbreak of hostilities Miss Boyd offered her services as nurse and was gratefully accepted by the queen. The same evening she left for the front and has bravely remained at her post amid dangers and difficulties and constant panics.

The Conversation Corner

THE place of honor is given this week to a little boy's letter about a remarkable dog:

Andover, Mass.

Dear Mr. Martin: When my mother came from Vermont on the car, the conductor told her to watch for a dog at Wentworth, N. H., who would take the mail. I wrote to the postmaster to find out about him. This is his answer: "The dog that you speak of is still here. He gets the mail sometimes, but not so often as he used to. Every day when the whistle blew the dog would start from the village and go to the station by the time the mail was thrown from the car. The dog never made any mistake about the train. He would only start when the mail train whistled. The dog is about four years old. He is part mastiff and part St. Bernard."

Allan McC.

This letter is interesting, as showing not only the intelligence of the dog, but the intelligence and inquisitiveness of the boy, who wanted to know all about it, and by his perseverance (and the courtesy of the New Hampshire postmaster) succeeded. That boy has the genuine Corner spirit; if he ever comes to Boston I hope he will call on me. Better yet, if he is a bicyclist, as such energetic boys are apt to be, let him take a spin some day to my home—then he could see the Cabinet, Kitty Clover and all!

Dear Mr. Martin: I found the "Blackberry Girl" in Town's Third Reader. I was much interested in "A white old hen with yellow legs," and papa cut it out and put it in his scrap-book. As I have no bicycle I cannot take a spin on it as you ask me to do. I should like to see Kitty Clover. My kitty's name is Alicia. Some day you may see a tall man walk into your office with a parcel in his hand for Mr. Martin. The parcel is my picture.

Fannie B.

That parcel would be acceptable, of course, but why not accompany the tall man? Many of my letters "about these days" have something to say about the season—O happy children, that have time and opportunity to be out in the fields and woods, with the flowers and birds and brooks, breathing in health from the open air and learning something at every step!

Woodbury, Ct.

Dear Mr. Martin: . . . O! I am so glad the spring days have come, and soon summer will be here. It is strange I like to have summer come, when I feel so restless when it really comes. The kitten that I had died last fall, and I felt very badly. Katharine F.

Do any of our old children recall a piece in one of the old readers describing a boy—or a girl—who found something to rejoice in as every new season came around?

Waterbury, Ct.

Dear Mr. Martin: I thank you for making me a Cornerer. I went to see the fire horses one day. It was very interesting to see them come out. The robins have come.

Marjorie S.

Newton, Mass.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am interested in the Conversation Corner and would like very much to join. Does it cost anything to join the Corner? [No, but you would better ask "General Washington" to call and get your certificate.] I am nine years old and have two sisters and one brother. I go to church and Sunday school and day school and like them very much. The other day I saw four crows and three robins, so spring has come.

Robert C.

Dear Mr. Martin: Although I have read the "Conversation Corner" more or less since its happy inauguration, I have never joined its interesting circle. I don't know as you will let me in now, although I have no fear on the score of age—you let in some pretty old boys sometimes, and I'm not so very old yet. Some time ago there was an inquiry in the Corner about the new set of Japanese stamps. I have received from a friend in Japan several sets uncanceled, and from my letters have several other sets of the canceled. I will send any Cornerer the former for 20 cents per set, and the latter for 15 cents, Scott's catalogue price being 30 cents for each set. He could send U. S. two-cent stamps.

This is from a missionary, now in this country. If you accept his kind offer, you may send letter through me, placing on it one of the stamps last referred to.

Woburn, Mass.

Dear Mr. Martin: I was much interested last summer in your account of your trip. I am pretty sure that I could tell the names of the places you visited, for I spend my summers on a farm which I guess is not far from them. Last summer a party of us took a trip "from the great valley below" to the place where the cars "actually ran into and under the mountain above." We took our lunch, and it was fine fun to see the trains go in and out of the tunnel. If when you had left the train you had changed your direction towards the south you wouldn't have gone many miles before you would have come to the town where "D. F." lived when he was a boy about my size. I think I know where your old home is. Do you remember Mr. S. who owned that famous big ox? We seem to be interested in lots of things together.

Sherwin H.

I guess I do remember that big ox, although it must have been over forty years ago since he made himself famous! I called last summer on Mr. S., now over eighty years old, and he told me how much the ox weighed—I think it was 4,500 pounds, but it is a good while since I was on a cattle show committee for judging "fat oxen," and I may be wrong. Curiously enough, when I was in New Jersey the other day another old boy spoke to me about that ox, and said that a bushel of shelled corn could be placed on his back without its rolling off—that sounds like a big story, but I suppose it is true!

As to our Despotic Foreman, this letter increases the mystery hanging about him! He has always represented to me that he was a native of Maine, and the grandson—perhaps the great-grandson—of a famous minister in that State. And now this boy, who seems to know what he is talking about, makes him hail from my part of Massachusetts—what if it should turn out that we played together in our boyhood! The world-wide reputation Mr. D. F. has received through the Corner is shown by a letter he showed me from a missionary in southern India, asking his advice as to the size and cost of a small press with which he could print a small paper for the children in the Tamil language, the mission school boys helping to do the work. Of course our foreman sent full information, and I shall hope to hear sometime of the success of the scheme. If necessary, I think I should be willing to spare D. F. to go to India to oversee such good work!

By curious coincidence one of the letters taken from the Corner Drawer for use this week was written by another missionary in that same part of India, and I copy a few things that will interest the Cornerers.

My Dear Mr. Martin: Is there room for me in your Corner? I write this in the "itineracy tent," while off on a preaching tour. A delightful lot of letters came into camp this evening just as I was setting up my stereopticon for the evening's preaching. . . . A good friend of my boyhood supplies me with the Youth's Companion and the Congregationalist, and I have often stolen into your Corner like the "mouse in the wall," and enjoyed myself. If you are soon to issue a stamp act—stamp list I mean—please put down my name as an exchanger. I have a pretty fair lot for a beginner. I have sent off several lots of stamps and am always glad to do so, though if people ask for complete sets of Indian stamps, uncanceled, I have to tell them that the set of twelve, from one-half anna to one rupee, costs me about $1.25, and ask them to send that amount.

. . . I left home, ninety-five miles away, at 5.30 in the morning, and got here at 4.30 the next morning, having ridden seven miles extra to take breakfast with missionary friends at Pasulamai. Of this distance only twenty miles was by rail, four being by bullock bandy, twelve afoot, the rest on my sturdy five-year old, thirty-two pound bicycle. It was made by the Buckingham & Adams Co. in Birmingham [Ct.?] and I have given it the patriotic name of John Adams. I always ask his pardon when in the dark I run over a stone or plunge into a hollow in the road. Twice in my trip across Europe with it I made ninety-two miles a day, with a heavy knapsack and with camera and tripod on the handle bars. When "John Adams" wears out, as I sadly note that he is doing, I hope to get a tandem of the same make—if I can! I read your "Five Dogs" sermon in the Home Department, and am thinking of turning it into a Tamil tract. Would you like a copy?

Of course! Would it not be funny if D. F.'s press should set that "dog-sermon" barking in a heathen tongue to children in the heart of India? That would reconcile us surely! Here we have had, by entire accident, three missionary letters in one Corner—let not the genial editor of the Dayspring think we are competing with that pleasant periodical!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

Another Railroad Dog. Allan's letter in the adjoining Corner reminds me of the story of a Railroad Dog in McClure's Magazine for April which the boys would better read. He belonged to an engineer in the Rocky Mountains where everything, including stories, seems to be on a very large scale. His master belonged to a locomotive used for the superintendent's special train, which had no regular schedule. But whenever that engine's bell or whistle was heard, "Napoleon" galloped down to the station, jumped into the cab and waited, with his head leaning out the window, for the engineer to receive his train order. Sometimes one conductor, sometimes another, ran with this train, but Napoleon was never deceived by a signal given by another man, even though he had put on the conductor's hat and coat. But when the proper conductor appeared and threw up his hand the dog pulled in his head, took his seat at the left hand of the engineer and whined impatiently until the bell was rung and the engine started. At one time his master went up the mountain with another engine on some special trip, and Napoleon did not miss him for some time. Then, although he found his engine at the round-house, he was not satisfied and slept with one ear open. At midnight he heard and recognized his master's peculiar "too-toots," although on a strange engine, and beat against the door until he was let out. He rushed off in time to welcome his master as he pulled into the yard.

A Child Without Teeth. A Rhode Island lady has written me about her interest in reminiscences of her former home at Brattleboro, Vt. Here is one, which I have had in the Scrap-book envelope for a long time. It was given me by a gentleman, into whose home in that beautiful village came several years ago a child in the condition mentioned above. Opposite lived the dentist, whose little girl, four years old, came over to see the child. Closely looking at him a moment she rushed home, saying, "O, papa, they have got a new little baby over at Mr. Blank's, and it hasn't got a tooth in its mouth, and you must go right over and put some in just as quick as you can!" The account does not state what the dentist did, only that the baby has now a mouth full of teeth, and is professor in a Western college.

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for June 6 Jas. 3: 1-18

SINS OF THE TONGUE

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The epistle of James continues along the lines we pointed out last week. In this chapter he emphasizes these counsels concerning private and public speech:

1. Avoid dogmatism. "Be not many teachers," he says [v. 1]. That is, let not each one set up a school for himself and insist on imposing his opinions on others. We may be sure that the author of this letter was not making general observations, but was addressing certain persons or classes, and that what he wrote was what they then needed to heed for their guidance and the peace of the churches. This supports my former suggestion that James was writing to Jewish Christians in the cities where Paul had preached, who did not believe Paul's teaching was safe. They followed in his path, preaching "Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses, ye cannot be saved." To the same people that apostle wrote with all the emphasis he could use, "I Paul say unto you that, if ye receive circumcision, Christ will profit you nothing."

A dogma has come to mean a statement forced on men by assumed authority rather than commended by argument. So the creeds of churches are often called dogmas, as also are conflicting interpretations of the same creed. Dogmatism is commanding other persons in the name of God to believe what you believe. The more positively we assert dogmas, James would say, the heavier our condemnation if we are mistaken. The churches need more learners, and fewer teachers who contradict one another. Dogmatism makes many sects, sometimes half a dozen in one little town, each sure of the point on which it differs from others—that its form of church government or its mode of baptism or its peculiar name or its order of worship was commanded by Christ for all believers. Worse still is it when teachers in the same denomination warn the people against one another, instead of declaring the truth they hold in common. This part of the letter of James might appropriately have been addressed to some Congregational ministers in the year of our Lord 1897.

2. Control your thoughts by controlling your speech. Words as often arouse thoughts as thoughts call for words. Most writers find their minds stimulated by holding the pen in hand. Many, after they have begun to talk, are carried along to utter what they had not planned to say. Their thoughts run away with them. They have misunderstood their opponents. They grow hot by speaking. The address begun in kindness goes on to rash statements and ends in denunciation. James must have heard such speeches. He said, "Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath."

A bit in a horse's mouth controls all his movements, but there must be a steady hand on the rein. A little rudder guides a great ship. If the steersman's impulse is a good one, the ship may bear blessings between continents; if it is bad, the ship may go to the bottom and carry with it lives and property. Horses and ships are easily started and may be guided by very small instruments. But the misuse of the little instruments means vast mischief. So speech is a little thing, but it sets going thoughts of power, not our own only, but of others, limitless in number. A forest fire set by a single match has burned thousands of homes. Be careful what you say, especially in religious and political controversies.

3. Treat men with the courtesy you show to God. I think James must have been in a religious meeting of divided minds. Some one, as requested by the moderator, had opened with prayer, and had told the Lord and Father how they all honored and adored him. Then he had lashed with his tongue his brethren whose views he opposed. "Out of the same mouth cometh forth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be." From denouncing opinions it is easy to pass to condemnation of those who hold them, and to charge them with base motives and unworthy thoughts in order to lessen the influence of their teaching. Then the tongue becomes "a restless evil . . . full of deadly poison." Job's friends began by speaking highly of the service he had rendered to those in need; but gradually, as they saw he would not accept their views, they came to charge him with lying and oppressing the poor and every sort of iniquity, though they had not a particle of evidence to support their charges. Then Job turned on them and called them forgers of lies and bags of wind. No wonder that all the actors in that wonderful drama came to charge one another with darkening counsel by words without knowledge, and that little light came to them till the most righteous of them all finally laid that charge against himself.

4. Be wise peacemakers. There can be no real advance in knowledge of the truth, James would say, among Christians who are moved by jealousy and faction [v. 14]. Men who are influenced by such feelings may be able scholars. They may have learned a great deal about the Bible. But "this wisdom is not a wisdom that cometh down from above." Scholarship that helps men is first pure. No one can judge of its purity in others so well as in himself. When its source is right it is "peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance, without hypocrisy." Here is a noble ideal for the Christian student, teacher and preacher. Just in proportion as each keeps it in mind in his work in the church, in the neighborhood and in the family, will the fruit of his life be "sown in peace for them that make peace."

◆

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, May 30-June 5. Remembering the Days of Old. Deut. 32: 7-12; Ps. 103.

God sustaining, correcting, promising.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

◆

James Stalker writes of Professor Drummond's intellectual position in the Expositor as follows: "Was Professor Drummond, however, an evolutionist? The term has several meanings, and in some of them it might with justice be applied to him. In the Ascent of Man he frequently makes use of language from which it might be inferred that he held the extremest views on the subject. But what he was really concerned with in that book was not evolution, but the presence of altruism as one of the factors on which evolution depends. He was in the attitude of saying to men of science, 'On your own ground I will show you that there is a spiritual side of nature which you have not been taking into account.' But from what I have heard him say in private my impression is that he never took evolution very seriously. He esteemed it because it kindled the imagination and had stimulated and directed research. He esteemed it most of all because it had immensely expanded our conceptions of the universe and satisfied the craving for the unity of knowledge. Physical theories of the universe were to him merely temporary points of view. Evolution happens to be the providential point of view for us, and, therefore, we ought to make the most of it, but it is not final and it is ridiculous to be fanatical either for or against it."

◆

The church is not suffering today for lack of clergy, but it is suffering for want of what alone it ought to be willing to accept—the best.—Bishop Potter.

Hot griddle cakes are delicious when made with

Cleveland's Baking Powder

The Many Fail, One Succeeds:

Liebig, the great chemist, succeeded in making that scientific marvel, Extract of Beef,—the essence of all that is best in beef. The makers of succeeded, over thirty years ago, under his direction, in making this product so perfect as to secure his endorsement and the right to use his signature on every jar.

Liebig COMPANY'S Extract of Beef

There have been many imitations, mostly failures, but none approaching the Liebig COMPANY'S for purity, strength and fine flavor.

Food for the Baby

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

Somatose

Mother's Milk.

Somatose is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, and used in proper proportion with sterilized milk forms the best substitute known for mother's milk. Send for formula, mailed free.

At druggists, in 2-oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate — each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD" Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.

packages 25 cents.

GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Blake Bell Foundry

Established in 1820.

Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.

Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address

BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

TO HELP REDEEM FRANCE

The fourteenth annual meeting of the American McAll Association was held at United Church, New Haven, May 12–14. On the first evening a stereopticon lecture on The Work in France was given by Rev. J. F. Loba, D. D. The meetings were presided over by Mrs. Charles H. Parkhurst. The address of welcome was by Mrs. Francis Wayland. A letter of salutation was read from Dr. Charles E. Greig, the director of the McAll Mission in Paris, the successor of Mr. McAll. Addresses were given on Our Pledge, by Mrs. H. A. Haines; and on The Grace of Giving, by Miss M. A. Jordan of Smith College. Other addresses were by Mrs. F. A. Noble, Mrs. E. B. Cobb, Miss Laura Maxwell and by Miss Annie B. Beard of Paris. Mrs. Isaac Miller spoke on The Influence of the Bible in the Work of the Mission. The address by Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D., on The Universal Gospel was a powerful presentation of the necessity of missionary effort.

Speaking of the work in Paris Rev. W. M. Paden, D. D., said: "The France of today is a very different France from that of 1871." Rev. John Balcom Shaw, D. D., made an earnest plea in his address on The Place of the McAll Mission on Our Benevolent Schedule. A cablegram was read at one of the sessions from Secretary Soltau of the mission announcing that a deficit of $15,000 had just been made up. The annual reports showed unusually large receipts.

The officers for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. Charles H. Parkhurst; treasurer, Mrs. A. R. Perkins; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. L. Wayland; recording secretary, Mrs. A. H. Fetterolf; and general secretary, Miss Caroline Remington. On the list of vice-presidents are such well-known names as Mrs. James A. Garfield, Mrs. J. V. Farwell, Mrs. A. F. Beard and Miss Anna L. Dawes. The convention of 1898 will meet in Boston.

OUR OWN WORK

The Missionary Herald for June very properly emphasizes the fact that intelligent heathen, who have become familiar with the work of missions and the high character of missionaries, sometimes testify their confidence and good will by the most practical aid. For instance, very large contributions have been made toward the erection of a new missionary hospital at Madura by native traders, merchants and princes. So generous have they been that it is expected that the whole cost of the edifice, some $12,000, will be met without calling for a dollar from missionary sources. The saving made possible by their generous gifts of course is important, but even more encouraging is the evidence thus supplied of their assurance of the good sense and Christian character of the missionaries.

News from Micronesia. The Morning Star has reached San Francisco with the annual mail. The news from the different stations is very encouraging. At Mejuro, in the Marshall Islands, 140 have been received into the church during the year and a great demand exists for copies of the Bible. At a neighboring station a teacher's house and a commodious church have been built, and Wojje and Mejij also report new buildings. Eleven have joined the church at Laki, seventy at Ebon, and thirty-one at Namerik. The church membership in these islands is now 2,058 and they contributed $998.74 last year. Twenty-four teachers, of whom ten are ordained, were located. In the report from the Gilbert Islands lights and shadows alternate but an increase in gifts of over $150 and in scholars of abou 100 are encouragements. The new British commissioner at Tarawa at first proposed to divide the islands among the Protestants and Catholics, but Mr. Walkup prevented this. The commissioner also has put a stop to the native revels, which at first he was disposed to allow, and has caused the government tot repair the four church buildings and ordered all young people under seventeen into the schools.

In the Ruk Archipelago the station on the Island of Toloas has been moved from Anapauo to Kutua. Here the people are very friendly and the chief renders valuable aid. The people are erecting a church and attendance at worship is large. At Kutua 128 pupils are under daily instruction. The Morning Star is undergoing repairs at San Francisco and is to be hereafter in charge of Capt. Isaiah Bray, so long in command of her formerly.

THE WORLD AROUND

A German Student Missionary Movement. The success of the effort to enlist college students in missionary service after graduation is well known. American, English, French and Scandinavian student organizations for this purpose, although comparatively new, already have been conspicuously prosperous and useful. A similar movement among the students of the German universities is now announced, as the outcome of a conference at Halle in March, 1896. The committee then appointed has issued an appeal and a beginning has been made, which, although small thus far, is full of promise. Der Deutsche Studentenbund für Mission—The German Students' Missionary Union—is the title of the organization.

Missionaries Still Needed in Japan. The recent visit of Mr. J. R. Mott to Japan, in behalf of the World's Student Christian Federation, awakened large attention there and has been described extensively in different publications. We have been interested to note that Mr. Mott is strongly convinced that the work of the missionary in that country is by no means ended. His opinion is based in great degree, of course, upon the testimony of men whom he questioned. Although the judgment of a mere visitor, even if he have a special purpose and take special pains to inform himself, hardly can be as trustworthy upon some points as that of an old resident, nevertheless he is perhaps better able to judge impartially, and in this instance the concurrence of testimony was practically unanimous. It seems clear that the conviction which some have expressed of late that Japan no longer needs missionaries from outside is an error. But to believe this is not to undervalue the great value also of native missionaries, as fast as they can be trained.

Favoritism Towards Mohammedanism. In the Church Missionary Intelligencer for May Rev. W. G. Pope of Tunisia appeals for prayer in behalf of missionaries in Moslem lands. Not only are Mohammedans probably the most difficult unbelievers to be impressed by the gospel, but also a determined effort is being made just now by the French authorities to check and break up missionary work among them. All doors of opportunity are being closed and the evident purpose is to drive away the missionaries. One missionary in Tunisia already has been fined six times in the courts for having given away copies of the Scriptures in his own shop. Two lady missionaries also were just about to be tried when he wrote, for distributing copies in th streets. The French Government is, at leas nominally, a Christian government. It woul be indignant at being called anything else. But in Madagascar religious toleration is refused, the French officials appropriating for the Jesuits not only the churches but even the schools and hospitals of the Protestants, and in Tunis and Algeria Christianity itself is being crushed out, as far and as fast as possible, lest the susceptibilities of the Moslems be injured. Probably fear of the proclamation of a "holy war" throughout the world by the Turkish sultan is partly responsible for the state of things. That would indeed be a terrible occurrence in many lands. But it is not a sufficient excuse.

Foreign Missionary Statistics. The Missionary Review of the World has just issued its annual schedule, including returns of 58 societies in the United States and Canada. The total income reported is $5,693,020. There are 4,825 missionaries, including 1,396 ministers, 672 laymen, 1,392 married women and 1,335 single women. They are aided by 15,347 natives. There are 6,049 stations, 315,287 communicants, and 901,648 adherents, as well as 212,271 scholars. The Methodist Church reports the largest income, $889,280; the Presbyterian the next largest, $885,390; the American Board, $743,105; the Baptist Missionary Union, $632,950; the Episcopal Church, $395,295; and the Methodist Church, South, $240,800. These figures include work for Indians, Chinese and Japanese in this country, and apparently also work among Roman Catholics, Greeks, etc., in European lands, but not any work in distinctively Protestant Europe.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic June 6–12. The Tongue the Christian's Tool. Ex. 4: 1–17.

This phrasing of the subject leads us to think of the tongue in a new light. We are to do something with it for Christ's sake. We are to ask how much of its constant activity redounds to the glory of God. That it is an instrument of the highest order we ought to realize more keenly than most of us do. That it may be degraded to ignoble uses is a fact that finds fearful illustration day by day. Most of us, perhaps, shrink from anything approaching profanity or from any intentional use of the tongue to pull down the truth and to harm other lives, but do we, on the other hand, value the opportunities it furnishes us with which to witness for Christ and to forward his interests?

The beauty about this tool is that it belongs to every Christian. Few have wealth or social position or leisure to devote to God, but here is a tool right at hand. We need, of course, to keep it in good condition, for a good workman always looks out for his tools. That means that idle talk, gossip, uncharitable remarks are not to be indulged in lest the brightness and edge be taken off. Following the analogy still further, there is suggested the desirability of putting the instrument in its proper place in the tool chest. A good workman knows how to make one tool supplement another. The tongue needs the assistance of other human gifts and endowments if it is to do its best work. The story is told of a man describing a shipwreck, who in winding up a vivid description of the vessel foundering in the surf said, "And despite our stentorian efforts through the speaking trumpet the boat went down." There are times and cases of need that demand something more than talk.

But, after all, the tongue can be a mighty instrument for God provided it is presented to God to be used by him. Paul speaks of yielding our instruments as servants of righteousness. Nobody but our heavenly Father can show us how most wisely to use our tongues. He can touch them with the coals from off the altar. Then a plain-spoken man becomes the trusted leader of the hosts of Israel. Then a lisping, stammering tongue becomes capable of moving oratory. Then the tongue of the everyday Christian—your tongue and mine—conveys hope and cheer to many a weary soul and becomes indeed a polished tool fit for the Master's use.

A permanent memorial in honor of the fifty years of service of the late Rev. Dr. S. B. Fairbank, of the Marathi Mission, has been determined upon. It is a well at Wadale, the community with which he was identified. It is thirty-two feet deep and will supply water for both drinking and irrigation. There is a certain special fitness in such a memorial of such a man.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

THE GREAT MYCENÆAN AGE

This work is timely. Quite apart from the political interest which now centers in Greece, archæology never attracted so much public attention as just now. The publications of Dr. Schliemann and others have much increased the intelligent knowledge of the subject, and any work from the pen of an expert which is not too technical in terms is sure of its welcome. The volume before us is by Prof. J. I. Manatt of Brown University, and is based upon the earlier work, issued three years ago, by Dr. Chrestos Tsountas, who is director of excavations at Mycenæ. Dr. Tsountas was a pupil of Dr. Schliemann and of late has become an independent explorer and author, and his book was crowned by the French Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies. Dr. Manatt, also, is personally familiar with the territory described in the book and with the work done there, and, although he has based his chapters upon those of Dr. Tsountas to a considerable extent, he has improved the method and plan of the latter, and may be said to have practically rewritten the work, although his obligations to the earlier work are acknowledged frankly. Dr. Dörpfeld has furnished the introduction.

The volume describes the landmarks of the Mycenæan world, the city itself, which was also a fortress, the palace, the private house and domestic life, the tombs, the dress, the ornaments and weapons of the people, their religion, and some more general topics such as phases of their art, writing in their time and place and the problems of their chronology and race. An appendix deals with the Mycenæan Troy, the fortress of Gha, and other Minyan works at Lake Caopaïs and recent Mycenæan discoveries in Attica, Salamis and Ægina. The author has given his readers an accurate and most interesting study of the different aspects of his subject, and the book abounds in excellent and helpful illustrations. The chief differences between it and the work of Dr. Tsountas are due to the facts, first, that Dr. Tsountas wrote for a public having the main features of the Mycenæan world in its mind and the great Mycenæan centers near at hand, while the present work is for the world at large, and, secondly, that during the three years since the earlier work appeared great additions have been made to the discoveries and the consequent increase of knowledge relating to the subject.

A chapter on arms and war is one of those most improved by the use of additional information, and the chapter on the Mycenæan connection with Homer is chiefly Dr. Manatt's in substance as well as shape. Thus the reader has the advantage of the learning of both experts and is able in a considerable degree to compare their estimates of facts and their conclusions. Furthermore, in Dr. Dörpfeld's introduction additional light is thrown upon some doubtful points, such as the arrangement of graves, the existence of a lower town adjacent to the acropolis at Mycenæ, the formation of the roofs of Mycenæan houses, etc. Of course such a work appeals pre-eminently to archæologists, yet it contains a great deal of material of general interest. It is issued substantially and handsomely. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $6.00.]

RELIGIOUS

We regret that we are not able to praise Edmond Stapfer's Jesus Christ During His Ministry [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25] as unreservedly as we did the preceding volume in the series, which was entitled Jesus Christ Before His Ministry. This later volume reveals the same minute and painstaking examination of the gospels and presents many aspects of the public life of Jesus in a new and often a very attractive light. Its main contention, that Jesus came not to destroy but to fulfill the Jewish law, is well supported by the evidence adduced, and Renan's hypothesis that Jesus was the victim of a delusion concerning himself is mercilessly punctured. We find ourselves, however, entering interrogation points at passages where the French professor does not seem to prove his case, as when he undertakes to show that Jesus did not teach that the kingdom of heaven was present in his person, but that he was simply its herald, or as when he declares that Jesus shared the belief of his time that the world was speedily to come to an end. In fact, the author does not appear to have fairly thought out his own conception of Jesus, although we recognize the utmost loyalty to his person. Perhaps Dr. Stapfer's forthcoming book, the last of the series, which is to discuss the death and resurrection of Christ, will gather up some of the threads which the present volume leaves at loose ends.

A new edition, the second, of the History of the English Bible [A. S. Barnes & Co. $2.00], by Dr. Blackford Condit, contains an additional chapter completing the history of the Old Testament religion and of the revealed Bible as a whole, the first edition having been brought out in 1881. The value of this history, inasmuch as it is a learned as well as a simple and practical work, is evident. We have made use of it in the past from time to time with high and growing appreciation of its serviceableness; and equally as a history, as a volume for reference, and for the large and permanent interest of its pages we heartily commend it.

The series of Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students, which Professor Marcus Dods and Dr. Alexander Whyte are editing, has received an addition in the form of a book on the Foundation Truths of Scripture [Charles Scribner's Sons. Imported. 45 cents], by Prof. J. Laidlaw. Setting forth the teaching of the Scripture on sin and salvation, it goes somewhat into detail in regard to the origin and uses, the extent and nature of sin, the Saviour's person and work and the nature and method of salvation, etc., being an endeavor to show that the main truths of Christian doctrine bearing on these topics rest directly on Scripture and are inter-connected vitally. Each chapter is followed by questions and answers, so that the book is adapted to be studied. It would do good service in classes of young converts.——From the same house comes The Spirit of Power [50 cents], by Dr. Thomas Adamson, of Glasgow. It deals helpfully with the work of the Holy Spirit and will prove stimulating and enlightening to Christian hearts.

The tenth volume of the Lutheran Commentary is Annotations on the Epistles to Timothy, Titus, the Hebrews and Philemon [Christian Literature Co. $2.50], the portion on Philemon being supplied by Dr. E. T. Horn and the remainder by Prof. E. J. Wolfe. The general character of the earlier volumes of this commentary has been preserved successfully by the editors of this one, and although the editors have not forgotten to treat their subjects from the Lutheran point of view still the denominational character of the work is hardly discernible. In the nature of the case a true commentary cannot be sectarian. It is a simple, clear, scholarly work even if, at times, it has a tendency toward superfluousness, but plain people will understand it and be helped by it.——The Modern Readers' Bible receives a new addition in the volume on Jeremiah [Macmillan Co. 50 cents], edited by Prof. R. G. Moulton. It is in the same vein as the editor's work upon other Old Testament books, and emphasizes the personality of the prophet himself, bringing out his character and work not merely as a prophet but as a poet. It is a creditable and profitable study of Jeremiah and his utterances and possesses exceptional interest in addition to its other value.

Foretokens of Immortality [F. H. Revell Co. 75 cents], by N. G. Hillis, contains three suggestive chapters, written with considerable ability, which are adapted to promote belief in immortality and a just appreciation of its relation to the present Christian life, and which indicates a just appreciation of the point of view of modern thinkers.——Champions of Christianity [Eaton & Mains. 60 cents], by Silas Farmer, contains a collection of names of eminent men in various departments of life—political, literary, scientific, artistic, etc.—who have uttered their belief in the Christian religion. A brief sketch of each is given, together with some words by him of a religious character. A number of portraits of men described are furnished, and the purpose of the book is to emphasize the fact that the testimony of such men is cumulative and conclusive.

The Theater [H. L. Hastings. 50 cents] is an essay by J. W. Leeds on the want of harmony between stage plays and the Christian profession. We respect the motive of the author and he has written temperately, but we believe that wholesale condemnation of the stage is as much a mistake as wholesale approval of it. There are actors who are Christian men and women and there are plays which are noble and uplifting, and the reverse is true. We believe theater-going should be indulged in, if at all, with careful discrimination, not merely because many plays are evil, but also because it is extremely easy to waste time and money in that manner. But the author's conclusion, which is decidedly adverse to the theater, we cannot accept without qualification. We readily indorse, however, his condemnation of stage performances at church entertainments.

Christian Citizenship [Funk & Wagnalls Co. 75 cents] is by Dr. Carlos Martyn. It is a readable treatise discussing in a vivacious fashion the citizenship of men and women and how to solve many social problems. We do not indorse the author's advocacy of woman's suffrage, and some of his other chapters seem to contain more in the way of description than in that of suggestion of remedies, but the book is unquestionably a helpful one in its tendencies and its definite propositions.——Weapons of Temperance Warfare [United Society of Christian Endeavor. 35 cents], by Belle M. Brain, contains plans and programs for Young People's Societies, Sunday Schools, Temperance Unions, etc. It is a miscellaneous collection of material, the aim of which is commendable.

A new edition of the Life of Uncle John Vassar, or The Fight of Faith [American Tract Society. $1.00], by Rev. Dr. T. E. Vassar, which we noticed when it first appeared, is issued. The preface is by Dr. A. A. Bonar and the introduction by the late Dr. A. J. Gordon. Uncle John Vassar was a widely-known and effective evangelist and this book is a graphic account of his zealous and fruitful career. It will do good.——A new map issued by the Bible Study Publishing Company meets the usual requirements for the study of the Acts and the Epistles, and in some respects gives special information. It is based on the maps in Professor Ramsay's Saint Paul the Traveler, and gives the results of his personal explorations in Asia Minor. The distinction between political and tribal names is clearly indicated. This is a feature of much value. The Roman empire is shown in its proper political divisions. The three successive journeys of Paul are plainly marked. This is the best wall map which we have seen. It is furnished, mounted on cloth, for two dollars, postpaid.

STORIES

In Prisoners of Conscience [Century Co. $1.50] Mrs. Barr has given her readers one of the saddest stories which she ever has written. It is almost depressing. It describes the narrow and gloomy life of the Shetlanders and other north of Scotland people, and the strained and cramped religious beliefs in which they used to grow up. The severity of their faith doubtless has been somewhat modified ere this, and the very severity frequently developed a strength of character much to be admired in its own way. Mrs. Barr's purpose evidently is to emphasize the greater truthfulness and value of gentler and sweeter views of God and his relation to man. And her task is both important and well performed, if the reading of her book could be confined to the people described therein. Other readers will find it a skillful and striking psychological study as well as a powerful narrative of peasant life, but mournful to an extreme degree.——Hilda Strafford [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25] is by Beatrice Harraden. It is a California story of disappointment in respect to fortune and love. It is strong in character drawing and is a vivid, although somewhat depressing, narrative. It may be founded on fact and it illustrates a certain degree of literary ability. It is not a great novel in any sense, but it holds attention successfully.

The Mutable Many [F. A. Stokes Co. $1.50], by Robert Barr, is another English novel in which the world of mechanics and the world of art touch and to some extent blend. It is strong in the reproduction of character, interesting in the development of the plot and one of the more enjoyable and satisfactory among recent novels.——Miss Archer Archer [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], by Clara Louise Burnham, is exceptionally charming. Southern and New England types of character are skillfully contrasted. There is incident enough to keep the action of the story brisk and the whole atmosphere of the book is bright, breezy and wholesome. In every way it is a graceful, vigorous and delightful story.

A Fiancé on Trial [Merriam Co. $1.25], by F. T. Buck, describes the anxieties and severities of an engagement without genuine love. The story is very well told and considerable skill is expended in maneuvering the characters, who are drawn with commendable vividness. The villain is somewhat needlessly villainous, but the story as a whole is a pleasant one.——His Fortunate Grace [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00] is by Gertrude Atherton. The characters are New York and English people of extreme fashion, mostly snobs, and the folly and even wickedness of a certain type of international marriage, the exchanging of money for a title, is emphasized healthily. There is some good description in the book, and, although it is light work, it points a wholesome and impressive moral.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons are issuing in uniform binding the stories of Harold Frederic. The Lawton Girl, In the Sixties, Seth's Brother's Wife and In the Valley [Each $1.50] are sent us. They are too familiar to most of our readers to need comment, and their popularity will be enlarged by their republication in this tasteful and convenient form.——The author of A Marital Liability [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75 cents] is Elizabeth P. Train. She has imagined a very unusual social situation and has based upon it a really powerful and most engrossing little story. The possibilities of human baseness on the one hand and of self-sacrifice on the other are pictured with almost startling clearness. The improbability of the fundamental supposition of the book is disguised so cleverly that it hardly suggests itself. The story will find many readers.

The motive of the author of Scarlet or White [Authors' Publishing Association. $1.00], Dr. Willis Mills, is to be approved warmly. It is to point out that impurity in a man ought to be condemned as severely as in a woman, and that society should accept the practicability of reform and seek to aid it as cordially in the case of a so-called fall from virtue as in any other. The literary quality of the story is not up to the level of its moral earnestness and excellence. But it ought to do good.——Wilt Thou Have This Woman? [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50], by J. McLaran Cobban, is an average story of English country life, with enough incident and movement to maintain interest and enough vividness in the portrayal of character to supply distinctness and individuality. It is readable and pleasant, although not in any way remarkable.——A Pinchbeck Goddess [D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents] is by Mrs. J. M. Fleming, apparently a sister of Rudyard Kipling, and is a story of English life at a fashionable East Indian resort. The reckless improbability of the plot is managed as skillfully as possible, and the story possesses decided interest as a sketch of a certain kind of social life not wholly to be commended, but interesting when described.

EDUCATIONAL

Mr. C. I. Brownson has revised, enlarged and in part rewritten Dr. William Smith's Smaller History of Greece [Harper & Bros. $1.00]. Recent discoveries have gone far to correct some former beliefs, and still further to enlarge the range of modern knowledge of ancient subjects, and even Dr. Smith's history, acknowledged to be almost, if not actually, unequaled in its way from its first appearance, could not have maintained its large degree of public favor much longer without being thus revised and improved. Mr. Brownson has done his work in an admirable manner, and the volume will be appreciated by all concerned.——The First Principles of Natural Philosophy [Ginn & Co. $1 10] is by Prof. A. L. Dolbear, Ph. D. Its special purpose is to attract the attention of students from the physics of mechanism to the physics of molecules and to aid them to carry the organic conception gained by the study of the visible body to their ultimate particles. Simplification has been studied, and weights and measures commonly understood are used rather than the metrical system. The book has admirable practical qualities.

Topics and References in American History [C. W. Bardeen. $1.00], by Dr. G. A. Williams, is a new edition of a useful book which must be a great help in mastering the important features of our country's history. Paragraphs containing search questions are introduced at intervals, the endeavor to answer which being expected and adapted to fix in mind the particulars previously covered. The book is only an outline and refers to other publications where details may be obtained. It will develop the habit of historical investigation and of referring to original sources, while it also affords a general fund of information on its subject.

The First Reader [Thompson, Brown & Co. 30 cents], by Louis P. Nash includes extracts from Æsop and Mother Goose. It is for the youngest children who are learning to read. It is handsomely printed and illustrated.——The High School Class Book of Drawing and the Normal Class Book of Drawing [American Book Co. Each 50 cents], by Christine G. Sullivan, Ph. D., are two compact and well-arranged treatises for the use of students and are apparently admirably adapted to their purpose.——Hawthorne's Twice Told Tales [Maynard, Merrill & Co. 24 cents] is one of the English Classics Series, and is a prettily printed and compact little volume.

An Experiment in Education [Harper & Bros. $1.25] is by Mary R. Alling-Aber. The experiment aimed, to use the author's own words, "to see if the child may not be introduced at once to the foundation of all learning . . . and at the same time be given a mastery of such elements of reading, writing and number as usually constitutes primary education." This certainly is a comprehensive and difficult aim, but it is pursued with zeal and good judgment and successfully accomplished. The process is described in the book, the theory of the author is unfolded at length, considerable practical suggestion appears about details in connection with the teaching of special subjects, and the volume is one of large interest and lasting value to educators.——Prof. J. S. Ames, Ph. D., is the author of Theory of Physics [Harper & Bros. $1.50], which is a text-book intended for students who have had, at the best, only an elementary course of training in physics, and it is the fruit of experience as an instructor. It is in the main simply a summary of a course of lectures which the author has given in actual work. It is a substantial and handsome volume and is adapted to its purpose.——Experimental Physics [Ginn & Co. $1.10] is a small volume in much the same line by W. A. Stone. It seems to be adapted for actual beginners to a greater degree than Professor Ames's work and it is admirably arranged and otherwise suited for practical service.

MISCELLANEOUS

Athletic Sports [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50] is a new volume in the Out of Door Library. It contains the papers which many of our readers have seen already in Scribner's Magazine on The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man, and The Physical Characteristics of the Athlete by Dr. D. A. Sargent, and new papers on Golf, Lawn Tennis, Bicycling, Surf and Surfbathing and Country Clubs and Hunt Clubs in America. It is a practical and entertaining work which, without exactly teaching any sports, throws abundant light on more than one, and among young people especially it is sure to be popular.——Another volume in the same library and drawn from the same sources is Mountain Climbing [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50], the papers in which are supplied by E. L. Wilson, E. L. Weeks, A. F. Jacassi and other mountain climbers, and it describes genuine and arduous work in its line. This, too, will interest all who are fond of adventure and it is full of illustration. It also possesses some scientific value.

Flowers of Field, Hill and Swamp [Harper & Bros. $2 50] is not a popularly written book, but is a treatise for botanists and plant lovers, describing flowering plants of the Atlantic seaboard as far south as Florida. Any one in the region covered by it who has a little knowledge of botany may make practical use of it in identifying the plants and flowers near his home. It is comprehensive, clearly expressed and in every way an excellent work.——Another book about plants is The Plant World [D. Appleton & Co. 60 cents], by Frank Vincent. It is a reading-book about botany, intended to interest the young in flowers and plants and to be used definitely as a reader. It will stimulate outdoor observation and is well adapted to its general purpose while containing a great deal of information. It is illustrated prettily.

NOTES

—— The Authors' Club of New York is accumulating a library of literary biography.

—— A volume about his Wordsworth and Coleridge manuscripts has been prepared by Mr. T. Longman of the firm of Longman & Co., the original publishers of those poets.

—— A bronze statue of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, who founded Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., is to be unveiled on May 27, the anniversary of his birth, in the Parthenon at the Centennial Exposition. Chauncey M. Depew will make the address.

—— Messrs. Curtis & Cameron's "Copley Prints," reproducing Sargent's mural decorations at the Boston Public Library, have been so popular that they mean to continue the series by reproducing other decorations from the Boston Library and the Museum of Fine Arts, and also those of the new National Library at Washington.

—— The new illustrated edition of Francis Parkman's histories, which Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. of this city are about to issue, is to contain twenty volumes, to have 120 photogravures of authentic portraits and contemporary prints, as well as original illustrations by Howard Pyle, Thulstrup, Frederic Remington, etc., and the edition will be limited.

—— Mr. Rudyard Kipling, the poet and novelist, and Mr. H. D. Traill, the essayist, have just been admitted to the famous Athenæum Club in London. This institution admits only nine new members a year at the most, and, although its fellowship is said to be anything but exhilarating, election to it is like receiving a patent of literary nobility.

For Books of the Week see page 774.

PRESIDENT TUCKER ON DEMOCRACY

At Andover Theological Seminary this year the Stone lecturer was Pres. W. J. Tucker of Dartmouth College. His subject was The Ethical Value of Democracy.

The first lecture was on the Relation of Democracy to Liberty. Democracy, he said, means the rule of the people. The term is more than a political one. Like evolution, as a principle it is comprehensive. It has an ethical motive and end. The one who works in the interest of democracy must work as one of the whole. There is power in this method; he who serves shall serve as one of the people. He must act so as to say, "We are the people."

Two questions arise: (1) Is democracy maintaining its moral impulse in the further pursuit of liberty? (2) Is democracy growing selfish or unselfish in the possession of liberty? Democracy gained a standing in the first place by seeking religious liberty. The impulse was changed when political instead of religious liberty was sought. In the present phase of the subject an estimate of the ethical part is hard to form, and the issue grows more complicated when the question goes into the field of economics.

The movement at present is not unmoral. The demand for the living wage means that a man wants to work for his living. This humanizes the mind of society. It is a vital fault to regard labor wholly as a commodity. We must become accustomed to our humanized principles, especially to apply them to those in need before us. The other question is more to be thought of than discussed. The principle of liberty is ineradicable when once it gets into the blood. Underneath western Europe is democracy. Here it needs only light and air to change the face of eastern Europe.

The second lecture was on Democracy and Equality. Democracy is by nature socialistic. There has been a change to this from the individualistic. The language of democracy was first one of individualistic defiance; now it is the few working with the many rather than the few working on the many. Democracy and socialism do not entirely agree in their methods of gaining equality. Democracy protests against a leveling down. Socialism is regardless of personal liberty. In the matter of work, for example, there can be no greater injury to men than to restrict them. Work is the normal condition. Neither democracy nor socialism undertakes to do away with the inequalities of nature, race and personal conduct. It is not undemocratic to extend public service. Expediency is the deciding factor here. Public ownership is an education. It is not undemocratic to raise the lower classes at the evident expense of the upper. Mere drudgery should not be allowed. Fictitious wealth has a tremendous moral effect of inequality.

The third lecture was on The Effect of Industrialism upon the Ethical Quality of Democracy. Industrialism has added vastly to the value of the world. Much of this must be credited to science. Today men look to the schools rather than to the workshops for discoveries. Industrialism has made the dominant conception of the world, wherever it obtains, the one of utility. A safeguard to this is sought from the schools. Industrialism has advanced the line of the possible by marking out the line of the impossible. Men are set thinking toward things so that their power is estimated in them; yet materialism is not necessarily mercenary.

Industrialism has wrought a vast work in equalizing the conditions of society. Every invention seeks to reach the million. Industrialism has created the population which composes it. It has reversed the former call of more supply to the present one for more demand.

Religiously the child in industrialism is the child of secularism. Christian institutions are foreign to him. Politically the separation is almost as wide. Industrialism has made a town of its own sort. Its type is that of separation. It has created a division, on which class distinction can be founded. The distinction of industrialism is the wage class, the bare man, without capital or tools. Industrialism has led to organizations in society. Democracy has often suffered in this because the organization tends to make the man impersonal. In this situation democracy has a greater demand than ever before on its ethical value.

The fourth lecture was on the Effect of Immigration on the Ethical Value of Democracy. Democracy has progressed by stages. No intermediate steps have been omitted. In the United States it has had a free field. A statistical comparison of the native whites in America with the colored and foreign population shows that the native white is in a minority of about 3,000,000.

We now know the causes of immigration, but we do not know how they will act. Some of these are religion, politics, military service and economic reasons. It is a question how to keep a nation vital. The city especially exhausts a population. The supply is for the most part drawn from the country, but the incoming immigrant is generally a vital person. Through the child of the immigrant the state has an opportunity to secure moral results. Immigrating peoples bring their own traditions of liberty. We have to take the spirit of madness out of this, but the blood of Christendom is in their veins. The Anglo-Saxons are not the only men capable of liberty. The dangers from immigration are: (1) over-concentration in cities; (2) economic greed; (3) political corruption.

The fifth lecture was on Democracy and Education. Education reaches back of liberty and equality. It creates fellowship of mind. Democracy wants the intelligent man. The State now considers it its right to have compulsory education. The question arises, Will the State leave education free, or will it make the teaching correspond to the views of the dominant party? Democracy, acting through State control, must be sensitive to the demands of culture for every person. It must keep the way open from the bottom to the top and also from the top to the bottom, for no one knows where the next scholars are coming from. Scholarship needs virility. Education gives a nobility to society which cannot easily be otherwise gained.

The last lecture was on Democracy and Religion. The present relation to one another of democracy and religion shows that there is a difficulty. The church does not seem to be most in evidence where it is most needed. Democracy and organized Christianity are not separate in principle, method, or interest. Democracy has no possibilities outside Christendom. Both are affected by the ideas of the age and both have their real concern with the same persons.

Democracy first demands of the church a habit of mind appropriate to the demand. It also demands the recognition of the power of conditions to affect the character of man. There are three ways of reaching men: (1) by rescue; (2) by fortifying the position; (3) by the arrest of forces leading to sin. All three are necessary.

Democracy also demands of religion that there be an advance in thought from charity to sympathy and, if need be, to justice. Not only should the church show pity toward the falling man, democracy has the right to demand and expect sympathy for the rising man. Religion has a word of protest for democracy against the secularization which it brings. Religion protests against its philosophy, which cannot satisfy. Religion, without abating any of its truths, stands before democracy as religion. It says, "Have faith in God. Belief is not enough. Democracy was born of faith. It must live in faith. Believe in immortality. No child of time ever wrought anything for human progress."

R. W. D.

In and Around Boston

A Splendid Collection at Leyden Church, Brookline

Ever since the new Congregational church at Brookline was formed last November, its sixty members have been looking forward to securing an edifice of their own as soon as possible. The Casino, where worship is now held, answers present purposes well, but the growth which is sure to come, as well as the larger usefulness of the body, demand the speedy erection of a stone chapel, capable of seating three or four hundred persons, and with modern appliances for Sunday school work. Such a desirable goal is brought much nearer by the large contribution last Sunday to a building fund. The pastor, Rev. H. G. Hale, preached a sermon on the place of sacrifice in the religious life. Then the people demonstrated their belief in this doctrine by immediately dropping pledges in the boxes that aggregated $10,140. All of this sum comes from regular worshipers with this church. There were some gifts of considerable size but almost every person in the congregation, even the little children, had a share in the offering.

This collection demonstrates afresh how united and enthusiastic the Leyden people are for building up Congregationalism in that thriving suburb where the church is located. Steps will at once be taken to secure a desirable location. All the services last Sunday were pervaded with the note of joy and gratitude and the spiritual side of this important undertaking was kept prominently in sight.

Congregational Club's May Festival

It was unprecedented for the announcement of the semi-annual ladies' night to contain no specifications with reference to speakers except the simple statement that there would be five-minute speeches from several members of the club. Ex-Secretary Cutter of the club, who had long experience in that important position, said when he received his announcement that, under these circumstances, only two motives could bring the brethren together—loyalty to the club or the innate curiosity of human nature. Perhaps both were operative last Monday night, for the assemblage at Tremont Temple fell, in no particular, short of the many brilliant preceding gatherings in point of numbers, enthusiasm and general satisfaction with the outcome.

It was distinctively a home affair, and the gathering, composed of six or seven hundred men and women, was of that substantial character that cheers the heart with reference to the virility and future usefulness of Boston Congregationalism. The long and prettily spread tables and the fair ladies and brave men who sat at them made a pleasing picture from the platform. While the prandial part of the supper was proceeding there was some fine organ and orchestral music, and the speaking was interspersed with the singing of several good old hymns by the congregation.

The speaking varied decidedly from the usual routine. Twelve members of the club, whom the president was gracious enough to characterize as good men and true, responded to as many toasts. Each was limited to five minutes, and most of them had cut their cloth so carefully that the gavel of the presiding officer had no terrors for them. When he did exercise it, however, in two or three cases, he did it with such graciousness that it hardly seemed an interruption. The men who spoke represented various vocations and points of contact with the busy world. The general theme was A Few Congregational Ideals, and each set forth in turn what he considered the particular thing to be aimed at in specific lines of human activity.

The success of the evening—and all present voted it to be a conspicuous one—was in a great measure owing to President Barton's skill in presiding. He had an inexhaustible fund of pat stories, and he told them so irresistibly that the faces of his hearers began to relax every time he opened his mouth. His recital of the different ways in which three English ministers stated the fact that two beans and two beans make four beans would have done credit to Mark Twain himself. Yet the serious element was not lacking either in the words of Dr. Barton or his fellow-speakers on the platform, and the members dispersed feeling that they had been informed as well as entertained by coming together.

The list of toasts and of the men who responded to them follows: 1. The Ideal in the Use of Money, H. M. Moore, Esq. 2. The Ideal in Legislation, Hon. A. H. Wellman, Esq. 3. The Ideal in Law, M. F. Dickinson, Jr. 4. The Ideal Relation of Minister and Doctor, F. E. Bundy, M. D. 5. The Ideal in Printing, Mr. Frank Wood. 6. The Ideal Newspaper, Rev. H. A. Bridgman. 7. The Ideal in Authorship, Rev. E. G. Porter, D. D. 8. The Pleasures of the Poor, Rev. D. W. Waldron. 9. The Ideal Among Nations, Hon. Samuel C. Darling. 10. The Ideal in Preaching, Rev. Arthur Little, D. D. 11. The Ideal in Citizenship, W. S. Slocum. 12. The Ideal Home, John Herbert, Esq.

A Gracious Charity

The Cambridgeport Rescue Home has been rechristened The Ingleside and is now located at Revere Heights. The unique feature about this branch of Christian work is that it cares for young women who are taken from places where they were in danger from pernicious influences, and others who have just stepped aside from the paths of virtue. They constitute a class which a diagnosis decides to be "hopeful cases." Mrs. Whittemore of the Door of Hope, New York, opened the recent dedicatory exercises, with services at Revere and at the First Baptist Church on Commonwealth Avenue. A reception was held in the afternoon and evening of May 4 at The Ingleside, presided over by Rev. R. B. Tobey, president of The Ingleside Corporation. Remarks were made by Dr. Chappell of the Gordon Training School, Mrs. Harriet T. Todd, State evangelist of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., Mrs. E. Trask Hill and others. Mr. Charles H. Jones of the Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Co. is treasurer of the corporation.

Journalism and Greece

What the Press Represents was set before the Ministers' Meeting last Monday by Mr. A. L. Blair of the Boston Journal. He pointed to the inventions which have brought the production of the modern newspaper to such a state of perfection. He described the way in which the Greeks probably learned of the fall of Troy, and the way in which the news would have been spread had James Gordon Bennett been managing a journal in Athens at that time. The critics of the press came in for a trenchant and picturesque description, and Mr. Blair closed by saying that, had he been managing a daily paper in Jerusalem at the time of the raising of Lazarus, modern thinkers would have had more material on which to base their researches into the unknown.

Ex-Pres. W. G. Ballantine of Oberlin, who spent last winter in Athens, then made a stirring plea for sympathy with the Greeks, saying that we have been witnessing in the last few weeks one of the saddest and most pathetic tragedies in history. The Greek nation had no need to fight for Crete so far as personal aggrandizement was concerned, but the Cretans were also Greek, and were bitterly oppressed, and the love of freedom in the Greek people would not allow them to quietly look on at the oppression of their brethren. Much of our news has come through England, which in all but name has been an ally of Turkey. The Greeks, officered by members of a royal family forced upon them by their enemies, poorly armed and ill fed, had to contend with disciplined and well-equipped forces, led by German staff officers, representatives of the most scientific warmaking in the world. Greece was also forbidden by the English to attack Turkish towns with her fleet. Dr. Ballantine spoke in the highest terms of the character and courage of the Greek troops and the nation generally, and expressed a hope that our present Administration would show sympathy with them and cry "shame" upon their oppressors.

Lay Colleges Graduate Their Classes

Last week witnessed the closing exercises at the Lay College in Revere. The examinations extended through two days, and the classes taught by Professors Phelps, Gray and Perkins and by President, Mrs. and Miss Bixby endured well the tests made as to the year's work. At the anniversary exercises at the college chapel on Wednesday addresses were made by Henry M. Moore and others. On the previous Sunday President Bixby preached the baccalaureate sermon. Seven men were graduated, most of whom have already found places of labor. Several go to rural New England towns.

The Gordon Missionary Training School on Clarendon Street, Boston, graduated 25 pupils, the largest number since the school was established. Rev. F. E. Chappell is still one of the leading spirits in the school, and the influence of Dr. A. J. Gordon, who founded it, continues to be felt in many ways.

The graduating exercises of the Berkeley Temple School of Applied Christianity began on Sunday with a baccalaureate address by Rev. Dr. C. A. Dickinson, and are continued through Thursday of this week.

A Noted Foreigner

The Baroness von Bulow-Wendhausen, the distinguished German educator, is passing a few days in the city. She is arranging for the publication in this country of her memoirs of her aunt, the famous Baroness Marenholz, who discovered Froebel and made him intelligible to the world. She was also the author of Reminiscences of Froebel and of several books on child education. The kindergartens which she started in Germany and maintained by subscriptions are now supervised and carried on by this niece. Peculiar interest attaches to the Baroness von Bulow's visit, since Froebel looked to the United States to see the kindergarten prosper. "In the virgin soil of a new republic," he was wont to say, "the seed of a great thought would grow."

A large and enthusiastic audience of kindergartners and others greeted the baroness in Association Hall on Friday afternoon, where she spoke on School-gardens in Germany. These "gardens" are for children beyond the kindergarten age and are designed to go on side by side with the common schools. They furnish their pupils with opportunities for gardening, for caring for pets and for excursions into the country. Their aim is through influencing the child to love and care for plants and animals to develop in him a sense of duty and responsibility. During her stay in the city the baroness is receiving many social attentions.

Either they have long pastorates or early marriages in Tennessee. A Southern Presbyterian minister recently sent a marriage notice to the Christian Observer with the remark that he had married both the mother and the grandmother of the bride. Think of the growing love and cumulative influence of such a pastorate! They used to be common enough in New England, and we wish that the cultivation of contentment on the part of ministers and people might allow them to be common yet again.

The Massachusetts State Association

Worcester, May 18–20

To the "Heart of the Commonwealth," the great inland city of the State, Worcester—with its more than 100,000 souls—the tribes of our churches went up from Massachusetts Bay and descended from the Berkshire Hills last week to hold their ninety-fifth annual meeting. In this throbbing center of heterogeneous manufactures, educational interests and church activities the fathers and brethren again felt the pulse of Congregationalism and were received gladly to their annual conclave by the members and pastors of the nearly twenty churches of our order in the city. Five times before has the State meeting occurred here, a larger number of times than in any other place save Boston.

Plymouth Church, as host, spoke a hearty welcome through its pastor, Rev. Dr. Archibald McCullagh, whose inspiring words and wish for a Pentecostal out-pouring gave a genuine impulse to the first session. The official send-off had already been effected by the word of the secretary, Dr. Hazen, and the moderator's chair had been filled by the choice of Deacon Thomas Todd. Rev. F. J. Marsh was registrar and Rev. J. W. Flagg assistant registrar. Dr. Eldridge Mix assisted very acceptably throughout the meetings as leader of the singing.

THE ANNUAL SERMON

To these words: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," the preacher, Rev. C. E. Jefferson, quietly directed the attention of the large congregation which gathered the first evening. A brief review of the circumstances under which the utterance was made and of the lasting impression of the teachings of that sublime hour upon those present were introductory to a season of searching thought. The passion of the love-spirit in the apostles and in the early church was made the basis of a discriminating discourse upon the drift of the church to a certain extent away from the foundation principle, love, into the by-paths of form and belief. The distinction between the meaning of "church" and "congregation" was enlarged upon to illustrate the results of the two processes at work among Christians of uniting on the one hand and of merely gathering individuals on the other. The problem of Christ's followers today, said the preacher, is to blend the lives of Christians into brotherhoods, according to the lessons which were earliest taught, but which have been most often forgotten. Other work and study must still advance, but the world awaits this great movement which shall transform the congregation into a brotherhood and fulfill for the members of each church the Saviour's wish "that they may be one."

The theme and its development along the line of supplying a need which is often particularly indicated as existing among our churches was received generally as a fitting message to the churches throughout the State. After the sermon the communion was celebrated, and an offering of $82 was made for the ministerial relief fund.

TOPICS OF VITAL IMPORT

The general trend of most of the topics ran along the thought of increasing spirituality, as in the group: The Relation of the Pulpit, the Prayer Meeting and the Sunday School or Y. P. S. C. E. to the Spiritual Life of the Church. The speakers on these themes were Dr. W. H. Davis and Rev. W. W. Jordan and Dr. J. L. Hill. The first considered the conspicuous place of the pulpit. As such it has been the engine and fuel-room of the church life and activities, and has exerted an influence in that life second to no other force. Consequently, as the medium of God's messages to his people, any substitution of other than spiritual guidance weakens its power and degrades its position. Character, sympathy, timeliness and spirituality are four qualities needed in the modern pulpit, if it would maintain its leadership. The speakers who followed emphasized the essential qualities which should be evident among individual church members of all ages and in their organizations.

The evening topic, The Church in Modern City Life, called forth two rousing addresses by Rev. C. P. Mills and Pres. M. E. Gates of Amherst. Treating of The Church and Secular Societies, the first speaker said: To Christianity as its originator must be accredited the good found in any secular society, and for the sake of a comparison between it and the church he erected the latter, in the imagination of his hearers, upon the four great pillars which he conceived as its foundation. The divine origin of the church rises above the human structure of secular societies. The distinguished men of the past, as originators of these inferior organizations, must stand beside the living God. Then the spiritual aim and mission of the church contrasts with the merely humanitarian society. Again, the sympathies of a Christian body are universal toward all conditions, while the society is more or less restricted. The fourth pillar is its eternal duration. Every secular society is destined to an epitaph. Hence, although the church must include working human conditions, its base must be laid near human needs, and until its service be Christian societies will perform part of its work.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH, WORCESTER

On the subject The Church and Spiritual Power President Gates spoke sound doctrine, beginning with the greater need in the churches of a knowledge of the historic Christ. Whatever of investigation and criticism there has been in the last forty years, he claimed, has only brought the Christ who dwelt among men more strongly to view, and that he once lived and still lives is the great fact taught today. Never before was his moral supremacy more exalted, and people are longing for a knowledge of him more than we are aware. But to a living Christ they and we must turn, and a personal contact is open to those seeking him. The force of the Holy Spirit is within reach to equip those who grasp it for all the needs which the world feels.

SABBATH KEEPING

From year to year the importance of activity in regard to Sunday observance is cherished faithfully by the brethren. Extensive consideration was planned for this year and the opening of the subject was a long report, which struck root in the Puritan Lord's Day and then reviewed the results of the work of the special committee of last year. In State legislation no progress was recorded, on the contrary the changes of recent years tend toward relaxing strictness. But the accomplishments of the association's representatives encourage a hope in the special instances of decided victories which they have noted. Young People's C. E. Societies have rallied in force to save the Sabbath from baseball in Springfield and from open saloons in Worcester, while the Y. M. C. A., the W. C. T. U. and Protective Leagues have joined hands in the crusade. Lawbreakers have been convicted, have appealed and finally have paid fines. Excursions on the Sabbath have been forbidden, stores open on Sunday have been closed, and chiefest of all, perhaps, a campaign of education, capable of great extension another year, has been started, which will have served its purpose if public sentiment is aroused to action through the organizations already existing.

Three strong pleas were made. Rev. E M. Noyes set forth the Divine Authority for the Lord's Day, showing how Christ taught his disciples the Scriptural observance of the Sabbath, and that his example, reaffirming Old Testament commands, made them applicable for today. Dr. Reuen Thomas, in a forcible address, gave suggestions as to What Pastors, Churches and Sunday Schools Can Do to Promote Sunday Observance. He indicated some necessities of human nature that make Sabbath keeping imperative. This outward token of man's allegiance to God is also the sign of progress sure to be evident. The future of the Sabbath, said he, is dependent upon the attitude of the ministers. Rev. M. D. Kneeland then presented the work of the Sunday Protective League, reminding the association of the generous support the league had received from Congregationalism and that such an attitude was only just since the league owed its origin to Congregationalists.

The committee on labor organization rehearsed its efforts singly and in co-operation with other organizations in seeking to secure protection for workmen on Sunday, and told how different classes of employés had solicited the attention and help of the committee in securing one rest day in seven.

RECORDS OF 1896–7

The report of Secretary Hazen called attention to the venerable age and large growth of the association, whose centennial seems now almost to be in sight; and then after such reference fittingly paid tribute at length to the late Dr. A. H. Quint, whose death occurred since the last meeting. The memory of his forty years' work in the body and its untold value to Congregationalism were recalled in appreciative remarks. The denomination has become stronger during the year y the addition of six churches, making the otal 593, with a membership of 111,223. The ain of members is 1,044. Additions numered 6,432, of whom 3,382 were on confession. Benevolences amounted to $658,551, and home xpenses to $1,587,443.

A microscopic view of the past year's hurch work was given by Rev. T. C. Welles n a detailed summary of answers received in eply to questions sent to all the churches. These interrogations had been submitted: What is the apparent spiritual condition of our church? What proportion of resident members attend the midweek meeting? Do many find Christ but express no desire to join he church? How make the Sunday school nd C. E Society a greater spiritual power in he church? In the almost unlimited range f responses much of thought and suggestion was compacted, which might be summed up s descriptive of a fairly satisfactory condiion.

STATE HOME MISSIONS

An afternoon session was given to the State H. M. S., Dr. C. B. Rice, one of the vice-presidents, presiding. The statements of Secreary Coit and Treasurer Palmer showed total eceipts last year of $100,315, nearly $50,000 ess than last year. The great falling off is accounted for mainly by the receipt of fewer egacies. The national society is the better off by over $97,000 on account of gifts from Massachusetts, about one-third of which went hrough the State society. The missionary work in Massachusetts has required $58,782 and the administration of affairs $5,279. Grants were made to 139 churches and missions, twenty-eight of which were "foreign." Besides two regular general missionaries thireen special workers have directed the efforts among these nationalities: Armenians, Finns, Greeks, Italians, Norwegians, Swedes and French. In all 138 workers have cared for ,007 families, among whom are 7,750 church members. Into the home missionary churches 01 new members have been received, 531 on confession.

Notwithstanding the financial support of the society has fallen off largely the past year, nearly as many churches have been aided by the same number of workers as during the previous year, and a much larger number of persons has been reached. Following the reports the topic What Should Be the Policy of the Association with Regard to Foreign Population? was generally discussed, Dr. W. E. Barton, President M. E. Gates, Dr. J. R. Thurston and others participating. Rev. Franklin Carter was re-elected president. Special attention was called later by Dr. A. E. Dunning to the valuable work of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association.

THE BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY

This increasingly important agency, now having been in operation since 1894, reports a growth in business as large as conveniences made practicable. This period of its existence has provided an accumulation of experience and judgment, however, which, working under the shadow of strict confidence, bids fair to further increase the value and scope of its advantages and opportunities. During a full year past the board served 135 churches in regard to filling the pulpit, every one in answer to an official request for co-operation. It acted an important part in effecting fifty-six settlements and provided 101 opportunities for candidates to preach as such. The smaller churches constitute the largest proportion of those helped, but of churches with a membership of 300 and over twenty-three were served. The percentage of pastors who have resigned after settlements effected through the board is but a little over a third of those settled otherwise and who resigned during the same length of time. Total receipts last year were $2,338, of which about $1,400 were contributed by the churches. Enlarged contributions to the financial needs of such a work would make it possible greatly to increase the breadth and efficiency of the service. The precise workings of the board as a medium between the seekers and sought was clearly described at length. That the work is of great usefulness to the churches is the conviction of those who know its operations.

SUNDRY IMPORTANT DOINGS

An open eye has been kept by the committee on gambling upon communities where pool selling and other forms of gambling have been carried on. Marked changes for the better have been recorded in western Massachusetts, and particularly in the cities of Worcester and Medford. A sharp lookout, vigorous opposition, enlightened public opinion and law respecting city officials have been the forces operating successfully in these places.

The report of the temperance committee also revealed some authoritative facts, which warmed the interest in the efforts for protection by organizations and individuals. The extensive work of distributing 20,000 publications of a religious character showed that the special committee for that purpose had been busy.

Ministerial relief had a hearing in the words of Rev. Dr. N. H. Whittlesey, the secretary of the movement. He urged practical comradeship among ministers, and showed what had been accomplished in twelve years. The fund now amounts to over $100,000, which makes it possible to assist forty families, but not until it is greatly increased can a favorable comparison be sustained to relief given by some sister denominations to their veterans and needy families.

Amendments to the constitution are annually before the association, and this year one proposing to make every Congregational minister in the State a member of the State body, thus enlarging the proportion of clergymen to laymen, was responsible for hours of warm debate, after which the whole matter was indefinitely postponed. Resolutions deploring the failure of the ratification of the arbitration treaty were accompanied by an assurance addressed to friends of humanity in England and everywhere that the action of the Senate fails to express the real Christian judgment of the American people. Delegates were appointed to attend the convention of the National Anti-Saloon League in Columbus, O. The election of nominees for corporate membership in the American Board resulted in the choice of Rev. Messrs. Reuen Thomas, D.D., Brookline; F. B. Makepeace and H. P. Beach, Springfield; F. S. Hatch, Monson; and for laymen: Hon. A. H. Wellman, Malden; Dr. J. C. Berry, Worcester; and Messrs. J. C. Buttrick, Lowell; Edward Whitin, Whitinsville. A contemplated change of the Week of Prayer from January to November was disapproved without discussion as a breaking away from a world-wide custom.

THE FINAL WORDS

The closing session was one of uncommon profit. Dr. A. H. Plumb gave a characteristic address on The Pentecostal Power of the Church Today. A more satisfying hour could not have closed the convention. Its thought was prophetic of the advent of those very conditions—brotherly love and right relations between men—for which a powerful plea was made in the opening sermon. There will be changes in manifestation of Pentecostal power, contended Dr. Plumb, due to modified conditions of modern times, but changed conditions will not alter eternal relations. The development of Christian love is advancing and will convince the world of Christ. It is in this quarter that the light is breaking forth, as is indicated by the leadings of the Spirit. Pentecostal Christianity has wrought the beneficent changes of the past. To disclaim that is to abandon the victories of the past and the conquering forces of the future.

Gratitude for the hospitality of the Worcester brethren was manifested by words and acts. The inspiration to the local churches will be their recompense. The total number of delegates present was a little over 275, of whom about 110 were laymen. Only 178 churches were represented, leaving over 400 churches not heard from. The evening congregations were, as usual, the largest, but the general attendance as a rule was fair. The place of the next meeting is Greenfield.

H. H. S.

CHIPS FROM WORCESTER

To de-spiritualize a man is to demoralize him.—Dr. Thomas.

The vote of thanks to the press was deserved and appreciated. No names were mentioned.

The moderator's genial bearing lubricated the parliamentary machinery for easy running.

The foreigner is here, and he is here to be dealt with or he will deal with us.—Dr. W. E. Barton.

Ques.: "Is there such a thing as legal gambling?" Ans.: "Possibly it refers to church fairs!"

"I don't know," said an on-looker, "exactly what church they come from. But they're either orthodox or Baptists."

If such delicate points of order are to be kept at the fore, it may be difficult to secure a presiding officer next year.

As a rule the congregations were large and during business periods patient. Perhaps it was because no clock was in sight.

The moderator had little difficulty in keeping the members down to the prescribed limit of time during the general discussions.

It was suggested more than once that Children's Day have wider observance, and that the Sunday School Society reap some financial benefit from special collections.

Drift there certainly has been from historic, doctrinal landmarks, but towards a deeper, if unformulated, hunger for the truth and spirit of "the God man."—Dr. W. H. Davis.

Young pastors must have gone home brimful of parliamentary rulings. But we hope the time which might be spent in practicing them is given over to reports of the sessions.

Dr. Hazen stimulated an anticipation for the second International Council by the announcement that it was practically settled that it would meet in Boston in the summer of 1899.

The congregation is nothing but a handful of sand. It must be baptized with fire before it has the compactness of a rock. A church, a brotherhood, is built on a rock.—Rev. C. E. Jefferson.

Not a few thanks are due to one clear-headed debater that the discussion of membership in the State body was finally wound up after hours of getting nowhere. It was reaching the point where delegates began to wonder who really were members at all.

Union Church, a close neighbor to Plymouth, kindly opened the doors of its new edifice for a brief organ recital one evening, and an admiring audience took pleasure in congratulating the new pastor on the splendid temple which his people had erected for Congregational worship.

The ease with which our Worcester friends entertained their guests will lead the association to a favorable consideration of another invitation later. Not during the first century of the body, however, since the city has already done more than her share, and since there are nearly enough invitations already extended to carry the meetings into the second century.

If the brother pastor or layman who in his haste to catch the train after the last session unwittingly took the hat of one of the local newspaper reporters will kindly communicate with the registrar of the association, Rev. F. J. Marsh, Congregational House, Boston, the latter will put his inquirer upon the track of a re-exchange, which will doubtless be considerably more satisfactory all round.

A CHOICE BIT FROM A LOCAL PAPER

Deacon Thomas Dodd, the moderator, was placed in a most trying position during the afternoon, and his rulings were remarkable considering the confusion on the floor. An inquiry from the chair always brought out a clear, concise statement. He won the admiration of the convention. Deacon Dodd is a member of the Trinitarian Congregational Church of Concord and a printer by occupation. He is a well-built man, with a heavy beard and a clean-cut, firm, intelligent face.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Boston Ministers' Meeting holds no session May 31.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

Andover Theological Seminary, Anniversary, June 6–10. Sunday, 10.30 A. M., sacrament of the Lord's Supper; 4 P. M., sermon to the Graduating Class by Rev. Prof. William H. Ryder, D. D. Tuesday, 10.30 A. M., examination of the Junior Class in New Testament Greek; 2 P. M., examination of the Middle Class in Biblical theology; 4 P. M., examination of the Senior Class in homiletics; 7.45 P. M., anniversary of the Society of Inquiry. Address by Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D. D. Wednesday, 8.30 A. M., vocal culture; 9.30 A. M., examination of the Junior Class in Hebrew; 9.30 A. M., examination of the Senior Class in church history; 11.15, A. M., examination of the Middle Class in theology; 2.30 P. M., meeting of the alumni: business; necrology, by Rev. C. C. Carpenter, secretary; discussion on The State of Religion in New England, Rev. Charles B. Rice, D. D., Rev. Carl S. Patton, Rev. Burton W. Lockhart, D. D., Rev. William E. Barton, D. D.; further discussion; 7.30 P. M., social gathering of the alumni and other friends of the seminary. Thursday, 10.45 A. M., anniversary addresses by members of the Graduating Class; 1 P. M., anniversary dinner.

Hartford Theological Seminary, 63d anniversary, May 30 to June 3.

Woman's Board of Missions, Worcester County Branch, Boylston, June 3, 10 A. M.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Unions will be held in the Congregational church, Saratoga, N. Y., Tuesday, June 1, at 2.30 P. M.

The Congregational Home Missionary Society.—The Seventy-first Anniversary will be held in Saratoga, N. Y., from Tuesday to Friday, June 1 to 3. A meeting of secretaries and superintendents will be held Tuesday afternoon, June 1. In the evening there will be an address by the president of the society, Maj.-Gen. O. O. Howard, and the annual sermon by Rev. Frank T. Bayley of Denver, Col.

On Wednesday, June 2, there will be addresses in behalf of the society's auxiliaries by Rev. Alexander McGregor of Rhode Island, Rev. William H. Moore of Connecticut and Rev. T. O. Douglass, D. D., of Iowa; the fifteenth annual meeting of the Woman's Department, Mrs. H. S. Caswell, secretary, presiding. Addresses by Mrs. R. B. Wright, The Day of Small Things; Rev. R. B. Wright, On the Frontier; Mrs. James B. Gregg, Woman in Colorado; Miss Marie Zoltak, With the Slovak. In the afternoon the co-operating societies will be represented, and there will be addresses by the secretaries of the Congregational Church Building Society, the Congregational Education Society, also the Ministerial Relief Committee. The annual meeting of the society for the election of officers will be held, hearing reports and other business. In the evening a paper by Sec. Joseph B. Clark will be read, entitled A Year of Distress, and there will be addresses by Rev. A. F. Sherrill, D. D., Illinois: Supt. J. H. Parker, Oklahoma; Supt. H. A. Schauffler, D. D., Ohio; Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, Eastern field secretary.

Thursday morning, June 3, a paper by Sec. Washington Choate will be read, entitled Fixed Factors in Home Missions. Addresses will be delivered by Supts. A. K. Wray, Missouri; Harmon Bross, D. D., Nebraska; E. H. Ashmun, New Mexico; Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, D. D., Detroit, Mich.; Rev. H. H. Kelsey, Hartford, Ct Thursday afternoon there will be addresses by Supts. L. P. Broad, Kansas; W. H. Thrall, South Dakota, T. W. Jones, D. D., Pennsylvania; T. G. Grassie, North Wisconsin. These addresses will be followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Thursday evening there will be addresses by Rev. A. H. Bradford, D. D., Montclair, N. J., Rev. Reuen Thomas, D. D, Brookline, Mass., and Rev. John L. Scudder of Jersey City, N. J.

TRANSPORTATION

The Trunk Line Association, which covers territory from Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Salamanca, N. Y., Erie and Pittsburg, Pa., and all points east thereof except New England, will pass over its roads for one-third fare in returning all certificates of attendants on the meeting who pay full fare in going. All rates on this basis require that certificates be obtained from the ticket agent at the starting point or the nearest station issuing through tickets to the place of meeting, and to be valid for reduction of return fares must be indorsed by special agent of the Railroad Association, who will be in attendance at Saratoga. This condition is necessary to secure one-third return fare. Round trip tickets will be furnished at the following rates: Boston, $6 85; Ayer, $6.05; Fitchburg, $5.60; Worcester, $5.60; Gardner, $4.90; Miller's Falls, $3.85; Greenfield, $3.60; Shelburne Falls, $3.15; North Adams, $2.50. These tickets will be good going from May 29 to June 3, inclusive, and good to return until June 15. The People's Line of steamers on Hudson River, leaving New York, Pier 41, North River, foot of Canal Street, offer a rate of one fare and a third, or $3.60, from New York to Saratoga and return to delegates attending the annual meeting.

HOTELS AND BOARDING HOUSES

The figures in parenthesis indicate in each case the number of persons that can be accommodated.

$1.00 to $1 25 per day. Miss D. A. Pierce, 103 Circular St. (25); Mrs. Walker, 53 Spring St. (18); Mrs. M. G. Fitzgerald, 135 Circular St. (10); Mrs. Tracy Record, 3 Batchelor Row, Regent St. (12); Mrs. Vine, 186 Regent St. (12); Mrs. Laura Allen, 48 Phila. St. (10); Mrs. M. Ingalls, 63 Franklin St. (8); Elmwood Hall, Maple Ave. (40); Congress Park House, opposite Congress Park (12); Waring House, 33 Franklin St. (80); Washburn House, 41 Washington St. (40); Mrs. J. Abel, 73 Spring St. (15); Mrs. Orvis Carpenter, 38 Walton St. (20); Mary E. Moore, 75 Spring St. (30); the Old Homestead, Franklin St. (30); Mrs. Wm. R. Hills, 120 Grand Ave. (8); Summer Rest, 75 Spring St. (30).

$1.00 to 1.50 per day. The Franklin House, Church St. (80); Broadway House (40); Everett House, South Broadway (150); Miss L. R. Hunter, 49 Phila. St. (6); the Vermont House (125).

$1.25 to $1.50 per day. Columbian, South Broadway (15); the Lafayette, 109 Circular St. (100); Mrs. W. H. Corbine, No. 1 Papineau Building, cor. Broadway and Washington Sts. (8); the Linwood, South Broadway (50); the Hill Side Trim Cottage, 61 Phila. St. (25).

$1.50 to $2.00 per day. Huestis House, South Broadway (125); American Adelphi (400); Worden Hotel, Broadway (50).

The above rates are for two in a room. Persons desiring further information as to accommodations may address the local committee of arrangements, of which Rev. William O. Wark, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., is chairman.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Rhode Island,	Newport,	Tuesday, June 8.
Vermont,	Middlebury,	Tuesday, June 8.
Conn. Asso.	New Haven,	Tuesday, June 15.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev. N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

It is not unusual to continue evangelistic services for a brief period after the close of the Week of Prayer. But the "perseverance of the saints" in that Minnesota church which protracted the meetings for upwards of four months is certainly noteworthy, and deserves the large reward it has received.

Our State gatherings have taken us by storm to such an extent this week that items from individual churches suffer to some extent. Let correspondents and readers expect larger things in local matters next time.

It is gratifying to note that active members of some New England churches are engaged in the seasonable occupation of grading and seeding church lawns and setting out trees to bless future generations.

The speakers at a recent New York club meeting strikingly illustrated the truism that "it makes all the difference in the world from what point of view one looks at an object."

That business experience contributes an important element in preparation for the ministry is freshly illustrated this week by the success of a Minnesota pastor.

A Michigan evangelist believes in going to those whom he would reach.

Of Special Note

A novel and broadening service in a Los Angeles church.

A prominent Massachusetts pulpit vacated.

THE ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK

The sixty-fourth session was held with the Tompkins Avenue Church, Brooklyn, from Tuesday afternoon, the 18th, to Thursday evening. With it, according to custom, were held sessions of the New York State Home Missionary Society and of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies. A cablegram was received on the opening day from the pastor, Rev. R. R. Meredith, D. D., who was at Gibraltar after a pleasant voyage, and a cablegram was sent to him and Mrs. Meredith from the association. Rev. Richard Meredith acted acceptably as host in place of his brother.

The attendance locally was light and the representation from the State was less than usual, but the whole meeting was one of the best for many years. The business was dispatched with promptness under the moderatorship of Dr. W. E. Park of Gloversville. The social hours at the noon lunch in the church parlors were enlivened by his wit and by happy impromptu speeches. The spirit of the meetings was most fraternal and the themes presented and discussed of a vital character. Dr. Park gave an interesting résumé of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage to England and Holland, which has become historical.

The annual sermon, by Rev. W. T. Sutherland, had for its text: "Surely the Lord was in this place and I knew it not," the thought being that God is still with us in all changes of thought and new lines of work. Rev. W. F. Kettle spoke on the Supreme Need of the Times, which he held to be more of the Holy Spirit in the churches. He was heartily applauded when he said that there would be no bazars and fairs when the churches were more spiritual. Rev. J. C. Wilson presented a thoughtful and fair review of The Leading Ideas of the New Theodicy, but there was no time to follow his paper with a discussion. Prof. J. R. Commons stirred the association by an able paper on The Value of the Study of Political Economy to the Ministry. It called out questioning and free discussion. Professor Commons is not a theorist but a practical worker, and was residing at the University Settlement during the sessions of the association, studying the work and joining in it. The chief address was by Dr. A. J. F. Behrends, whose subject was: Back to Tradition and Nearer to Christ.

Missionary work was vigorously presented. Dr. T. B. McLeod spoke on Home Missions at Home or The Needs of Greater New York. Dr. H. A. Stimson, in the session of the H. M. S., declared that if Congregationalism could not succeed in New York city it could not stand anywhere. In addressing the woman's Board of Missions he said that if we presented the work more faithfully we should not need to appeal so constantly for money. The local is a national issue. Dr. Grace N. Kimball's address upon Our Work in Turkey was of profound and sad interest. She pleaded for the support of the missions there and not merely the relief work, believing that Turkey would become Russia before long, but that strong missions could not, by comity of nations, be destroyed, even by the Greek Church. Rev. J. H. Parker spoke interestingly on Oklahoma and Mrs. Ida V. Woodbury on her recent impressions of the A. M. A. work as a worker herself.

On Wednesday evening came the twenty-fifth anniversary of the State H. M. S., previous to which a most significant conference had been held between the trustees of the society, the secretaries of the National Society and pastors from Brooklyn and other parts of the State. A union was inaugurated between the State and Metropolitan work which have been separated and the happiest spirit prevailed in the councils. In his annual address the president of the society, Rev. E. N. Packard, D. D., presented The Essential Unity of City and Country Missions, State and National Work and Home and Foreign Work.

Three hundred and eighteen missionaries of the American Board have gone out from New York State and city since the early days of missions abroad. Marcus Whitman was born in Yates County in a church now small and feeble. The addresses of Dr. W. A. Robinson, twelve years president, and Dr. R. J. Kent presented the past and the future of missionary work in the Empire State It was fitting that the closing session should leave us confronted with the great commission. Dr. G. T. Washburn of India, Dr. F. S. Fitch and Secretary Creegan gave effective addresses. Dr. Fitch dwelt on the permanent motives to the work, Dr. Creegan brought good news of legacies and new appointments and assured us that the board was not going out of business. Dr. Washburn told of actual work on the field.

The association nominated for corporate membership in the American Board Rev. Messrs. R. J. Kent, S. E. Eastman, W. B. Thorp, W. H. Pound and W. J. Kettle and Messrs. W. H. Nichols of Brooklyn and Charles B. Pierce and A. P. Holmes of New York. Rev. C. H. Dickinson presented a report as visitor to Oberlin Seminary. The next meeting will be held in Norwich. E. N. P.

THE OHIO ASSOCIATION

The forty-fifth annual meeting was held in the First Church, Sandusky, May 18-20. The meeting of the Ohio Church History Society Tuesday afternoon was the most largely attended of any of the eight in the society's life. Its financial affairs were never in better condition, and its usefulness is seen to be increasing annually. Rev. E. O. Mead was elected president, and Rev. D. L. Leonard, the indefatigable and indispensable secretary, was re-elected. The History of Puritan Conference, presented by the register, J. W. Seward, was replete with facts of permanent value.

A Century of Congregationalism in Cleveland, by J. G. Frazer, started out with a series of paradoxes, and was as interesting as a story-book to the end. The History of the First Congregational Church of Columbus, by Mrs. Abram Brown, made us realize how far we had come in the last fifty years, and the History of the First Society and Church of Oberlin, by Rev. D. L. Leonard, laid before us both the excellences and eccentricities of Oberlin's colonial period. Every paper was able, appropriate and interesting.

The first meeting of the association proper was called to order by the retiring moderator, Rev. H. M. Ladd. The address of welcome by the pastor, Rev. C. A. Vincent, was spicy, spiritual and hearty. Dr. Ladd's sermon from Rom. 1: 15, "As much as in me is I am ready," was a cultured and earnest appeal to the Congregational churches to use their culture in the spirit of the Master to help the less fortunate. The communion season was sweet and tender, presided over by Rev. A. B. Cristy and Rev. E. B. Fairfield, whose last meeting with the Ohio brethren was twenty-three years ago.

The splendid new edifice, the reports of the constant, wide and harmonious activities of the church, the well-known spiritual power and geniality of the pastor and the beautiful weather, all had aroused expectation of an exceptionally good meeting, and before the close of the first session it was evident that there would be no disappointment. Opening on a lofty spiritual plane, without lacking any of the intellectual excellence of former meetings, it surpassed in inspirational power and practical helpfulness any in the last decade.

Organization was effected Wednesday morning by the election of Rev. C. S. Mills moderator, Rev. E. O. Mead assistant, Rev. Jesse Hill scribe and Rev. Byron Long assistant. The Ohio Home Missionary Society, into which the association transforms itself with protean swiftness, told the sad story of decreasing contributions for seven years, ending in a debt of over $2,000, but inspired by the leadership of Cleveland Conference, which assumed one-third of the debt, seconded by Plymouth Rock Conference, which assumed its proportionate share, the association faced the situation with heroic determination and definite plans to wipe out the debt in short order.

The state of religion in the churches seems to be more than usually healthy in that regular and normal work are emphasized and results expected and obtained thereby.

The papers and addresses were gathered under the cumulative heads: A Church and Itself, A Church and Its Community, A Church and Its Country, A Church and the World. Under the first head Rev. G. A. Burgess treated of the building up of a church's spiritual life. He made everybody feel that his was the choice division of the subject and the proper introduction as well as the right beginning of all upbuilding of the church. There was general assent to Rev. Henry Stauffer's propositions on the building up of the church's social life, that a church should have an abounding and cordial social life and that it should originate in spiritual aims and move in a spiritual atmosphere. Rev. R. A George on the building up of the church's financial life presented a composite paper, prepared in part by the chairman of his church's financial committee. The position taken was that the business men of the churches ought to attend to the finances, leaving the pastor free for other work

Under the head of A Church and Its Community Rev. Charles K. Swartz spoke of the church and the non church-goer in an intelligent and sympathetic manner from his own experience in reaching the non-church-goer. Rev. H. L Bigelow, in speaking of The Church and the Poor, maintained that Christianity ought to abolish poverty, laying special stress on changing the conditions of society. The address was eloquent, thoughtful and incisive but not altogether convincing. Rev. C. W. Carroll said the preaching for the hour should be authoritative, with the authority that comes from living with God, personal so that the congregation would feel that the appeal was to them and to the conscience.

Rev. C. S. Mills said that the church should be organized for soul winning—first, by having the pastor's time organized, second, by having everybody in the church have something to do, and, third, by setting the people at personal work in groups for their own classes. These four brethren spoke from the abundance of their own successful experience in these lines.

Under the head of A Church and Its Country all the missionary societies working in our own land were heard from in addresses of more than usual earnestness and effectiveness; and under A Church and the World our foreign missionary work was presented by Mrs. R. M. Cole and Sec. Judson Smith. While all these addresses were listened to without a thought of weariness, Ohio was especially glad to hear again her own beloved brethren, Rev. Messrs. McMillen, Ryder and Smith, whom she has given to the larger work.

The moderator said that he had found the Ohio Association the most helpful of any of the four State associations with which he had been connected, but he felt that even for Ohio it was a great occasion when, in one evening, Rev. James Brand spoke on The Gift of Our Congregational Churches to Good Citizenship, and Rev. Washington Gladden on A Church and the Present Problems of Citizenship. The gifts which Dr. Brand enumerated were intelligence, the principle and practice of self-government and the religion of Jesus, and the one problem which Dr. Gladden discussed as the initial problem of citizenship was the selecting of good men to make laws.

The Problem of Ministerial Supply was presented by Rev. A. F. Skeels in a paper embodying the fruits of wide research. This and the vigorous discussion which followed, ably opened by Rev. J. R. Nichols, showed that the condition, while bad enough, is not as bad as appears on the surface. The address by Prof. E. I. Bosworth on Personal Piety and Ministerial Usefulness was known to be the expression of the professor's own pious and useful life and so, of course, came with great force. The devotional exercises were characterized by faith, spontaneity, Pentecostal fervor and definiteness in prayer. The discussions were earnest, spiritual, enlightening and participated in by many. Indeed, so fully was the spare time occupied by devotions and discussions, that the usual after-dinner speeches had to be omitted, although the ladies of Sandusky furnished two delightful lunches in the dining-room of their church. Every session was rich, intense and blessed, and doubtless there will be better work all the year in all the churches that had the privilege of being represented. E. O. M.

THE ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION

Circumstances combined to render this one of the most attractive meetings of recent years. The weather was superb. The city was in its best dress. The edifice in which the sessions were held was large and convenient. Its beautiful decorations were an indication of the welcome accorded, and of the thoughtful and bountiful Peorian hospitality. A ride Thursday to Prospect Heights and a lunch there gave opportunity for enjoying one of the most magnificent views in Illinois. From the tower of the hotel one's eye rests on a landscape not less than twenty miles in extent. The skill which Dr. Hiatt and his helpers exhibited in arranging for the comfort and efficiency of the association led to a request that he prepare a brief statement of things to be done by pastors and people with whom the association may hereafter meet, and that this statement be printed year by year in the minutes.

Over 200 clerical delegates were present. The churches sent more than the usual number of representatives. Few of the sessions were thinly attended. Wednesday morning was the smallest, owing to the fact that, in spite of frequent suggestions that some other time be taken, the meeting of the corporate members of the Home Missionary Society was held at that time, and that the women also were in session by themselves. The association voted to ask the missionary society to meet hereafter at a time which will not conflict with its regular exercises. The report of the society was encouraging. Now that city work, though not under the management of the State society, is reckoned as forming a part of it, it is possible to make a good showing, in spite of the fact that a less number of evangelists than usual have been employed, and that appropriations have been seriously diminished. Rev. J. D. McCord, who has been an evangelist eight years, resigned at the beginning of the year on account of the inability of the society to pay his salary for a longer time. No man has ever been more successful in this evangelistic work, and no man has ever loved such work more. Rev. R. W. Purdue, whose labors have been confined to the southern part of the State, withdrew at the same time to relieve the treasury of financial embarrassment. A Scandinavian evangelist has also been dismissed. Rev. Mr. Watson, employed jointly by the Home Missionary and Publishing Societies, labors in the Southern Association, thus leaving Rev. C. F. Van Auken the only evangelist in commission. His labors have been fruitful of much good.

Two persons, Rev. Messrs. Fairbank and Etheridge, have done a great deal of evangelistic work under the direction of the society but at their own charges. Notwithstanding the hard times, 118 persons have been commissioned by the society, or only thirteen less than last year. But this includes those employed by the city societies which also provide for their support. Of the $63,280 expended in the State, only $19,055 were raised by the State at large. Although there is certainly no good reason for criticism of the superintendent or of the executive committee for not doing what is beyond their power, it is still true that the missionary churches throughout the State and their pastors have not been altogether satisfied with the aid received. It may be doubted if it is wise for the State Society to report the income of the Chicago and the Peoria Societies as a part of its own income.

The sermon, which gave satisfaction to all who heard it, was preached by Rev. G. H. Wilson from Eph. 5: 25, on The Church Needed in Our Era. For the first time the Lord's Supper was at the beginning rather than at the close of the sessions of the association. Rev. Dr. Willard Scott was moderator. His prompt and cheerful way of presiding added greatly to the value of the sessions. The program, as usual, was crowded to overflowing. There was altogether too little time for business and far too little for devotional meetings. The address of the retiring moderator, President Blanchard, the report of the Home Missionary Society already mentioned, and a paper on The Preaching for Today, by R. J. Bennett, Esq., occupied the morning hours.

The Tuesday afternoon session was devoted to a consideration of Sunday school work, Rev. Dr. J. F. Loba of Evanston making a thoughtful address on its importance, Rev. W. F. McMillen reporting what has been done for Sunday schools in the State during the year and R. E. Jenkins, Esq., one of the most earnest and successful of Sunday school superintendents, describing some of the methods which must be employed in order to make Sunday schools grow. Five churches, says Mr. McMillen, report no Sunday school. In all there are 331 church schools, with 1,972 officers, 4,233 teachers and 48,981 pupils. Adding twenty-six schools formed during the year, there are 104 mission schools with a membership of 10,893. There has been a gain of sixteen schools in the year, and of 3,068 scholars. There are thirty eight home classes with a membership of 876. The average attendance in all the schools is estimated at 44,000. The efficiency in this department of Christian work is due in part to the remarkable service rendered by Mrs. Mary F. Bryner, formerly superintendent of the Primary Department of the Union Park Sunday school. Her addresses at different times during the meeting were listened to with eagerness.

Recess was devoted to a reception in the parlors of the church, and was one of the attractive features of the gathering. Tuesday evening was devoted to the Bible. First came a paper by Dr. S. H. Dana on what is needed in order to increase interest in the Bible. He called attention to some of the results to which higher criticism has led, and showed how reverent study of the Scriptures and a study which does not shrink from meeting difficulties leads in the end to a truer and more reverent appreciation of them. Dr. A. R. Thain of The Advance, while apparently laying rather more stress than Dr. Dana on the usual arguments for the inspiration of the Scriptures, yet made it evident that he is a believer in their critical study, and has no fears lest the Bible ever lose its hold on the heart of man.

Wednesday morning came a paper on Academies and one on How to Increase the Efficiency of Our Church Papers, by Rev. W. A. Cutler, Chenoa. A good deal of fault was found with our present papers, and especially with The Advance, which it was claimed does not represent the churches as a whole. It was also charged that editors are mercenary in their motives, and it was assumed that newspaper stock is extremely profitable. Mr. Cutler thinks that the churches should own their papers, and that they should be endowed, and their editors placed in a position where they may venture to express their honest convictions freely! At a subsequent discussion Gen. C. H. Howard, so long connected with The Advance, repudiated the charge of a mercenary spirit in editors, and pointed out the difficulties in the way of carrying out the plan proposed by Mr. Cutler. Rev. Mr. Campbell and Dr. Thain also took part in the discussion, the former advocating the views of the essayist, the latter as vigorously opposing them. It was also shown that The Congregationalist, although owned by private parties, is yet endeavoring to represent all phases of thought in its columns, to give every man a fair hearing, and in each of its issues to present a mirror of so much of the world's doings as will interest its readers. Secretary Taintor presented the needs of the Church Building Society, and Dr. G. R. Wallace of Englewood read an attractive paper on the Mission of Literature.

Two hours of the afternoon session were given to the women members of the association. Rev. Mary L. Moreland gave a historical résumé of Woman's Work in the Church; Mrs. Sidney Strong pointed out the place which woman is filling in home missionary service; Mrs. N. C. Dougherty spoke of the opportunities for heroism now furnished in our Christian service, and Mrs. Bryner of the children in our midst. A class of lads and misses described, under the guidance of their teacher, in a vivid way the Home Missionary Locomotive, and thus presented clearly the various branches into which the benevolent work of our churches is divided. Christian education, as Congregationalists regard it, was discussed by Secretary Bliss, the college by Professor Fischer of Wheaton, and the seminary by Professor Harper of Chicago. There were two great addresses Wednesday evening, one on The Religious Aspect of the Labor Movement, by John P. Gavit of the Chicago Commons, and another by the indescribable Puddefoot on Plenty of Money for Things We Like. His speech was like the rushing of a mighty torrent, and, while sparkling in brilliant sayings, was yet intensely earnest and practical.

Thursday morning Rev. George L. Cady read a paper on Sentimental Sociology, in which, while affirming himself a believer in what the sociologists are seeking to accomplish, he pointed out what he deems the weakness of their methods, viz., their habit of overlooking the freedom of the will as a factor in determining conduct and forming character, and of placing undue stress upon heredity and environment. Problems of reform were discussed in a paper by Rev. Dr. H. A. Bushnell in the afternoon, Dr. Sturtevant spoke on the present situation in relation to our missionary work, and Rev. G. H Smith read a thoughtful paper on Christian Stewardship, and the evening was given to an address by Secretary Barton on the present outlook for Christian work in Turkey, and to an address on the Church in the Centuries by John B. Koehne of Pittsburg, Pa.

FRANKLIN.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Andover

This year Professor Harris has assigned subjects for brief essays to be read by members of the class in theology at the public examinations. The students will be questioned further by the examiners and Board of Visitors on their subjects.——The Old Testament seminar, which met with Professor Moore, has finished its work for the year. Part of the book of Daniel was critically examined, thus furnishing study and practice in exegesis on historical and literary grounds.——Examinations in the elective courses come this week.

Hartford

The order of exercises for Commencement week has just been published. Oral examinations will be held June 1, 2. An address will be delivered Tuesday evening by Rev. A. J. Lyman, D. D., of Brooklyn on The Truth of the Incarnation in Certain Practical Applications. The speakers from the Graduating Class are: E. W. Bishop, C. O. Eames, W. C. Rhoades, W. B. Tuthill and N. H. Weeks.——The monthly missionary meeting consisted of critical reviews of the missionary publications of the different denominations.

Yale

Professor Porter gave two closing lectures on Professor Harnack's recent work on Early Christian Literature, which were of great interest.——The closing class prayer meeting of the Senior Class was held on Tuesday last, conducted by H. F. Rall. Preceding it Professor Brastow preached a helpful sermon on The Unity of the Church.——W. W. Wallace of the Graduate Class will leave next month for his mission field in India. He taught there three years before entering the seminary.——W. B. Stelle of the Graduating Class will go out under the Baptist Board, probably to China.——The Fogg scholarships were awarded to the following members of the Junior Class: A. A. Amy, G. N. Edwards, E. R. Evans, H. A. Jump, E. W. Lyman, F. H. Wapes, D. Y. Moor, L. T. Reed, E. B. Robinson, B. L. York.——C. C. Merrill has been elected permanent secretary of the Graduating Class.——The missionary society has elected W. B. Street as president for next year. J. P. Deane will be superintendent of mission work.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

MINN.—Winona Conference held its 431 meeting in the little village of Mazeppa, May 18, 19, and was received with unusual hospitality by the church and its enterprising pastor, Rev. J. E. Inghan. The general topic was The Twentieth Century's Call to Christianity. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. H Chandler on The Renewed Church and the New Era. Some of the principal topics were: The Twentieth Century's Call for a Higher Standard of Education and Spirituality in the Pulpit, Christ in Twentieth Century Business Life, Christian Sociology, Christ for the World—the World for Christ. The singing by a boys' choir lent variety to the program. An unpleasant feature was the necessity of suspending from membership Rev. M. H. Galer, formerly of Stewartville, because of charges of immoral and unministerial conduct. He will be given a year to make answer to these charges before final action is taken. Dr L. L. West, committee on the A. M. A. debt, reported $300 in prospect in Winona and Western conferences.

Anoka Conference, comprising nearly a quarter of the churches in the State, met at Excelsior, May 18–20, the moderator, Rev. L. H. Keller, giving the opening address. Topics discussed were: Preparation for Service, (a) In Character, (b) By the Word, (c) By the Holy Spirit; Shirking Service; Woman's Service Abroad and at Home; Service in Missions; In the Sunday School; Responsibility for Service, (a) Of the Pastor, (b) Of the Members; Joy in Service. Reports from the churches showed them well supplied with pastors and prosperous both financially and spiritually. The entertaining church has made marked advance along all lines.

N. D.—The annual meeting of Jamestown Conference was held at Sanborn, May 18, 19. The sermon was preached by Rev. O. P. Champlin. Rev. S. M. Andrewson spoke upon the Scandinavian work, and in view of the many promising openings it was voted to ask the H. M. Society to commission Rev. L. J. Pedersen as general missionary among the Scandinavians. Fargo College, Home Missions and Our Missionary S. S. Work received attention. The severe retrenchment falls heavily upon the home missionaries.

NEB.—Northwestern Association met at Chadron, May 18, 19. The first day was devoted to S. S.

Royal makes the food pure,
wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

interests, under the lead of Supt. J. D. Stewart, who illustrated normal methods, the academy students attending this exercise in a body. During the second day valuable papers were read on Christian Fellowship, Man's Responsibility, The Mutualism of the Gospel. The letters from the churches reported revival interest and general progress. The woman's hour brought together a large and sympathetic audience. The claims of home missions, foreign work and Chadron Academy were presented. Strong resolutions were adopted pledging renewed loyalty and support to the H. M. Society in its present emergency.

WN.—North Yakima Association met at Atahnum, May 11, 12, with large attendance. Rev. Messrs. E. C. Wheeler and L. W. Brintnall preached. The interests of home missions and S. S. work were presented by their respective superintendents; Christian Endeavor, foreign missions and Puget Sound Academy also received attention and the rest of the program included addresses and discussions on subjects peculiarly adapted to the field.

ORE.—Mid Columbia Association, which embraces all of Eastern Oregon, met at Lexington, 188 miles east of Portland. The associational sermon was preached by Rev. J. E. Walker of Foochow, China. One of the most interesting topics was How to Get Church Members at Work. The discussion of missions aroused so much interest that it resulted in the organization of a woman's missionary society in the local church.

CAL.—Upper Bay Conference and Sacramento Association held a joint meeting at Woodland the first week in May. So interesting were the sessions that arrangements are being made to unite the two bodies. Discussions were enjoyed on The Church in Its Relation to Fellowship, Equipment, Temperance, The Community, The Successful Pastor, Home Life and Mothers' Work.

CLUBS

N. H.—The second annual meeting of the Ascutney Club, held at West Lebanon, May 20, was an enjoyable and successful affair. The annual reports were encouraging. The address was by President Buckham of the University of Vermont on the subject, Are We Degenerating? Orchestral music was a feature of the afternoon. Dr. W. J. Tucker of Dartmouth was elected president and Rev. E. T. Farrill of Lebanon, secretary.

The Central Club held its annual meeting at South Church chapel, Concord, May 19, with a large attendance. Officers were elected for the ensuing year, making choice of Hon. I. W. Smith for president. After an excellent dinner, served by the ladies of the church, the members listened with great pleasure to an address, elegant in its diction and able, by Pres M. H. Buckham of Vermont University on The Religious Influence of Literary Studies.

N. Y.—The New York Club closed its sessions for the season with a discussion of The Relations of Art to Public Worship. Three speakers dealt with the subject. Archdeacon C. C. Tiffany gave the view naturally to be expected from a cultivated Episcopal Churchman, finding in true art a welcome helper to religious worship. John La Farge, Esq., a professional artist, specially versed and interested in church architecture, spoke as an expert in art as adapted to the generating and expression of religious ideas and feelings. And last came Mr. James Wood of Mount Kisco, N. Y., a genuine Quaker by birth and early training, who has traveled over most of the world and seen nearly all its cathedrals and other structures devoted to so-called worship. His experience had only deepened in him the convictions early instilled into his mind and heart, that art at its best hinders rather than helps Christian " worship in spirit and in truth."

ILL.—Chicago Club held its last meeting of the season, May 17, at the Palmer House. It was ladies' night, and as the meeting was a reception for Dr and Mrs. J. H. Barrows, who had just reached the city from the lecture tour in India, there was a large attendance, and the meeting was a great success. After the tables had been removed, and exquisite music furnished by the Roney Quartet Club, Dr. Barrows gave an account of the religious conditions of India. Instead of occupying all the time, he kindly gave opportunity for questions, and many added points were brought out. Dr. Withrow and Dr. Hillis also took part in the exercises, and this meeting was considered one of the best of the club. Nearly 400 persons were present. Dr. Barrows has already begun his course of lectures in the university, and is in demand everywhere as preacher and lecturer.

NEW ENGLAND

Massachusetts

[For Boston news see page 763]

TAUNTON.—Winslow has reached the $40,000 mark in its building fund, and will proceed at once to erect a granite edifice, the plans of which were adopted two or three years ago. A fine lot has been secured in the resident portion of the city, a building committee has been appointed, and the work will be pushed forward at once. The house will be Gothic in architecture. Rev. Clayton Welles is pastor.

PALMER.—Second. The C. E. Society holds the banner for good citizenship work, awarded at the last county convention for temperance work. A great amount of work for temperance has been done in the town, owing to the earnest efforts of the pastor, Rev. F. E. Jenkins.

NORTH BROOKFIELD.—First. The young men of the First Club were given a pleasant reception at the pastor's home, May 18. The C. E. Society recently celebrated its 14th anniversary with a social and entertainment. On the late anniversary of the church and parish the pastor, Rev. J. L. Sewall, preached a special sermon.

WILBRAHAM.—First. The late Arthur L. Stebbins of Ware left $2,000 to this church and $500 to the C. H. M. S., to be paid within six months.

AMHERST.—First. Rev. Oliver Huckel has resigned this pastorate to go to the Associate Reform Church in Baltimore, Md. His relations will close in his present pastorate about the end of July, after a term of a little over one year and a half. His new field is an old, influential church, practically Presbyterian, but in polity allied to Congregationalism.

SUNDERLAND has voted to be incorporated and the proposed changes and by laws have been agreed upon. New committees to be established will facilitate the church work greatly.

Maine

MACHIAS.—The enterprising women have raised $1,500 during the past three years, and cleared the parsonage from debt, an event which was joyfully celebrated recently.

In West Newfield a valuable gift of 100 hymnbooks has been received from the Old South Church, Boston.——Rev. G. H. Heffion has been engaged to supply another year in Mt. Desert.——A small pipe organ has been donated for the new chapel in Gorham by Mr. E. H. F. Smith.

New Hampshire

HANOVER CENTER.—After a suspension for several Sundays, on account of bad traveling, services have been resumed. The recent death of Elihu Hurlbutt, church treasurer, at the age of 83 has deprived it of one of its oldest members.

MILTON.—The Ladies' Society raised the past year nearly $200, which has been applied to the reduction of the debt incurred in making repairs on the interior of the church.

By the hearty liberality of the people in Hinsdale the church is rejoicing in the entire extinquishment of its debt.

Vermont

BENNINGTON.—Second. The 61st anniversary was recently held. The specialty of the year's work has been a new movement in behalf of men. The Young Men's Club, the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip and a Boys' League in the Sunday school secured at the various services a larger proportion of the young men and boys than ever. The gain in church membership was 21. The Sunday school again supports work in an extended mountain region to the east. The missionary this season will make it one of his objects to distribute good literature supplied him by the Y. P. S. C. E. The Senior Endeavor Society holds every fourth meeting at the Soldiers' Home or in an out-district.

GUILFORD.—The people here have engaged, and agreed to support without the aid of the missionary society, for the summer season the services of Mr. C. P. Emery of the Middle Class, Bangor Seminary.

Continued on page 770

For Nervous Exhaustion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. A. L. TURNER, Bloomsburg Sanitarium, Philadelphia, Pa , says: " As an adjunct to the recuperative powers of the nervous system I know of nothing equal to it."

Well and Strong

Was at Times Unable to Stand—Physician Advised Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and It Cured.

" For fifteen years I was a constant sufferer with female weakness and kidney trouble. I took many different remedies but received no relief. I was unable to stand at times and I suffered great misery, and spent hundreds of dollars for medicine. Finally I had an attack of bilious fever and was confined to my bed for three months. I was attended by a skillful physician who advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and before I had finished the first bottle I began to feel better. In six weeks after I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was able to be about the house, and I am now perfectly well and strong and able to do a great deal of work." MRS. DAVID LE MAY, Dresden Station, New York. Remember

Hood's Sarsa=parilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills and Sick Headache, Indigestion. 25c.

A CHILD'S SET.

You pay money unhesitatingly to have your child taught music. Would you not pay half as much to have her acquire the habit of order and neatness, which will surely come if you give her a special set of furniture, so that she may take an interest in her little domain and keep her room with scrupulous care?

This entire set is built for a child. It is two-thirds size. The wood is bird's-eye maple, with solid brass trimmings. The appointments are most complete—Clapp patent drawers, steel locks, French plate mirror and every convenience.

The Dressing Cabinet has a serpentine front. The glass is large enough to show three-fourths of the figure when adjusted to a slight angle. The bedstead is of white and gold finish; tubular iron, with burnished brass rails, posts and pins.

Being two-thirds the usual size, this special set costs only two-thirds the usual price. There is no better economy than this, to say nothing of the value and pleasure to your child.

Our new Catalogue of Summer Furniture will be mailed on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Continued from page 769.

Brattleboro.—Swedish is happy in the prospect of pastoral care, having secured the services of Rev. Mr. Peterson of the Chicago Seminary for one year.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

Brooklyn.—New England. During the past two months superbly illustrated lectures on municipal problems have been given on successive Tuesday evenings by experts. The topics have been: Greater New York, The Industrial Alliance or the City's Housekeeping, The City's Parks and Pleasures, The City's Purse, The City's Traffic, and The City's Schooling. The pastor, Rev. W. T. McElveen, is the chairman of the State campaign committee of the Parkhurst Society and of the educational committee of the Citizens' Union. The lectures will be repeated through the summer months before labor unions, reform organizations and various church societies.

Port Leyden.—At a special meeting of the church, May 16, Rev. Lewis Williams tendered his resignation of the charge over which he has ably served for 20 years. At a special meeting on May 19 it was voted by a large majority not to accept the resignation, and the trustees were instructed to engage him for another year.

Gloversville.—The annual meeting of the church was held May 12. Reports were given for all the organizations and also from the pastor and clerk. The roll was then called. The new edifice has cost about $43,000, of which only $2,800 remain unpaid, and that is pledged. The benevolences were nearly $700.

Binghamton.—First. On the evening of May 13 the church held a social, the proceeds of which amounted to $50, which will be forwarded to the New York Tribune fresh air fund. The pastor, Rev. W. B. Thorp, has been granted leave of absence, beginning July 14, which he will spend in Europe.

There have been 21 accessions to the First Church, Westmoreland, during the last three months, 18 on confession.

New Jersey

Verona, a small mountain settlement about two miles above Montclair, is soon to have electric communication with Montclair and Newark, so that speedy enlargement seems certain. A church was organized some months ago, which on May 10 was recognized by council, its new house of worship, an attractive structure, having been dedicated the day before. The council, while not large, included about all the Congregational churches in the neighborhood, and every church invited was represented. The only question that arose was on the matter of comity, a Presbyterian church having been organized two years before. It appeared, however, that the majority of the members in the new church were never connected with the Presbyterian, the new movement was altogether of local origin and was approved by the Presbyterian ministers of the vicinage. The vote to recognize was therefore unanimous. Addresses were made at the public service by Rev. Messrs. J. A. Chamberlin, Ph.D., H. S. Bliss, A. H. Bradford, D.D, C. H. Everest, D.D, and T. G. Shearman, Jr. The dedication exercises of the day before consisted of a children's service in the morning, conducted by the pastor, and services in the afternoon and evening, at which Rev. Messrs. A. H. Bradford, D.D, and F. J. Goodwin respectively preached.

Glen Ridge.—The church paper, The Polished Arrow, has completed its first year and with much success. It now enlarges its editorial force. The annual meeting of the church held recently showed it to be in good condition and much work to have been done during the year through its manifold agencies. The Sunday school has contributed over $200 for benevolent purposes, the mission bands have increased from 49 to 82 in membership and the Endeavorers have added 19 to their numbers. The church on re-electing its senior deacon sent him a formal letter of congratulation on reaching his 90th birthday.

Upper Montclair.—Twelve new members have just been received into the church. A Boys' Brigade, of which the pastor is chaplain, has been started in connection with the Junior Endeavor Society and is a decided success.

THE SOUTH

Arkansas

Siloam Springs.—A new edifice, of brick combined with native blue limestone, was recently opened. The building is considered a model of neatness, utility, harmonious proportions and fine acoustic properties. In the evening a fraternal service was held in which neighboring pastors joined. The membership has doubled since the coming in 1895 of the present pastor, Rev. W. H. Williams.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

Ironton.—First. During the year while Rev. A. G. Manville has been with the church a steady spiritual growth has been noted. The annual meeting in January showed a fairly good financial condition. Besides repairs on meeting house and parsonage $100 were expended for an organ motor. A Junior Endeavor Society of 50 members was organized by the pastor's wife, and several series of special meetings have been held. The result was a decided uplift. During the year there were 11 accessions, nine on confession and two by letter.

Indiana

Marion.—A mutual council, to consider and advise upon the points at issue between the church of this city and Rev. S. S. Condo, convened May 18. Seven churches were represented, and Supt. E. D. Curtis was present. The church had dismissed Rev. S. S. Condo from the pastorate, and had also withdrawn fellowship from him. In the matter of the dismissal the council found that the proceedings of the church therein were regular. In regard to dropping his name from the church roll the council found that it might be advisable to grant Mr. Condo a church letter conditioned upon the action of the Kokomo Association with reference to his ministerial standing. The council also found that there had not been a refusal to adjust properly by the church its financial promises, and that the church is under no further financial obligations to Mr. Condo.

Indianapolis.—Pilgrim. The church building was damaged by lightning May 20. The tower was struck and the west side shattered. The damage was $100.

Michigan

Harrison.—The church has raised the full amount asked of it for home missions, the Ladies' Aid Society, Missionary Society and Y. P. S. C. E. adding to the direct contributions of the church. A recent sermon by the pastor, Rev. C. H. Seaver, on Life and Light was effectively illustrated by stereopticon. A midweek question meeting also proved particularly attractive of late.

Litchfield.—Cyrus K. Stockwell began work here one year ago, coming from Chicago Seminary. Ten members have been received, and others will unite at the next communion. Eight children have been baptized, the first in the history of the church. A regular system of benevolence has been adopted. The church is united in support of its young pastor.

Roscommon.—Evangelist L. P. Rowland has conducted meetings for two weeks in this lumber town, with a grand uplift to the members and conversions of old and young. Several heads of families are among the converts. To reach the men some of the meetings were held in the largest hotel of the place.

Pittsford.—During the three years of Rev. T. C. Jones's pastorate much has been accomplished. The little meeting house has given place to a beautiful and commodious structure, the membership has largely increased and the congregations are larger.

Wisconsin

Beloit.—First. Besides $3,000 given this year for benevolent causes, this church has met the call of Beloit College for an emergency fund by individual pledges amounting to $2,000 a year for three years. Prayer meetings are large and well sustained. The Sunday school is increasing. Dr. George R. Leavitt

Continued on page 772.

Gorham Sterling Silver as Premiums

For Trademarks from Dunham's Cocoanut to attract New Customers.

Each article bears the trademark of the Gorham Mfg. Co., which is everywhere recognized as the highest guarantee of artistic and intrinsic value. All articles are of standard size and $\frac{925}{1000}$ fine.

"Marquise" Pattern.

341. TIE CLASP. Retails at 75 cents. Trademarks from 5 lbs. (or from ½ lb. and 36 cts.)
342. PENCIL PROTECTOR. Retails at $1.00. Trademarks from 7 lbs. (or from ½ lb. and 46 cts.)
343. PEN HOLDER. Retails at $2.00. Trademarks from 13 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and 86 cts.)
344. HAIR COMB. Retails at $2.00. Trademarks from 13 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and 86 cts.)
345. NAIL FILE. Retails at $2.00. Trademarks from 13 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and 86 cts.)
346. BUTTON HOOK. Retails at $2.00. Trademarks from 13 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and 86 cts.)
347. CUTICLE KNIFE. Retails at $2.00. Trademarks from 13 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and 86 cts.)
348. SHOE HORN. Retails at $2.25. Trademarks from 15 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.00.)
349. CURLING TONGS. Retails at $2.25. Trademarks from 15 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.00.)
350. SUGAR SPOON (gilded bowl). Retails at $2.25. Trademarks from 15 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.00.)
351. MANICURE SCISSORS (curved). Retails $2.75. Trademarks from 18 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.35.)
352. SALTS BOTTLE (gilded top). Retails at $3.00. Trademarks from 20 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.40.)
353. HAT BRUSH. Retails at $3.00. Trademarks from 20 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.40.)
354. BON BON SPOON (gilded bowl). Retails at $3.00. Trademarks from 20 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.40.)
355. ORANGE SPOON (gilded bowl). Retails at $3.00. Trademarks from 20 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.40.)
356. SUGAR TONGS. Retails at $3.25. Trademarks from 21 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.50.)
357. MATCH BOX (gold lined). Retails at $3.25. Trademarks from 21 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.50.)
358. PICKLE FORK (gilded tines). Retails at $3.50. Trademarks from 23 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.65.)
359. BUTTER KNIFE. Retails at $3.50. Trademarks from 23 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $1.65.)
360. BONNET BRUSH. Retails at $4.50. Trademarks from 30 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $2.15.)
361. HAIR BRUSH. Retails at $7.00. Trademarks from 46 lbs. (or from 1 lb. and $3.35.)

DUNHAM'S COCOANUT is sold in ¼, ½ and 1 lb. packages at 10c., 20c. and 40c. each, by 400,000 grocers. It is perfectly digestible, and is better than fresh cocoanut for all purposes. Annual sales 12,000,000 packages.

DIRECTIONS.

Premiums are offered for trademarks alone, or for part trademarks and part cash, as specified. They can NOT be obtained for cash alone. We require the trademarks from both front and back of each package. Stamps accepted in amounts less than one dollar. Any amount of currency can be sent by registered mail, or by Money Order or Postal Note. No advertising marks on premiums. All charges will be fully prepaid. Order by numbers. Give your full address.

Address Premium Department No. 8
DUNHAM MANUFACTURING CO.,
5, 7 and 9 James Slip, New York, N.Y.

Preserve for future reference.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The statement has been made that the mill and manufacturing business in New England is suffering more acutely than other industries in different parts of the country. We believe this to be essentially true and that it accounts for the continuous grumbling of the cotton mill people in particular. Outside of New England business looks better, although the measure of improvement is not startling.

The best evidence of better trade is found in the general increase of commercial loans. While it is true that most of these loans are for Eastern and Middle Atlantic merchants and companies, nevertheless some Western and Southern transactions appear. Receipts of currency from the West to New York have exceeded the gold shipments and the latter do not cause any anxiety.

Railroad earnings continue to show moderate increases. The bulk of the increase seems to come from west-bound business. In the writer's judgment this is due to rapidly bettering trade conditions in the West and to great activity in the mining districts in the far West. The situation in the West appears stronger than for years and more susceptible to even moderate improvement in demand for goods. For this reason Western railroad securities should be watched, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy in particular.

In the stock market there has been little activity of any kind. No interest is shown in the course of speculation either in Wall Street or elsewhere. The feature of last week was the decline in the anthracite coal stocks, notably Jersey Central. The selling of the latter looks like liquidation of heavy investment holdings. The Jersey Central Company, with its controlled coal property, the Lehigh & Wilkesbarre, is said to have a floating debt of $14,000 000, and many believe that this enormous debt and the poor earnings of the road foreshadow an ultimate reorganization.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

COGSWELL—In Boscawen, N. H., May 10, Mrs. Mary G. Cogswell, eldest daughter of the late John Greenough, Esq., aged 93 years.

WILLARD—In Cambridge, April 13, Miss Elizabeth Lyon Willard, daughter of the late Charles and Lucy Willard, aged 71 years.

MRS. ELIZA LEONARD,

The widow of the late Rev. William Leonard, died at Newtonville, May 20, aged 87. "At rest" will be the thought of her many friends who will read the above announcement. An invalid, confined to her house for many years, she bore her sufferings with a sweet and beautiful Christian spirit. God's word was her food and her faith in Christ was simple, childlike and strong. She endeared herself to a large circle of friends in the various fields of labor, where, even with her bodily infirmities, she was an efficient helper of her husband. Her end was peace, and in its approach she was heard to whisper, "This mortal must put on immortality." "No death, no pain, no night there."

TRY IT! For any inflammation, Pond's Extract. It is sold only in bottles with buff wrappers.

THE annual meeting of the Congregational Home Missionary Society will be held at Saratoga during the first week in June. Reduced rates from Boston and vicinity via Fitchburg R. R.

A PERFECT REMEDY.—The extraordinary success which has always resulted from Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam is due to the happy combination of the most effective and suitable medicines known to science. It is a perfect remedy for all throat and lung troubles.

BUILT FOR A CHILD —We imagine that the announcement of a child's chamber set, in another column, will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of many fathers and mothers. Beside its low cost, it is just the right size for a child's bedroom, and it will make the room look twice as attractive. It is on sale at the Paine warerooms, on Canal Street, and we predict for it an enormous sale.

JAMAICA PLAIN, MASS., April 1, 1897.—While I was at work in the shop at my trade I became much run down and was so miserable I could hardly get to my work. I lost flesh very rapidly. I procured a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it made me feel much better. I kept on taking it until I had gained 20 pounds in weight and I have been well ever since.—D. MCLEAN.

HOOD'S PILLS are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

You Will Make No Mistake

When taking out Life Insurance in

The Prudential

The PRUDENTIAL has the STRENGTH of GIBRALTAR.

A solid, reliable Company, with years of experience and Millions of Dollars behind it.

Assets, - - $19,541,827
Income, - - 14,158,445
Surplus, - - 4,034,116

Send for information.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America,
Home Office, Newark, N. J.
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS subject to check or on certificate.

STERLING DRAFTS ON ALL PARTS OF GREAT BRITAIN BOUGHT AND SOLD.
COLLECTIONS MADE.
COMMERCIAL LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock, George F. Baker, George S. Bowdoin, August Belmont, Frederic Cromwell, Walter R Gillette, Robert Goelet, G. G. Haven, Oliver Harriman, R. Somers Hayes, Charles R. Henderson, Adrian Iselin, Jr., Augustus D. Juilliard, James N. Jarvie, Richard A. McCurdy, Alexander E. Orr, Walter G. Oakman, Henry H. Rogers, H. McK. Twombly, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, William C. Whitney.

8% NET FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES on Improved Red River Valley Farms. Loans to actual settlers only. 15 years' experience in business. Send for formal applications, list of references and map showing location of lands. Over $100,000 invested. None but SAFE, PROMPT PAYING loans on my books.
WILLIAM T. SOUDER, Financial Agent,
303 Century Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

8% MUNICIPAL WARRANTS.
Safest short-time paper, earning 6 to 9 %. Write for details. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co., Equitable Building, Boston, Mass.

WESTERN MORTGAGES
DEFAULTED AND OTHERWISE,
Bought for Cash
CHAS. E. GIBSON, 45 Milk St., Boston.

£
European Travelers
who carry books of
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
are better off than most holders of Credits, because they are available where credits are not. Shops, hotels, etc. cash them. They are available any time, day or night. Circulars on application.
Agency of U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

The Congregationalist's Services.

CHILDREN'S DAY, No. 15.
WHITSUNTIDE, No. 28.

The Congregationalist's Services are perfectly adapted for the use of churches proposing to hold services on the above days in which it is desired that the congregation should participate. These Services have stood the test of actual use in multitudes of churches.

100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.
Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.
THE CONGREGATIONALIST, Boston.

Continued from page 770.

is pastor.——Second. The fifth anniversary of Rev. W. W. Sleeper's pastorate recently occurred. During these five years 239 have been received into the church, 151 on confession, making the total membership 489. The Sunday school with its two branches numbers over 450. Over 300 families are associated with the parish. The Men's Sunday Evening Club held its second annual banquet May 14.

EDGERTON has freed itself from all indebtedness, and the benevolences are the largest in its history. The evening audiences are remarkable in consisting largely of young men, a result of the Men's Sunday Evening Club. Rev. W. O. Spelman is pastor.

ELKHORN.—A steady growth has been enjoyed during the last year in all departments, under the leadership of Rev. G. C. Lockridge. The annual thank-offering for home and foreign missions is a noteworthy event.

RETREAT.—The son of Rev. William Haughton has accidentally shot himself in Oregon. He was a young man of 20 years and his aged father and mother are prostrated by the shock

THE WEST

Missouri

ST. LOUIS.—First. The rumor that Rev. J. H. George, D. D., has accepted his call to Montreal is not founded on fact. The church has placed before him strong resolutions and earnestly desires and expects him to remain, and St. Louis, outside of First Church as well, is greatly disinclined to let him go.——Old Orchard. Rev. A. L. Love, formerly superintendent of the City Missionary Society, is temporarily supplying this church.——Hope. The pastor, Rev. J. P. O'Brien, will supply the pulpit of the First Church of San Francisco during the vacation of Dr. G. C. Adams. The latter will come East for his daughters, who graduate from Monticello Seminary.

Minnesota

MAZEPPA, in one of the oldest villages in the State, is active, especially among the young people, under the pastorate of Rev. J. E. Ingham. Less than three years ago he gave up a business career to enter the ministry, and his executive gifts are bringing forth good fruit in developing the religious possibilities of a country neighborhood.

WABASHA.—The spiritual life of this church, which for eight years has enjoyed the ministry of Rev. W. H. Medlar, has been much quickened by a series of cottage meetings, which have been maintained with interest since the Week of Prayer.

BURTRUM AND GREY EAGLE.—Both buildings have been improved, a bell has been secured at Grey Eagle and the communities, composed of various nationalities and religious denominations, are responding to Congregational influence.

GRACEVILLE.—Incoming population and the building up of the town encourages the church. The work is prospering at the out-station, Chokio, where a building has been erected and a church is soon to be formed.

LAKE CITY.—The Scandinavian Mission, formerly under Presbyterian auspices, has recently of its own accord voted to become a Congregational church and has joined the Winona Conference.

ORTONVILLE.—Rev. G. W. Shaw closes his work and will remove to the East. Financial embarrassment has been experienced and the church will be pastorless for the summer.

LAKE BENTON.—The removal of several families has weakened the home church, but work is especially prosperous at the out-stations, Tyler and Lake Stay.

Nebraska

TRENTON.—Recent evangelistic services, led by Major Cole and Dr. Ringland, resulted in about 170 conversions. Afternoon meetings were also held at several neighboring points, specially at a sod church 12 miles distant, with good success.

LINCOLN.—First is helping Swedish to complete its house of worship. This is the fifth church in the city to which it has rendered such service.

PACIFIC COAST

California

LOS ANGELES.—Central has received the gift of a beautiful communion set from the church in South Vallejo.——Bethlehem on a recent Sunday evening held a "congress of nations," when representatives of Italy, England, Scotland and America told what Christianity had done for their countries.

POMONA.—Pilgrim closes its 10th year this month with a membership of 401. The pastor, Rev. L. H. Frary, and his wife will sail June 2 for a six months' vacation in Europe.

Washington

KIRKLAND AND BELLEVUE are in need of a pastor, as Mr. J. W. Hurd finds himself unable to continue the work on account of ill health. The people have become strongly attached to him.

ELLENSBURG, being unable to dispose of its property to advantage, reverses its action to suspend services and petitions the pastor, Rev. E. C. Wheeler, to withdraw his resignation.

◆

OUR ARMENIAN ORPHANS' FUND

Amount received during two weeks ending Tuesday noon and acknowledged in detail by individual receipts	$25.60
Previously acknowledged	24,605.42
Total	$24,631.02

◆

The recent report of the United States commissioner of education contains some interesting facts concerning higher education for colored people in the South. It says there are 162 institutions for higher education for Negroes, all but six of them in what were formerly slave States. Of the 162 institutions 32 are of the grade of colleges, 73 are classed as normal schools and the remaining 57 are of secondary or high school grade. State aid is extended to 35 of the 162 institutions, and 18 of these are wholly supported by the States in which they are established. The remaining schools are supported wholly or in part by benevolent societies and from tuition fees. In the 162 institutions are employed 1,549 teachers—711 males and 838 females. The total number of students was 37,102, of which 1,958 were pursuing collegiate studies. Of the 37,102 students in these 162 colored schools nearly one-third, or 12,058, were receiving industrial training, which branch of instruction for colored people seems to be growing in popularity.

June Weddings.

An extensive variety of superb Cut Crystal Glass Pieces, just opened; more than two hundred specimens, costing from $5 up to $90 each.

Fine Lamps, rich pieces of pottery mounted with American Safety Oil Founts and Burners, costing from $5 to $60 each.

Richly Decorated Dessert Plates in single dozens from Mintons, Doultons, Haviland, Carlsbad, Wedgwood, Copeland. Costing from $10 per doz. up to $300.

An extensive variety of Satsuma and Cloisonné.

Ice Cream Sets, Salad Sets, Dinner Sets, Loving Cups, Vases, Candlesticks, Jardinières, Umbrella Holders, etc.

All the above adapted to Wedding Gifts, and the largest variety to choose from at lowest prices.

Buyers seeking outfits for the seashore, Table Ware, Chamber Sets and Glassware, will find attractive lines, and we are not undersold if we know it.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
China, Glass and Lamp Merchants
(Seven Floors),
120 FRANKLIN.

Going To... EUROPE?
H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
HOTEL AMERICAN-ADELPHI.
On Broadway, in the very Center of the Village.
Fine brick building; spacious halls; light and airy rooms; steam heat and passenger elevator. Best located hotel in Saratoga.
THE NEAREST HOTEL TO CHURCH WHERE MEETINGS ARE TO BE HELD, AND WITHIN TWO MINUTES' WALK OF ALL THE LEADING SPRINGS. A SPECIAL RATE GIVEN FOR THE AMERICAN HOME MISSIONARY MEETINGS. $1.50 and $2.00 per day.
Free coaches to and from the railway stations.
GEO. A. FARNHAM, Prop.

HUESTIS HOUSE,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Headquarters for Congregational Home Missionary meetings, held May 31st. For rates and rooms address
W. B. HUESTIS, Prop.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
THE LAFAYETTE will entertain 100 guests during the Home Missionary Meetings at $1.25 and $1.50 per day. Elegant and convenient location on Circular St. Very pleasant modern house, electric bells, excellent bill of fare. Rates good until June 15. Our 15th season. Send for circular.
GEORGE E. BATES, Prop.

DR. STRONG'S SANITARIUM,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Centrally located. Elevator, Steam, Suites with Bath, Sun Parlor and Roof Promenade, Elegant Turkish and Russian Baths. A first-class table. We offer a special rate to those attending the Home Missionary meetings of $2.00 per day. Send for illustrated circular and announcements for 1897. Entertainments, bicycle paths, etc.

The St. Denis,
BROADWAY AND ELEVENTH STREET,
Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your face toward New York."

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. Opens June 1st,
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT TRADE MARK REGISTERED
Choose for Health.
When a laxative remedy is needed, you have your choice between the harsh, disagreeable, exhausting remedies and Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient,
a foaming, sparkling, agreeable draught that refreshes and strengthens while it cures.
Endorsed by Physicians for 50 years. 50c. and $1. TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York.

THE MICHIGAN ASSOCIATION

The sun shone pleasantly on the Saginaw Valley after twenty-four hours of gloom, just in time to welcome the delegates from different parts of the State to the metropolitan center of the valley. It was expected that the delegation would be large, owing to the general accessibility of Saginaw from all points. The pastor, Rev. William Knight, and his people also urged that the meetings be the best ever held in the State. The program was exceptionally strong and the enrollment the first evening was larger than any previous year, due perhaps largely to the fact of Dr. Gladden being down for the opening address. His words were an eloquent exposition of the Sermon on the Mount as bearing upon the social problems of the day, and as pointing out the only true basis of social reconstruction. Dr. H. P. De Forest was elected moderator, and business was wisely expedited.

Dr. Gladden opened a lively parliament by a short address on The Church and Community, and in the discussion many took part. The Higher Patriotism was the subject of a strong address by Rev. N. S. Bradley, in which he made it quite clear that patriotism was not a superficial thing, but was a deeply earnest effort to bring the highest good to the largest number. Dr. H. A. Schauffler spoke earnestly on the need of doing more to evangelize the foreign population and complimented Detroit in taking the lead in trying to reach the Polish element, in which he showed there had been much success. He referred also to a remarkable opening in Bay City for a large work among the Polish people. The Devotional Use of the Bible was a helpful topic treated by Rev. E. W. Strong. President Sperry of Olivet spoke of The Safe Course Between the Old and New Thought About the Bible, which gave rise to animated discussion. The Wednesday evening session was given up to the interest of foreign missions, and the ringing addresses of Dr. J. L. Barton of Boston and Dr. Nehemiah Boynton will long be remembered. Thursday morning opened with a devotional and fellowship hour of home mission workers and their friends. This was a slight departure, but it proved a delightful time. It was practically preparatory to the Home Missionary Society's meeting which followed. This session brought forth the subject in a paper by Rev. J. P. Sanderson, which engrossed much of the time afterwards. How to Meet the Deficiency in the Treasury became the earnest consideration of the society. A committee was appointed to plan for the wiping out of the deficiency and also to advise a way of putting the home missionary work on a more secure financial basis.

An open parliament was then opened by Dr. Boynton on the subject, Preaching in the Year of Grace, 1897. He claimed that the preaching was as the preacher. The preacher must first be a man and secondly an unfettered man. He should always be courteously independent. This was followed by the topic The Social Organization of a Church—the Greenville Plan, presented in an interesting way by Rev. A. M. Hyde of Greenville. Dr. H. D. Hunter gave a thoughtful address on Modern Skepticism, Its Cause and Cure, and was followed by the earnest words of President Rodgers of Benzonia College on The Christ of Science.

Reports of department committees were presented and most of them had a joyful note, though in every department there was evidence of the hard times. The report of the visiting committee of Benzonia College led to a discussion on the question of changing somewhat the basis of the college and looking toward developing it rather on the lines of a first-class academy than a college. The question was referred to a special committee.

The Friday evening session was devoted to home missions, when stirring and effective words were spoken by Mrs. B. F. Aldrich, Rev. Stephen Vaughan, Rev. William Poyseor and Dr. W. H. Warren, State secretary, who illustrated his words by many interesting stereopticon views of the growth of work in home mission fields. This closed what had proved to be one of the best conventions ever held. No small credit was due to the pastor of the church and his committees for the success and pleasant features of the meetings. J. H.

◆

BANGOR SEMINARY ANNIVERSARY

The seventy-eighth anniversary, May 17–19, passed off successfully. The Senior reception was held at the home of Professor Paine. The public examination occurred Tuesday. President Hyde of Bowdoin gave an interesting and instructive address in the evening on The Moral Element in Preaching. Rev. G. W. Field, D. D., read a carefully prepared paper Wednesday morning in the seminary chapel on The Interpretation of the Old Testament. The alumni dinner was prepared in the gymnasium, Professor Chapman of the board of trustees presiding.

The graduating exercises took place Wednesday evening at the Hammond Street Church, and were well attended. The class of fourteen members was represented by six speakers. The diplomas were presented by Prof. J. S. Sewall with fitting remarks. An effort was made by the alumni to raise sufficient funds to publish the papers presented by Rev. Daniel Evans, Rev. M. Bean and Dr. G. W. Field. Professor Beckwith and family sail for Germany May 26, to be absent a year. His address will be Lutzow Strasse, 31–II Berlin S. Many of the students begin work in their respective fields immediately.

C. N. D.

Shirt Waists

Cool, comfortable, becoming, dressy—these four words give a splendid description of the Ladies' Shirt Waists we are offering now. Only one thing further need be said: Waists equal to ours in style and quality cannot be had elsewhere at such low prices.

Stylish Waists of Percale, Lawn, Madras and other popular materials, at 63c., 98c., 1.25, 2.00

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

MORTGAGES.

If you are troubled about your Debenture Bonds—if they are in default—if you want to sell them—if you feel that they are insecure—it would do no harm to write us. This will apply especially to the J. B. Watkins Company.

HENRY R. WILSON,
41 WALL ST., N. Y.
The care of Western and Southern Interests a Specialty.

One-Half Off
the price on Buggies, Carriages and Harness. Highest quality. Fully guaranteed. Freight paid. Illus. Buyers' Guide mailed free. 8th year in business.
MIAMI MFG. CO., 104 West 4th Street. CINCINNATI, OHIO.

CHURCH ORGANS
Hook & Hastings Co.
Boston, Mass.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F.1
Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

Joel Goldthwait & Co.

HAVE PLACED IN STOCK A LARGE LINE OF

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN

BRUSSELS CARPETS

at very low prices. We have an immense stock that must be reduced.

ALSO A LARGE LINE OF

Linoleums and Straw Mattings.

163 to 169 WASHINGTON STREET,
NEAR CORNHILL, BOSTON.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

ALLEN, Wm. C., Blue Island, Ill., to Pontiac, Mich. He will begin work June 6.
BANHAM, Henry E., Fresno, Cal., to Cloverdale. Accepts.
BROWN, Frank J., lately of Aitken, Minn., accepts call to Verndale and Bertha.
DASCOMB, Harry N., to the permanent pastorate at W. Pullman, Chicago, after supplying there for a year.
GRIFFITH, W. Robinson, late of Welsh Ch., Denver, Col., to Strang and Shickley, Neb.
HANSCOM, Fred L., Ionia, Io., to Garner. Accepts.
HAYNES, Artemas J., formerly of Harwich, Mass., to supply for six months at Wells River, Vt. Accepts.
HEFFLON, Geo. H., to Mt. Desert, Me., for another year.
HILDRETH, Homer W., Union Sem., to Albany, Vt. Accepts, and has begun work.
KIDD, Wm. D., to new church at Harrison Gulch, Cal., where he has been laboring. Accepts.
McCALLUM, Hugh, W. Dresden, Me., to Waldoboro.
McCLEMENTS, H. John, to remain at S. Lake Linden, Mich. Accepts.
MARTIN, Moses M., formerly of Allegan, Mich., to Ovid.
MOULTON, Ezra C., Red Oak, Io., to Corning.
PEDERSEN, Ludwig J., Scandinavian Ch., Fargo, N. D., to Merrill, Wis.
ROGERS, Alonzo, Forest Grove, Ore., to New Whatcom, Wn. Accepts.
SAGE, Chas. J , late of Rising City, Neb., to Avoca.
SANDFORD, Wm. B., Parkersburg, Io., accepts call to Forest City.
SARGENT, Jas. B., Hartford Sem., to Hampden, Mass. Accepts.
SMITH, Howard N., recently of Rock Springs, Wyo., to San Luis Obispo, Cal. Accepts.
SQUIRE, Abraham L., Oberlin Sem., to Holdrege, Neb. Accepts.
TRAVIS, Lee J., Oberlin Sem., to Fredericksburg, O. Accepts.
WADE, Wm. G., Monmouth, Me , to Pittston. Accepts.
WATT, R. W., to Hibbing, Minn , for six months. Accepts.
WEBSTER, Franklin G., Oswego Falls, N. Y., to Eaton.
WISWELL, Thos. C., Chicago Sem., to Brooklyn Ch., Seattle, Wn. Accepts.

Ordinations and Installations

GAMMON, Robt. W.. o. p. Big Rock, Ill., May 5. Sermon, Rev. W. B. Chamberlain; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. M. Lewis, R. E. Helms, H. M. Scott, D. D., and J. N. Bedford.
WOOD, Earl B., o. p. Lovell, Me., May 17. Sermon, Rev. D. P. Hatch; other parts, Rev. Messrs. C. S. Young, G. M. Woodwell, C. F. Sargent, A. P. McDonald.

Resignations

GROVE, Claude E., Fremont, Ind.
HENSHAW, Geo., Sharon, Pa., to take effect July 26.
HERSHEY, S. Byron, Ashland, O., to take effect July 1.
HUCKEL, Oliver, First Ch , Amherst, Mass., to accept call to Associate Reformed Ch. (Ind'pt Presb.) Baltimore, Md.
JACKSON, Geo. A., Swampscott, Mass., to accept the position of secretary and librarian of the General Theological Library, Boston. The resignation is to take effect July 1.
MARVIN, John T., Corning, Io.
SHATTO, Chas. R., W. Burlington, Io.
SHAW, Geo. W., Ortonville, Minn.
WILLIAMS, Lewis, Port Leyden, N. Y.

Churches Organized

HARRISON GULCH, Cal., 6 May, 13 members.
SYLVAN, Ore., rec. 25 April, 12 members. Rev. D. B. Gray is acting pastor.
VERONA, N. J., 10 May.

Supplies for the Summer

BIDDEFORD, Me., Second Ch., Rev. Chas. D. Crawford, Kansas City, Mo.
BURLINGTON, Me., Wm. C. Martyn, Bangor Seminary.
DULUTH, Minn., Mayflower Ch., Ernest E. Day, Yale Divinity School.
EAST SANGERVILLE, Me., Frelon E. Bolster, Yale Divinity School
ISLE AU HAUT, Me., Robt. R. Morson, Bangor Seminary.
OACOMA, S. D., Jas. L. Blanks, Oberlin Seminary.
RANDALL, Minn., Will D. Burton, Chicago Seminary.

Miscellaneous

CHALMERS, Thos., has been granted a year's absence by his church in Port Huron, Mich., for study in Europe.
DICKINSON, Sam'l F., Grand Junction, Col., whose physician advises him to rest from preaching for a time, will reside in Colorado Springs on account of its educational advantages for his children.
HUNTINGTON, Chas. A., Eureka, Cal., familiarly known as "Father Huntington," at 85 years of age preached a vigorous and thoughtful sermon on a recent Sunday, in the absence of the pastor.
PECK, Henry P , has been granted a three months' vacation by the church in Milford, N. H., with continued salary. It is hoped that rest and quiet will restore him to health.
SHOREY, H. Allen, of Portland, Ore., has appeared in the Year-Book from year to year, but without any other authority than that of the local and State registrars. He is not connected with any body of Congregational ministers or churches.
TUCKER, Silas P., Cornish, N. H., has been voted a vacation of two months for needed rest.

◆

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Copeland & Day. Boston.
THE HEART OF LIFE. By James Buckham. pp. 70. 75 cents.

D. Appleton & Co New York.
BIRD LIFE. By Frank M. Chapman. pp. 269 $1.75.
THE STORY OF OLIVER TWIST. By Charles Dickens. Condensed by Ella B. Kirk. pp. 348. 60 cents.
IN JOYFUL RUSSIA. By John A. Logan, Jr. pp. 275. $3 50.
DYNAMIC SOCIOLOGY. By L. F. Ward. 2 vols. pp. 706, 688. $4 00.

Fleming H. Revell Co. New York.
A CASTAWAY. By F. B. Meyer. pp. 127. 30 cents.
FULNESS OF POWER. By R. A. Torrey. pp. 106. 50 cents.
"ANOTHER COMFORTER." By Rev. A D. McClure. pp. 127. 50 cents.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.
CORPORATION FINANCE. By Thomas L. Greene. pp. 181. $1 25
THE LITERARY HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By Moses C. Tyler. pp. 521. $3 00.

E. P. Dutton & Co. New York.
BEYOND THE CITY GATES. By Augusta C. Wilson. pp. 324. $1.50.

E. R. Herrick & Co New York.
THE VOYAGE OF THE MAYFLOWER. By Blanche McManus. pp. 72. $1.25.

American Book Co. New York.
ASIA. By Frank G. Carpenter. pp. 304. 60 cents.

A. J. Holman & Co. Philadelphia.
NEW SELF PRONOUNCING S. S. TEACHER'S BIBLE. $4 00.

Rice & Hirst. Philadelphia
IS CHRISTIANITY TRUE? By Prof. W. Garden Blaikie, D. D , LL. D., and others. pp. 114. 50 cents.

J. D. Wattles & Co. Philadelphia.
ARNOLD'S CHART OF PAUL'S JOURNEYINGS.

United Brethren Pub. House Dayton.
HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST. By Rev. Daniel Berger, D. D. pp. 682.

Ezra A. Cook. Chicago.
BLESSED MEMORIES. By Julia W. Fischer. pp. 160. 60 cents.

PAPER COVERS

Hartford Seminary Press Hartford.
JOHN ROBINSON, PASTOR OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS. By O. S. Davis. pp. 43.

Open Court Pub. Co. Chicago.
THOUGHTS ON RELIGION. By the late George John Romanes. Edited by Charles Gore. pp. 195. 50 cents.

MAGAZINES

May. BIBLICAL WORLD.—ART JOURNAL.—MUSIC.—AMERICAN JOURNAL OF SOCIOLOGY.—EXPOSITOR.—PHILISTINE.—SCHOOL REVIEW.—QUIVER.—FRANK LESLIE'S.

◆

The mission of ex Secretary of State Foster to secure the co-operation of Japan, Russia and, if possible, England in the preservation of seal life in the North Pacific is a difficult one. His experience qualifies him to succeed if any one can, and we hope that by persuading the other powers England may at last be brought into line and the seals saved.

◆

English capitalists seem to have faith in the industrial future of America even if our own people waver and are discouraged. Recent investments in steel works in Pittsburg are followed by the announcement of the sale of the great thread factory at Willimantic, Ct., at a good price to English investors.

"PROCRASTINATION
IS THE THIEF OF TIME;
YEAR AFTER YEAR IT STEALS, TILL ALL ARE FLED."

Sozodont

ARRESTS DECAY OF THE TEETH

and prevents their loss. It also cleans them without injury, strengthens the gums, perfumes the breath and imparts a most refreshing sensation.

HALL & RUCKEL
NEW YORK Proprietors LONDON
A sample of Sozodont and Sozoderma Soap for the postage, three cents.

BEAUTIFUL SKIN

Soft, White Hands, Shapely Nails, Luxuriant Hair with Clean, Wholesome Scalp, produced by CUTICURA SOAP, the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap in the world, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet, bath and nursery. The only preventive of inflammation and clogging of the PORES

Cuticura

SOAP is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.
☞ "How to Purify and Beautify the Skin, Scalp, and Hair," free

BABY HUMORS Itching and Scaly, instantly relieved by CUTICURA REMEDIES.

If your child looks upon Scott's Emulsion as Cod-liver Oil and is repelled by it, begin with part of a teaspoonful in twice the quantity of water, and it will take it and relish it as though it were milk. There is no food or medicine for children of from three or four to ten or twelve years of age which equals Scott's Emulsion for putting color into the cheeks, enriching the blood and bringing comfort and good nature. Book about it free.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

BLANCARD'S
PILLS AND SYRUP
OF
Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE,
for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD,
CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS,
SCROFULA, Etc.
None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.
E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
K C WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR
Copyrighted 1895.
Prevents and relieves Constipation and Liver troubles. An appetizing, nutritious Family Flour, for Bread, Gems, Griddle Cakes, etc. Unrivalled in America or Europe. Pamphlet and Sample Free. Ask dealers or write to Farwell & Rhines, [illegible] Y.

HANDBOOK FOR APRIL

Turkey and Turkish Problems.

Our April Handbook is now ready, and in view of the deepening war clouds in the East it is especially timely. Entitled Turkey and Turkish Problems, it is a reprint of the article by Rev. Edwin Hallock Byington in our issue of March 18. It was widely commented upon by the newspapers of the country, and in its present cheap and convenient form can be easily circulated.

☞ 100 Copies, $1.25, postpaid. ☜
4 cents each; 50 copies, 75 cents; 25 copies, 50 cents.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MAY 21

"Kookoo Circle" is familiar to many of the children as the name of a remarkable mission circle, and identified with it in the minds of those who know is the name of Mrs. J. C. Entwisle of Salem, and it is no wonder that one who belongs to two auxiliaries and three mission circles should some morning be called in to lead the Friday meeting. The account of the resurrection in Matt. 28 furnished the theme for two thoughts, that as the angel who was commissioned to make the announcement, "He is not here: for he is risen," must have been full of gladness on such an errand, disciples in all ages must be glad to tell the tidings, and that if there is any reason for the question sometimes asked, "Why are women so much more interested in missions than men?" there may be something in the remark of an old commentator, "They were apostles to the apostles."

Mrs. Capron gave an incident in her own experience during the famine in India in 1876-77. An old woman from one of the villages brought to Mana Madura her little granddaughter and sold her for half a dollar to Mrs. Capron's washerman. He was immediately instructed that the child was not to be his slave, and the grandmother was set to work to earn money to redeem the child. She was old and ignorant, but Mrs. Capron began to tell her the gospel story. Gradually it was unfolded to the resurrection, and then the old woman exclaimed, "How glad you must have been!" "Was I as glad as she thought I was?" asked Mrs. Capron. The teaching was continued, the woman joined the church and ere long, having died in peace, was laid to rest. "And some resurrection morning," said Mrs. Capron, "I may see her and hear her say, 'How glad we are!'"

Mrs. Purington hinted at what the disciples would have missed if they had failed to meet their Lord "in Galilee" as they were bidden, and at what we may miss by failing to meet his appointments. Miss Child, who has just returned from the annual meeting of New York State Branch, reported its earnestness and courage. She also spoke of the hope which she has gained from recent visits to auxiliaries, and urged that effort in spreading information concerning the work be more diligent than ever.

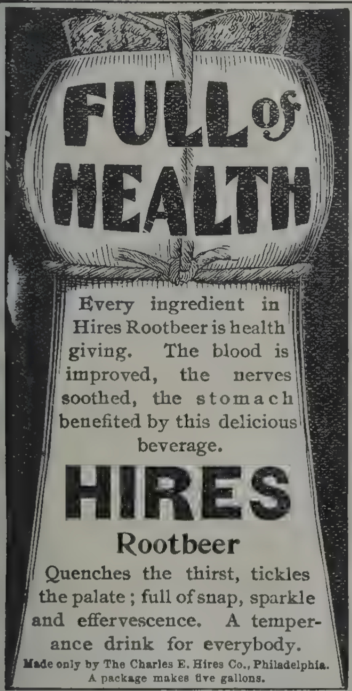
The missionaries and work in Spain having place in the prayer calendar all the week, it was gratifying to hear from Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick. She said that in that country, where the knowledge of Christ's birth and life and sacrifice are continually taught, it seems as if many people had left him in the sepulcher. She spoke especially of the work for boys and young men, and gave some pertinent illustrations of success in this direction, reading an extract from a letter from Mrs. Mary Huntington Douglas, whose husband is director of an institution for young men in the south of Spain. Miss Annie H. Bradshaw of Sendai, Japan, was warmly welcomed, and expressed her pleasure in sharing this fellowship, while her heart was in two countries.

Gail Borden

NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO.
EAGLE BRAND
EAGLE BRAND
Gail Borden
OFFICE NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO.
71 Hudson Street, New York.

Eagle Brand

Condensed Milk
HAS NO EQUAL AS AN INFANT FOOD.
"INFANT HEALTH" SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.
NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. N.Y.



Every ingredient in Hires Rootbeer is health giving. The blood is improved, the nerves soothed, the stomach benefited by this delicious beverage.

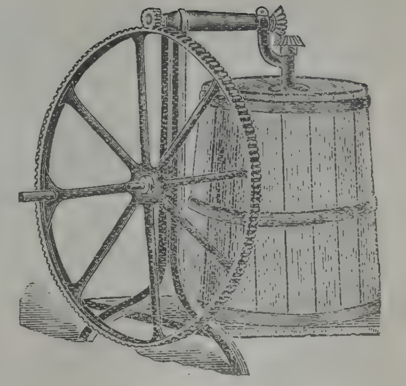
HIRES
Rootbeer

Quenches the thirst, tickles the palate; full of snap, sparkle and effervescence. A temperance drink for everybody.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia.
A package makes five gallons.

THE sale of bridal gifts for wedding mementos has developed into an extensive fashion, and while silver has a large place the prevalence of cut glass, fine china, pictures, etc., is in good form. Jones, McDuffee & Stratton have a large share in this way.

WHERE GOOD FISHING IS TO BE FOUND IN MAINE.—In the wildest of the far-reaching wilderness of Maine lies that widely and favorably known fishing ground, Moosehead Lake. It is a most beautiful body of water, and it is needless to mention that this lake offers an endless source of pleasure to tourists and sportsmen, but at this season of the year its beauties and charms and resources are of particular interest to the fisherman, for well he knows that the best and largest trout abound in its waters. Greenville is the point at the lower end of the lake at which the fisherman enters this region to seek one or another of the camps which is to be his temporary abiding place. It would seem that the days spent in such an isolated place would be dreary, but such is not the case, for the sport which attends the landing of a large and wary trout is fast and furious and the day slips away only too soon. The evening likewise passes quickly, for stories of the experiences and expeditions of former years are related and compared, and almost before one is aware of the fact it is late. From recent reports it is learned that the ice in the lake has disappeared, and ere long the advance guard of fishermen will put in an appearance at the lakes ready for the fray. To accommodate this ever-increasing army of sportsmen the Boston & Maine Railroad has arranged to place on sale at Boston and other principal points reduced rate round-trip tickets to all of the leading fishing grounds of Maine. The car service from Boston is complete in every respect, and information regarding these fishing trips, together with descriptive books, can be obtained upon application to the General Passenger Department of the Boston & Maine Railroad, Boston, or at the Boston City Ticket Office, 322 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.



The Queen Butter Maker.

THE SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

As will be seen by the illustration above, which is the latest model, the Queen Butter Maker is unlike any device that has ever been invented for churning. At the bottom of the large tub shown is a screw propeller modeled exactly like the large screw propeller used on the large ocean steamer. The gearing of the machine allows 1 600 revolutions of this propeller in a minute, and agitates the cream a thousand times more strongly than the ordinary old-fashioned dasher churn. This immense agitation causes the tissues to break, and the butter is almost instantly made and gathered. From a scientific point of view the butter must come gathered in a few minutes—it does come, forming a beautiful granulated butter like wheat kernels at the surface.

Experts in butter making in all parts of the country do not hesitate to say that they have tested the "Queen" over and over, and pronounce it a wonder; that it is thoroughly practical, does just what is claimed for it, and that the grain of the butter is finer, and it is very easily cleaned.

Experienced canvassers state "they never saw anything sell like the 'Queen'; they make easily from $45 to $100 a week without a bit of trouble." A widow lady, Mrs. Byers, in Mississippi, with three children to care for, who had never sold anything before, states "she made $7 50 a day in addition to taking care of her family."

FRIEND HIATT TALKS OF THE "QUEEN."

May-12-97.

"Dear Friend:—I received thine of the 23d inst. a short time ago stating that the Butter Makers would be sent that week and I presume they are on the road now, but I felt just like writing a few lines to thee recommending the Queen Butter Maker. We have tested it with different temperatures of cream and the butter comes so quickly, as if by magic, and besides so easy turned. It has no equal and is going like wild fire throughout the country in these parts. At one test butter came in 2¾ minutes, at another time 3 minutes, and at another time my wife started the Butter Maker as a team was leaving the yard with a load of wood and before it was 40 rods away the churning was done. I will have nothing to do when my dozen Queen Butter Makers arrive, only to deliver them—they sell right at the door—and send in another order which will be either 25 or 50. Although I have not been idle during this delay—I am a farmer and can find plenty of work to do. I remain as ever, thy friend and agent, Z. J. HIATT, Emporia, Kan."

ON THE HOTEL STEPS.

CHAS H. HOUGHTALING, of Laurens, N. Y., writes: "I put in the cream at 64 degrees and took the 'Queen' out on the hotel steps, and it was cold and snowed. I had a good crowd; I told them to take out their watches so I would not fool them. I commenced slow and got butter in five minutes, and you never saw a lot of men taken back as they were."

FIFTY-EIGHT SECONDS.

"The best time I made in making butter was in 58 seconds, temperature was 64, cream was ripe, thick and sour. A grandson of mine, six years of age, made butter in one minute and a quarter from one gallon of cream, temperature and quality of cream same as above named.

J. E. DREISBACH, Carthage, Mo."

ONE MINUTE.

"The 'Queen' is a success. Mr. Paine says he would not take twenty dollars for it if he could not get another. The butter has come three times in one minute; usually in two minutes or two and a half. Once it was five minutes, which was the longest time. We churn over eleven pounds a week; churn three times a week.

Mrs. S. C. PAINE, Orwell, O."

BUTTER SO QUICK.

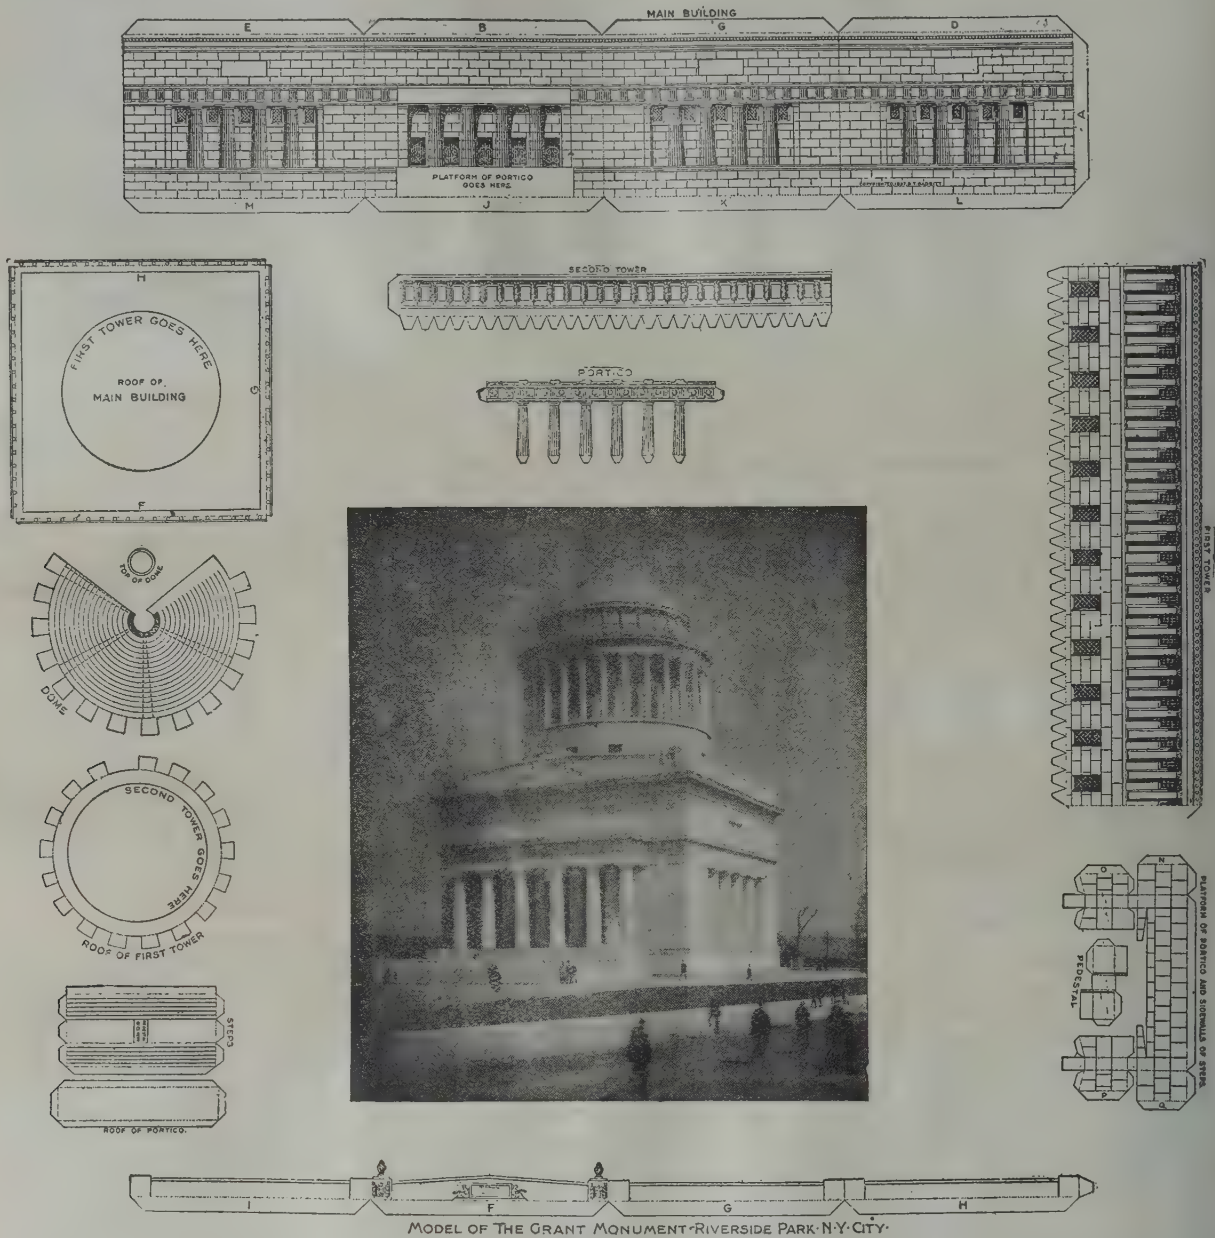
"I received my Butter Maker all right and am well pleased with it. I would buy one every year before I would do without it. We have stopped the hour and a half churning and now make butter in from two to five minutes. The boys say they have but one objection to it and that is it makes butter so quick they don't get to run it long enough.

Dr. W. G. P. SHARP, Wartrace, Tenn."

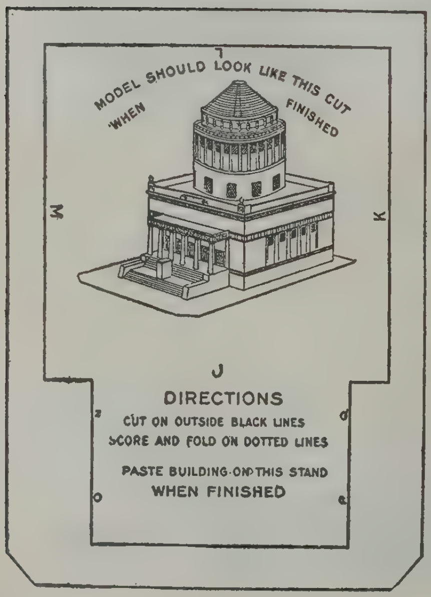
Any of our readers who may desire a 'Queen" for their own use, or who may want to make money selling them, should write to The Queen Butter Maker Co., 118 E. 3d St., Cincinnati, O., for terms and illustrated price list. Agents are making money, some as high as $500 a month.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & Co., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Souvenir of Grant's Tomb, FREE



MODEL OF THE GRANT MONUMENT·RIVERSIDE PARK·N·Y·CITY·
Dedicated APRIL, 27th 1897



MODEL SHOULD LOOK LIKE THIS CUT WHEN FINISHED
L
M
K
J

DIRECTIONS
CUT ON OUTSIDE BLACK LINES
SCORE AND FOLD ON DOTTED LINES
PASTE BUILDING ON THIS STAND WHEN FINISHED

The above is a miniature reproduction of a cardboard model of Grant's Monument, size 10 x 15 inches, which will be sent FREE to any reader of "The Congregationalist" by B. T. BABBITT, manufacturer of

B. T. Babbitt's Best Soap
B. T. Babbitt's 1776 Soap Powder and
B. T. Babbitt's Best Baking Powder

upon receipt of 5 Best Soap Wrapper Trade-Marks, or five 1776 Soap Powder Trade-Marks.

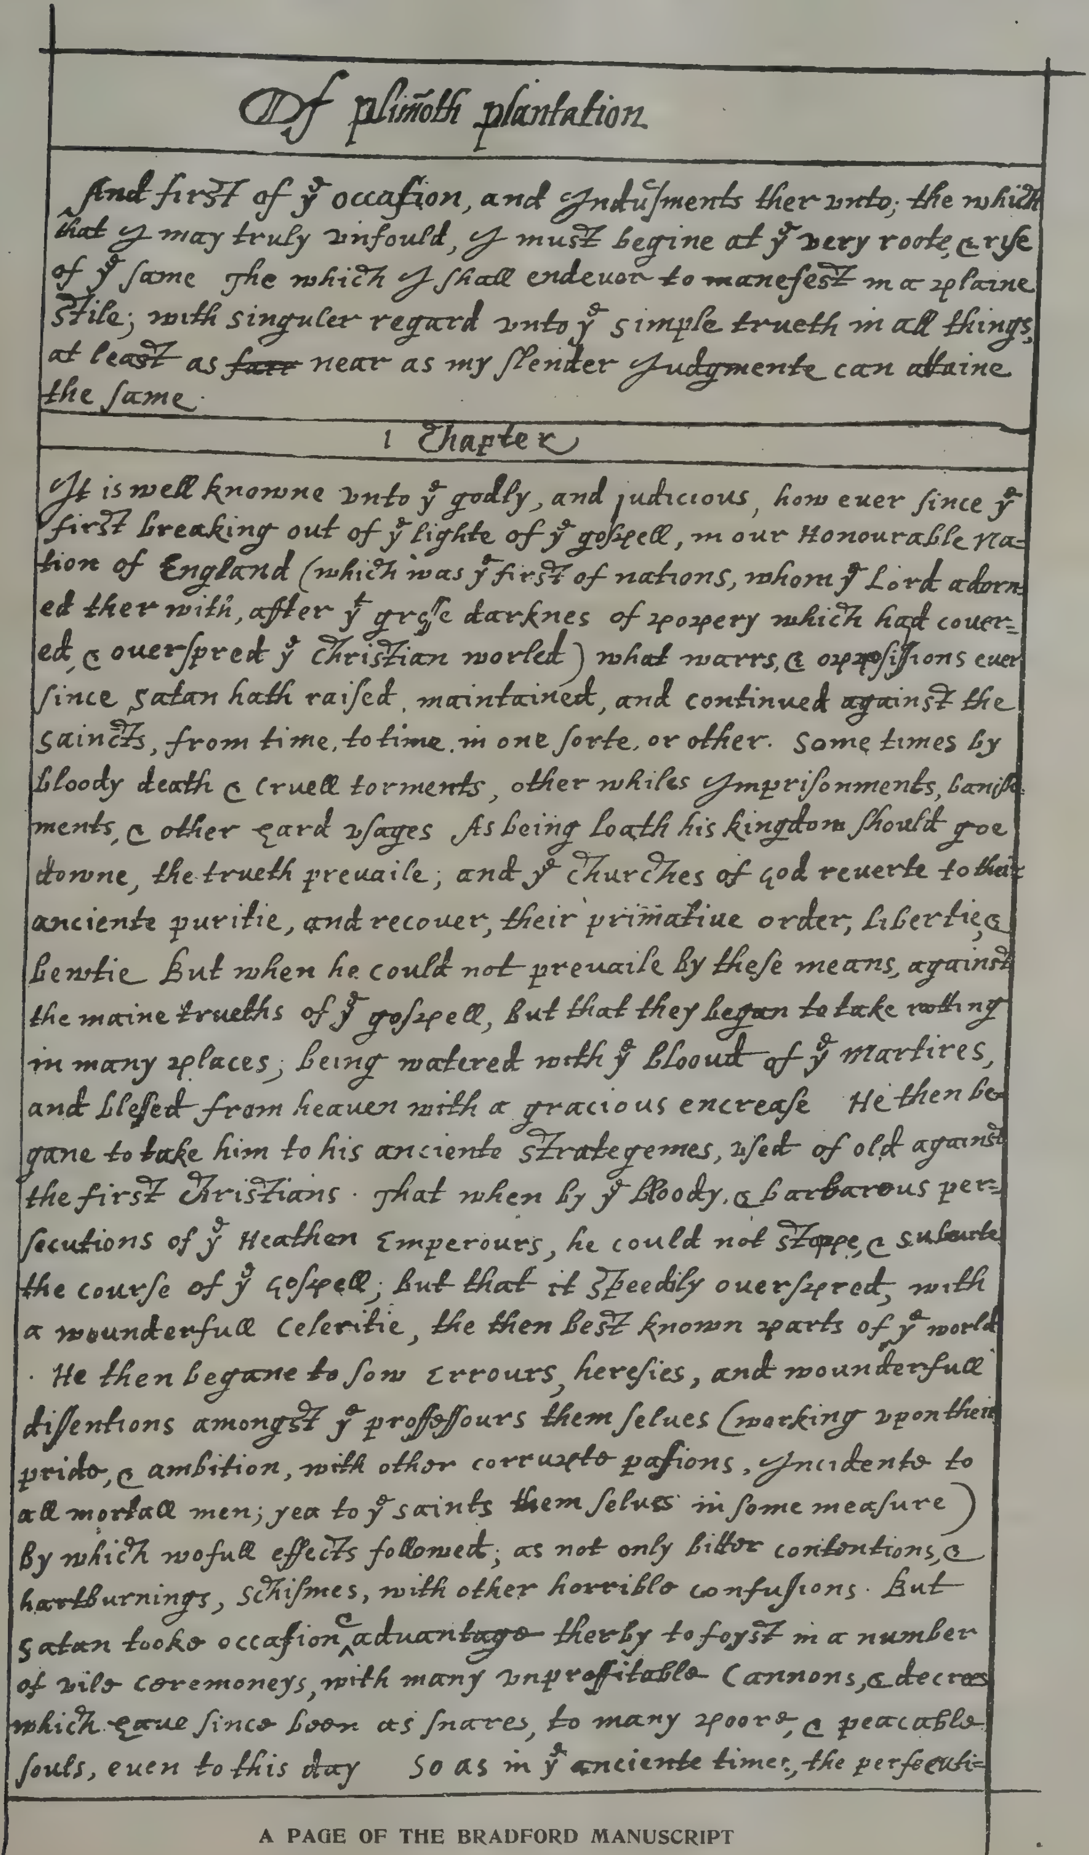
Be particular to use only the following address:

DEPT. GB." P. O. BOX 2,917, NEW YORK CITY.

Thursday 3 June 1897

Volume LXXXII Number 22

THE CONGREGATIONALIST



Of plimoth plantation

And first of ye occasion, and Indusments ther unto; the which that I may truly unfould, I must begine at ye very roote & rise of ye same. The which I shall endevor to manefest in a plaine stile; with singuler regard unto ye simple trueth in all things, at least as ~~farr~~ near as my slender judgmente can attaine the same.

1 Chapter

It is well knowne unto ye godly, and judicious, how ever since ye first breaking out of ye lighte of ye gospell, in our Honourable Nation of England (which was ye first of nations, whom ye Lord adorned ther with, after yt grosse darknes of popery which had covered & overspred ye Christian worled) what warrs, & opposissions ever since satan hath raised, maintained, and continued against the saincts, from time, to time, in one sorte, or other. Some times by bloody death & cruell torments, other whiles Imprisonments, banishments, & other hard usages. As being loath his kingdom should goe downe, the trueth prevaile; and ye churches of god reverte to their anciente puritie, and recover, their primative order, libertie, & bewtie. But when he could not prevaile by these means, against the maine trueths of ye gospell, but that they began to take rooting in many places; being watered with ye blooud of ye martires, and blessed from heaven with a gracious encrease. He then begane to take him to his anciente strategemes, used of old against the first Christians. That when by ye bloody, & barbarous persecutions of ye Heathen Emperours, he could not stoppe & subverte the course of ye Gospell; but that it speedily overspred, with a wounderfull celeritie, the then best known parts of ye world. He then begane to sow errours, heresies, and wounderfull dissentions amongst ye professours them selves (working upon their pride, & ambition, with other corrupte pasions, incidente to all mortall men; yea to ye saints them selves in some measure) By which wofull effects followed; as not only bitter contentions, & hartburnings, schismes, with other horrible confusions. But satan tooke occasion & advantage therby to foyst in a number of vile ceremoneys, with many unprofitable cannons, & decrees which have since been as snares, to many poore, & peacable souls, even to this day. So as in ye anciente times, the persecu-

A PAGE OF THE BRADFORD MANUSCRIPT

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of ten years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist.

White Mountains. To rent, a private house for summer months; 14 rooms, with stable. Address Thorn Hill, Jackson, N. H.

Wanted, by young lady of some education, position to take care of children and give instruction in English branches. Address I. T., The Congregationalist.

An old-fashioned pulpit can probably be secured without cost by applying to Rev. D. W. Waldron, 19 Congregational House, 7 A Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

To Let. Furnished Cottage on Lake Whitney, New Haven, Ct. Furnished Cottage on Money Island, off Stony Creek, Ct. Howard Sherman, Whitneyville, New Haven Co., Ct.

Wanted, boarders in an American family, 10 miles from Boston. Every accommodation for comfort, good beds, home table. References given and required. Box 34, Braintree, Mass.

Cottage to Rent at Amagansett, L. I. Containing 8 rooms, kitchen and bath. Fine ocean view. Ten minutes' walk to R. R. depot, five minutes to ocean. Address E. B. LEEK.

Wanted, by lady of middle age, the care of an invalid in vicinity of Boston. References all that would be required as to character and ability. Address Mrs. M., office of The Congregationalist.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Wanted, by a refined, middle-aged lady, thoroughly competent, a position as matron, or lady in charge, in a private school or seminary for the ensuing school year. Address B. F., Northampton, Mass.

Board and Rooms. A desirable location at Old Orchard, Me. Ten minutes' walk from the beach. Country and seashore advantages. Electric cars. Terms reasonable. Address Box 190, Old Orchard, Me.

Seashore Cottage for Sale at Rye, N. H. 9 rooms; on bluff overlooking broad Atlantic; good stable, bathing, boating and fishing; finest beach on the coast; furniture if desired; price low. F. D. Butler, Portsmouth, N. H.

Cottage to Rent. I would like to rent my furnished cottage for the season. Located on high hill, with fine view. Five minutes' walk from post office, one mile from R. R. station. Address M. W. Leach, Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Ct.

Wanted, position as housekeeper in an elderly widower's Christian home, by a refined, middle-aged lady, who understands the care of a nice, quiet home. Not over twenty miles from Boston. Address, A. R., The Congregationalist.

For Summer Guests. A Congregational pastor opens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious rooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; first-class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York or Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted, refined Christian lady for housekeeper in Christian home. May have one girl over six years old. Graded schools and academy, in beautiful, healthy county town. Only two in family. References required. State wages wanted. Address Box 54, Monson, Me.

Summer Home for Children. A lady having a delightful home, with fine grounds, will receive a few children into her family for the summer, giving each a mother's careful personal attention. Highest references given and required. For particulars and terms address S., The Congregationalist.

Seashore Cottage at Bass Rocks, Gloucester, Mass. 8 rooms, all furnished; drainage to the sea; city and spring water; right on Ocean Avenue; $250 to the proper party; the Sanitarium of the North Coast; safe surf-bathing upon good harbor beach. Address Wm. R. Pedrick, Lawrence, Mass.

Summer Boarders. Large airy rooms, with fire if required. Pure mountain air, near Lake Memphremagog, home comforts, piano and organ, near church. Terms reasonable. Rooms without board if required, with use of kitchen for invalids. Address, Box 86, Stanstead, P. Q., Canada.

Boarders Desired at Hillside Farm, two and a half hours' ride from Boston. Location high and healthy. Good rooms and table. Wide verandas, shade trees, pine grove. Lake near by. House open in May. Adults preferred. Terms reasonable. For further information address Box 94, Greenfield, N. H.

To Let for the Summer. First floor (six large rooms) and two chambers, well furnished, for general housekeeping, in house on a farm bordering on Lake Winnepesaukee, 1½ miles from Wolfeboro village and R. R. station. Location and scenery unsurpassed. Good water, piano, etc. Terms reasonable. Address Box 116, Wolfeboro, N. H.

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

OHIO

Oberlin College

The College, the Theological Seminary, the Conservatory of Music, the Academy.

The fall term begins Sept. 22. Full information from the treasurer.

JAMES R. SEVERANCE, Oberlin, Ohio.

Educational

THEOLOGICAL

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
63d year opens Sept. 22. With special advantages from the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec'y.

CALIFORNIA, OAKLAND.
PACIFIC THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
With Faculty of eight, complete courses of study of highest grade, in a climate unequaled for health, invites correspondence as to facilities and advantages

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
Andover, Massachusetts.

Besides the usual courses in Hebrew, Greek, Theology, History and Homiletics, there are elective courses in the History of Religions, the Philosophy of Religion, Social Ethics, History of Missions, and Semitic languages.

Honorary and Pastoral Scholarships and Foreign Fellowships are awarded.

Seminary year opens Sept 22, 1897. For catalogues and information apply to Prof. GEORGE HARRIS, Andover, Mass.

VERMONT

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.
ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, M. A.,
Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRIDGEWATER.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Bridgewater, Mass. Regular and special courses for the preparation of teachers. Entrance examinations June 24 25, Sept. 8, 9. For circulars address
ALBERT G. BOYDEN, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD
BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and Scientific course of study, also Preparatory and Optional. Year begins Sept. 15, 1897.
Miss Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.
THE SAUVEUR SUMMER SCHOOL
of Languages, at Amherst College, Mass. 22d Session —July 5th to August 13th. For program, address Miss F. M. Henshaw, Amherst, Mass. For particulars and circulars of L. Sauveur's Works, address
DR. L. SAUVEUR, 4613 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER ACADEMY.
Prepares boys for college or scientific school. Buildings of modern construction. New Science Hall, seven groups of laboratories. Manual training. Infirmary, Gymnasium. Oval cinder track. Year begins Sept. 8, '97. D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A. M., Principal. Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, EASTHAMPTON.
WILLISTON SEMINARY.
Prepares boys for any college or scientific school. The most advanced methods. Library; physical, chemical, biological laboratories; gymnasium, etc. Founded 1841. Opens Sept. 9, 1897. JOSEPH H. SAWYER, M. A., Principal, Easthampton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, Worcester, Mass Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering and Chemistry. 176-page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 30th year. J. K. MARSHALL, Registrar.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies, Andover, Mass. Begins its 69th year Sept. 16, 1897, offering enlarged opportunities; three Seminary Courses of Studies and a College fitting Course. Has a Clark telescope, laboratory, gymnasium, art studios, library, reading and music rooms, etc.; superior accommodations in new and improved buildings, with electric lights, hot water-heating, etc; over 20 acres of lawns and groves. Terms $400 per year. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal. For catalogue, W. F. DRAPER.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.
BIBLE NORMAL COLLEGE.
A prominent pastor says: "There is no single need of the church today so great as that which the Bible Normal College (formerly School for Christian Workers), Springfield, Mass., is designed and able to meet." Three distinct courses in each of the departments, Bible-school and Missionary. New courses in New Testament Greek and Educational Psychology and Pedagogy. Ten specialists in charge. New Ladies' Hall. Fifty college graduates and as many more of practical experience should enter Sept. 8. Send for catalogue to the Secretary,
J. L. DIXON.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.

Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

Educational

NEW HAMPSHIRE

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

CONNECTICUT

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.
THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year opens Sept. 15, 1897.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.
Mrs. Mead's School for Girls,
"Hillside," Norwalk, Conn.
Certificate admits to Wellesley, Vassar, and other colleges. Advanced study in literature and lower College branches for special students.

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.
"Miss Aiken's" School for Girls,
Stamford, Connecticut.

General education or preparation for college; large grounds in healthful situation. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method of concentrated attention and memory. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Only forty-five minutes from New York.

(Mrs.) HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, A.B.

CONNECTICUT, GREENWICH.
Greenwich Academy and Home School for Ten Boys,
Greenwich, Connecticut.
The few boys admitted carefully selected. No undesirable pupil allowed to remain. Genuine home. Special attention to development of literary taste. Individual instruction when needed. Three complete courses. Location exceptionally healthful and attractive. 72d year of Academy and 18th of Home. J. H. ROOT, Principal.

NEW YORK

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N.Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address
C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, BINGHAMTON.
THE LADY JANE GREY SCHOOL.
Mrs. Hyde and Daughters' Home School for Girls. Special and regular courses. Preparation for College and European travel. Address
Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE, Binghamton, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 13 and 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and chaperonage for special students.

NEW YORK, BROOKLYN.
The Brooklyn Heights Seminary,
138-140 Montague St., Brooklyn.
Boarding and day school for girls. Each department in charge of a specialist. Individual instruction.

NEW JERSEY

NEW JERSEY, MONTCLAIR.
Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.

School is life. Our boys soon learn that the responsibility for their actions is theirs. Failure in school duties teaches them the result to expect from failure in life duties.

We gladly send our catalogue, but much prefer that parents should visit the school.

J. G. MACVICAR, Head Master.

ILLINOIS

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.
THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.
University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all post-graduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Established 12 years. Address
F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.
CHICAGO COLLEGE OF LAW
LAW DEPARTMENT LAKE FOREST UNIVERSITY.
Hon. T. A. Moran, LL. D., Dean. Session each week day evening. For information address Elmer E. Barrett, LL. B., Sec'y, 100 Washington Street, Chicago.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

Thoughts on Religion. By G. J. Romanes. New Paper Edition, 50c.; cloth, $1.25.

The Philosophy of Ancient India. By Richard Garbe, Professor of Sansript in Tuebingen, Germany; successor of Roth. Cloth, 50c.; paper, 25c.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

Beginning with the July number there will appear in The Open Court a series of ten articles by the author of the "Prophets of Israel," on

The History of the People of Israel.

Written especially for the magazine by Professor C. H. CORNILL.

Professor of Old Testament History in the University of Koenigsberg, one of the foremost Biblical investigators in Germany, and certainly its most charming popular expositor. It is safe to say that a like brief, simple and scientific presentation of this difficult subject does not exist. The series will appear originally in English.

The Open Court FOR JUNE

The Life of Pythagoras. With Portrait. By Dr. Moritz Cantor.

Historical Sketch of the Jews from the Captivity to Modern Times. By the Rev. Bernhard Pick.

n the Dissecting Room. By Peter Rosseger.

The Immorality of the Anti-Vivisection Movement. By Dr. Paul Carus.

The Cogitations of a Smoking Philosopher. By Rector G. J. Low

Shankara, Teacher of India. By Charles Johnson.

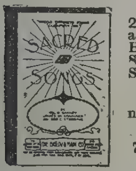
Price, 10c.; Annually, $1.00.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR IT.

Every reader of this is invited to send for our photogravure portraits of Philosophers and Scientists with rospectus and sample copy of The Open Court gratis.

THE OPEN COURT PUBLISHING CO.,
324 Dearborn Street - - - CHICAGO.

SACRED SONGS No. 1



Over 160,000 Copies Sold.

236 pieces. 100 are new and over 100 are choice selections from Gospel Hymns. An excellent collection for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc.

Issued in Round and Shaped Notes.

$25 per 100 by Express, not prepaid; 30c. each if sent by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.
Lakeside Building, Chicago.

The Congregationalist SERVICES

Have stood the test of actual use in multitudes of churches. Hundreds of thousands have been sold. They are adapted for all occasions, many of them specially suited for SUMMER EVENING Services.

THREE SERIES. Thirty-three Services.

Special Occasions.

2. Pilgrim Fathers.
14. Memorial Day.
15. Children's Sunday.
16. National Service.
28. Whitsuntide.
33. Order of Morning Worship.

Eventide and General Worship.

5. Forgiveness of Sins.
6. Trust in God.
7. Days of Thy Youth
8. House of Our God.
11. Homeland.
12. Humility.
13. God in Nature.
17. "Abide with us."
18. 'Eternal light of light."
19. "I will extol Thee."
20. "God be with us for the night is closing."
21. "I Am."
22. "I Am the Bread of Life."
23. "I Am the Light of the World."
24. "I Am the Good Shepherd."
5. "I Am the Way, the Truth, the Life."
26. "I Am the Living One."
27. The Master and His Disciples.
29. Simon Peter.
30. James.
31. John.
32. Paul.

All the above services are complete WITH MUSIC.

60 cents per 100 copies.

Sent, postage prepaid. Sample copies 1 cent each.

Address SERVICES,
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
Boston, Mass.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 781
Governor Bradford's Volume 782
Safeguards in Popular Government 782
The Lesson of a Monument 782
The Testimony of the Spirit 783
Current History 783
In Brief 784

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

Japan 785
CURRENT THOUGHT 786

CONTRIBUTIONS:

The Making of a Hero. Warren F. Spalding 786
What Is Dr. Gordon's New Theodicy? Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D. 787
Springtime in Washington. Lillian Camp Whittlesey 788

THE HOME:

A June Thanksgiving—a poem. Clinton Scollard 791
Paragraphs 791
Real and Pretended Ideals. Kate Upson Clark 791
A Generous Literary Diet for Our Children. Rebecca Perley Reed 792
How to Be Happy Without a Wheel. Emily Telman 792
A Modern Magician's Cave. George Ethelbert Walsh 793
Foreign Lands—a selected poem 793
Closet and Altar 793
Tangles 794
The Museum as an Educational Institution—a selection 794
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 795
Corner Scrap-Book 795
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for June 13 796
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for June 13-19 809
LITERATURE 797

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

Iowa State Association 800
A Center of Denominational Growth 803
Another Suburban Pulpit Filled 804
From Central New York 804
A Notable Day at Northfield 804
The South Dakota Association 805
Weekly Register 811

MISCELLANEOUS:

Annual Assembly of British Congregationalists 789
In and Around Chicago 790
The W. B. M. at Salem 799
In Honor of an Old-Time Giver 800
In and Around Boston 801
The Bradford Manuscript Ceremonies 802
Notices 803
The Business Outlook 807
Deaths 807
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 808
Resolutions Passed by Davenport Association 810
Biographical 810

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,

At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.

Per Copy, 6 Cents. Per Year in Advance, $3.00.

Two Years in Advance, $5.00; Five Years, $10.00.

If Payment is Delayed, $3.50 Per Year.

One old and one new subscription, $5.00.

Club of Five, one at least being new, $10.00.

On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

Receipts for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

Discontinuances.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

Advertising Rates.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.

Reading Notices, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

Independence Day

Fourth of July this year falls upon Sunday. Under the above title a choral service for churches and Sunday schools has been prepared with a view not only of arousing patriotism but of awakening gratitude to God for the blessings of civil and religious liberty. The music is all familiar and inspiring. The selections for recitation are noble and patriotic.

No. 38 "Pilgrim Service" Series. $2.00 per 100 postpaid. Sample copy, with recitation sheet, 3 cents.

The Pilgrim Press,
Congregational House, Boston. 175 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

HIS LATEST AND BEST.

The Social Law . . . of Service.

By Prof. Richard T. Ely,
University of Wisconsin.

Commended unreservedly by critical press reviewers and indorsed by Drs. Lyman Abbott, H. Clay Trumbull, and other leading thinkers on social problems as a masterly contribution to the literature of Sociology.

12mo. Cloth. 90 cents.

EATON & MAINS, Publishers,
150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

FIVE HUNDRED PRIZES.

Value—$1,252.00.

To be Given to Subscribers to THE UNION GOSPEL NEWS.

Do You Want One of These Beautiful Prizes?

See how many legitimate words you can make with the letters in the words "Union Gospel News," using each letter as desired, but not more times in any word than it appears in "Union Gospel News." Proper nouns, foreign or obsolete words, suffixes and prefixes, Scotch and provincial English words and Anglo-Indian words are not allowed, and words that are spelled alike but have different meanings can be used but once. To illustrate the work: On, in, go, peg, sew, sun, new, gun, etc. You may use these words in your list. A few hours' work will give you many words. Try it.

Our Offer:—For the largest number of legitimate words we will give One Elegant Piano—$300. For the next two largest lists we will give Two Fine Parlor Organs—$200. For the next three largest lists, Three Splendid Bicycles—$300. For the next largest list, One Excellent Sewing Machine—$40. For the next largest list, One Complete Encyclopedia—$40. For the next two largest lists, Two Unabridged Dictionaries—$20. For the next largest list, One Solid Oak Writing Desk and Book-Case combined—$6. For the next largest list, One Oak Sewing Table—$2. For the 100 next largest lists, One Hundred Cameras—$100. For the next 388 largest lists, Three Hundred Eighty-Eight Music Folios—$194.

To Every One, who enters the contest and sends a list of words not less than twenty in number we will give one of the popular "Moody Books."

Anybody may take advantage of these exceedingly generous offers who will send us either fifteen 2-cent stamps to pay for six months' subscription to the Union Gospel News, or twenty-five 2-cent stamps to pay for one year's subscription to the Union Gospel News, a monthly, illustrated, up-to date, wide awake, undenominational, aggressive and progressive religious paper. This offer closes August 31st, but send in list at once.

A little work may give you a piano, organ, bicycle or some other one of these beautiful Presents.

No lists counted unless thirty cents for a six months' subscription, or fifty cents for one year's subscription, is sent with list.

Average copies each issue of the Union Gospel News for 1896 was 125,000. We want to increase this to 200,000 during '97. Therefore, these wonderful offers.

Address, THE UNION GOSPEL NEWS,
Dept. 103. 147 Seneca St., Cleveland, O.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS, MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

GREAT BIBLICAL LIBRARY.

REV. A. E. DUNNING, Editor CONGREGATIONALIST, says:—"Last spring I traveled over nearly all the ground where these photographs were taken; they bring back again the real scenes more vividly than any pictures I ever saw."

REV. DR. LORIMER, Pastor Tremont Temple, says:—"If one cannot visit the Holy Land, this Bible must prove a good substitute."

REV. DR. MINOT J. SAVAGE (formerly of Boston), says:—"It is the completest and most interesting Bible I have ever seen. It is the only one which has the right to be called 'illustrated.' The pictures are wonderful, and they give a natural and human interest to the book."

REV. DANIEL MARCH, D D., Author "NIGHT SCENES OF THE BIBLE," says:—"The photographs set before the eye the actual scenes of the greatest life ever lived in the world—the scenes of the old Bible story."

REV. JOHN WILLIS BAER, D. D., Sec. SOCIETY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, says:—"I wish it might have a sale of a million copies among our young people."

We are gratified to announce that, by a very fortunate arrangement, we have secured the entire first edition of that important new work,

THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE,

This new Bible is a bold and brilliant conception, typically characteristic of, and possible only to, our own day. Nothing like it—nothing approaching it—has ever before appeared.

"THE ONE TRUTHFULLY ILLUSTRATED BIBLE."

The magnificent series of photographs from the actual scenes and places made famous in Biblical history illuminate and make real the Scriptural narrative as no other work has ever done.

These are not imaginary pictures, but from the original photographs taken on the spot.

This is, indeed, the one truthfully illustrated Bible ever published.

LARGE, CLEAR TYPE

SUPERB COLORED PLATES

FOUR SUPERB VOLUMES—OVER 2,000 QUARTO PAGES,

440 FULL PAGE PHOTOGRAPHS,

Size of Page 9 x 11½ Inches.

At the Cost of an Ordinary Bible.

It is Uniquely Great.

Think of a Bible whose events are as real as if you stood with the Prophets or the Disciples in the Holy Land itself; whose memorable incidents and famous scenes are illustrated from original photographs of the actual places where they occurred; whose obscure passages are all explained by a wonderful series of graphic notes and commentaries which illuminate every page and chapter of the Scriptures; whose difficult names are all pronounced; which is, indeed, a veritable encyclopædia of Biblical knowledge; a Bible that is, in short, more real, more plain, more interesting than the most accomplished Bible teacher can make it.

It is not merely a book for scholars and expositors—though it is a wonderful aid to these; it is still more—a Bible for the home, for the family circle, for the children; a Bible which young and old will read with a new and deepened interest, with a larger understanding, with a new sense of the marvelous power of "The Book of Books." Nothing could better describe it than the title which it bears, the

SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE.

Why Self-Interpreting. Because its splendid illustrations from actual photographs (each placed directly opposite the passage to which it refers), its countless commentaries and helps, set in direct connection with the text, and its invaluable historical features, Harmony of the Gospels, its exhaustive Dictionary of the Bible, and many other aids and features make every page and paragraph of the Sacred Word perfectly clear to the understanding of every reader; they indeed explain, vivify and make real the Bible as no other work has ever done.

A New Revelation. This new Bible is, in truth, "like unto a new revelation." It lends to the Scriptures that clearness and real interest absolutely necessary to make Bible reading entertaining and profitable in the highest degree.

You cannot understand its unique power or its wondrously illuminating effect until you have seen it and read it. Then you will understand that you cannot do without it, that you must have it

Its Supreme Excellence. It is the one truthfully illustrated Bible ever published. It presents not pictorial fiction, but large, beautiful photographs of actual Biblical scenes. These were taken on the spot by a special photographic expedition sent out to Palestine and the East solely for this purpose, and costing over $25,000. There are four hundred and forty of these, 8 x 10 inches in size, covering every spot of memorable interest throughout the entire Bible. In themselves these constitute a possession of almost priceless value.

It is the most fully, vividly and comprehensively annotated Bible ever published None other can compare with it for clearness and ease of understanding. This alone would make it the most desirable edition of the sacred Word known.

A Complete Biblical Library. Taken together these unique and remarkable features, combined as they are with all the aids that typographical art can supply—large, clear type and bindings that allow the volumes to lie flat when opened—make this unquestionably the most valuable, necessary, helpful and entertaining Bible yet published in the history of Bible-making.

A Magnificent Opportunity. When the publishers of McClure's Magazine became acquainted with the fact that this superb work was nearing completion they immediately arranged for the entire first edition, making especially favorable terms, on the condition that only a limited number of sets were to be offered in each section of the country. These are to be used for the purpose of introducing a few sets into each community, preparatory to the regular subscription canvass (when the price of the books will be nearly double that at which they are now offered).

At last this remarkable work is complete, and as a special inducement to those who subscribe for the magazine now we make this,

Our Truly Great Offer. Send $1.00 to McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB, 141 East 25th Street, New York, and the entire set of Four Superb volumes of this Magnificent Biblical Library in cloth binding will be forwarded to you at once, the balance payable at the rate of $1.25 monthly for one year. The Half-Morocco binding, which we strongly recommend, is only 25 cents a month extra, and the full Morocco style, especially desirable for presentation, is 75 cents a month extra. REMEMBER $1.00 secures immediate possession of the entire set in any style of binding.

PROMPT ACTION NECESSARY. Under the terms of our contract this offer is strictly limited to A PORTION ONLY OF THE FIRST EDITION, and this opportunity can therefore remain open but a few days at most. The demand will be great, and those who wish to secure these choice first edition sets should send in their orders immediately, or it will be too late. Under no circumstances can we exceed the limit allowed us to be distributed at the low introductory price.

BEAR IN MIND that it is practically the same as the superb Edition de Luxe, sold at $65.00. It is printed from the same new, fresh plates, its illustrations are from the same new blocks, it is on superfine paper and is, indeed, a de Luxe Edition at the price of an ordinary Bible.

WE HAVE IMPLICIT FAITH that the volumes will not only meet, but surpass, expectations, and in order that purchasers may feel that they are taking no risk whatever, if any one who receives a set finds it is not in every way satisfactory, he may return the same, within one week from its receipt, and his remittance (of $1.00) will be promptly refunded.

WE INVITE INSPECTION. Outside orders we shall file and fill according to their date and postmark, so that all, including the most distant, will be upon an equal footing.

Therefore, do not delay, but send in your dollar today, and secure one of the valuable and desirable First Edition Sets.

PLEASE USE THIS ORDER BLANK.

McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB

Inclosed find $1, for which please send to my address a complete set of THE SELF-INTERPRETING BIBLE, in ....binding, including a year's subscription (or renewal) to McCLURE'S MAGAZINE.

I agree to pay the balance in 12 equal monthly payments.

NAME..

OCCUPATION..

ADDRESS..

35

McCLURE'S MAGAZINE BIBLE CLUB, 141 East 25th Street, New York, N. Y.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 3 June 1897 Number 22

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75
net. See Advertisement on page 807.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 14, Memorial Day.
No. 15, Children's Sunday.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

It is always illuminating to contrast the State and national Congregational assemblages on this side the water with similar gatherings in England. The month of May, so prolific in State meetings here, is the one month in the year when Englishmen go up to London to attend the convocations of various bodies. Every recurring season seems to mark a larger devotion to their annual gatherings on the part of our British brethren. Our London contemporaries abound in reports of these spirited conventions, and almost every form of Christian endeavor seems to have its due degree of exploitation. Besides the distinctively ecclesiastical and denominational meetings occur the anniversaries of the Temperance, Tract and Liberation Societies, the Prayer and Bible Unions, the Foreign and City Missionary Societies and of those organizations which promote the interest of Sunday schools and ragged schools. Our English editor elsewhere in this paper gives a succinct account of the doings of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. It was feared that the March assemblage of the Federation of Free Churches would cause a falling off in attendance, but this fear was happily disappointed. Evidently the address of the retiring chairman, Dr. Berry, on Congregational Churchmanship was a classic, and will serve to increase the esteem in which he is already held. Dr. Parker, too, was unusually prominent in the meeting, and seems to have said in his pithy and sparkling way many things that aroused great enthusiasm among his auditors. The range of discussion exhibited vital interest in great and pressing questions, while the call to deeper spiritual life was strong and frequent. We congratulate our English brethren on so successful and auspicious a meeting.

What one New England city has done in the line of Congregational church extension is admirably set forth in an article in our Church News department. All praise to Brockton for its splendid showing. It can challenge comparison with any city in the country. All who believe that Congregationalism has a right and a duty to propagate itself should ponder well the story of the simple but effective methods which have conduced to so remarkable a denominational development. It has proceeded on the true principle that the leading church in a community should be the first to note and occupy promising fields for new churches. That the Porter Church has not suffered by once and again sending out colonies, and by giving freely to their maintenance, is only another proof of the law which runs through all Christian service, that he who loses his life shall find it. It is noticeable, too, that the openings which have been so promptly responded to were not of a missionary character in the sense that they would have to be treated for all time as dependent enterprises. We err when we think that a well-to-do community in the outskirts of a growing city has no claim upon our Congregational sympathies. To put all our missionary money into districts in the city proper, which can never become self-supporting, and to ignore the cultivation of fields that will in time become themselves fountains of gifts to our benevolent societies is a short-sighted policy.

The Presbyterian General Assembly, following the line of its choice of a moderator, has been largely occupied with the affairs of home missions. It has made the board's tenure in the new building at New York secure, reduced its executive force from two secretaries to one, and substantially approved of the plans of separate control of the work by synods in their own territory, while committing the whole question to a committee for study and report next year. The Synod of New York becomes the Synod of New York and New England, in recognition of the growing interests of the church, among immigrants especially, in the manufacturing towns on this side the line. A resolution looking toward union with the Southern Church was adopted, and the 250th anniversary of the adoption of the Westminster standards is to be celebrated next year, when the assembly will reconvene in Winona.

The enthusiasm with which Dr. Behrends and other conservative scholars have welcomed Professor Harnack's new book is quite as likely to embarrass as to support them in their defense of their traditional views of the Bible. For example, Harnack places the conversion of Paul within one year after the crucifixion of Christ. His reasons for this date rest entirely on a comparison of historical statements made by Tacitus, Josephus and Eusebius. From these statements he concludes that Festus succeeded Felix as procurator in the year 55 or 56 instead of 60, the date hitherto generally accepted, and therefore he dates Paul's conversion at 30. To adopt this wholly external and by no means certain evidence, we must believe that within a single year the new church had grown to the character and proportions described in the Acts up to the middle of the ninth chapter. This taxes the credulity of the ordinary student of history quite as much as many of the most startling conclusions of higher critics. Dr. Behrends characterizes Harnack as "the most commanding voice of our time." But Dr. Behrends is ready to recognize the authority of that voice only so far as it echoes his own conclusions. Harnack is no more a defender of orthodoxy than was Baur. After Baur, Harnack; and after Harnack will be some one else. Their researches are in realms which the ordinary student may not enter, but their data are, after all, so uncertain that their conclusions can never stultify the convictions of sanctified common sense. The Bible, to the soul which seeks God, is its own best witness to its divine origin and its divine message.

For skillful editing and picturesque presentation of the work of foreign missions the Missionary Herald is a magazine of which Congregationalists have reason to be proud. We have often been moved to say this as we have examined successive issues, and we say it now without prompting from any one. The June number is an admirable specimen. The letters from the Micronesian Islands combine the interest of story, travel, study of native life and character and inspiring Christian faith. Much the same may be said of the other letters, some of which are from regions on which the attention of the civilized world is now fixed. Pastors and Sunday school teachers cannot do better service than direct attention to this monthly record of the progress of the kingdom of God. It will not be difficult for them largely to increase the company of interested readers and, in consequence, of givers also.

The Iowa State Association, by unanimous resolution, as printed on page 800, declared its loyalty to a fundamental principle of Congregationalism. Thereby the State body passed judgment on a recent action of the Dubuque Association, though without mentioning it by name. That local association attempted to reverse, on ex parte evidence, the decision of the Bay Conference of California by receiving into membership Rev. Dr. C. O. Brown, who is under suspension by the Bay Conference. That action, as the Iowa Association affirms, "strikes a blow at one of the fundamental principles of Congregationalism and gravely endangers the fellowship of the churches." This same question has been forced into the Chicago Association, which is expected next week to vote on the reception of Dr. Brown into its membership. It may be proper for one body of churches, under certain conditions, to ask another body to review its action, giving reasons therefor, but no body of churches can assume to reverse the action of another similar body without discourtesy which must bring reproach on itself, and without threatening the fellowship which holds the denomination together.

GOVERNOR BRADFORD'S VOLUME

We give on another page a brief account of the ceremonies attending the return of the original manuscript of Governor William Bradford's History of Plymouth Plantation to American guardianship. They were simple, dignified and in every way beautifully appropriate. Senator Hoar's declaration, that in human annals there has been nothing like this record since the story of Bethlehem, hardly seems too strong. When the true and full meaning of the purpose and work of the Pilgrims and the artless, graphic, pathetic character of this account of them are considered, the uniqueness of the volume in human literature is evident. It was indeed a kindly providence which brought to pass the success of the appeal for its restoration.

The graceful courtesy of the English ecclesiastical authorities, with whom rested the decision upon our appeal, was more than a mere expression of favor towards Mr. Bayard personally, or of a willingness to acquiesce, at the request of distinguished men and learned societies in this country, that the proprieties of history be disregarded no longer. It was a frank, cordial expression of international good will fully deserving the hearty recognition which it is receiving. It ought not to be forgotten that the English are not without a certain apparent claim upon the manuscript, since it describes the most important experience in the whole history of British colonization. And it would not have been strange if our recent and not over-courteous rejection of the proposed arbitration treaty had caused some reluctance in England to grant our desire for this volume. The breadth of spirit as well as the friendliness which prompted English assent should not pass unheeded by us.

No actors more fitting for the memorable occasion could have been selected deliberately than Senator Hoar, Mr. Bayard and Governor Wolcott, although the participation of the two latter was only accidental, because official. The distinguished senator, whom Massachusetts honors herself in honoring, always specially felicitous upon such exceptional occasions, surpassed himself, and his oration will pass into history as a classic, not merely for its theme but because of its singular fitness and beauty. Our recent ambassador to England, than whom no American ever has won the affectionate respect of Englishmen more thoroughly, was fortunate in being permitted to crown his service as the first ambassador ever sent by the United States to England by a labor of love so congenial to him, so inherently significant, so full of happy omens for future international good will. The modesty, aptness and eloquence of his address, supplementing that of Senator Hoar and formally presenting the famous manuscript to the State of Massachusetts, make plain anew the cause of his great popularity both here and abroad. It was a happy allusion in which he referred to his own Huguenot ancestor, who himself took refuge from persecution in Holland just before the Pilgrims reached there.

Massachusetts has had many admirable governors from the earliest colonial days down, but few can have surpassed her present chief magistrate in ability, manliness or that special blending of affability and dignity which such an occasion demands. Governor Wolcott's speech, accepting the volume in behalf of the State, was worthy of him and of the event, and no more need be said.

The significance of the occasion is not confined to Massachusetts. It is national and international. It is probable that, important and impressive as these ceremonies were to men of our own time, future generations will look back upon them with an even greater appreciation of their interest and importance. May such men always be at the front and a similar spirit always rule in our public affairs.

SAFEGUARDS IN POPULAR GOVERNMENT

The framers of the Constitution, under the lead of Hamilton and Jefferson, carefully separated and defined the legislative, executive and judicial functions of the government, and took pains to organize the whole so that each should be free, efficient and responsible in its own sphere. In this respect the Federal Constitution has won the admiration of the thinking world, and to this careful differentiation it no doubt owes a large part of its stability.

Each of the three departments was meant to be a check upon the others. The Executive vetoes or approves the laws made by Congress, and the courts interpret and pass upon their constitutionality, but Congress has the power of overriding vetoes, of impeachment, of passing new legislation to meet the objections of the courts and of initiative in amending the Constitution, while the judges of the Federal courts are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

There are signs upon the political horizon, we fear, of popular impatience with this careful separation of governmental functions and responsibilities. These signs, so far as they exist, are danger signals, and as such should be noted and their meaning pointed out. A fair example occurs in the arguments which led the Senate to amend and then defeat the arbitration treaty with Great Britain. It was said in effect that the Senate, by consenting to the treaty as negotiated, would yield up its right of participation in the settlement of special cases of international dispute, which the Executive might thenceforth handle independently. But this was the very purpose of the treaty, in which the Executive on its part surrendered its larger right of initiative. All legislation is the surrender or limitation of personal authority in favor of general modes of procedure, and treaties are the legislative acts of nations. The Senate is not the treaty making but the treaty weighing power, and by insisting upon its prerogative in every detail of international relations it really declares that the Executive must not attempt to arrange for the orderly management of foreign business under general modes of procedure, but must confine itself to the treatment of individual cases.

So, again, a repeated attempt to commit the nation to the recognition of belligerency in Cuba, successful for the second time in the Senate recently, has really been a legislative effort to force the hand of the Executive and usurp the initiative in diplomatic affairs so carefully secured to him by the definitions of the Constitution. If it succeeds it will be, so far, an overturning of the balance of governmental responsibility which will make the President less efficient and less answerable to public opinion than before. A similar tendency has shown itself in a widespread impatience with the rulings of the courts. Partisan clamor resounds in the still cloisters of the law and makes the judge's task more difficult. The income tax decision, founded upon a compromise without which the adoption of the Federal Constitution would have been impossible, a compromise by which the power of direct taxation was reserved to the States, called out threats of legislative enlargement or executive packing of the Supreme Court which would in a moment have destroyed the balance of our whole governmental scheme. Nor have later decisions, which seem to bear hard upon corporate property, been received with becoming temperance of utterance by its defenders. So on another side of the original division of responsibility, the direct pressure of the Executive upon legislatures, both in the central Government and the States, has become another sign of the times pointing in the same direction of peril. The old attitude of judical reserve in which governor or president awaited legislative action has given place to one of warning and sometimes of threat, and there have not been lacking instances, if rumor may be credited, in which the will of the Executive has found expression in laws written by himself and obsequiously passed by legislators who courted his favors or feared his enmity.

It is easier to point out a peril than to suggest a remedy, but the trouble, we believe, is largely at the fountain head, among the makers of our laws. The moral and intellectual tone of legislatures is not what it might be if the people were more thoroughly educated to their civic duty or alive to the honor of the state. Business men dread the clumsy interferences of careless or malicious legislation and give thanks when tariffs are settled and Congress has adjourned. The enormous accumulation of private measures, the easy bids for popularity by speeches and bills aimed at corporate wealth, the temptations to blind following of leaders in the interests of private ambition can only be overcome by a far higher sense of personal responsibility among voters and a far closer scrutiny of the qualifications of those who are to represent them in the making of the laws.

THE LESSON OF A MONUMENT

Of Col. Robert Gould Shaw and his regiment it is written on their monument, dedicated in Boston on Memorial Day, that "Together they gave to the nation and the world undying proof that Americans of African descent possess the pride, courage and devotion of patriot soldiers." It is not in memory of the courage of Colonel Shaw alone, whether in ignoring the social prejudices of his time or in the brilliant assault upon the works of the enemy in which he lost his life, that the sculptor labored with such skillful love and the nation's ships were present in the harbor and the crowds assembled in front of the State House steps and the soldiers of New York and Massachusetts marched to the sound of martial music through the thronged city streets.

It takes something more than these things to make a people feel that any man has gained the prophetic place and is worthy of eternal memorial among them. "He is buried with his—soldiers," let us say, paraphrasing the answer of the commander of Fort Wagner when his body was asked for burial; but with the race of Americans to which his soldiers belonged he stands as one of the heroes of another blood, who have given them a future by teaching them the possibility of self-respect, upon which follows an assured hope of the respect of others.

It is to be remembered—and no occasion can be better than this for recalling it—that if the North is indebted to the Negro for his services as soldier, scout and guide, the South was infinitely more indebted to him in the same dark period of war for the security of the soldier's home. If any one doubts the capacity of the American of African descent for self control, and still doubts when we point to the patriot soldiers who died with Shaw upon the battlefield, we may safely remind him of the years when every able-bodied Southern soldier was in the field yet all the wide territory within the lines continued its industrial life by the slave's help without insurrection, outrage or mistrust. And in this differing yet accordant testimony the South and the North may join together in prophecy of good for an uplifted people.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE SPIRIT

This witness, real and vital although it is, seems vague to many, especially when they first give attention to religious matters. They ask what it is and how it is given. They regard it as something afforded to Christian believers only, something which as mere students or inquirers they cannot expect to receive. Their failure is a hindrance to their spiritual progress.

It is true that the testimony of the Spirit is given to Christians in a different sense and probably in a larger degree than to others. This is one of the results and privileges of Christian experience. But the witness of the Spirit is by no means limited to them. In fact without it nobody could become a Christian at all. Everybody receives it, in the good providence of God, in the form in which it is best fitted to be of use to him.

Why does every human being, before he consecrates himself to Christ, feel occasional impulses to turn from sin to a life of righteousness? Why does he ask himself if the claims of the gospel are true? Why does he study the lives of Christians whom he knows to learn whether they are sincere, whether they have any advantage over others which it would be well for him to try to obtain? Why does he give any heed to these and kindred questions? It is because the divine Spirit, recognized by him imperfectly and often not at all, is working silently upon his heart, calling his attention to his duty to God, giving him testimony that, at the least, he ought to investigate and reflect upon it.

Then, if he be honest and candid, as he devotes himself more thoughtfully to the matter, he receives further testimony in the form of enlightenment. By degrees many of his difficulties are removed and many of his doubts dispelled. To the sincere inquirer light always comes. It is light from the Holy Spirit. It is testimony. It has been pledged and the pledge always is fulfilled. Step by step, as he becomes able to receive it, he is granted more of it until he is led at last in reverent love and submission to the very foot of God's throne.

The testimony of the Spirit to the Christian naturally is somewhat different because its object is different. It is not so much aimed to persuade as to confirm, instruct and encourage. Its work now is not to lay foundations of character but to build upon them. It is recognized more readily and appreciated more heartily because of the new sympathy and purpose which have grown up in the heart. It comes in larger volume because the capacity for receiving and using it has increased. It opens doors and points to avenues of service which at first were unperceived. It encourages to efforts before deemed impracticable and leads to hights of blessedness supposed before to be unattainable.

There is no more solid fact in all Christian history than the testimony of the Spirit. It declares the reality and power of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the guilt of sin, the way of redemption, and the possibility that any, every, body may be made a veritable child of God in righteousness.

CURRENT HISTORY

Memorial Day Services

The most significant and interesting of all the services of Memorial Day was the unveiling on Boston Common of the bronze relief by Augustus St. Gaudens to the memory of Colonel Robert Gould Shaw and the 54th Massachusetts infantry. We have elsewhere pointed out the meaning of the celebration and may here recall the facts. Colonel Shaw was a Boston boy and a Harvard student, but enlisted at the opening of the war as a private in the New York Seventh Regiment. He returned to his native State to accept a commission as captain in the Second Massachusetts Regiment, in which he served with honor through some of the hardest fought battles of the Army of the Potomac. It was Governor Andrew who saw that the opportunity of the moment for the Negro was in successful soldiership and who invited young Shaw to the command of the black regiment which he was organizing in the face of bitter opposition from a large section of the public and from Government officers in high station. Shaw left his congenial position in the Second Regiment, which was one of the best in the service, and threw himself heart and soul into the task of proving the capacity of a despised race by creating a model regiment. The 54th was sent to the coast of Georgia, proved its mettle by good conduct in camp and a skirmish or two, and then for its first battle was given the lead in the brilliant but futile midnight charge upon Fort Wagner, one of the strongest of the defenses of Charleston. Shaw died on the ramparts which he had surmounted with the color bearer and a part of his regiment and was buried by the enemy with his soldiers in a common trench.

The Celebrations

The presence of the New York regiment, in which Colonel Shaw served, and of the little group of survivors of the black regiments awakened great enthusiasm. The addresses of the governor, mayor, Colonel Lee, representing the committee in charge of the monument, and Prof. William James of Harvard and Pres. Booker T. Washington, the orators of the day, rose to the high level of the occasion. The thought of present responsibility for civic courage, devotion and self-sacrifice was the dominant one with both the speakers. In spite of threatening weather great crowds gathered about the State House and the line of march and shared the enthusiasm of the occasion. At West Point a monument to soldiers of the regular army was dedicated, with addresses by General Schofield, Secretary of War Alger and Justice Brewer of the United States Supreme Court. Perhaps because of the recent dedication of the Grant monument, or because the thinning ranks of veterans appeals to the popular heart, the day seems to have been celebrated with unusual enthusiasm everywhere.

Earthquake and Flood

Shocks of earthquake have been felt in a limited region, including Montreal and parts of Vermont and New York. In Montreal the theaters were crowded and the audiences much alarmed by the oscillation of the building, and a panic was only averted in one instance by the coolness of the manager, who assured the frightened people that there was no danger. A later wave of disturbance felt through Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia and parts of the South was much less severe. Floods in the Rio Grande, which forms the boundary line between Texas and Mexico, have wrought much mischief both in El Paso and Juarez, but chiefly on the American side of the river at El Paso. In spite of hard work by over a thousand men, first the levees and then the head gate of the canal gave way and the flood poured into the city. As usual, the houses of the poor were the first to suffer. Built on the lower level of adobe (or sun-dried brick), they melted away at the first touch of the water, and the people were obliged to abandon their furniture to save themselves and their children. The effort of the city authorities has been diverted to the construction of defenses for the higher ground and to the preservation of bridges, and the people have taken refuge on the hills. Temporary relief has been provided and there have been no fatalities.

Points of Law

Mr. Chapman is serving out his sentence for contempt in refusing to tell the Senate committee who dealt in sugar stocks through him, but Mr. Havemeyer, the head of the trust, goes free. The point of law upon which Judge Bradley ordered an acquittal is that while Chapman refused to answer about points within his knowledge, Havemeyer was asked about matters which he did not know, though he might, if they had been mentioned in the subpœna, have informed himself. He acknowledged that the trust made political contributions, which is what the public is most interested in, but denied personal knowledge of their amount or destination. Senator Tillman's motion for a reopening of the investigation, with more sweeping specifications in the summonses, is hardly likely to pass. The Senate does not want the speculations of its members investigated. In New York Commander Booth-Tucker has been found guilty of keeping a disorderly house, with the all-night meetings of the Salvation Army for the reason, but the sentence has been deferred. The maximum penalty is a year's imprisonment. The district attorney has publicly declared that the case of the society men who participated in an alleged immoral entertainment at the Seeley dinner shall never come to trial, on the ground that the evidence would be greatly demoralizing to the public. This is the strongest argument we have had of late for exclusion of the public from the courtroom on certain occasions, and throws a lurid light on the terrors of "yellow" journalism in New York.

The Senate at Work

The Senate debate upon the tariff began with a careful speech by Mr. Aldrich, in which he pointed out the inefficiency of the House bill as a revenue measure and the necessity of the purely revenue features of the amended bill. The condition of business, he said, did not require as extreme protection as a few years ago—a significant admission from the point of view of party politics. He defended the sugar schedule on the ground that it admitted the cheap, low-grade sugars of the eastern islands, which would be excluded by the House bill, and defended himself with vehemence against the accusation of favoring the sugar trust. The first vote, on an amendment offered by the Democratic leader, showed an apparently trustworthy majority in favor of the bill, and individual objections on the Republican side have been forestalled by an agreement to settle disputed points in caucus. Senator Cannon of Utah proposes an export bounty on farm products, thereby voicing a widespread feeling among the farmers that they do not receive their share of the benefits of protection, and their interests are likely to induce higher rates than the bill first allowed on wool and tobacco. The reported movement to substitute a stamp tax on bank checks for the additional beer tax will hardly succeed. Such a tax is an extreme emergency measure, and objectionable because, being a tax upon circulation, it tends directly toward a contraction of the currency. The use of checks for retail transactions has grown enormously of late years. It utilizes the same money over and over again, and constitutes almost the only part of the circulative medium which is perfectly elastic. Any discouragement of its use would be to add another to the burdens under which our national financial system is staggering.

The Sultan Objects

It is not very surprising that the sultan should object to President Angell as United States Minister to Turkey. The ground of the sultan's objection, that the newly appointed minister belongs to an order which is opposed to Mohammedanism, may refer to his prominent connection with the American Board, whose affairs in Turkey are the most important interests which our Government has to protect in that country. President Angell's extensive knowledge of international law, his eminence as an American citizen and his diplomatic success as a minister to China may also make him objectionable to the sultan, who has had none of these things to meet in his relations with the minister sent to Turkey by the last Administration. At present Abd-ul-Hamid is a victorious ruler, and, having given the nations of Europe to understand that he proposes to have his own way, it is not strange that he should take this opportunity to intimate the same thing to the United States. His standard of justice and honor, if he has one, is essentially different from that of Christian nations. It will be very difficult to find a man capable of representing American interests in Turkey who is acceptable to the sultan. But, in assuming and exercising his right to reject a persona non grata, he is following precedents of which the United States, as well as other countries, has taken advantage.

Pressure on the Sultan

Russia's iron hand has held the Turks in check, the armistice has been extended and the sultan declares himself desirous of peace. In the meantime he is strengthening his hold on Thessaly, where the inhabitants have been warned that they must return to their villages if they do not wish to lose their property and where the army is receiving constant re-enforcements. He has also been working up a public opinion which will enable him to say that he cannot yield all that the Powers demand for fear of an outbreak among the people. Germany has proved herself the worst enemy of Greece by delaying the negotiations, and public opinion in England has so far forced the hand of Lord Salisbury that he has threatened to abandon the concert of the Powers if the retrocession of Thessaly is proposed as a condition of peace. Further evidence of English friendliness comes in the shape of a special invitation to the Greek Crown Prince Constantine to attend the queen's jubilee service in London. In the meantime the peace negotiations are proceeding with the deliberation which has marked all the movements of the Powers.

Foreign Politics

In Spain the cabinet crisis continues, and the Duke of Tetuan is likely to be forced out of his position as foreign minister, in consequence of the lack of self control which gave rise to the personal affray to which we alluded last week. The government leader, Canovas, hopes to tide over the difficulties, at least until the autumn. One Spanish newspaper has been bold enough to advocate the sale of Cuba, but the Liberal leader, Sagesta, has joined in the assertion that the fate of the island is a question which concerns Spain alone In England Mr. Redmond, the leader of the Parnellite faction in the Irish national party, has opposed the government measure for the relief of Ireland by a return to the policy of obstruction, and with three other Irish members has been "named" by the speaker and suspended from the House of Commons. The Irish parliamentary party at a public meeting has announced by resolutions that the party will be unable to take part in the celebration of the queen's jubilee, on the ground that it commemorates a prosperity in which Ireland has not shared. In Germany the Prussian Government has been defeated in the Diet in an attempt to make the law governing public meetings and associations much more rigorous, but has carried its law of restriction in a modified form.

The Race for the Pole

Nansen's fame seems only to have stimulated the other Arctic explorers. Lieutenant Peary has received a five years' leave from the navy department, and will spend the present summer in establishing a base of operations at the most northern possible point in order to be ready for a dash toward the pole in the open season of 1898. A party of scientists will go north with him to some point on Melville Sound. From Europe two expeditions are planned. Captain Andree is to take his balloon to the Scandinavian north again and hopes for a wind which will blow him across the Arctic Ocean to the pole. In Franz-Josef Land the Jackson Harmsworth expedition, by which Nansen was welcomed and forwarded on his homeward way, is still at work exploring and collecting, and expects to make its advance toward the pole this summer. Another English expedition, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Feilden and Mr. H. J. Pearson, has started to explore the Arctic coast of Siberia.

NOTES

By the decision of Judge Adams the city of Chicago becomes liable for the property destroyed by rioters during the strikes of 1894. The claims against the city aggregate $1,500,000.

New York has just dedicated a monument to perhaps its greatest single benefactor, Peter Cooper. The statue is from the design of Augustus St. Gaudens and is erected by a popular subscription completed fourteen years ago.

May of this year is a significant month in the history of the great Oriental island of Formosa, because within it falls the date when its inhabitants must decide whether they will emigrate or become unconditionally the subjects of Japan.

The battlefield of Stony Point, where at one of the darkest hours of the Revolution Mad Anthony Wayne took the British fort at the point of the bayonet, has been purchased by the State of New York and will be maintained as a public reservation.

New York loses a landmark familiar to transgressors in the tearing down of the city prison, familiarly known as the Tombs. It was a squat and gloomy building in the Egyptian style of architecture, and its long associations of misery and dishonor are enough to make the heart ache.

The recent speech of Secretary of the Treasury Gage at Cincinnati commits the Administration to action in the direction of currency reform and relieves the minds of many who feared that the country was to be allowed to drift. "In good time and in proper order" the evidences of his affirmation would appear, he said.

It seems hardly considerate of the Spanish authorities in Cuba to demand taxes upon the supplies sent for the relief of American citizens in distress. The plea of commercial regulations, to which no exceptions can be made, must, we suppose, be accepted, and indeed we can hardly look for unusual courtesies in the presence of the strained relations existing between the countries at the moment.

Twenty-three hundred men in white uniform, each with a flower in his buttonhole, accompanied by dumpcarts, rotary brushes and hose carts to the number of 750, with a multitude of auxiliaries, marched in procession and were reviewed by the mayor of New York last week in the annual parade of Colonel Waring's street cleaning brigade. The men are proud of their uniform, of their service, of their chief and of the reputation for cleanliness which they have won for their city. Their annual show is an object lesson in municipal order and efficiency in business, which must produce an increasing effect upon public opinion.

IN BRIEF

Our facsimile of a page of the Bradford manuscript reproduces the original in every respect, even in the matter of size. We are indebted for it to Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

The Independent is authority for the statement that President Slocum of Colorado College has been offered the presidency of Oberlin. He could hardly do larger service by making the change, but he has proved his ability to do what the present times require of a Colorado president.

The debt of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society April 1 was $148,828. But the receipts of the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain were larger last year than in any other year except one in its history. Perhaps this is an indication of the relative prosperity of the two countries.

During the last ten years 282 ministers have presented themselves as new candidates for Unitarian pastorates. Of these 102 have not secured settlements. Several of them have migrated from other denominations, but have found no more room in the Unitarian fold than in the denominations they had left.

Congratulations to Bowdoin College. A decision of the United States Supreme Court insures its possession of a legacy of $400,000, left by Mrs. Garcelon of California. The disposition of the property was contested by her nephews, but an adverse decision upon their claim has thus been reached in the court of last resort.

The blessing of gifts administered in person rather than by one's executors finds a new illustration in the contest by relatives of the will of William Lampson of Leroy, N. Y., by the provisions of which most of his fortune was to go to Yale. In the eyes of the interested, benevolence seems to be prima facie evidence of aberration of mind.

That is a brotherly impulse which has prompted the Bishop of Norwich to invite Dr. G. S. Barrett, the leading Congregational pastor in the ancient city, to read the Scripture lessons at the forthcoming services in the cathedral in honor of the queen's jubilee. We look for similar action on the part of other broad-minded Anglican prelates.

The eloquent monk who proclaimed from the pulpit of Notre Dame that the victims of the fire in the Paris charity bazar were "a sacrificial holocaust and an expiation for the sins of the French Freethinkers" must have a strange notion of God and of his handling of the world. We do not wonder that his utterance has been repudiated with horror by the ministers of religion.

We have had women in the ministry, but never before, so far as we are aware, a woman Bachelor of Divinity, the degree conferred upon Miss Emelia Grace Briggs, the daughter of Prof. Charles A. Briggs, by Union Seminary at its recent Commencement. This is an academic title, and does not carry with it a license to preach, nor is it, we believe, the intention of Miss Briggs to enter upon pulpit work.

The National Arbitration Committee has issued a dignified but earnest protest against the defeat of the treaty with England, and an appeal to the public for the maintenance of a "wise advocacy of the great cause" of peaceful arbitration of differences with the nations of the world, and especially Great Britain. In this we believe the committee has the sympathy of the more thoughtful classes of America.

Washington, as our breezy letter this week shows, is not wholly given up to wrangling over Cuba and the tariff schedules. It will be a relief to read of the lighter phases of life at the national capital. At the same time it is reassuring, in these strenuous days, to hear such words as these from a competent and careful observer of affairs at Washington: "My faith in the President and his Cabinet grows."

Said Dr. Donald at one of the Boston anniversary meetings last week: "The Christian Church is not a hospital, an almshouse or a day nursery. We want to make men feel that they are standing in the presence of the living God." This was not a disclaimer of the church's responsibility for the relief of temporal woes, but the assertion of its larger, deeper function. We are glad to have that less emphasized truth so sharply stated.

The death of Rev. Julius H. Ward last Sunday removes from Boston one who has for many years been widely known in religious and literary circles. He was born in 1837, graduated at Yale in 1860, ministered in the Episcopal Church for many years and for the last twenty years was literary editor of the Boston Herald, besides writing editorially for the secular press. It was probably due to him that the Herald was sometimes called the organ of Massachusetts Episcopacy.

Among the memorial services in the churches of Boston and its neighborhood last Sunday none touched a more recent grief than that held in the South Evangelical Church, West Roxbury, in memory of Dr. Quint. The Grand Army Post of which he was so long chaplain was out in force, and the pastor, Rev. F. W. Merrick, preached on the Moral Basis of Force, with loving reference in his closing words to the life work and influence of Chaplain Quint.

The Congregational Sunday School Superintendents' Union of Boston has done for many years very important service for our churches. It not only deserves but it rewards their support. For its annual Ladies' Night at Berkeley Temple, June 7, it provides an excellent supper and an inviting array of after-dinner speakers, in addition to the address of Pres. G. Stanley Hall on New Methods of Sunday School Work Besides the members, any one may be a guest for a dollar by promptly applying to T. W. Travis, 8 Exchange Place.

The report of gifts and bequests for public purposes in the United States in sums of $5,000 or more during 1896, as compiled by Appleton's Annual Cyclopedia, exceeds $27 000,000. This includes large gifts made up by the combination of smaller ones, but not the ordinary denominational contributions for educational and benevolent purposes, nor State and municipal appropriations to public institutions. It may be called the voluntary tax of the well to do toward the endowment of education and charity. In 1895 the total amount recorded was $32,000,000

The battle for the older form of the Puritan Sabbath has been raging on both sides of the Atlantic. The narrow majority in Toronto, as noted last week, has set the street cars running. In Scotland the putting on of a Sunday steamer on the Clyde was met at one of the landings by locking the gates of the landing pier, so that the passengers landed were detained on the windy pier head until they were pulled, one by one, through a window of the gate. How many of them were converted from loose views of Sabbath duty by the experience our informant does not say.

Of course Rev. Dr. S. B. Fairbank of the Marathi Mission, India, is alive. In our little reference last week to the memorial at Wadale in honor of his fifty years of splendid missionary service we slipped in the word "late," and the forms were hardly on the press when we realized our mistake. We would not undertake to start him again under the births, as a certain editor proposed to do in the case of a man whose obituary he had just published, but we would express the hope that Dr. Fairbank's excellent health will permit him to continue for many years in a work which he dearly loves.

The Year-Book is gaining time. This year it appears in the month of May, and Secretary Hazen ventures the suggestion that by greater promptness of some local and State secretaries it may in future be looked for May 1. This number presents as the frontispiece the Congregational House that is to be, and further on the new edifice of Union Church, Worcester, Mass., as it is—outside and inside. "Every church and every minister on the rolls of the denomination" is entitled to receive a copy of the Year-Book. Others can buy it for $1, or in cloth for $1 25, on application to Secretary Hazen.

Trinity Church, Boston, was opened last Sunday afternoon for an unusual service. The Seventh Regiment from New York and the Massachusetts regiments of the State Guard were invited to be present, and, except for the choir and a few newspaper reporters, the rector looked into the faces of a great congregation exclusively made up of men in uniform. The occasion was an inspiring one, and Dr. Donald used it with Christian tact and wisdom. The troops entered the building in military order, singing as a processional hymn Onward Christian Soldiers, and the suggestion of the occasion must have been quickening to the religious enthusiasm of all who shared the march and the service.

Nothing was said at the London May meetings more moving than this passage uttered by Rev. U. R. Thomas, who preached the annual sermon for the London Missionary Society:

> If Christ is to us a mere ethical genius, or a factor in an elaborate theological standard, or a picturesque figure in an Oriental setting, and nothing more, we may not be moved to do very much for him; but if he has redeemed our souls from the lowest hell, if he has taken us up out of the horrible pit and miry clay and set our feet upon a rock, there are few things we would not be glad and proud to do for his dear name's sake.

The response to this outburst of affection for a personal Redeemer is pretty good proof that our English churches are not becoming heterodox.

There were other impressive scenes on Memorial Day besides those which thousands of eyes witnessed. The little group that gathered at noontime in Mt. Auburn cemetery around the grave of Charles Carleton Coffin was drawn there to do honor to a life which in peace and war alike was swayed by an unflinching patriotism and by the highest Christian ideals. The occasion was the dedication of the monument which marks the resting place of the famous war correspondent. It is an unhewn bowlder from his native New Hampshire town, marked only with his name and the dates 1823–1896. Dr. W. E. Barton, his pastor, offered prayer and John A. Andrew Post 15, G. A. R., through whose instrumentality and that of other admirers of Mr. Coffin the monument has been secured, performed, through its officers, the special ceremonial acts which served to formally dedicate it. This simple, rugged piece of granite is a fit monument for a man of Mr. Coffin's caliber.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM JAPAN

The Gold Standard

Money is king and he sits on a golden throne, or will after next October. Count Matsukata, minister president of state, has cut the tangled knot of Japanese finances with one stroke of the statesman's sword, his brush pen. This is another proof of the fact that Japan will attempt in a single season what more stable nations require years to elaborate. No nation excels Japan in the opportunity and ability for learning from other nations. Avoiding the mistake made by the silver party in the recent American struggle of attempting to set the ratio between the two metals at an unnatural and therefore unjust figure, she appears to have bridged the change from a silver to a gold standard without any heavy strain upon banks or serious blow to business. Thirty-two to one, instead of sixteen to one, satisfied both parties, and as the present cabinet has the confidence of the business men the diet promptly voted the proposed measure. Japan thus takes her place as henceforth a nation desiring international bimetallism on the basis of a gold standard. She believes the bent of the world is in that direction.

Charity

Benevolence has almost an equal boom with business; it is a veritable fad of the hour. The emperor and empress were pleased to make a grant of $400,000 for the poor of the country in connection with the various state ceremonies at the time of the death of the Empress Dowager. One object in view was to set an example for rich and poor to follow. New schools, hospitals and asylums are springing up everywhere. The great need is for men of the right character and spirit to handle these trust funds. They cannot be found, and there is every prospect that money will be wasted in these earliest attempts at public charities. Officials from various provinces have visited the Okayama Orphanage, become deeply impressed with its spirit and principles and asked the secret of its steady growth, high faith and manly bearing. Mr. Ishii's brief reply is "Christianity," and thus he is preaching the gospel at this critical time.

Education

Two more of the government schools have witnessed serious difficulties between their teachers and students. The latter finally yielded but not till privately assured that their wishes would be followed even to a change in principals. It is the same old story. Japanese students seem able to secure well-nigh anything they choose to demand. As one sign of the times the national diet at its recent session passed a bill for establishing schools of foreign languages. This is to prepare the country for treaty revision and fuller intercourse with the outside world. It is also rumored that a strong movement to romanize the Japanese language will be started again at an early date.

Exciting Times at the Doshisha

The Doshisha seems to be entering on a new stage of existence. Rev. H. Kozaki has resigned the presidency and his resignation has been accepted. A fine man personally in many ways, with a most enviable record until he succeeded Dr. Neesima, he has failed to hold the confidence of the Doshisha's best supporters and to deal fairly with all parties in recent divisions. Dr. Morita of the theological department is president ad interim. Large alumni meetings have been held in Tokyo and Kyoto, and committees appointed to confer with the trustees. The general consensus of opinion approves of a change of presidents and the resignation of Professor Ukita, but criticises the manner in which the trustees accomplished these results. It is generally expected that Mr. Yokoi will be the new president, though a man of more positive evangelical views is greatly desired by many. The alumni recommend enlarging the board of trustees to twenty, and appointing in addition a small board of visitors. It is rumored that the theological department may be offered to the American Board mission, but no actual decision has yet been reached by the trustees.

The Churches

The Kumiai churches have just held their annual meeting at Kobe. It was an uneventful occasion except in the ordination of three evangelists, two of the three being in the employ of the Home Missionary Society and one in the service of our mission. All three are laboring in the large southern island of Kyushu. The charge was by Rev. D. Ebina of Kobe and laid urgent stress on two points: (1) you are to be servants of Jesus Christ and to preach his gospel; (2) you are to be prophets.

For ten days preceding the annual meeting a very remarkable series of fellowship meetings was held at a seaside resort near Kobe. Early morning prayer meetings, lectures on all sorts of theological, social and practical questions, and informal discussions on methods of work were the leading features of the occasion. The fifty workers present were closely knit together and received a fresh baptism of hope and courage and power for the new campaign. An evangelistic army was organized with a leader for each section of the country and a preaching campaign arranged for the near future.

Tokyo, April 23. J. H. P.

CURRENT THOUGHT

AT HOME

The May Harper's has these bright and apposite remarks with reference to cheap and disreputable newspapers: "The viciousness of our newspaper situation is in having all their profit depend upon getting advertising by means of circulation. The circulation itself ought to pay. The newspaper is too cheap. So long as it is cheap it tends to be nasty. The subscription of a paper ought to pay for its production. A good newspaper, well printed, with trustworthy news of the world, is worth three times the price of our ordinary journals. Even then it would be the cheapest thing in the market. The advertisements that came to such a paper would pay it for its expenditure of brains and industry. There is another suggestion. If the daily newspapers would quit trying to be magazines and revert to their original purpose of printing news only, they would do better service and cost less to produce. Considering what the news of the world really is, the fair presentation of it every day is enough to satisfy any reasonable newspaper ambition. . . . Everybody says that something should be done. For we believe in Providence. And some day some One will come into the garden in the cool of the evening and ask, 'Did these people make the newspapers, or did the newspapers make these people?'"

ABROAD

What the Christian Commonwealth says of the London May meetings will bear repetition by way of suggestion on this side of the Atlantic. "The most successful meetings are proving to be those at which the speeches are the shortest, the program most varied, the music good and the proceedings not long drawn out. Only a very effective speaker can hold an audience for more than fifteen or twenty minutes, and for the average speaker ten minutes is ample; and, as a rule, three speakers are sufficient for one meeting. The timed program is an excellent institution. Unfortunately some speakers wholly ignore it. One meeting last week was completely spoiled by a prosy speaker who went rambling on long after his appointed time. He had absolutely nothing of interest to say, and the speakers the audience wanted to hear had to greatly curtail their remarks. Is this fair? Is it Christian? Is it decent? For every minute a speaker exceeds his allotted time he should be made to contribute a guinea to the funds of the society he is injuring."

The Spectator thus tersely and effectively describes the position of the sultan: "Russia desires to reign at Constantinople without war, not with it, and the sultan, the most adroit of mankind, who has baffled and tricked and defeated all the picked diplomats of Europe, will take full advantage of the situation. He dreads the concert, but for coercing him there is no concert—only a committee, with his dearest friend sitting complacently as chairman, with three votes in six."

THE MAKING OF A HERO

BY WARREN F. SPALDING

It is impossible to account for Robert G. Shaw without considering the surroundings of his childhood and youth. His home atmosphere was well calculated to develop in him the traits of character which made him what he was. His father and mother had pronounced anti-slavery convictions. The slavery question was a table topic in these days, when there were far fewer topics than there are now, and great public questions secured the attention of earnest men and women. Robert was born Oct. 10, 1837. The opposition to slavery had already secured the devotion of many, especially in New England, among them of his parents. Mr. Joshua B. Smith of Cambridge, a colored representative in the legislature of Massachusetts in 1874, the year of Senator Sumner's death, endeavored to speak at the services in honor of the dead senator, but was overcome with his emotions and could not do so. Later he wrote out what he would have said. Among other things he referred to an incident which took place in the Shaw house. Mr. Sumner was a guest at dinner with others, among them one who did not know, apparently, the strong opinions of the host and hostess. He expressed the opinion that "the abolitionists, with their Negro friends, ought to be hanged." Mr. and Mrs. Shaw defended the abolitionists. At last Mr. Sumner was appealed to. It must have been soon after he returned from Europe in 1840, and before he had taken the prominent position which he attained by his great oration on The True Grandeur of Nations. His reply was a quiet one, but it could not be misunderstood. Pointing to Mr. Smith, the colored servant, he said, "Would you have that man a slave?" It required courage to say it, for the wealth and culture of Boston were in favor of slavery, and Mr. Sumner's associations were with the cultured people of Boston. But he had courage to say it, the atmosphere of the Shaw house doubtless making his declaration easier than it would otherwise have been.

The anti-slavery movement made rapid strides in those days, the struggle over the admission of Texas compelling public attention to the slavery question, and everybody took sides. The boy Robert must have heard the constant discussions, and was thinking out the problems in his childish way. Texas was admitted in 1845. It must have been long before that, and probably when Robert was not more than four years old, that Mr. Smith was sitting on the Common with him. The Shaws lived at 53 Bowdoin Street, near the corner of Derne Street, in a house which stood on land now a part of the State House park. The servant had taken the child for a walk, and they were sitting together on the Common. Robert looked intently at the servant's hands and said to him, "Smith, what makes your hands black?"

"Why, my boy, God made them black."

Then came the boy's second query, "If God made them black, why do people find fault with it?"

"Because they are bad," answered Mr. Smith.

This seemed to end the conversation. There were a few minutes of silence, in which the boy was busily thinking. The expression of his thoughts was a most remarkable prophecy of the future: "Smith, some day I'll fight for you!"

Less than a score of years later he laid down his life in defense of the rights of the race which Mr. Smith represented.

It is fitting that the monument which perpetuates the heroism of Robert G. Shaw should stand as his perpetual memorial on the Common where this remarkable prophecy was uttered, and in the shadow of the State House in which Governor Andrew commissioned him to the command of the first regiment of colored men ever raised to assist in putting down the slaveholders' rebellion—a commission to die at its head, leading the storming column at Fort Wagner, just after the colors had been placed upon the parapet.

The inspiration which made him ready for this duty came to him day by day, through childhood and youth, in a home where the wrongs of the black race were constantly on the hearts of those whose influence formed his character, first in that home on Bowdoin Street, and later in New York.

How strongly his father felt was best illustrated in his letter to General Gillmore. Soon after Shaw was killed at the head of his regiment of Negroes at Fort Wagner his face was recognized by General Haygood, commanding the rebel forces, who said: "I knew Colonel Shaw before the war and then esteemed him. Had he been in command of white troops I should have given him honorable burial. As it is, I shall bury him in the common trench with the Negroes who fell with him."

He was buried with them. A little later word came that the question of removing his remains was being considered. Colonel Shaw's family at once put aside the instinctive longing to have him buried where loving hands could care for his last resting place, and the father wrote to General Gillmore asking that he forbid the desecration of his son's grave, and to prevent the disturbance of his remains or those of the soldiers who were buried with him. A single sentence of his letter shows the spirit which filled the home: "We hold," said the proud father, "that a soldier's most appropriate burial place is on the field where he has fallen."

WHAT IS DR. GORDON'S NEW THEODICY

BY REV. HENRY A. STIMSON, D.D.

I took up Dr. George A. Gordon's new book on Immortality and the New Theodicy with some curiosity as to what new thing he might have to say upon a theme on which he published an elaborate and scholarly book not long ago. The charm of his style, the genuineness of his scholarship and the sincerity and earnestness of his purpose make everything from his pen worth reading, but just why this theme again, was my question. The requirements of the Ingersoll lectureship would hardly account for it in so busy a man.

The first half of the volume is a very readable and comfortable elucidation of the main features of a doctrine held by a man assured of its truth, addressing those who also are not greatly troubled over it. The interest begins with the second half, where the "immortality" retires behind the "theodicy." Here is the real reason for the being of the book. Here is the author's message. It has been led up to in the quietest and most natural way, but it will be found by many of Dr. Gordon's friends sufficiently startling.

It is introduced in the form of a brief discussion of "the various ideas of limitation that have been held concerning God's interest in mankind." What these are is not at once apparent. Limitations, i. e., determined bounds and prescribed methods in God's dealing with men, we know, but where among Christians does one find "ideas of limitation in God's interest in mankind"? They may well be "illogical," if not much worse. Some obvious statements are made as to the insufficiency of "bare Almightiness" to constitute its possessor an object of veneration, and as to "consistent moralism" beginning and ending in the supreme love. Anything less than "philosophical loyalty to the absolute moralism of Jesus Christ" is swept out of the field. So far there is surely nothing "illogical" with any of us. We are conscious of no antagonisms.

But here the real issue is declared. "It is usual to discredit the view that holds to the unlimited moral interest of God in mankind by applying to it the evil epithet of Universalism." What? Universalism we know; it was not born yesterday, and it has not been hid in a corner. And "the unlimited moral interest of God in mankind" we thought we knew. It lies very close to the first conviction that established itself in our hearts when we were converted. Our belief in God's "moral interest" in us individually was not distinct from our belief in God's moral interest in all men. And whatever differences of theology may maintain among us as to God's method of dealing with mankind, as to his moral interest in mankind there is none. To call that the distinguishing possession of Universalism necessitates a use of the term which is unusual and peculiar. We hasten on to see what it is. We are assured that "Universalism is not raised as a question of fact"—about facts there may be endless array of testimony and discussion—it is far more important; it is a question of philosophy, and as such fundamental. Perhaps for this reason throughout the book there is no reference to the teaching of Scripture. It is true, as is here said, that "Universalism is a doctrine that has to do with matters of fact, that contends that, as a matter of fact, all men will finally be saved," but it is also true that the ground upon which the Universalists maintain this position is that upon "inquiry as to God's disposition toward the human race" they "conclude" that, as "he is a being absolutely good," this final salvation of all men is "the scope of his moral purpose." This position once made sure as a philosophical conclusion, any mere "question of fact" would be unimportant, and the application of the term Universalism fully justified. Whether the epithet is "evil" or not, it is intelligible.

Three "grand forms of limitation upon the moral interest of God in mankind" which are "illogical" and deplorably opposed to this teaching are indicated. They are: the Hebrew idea of "a remnant," i. e., Isaiah's proclamation that the unworthy nation shall be destroyed, the worthy remnant alone shall be saved; the doctrine of election, given an interpretation which makes it "eternally exclusive of faith in a moral deity," which it certainly never was; and the doctrine of probation limited to this life. These three doctrines are driven out of court, with no reference to the teachings of Revelation, on the authority of a conclusion that they are a limitation of God's interest in humanity.

One cannot, of course, lay down his logic at this point. He must go on to the greater questions of sin and moral responsibility itself, and ask whether or not the doctrines of man's free will and of human guilt may not also be "limitations upon God's interest in humanity," and therefore untrue. The author realizes this and in dealing with these questions reaches the position which constitutes the fatal fallacy of the entire book.

That man sins cannot be questioned, but [p. 100] "it is in consequence of the irrationality that he has brought up with him from the animal world." Here is the root of the whole matter. A loving God can have but one purpose, to bring all men to himself—that is his "determinism"; there is at least so much of truth in the doctrine of election. Man is found for a time resisting the divine persuasions. It is due to the "irrationality" that clings to him from the animal world out of which he is emerging. It is "simply a defect," an "entanglement of the rational and the irrational in man which is the sore spot in the history of the race." In other words, man is in process of evolution. He still retains some of the limitations of a lower stage of existence; he will in God's plan by and by escape them all.

This is surely important if true. Dr. Gordon says that "man brought up irrationality out of the animal world." Is the animal world irrational? It is unrational certainly, but the essential principle of evolution is adaptation to environment, and the perfect reasonableness of its life in view of its surroundings and the part it has to play is the justification and condition of the continued existence of every animal, and this does not depend upon its place in the scale of being. It is as true of the amœba as of the ape, of the trilobite as of the tiger. The life of an animal is one long struggle for exact adaptation, a struggle so steadfast and undeviating that we decline to use the term reason in describing the mentality behind it; we call it instinct.

The moment man appeared on the earth, no matter when or how, by as much as he was a man, i. e., a being with moral responsibility, he ceased to be an animal. He possessed reason. His conduct could be "irrational" and sinful. He could resist the divine persuasion, which no animal can do. He could "bring up out of the animal world" nothing that the animal world does not possess. Man's responsibility is his own. Whether or not "it damages the case for freedom," this power was, most certainly, "fastened upon him by his Maker," if he had a Maker, no matter who that Maker may be or what our conception of the unlimited nature of his character and power. If our conception of God therefore does not permit such a possibility in his handiwork we have simply to modify our conception, for it is incorrect. Man is what he is for better or worse.

Here is the difficulty with our author's argument. He tells us a priori what would be "illogical" in the creative work of God. The possibility of a creature of God continuing indefinitely in sin would be "illogical," therefore it cannot be. The doctrine of universal salvation which is thus affirmed is at once confronted with the old difficulty that the freedom of the will becomes then only an illusion, and he answers: It looks so, but determinism is consistent with a moral universe, if it be understood as a surrender to divine persuasion. Sooner or later all will surrender. Very well. How does that differ from Hobson's choice? We have freedom only in name.

To escape this he resorts to the plea, Man is essentially and permanently a reasonable being; no reasonable being would resist divine persuasion now or hereafter. As a matter of fact man does resist, therefore man in resisting is yielding to something not himself, i. e., to what he has "brought up out of the animal world." He will outgrow this. When he does he will be persuaded, and cease to sin and be saved. There is no intimation of difficulty about guilt and pardon, and character as affected by transgression, because the "sin" was the act of the "animal" that now is left behind, and was never a part of humanity.

Sin thus becomes at most simply childishness, the unreasoning and illogical action of an undeveloped and immature creature. He comes into life with this inherited defect—inherited not from his human parentage, but through that from an earlier animal ancestry. By and by he will become a man; then he will put away childish things. To seek to escape the charge of Universalism for this doctrine by saying that Universalism is merely a question of fact, while this is a question of philosophy, is an abuse of language.

One wonders how Dr. Gordon fails to see that the war he describes is not in man but over man. By just so much as there is any war at all, according to his theory, it is the resistance of a hard-pressed, reasonable man to an external force. The heavier the pressure of the "animal," the surer our sympathy and God's with the man. The mere fact of the contest settles man's moral character definitely. That he resists is his glory. He is "saved" the moment the struggle begins, i. e., provided his Maker does not enter into some compact like that of the Powers over Greece. He is from the outset on God's side fighting God's battle, and justice, as well as love, requires that God hasten to deliver him. Nothing is more "illogical" than that the contest should be allowed to last an hour.

But, alas! such is not the conflict. Conscience tells us each that not in the least conceivable degree is the struggle with any outside force. It is wholly within myself. I yield to temptation because I choose to do so, and it is I who yield. We all fight against God in our sinning, and we are the men who do the fighting. It is both illogical and untrue to shift the responsibility upon the missing link. It is a reductio ad absurdum to conclude, as our author does, a critical chapter with the statement that as the outcome of a sound philosophy "moral necessity and moral freedom will mean but different names for the same reality."

This teaching, whether intended or not, is pure and straight Universalism, leaving, however, the comfortable assurance that it rests upon a fallacy so patent that it must quickly work its own correction. It is difficult not to believe that Dr. Gordon, scholar that he is and candid of mind, has been led whither he would not, by losing sight at a critical point, of a fundamental fact in the doctrine of evolution, which has betrayed him. That doctrine in its present state of imperfect elucidation is like Alexander the Coppersmith, doing us all much harm. It would be reassuring to have our leaders of thought take us back to the teachings of Scripture.

SPRINGTIME IN WASHINGTON

BY LILLIAN CAMP WHITTLESEY

A long, beautiful spring is nature's gracious welcome to the new Administration. For two months the city has been in finest dress and gayest mood—first, velvety lawns and blossoming shrubs, now full foliage and everywhere a wealth of roses. The loss of 10,000 trees in last year's storms is scarcely apparent. The broad, clean, shaded streets are a paradise to bicyclers, and their lines of twinkling lamps make torchlight processions every evening. The charming parks in the city, and the electric lines to the world of fields and woods out of town, lure everybody into the sweet air and sunshine. On one of these enchanting mornings you may meet a handsome carriage, the footman and coachman wearing big red roses. You catch a glimpse of a delicate, sweet-faced lady with her lap full of flowers. It is Mrs. McKinley taking her morning drive. Late in the afternoon you may encounter, on one of the country roads, the President, mounted on his big chestnut horse, taking a brief respite from the heavy responsibilities that are already pressing too hard upon him. Did he not adhere strictly to the rule, No business on Sunday, he would not hold out so well.

Sight-seers and office-seekers are staying on in a most unprecedented fashion, and all bend their steps to the White House. Three afternoons each week the President comes to the east room and shakes hands with several hundred people as if he enjoyed it. Every week day morning, except Cabinet day, he spends in greeting congressmen and delegations from all over the country who have special appointments to urge. He is uniformly accessible, attentive and evidently desirous to do what is wise and right, not simply for his party but for the country. But already there are mutterings over long delays in appointments. Congress, convened for a special purpose, discusses the Cuban question rather than finance. Three times a recess has been taken by reason of death. The two brief messages sent to the Capitol from the Executive Mansion have been for the relief of citizens suffering severe hardships. Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. The Senate shows no inclination to leave town. A prominent western senator says that he hopes to be free in September to join his family, who are in Europe, and a New England senator says that he expects to be here till October. A long heated term may shorten the debate; nothing else can be expected to do it, not even the threatened invasion of Coxey with a second army.

With fine weather and everybody still in town society is almost as gay as in midwinter. Afternoon teas are served on piazzas, and dinners have given place to garden parties and fêtes, where dainty summer gowns are in keeping with ship-shape lawns and trellised vines. Often these affairs have a charitable motive, the Foundling's Hospital or the Children's Country Home, or a patriotic feature, as the celebration of Dolly Madison's birthday by the Chapter of the D. A. R. named for her. Mrs. Hawley, wife of Senator Hawley, introduced Miss Clara Barton and the Countess Di Brazza to a large company of ladies at an afternoon tea this week. Their words about the American fund in aid of the Greek Red Cross were lost in the clatter of the cups and the chatter of the guests. At the First Congregational Church next Sunday afternoon they will surely have a large and attentive audience.

The social lions of the hour are the delegates to the International Postal Congress. Their sessions are held in the old Corcoran Art Gallery, are strictly private and are conducted in French. The rooms are said to be finely decorated and on the first day the delegates appeared in gorgeous array with their many orders and medals. The city respected their desire to be exclusive till it leaked out that the foreigners felt that they were seeing very little of the country or its capital. Immediately they were taken, by stereopticon, across the continent, and an excursion to Norfolk was made and another planned to Niagara. The President and Mrs. McKinley gave them a reception at the White House, they were entertained at a garden party at the British embassy, while ex Senator and Mrs. Brice closed their many festivities in their Washington home by giving them a reception. This congress meets but once in six years and has never before been here.

Two anniversaries have recently been celebrated that have been for years the occasions of congratulation. On the day he was eighty-seven, Senator Morrill's home was fragrant with flowers brought and sent by his many friends, and the President himself came over to shake hands with the Nestor of the Senate. A few days later the Secretary of State passed his seventy-fourth birthday, and his large white marble house was thronged with guests.

Ex-Postmaster General King, a contemporary of Senator Morrill, has just passed away. For nearly sixty years he had been identified with the best interests of the capital. He was the only one who ever passed from the lowest clerkship to the highest office in the post office department, and this was before the days of civil service. He was Postmaster General under Buchanan. Though a Democrat, he was asked by President Lincoln to be one of a board of three to carry out the provisions of the Emancipation Act in the District. He was secretary of the Washington Monument Association, and labored for years to induce Congress to order the device known as the penalty envelope, by which thousands of dollars have been saved to the Government. Many of the older residents of the District recall Mr. and Mrs. King's literary evenings. For several years these fortnightly Saturday evenings were the literary feature of the city. Men and women whose names are famous read, talked or sang in the wide, low ceiled parlors of Mr. King's old-fashioned home. The 100th and final meeting occurred thirteen years ago.

A citizen of the District and of Alaska, which means no citizenship at all, has been presiding over the Presbyterian General Assembly. Dr. Sheldon Jackson is a great favorite here. We all know about his Indians and reindeer and are glad that the assembly had a practical missionary as its moderator. While he has been away Rev. Mr. Puddefoot has been here talking to the Christian Endeavorers and filling Dr. Newman's pulpit while the latter was addressing the students of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. The theological department of Howard University is just graduating six young men. Secretary Bliss has promised to make some parting remarks to them. The President has consented to give the diplomas at the Commencement of the National Law School on the 21st. He will attend the memorial services at Arlington in the morning. The grounds there were never more beautiful than now. Ex Secretary Lamont ordered some large tablets placed in the hall of the mansion. One gives the history of the estate previous to the war, and the other tells why it has become one of the most sacred spots in the custody of the nation.

With the President and his Cabinet, the justices and diplomats who went to New York on Grant Day was a large detachment of United States troops from Fort Meyer and the barracks. They have just returned, having marched the 250 miles from New York city home. Much of the way is over historic ground. Not since the days of the Revolution have United States troops marched over the road from Princeton to Trenton. They were greeted all along the route with patriotic demonstrations.

The National Geographic Society have just had their annual outing, going to Manassas Gap through territory that was fought over again and again during the Civil War. From Monterey Mountain we looked off into the beautiful valley of the Shenandoah. Its smiling fields and sturdy forests gave no token of the disappointing battles, fierce raids and dreadful havoc wrought a generation ago. Yet as we stood there and peered into the summer haze for the outlines of faraway mountains and valleys did we see only drifting cloud shadows or were the ghostly armies of Patterson and Johnston, of Banks and Stonewall Jackson, of Sheridan and Early still sweeping over that fair country for which they had contended so bravely?

Washington, May 28.

ANNUAL ASSEMBLY OF BRITISH CONGREGATIONALISTS

A LARGE, ENTHUSIASTIC AND PROFITABLE GATHERING

The outstanding feature of the sixty-fifth annual assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in London, May 10-14, was the address of the chairman, Dr. C. A. Berry, on Congregational Churchmanship—Its Principles, Privileges and Obligations. America discovered Dr. Berry and he has more than fulfilled the high expectations excited by the invitation to succeed H. W. Beecher. Dr. Parker expressed the feeling of those most capable of judging when he declared that the address shows that the mantle of Dr. Dale has fallen upon Dr. Berry. Dr. John Brown characterized the presidential deliverance as a noble manifesto of Congregational church principles and a faithful utterance of some things that needed very much to be said. Dr. Rogers is thankful for the term Congregational churchmanship. We have, he says, been at a loss for one. "None of us like 'denominationalism'; there is only one word I like less—'undenominationalism.'" In the same speech Dr. Rogers said he is not so much alarmed by the spread of sacerdotalism or thoughtful, reverent agnosticism as by "the spirit of cold, worldly indifference abroad everywhere." The old warrior, whose prodigious vigor and fertility are a perpetual surprise, also opined that the fads and fancies of Christians hinder Christian work to an unsuspected extent.

The leaders of the denomination (if that term may still be used) launched upon the assembly a scheme of church extension for London and other populous centers. Although over £100,000 of the £800,000 raised sixteen years ago in celebration of the union's jubilee was devoted to church extension, Congregationalists in their provision of church accommodation are not keeping pace with the increase of population and are falling behind some other communions. The present aim is to raise a fund of not less than £100,000. Local efforts have recently realized about £40,000, and while it would probably be a long time before contributions to a central fund amounted to £100,000, the aggregate of local funds will doubtless soon reach this figure.

The recently inaugurated forward movement of the Church Aid Society has been fairly well maintained. Ministerial stipends which might have sunk as low as £40 per annum have, by grants amounting to £3,645 (£1,162 more than last year), been maintained at a minimum of £80 in England and £70 in Wales. The reading of a pathetic letter from one brother, who has to feed eight and clothe ten on thirty shillings a week, and has not bought a new book or suit of clothes for five years, justified the remark, "It is time we translated into action this doctrine of Christian brotherhood, about which we have talked so much and which we have practiced so little."

Much interest was manifested in the discussion of international arbitration. A tribute to President Cleveland and Mr. Olney, Lord Salisbury and Sir Julian Pauncefote, for their earnest efforts, and the expression of confidence that the fraternal sentiment which prevails on both sides will yet eventuate in a treaty, were alike warmly applauded. Rev. J. Bernald Snell, one of our coming men, speaking on the education question, declared that when the Irishmen needlessly swelled the government majority they severed themselves from liberalism, and Mr. Davitt's action made the severance complete and final. This statement met with pronounced applause. It would be impossible to exaggerate the disappointment on this side at the rejection of the treaty.

Strong feeling was aroused by the resolution, carried with enthusiastic unanimity, regretting the excessive consideration shown by the Powers toward "the barbarous Turkish empire." Congregationalists, Free Churchmen generally, and many Episcopalians, mourn and chafe under their inability to do more than thus verbally express their feeling. They feel that Lord Salisbury has brought the nation to shame and disgrace. A reference to his "lack of earnestness and diplomatic incapacity" was promptly cheered, and the suggestion that the forty shells, "mostly British," dropped on Crete should have been dropped on Constantinople was enthusiastically indorsed. "The net result of Tory rule," said one speaker, "is that Great Britain has sunk to the level of a Turkish policeman." Happily this humiliation cannot last much longer; England will resume her old heroic policy and become once more the champion of oppressed and struggling peoples.

The education resolution declined to accept the new act as in any measure a settlement of the future position of denominational schools as part of our national school system, and instructed the union executive to confer with the executives of all Free Churches with a view to united action. This passing of resolutions seems fruitless work, but, as Mr. Snell remarked, it is impossible to overestimate the importance of national education, and it is necessary to register again and again the unchanging opposition of Free Churchmen to the pro-clerical policy of the present Government. While there are half a million more children in voluntary than in board schools, it was conclusively shown that where parents can exercise choice they prefer the latter. One thousand voluntary schools have not a single voluntary subscription, and the Government subsidy of £620,000 is sure to increase the number. The nation mainly supports the voluntary schools, and the clerics wholly manage them.

It was generally regretted that, whilst delegates were present from Scotland, Ireland, Australia and the cape, the United States were not represented, unfortunately neither Dr. C. R. Palmer nor Dr. F. E. Clark being able to attend. The Congregational Union of Victoria, N. S. W., was represented by Dr. Llewellyn Bevan, whose pastorate at the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York, is doubtless remembered. Returning with a profusion of patriarchal white locks, though only fifty-three, he brings good account of the Congregational churches at the antipodes.

The City Temple was crammed from floor to roof at the special demonstration to celebrate the queen's diamond year and to give thanks for the progress of civil and religious liberty during her reign. Dr. Rogers, the oldest ex chairman of the Congregational Union engaged in pastoral service, presided, and in a vivacious speech contrasted the depressed and cowed feeling that marked the reign of William IV. with the brightness, exhilaration, confidence and joy which have characterized the Victorian era. Dr. Berry, discussing notable religious movements of the reign, thanked God for the work of the men often unworthily sneered at as higher critics. At the end of the queen's reign the Bible is a more real, more credible book than it was at the beginning. Dr. Mackennal traced the development of the social idea, showing how the Christian socialism of today has grown out of the individualism—which was essentially humane—of fifty years ago. His bon mot, "Though the Tories have often been accused of stealing the clothes of the Whigs, they never appear in a new suit," was greatly enjoyed. Witty, satirical and epigrammatic, Augustine Birrell, M. P., author of Obiter Dicta, showed the loyalty of the Free Churches to the Hanoverian dynasty. He incidentally referred to certain Anglicans as anxious to be recognized by somebody. "What they wish acknowledged is not their Christianity, but their orders." Dr. Parker drew pen portraits of Congregational pastors and teachers in the early part of the reign. Enthusiastic demonstrations at the beginning and close of his speech showed that his popularity with the multitude grows. As a feat of oratory his was the speech of the evening. Dr. Parker's paraphrase of Ebenezer Elliott's "When wilt thou save the people?" electrified the assembly:

When wilt thou save the emperors!
  O God of justice, when?
When wilt thou crush the sultan,
  And avenge the souls of men?

At the young people's conversazione stimulating addresses were delivered. Advantage is taken of this popular gathering to quicken the Congregational sentiment of the young men and women in the churches and to enthuse them with fresh zeal for their Free Church principles.

One of the most exciting parts of the proceedings is the election of chairman for the following year. He is balloted for without previous nomination (except in the newspapers) and a two-thirds' majority is necessary to election, second and third ballots sometimes being necessary. This year Rev. Alfred Rowland, B. A., LL. B., at first ballot received 507 out of 773 votes. Son of a Congregational minister, he is an able preacher and devoted pastor of a strong church in the north London suburb of Crouch End, where he has spent the most of his thirty years in the ministry.

The meetings closed with an assembly in the Memorial Hall on the Friday morning for worship and communion. The reading of a paper on the Presence and Prerogative of Christ Among His People was followed by discussion maintained at a high spiritual level, the final act being participation in the Lord's Supper. The hope expressed by Dr. Berry at the outset of the meetings—that the brethren might find rest in fellowship, stimulus in discussion, assistance in council, and above all fresh quickening and inspiration in common prayer—was fully realized.

ALBION

In and Around Chicago

English Visitors

Chicago has been made glad, and Union Park Church especially so, by the visit of Rev. Richard Lovett and his wife of London. He is one of the secretaries of the London Tract Society and an author of repute, and, as his sermon Sunday morning in the Union Park Church proved, a preacher of unusual attractiveness. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lovett are charming companions and as guests of Dr. Noble were permitted to make the acquaintance of quite a number of Chicago people. The few words which the ministers in their meeting Monday morning heard from Mr. Lovett made them anxious to see and hear him again. His stay was altogether too short. He sails for England June 2.

Ministers' Meeting

The subject under discussion, the training of Germans for ministerial service among their countrymen, drew a larger attendance than usual. Dr. D. F. Fox, the brilliant pastor of the California Avenue Church and the son of an Indiana German minister now over eighty years of age, Dr. Eversz, Rev. Carl Hess of Iowa, Professors Curtiss and Scott and others spoke. It was stated, and was not denied, that our English-speaking schools cannot secure the German boys even if they desire, that if secured they cannot be retained for service among Germans, and that for the first and second generations the language is a barrier to work among Germans unless one be educated in their language. All this was preparatory to the main purpose of the meeting, viz., to draw attention to the work which Wilton German-English College, situated at Wilton Junction in eastern Iowa, is doing for German youth and to its present pressing needs. The college has an academic, a collegiate, a commercial, a normal and a musical department. Instruction is given both in English and German. Young men are not trained away from their native tongue nor from the traditions of the Fatherland. When they leave this school they do not find it easier to speak English than German, as is so often the case with graduates of other schools. Graduates from the academic department are ready to enter the German department of the Chicago Theological Seminary, where they are fitted to enter upon the evangelizing service among their countrymen which has now become so pressing. The college at Wilton has made a good start. The inhabitants of the town have given generously to it. But it needs an endowment of not less than $100,000, and to meet bills now overdue $5,000. Toward the latter sum about $2,000 have been pledged provided the rest is obtained by the middle of June. This debt has come from the fact that the Education Society could not furnish its accustomed aid, and that extra repairs on the buildings could not be deferred. In seventeen academies the Education Society aids twenty-five young men who have the ministry in view. In Wilton Academy there are twenty-three young men anxious to enter the ministry. Unless aid is obtained at once it would seem as if the college could not continue its work. It is the only institution of its kind under the care of Congregationalists, and is doing for the sons of Germans what other Western colleges have been doing for the sons of our English-speaking population. Rev. M. E Eversz, D. D., the president, may be addressed for further particulars at Chicago.

Departure of Dr. J. G. Johnson

No man has gone from Chicago in recent years more regretted by his brethren in the ministry and by all who have in any way been associated with him than Dr. Johnson, until this month pastor of the New England Church. The council called to advise with regard to his dismission met by adjournment in the Sherman House immediately after the Ministers' Meeting last Monday, to adopt the minute which a committee of five had been appointed to prepare. The minute, which was more elaborate than is usual, gave high praise to the retiring pastor, and commended him in the warmest terms to the churches as an able, faithful, scholarly and attractive preacher. It recognized also the noble service which the church has rendered all our institutions of benevolence and learning through its generous and constant gifts, and sympathized with it in the difficulty it finds in solving the new problems with which it is confronted. It expressed the hope that a way will be found to set aside present difficulties, and under another pastorate to continue the honorable history the church has already made. Nor did it fail to call attention to the financial burdens which are resting upon all our churches, and to suggest that their pressure on the New England Church should be regarded neither as a surprise nor as a cause of discouragement.

Sunday Desecration

This has been increasing every year since the World's Fair. The decision of the directors to open the gates on Sunday, though not a source of pecuniary profit to the fair, has been followed by a steady decline in reverence for the day. Last Sunday the sanctity of the day received a blow from the mayor of the city from which it will not soon recover. On that day came the annual bicycle run, in which 6,000 wheelmen were said to have taken part. There were thirty-four clubs with a membership of 3,209 in line. They ran for a prize, and Mayor Harrison with his escort led the race. The wheelmen managed to pass the First Church just as the Sunday school at the close of the morning service was gathering, and to be in Union Park in time to reduce the ordinary attendance in the Sunday school of the Union Park Church by one-third. This open disregard of the principles of the Christian people of the city by its chief officer will not add to his reputation, nor to the confidence which multitudes would like to cherish in him as mayor.

Church Dedication

Sunday was a joyful day for the Grossdale people, for it witnessed the dedication to the service of God of a little building 48 x 70 feet, containing all needful rooms for Christian work, and costing a little less than $5,000. A year ago Rev. G. H. Grannis entered the field, with the promise of support by the Illinois Home Missionary Society. There was neither church nor building. Working quietly and earnestly, Mr. Grannis succeeded in organizing a church which now numbers forty-three persons, and in securing lots from real estate owners and contributions from them, the people and neighboring churches, till the present building stands complete and free from debt. There were three services Sunday, Dr. Tompkins preaching in the morning, Dr. H. A. Bushnell in the afternoon, and Dr. A. R. Thain in the evening. Collections for last bills were taken at each of these services. The Building Society has given $1,000 toward the new house.

Honor to Bishop Merrill

For several months the bishop's friends have been arranging for some sort of recognition of his twenty-fifth anniversary as presiding officer in the Methodist Church. This recognition was given at a banquet in the Palmer House Monday evening, May 24. Plates were set for 250 guests. A solid silver cup, properly inscribed, was presented, followed by addresses from Bishop Ninde, Rev. W. H. Holmes, F. P. Crandon, Esq., Editor Berry and Rev. Dr. C. J. Little. The reply of the bishop was modest, yet confident. He said that he hopes yet to see an income of $50,000 a year from the Methodist Churches of Chicago for missionary purposes, a large endowment for Wesley Hospital, a Methodist Old People's Home and an Episcopal residence. Monday noon the bishop preached a sermon.

Illness of Pastors

Several pastors have been laid aside by illness the last three or four weeks. Dr. Gunsaulus has not been in his pulpit since his visit to New York nearly a month ago. He has been suffering from malarial rheumatism, but is now on the road to recovery. Dr. Goodwin has also been laid aside by something like the grip for about the same length of time as Dr. Gunsaulus. He hopes this week to go out of the city for a short rest. Dr. Moses Smith of Glencoe has been prevented from preaching for more than three months by an operation for cataract on one of his eyes.

Progress of the Y. M. C. A.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the Chicago Association was observed at the Palmer House Tuesday evening, May 25. The chief address was by John R. Mott, who has been so successful in his labors among the students of our colleges. He denied that infidelity exists to any considerable extent in the colleges and called attention to the great and growing interest which students are taking in the college work of the Y. M. C. A. The extent of the operations of the association here may be estimated from the fact that the managers ask for an endowment of $350,000. Large as this sum in the aggregate seems to be, there is little doubt that in the course of a few years it will be obtained.

The Golden Wedding of a Veteran Minister

In the little village of Roscoe, Ill., not far from the Wisconsin line, lives Rev. S. W. Eaton, for ten years pastor of the Congregational church. From 1846 to 1886, with the exception of service as chaplain of the Seventh Regiment in the Iron Brigade of Wisconsin in the Army of the Potomac, he was pastor of the church in Lancaster, Wis. He graduated at Yale in 1842, studied theology at Yale, Andover and New York. He was married to Catherine E. Demarest of Brooklyn, N. Y., May 20, 1847. Their four sons, among them President Eaton of Beloit, have all won distinction in their respective fields of labor. Two are physicians, one in Des Moines, Io., another in Boston, Mass., a third is the well-known missionary in Mexico. That the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of such a man as Mr. Eaton should be observed with more than ordinary interest was a foregone conclusion. Addresses were made by ex-Governor Ryland of Wisconsin, who brought a bag of gold as a testimonial from the Lancaster church; by Rev. G. B. Hubbard, a classmate at Yale; by Professor Emerson of Beloit; and by the sons of the venerable man who with broken words expressed their gratitude for the training they had received in the ideal home of their honored parents. Very tender were the words of Mr. Eaton in reply as he referred to "those little boys, how I should like to see them again in their jackets!" to the "Indian summer of life," and to the "home eternal." There were gifts from the Roscoe church, as well as from other friends, and many letters from distinguished men who could not be present. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton are not yet old. They have in them many years of service and are as youthful in their sympathies as ever. It may be permitted the writer to add a personal tribute of affection for one whom he first met as chaplain in the army and learned to honor there as a man honored by the soldiers for his dignity of character, his devotion to their interests, his fearlessness in the presence of danger, the purity of his life and the genuineness of his piety. Few men have filled half a century with greater usefulness than Mr. and Mrs. Eaton. Long may they be spared to those that love them.

Chicago, May 29 FRANKLIN

The Home

A JUNE THANKSGIVING

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD

Still does this wondrous sphere
Move with divine accord,
Then let our hearts revere
Its Liege and Lord—

The shaper of the days
For love's supreme increase,
Whose earth-transcending ways
Are paved with peace!

Lo! how the manifold
Green growth of flowering things,
Creatures that creep the mold,
Or soar on wings—

All gracious loveliness,
Beauty of hue and line—
Are of his will to bless
The sovereign sign!

Voice of the vasts of air,
Voice of the depths of sea,
Thanksgiving everywhere
Be unto thee!

◆

The action of Cambridge University in refusing to give degrees to women seems to be a setback for the higher education. A not unnatural impression prevails, especially among women themselves, that one of the great universities is resisting a measure of simple justice to feminine students. But the Englishmen who oppose the admission of women to full membership in Cambridge disclaim opposition to college training for girls or even to co education. Cambridge has not refused English women the use of her libraries and apparatus, though her undergraduates have given decidedly rowdyish notice that their sisters are not welcome. She has only refused to confer a degree in place of the certificate of having passed a tripos examination. Unquestionably the admission of women would profoundly affect the unique character of the university, not only necessitating changes in the courses of study, but in tradition, spirit, discipline and social organization. If the fashion of our American Cambridge, where the woman's college stands side by side with the men's, each conferring its own equivalent degrees, were adopted by the elder English sister there would be no occasion for complaints and jealousies.

The dedication of a monument to the memory of Stephen Girard, on the one hundred and forty-seventh anniversary of his birth and the fiftieth of Girard College, has a significance which will hardly be recognized, perhaps, outside of Philadelphia, but which requires more than a passing notice from all home lovers and students of the training of boys. The existence of such a school, for it is a college in the American sense of the word only in name, may account in part for the well-known reputation of Philadelphia as a city of homes. Over 2,500 alumni and students were in line, every one a foster child of the childless merchant who gave his fortune to make a home for fatherless boys. The wisdom of the management is shown by the enthusiasm of the graduates for their alma mater and by their exceptional success in life. The orphan boys are taken young, carefully watched and sifted, under influences which are thoroughly Christian though not at all sectarian, and prepared to become practical business men as well as heads of families. This recognition of the boy as potential citizen, husband and father, to which we made reference in a recent paragraph, has nowhere been better justified by results than in Girard College.

Two women who had escaped from the city for an afternoon were carefully picking their way over rocky uplands and through wood tangles, and at the same time trying, with hands full of flowers, to hold up their gowns. Neither rides a wheel or plays golf or expects to spend a summer vacation climbing in the mountains, and consequently neither had provided herself with the costume already recognized as conventional and comfortable for these enjoyments. It occurred to both of these wood wanderers that they were as much entitled to suitable gowns for their rambles as if they could afford the more expensive pleasures, and they went home with the resolve to shorten by several inches a half-worn skirt for this purpose. Another consolation for the woman without a wheel, besides those which Miss Tolman mentions in her article this week, would be an outing suit giving the same freedom and comfort that the bicycle rider enjoys. It is here that the wheelwoman has the advantage of her less fortunate sister. She expects, and is expected, to be suitably gowned for the sport in which she engages. But dressed in comfortable shoes, loose clothes and short skirts a woman who enjoys walking has no reason to envy her friends on wheels.

◆

REAL AND PRETENDED IDEALS

BY KATE UPSON CLARK

Although this subject has been pressed home more than once to every reader of these lines, few of us, after all, fully appreciate the molding influence which our ideals, rather than our spoken words, have in our homes. We all know women who pretend that they would rather have their children Christians than anything else, yet who deliberately encourage them in worldliness and all sorts of surface accomplishments before spirituality. In a certain Christian household, for example, the mother entertained in her soul a feeling that men could not be as pure-minded and as good as girls.

"You can't make mollycoddles of your boys," she said to friends in private. "A man has got to know the world. He has got to sow some wild oats or he can never take his place among men."

That mother died of a broken heart. One of her sons is a wanderer on the face of the earth, shut out from all decent households; two others died from their excesses; a fourth was saved only by the efforts of a devoted minister. She said to her children, "Go to church, read the Bible, love whatsoever things are honest, pure and of good report, and practice them." Her heart said: "I know you cannot be very good and I don't expect it. Neither does the world. You will have to sin a little and we will all wink at it, but you must not go too far. You must end as respectable men."

It was her heart and not her tongue which had the molding influence. One thinks of Emerson's, "How can I hear what you say when what you are is thundering so in my ears?"

An ideal of absolute purity, charity, unselfishness must be preached to our children, and the mother, the father, the pastor must all believe in it to their soul's core, and long and labor for its realization. It will probably never in this world be quite attained, but let the ideal never, even in thought, be lowered.

Beware how you laugh at a child who tells you of a "good time" which to you seems tame and insipid. Many a youngster is given a distaste for simple joys and a hunger for the artificial and the sensational because his elders made fun of his expressions of pleasure at a trifle.

Conversely, let us express our own delight in the simple and the true. "What a lovely evening we are having at home together! To have Mary and Tom to play for us and papa to read a good story and a poem is worth more than the most thrilling melodrama that was ever acted." Or, "How good you have been all this afternoon. You have made your father and me very happy. What a nice day we have had! Let us have another as soon as we can."

A right ideal of a truly good time is something which half of even our good people do not possess.

The ideal gentleman is another object which too many of us fail to make plain to our children. He is, perhaps, a harder creature to find than the ideal lady. Sometimes the master of the house impersonates him admirably. Without casting any reflections upon him, in case he falls short in certain particulars, it may be wise to refer from time to time to other men.

"How beautifully Dr. Blank spoke this evening! His language is always refined and expressive. If I could use the English tongue as he does it would make me very happy. One cannot imagine him swearing or using coarse slang."

"Mr. Smith is a perfect gentleman. He is never seen twirling a cane along the street, or holding a cigar off, with an air of 'See how graceful and fashionable I am!' He does not smoke nor try to 'show off' in any way. He is a man through and through, a thinking, noble man. He never does things just because others do. He thinks everything out for himself, and tries to do what is right, without regard to other people."

Perhaps it is not an extravagant statement to say that, if our boys knew just what a Christian gentleman is, but a small proportion of them would go astray. They have too often nothing adequate to aim at, no proper standard upon which to model themselves. Again, they think they are "having fun" when they are really having a disagreeable time, which they often have to become inured to in order to like it. They aim to be like rowdies, or semi-rowdies, because they see no real gentlemen; they drink and smoke and gamble, because they have not been taught the joy of higher pleasures—and this often when they come from homes where the pretended ideals are high, but the real ones, hid from sight but none the less effective, are low and mean.

◆

Of all mistakes in family government one of the greatest is to convert the father into an ogre. Any woman who respects herself and is fair to her husband will maintain proper authority over her children without calling in the father's heavier discipline. He has, naturally, his own share, but he ought to have some of the love and familiar companionship of his children also, which he never will have if he is held up to them as a terror.—Childhood.

A GENEROUS LITERARY DIET FOR OUR CHILDREN

BY REBECCA PERLEY REED

It is the day of grace when we sigh over our wealth of literary blessing. Since we are yet subject to the limitations of time, we must of necessity suffer loss because of inability to assimilate the multifarious viands spread before us. History "makes" so rapidly that we cannot keep pace therewith. Science drops its time-honored theories before the blaze of new discovery. Religious truth glows with intenser light and life under fresher and more spiritual interpretations. Even our ten-cent monthlies discuss the most profound and serious problems. Fiction has become fact, and fact proves "stranger than fiction." So much for the surfeit of intellectual fare that is now spread for men and women.

How is it with the children in this same day of literary grace? For them as for their elders the menu of the present contrasts strongly with that of a century gone. Wise men and women regret the variety and superfluous confections of the children's table and wish that the fare were simpler and stronger.

Is it then true that the "old times" were the better for the young folk—the days when Pope's Iliad and Gulliver's Travels were "rolled as a sweet morsel under their tongues?" Where are the lads who filch the treasure of books between the flashes of the pine knots or stretched before the blaze of a grandsire's wide mouthed fireplace? Not here and now. Our boys read in the blaze of electric lights, in railway carriages, surrounded by the harmonious lights and shades of beautifully appointed homes. Attractive books jostle each other at their very elbows. Yet, albeit "wisdom's ways" are made such "ways of pleasantness," are we not sometimes unjust in our judgments of nineteenth century boys and girls? Is it quite fair to facts when some writer suggests that because Walter Scott at ten years of age delightedly lost himself in Percy's Reliques he would have suffered intellectual anæmia had the "pap rag" of "the pretty story that has caused the sale of an infinite number of velveteen knickerbockers and broad lace collars" been presented instead for his perusal?

That Little Lord Fauntleroy inaugurated the reign of velvet suits and large collars indicates possibly, not merely, his ability to set a fashion. This were indeed a pitiful garland wherewith to crown his charming curls. The reign of velvet suits was but a picturesque index of the grip of little Cedric upon the world of Mrs. Burnett's readers. Truth to say, the heart of the public's tribute was to something which lay beneath the broad lace collar. It recognized the evolution of the kingdom of heaven in the character of a nineteenth century boy, and although the setting of his story be uncommon—even unnatural—its motive and development are reasonable and legitimate. Is it fair to miss the real moral force of this story, which may more healthfully stimulate the boy who reads it than Percy's Reliques?

Undoubtedly the children of our day are in danger from over-sweetening and lack of strength in their mental pabulum. They must be trained to that vigorous exercise of faculty which makes for real manhood and womanhood. Nevertheless, we have no right to predicate for all the possible power of assimilation existing in the individual. Alexander Pope declared Waller, Spenser and Dryden his favorite poets before he was twelve years old. This is a brave tale to tell of a boy who was then, and afterward, precocious, but Jimmy Brown and Johnny Smith and 999 other lads, condemned to this diet through their first decade, would have "cut short all intermission," and thrown themselves desperately out of literature altogether. Mercifully for such, Gulliver and Walter Scott, Tom Brown at Rugby and Robinson Crusoe stand as a blessed alternative to such a desperate course, not to mention the delights of Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales and Wonder Book.

Is it true that we should approve semi-starvation for our children in the matter of books, because, forsooth, Abraham Lincoln and Henry Wilson, with many another rail splitter's and shoemaker's boy, developed statesmanship and leadership in the atmosphere of half a dozen dog-eared volumes? We must contrast these phenomenal lads with the 999 young Smiths and Browns who have developed a mediocrity of which the world has never heard, and anything but statesmanship and leadership, to its betterment. Partly because of their healthy though scanty fare, but also because the will was strong within them to assimilate everything that heart and brain could use for growth, do the great men of the world stand out from the rank and file of the inconspicuous. Not because of, but in spite of, literary limitation do such men frequently develop.

It is the year of grace one thousand, eight hundred and ninety seven. Not only men but nations are settling quarrels by arbitration instead of by butchery. The advance of Christianity is nowhere more evident than in such a movement. Should not the choice of our children's books take color from the advanced social outlook? Is it heresy to relegate the Iliad and the Tale of Troy to a second place in their library? Does the martial atmosphere of simple brute force suffice for healthful excitement and inspiration? Does physical courage, unaccompanied by moral intent, often committed to unrighteous ends, meet the needs of the case, even though the story be told in royal English?

In the recital of the history of the Revolution, or our later Civil War, the case is quite different. There comes in the stress and strain of conflicts whose bloodshed and death were only less awful than their alternative of disloyalty to right and duty, God and manward.

> Thy hand hath made our nation free,
> To die for her is serving thee!

The lofty inspiration which nerved the grandsires of our children to lay down their lives for a principle will not be confused in the minds of the latter with the wanton slaughter of brutality and passion and selfishness.

To our boys and girls belongs all history with its romance, its poetry, its heroism, its philosophy and, best of all, the absolute truth which the impartial years must sooner or later force it to own. All literature is theirs. All art, all science (to date) invites their research. We elders, who long to give them the best, the strongest and most healthful food—physical, mental, spiritual—pause and wonder sometimes what to choose. But back of us and around us and above us and them is their Father and ours. We pray him to guide us and to supplement our anxious, yet mayhap unwise, endeavors.

HOW TO BE HAPPY WITHOUT A WHEEL

BY EMILY TOLMAN

> I will sing, as doth behove,
> Hymns in praise of what I love.
> —Wordsworth.

It is evident that the bicycle has come to stay, at least till something swifter and easier, perhaps the flying machine, is invented. Many who, two or three years ago, looked askance at the adventurous woman who braved public opinion on the wheel now openly applaud. It is not the common, but the unusual, that attracts attention. The woman on a wheel is no longer conspicuous, as, alas! the woman on foot seems likely to be. The bicycle has ceased to be regarded as a mere luxury. The whole family, from the five year-old to the grandparents, are fitted out with wheels, as with hats or shoes. A member of a well-known piano firm said recently that the bicycle had ruined the piano business. People in arrears with their grocer are buying wheels on the installment plan, so alluringly set forth by the agent that the investment seems the practice of a virtuous economy.

How are the few of us who, for any reason, yet remain among the pedestrians to console ourselves? Is life worth living without a wheel?

Pondering these thoughts, I turn away from the busy thoroughfare into a side street. It is not level like the avenue, nor is it so dusty. It has its ups and downs, its unexpected turns, so pleasant to the pedestrian. Few cyclists follow it, and those generally dismount to walk up the hills. Not being intent on making a cyclometer register a given number of miles, I can pause to listen to the song of the oriole in the elm which overhangs the road, or to admire the beauty of the apple trees, whose blossoms are slowly covering the ground with their tinted snow. Without danger of "taking a header" I may follow the flight of the martin, or observe the fleecy clouds that fleck the deep blue of the heavens.

I am not, like the cyclist, confined to any road. Mine are the fields and the woods and the byways, the companionship of the flowers, the ministry of the mosses, the friendly sympathy of the trees. Doubtless there are joys for those who spin swiftly along the level highway, but there are other and deeper joys for those whose feet tread the grassy lane or carpet of pine needles, or the springy moss of the denser woods and glades; for those who climb the rocks to reach the wild columbine or the pale corydalis, who linger to listen to the voice of the phœbe or the thrush, or to watch the movements of the ovenbird or the yellow warbler.

Strolling through a rocky field, blue with violets and dotted with young birches and savins, I enter the woods. Here "emerald twilights" invite to a leisurely ramble. Nature herself neither hurries, nor does she reveal her choicest secrets to the hasty observer.

> With gentle hand
> Touch, for there is a spirit in the woods.

I like to feel the exquisite softness of the young beech leaves, to taste the bitter-sweet pipsissewa, to observe the opening buds of the hickory and the velvety pink foliage of the oak, to let the pine whisper the story of its patient vigil through the winter months, and the tasseled birch tell the rapture of its fresh spring awakening.

A clear, ringing bird song draws me to the edge of the woods. I watch long for the singer, and am at last rewarded by the sight of a handsome rose-breasted grosbeak and his soberly dressed mate. Few of our birds have a more brilliant costume or more joyous note than he. I follow him down the slope to the shore of a little pond, where the sensitive fern is unfolding its tender fronds, and a yellow butterfly,

Leafless, stemless, floating flower, is disporting himself in the sunshine.

I have not gone far from home, but I have traveled leagues from care and labor. Every step has brought me nearer the golden age. My progress has not been rapid, but speed is not everything. One cannot learn how

Sweet is the lore that Nature brings at the rate of ten miles an hour.

"The walker," says John Burroughs, "is not merely a spectator of the panorama of nature, but a participator in it. He experiences the country he passes through—tastes it, feels it, absorbs it; the traveler in his carriage [he might have said on his wheel] sees it merely. Next to the laborer in the fields the walker holds the closest relation to the soil, and he holds a closer and more vital relation to nature, because he is freer and his mind more at leisure."

How few Americans walk except on compulsion! It is too slow a method of progression for a "live Yankee." He considers it a waste of time. He wants rapid transit, not only in his business but in his recreation. He works hard for his enjoyment. One would think it were written in his Bible, "In the sweat of thy brow thou shalt find pleasure."

My friend, panting and flushed with the exertion of a fifteen-mile spin, dismounts from her wheel, exclaiming: "I have had a fine ride! There isn't a dry thread on me!" I return home with my hands full of wild flowers, and my soul thrilling with the music of birds and brooks,

Exulting, rich beyond the wealth of kings.

A MODERN MAGICIAN'S CAVE

BY GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH

The romantic stories of treasure caves filled with ingots of gold and priceless jewels may often have existence only in the minds of the writers of fiction, but there are modern underground vaults where the wealth of many a Crœsus is heaped up in bewildering profusion. Attached to every large city bank are safe deposit vaults, where patrons of the institution can store their valuables, either in the shape of paper securities, jewels or money, and feel confident that they will not be stolen. So effective and popular is this method of keeping precious articles that safe deposit companies have been organized independent of banks to hold in trust the accumulated riches of those who have no present use for them.

The vaults are all underground, built generally below the basement of some tall stone and iron structure. Entrance to the subterranean cavern is had only through a private passageway, guarded at the head and foot of the stairs by enormous iron bars and by uniformed men. No one is allowed to pass either guard without giving a secret password, and no one can work the combination lock of the iron doors except the man stationed there for the purpose. In close proximity to the guard's place there is an electric bell which communicates with the rest of the building and with the police station, so that an alarm can be given at any time.

Once past the guards there is a descent of a dozen steps to a marble corridor below, leading to the great steel-clad cavern. This is lighted night and day by electricity, and every nook and corner is kept so bright that no man could conceal himself from view in any of the corridors. From the main corridor narrow lanes radiate in all directions. Their walls are built of solid steel, and numerous locks show where they are honeycombed with boxes containing riches that a king or prince would envy. They are arranged to suit all classes of customers, and the boxes are of varying sizes and shapes. Some will accommodate huge trunks, others are no larger than a small money box and still others are smaller than a cigar box.

Every possible safeguard is arranged to make these great accumulations of wealth secure. Over the stone vaulted roof rows of steam and hot water pipes are placed in a regular series. These may look like speaking tubes to the uninitiated, but a burglar would view them with apprehension. By turning a small wheel upstairs the guard could turn on such a stream of hissing, burning water and steam that a burglar or intruder would almost be roasted alive. The locks and steel vaults are all patterned in such a way that the surface of the walls is almost as smooth as a piece of ivory. The doors fit so closely that it requires an expert to find any crack in the whole front surface. This makes it very difficult for a burglar to find any place in which to fasten his tools, and the attempt to open one of the vaults would be slow and laborious. In case of fire the underground vaults could be shut off from the rest of the building. In addition to this all the boxes and rooms are lined with fire-proof material.

In these modern steel-clad vaults—more wonderful in their conception and equipment than any ever described in story or history—the riches of a great, opulent city are kept. Below this first vault there is sometimes built a second, entered by descending another pair of stairs. The doors of some of the most valuable are placed directly under the feet of the visitors, and are reached only by moving a lever, which automatically raises the huge blocks of marble flooring and reveals the steel door. No human power, unaided by mechanical means, could budge these marble blocks, and the secret which moves the lever is known only to a few of the officers of the company.

FOREIGN LANDS

Up into the cherry tree
Who should climb but little me?
I held the trunk with both my hands
And looked abroad on foreign lands.

I saw the next door garden lie
Adorned with flowers before my eye,
And many pleasant places more
That I had never seen before.

I saw the dimpling river pass
And be the sky's blue looking-glass;
The dusty roads go up and down
With people tramping in to town.

If I could find a higher tree,
Farther and farther I should see,
To where the grown-up river slips
Into the sea among the ships,

To where the roads on either hand
Lead onward into fairyland;
Where all the children dine at five,
And all the playthings come alive.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Closet and Altar

Power like character comes from the fountain of prayer.

Joy is a prize unbought, and is freest, purest in its flow when it comes unsought. No getting into heaven as a place will compass it. You must carry it with you, else it is not there. You must have it in you, as the music of a well-ordered soul, the fire of a holy purpose, the welling up out of the central depths of eternal springs that hide their waters there.—H. Bushnell.

So take Joy home,
And make a place in thy great heart for her,
And give her time to grow and cherish her;
Then will she come and oft will sing to thee,
When thou art working in the furrows, ay,
Or weeding in the sacred hour of dawn.
It is a comely fashion to be glad—
Joy is a grace we say to God.

—Jean Ingelow.

Religion is simply the laying of life—each thing and thought of life as it comes—down before the Lord. Sorrow, anguish, fear, anxiety; repentance, renunciation of evil, longing for cleansing and absolution; hope, motive, purpose, pleasure, success; little common annoyances or satisfactions—everything—brought to him, laid open before him, to help or heal, to use, to sanctify with the divine sympathy and permission—his gladness to be acknowledged in our gladness, his pity in our pain, his commandment in our wish and intent—that is just all of it. This is Moses in the mountain; this it is to "fall down before the Lord." "O come," the beautiful Psalm sings to us, "let us worship and fall down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker. For he is the Lord our God, and we are the people of his pasture; and the sheep of his hand. O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness," wholeness; "let the whole earth," our whole life in the earthly, "stand in awe of him." —Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

Life is not the mere living. It is worship—it is the surrender of the soul to God, and the power to see the face of God; and it is service—it is to feel that when we die, whether praised or blamed, whether appreciated or misinterpreted, whether honored or ignored, whether wealthy or destitute, we have done something to make the world better and happier.—F. W. Farrar.

O God, help us ever to praise thee with the praise that none else can offer, the praise that angels cannot give, the praise of man saved, man redeemed, man brought home to God; the cry of the sheep come back to the fold; the song of the prodigal son returning to the father's love and the mother's kiss. So, great lover of man, may we, sin-stained, travel-worn and wretched, yet bring to thee a praise to which our sadness shall lend sweetness. And if there be times when our voice is too broken by grief to lift itself to thee, still let us sing unto thee the song that hath no words, the inward song that needeth not to be expressed; that so of all thy children not one may miss thy praise. Bring us all at last, O Father, into the life where we shall sing thy praise more fully, into the land where our trembling voice shall shake no more. Give us now some words of the eternal song, and take us to thyself that we may be thine forevermore. Amen.

Tangles

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

50. QUOTATION HUNT

The blanks are to be filled with names of well-known poets. This table of authors of quotations will help in the search: 1. Tennyson. 2. Cowper. 3. Halleck. 4. Mrs. Ellets. 5. Collins. 6. Montgomery. 7. Andrew Marvell. 8 Bowles. 9. Campbell. 10. Montgomery. 11. Byron. 12. Cowper.

Of all the bards whose sweet songs none resist
(1) “Dan *, the first warbler,” heads the list;
Nor were the list a perfect one that lacked
Smooth (2) “*, as Harmony itself exact”;
Then comes a master of his gentle art—
(3) “, whose songs are thoughts that bless the heart”;
And one of whom the world has never tired—
(4) “, the dreamy boy, the bard inspired”;
Next, (5) “*, meek Nature’s child,” and next
(6) “*, who weaves in mystic rhyme” his text.
Now with still growing joy we look back on
(7) “The gentle *, Fancy’s pleasing son”;
And on the sad faced bard we yet must love—
(8) “, whose tones great Milton might approve”;
Loved dearly, too, the next who comes along—
(9) Robert “, the chief of Scottish song.”
Lovers of peace yet own this poet’s charms—
Gifted (10) “*, who sings of war’s alarms.”
Next in our list is (11) “, the minstrel who Called forth a new creation” to our view.
Then I will end where might I have begun,
For sure (12) “in front of all comes *******”!

MABEL P.

51. TERMINAL DELETION

A FABLE

Once upon a time the King of ONE, noticing the care and attention which a Farmer gave to his Poultry, resolved to make a Raid on the latter’s Hennery, drive out his Flock and occupy the Comfortable Quarters for himself and his Subjects. “I know we can do it,” said the King to his Companions, in a Consultation behind a hedge TWO. “We’ll make the Attack at Sunrise, one-half of us Participating at First, and when the TWO is at its Hight I will give the signal for the Remainder of you to Appear. The Unexpected Re-enforcements will Demoralize them and the Victory will be easily won.” “But suppose we are repulsed,” remarked a lieutenant. “THREE, as for that,” replied the Commander, “a determined Assault will put that out of the Question. I have planned the whole scheme carefully, giving it much time and thought, and failure is Impossible if we act in Concert and Remember what we THREE to each other in all Enterprises for the common good. I have prepared for every Possible Contingency.”

But it Developed that His Majesty was off in his Reckoning, for all his Carefully laid plans amounted to THREE and the Invaders were Ignominiously Defeated and were forced to Retreat in great Disorder, amidst the loud ONE of Victory and Derision which arose from the Successful Defenders.

Moral: You may nurse a Pet Scheme so long that you come to Consider it Infallible, but in the Execution of it you will be Surprised.

ELLSWORTH.

52. CHARADE

His step was slow, his back was bowed;
I asked commiseratingly,
“How long have you been on the road?”
Briefly he answered, “ONE, TWO, THREE.”

“Traveling well digger” was his trade;
“Now, with the new machinery
The work is rapid?” I essayed.
Said he, “I dig a ONE, TWO, THREE.”

“His health was good?” I ventured. “Nay,
Hopeless dyspepsia,” said he;
Then, in his odd, laconic way,
“I’m very rarely ONE, TWO, THREE!”

“A WELL man with dyspepsia!—why
That’s rather contradictory!”
My joke fell flat before his sigh:
“Alas!” (Or was it “ONE-TWO-THREE?”)

MABEL P.

53. ARITHMETICAL

A certain number of counters, if arranged in a square, leave a remainder of 11. To enlarge the square by an additional row each way would require 24 more. What is the number of counters?

F. L. S.

ANSWERS

46. Cradle.

47. Soup: Turtle. Fish: Cod, Whitefish, Mullet, Salmon, Bass. Entrées: Sandwich, Tongue. Roast: Goose, Turkey, Duck, Pigeon. Vegetables: Onion, Pea, Leake (leek). Pudding: Farina. Pie and cake: Pineapple, Orange, Mulberry, Walnut, Raisin. Drinks: Coffee, Cocoa, Milk, Coldwater.

48. Spray, pray, ray, ay.

49. 1. W. H. Harrison, Virginia, 1841 2. B. Harrison, Ohio, 1889. 3 Madison, Virginia, 1809. 4 Jackson, North Carolina, 1829. 5. Taylor, Virginia, 1849. 6 Grant, Ohio, 1869. 7. Cleveland, New Jersey, 1885. 8 J. Adams, Massachusetts, 1797. 9. Lincoln, Kentucky, 1861.

Recent solutions received are: Mrs. M. A. Harrington, Webster, Mass., 35, 36, 37, 39; Edward, Cambridge, Mass., 35, 36, 39; Ethridge, Woburn, Mass., 41; Nillor, Middletown Springs, Vt., 40. 43; Newton, Providence, R. I., 40, 43; Elijah Swift, Egypt, Mass., 43; Nelson Spofford, Haverhill, Mass., 43; L. M. Muzzy, Chatham, N. Y., 43; Harriet D. Hall, Minneapolis, Minn., 43.

Nillor finds that 26 and 27 had no solvers, and thinks that he answered 28 correctly. Elijah Swift, a fourteen-year-old solver of 43, “would like to know whether the ‘tough knot’ is where the rope is fastened to the horse or where it is attached to the shed.”

THE MUSEUM AS AN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION

In America the educational possibilities of the museum are not appreciated as they should be, and it is worth noting that in London a clause has recently been added to the educational code which permits time spent by school children in museums to be counted as school work. In an interesting contribution to Education Oliver C. Farrington of the Field Columbian Museum, Chicago, sets forth some of the peculiar advantages which the museum possesses as a means of popular education—advantages which he declares should entitle it to a place in public estimation on a par with that accorded the public library, and in some respects equal to that given the public school. We quote parts of Mr. Farrington’s arguments, which are arranged under four heads:

First: It provides object lessons. Object lessons are now generally conceded to be superior to those gained from the study of books. Exercising equally with the latter the faculty of memory, they also train and develop perception and judgment. Fortunately the desirability of object teaching is now so widely recognized that in schools of all grades it is used as far as possible. Yet, in the nature of the case, means of illustration available for any single school, especially those of the lower grades, are likely to be very limited and to come far short of fully exemplifying any subject. Since these cannot be supplied for each school, the next best plan would seem to be that these illustrative materials be provided in a central accessible place, so that all can see and use them.

The second educational advantage of the museum which may be noted, is: It provides unconditional lessons. The privileges of other higher educational institutions are confined to a comparative few. Entrance to them requires demonstration of a certain amount of knowledge previously gained and successful running of a gauntlet of examinations. The sources of education beyond the common schools open to the majority of people are, therefore, travel, books and newspapers. Travel is largely circumscribed by home duties and the necessity of constant employment, really instructive books are likely to be set aside for those of less value, and newspapers, while widely read and disseminating much useful information, mix too much evil with the good to be ideal in their influence. Any medium of instruction, therefore, which shall be at once free, attractive and elevating, is an addition to facilities for popular education which should be warmly welcomed. These advantages, I believe, the museum offers in a large degree and may yet give still more largely.

A third educational advantage of the museum is: It provides lessons for all classes. The child finds a larger world than he had known before, the schoolboy illustrations of the facts of the geography or history he has been studying, the student unwritten lectures upon botany, geology and zoölogy, and the most advanced scholar materials for prosecuting investigation which may enlarge the boundaries of knowledge. The mechanic may learn how and where the metal with which he works may be obtained, or perchance the stages by which the delicate and complicated machine which he uses has been evolved from a crude beginning. A still more important lesson provided by the museum is to show to the individual fields of thought and study outside his own everyday employment and thus broaden his outlook and cultivate new sympathies. This it does by giving him an opportunity to see objects from all parts of the world illustrating different peoples, their customs and manners, and together with these the plants and minerals which the world affords and of which he could otherwise only read.

A fourth educational advantage of the museum is: It provides means for extending the boundaries of knowledge. This function of the museum is perhaps the most widely appreciated of any, for it is an outcome of the use of the museum as a storehouse of treasures. The advance of knowledge, especially in the natural sciences, requires that specimens should be collected from widely different sources and brought together in one place for comparison and study. For this purpose a well-ordered museum furnishes by far the most suitable and convenient resort.

◆

It is amusing to read that a certain lady belonging to the English nobility is agitating the question of the style of headgear to be worn at the queen’s jubilee. She has written to the leading London dailies urging ladies to wear only small, low-crowned hats on the day of the procession. If this does not seem likely to succeed she proposes to have notices posted on the grand stands reading: “Ladies over forty are requested to wear large hats.” It is expected that this will substantially reduce the number of women who would care to wear them.

◆

It is mere fluidity and accommodativeness of language to say a man is worth a million; he is actually worth the conscience plus capability that is in him.—E T. Fairbanks.

The Last Spoonful of Cleveland’s baking powder is as good as the first, pure & sure.

The Conversation Corner

NOW that summer is upon us, it may be refreshing to have a winter scene from an Indian reservation in the Northwest. The two children in the two pictures are Cornerers who have more than once before contributed to our page.

FT. BERTHOLD, N. D.

Dear Mr. Martin: I think I will write to you now. I was seven years old on Feb. 4. I celebrated it by inviting the teachers and some of the boys and some of the girls to call on me to share my birthday cake. I am going to school. I learn writing and multiplication. Evan and I send you two brown prints. One is of Evan and me pasting in our Corner Scrap-book. The other is of our home just after a blizzard. You can see how the snow is piled up high. Evan and I walk right on top of the high snow-drifts. We were just starting for school when our brother Robert took the picture. Kate C. is the name of the big girl. She is an Indian girl who has lived in our home nearly three years. I wish you could come here and visit us some time.

DEBORAH H.

I wish I could too, but would it not be rather a long trip for my Columbia? Our Corner correspondent of last December went indeed beyond you to Montana, but he was six weeks in doing it—and he was a young and expert rider. How natural that picture is—you can almost guess what Deborah is pasting in the C. S. B., while Evan is looking sagely down to see if she is doing it right! In writing Evan about the Indians voting (see Corner of April 29), I asked him about that funny picture on the wall behind them; here are his answers to both questions:

FT. BERTHOLD, N. D.

Dear Mr. Martin: The Indians are like the people of Washington city. If they have land on a reservation they cannot vote, because they are not under State laws about elections and the State does not provide any place to vote in. My papa cannot vote for the same reason. [Not because he is an Indian, for he is not, but because he is a missionary living on a U. S. reservation.—MR. M.] If an Indian has his land off the reservation and is under State laws he can vote. The Indians at Santee, Neb., vote. What you thought was the Tower of Babel in the picture of the donkey was only a windmill without arms!

EVAN H.

On the way home from the Dakotas we will pick up a few children's letters.

ROMEO, MICH.

Dear Mr. Martin: We have a squirrel. My brother has got some chickens. We have got a dog and cat. Our dog's name is Friskey. Our cat's name is Silver. I go to school and I am in the sixth grade and probably I will go in the seventh grade. I am eleven years old. When you say sit up to the dog, he will sit up. When you say roll over to the cat, she will roll over.

RAY O.

AURORA, ILL.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am seven years old and would like to be a Cornerer. I began to go to school in September and I enjoy it very much. I have a little sister seven months old; her name is Martha. I inclose —— cents for the Armenian orphans.

HENRY H.

I have sent your cents to the A. O.'s. Take good care of Martha until she is old enough to be a Cornerer too!

KANSAS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I wish to thank you for the Pomiuk and Corner certificates. They are very nice, only I wish you had turned your face around so we could see you. I shall be more interested in the Corner than ever now, for when you speak of the Cabinet, I shall know where it stands, what it looks like, and all about it. My school is closed and now I have nothing to do but help my mother with the work.

The Corner is proud of a member who really and gladly helps her mother in vacation time—may her tribe increase!

PERRY, OK. TER.

Mr. Martin: In the Corner of Feb. 25 I found a letter from Miriam C. I am a great-great-granddaughter of Gen. Israel Putnam's sister and must be a relative of Miriam. I inclose a letter for her, which I ask you to forward to her.

ALMA B.

If we keep on in this way we shall have all Cornerdom related! At the farthest, these writers must be about fifth cousins, and it would be possible for the Oklahoma member to be aunt of the California girl.

MARTINSBURG, VA.

Dear Mr. Martin: I inclose twelve cents as usual. [I think this is the part of his monthly allowance which he sends regularly for the Pomiuk Cot.] I like Martinsburg very much. It is not a very big town, but we have a big house, a horse and a dog.

PRESCOTT L.

Is Prescott L. a descendant of Colonel Prescott of Bunker Hill and Col. Matthew Lyon of the "Green Mountain Boys"? Some of my cousins must be his neighbors!

HYDE PARK, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a Cornerer, but I would like to be one. Some time ago you published letters from correspondents in Colorado, offering minerals of that section in exchange for minerals of the East. If you have the addresses of any at present, I would like to communicate with them.

DWIGHT E.

Rocky Mountain collectors will please take notice.

RUTLAND, VT.

I have a complete Bible in raised print that I should be glad to give to any blind child who will make good use of it.

H.

Any blind child reading this and desiring to write Miss H. can do so through the Corner. See?

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

About Great-Great-Grandmothers. Reading in the adjoining Corner about relatives of that degree away back in Gen. Israel Putnam's day, it seems odd to find in yesterday's paper the notice of a little Portland baby who has such an ancestor actually living—not only a great-great-grandmother, but two great-grandmothers and two grandmothers, besides the same number of grandfathers and great-grandfathers. Her name is Margaret Katharine, and we hope she won't be spoiled by too much great-grandmothering!

About Kites! Let intelligent boys interested in kites read three connected articles in the May Century on scientific kite-flying. They will perhaps be surprised to learn the great antiquity of the kite, and that one of the two standard forms of kites now is the Malay. The Japanese, and before them the Chinese, had kites in remote time, but the first man on record as a kite-flyer was Archytas (pronounced Ar-ki-tas!) in Tarentum, four hundred years before the Christian era, and he was drowned in the Adriatic. His modern imitator—in the second article—came near meeting a similar fate in New York Bay when by some accident the immense kite got away from its moorings with a rope tied around his waist. As the rope parted his knife flew from his hand, so that he could not cut the line, and as he attempted to untie the bow-knot he pulled the wrong end and made it a hard knot. On, on he went in double-quick time, but when near the sea wall, with a prospect of a free ferry ticket to Staten Island, he overtook a lamp-post and hugged it closely till help came. "Since then," he says, "I have not been so attached to large kites." The experiments made in photographing from the kites high in air, and of telephoning through a "central" in the same position, are very interesting. Boys visiting Boston should not fail to note the representation on Franklin's statue, in front of the City Hall on School Street, of the philosopher and his kite, with the inscription beneath, "Eripuit cælo fulmen, septrumque tyrannis."

A Little Old Relic. I found it between the leaves of an old book at an antiquarian bookstore the other day. It was a ticket of "public expression of approbation for good conduct during the week," etc. It was signed by F. M. J. in the Center School of Meriden (Conn.?), was dated Saturday, Nov. 12, 1859, and was issued to "Bennie Miller." Possibly "Bennie" may be living somewhere and may care for this certificate of his boyhood. The book was Street Thoughts, written by Dr. Dexter, formerly editor of this paper.

Another Schoolboy ought to have received a "reward of merit," too. It was the first day of his school-going and he heard to his surprise the teacher calling the name of every boy and girl and the prompt answer of each one—Present. When his name was reached, Jamie answered, very politely, "I didn't bring you one today; I didn't know that we had to bring a present!"

L. H. M.

The birds sing in chorus in the spring—just as children prattle; the brooks run full—like the overflow of young hearts; and the sky is as capricious as the mind of a boy.—Donald G. Mitchell.

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR JUNE 13 2 Tim. 1: 1-7; 3: 14-17

PAUL'S ADVICE TO TIMOTHY

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

Paul carried with glad heart to his Gentile converts in Asia Minor the decisions of the council at Jerusalem. He had there won a great victory for them, bringing them into fellowship with Jewish Christians without separating them from their relations with Gentiles. In this second missionary journey a young man first appears who becomes one of the most prominent leaders in the primitive Christian church. His name is Timothy. The two letters which Paul wrote to him describe so many traits of his character that we may almost make a mental photograph of him. Read these two letters carefully, in connection with allusions to him in the Acts and in other epistles, and you will come to know him and his history.

Timothy was a native of Lystra. His mother was a Jewess and his father a Greek. But his mother's religious faith was not strong enough to bring him into the covenant, as a child, though it was strong enough to instil into his mind the Hebrew Scriptures. When she became a Christian through Paul's preaching the boy Timothy did not remain outside the new church. In the few years between Paul's first and second visit to that region Timothy had become well known and highly esteemed both in the church where he lived and at Iconium [Acts 16: 2]. Those who knew him had prophesied that he would be a good and wise pastor [1 Tim. 1: 18]. Paul, guided by their judgment, chose him as his companion and fellow-worker. He was ordained by Paul and the elders [1 Tim. 4: 14]. He labored at Berea [Acts 17: 14], at Athens [1 Thess. 3: 1, 2], at Thessalonica [1 Thess. 1: 1], at Corinth [2 Cor. 1: 19], at Philippi [Phil. 2: 19-22], at Ephesus [1 Tim. 1: 3] and at many other places. Of no other man does Paul speak so often.

Trained in the faith by his mother and grandmother, he had feminine, though not effeminate, traits of character. He was naturally timid and undervalued himself [1 Tim. 4: 12]. He was sensitive, easily moved to tears [2 Tim. 1: 4]. He was physically not strong, needing a stimulant [1 Tim. 5: 23], but inclined to asceticism, though tempted to sensual indulgence [2 Tim. 2: 22]. Yet he was a man of rare spiritual insight and earnestness. Paul had not another like him [Phil 2: 20]. This was the man to whom Paul wrote the last words which remain from his pen. In the selection from the first of the two letters now before us we may emphasize:

1. The young man cherished by the apostle. There was probably thirty years' difference in their ages. They stood to each other as father and son. The old man was constantly comforted by the young one. The young man was not only guided but stimulated to the highest manhood by the old one. With such companionship he could not neglect the gift that was in him. He was encouraged to meet opposition, to assert his own manhood, to administer the affairs of the churches, to fight the good fight of faith.

The mutual influence of old and young Christians on each other is of vital importance. It ought to be carefully cultivated in all our churches. Organizing them so as to separate young and old in meetings and in work will rob both of choice experiences, of comfort and of strength. Paul was a better man because he found in Timothy a dearly beloved son. Timothy was a nobler minister because Paul prayed for him every day. Let the young seek the comradeship of the old and the old the company of the young and the churches will be enriched thereby.

2. The young man's family influences. His was a godly home, whatever the character of his father, for his mother and her mother knew the holy Scriptures and loved God, and from the same Scriptures they taught him the faith which led him to receive Jesus as the Messiah, the Saviour of mankind. The grandmother, Lois, seems to have been first converted, then the mother, Eunice. The apostle was filled with joy as he remembered that home and the faith which dwelt in it as a presiding genius. Those who had shared the life in it, even as visitors, loved and honored Timothy the more for the memory of it.

No inheritance can be of so great value as the remembrance of a Christian home mingling with all the life of childhood and youth. Many a young man is trusted for his father's and mother's sake, and is held to high purposes, kept from discouragement and spurred to large service for others by the influence which ever lingers with him from a hallowed home. Every young husband and wife may have such an ambition, of which poverty cannot rob them, and it is sure to be amply rewarded.

3. The young man's personal character. He had rare natural gifts. He was popular everywhere. His care of the churches was marked for his genuine interest [Phil. 2: 20]. At Rome, as everywhere else, he had many friends so attached to him that they insisted that Paul should remember them by name to Timothy when he wrote. Among them were a Roman nobleman, a future bishop, and a daughter of a British king [2 Tim. 4: 21]. Nowhere in the Bible are there so tender epistolary expressions of esteem for a man as for him. Night and day I long to see you, wrote Paul. Come, if you possibly can, before winter. Look out for Timothy and see that he is honorably treated, Paul wrote to the Corinthian church [1 Cor. 16: 10]. But he needed the spur of a holy friendship. Even so good a young man as Timothy grows lax in loyalty to Christ if Christian fellowship does not kindle his ambitions afresh. You have a gift of God within you, wrote Paul to him. I brought it to your knowledge by setting you apart for the ministry, by laying my hands formally upon you. The gift is in you like slumbering coals of fire. Stir them into a blaze. Don't be timid. The spirit of fear in you is not the gift of God. His gift is a gift of power, of love, of watchful self-control.

The value of Christian associations is often underestimated by young men and women. Many with the gift of God in them become of little use, because they have not made for themselves close Christian friends to stir it into flame. It costs time, and sometimes money, to go to prayer meetings and Christian Endeavor assemblies, and to take active part in church work. But by such means the best that is in many a young man has been brought into constant activity, and multiplied a hundred fold.

4. The young man's use of the Bible. The secret of Timothy's success was in his study of the Scriptures. He had known them from a child. He must never dissociate the truth he found in them from her who had first taught it to him. He must continue every day to foster by the study of the Bible his faith in Christ Jesus. Every God-inspired writing is profitable, Paul wrote, not only to strengthen faith in Christ, but to teach and reprove, and to bring men up to the right and hold them there. That is the way the man of God may become a well-rounded man, fitted for every service to which he may be called.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, June 6-12. The Testimony of the Spirit. Rom. 8: 9-28; John 14: 12-27.

Testimony for us, in us, through us.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

The key to success in church work lies in the prayer meeting. With one half-hour's thought per week on the part of each member our prayer meetings would become the delectable mountains of our church life.—Rev. Doremus Scudder.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS,
BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

Faster and Faster

The plating of harness and carriage mountings disappears when polished with the ordinary cleaners. That means new mountings. With the brilliancy grows greater and greater, lasts longer—the mountings outlive the carriage or harness. The secret is, Electro-Silicon never scratches, never wears.

SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH

Two or three applications of Electro-Silicon to the chamois and you have an always ready polisher.

Grocers sell it.

The Electro Silicon Company, New York.

Hygiene of Private Dwellings.

Although offensive odors are generally Nature's danger signals, poisonous gases and microbes of disease may be in deadly activity and yet evolve no evil smell—safety and comfort, therefore, demand the free use of disinfectants.

"How to Disinfect," an illustrated book giving practical instruction for disinfection in everyday life and during cases of infectious illness, free on application.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.
636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

GRANULA Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.
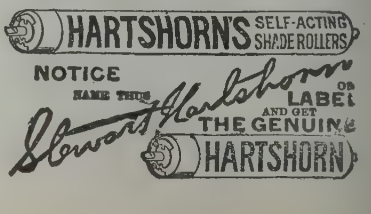
Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.
The Perfect Health Food



Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

THE VOYAGE OF THE MAYFLOWER

A series of Colonial Monographs is inaugurated, of which this, by Blanche McManus, is the first. It is intended to present terse and authoritative sketches of some of the chief events which led up to the founding of the American republic. It is not intended to be exhaustive in details, but to supply a distinct and graphic setting forth of special events. It claims to be original in inception and correct in fact. It does not seem specially original in plan, and at any rate it lacks accuracy in many details. The author fails to distinguish sufficiently between the Puritans in general and the Separatists, especially the Pilgrims, in particular. The Separatists were not progenitors of the Puritans. They were not a strong sect in 1575, and Browne and his companions did not go to Holland until several years later. There is no sufficient evidence that the captain of the Mayflower was influenced, still less "coerced," by the Dutch to land the Pilgrims at Cape Cod. That theory has been disproved. It is a trifling mistake to say that the Pilgrims saw no wild animal during the first expedition ashore at Cape Cod, but, inasmuch as Bradford distinctly says that they did see a deer, it would have been just as easy to be accurate. In her paragraph rightly correcting the common notion that Mary Chilton first stepped on shore she assumes that John Alden did, whereas nobody knows who did. Again, the Mayflower was not "towed" from Provincetown to Plymouth, but sailed across. Nor has any one authority for the statement that Miles Standish never had joined the church. Nobody knows. It is an error to say that William Brewster was ordained the pastor of the Pilgrims. The use of the title Mr. against the names of all the subscribers to the Mayflower compact, except those of Bradford, Alden and Standish, is a mistake, apparently unimportant but really significant, because of the fact that to the Pilgrims "Mr." was a distinct title, implying a certain social position, and was applied to only some eight or ten of their number. Moreover, there is no evidence that the servants in the Mayflower company were not real servants. In general the book, which is pretty and tastefully illustrated, is not sufficiently accurate to rank as a worthy colonial monograph. It ought to be mentioned, too, that the picture showing the Scrooby Manor House is at fault in two respects. The spire of Scrooby Church is of a different shape from the real one, and the manor house itself stands at right angles to its true position. All such particulars are now so easily learned that no such monograph can be commended which goes astray in regard to them. [E. P. Herrick. $1.25.]

RELIGIOUS

After Her Death [Roberts Bros. $1.00], by Lilian Whiting, the author of The World Beautiful, may be fairly classified among religious books. It is prompted by the author's peculiar experiences after the death of an intimate friend, said to have been the late Miss Kate Field. Her purpose appears to be to urge the possibility of intercourse, in the form of thought transference, between the living and the dead and to argue therefrom the fact of immortality and the blessedness of belief in such communication. She is not a special pleader for spiritualism, so called, but hardly can object should the spiritualists claim her. The book is disappointing in that assertion and suggestion are out of all proportion to evidence. Yet it is reverent, striking and suggestive, although not more remarkable than some other statements which have been given to the world. The subject is one in regard to which sensible people should keep an open mind without expecting many wonderful results. It is extremely unlikely that any extended intercourse of this character is a feature of the divine plan for the future, or would be of any great value were it permitted. The temptation to believe in it is strong to some minds, but the Christian faith furnishes all the assurance as to the hereafter which is necessary.

Reconsiderations and Reinforcements [T. Whittaker. 50 cents] contains about a dozen papers by Rev. Dr. J. M. Whiton. Some of them appear to be sermons, others meditations, others essays in criticism. They deal with current theological and religious topics, such as Dr. Fairbairn's utterance, Nature Is Spirit, the Intercession of Christ, the Lesson of the Leaf, Immortality, the Lord's Supper, Jesus' Coming Again, etc. The critical portions are written from the point of view of the higher criticism but apparently not its most advanced school. The more introspective portions are notably fresh and stimulating. They all are helpful, reverent and practical.

Is Christianity True? [Rice & Hirst. 50 cents] is one of those compilations of evidence of which a number have been published recently. Testimonials are grouped in this volume from Profs. W. G. Blaikie and A. H. Sayce, Drs. E. W. Rice and A. J. Gordon, and Sir J. W. Dawson. Their contributions testify to the truth of Christianity as proved by history, monuments, the Bible, nature, experience and the growth of Christianity itself. The book is one which inquirers and young Christians, especially those who find themselves in more or less skeptical surroundings, will find sustaining and encouraging.

Rev. A. D. McClure is the author of Another Comforter [F. H. Revell Co. 50 cents], a study of the mission of the Holy Spirit. In a series of short, pointed chapters it presents a reverent and helpful analysis of its subject and it may be used advantageously for devotional reading. It is adapted to make lasting and uplifting spiritual impressions.——The power of the word of God, the blood of Christ, the Holy Spirit, prayer and a surrendered life are discussed by R. A. Torrey in How to Obtain Fulness of Power in Christian Life and Service [F. H. Revell Co. 50 cents]. It is a direct and practical little book, written with fervor and full of helpful suggestion.——The Castaway and Other Addresses [F. H. Revell Co. 30 cents] is by Rev. F. B. Meyer. It contains ten addresses aimed at the quickening of righteousness in the Christian and the conversion of the impenitent, pre-eminently the former. The author's familiar characteristics—plainness, earnestness, tenderness and thoroughness—are illustrated, and there is plenty of illustration.

Dr. G. D. Boardman's little book, The Problem of Jesus [A. J. Rowland. 50 cents], is reissued, having been revised and enlarged. It is brief but compact with valuable material and discusses the philosophical problem, how to account for Jesus, and the practical personal problem, what one is to do with him. It contains reasoning and appeal well blended, and wise use is made of the conceded power of the gospel over many of the leading minds of the human race.——Helpful Thoughts for Quiet Hours [Pilgrim Press. $1.75] is a volume of selections in prose and verse by Mrs. Sarah F. Day. A wide range of authorship has been drawn upon, and the book contains choice material of more than temporary value. It is well arranged and will be a practical and pleasant aid to Christian growth. Its contents are short and uniformly of a high character, and the book commends itself to us as the superior of most of its class.

BIOGRAPHICAL

Dr. Tucker, Priest-Musician [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50] is by C. W. Knauff. It describes the character and life of the Rev. John Ireland Tucker, D. D., for half a century rector of the church of the Holy Cross in Troy, N. Y. Dr. Tucker was an eminent and beloved clergyman, but his chief distinction seems to have been his enthusiasm in the promotion of good music in the Episcopal Church. He was a pioneer in a number of ecclesiastical particulars. He introduced the full choral service, the recognition of holy days, the frequent observance of the communion, the eastward position and other features of Episcopal usage, which some consider to be ritualistic in their nature but which others defend as simply essential to the proper dignity of Christian worship. Dr. Tucker was a born musician and hymnologist and did yeoman's service in the improvement of the hymns and tunes of that branch of the church to which he belonged and through that of the church at large. We do not sympathize entirely with the comments of the author upon some of the hymns and tunes to which objection is taken, but we concede that a great improvement in American church music has taken place within the last half a century and that Dr. Tucker, his hero, was one of the foremost in bringing it to pass. The life of Dr. Tucker was honorable, beautiful and eminently useful, and this account of it is agreeable. Naturally it is written from the point of view of a devotee of the Episcopal form of belief and worship.

The volume on General Grant [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50] in the Great Commanders series is by Gen. J. G. Wilson, the editor of the series. The author was a personal friend of General Grant and a fellow-soldier, standing in a sufficiently close relation to make him a competent observer and historian. Of course the material of the book is largely familiar, yet the author has contributed something fresh from his personal point of view and his own information, and the result is a spirited and valuable work which makes a creditable number in the important series of which it is one. It is not too long or too learned to be enjoyable and is admirably suited to popular reading and study. It has a few illustrations, together with maps and plans.

Martha Washington [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25], by Anne H. Wharton, belongs to the series called Women of Colonial and Revolutionary Times. It is based upon careful study of all obtainable material and it tells the story of the heroine's character and history, especially in relation to the life of her great husband, with pleasant animation and studious fidelity to facts. It is a good example of what such a book ought to be.

STORIES

A Loyal Traitor [Harper & Bros. $1.50] is a sea story of the War of 1812, by James Barnes. It is one of those books which the boys crave, and which their elders read with an almost boyish interest. It is a graphic, spirited tale of adventure and love, abounding in impressive incidents and stimulating sturdy manliness and patriotism.——Zuleka [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50], by Clinton Ross, is another story of adventure, and the boldness and even recklessness of the hero and his companions are extreme. The north of Africa is the scene of the story for the most part, and the rescue of a beleaguered damsel and a buried treasure is the ruling motive. The author has put his material together in a most entertaining fashion, and has made a decidedly engrossing story.——The conspicuous difference between a petty and selfish character, formed simply upon the conventionalities of society, and the simplicity, dignity and nobility of one trained amid inspiring natural surroundings, and accustomed to unselfish thought and noble aims, is made very plain in Mr. Francis Dana's Leonora of the Yawmish [Harper & Bros. $1.25]. It is somewhat crude in plan, but better in description. The development of the plot is a little clumsy, but the outcome, the victory of uprightness, is satisfying. There are some vivid pictures of both scenery and character, and the story has strong points but is very uneven.

God's Winepress [F. Warne & Co. $1.25], by Arthur Jenkinson, is a semi-religious novel in the manner of forty years ago. Characters and scenery are English, and the author lays on his colors with lavish hand. The story is dramatic and all comes out well in the end, the lesson, victory through suffering, being taught with earnestness.——Lost Lineage [Mayflower Pub. Co. $1.00], by Carrie G. Childs, also is more like stories of a generation or two ago than those of the present. Here, too, virtue is very virtuous and vice is very vicious, but the reader is sustained from the outset by an instinctive consciousness that all will be well. The ingenuity and wickedness of the villain in the plot are appropriately brought to naught and the leading characters, and perhaps the reader also, are left in tears. The book is extremely melodramatic and improbable.

Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, in The Pilgrimage of the Ben Beriah [Macmillan Co. $1.25], has thrown into a narrative the events of the pilgrimage of Israel out of Egypt. The story lends itself fairly well to dramatization and she has constructed a narrative which young people will enjoy and which catches with some success the probable spirit of alternating loyalty and distrust, obedience and rebellion, of the Israelites during the long years of their wanderings in the wilderness.——The House of Dreams [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25], although in the form of a story, is more a meditation. It is a description of an alleged personal experience, the form of a dream being used to describe the author's conception of occurrences in the period of existence immediately following the present. Being pure fancy, it of course must be regarded with that indulgence commonly granted to the fanciful. It is vivid and striking in conception, solemn and impressive, with much of hopefulness and consolation. The principal point suggested is that the eternal Judge will credit each of us hereafter with being, not what we are, but what, in our best moments, we have desired to be, which hardly can be indorsed.

The Missionary Sheriff [Harper & Bros. $1.25], by Octave Thanet, contains six of that author's short stories, describing episodes in the career of the sheriff of a certain Western town. The sheriff himself wins upon the reader strongly, the problems and emergencies which arise and his manner of meeting them are full of interest, and the descriptive work of the author never was more admirable than in these sketches.——In The Wisdom of Fools [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25] Mrs. Margaret Deland has gathered four short stories which embody characteristic work, alike in the freshness and force which they possess as narratives and also in the fact that they present vital moral and social questions. How to answer them is not always suggested so clearly, but they are questions, the suggestion of which is of large importance, for they need patient study. Mrs. Deland is at her best in such work.

Beyond the City Gates [E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50] is by Augusta C. Williams and is a romance of old New York in the period just after the English had supplanted the Dutch. It is a love story and describes some exceptional experiences in a pleasant and skillful manner, but its strength, after all, lies in its pictures of social life and in the light which it throws upon the character of the community. It is decidedly interesting, and is likely to be popular.——Several paper-covered novels have accumulated upon our table and demand a word. One is A Rich Man's Daughter [International News Co. 50 cents], by Mrs. J. H. Riddell. It describes the struggles of a young professional man in London and his love affair. It is readable without being inspiring.——A Spotless Reputation [D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents] is by Dorothea Gerard. It deals somewhat skillfully once more with the old theme, the risk of marrying too hastily.——Old Maids and Young [Cassell Pub. Co. 50 cents], by Elsa D'Esterre Keeling, is written freshly and will entertain while traveling.

Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth's In Old New England Days [D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents] contains about a dozen short stories by this expert and always enjoyable writer. Its pictures of New England life and character are true and agreeable.——John Halifax, Gentleman [Harper & Bros. $1.75], Mrs. Craik's famous novel, is out in a new edition, beautifully printed and illustrated. It is not exactly an édition de luxe, but it almost might serve as one. It is a gratifying reproduction of one of the best stories ever written in English.

MISCELLANEOUS

From Mark Twain comes How to Tell a Story and Other Essays [Harper & Bros. $1.50], in which are seven or eight essays, most or all of which we have seen in print before. To our thinking they contain some of the best work which the author ever has done. The paper in defense of Harriet Shelley is an amusing critique of Professor Dowden's Life of Shelley, for example, and Fenimore Cooper's Literary Offenses cannot but amuse Mr. Cooper's warmest admirers. The climax of the book is found in the two articles, What Paul Bourget Thinks of Us, and A Little Note to M. Paul Bourget. We should like to know what M. Bourget, after reading the second paper, thinks of his own wisdom in having answered the first.——The Beginnings of Art [D. Appleton & Co. $1.75], by Dr. Ernst Grosse, is a new volume in the Anthropological Series. The author's purpose is to illustrate the origin of ideas of art and the beginning of artistic development, both in conception and in execution, not by studying those races which are well up in the scale of culture but by investigating the condition of the most primitive peoples. This he claims, and with some truth, to be a new method. Certainly nobody else, so far as we recall, has made a specialty of it in the same manner as he. Personal decoration and ornamentation as representative of art are the departments to which he directs his endeavors at first, and he continues by the study of the dance and of poetry and music. He has done his work with the conscientiousness of the true scholar and his book is abundantly worthy of appreciative recognition.

A new edition of the Story of Jane Austen's Life [Lee & Shepard. $2.00], by O. F. Adams, is issued, and the agreeable impression made by the volume originally will be renewed and strengthened. It is a pleasantly appreciative and readable story of the life and work of its distinguished subject, and the narrative is enjoyable, while the excellent pictures add much to the reader's pleasure.

A Sunshine Trip [Edward Arnold. $1.00] contains extracts from letters by Mrs. Margaret Bottome, written home during a trip to the Orient recently made. As letters the contents of the book appear bright and entertaining, and they combine easily to form a readable and often vivacious volume, in which the usual sights and scenes are described or suggested with appreciation, and which is pervaded by a sincere religious spirit. There is not much in the book which is novel or particularly striking, but it is a pleasant, although somewhat sketchy, contribution to the enjoyment of the author's friends.

The fascination of bicycling has prompted the exploration of many an unknown region, but it is something of a revelation to learn that a trip on the whole so comfortable and free from misadventure may be made in Spain as that which is described in Sketches Awheel in Modern Iberia [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00], by Fanny B. Workman and W. H. Workman. They made a long tour through Spain and literally traversed the country from boundary to boundary, in the summer of 1895, and visited many out-of-the-way places. They kept their eyes open and evidently their pencils must have been busy, and it is a fair inference that they carried a camera which they knew how to use skillfully. The trip was somewhat unique, full of varied interest, delightful on the whole to experience, and even more delightful in reminiscence, and this account of it is written with considerable literary skill and possesses something more than the mere interest of an ordinary narrative of travel.

A Key to the Orient [J. Selwin Tait & Sons. $1.25], by Mrs. Clapham Pennington, is a pleasant, readable little book, which describes some of the author's experiences and observations in Egypt and Turkey, and touches upon the condition of woman, slavery and the missionaries as they appear to the heathen, and deals somewhat at length with the religions of the Orient. The author claims to know the East thoroughly, but her observations certainly are often superficial and her utterances extravagant. She is an enthusiast in admiration of Oriental religions, especially Zarathustrianism, although apparently she still claims to be an adherent of Christianity. Her book, in spite of much in it which is enjoyable, is the product of a comparatively untrained mind.——The Conservative Principle in Our Literature [American Baptist Pub. Co. 50 cents] is an address by Rev. W. R. Williams, D. D., originally delivered more than fifty years ago, at once appreciated for its public value, printed and reprinted a number of times and now reissued in a neat volume. It deserves the popularity which it has attained.

Dr. O. J. Thatcher's Short History of Mediæval Europe [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25] is an abridgment of a larger work, Europe in the Middle Ages, prepared by himself in connection with Dr. Ferdinand Schwill. It is intended as a text-book for high schools and other preparatory institutions. It is well arranged and written and skillfully adapted to its useful purpose.

At the Sign of the Sphinx [Stone & Kimball. $1.25] is the felicitous title of a new book of charades by Carolyn Wells. They are in verse and the verse is bright and vivacious. There are ninety-nine of them and a separate sheet contains a list of their answers. They are sufficiently difficult to keep ordinary guessers busy for a long time, but not so hard as to be depressing. The book is prettily printed and makes a pleasant addition to the four or five similar volumes which the last three or four months have brought to notice.

Re open Sesame [L. C. Page & Co. $1.00] is a book of rhymed acrostics, 200 in number, answering Mr. Bellamy's Second Century of Charades, and involving in each answer a new charade. It is by H. H. Ballard. It is ingenious and skillful and is prettily printed.——Mr. Herbert Myrick has written a book on Sugar [Orange Judd & Co. 50 cents], and describes this great interest, as developed in the United States, with abundant illustration, and the story of the way in which sugar is manufactured and disposed of is one of great and general interest.

NOTES

—— The London Daily Mail is just a year old. It is a half-penny—i. e., one cent—paper which already has attained a circulation of over 300,000 copies. It is Conservative in politics.

—— Mr. Justin McCarthy is to bring his popular History of Our Own Times down to date in honor of the Victorian Jubilee. It has been such a success that his share of the profits is said to be $100,000.

—— The history of Center Church, New Haven, is fittingly told by Ellen Strong Bartlett in the current Connecticut Quarterly. It well illustrates the changes in New England religious life of the last 250 years. Such a piece of work is of value to a far wider circle than those directly interested in the old Center Church.

—— Presidents Eliot, Dwight and Low, representing Harvard, Yale, Columbia, have issued an appeal in behalf of the American Thomas Hughes Memorial Committee. Money enough for a statue of Hughes and the endowment of the London Rugby School Mission is desired, of which it is natural and proper to hope that Americans will contribute a reasonable share.

—— The citizens of Bristol, Eng., are to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of the North American continent by erecting a memorial to John Cabot, the explorer, and his colleagues. It is to be an elaborate tower on Brandon hill, the high conical hill in the center of the city. The foundation stone will be laid on June 24, the anniversary of the day on which an English navigator first saw the American continent. It is to cost $25,000.

—— An interesting instance of the survival of literature by oral tradition, the method to which we owe what remains to us of the most ancient poetry of the Greeks and Germans, is quoted by Biblia from Renquf. The Lay of the Threshers, discovered on an ancient Egyptian tomb and translated by Champollion, forms part of a song still sung by the peasants of Corsica. Changes through several millenniums have slightly enlarged and modified the verses, but in substance and in verbal expression (allowing for the double translation) they are identical.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

The Burglar Who Moved Paradise. By Herbert D. Ward. pp. 226. $1.25.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

The Finch Primer. By Adelaide V. Finch. pp. 90. 35 cents.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

Philosophy of Knowledge. By George T. Ladd. pp. 614. $4.00.

My Lord Duke. By E. W. Hornung. pp. 299. $1 25.

Soldiers of Fortune. By Richard H. Davis. pp. 364. $1.50.

The Claims of the Old Testament. By Stanley Leathes, D. D. pp. 73. $1.00.

The Descent of the Primates. By A. A. W. Hubrecht. pp. 41. $1.00.

Two Lectures on Theism. By Andrew Seth, LL.D. pp. 64. $1.00.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

The Vines of Northeastern America. By. C. S. Newhall. pp. 207. $2.50.

The Literary Movement in France. By Georges Pellissier. pp. 504. $3.50.

The Romance of Arenfels. By C. Ellis Stevens. pp. 90. $1.25.

American Book Co. New York.

Annotations on the General Epistles of James, Peter, John and Jude. By Revere F. Weidner, D. D , LL.D. pp. 380. $1.50.

Bible Readers for Schools. Edited by N. C. Schaeffer, Ph D., D. D. pp 217. 35 cents.

A Brief Latin Grammar. By W. D. Mooney. pp. 272. 75 cents

Macmillan Co. New York

The Myths of Israel. By Amos K. Fiske. pp. 355. $1.50.

The Parent's Assistant. By Maria Edgeworth. pp. 464. $1.50.

Ezekiel. Edited by R. G. Moulton, Ph.D. pp. 283. 50 cents.

Eaton & Mains. New York.

History of the Christian Church. Edited by Geo. R. Crooks, D. D., and J. F. Hurst, D. D. pp. 949. $5.00.

E. & J. B. Young & Co. New York.

The Ancient Hebrew Tradition. By Dr. Fritz Hommel. pp. 350. $1 75.

T. Y. Crowell & Co. New York.

College Training for Women. By Kate H. Claghorn, Ph. D. pp. 270. $1.25.

Century Co. New York.

The Century Magazine. Vol. LIII. November, 1896, to April, 1897. pp. 960. $3.00.

J. B. Lippincott Co. Philadelphia.

His Native Wife. By Louis Becke. pp. 202. 75 cents.

Ripple and Flood. By James Prior. pp. 378. $1.50.

Henry Altemus. Philadelphia.

The Ethics of Gambling. By W. D. MacKenzie. pp. 64. 35 cents.

Curts & Jennings. Cincinnati.

The Higher Criticism. By Rev. C. W. Rishell, Ph. D. pp. 296. $1.00.

Robert Clarke Co. Cincinnati.

The Covenanter, the Cavalier and the Puritan. By Oliver P. Temple. pp. 260. $1.50.

PAPER COVERS

Cassell Pub. Co. New York.

A Free Lance in a Far Land. By Herbert Compton. pp. 373. 50 cents.

His Letters. By Julien Gordon. pp. 280. 50 cents.

Wood Allen Pub. Co. Ann Arbor.

Almost a Woman. By Mary Wood-Allen, M. D. 25 cents.

Harvard College. Cambridge.

Class of 1890. Secretary's Report, No. 3.

MAGAZINES

April. Critical Review.

May. Nineteenth Century.—Handbook of the American Academy.—Yale Review.—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.—Fortnightly.

June. What to Eat.—Scribner's.—Harper's.—St. Nicholas.

THE W. B. M. AT SALEM

A fitting word to mark the semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Board in the South Church, Salem, would be royal. The warm building, the beautiful purple and white and green of the pulpit decorations, the attractive programs printed in purple, were indicative of the generous welcome extended by the Essex South Branch to the many friends who feared not the heavy clouds and sharp air of May 27. Cordial in the extreme were the words of welcome voiced by Mrs. James L. Hill, president of the branch, and gracefully responded to by Mrs. C. H. Daniels, vice-president of the board, who, in the absence of Mrs. Judson Smith, presided throughout the day. The Present Outlook, as seen by Miss Abbie B. Child, has its lights and shadows. Officers report well-attended meetings, much personal effort to increase membership lists, new methods devised and earnest work done. The first five months of the fiscal year saw a steady increase in the contributions necessary to meet the ten per cent. advance voted for at the November meeting, but in the last month there has been a drop which calls for added gifts during the summer. The conditions abroad cause both anxiety and encouragement. In Turkey the sultan has gained a temporary victory. In India the famine and plague still bring sorrow to many hearts and heavier work to the missionaries. In China and Africa the gospel story is bringing forth its own fruit in the lives of many.

It was a special pleasure and delight to hear, in both the morning and afternoon sessions, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, that royal missionary who during her twenty-five years in Spain has suffered many things for Christ's sake. Among the Special Providences in the Work in Spain of which she spoke, the audience supplied an omitted one, that of Mrs. Gulick's own fitness and call to that papal land, in which work was adopted by the American Board in Salem more than a quarter of a century ago. The Inquisition blotted out well-nigh every trace of Protestantism in Spain; in Italy the Waldensians and in France the Huguenots held up the cross, but in Spain a Bible found in the possession of any one doomed him to imprisonment or exile. Conditions have changed since those early years, when the missionaries were said to eat little children, for during this last year 120 children have been in the school at San Sebastian, and two of the graduates are hoping to receive the degree of M. A. from the Madrid University this summer. In regard to the state of affairs in Cuba it is difficult to obtain accurate information, as many reports are written from the hotels in Key West by men who have never been out to the island. Mrs. Gulick urged the Americans to be just and patient in their treatment of the case.

Miss Mary B Daniels, who has been working since 1889 in Osaka, gave a clear and comprehensive account of the Present Conditions and Prospects of Work in Japan. The dislike felt for the workers there is because they are foreigners, not because they are missionaries, and if they have suffered in the reaction more than some it is not on account of anything peculiar in the work, but because the polity of our denomination gives more publicity to the work. The mission now controls all funds raised by the board, and the Japanese all which they themselves contribute. Work has changed under the new order so that preaching is done more among the poorer classes in the large cities and in country districts. The influence exerted is less extended but more direct, and the results will be slower but surer.

Is Missionary Work in Micronesia Worth While? must have been answered in the affirmative by all who listened to the story which Mrs. Sarah Smith Garland told of a girl's life in the islands of the sea, and all were glad that Miss Olin, now under appointment, is to go to re-enforce the workers there.

The other missionary address of the day was given by Miss Ellen M. Stone, and was entitled A Light in the Balkan Peninsula. Her radiant face as she told of her beloved work in Bulgaria, the center of the peninsula, added force to her hopeful words, and in the person of Miss Zoritza Kara-Ivanova, a Bulgarian, there was a living example of the results of the schools in that land. In the form of an allegory this sweet-faced lady pictured the "queen of Scutari" in her palace on the Bosporus, giving education to all her daughters, whether of Armenian, Bulgarian or Greek blood. So vivid were her words that all must have recognized in the queen none other than the American Girls' College at Constantinople.

A suggestive and helpful hour was the question box, conducted by Miss E. H. Stanwood. The question, What Can We Learn from Woman's Clubs? gave rise to much discussion and pertinent answers. Freedom of speech, a social, informal atmosphere in the meeting, carefully prepared programs and studied papers, frequency of meetings, time allotted to current events in the kingdom were some of the varied hints given. A bountiful collation at noon was served by the women of Salem.

A. C. B.

IOWA STATE ASSOCIATION

The meeting held at Algona was full of interest. The program revealed considerable variety, the addresses were of high order, and the spirit of the entire session was uplifting.

The Sunday school convention, which met on the preceding day, brought together a good number of earnest workers, who discussed practical themes.

The annual sermon, by Rev. J. O. Thrush, was an encouraging discourse on the triumph of Christ's kingdom. The moderator, Rev. E. M. Vittum, proved a fine presiding officer. The discussion following a paper on Adjustment of Our Ministry, by Rev. O. O. Smith, showed that Iowa Congregationalists feel that the local association has a great responsibility in guarding its doors against unworthy applicants. Later the following resolution was unanimously passed:

> Resolved, That while we hold sacred the autonomy of the local association as well as that of the local church, we regard it as unwise for one local association to assume to review the action of another, and especially so to attempt to reverse, on what must of necessity be ex parte evidence, the solemn decision of another like body, in that it strikes a blow at one of the fundamental principles of Congregational polity, gravely endangers the fellowship of the churches, is liable to force a local association into unwelcome relations with its own previously discarded members and involves the denomination at large in responsibility for such members.

Two papers, The Ultimate Ground of Authority in Religion, by Rev. C. C. Otis, and Theological Tendencies, by Rev. E. A. Berry, called out a spirited debate. The discussions showed that our ministry is alive to the leading theological questions of the day and is sound in the faith. An address of rare value was given by Prof. L. F. Parker of Iowa College on Puritan Faith Rather than French Atheism the Parent of American Liberties. Rev. H. W. Tuttle read a strong paper on Dangers which Threaten from Repression of Conscience.

Thursday afternoon was given to the State Home Missionary Society, and the reports were full of encouragement. That of Sec. T. O. Douglass covered the fifteen years that the society has existed. In that time 129 churches have been organized and ninety-seven have come to self-support. One hundred parsonages and 197 meeting houses have been erected. Fifteen years ago the church membership was 15,000, now it is 34 000. In that time the society has expended $226,000 in extending its work, while the churches have raised more than half a million dollars for benevolences in other lines. In the past year the society expended $14,457 for its work, incurring a debt of $871.

The early history of the Algona church shows some of the trials of pioneer preachers. In 1856 Father Taylor began work here. In two years he organized a church of five members, only three of whom were outside his family. At the end of five years the membership had decreased to three. It was nine years before any "deacon timber" was developed, and twelve before a house of worship was built. Since then growth has been steady and healthy, until now, under the leadership of Rev. C. E. Sinclair, the church is one of the most influential in Iowa, able to entertain the State association handsomely.

Space will not permit mention of all the valuable features of the program. Penal Institutions were discussed by Rev. D. P. Breed, and The Encroachments of Business upon the Intellectual, Moral and Spiritual Life of the People by Rev. L F. Berry. One of the most sprightly papers was given by Dr. E. S. Hill on Common Ground for Christian Thinkers.

A strong plea for a higher standard for the ministry was made by Rev. H. Paul Douglass on the theme The Ordaining Council and the Unprepared Candidate. Temptations peculiar to ministers were considered in an incisive paper by Rev. Clifford Snowden. Iowa has always been proud of her older ministers, and she is not less proud of the younger men.

Dr. M. W. Darling spoke strongly and fairly on Christian Science.

Reports from the educational institutions were encouraging. Tabor is doing the substantial work for which she is famous, and Iowa College has a larger Freshman Class than ever before in her history, and is constantly enlarging her equipment.

A delightful spirit of fellowship pervaded the entire meeting. The association voted to return to the former time of holding the annual meeting. Next year it will begin Wednesday evening and close Sunday evening.

W. W. G.

In Honor of an Old-Time Giver

In these days, when large gifts to educational institutions are not so uncommon as to excite extended comment, it is well to recall pioneers in benevolence of this sort. The approaching centennial anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Samuel Williston is a fit reminder to a generation that knew her not of a life so thoroughly consecrated to the cause of Christian education that we of later years are still reaping the benefit of her self-sacrifice and generosity.

Hon. and Mrs. Samuel Williston, of whom we present excellent likenesses, were life-long residents of Easthampton, in the Connecticut valley. They both esteemed highly educational privileges, though they had few advantages of that sort in early life, but long before they acquired a fortune they began to plan to give liberally to needy institutions. Starting with few resources they developed the button industry so skillfully that it became a source of large gains. Mrs. Williston herself did not scruple to work long hours with her own hands, and she and her husband so organized the business of making and covering buttons that throughout a large circle of towns in the vicinity hundreds of families were kept busy at the trade. From a sociological and industrial point of view, that period of home labor, before the days of factories and sweating shops, must have been in some degree an ideal era and would furnish the historian and historical novelist with much valuable material.

As time went on the Willistons became the most famous benefactors of the cause of education in western Massachusetts. They established professorships in Amherst College, gave generously to Mt. Holyoke Seminary, and founded, in 1841, Williston Seminary in their own town. The American Board and the Home Missionary Society were also constant beneficiaries. So firm was Mr. Williston's faith in God, and so keen his sense of duty, that he often pledged money before he made it. His gifts in his lifetime exceeded a million of dollars, and after his death three-quarters of a million more were distributed.

This celebration of Mrs. Williston's 100th birthday, following so soon after the celebration of Mary Lyon's centennial, serves to bring again before the public the rich equipment of western Massachusetts in schools and colleges of the highest intellectual standing and thoroughly permeated with the Christian spirit. Rev. Joseph H. Sawyer, principal of Williston Seminary, preaches at Easthampton, next Sunday, a memorial sermon, and there will be other appropriate services when the regular anniversary of the school occurs later in June.

TWO ROYAL GIVERS—MR. AND MRS. SAMUEL WILLISTON

In and Around Boston

Anniversary Week

Aside from the Congregational Club, which we reported last week, the only occasion for which members of our body felt any particular responsibility was the 215th annual meeting of the Massachusetts Convention of Congregational Ministers, which includes both Trinitarians and Unitarians. The degree of responsibility for sustaining this ancient and useful organization is probably more intense among a devoted few than the area of its distribution is widespread. However, those who did attend the gathering were well repaid by Rev. Dr. J. M. Greene's able sermon on the Bible. The South Church, Dr. Hale's, extended its usual courtesies, and a spirit of genuine fellowship marked the social hours. The preacher next year will be Rev. H. F. Jenks, with Rev. B. F. Hamilton, D. D., as alternate.

The Unitarian gatherings were well patronized. The note of loyalty to the denomination was frequently struck. The missionary, Mr. Macaulay, who has been working in Japan, received a hearty welcome. There was an invigorating element of conservatism in much that was said during the week, especially in Curtis Guild's plea for the observance of the Lord's Day. Governor Wolcott, too, insisted upon the translation of religion into life and action. The Young People's Unions of both the Unitarian and Universalist bodies fraternized during the week and decided to federate themselves into a league.

On Thursday evening the Dudleian lecture at Harvard University was delivered by Professor Williston Walker. His subject was The Validity of Congregational Ordination. It seems a pity that only twenty-six persons heard this able address from so competent a scholar.

The Evangelistic Association of New England drew large audiences to the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, where methods and results of evangelistic endeavor were freely discussed by experienced men and women. Mr. Alpine McLean presided at the closing session.

Industrial Conciliation.

One of the most important meetings of anniversary week was the session of the Free Religious Association of America, which was devoted to a discussion of industrial conciliation. The speakers were Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell of New York, Rev. G. L. Perin of the Every-Day Church, Robert A. Woods of the South End House, and Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D., of New York.

Mrs. Lowell pointed out the essential difference between conciliation and arbitration. The former prevents troubles from arising between employer and employed; the latter seeks to adjust troubles which have arisen. It is the difference between hygiene and medicine. One is preventive, the other remedial. Through conciliation strikes and lockouts may be prevented and industrial peace insured. To prove this she cited the experience of conciliation boards in two large trades in England, the glove and hosiery trade of Nottingham and vicinity and the north of England iron trade. From the first trade industrial disturbances were excluded for thirty years and from the second twenty-eight years. The fundamental condition of a board of conciliation is a strong organization of both employers and employed. Other conditions of a board's effectiveness are stated meetings by the board or its standing committee and the assurance on both sides that its decisions will be enforced. But such conditions are the body, of which the spirit should be intelligence, self-control and love of justice on the part of employers and employed alike, with a recognition of the equal rights of each in all questions affecting their interests.

Dr. Perin urged the duty of the church to cherish both individual and social ideals. As long as men are unrighteous there can be no improvement. "In considering industrial peace," Mr. Woods said, "it is important to ask what we are going to do with it when we get it. Industrial peace, in and of itself, is worth no more than liberty in and of itself. Through it we rise to a higher plane of industry."

"The working man's opposition to machinery," Mr. Woods continued, "was because through machinery industry was organizing itself beyond the ken of the working man. The employer's opposition to the trade union is because through the trade union modern industry is organizing itself beyond the ken of the employer. Industrial conciliation attempts to bring about the co-ordination which ought to exist between these two factors of modern industry."

Dr. Rainsford pointed to the growing disbelief in the power of the courts, and belief in the power of money in legislation, as at the root of the widespread social discontent in this country—a discontent which no board of conciliation would remove. One principle we must fight for, and that is confidence in one another. The constant right of appeal in our courts means the poor man down and the rich man up. We must have some readier way of justice. All men must be brought to feel that they are absolutely one before God. Among the definite things which we can work towards and help on are a shorter working day, fairer laws, a better school and the trade union.

Young Boston Congregationalists

The Young Men's Club established the custom of an annual ladies' night at their first observance of such an occasion last week Wednesday, at the American House. A pleasant reception to the special guests, speakers and officers preceded the dinner, at which nearly 150 members and friends sat down. President Hall welcomed the large number present and announced the speakers, who were: Mrs. May Alden Ward, president of the New England Woman's Press Association, with the topic A Group of Puritan Poets, and Rev. C. E. Jefferson of Chelsea, who gave A Message to Young Congregationalists. The plea of the latter was for a closer fellowship among young men and young women who are ready to be known as believers in God. During the evening rare pleasure was derived from the vocal selections of a mixed quartet, and elaborate floral and patriotic decorations added gayety and life to the festivities. The special menu-program was also a tasteful souvenir of the evening. A few new names were proposed for membership. The first meeting of the fall occurs the last Wednesday of October.

Christian Endeavor Gospel Chorus

This organization is one of the pleasant survivals of the great International C. E. Convention in 1895, and is just completing the second year of its existence. Its fourth concert on a recent Wednesday in Tremont Temple called out a full house, every reserved seat being sold. The chorus departed from its former programs of entirely sacred music and introduced several secular selections with good effect and exhibited the results of diligent rehearsals. Mr. George K. Somerby is the musical director. The plan of the organizers was not to make money, but to take advantage of social possibilities and at the same time to study music and occasionally to give a concert that should pay the expenses. An admission fee of one dollar is charged but no dues.

At first the plan was to admit only Endeavorers, and to meet once a month. Both rules have, by custom at least, become noneffective. There are now some 700 members, including many not from the evangelical churches. Nearly 500 took part in the last concert, which is the first that has met expenses. Of late the rehearsals have been once a week, with an occasional extra one. The hour of meeting is 7.30; the close is promptly at 9. There is a half-hour recess, when some talent, usually musical, entertains the members. A number of the members come from as far as Fall River and Haverhill, and many who would hardly afford the luxury of paying monthly dues are enabled not only to enjoy the social time but to get musical instruction. Most of the chorus at the recent Moody meetings came from this body. Applications for membership are still coming in.

At the annual meeting last week no president was elected, the committee being unable to report a nominee for that office. The treasurer's report showed an income of $2,205 and expenses of $1,965 for the year.

Berkeley Temple School for Christian Workers

Two young men and three young women received, May 27, diplomas, accompanied by fitting words from Principal Lawrence Phelps. They were also addressed by Rev. C. A. Dickinson, D. D., and during the evening Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Stone sang beautifully. Earlier in the week there were public exercises in the English Bible and in Christian ethics and an alumni banquet. This is the second class to be graduated.

Condition of Boston Schools

The annual report of Superintendent Seaver just made public presents some interesting figures. The school population is rapidly increasing beyond the provisions of accommodations. The whole number of pupils in all the day schools Jan. 31 last was 71,949. In 1890 the number was 63,374.

For the last two years the increase has been 3,999, and the expenditure for new schoolhouses $1,070,440. This is an average of $267 per new pupil. For five years past the average increase of pupils per year has been 2,002. If this rate continues it would mean the expenditure of $500,000 for annual current needs for the next three years, whereas the available sum at present is but $400,000. This, it is said, must certainly leave certain high school needs to be cared for in some other way. In 39 districts all pupils are housed in permanent structures. In seven, however, 623 pupils are accommodated in temporary buildings. In 13 districts 1 932 pupils are accommodated in hired rooms, at a rent of $20,812 per year. The greater part of these will be taken to buildings now in process of erection.

On the day of the issue of the report came a request from the School Board to the Common Council for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for high school purposes for East Boston, South Boston, Dorchester, West Roxbury, the Mechanics Art High School and for a new building for the Girls' Latin School. Also for $300,000 to provide better ventilation, sanitation and means of exit in case of fire for school buildings in Boston. Both orders were passed by the council. So much of the second bill as relates to fire escapes was no doubt the direct result of the disclosures connected with the fire panic last winter at the Everett School on Northampton Street.

The Bacchante Will Not Stay

Boston public sentiment condemning the Bacchante statue for its unfitness to occupy the position in the Public Library where the trustees placed it was prompt, emphatic, unmistakable and persistently expressed. After a winter of meditation and a spring of consultation, the trustees are relieved from an awkward predicament by the giver withdrawing his gift. The strange thing about the matter is that those intrusted with the furnishing of the Public Library should need so long a time and so much assistance to learn what the average common sense of the people so quickly discovered.

THE BRADFORD MANUSCRIPT CEREMONIES

The formal transfer of this famous manuscript volume, the History of Plymouth Plantation written by Governor William Bradford, to the keeping of the State of Massachusetts, was made with dignified and impressive ceremonies at the State House in this city on Wednesday, May 26. The Senate and House of Representatives met in joint convention in Representatives Hall at 11 A. M., where they soon received Governor Wolcott, Hon. T. F. Bayard, ex-ambassador to England, who brought with him the precious manuscript, Senator G. F. Hoar, and a large company of other distinguished men, including representatives of the American Antiquarian Society, the Massachusetts Historical Society, the Pilgrim Society of Plymouth and the New England Society of New York. President Lawrence of the State Senate occupied the chair. The spacious hall was crowded to its utmost capacity by an audience as interested as it was numerous, and the speakers frequently were interrupted by prolonged applause. Senator Hoar's beautiful and fitting tribute to Queen Victoria was received with special enthusiasm.

The first proceeding was the reading of the decree of the Consistorial and Episcopal Court of London, authorizing the transfer of the manuscript from the Lambeth Library in the Bishop of London's palace at Fulham to the keeping of the governor of Massachusetts by the hands of Mr. Bayard, and of the latter's paper accepting the task and acknowledging receipt of the volume. These documents necessarily were formal, somewhat technical and lengthy, but not without interest.

Then Senator Hoar was introduced and spoke from notes for three-quarters of an hour, giving an account of the manuscript, its value, its disappearance about 1775, its discovery in the Lambeth Library about eighty years later, its identification, the successive efforts to obtain its restoration and the final success. The history of its loss and recovery to knowledge he gave as follows:

> It has long been well known that Governor Bradford wrote and left behind him a history of the settlement of Plymouth. It was quoted by early chroniclers. There are extracts from it in the records of Plymouth. Thomas Prince used it when he compiled his annals. Hubbard depended on it when he wrote his History of New England. Cotton Mather had read it or a copy of a portion of it when he wrote his Magnalia. Governor Hutchinson had it when he published the second volume of his history in 1767.
>
> From that time it disappeared from the knowledge of everybody on this side of the water. All our historians speak of it as lost, and can only guess what had been its fate. Some persons suspected that it was destroyed when Governor Hutchinson's house was sacked in 1765; others that it was carried off by some officer or soldier when Boston was evacuated by the British army in 1776.
>
> In 1844 Samuel Wilberforce, Bishop of Oxford, afterward Bishop of London, one of the brightest of men, published one of the dullest and stupidest of books. It is entitled The History of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America. It contained extracts from manuscripts which he said he had discovered in the library of the Bishop of London at Fulham. The book attracted no attention here until, about twelve years later, in 1855 John Wingate Thornton, whom many of us remember as an accomplished antiquary and a delightful gentleman, happened to pick up a copy of it while he was lounging in Burnham's bookstore. He read the bishop's quotations and carried the book to the house of his friend, Mr. Barry, who was then writing his History of Massachusetts. Mr. Barry was not at home. Thornton left the volume with passages marked, and with a note which is not preserved, but which, according to his memory, suggested that the passages must have come from Bradford's long-lost history.
>
> That is the claim for Mr. Thornton. On the other hand, it is claimed by Mr. Barry that there was nothing of that kind expressed in Mr. Thornton's note, but in reading the book when he got back, an hour or so later, the thought struck him for the first time that the clew had been found to the precious book which had been lost so long. He at once repaired to Charles Deane, then, and ever since down to his death, as President Eliot felicitously styled him, "the master of historical investigators in this country." Mr. Deane saw the importance of the discovery. He communicated at once with Joseph Hunter, an eminent English scholar. Hunter was high authority on all matters connected with the settlement of New England. He visited the palace at Fulham and established beyond question the identity of the manuscript with Governor Bradford's history, an original letter of Governor Bradford having been sent to Mr. Hunter for comparison of handwriting.
>
> How the manuscript got to Fulham nobody knows. Whether it was carried over by Governor Hutchinson in 1774; whether it was taken as spoil from the tower of the Old South Church in 1775; whether, with other manuscripts, it was sent to Fulham at the time of the attempts of the Episcopal churches in America, just before the Revolution, to establish an episcopate here, nobody knows.
>
> It would seem that Hutchinson would have sent it to the colonial office; that an officer would naturally have sent it to the war office, unless he had carried it off as mere private booty and plunder, in which case it would have been unlikly that it would have reached a public place of custody. But we find it in the possession of the church and of the church official having, until independence was declared, special jurisdiction over Episcopal Massachusetts and Plymouth. This may seem to point to a transfer for some ecclesiastical purpose.
>
> The bishop's chancellor conjectures that it was sent to Fulham because of the record annexed to it of the early births, marriages and deaths—such records being in England always in ecclesiastical custody—but this is merely conjecture.

The favorable circumstances attending the successful effort to secure the volume also were described effectively thus:

> The rarest good fortune seems to have attended every step in this transaction. I was fortunate in having formed the friendship of Mr. Grenfell, which secured to me so cordial a reception from the Bishop of London.
>
> It was fortunate that the Bishop of London was Dr. Temple, an eminent scholar, kindly disposed toward the people of the United States, and a man thoroughly capable of understanding and respecting the deep and holy sentiment which a compliance with our desire was to gratify.
>
> It was fortunate, too, that Bishop Temple, who thought he must have the approbation of the archbishop before his action, when the time came had himself become Archbishop of Canterbury and primate of all England.
>
> It was fortunate that Dr. Creighton had succeeded to the see of London. He is himself, as I have just said, an eminent historical scholar. He has many friends in America. He was the delegate of Emmanuel, John Harvard's college, at the great Harvard centennial celebration in 1886. He received the degree of Doctor of Laws at Harvard and is a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society. He had, I believe, entertained President Eliot as his guest in England.
>
> It was fortunate, too, that the application came in a time of cordial good will between the two countries, when the desire of John Adams and the longing of George the Third have their ample and complete fulfillment. This token of the good will of England reached Boston on the birthday of the illustrious sovereign who is not more venerated and beloved by her own subjects than by the kindred people who speak their language and share their blood.
>
> It comes to us at the time of the rejoicing of the English people at the sixtieth anniversary of a reign more crowded with benefit to humanity than any other known in the annals of the race. Upon the power of England, the scepter, the trident, the lion, the army and the fleet, the monster ships of war, the all-shattering guns, the American people are strong enough now to look with an entire indifference. We encounter her commerce and her manufacture in the spirit of a generous emulation. The inheritance from which England has learned these things is ours also. We too are of the Saxon strain.
>
> In our halls is hung
> Armory of the invincible knights of old.
>
> Our temple covers a continent, and its porches are upon both the seas. Our fathers knew the secret to lay, in Christian liberty and law, the foundations of empire. Our young men are not ashamed, if need be, to speak with the enemy in the gate.
>
> But to the illustrious lady, type of gentlest womanhood, model of mother and wife and friend, who came at eighteen to the throne of George IV. and William; of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; the maiden presence before which everything unholy shrank; the sovereign who, during her long reign, "ever knew the people that she ruled"; the royal nature that disdained to strike at her kingdom's rival in the hour of our sorest need; the heart which, even in the bosom of a queen, beat with sympathy for the cause of constitutional liberty; who, herself not unacquainted with grief, laid on the coffin of our dead Garfield the wreath fragrant with a sister's sympathy—to her our republican manhood does not disdain to bend.
>
> The eagle, lord of land and sea,
> Will stoop to pay her fealty.
>
> But I am afraid this application might have had the fate of its predecessors but for our special good fortune in the fact that Mr. Bayard was our ambassador at the Court of St. James. He had been, as I said in the beginning, the ambassador, not so much of the diplomacy as of the good will of the American people. Before his powerful influence every obstacle gave way. It was almost impossible for Englishmen to refuse a request like this, made by him and in which his own sympathies were so profoundly enlisted.

The close of Senator Hoar's address was especially beautiful.

> The question of the permanent abiding place of this manuscript will be settled after it has reached the hands of his Excellency. Wherever it shall go, it will be an object of reverent care. I do not think many Americans will gaze upon it without a little trembling of the lips and a little gathering of mist in the eyes, as they think of the story of suffering, of sorrow, of peril, of exile, of death and of lofty triumph which that book tells, which the hand of the great leader and founder of America has traced on those pages.
>
> There is nothing like it in human annals since the story of Bethlehem. These English men and English women going out from their homes in beautiful Lincoln and York, wife separating from husband and mother from child in that hurried embarkation for Holland, pursued to the beach by English horsemen, the thirteen years of exile, the life at Amsterdam—"in alley foul and lane obscure"—the dwelling at Leyden, the embarkation at Delfshaven, the farewell of Robinson, the terrible midwinter voyage across the Atlantic, the compact in the harbor, the landing on the rock, the dreadful first winter, the death-roll of more than half the number, the days of suffering and of famine, the wakeful night listening for the yell of wild beasts and the war whoop of the savage, the building of the state on those sure foundations which no wave or tempest have ever shaken, the breaking of the new light, the dawning of the new day, the beginning of the new life, the enjoyment of peace with liberty—of all these things this is the original record by the hand of our beloved father and founder. Massachusetts will preserve it until the time shall come that her children are unworthy of it. And that time shall come—never.

After Senator Hoar had concluded Mr. Bayard described in a pleasant, conversational way, without manuscript, his own relation to the restoration of the volume, expressing his pleasure in being of service to Massachusetts, especially in connection with such a work, and his earnest desire to promote good will and confidence between England and the United States. His remarks were full of deep feeling and were received with great enthusiasm. He closed by formally handing the famous volume to Governor Wolcott.

The governor's speech of acceptance in behalf of the commonwealth was short but felicitous and eloquent. Then the joint convention passed by a rising vote an order recording the appreciation and gratitude of the State in view of the successful return of the memorable relic. It was offered by Senator Bradford, of Hampden, a lineal descendant of the author. The permanent resting place of the volume is to be determined by the governor. Meanwhile it has been placed in the vault of the State treasurer.

The Cumberland Presbyterians in General Assembly debated the question of restricting the marriages of ministerial probationers. The Educational Society finds it too much to support the (occasional) wives of its aided students. No action was taken, but the tendency of debate was toward forbidding the bans. Why the matter should have attracted such wide newspaper attention it is hard to see. It is good common sense which lays it down as a general rule that the man who is old enough to have a wife is too old to change the work in life by which he expects to support her.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

Boston Ministers' Meeting, June 7, Pilgrim Hall, 10 A. M. Speaker, Rev. Daniel Merriman, D. D. Topic, Theology of Preachers of Today.

Foreign Missionary Prayer Meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

Congregational Education Society, annual meeting, Wednesday, June 16, 2 P. M., Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House. All annual members bringing proper credentials are entitled to vote. With usual business amendments of by-laws will be considered, authorizing president and directors to make conveyance of any real estate owned by the society.

Andover Theological Seminary, Anniversary, June 6–10. Sunday, 10.30 A. M., sacrament of the Lord's Supper; 4 P. M., sermon to the Graduating Class by Rev. Prof. William H. Ryder, D. D. Tuesday, 10.30 A. M., examination of the Junior Class in New Testament Greek; 2 P. M., examination of the Middle Class in Biblical theology; 4 P. M., examination of the Senior Class in homiletics; 7.45 P. M., anniversary of the Society of Inquiry. Address by Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D. D. Wednesday, 8.30 A. M., vocal culture; 9.30 A. M., examination of the Junior Class in Hebrew; 9.30 A. M., examination of the Senior Class in church history; 11.15, A. M., examination of the Middle Class in theology; 2.30 P. M., meeting of the alumni: business; necrology, by Rev. C. C. Carpenter, secretary; discussion on The State of Religion in New England, Rev. Charles B. Rice, D. D., Rev. Carl S. Patton, Rev. Burton W. Lockhart, D. D., Rev. William E. Barton, D. D.; further discussion; 7.30 P. M., social gathering of the alumni and other friends of the seminary. Thursday, 10.45 A. M., anniversary addresses by members of the Graduating Class; 1 P. M., anniversary dinner.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Rhode Island,	Newport,	Tuesday, June 8.
Vermont,	Middlebury,	Tuesday, June 8.
Conn. Asso.	New Haven,	Tuesday, June 15.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

The Congregational Home Missionary Society is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

Woman's Home Missionary Association, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St..

Woman's Board of Missions, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

The American Missionary Association, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

The Congregational Church Building Society—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

Congregational Education Society (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill., Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

Cong. Sunday School & Publishing Society.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

Massachusetts Board of Ministerial Aid.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

Ministerial Relief.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

The Congregational Board of Pastoral Supply, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

The Boston Seaman's Friend Society, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

A Connecticut town reports a good outlook for French Congregationalists. Interest in work for the French in New England began about thirteen years ago in Lowell, Mass. Since then the churches formed among these people have averaged a little more than one a year and nearly 10,000 persons are now connected with them. The adaptability of the apostolic church to the nations of the earth is suggested time and again in the ease with which French, Swedes, Welsh, Germans, Norwegians, Finns and other nationalities are introduced and made to feel at home in Congregationalism.

What could be more delightfully refreshing than such an outing as the Minnesota Congregational Club indulges in once a year? We believe that if other clubs would once throw off indoor restraints and enjoy social intercourse with the inspiring environment of forest, field and stream they would not only get "near to nature's heart," but nearer to one another and to God.

Much valuable material for the history of churches is lost by failure to preserve printed matter which is issued from time to time. The remarkable and unique showing of a Pennsylvania church clerk's work in this direction attracted considerable attention on a recent occasion. His efforts might well be suggestive to others.

There are two ways of lessening a debt—by increasing the income and decreasing the outgo. The Iowa H. M. S. has done nobly in the latter respect, but if givers withhold their contributions nothing can save the work, however economically it is administered.

A church in southern Minnesota is conspicuously successful in attracting to itself a large number of solid business and professional men. Can it be due to the fact that it sets them to work?

At least one pastor is heard of, and he in New England, who has taken sides with the birds against the bonnet decorators.

Church extension is at the front in a flourishing factory city of Massachusetts.

There is little question about Cuban sympathy in a Florida town.

Of Special Note

Missionary consecration in Hawaii bears golden fruit in the second generation.

Swedish Congregationalists in Nebraska find a new home.

A CENTER OF DENOMINATIONAL GROWTH

An experiment in church extension has recently come to a successful issue in a thriving New England city, which discloses the ability of a local church to promote denominational growth when the effort is made with a spirit of self-denial and consecration.

In 1740 the First Church was organized in what is now Brockton, Mass. Almost a century later, 1837, the Second Church was formed, and in 1850 the Porter Evangelical Church was gathered. All these from the beginning were self-supporting. A few years ago a congregation of Swedes sought and was granted the fellowship of our churches. It was a large church, with a membership of 300 strong, and although assisted by local contributions in erecting a commodious house of worship seating 800, it has never been dependent upon the Home Missionary Society.

This may be regarded as the close of the first period of church development in the community. Four strong Congregational churches occupied the field—a manufacturing city of about 25,000 at that time—and none had been obliged to seek home missionary aid.

About ten years ago a new era of church extension was inaugurated, when Rev. F. A. Warfield was pastor of Porter Church. A careful canvass of the eastern portion of the city revealed the fact that about 360 Protestant families resided in a section where no church was located. Of these families 82 were under the care of Porter Church, and 59 were reported as indicating no church preference.

Porter Church at once established a branch, incorporating it as an integral part of its work. A Sunday school was gathered, the sessions being held in a tenement which poorly accommodated more than a hundred scholars. A pastor's assistant devoted much time to the development of the enterprise. From the beginning a midweek service was held, and after a few years the demand for Sunday services became urgent, as the branch was more than a mile distant from the church and no other church was near A building thus became a necessity and a lot in a commanding position, with a frontage of about 110 feet upon a new avenue, was secured and a commodious chapel erected, with a seating capacity of more than 400 when the rooms are thrown together. An expenditure of nearly $6,000 was involved, but there was left an indebtedness of only $1,800.

The new church was formally recognized by council April 23, sixty-nine persons uniting to form the Wendell Avenue Church. The mother church manifests her abiding interest in the new organization by assuming the interest upon the indebtedness until such time as it shall be thought best to pay the same, and also by donating a communion set.

While the Porter Church was caring for this work another opening presented itself in the northern section of the city. The attention of the Home Missionary Society was directed to this promising field twelve years ago, but on account of certain obstacles no work was entered upon. At length the development of the section was so rapid, because of the establishment of several large manufacturing enterprises, that Porter Church was constrained to organize another branch. The movement was regarded with such favor that a business man, not a member of any church, purchased a lot, erected a neat chapel with sittings for 450, and deeded the property as a gift to the deacons of the church to be held in trust until such time as an organization holding the principles of the Porter Church should be formed. Porter Church was simply required to provide the furnishings for the chapel at an expense of about $700.

Three years ago public services were commenced, under the leadership of Rev. R. L. Rae, the assistant of the Porter Church, and the work developed so rapidly that a self-supporting church was organized in April, 1896. Fifty-six persons united with the church at the organization, and others have been added since, and the first year has closed with all bills paid and a respectable balance in the treasury, besides $250 contributed to our denominational societies.

The Sunday school had an attendance upon a recent Sunday of 196 and its present enrolled membership is more than 250. A committee has been appointed to provide additional room for the school and the Sunday congregations. The parent church marked the organization of this church by presenting it with a beautiful communion set.

This work of church extension accomplished by a single church is somewhat remarkable and certain features are to be specially noted:

1. These were not missionary movements, the constituency in both cases being far removed from that class.

2. The local church faithfully and lovingly mothered these children until they were able to go alone, not laying them upon the doorstep of the missionary society. For many years Porter Church expended for the two enterprises from $750 to $1,200 annually.

3. They were both organized as self-supporting churches, so that for 157 years since the organization of the First Church no home missionary funds have been called for in the community, though there are today six Congregational churches in the city.

4. Both these organizations were provided with homes without a call being made upon the Building Society.

5. The mother church is still strong, with a membership of about 600, and under a new leader recently installed will undoubtedly go forward to further extend our denominational influence.

ANOTHER SUBURBAN PULPIT FILLED

To the majority of the church at Melrose, Mass., the reception of a pastor last week, May 25, was their first experience of the kind, for it is nearly thirty years since it welcomed its former pastor, Rev. A G. Bale, who, by the way, on the same evening last week, was made pastor of the Presbyterian church at Asbury Park, N. J.

REV. THOMAS SIMS, D D

Rev. Thomas Sims, D.D., the new pastor, educated in England and trained in the Methodist Church, still comes with extended personal acquaintance with Congregationalism, for he was pastor of the Atkinson Memorial Church, Tacoma, Wn., from 1889 to 1892, then for three and a half years of the Bond Street Church, Toronto, Can., from which he was dismissed Dec. 28, 1896. He is a member of the Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec, and was elected annual preacher to that body for the present year.

Though Mr. Sims was not installed by council, the church arranged a service recognizing him as its pastor, and invited the attendance of the Woburn Conference of churches, with some others, and a few individuals. A very pleasant reception to Dr. Sims and a social hour were followed by a supper in the vestry, where a large number of guests sat down to well-filled tables. At the evening service in the church Mr. C. E. Swett of Winchester presided; prayer was offered by Dr. Daniel March; addresses were made by the pastor on Memories of the Way, by Dr. R. A. Beard on A Contemporaneous Ministry, by Rev. G. A. Tewksbury on A Contemporaneous Church and by Rev. B. F. Leavitt on Contemporaneous Fellowship.

Greetings were extended by Rev. Joseph Leonard of the First Methodist Church for the pastors of Melrose, by Deacon William McCartney of Toronto for Bond Street Church and by Rev. J. Cooper Autliff of Montreal for "Auld Lang Syne." This form of recognizing a pastor is somewhat novel among Congregational churches in this region, but it was heartily enjoyed, and was accepted by all as a pleasant way of bringing Dr. Sims to the acquaintance and fellowship of the churches.

FROM CENTRAL NEW YORK

The stirring little city of Corning lies in the Chemung valley, about twenty miles west of Elmira. Seven years ago the Christian people in a section of the city across the river from the older and larger part found themselves desirous of a church and failed to agree upon any one of the leading denominations represented among them or to have offers of assistance from any. They were ignorant of our polity until one of their number requested the home missionary secretary, Rev. Ethan Curtis, to enlighten them. It required only a single hour's conversation to assure them that they would better organize a church of our order, which they proceeded to do at once without any members of Congregational training and antecedents.

Within a few days thirty-one members were gathered, and soon a pastor was secured, who has proved himself to be just fitted for the great work of upbuilding. Rev. N. E. Fuller began his efforts in the autumn of 1890, and a revival came bringing 100 into the church within the winter. Within a few weeks he and his people have been made glad over the dedication of a handsome and commodious edifice, costing in all about $21,000, largely subscribed by the enthusiastic members, none of whom are rich save in faith. The auditorium will seat 600 and, with connecting rooms, 1,100 may hear the speaker. A beautiful brass lectern, a memorial gift, takes the place of the ordinary pulpit. From its inception the church has had spiritual and material increase, and has about 300 upon its roll. In the extended dedicatory services Rev. Messrs. T. K. Beecher, S. E. Eastman and H. A. Ottman, Secretary Curtis and Rev. E. N. Packard, representing the H. M. S, took part, the latter preaching the dedicatory sermon.

The alliance with the Free Baptists for joint support of Keuka College in Yates County has been abandoned by mutual agreement and on amicable terms. The effort to raise the endowment necessary was made at a most depressed period financially and in the midst of the political campaign. Rev. N. M. Calhoun, the president, gave himself untiringly to the work of making addresses, meeting individuals and directing the college for several months, but at a meeting at Rochester in March the Congregational trustees withdrew from the alliance, but remained on the board for the present. Mr. Calhoun resigned his presidency and resides at Canandaigua, his old home. His large experience in the pastorate and his recognized ability as a preacher should not allow him to remain long without a charge.

Rev. H. N. Kinney, chairman of the Christian Endeavor Union committee on Good Citizenship in Syracuse, has made an effective attack upon Sunday baseball playing in the city. He secured the arrest of the two chief players on a recent Sunday afternoon and their trial followed. E. N. P.

A NOTABLE DAY AT NORTHFIELD

The parish of Northfield is not bounded by the limits of the township, and he who ministers there may well take for his motto John Wesley's famous saying, "The world is my parish," for few places in the land are so much of a Mecca to religious people as this beautiful town on the Connecticut, where Dwight L. Moody was born and whither every summer the steps of hundreds, and even thousands, tend. Consequently such events as the installation of a pastor and the dedication of a new edifice occurring in close connection cannot fail to interest Christians of all denominations in almost every country of Christendom.

The services last week Wednesday brought together pastors and delegates of churches in the vicinity, together with two or three well-known ministers and laymen from a distance. Rev. M. L. Richardson was moderator of the council and the sermon was preached by Rev. A. H. Plumb, D. D., and was a characteristically fervent plea for the preaching of a gospel based on a supernatural revelation. Rev. S. P. Cook, a former pastor, offered the prayer. Rev. D. H. Strong gave the charge to the church and Rev. G. G. Atkins the charge to the people, while Rev. G. W. Judson extended the right hand of fellowship to the new comer.

The minister who now assumes this important charge under such favorable auspices, Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D., has had a career of singular interest. A native of Tennessee, he served in the Confederate army, and after the war studied and practiced law, attaining high rank in the profession and being twice elected a member of the Kansas legislature. In 1879, when he was thirty-four years old, he was converted and at once studied for the ministry. He organized and became pastor of the Hyde Park Church in St. Louis, whence, in 1882, he went to Dallas, Tex, where as pastor for fourteen years of the First Church and as State home missionary superintendent for nine years he has a splendid record, his church increasing from a handful to more than 600 and his influence as an organizer and promoter of new enterprises being widely felt. In connection with this work he was obliged to travel widely through the State.

Dr. Scofield first came to the general attention of the people of this section of the country in connection with the home missionary meeting in Saratoga, perhaps ten years ago. His speech then was so bright, sensible and strong that it was at once seen that he was a man of no ordinary gifts. One of the witty things which he said on that occasion was in his introductory remarks to the effect that the last time he faced a northern audience was when he sighted it along the line of his gun-barrel.

Dr. Scofield has always been a close Bible student and has conducted a correspondence school as well as participated now and then in special conferences for the study of the Bible in different parts of the country. Mr. Moody has evidently had his heart set on having Dr. Scofield as his pastor ever since the position was vacant, and has at last succeeded in setting forth to him the attractions and opportunities of the Northfield work in such a way that he has reluctantly withdrawn himself from his loved and devoted parish in Texas, which to the last protested against his going.

Personally, Dr. Scofield is one of the most winning of men. Conservative in his theological position, he is still a believer in liberty, and his one desire is to work in harmony with all his Christian brethren. He will be a strong accession to our Congregational forces in western Massachusetts and those who attend the annual summer conferences at Northfield will count his presence there another constant attraction, drawing them to the American Keswick.

REV. C. I. SCOFIELD, D. D.

The installation services were followed by the dedication of the church edifice. This had been delayed till now, though the building was completed eight years ago, owing to Mr. Moody's desire that there should be no debt upon it when the ceremony took place. Though about $4,800 still remains unpaid, the present time was considered opportune for consummating the long cherished purpose.

THE SOUTH DAKOTA ASSOCIATION

The twenty-seventh session was held with the Vermillion church, Rev. G. E. Paddock, pastor. The Woman's Home Missionary Union and the branch of the W. B. M. I. had held their regular meetings the day before the association, and were able to report increased contributions in all branches of work.

The keynote was sounded by Rev. D. B. Scott in his opening words, "Behold, I send you the promise of the Father." The whole meeting was characterized by deep seriousness and intensity of feeling. The fact that the date conflicted with those of other States made it impossible to have any of the missionary secretaries present. But the foreign work was eloquently presented by Miss Gertrude Cozad of the Japan Mission, who gave the only missionary address.

Dr. E. M. Williams spoke helpfully on The Laws of Spiritual Growth. Professor Todd of the State University read a paper entitled Do We Need a Restatement of Our Creeds? His conclusion, from the standpoint of a scientist and a layman, was that the creed of 1883 was sufficiently clear and up to date. He would add, however, articles defining the attitude of the church toward civil government and social reforms. Prof. G. M. Smith, also of the State University, gave an address on The Spiritual Life in a Competitive System, in which he showed the necessity of an adjustment of the church to present social and economic conditions. The last evening was given to college work. Rev. L. E. Camfield spoke on The Relation of the Academy to State Educational Problems; and Professors Beede of Redfield and Cushing of Yankton gave inspiring addresses.

During the business session a State Foreign Missionary Society was organized, with Professor Todd as president, and a movement was set on foot for the cutting out of all formal, dry reports, giving the entire time to live and current topics.

Supt. W. H. Thrall ably explained the problem of the churches. Hard as it is, it has one hopeful feature—the increasing number of men who stay by the work amid all its difficulties. Some of the older men drop off; some of the new ones see divine indications of better work in easier fields and at higher salaries, but year after year sees a large number still bearing the heavy burdens, hopeful and uncomplaining. There was a large increase in contributions for foreign and educational work, but a decrease in those for all other fields.

One of the pleasantest features was the visit to the State University and the addresses of "Father Seccombe" and others to the students. While there was little in the meeting that was joyous and nothing light or trivial, it will long be remembered as helpful and inspiring. J. F. C.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

MASS.—Taunton Conference held its spring meeting with the Precinct Church, Lakeville, and was well attended. The sermon was by Rev. C. B. Wathen. Rev. Alfred Noon, secretary of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, suggested practical ways in which the churches might deal with the temperance question, and Miss E. H. Stanwood presented the work of the Woman's Board of Missions. In the afternoon an animated discussion was brought out by the topic, Christianity Sufficient, (a) To Meet and Overcome the Evils of Life, (b) To Develop and Sustain a Worthy Character, (c) To Secure Temporal Welfare. The reports show that the churches in the conference have a membership of 3,332. During the past year they made a net gain of 69 and the benevolent contributions amounted to $29,158, a slight increase.

A specially noteworthy feature of the Hampshire conference with the First Church, Easthampton, May 26, 27, was Prof. Waldo S. Pratt's able and practical paper on Spiritual Power in Church Music. Another exceptionally interesting address was that of Rev. R. M. Woods, who has just returned from India. He gave a vivid account of the desolation wrought in that country by famine and plague. The sermon was by Prof. J. H. Sawyer. The 17 churches in the conference report a net loss of 52 members. The home expenses have been $32,345 against $12,694 contributed for missions. The contribution to missions per church member was $3.47 and to home expenses $8.83. There has been but one addition on an average to every 80 church members.

ME.—Hancock County Conference met in Ellsworth Falls, May 26, 27, and had as topics: Is Present Christianity Christian? Business Methods a Solvent of Church Problems, Our Churches as Factors in Political and Sociological Problems. One forenoon a ladies' missionary meeting was held.

VT.—Bennington Conference held its annual meeting in Manchester, May 25, 26. The sermon was preached by Rev. W. S. Walker. Topics were: Should the Church Cease Mission Work? The Literature Doctrines of the Kingdom, Organization, Worship and Life of the Kingdom. The Sunday school and Home Missionary Societies were represented.

Addison County Conference met in Weybridge, May 25, 26. Topics were: Old Methods and Present Needs, Obligations of the Individual Churches to the National Boards and How Best to Meet Present Needs of the Foreign Field, Home Missionary Work of the Sunday Schools, The Present Outlook for Christianity. The sermon was by Rev. S. H. Barnum.

MICH.—The Cheboygan Association met at Kalkaska, May 12, 13. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Warren. The topics were: What Is Congregationalism? Cheboygan Association: a Backward and Forward Look, Relation of Tithing to Material and Religious Prosperity, A Symposium on Christian Nurture and Church Activities: (1) In the Home and Bible Schools, (2) In the Junior and Senior C. E. Societies, (3) In the Midweek Prayer Meeting and Sabbath Services. The women held a two hours' session.

WIS.—The annual meeting of Beloit Convention was held with the churches at Beloit. Prof. E. T. Harper of Chicago Seminary conducted a helpful devotional service in exposition of a number of the Psalms. The sermon was preached by Rev. R. C. Denison. The topics were: The Religious Bearing of Recent Developments in Psychology, The Duty of the Church to the Family, The Duty of the Family to the Church, The Work of the American Board in Mexico, Foreign Mission Work, and Sabbath Observance.

COL.—Western Association met at Newcastle in May and considered The Relations of Church and Pastor, and the various departments of church, missionary and educational work.

CAL.—The last meeting of Santa Clara Association was held at Saratoga. A strong feature was the admirable paper by Rev. J. G. Taylor on How to Convert Enthusiasm into Power, which pointed to the coming C. E. Convention at San Francisco. An account of the plan adopted by First Church, San José, for interesting men in missionary work, created a lively discussion.

CLUBS

CT.—The Connecticut Club, at its meeting May 25, voted to change its time of meeting from noon to evening. Rev. Dr. J. W. Cooper of New Britain presided. The principal address was on Congregational Loyalty as a Condition of Church Unity, by Rev. D. Newman Smyth of New Haven.

MICH.—The Western Michigan Club held its annual festival Monday afternoon and evening. Papers were read on The Rights of Labor and the Duty of Service and The Rights and Responsibilities of Capital, by Mr. B. F. Wallin and Rev. Bastian Smits. An address was also given by Dr. J. L. Barton of Boston. In the evening Dr. Nehemiah Boynton gave an address on Robert Browning, in which he held his listeners spellbound for nearly one hour.

MINN.—Southern Minnesota Club held its spring meeting with the Owatonna church. Several new members were elected. The topic discussed was The Pulpit and the Press, with papers on The Pulpit as Seen from the Press and The Press as Seen from the Pulpit. Several brief addresses were also made.

The annual outing of the Minnesota Club, May 24, comprised an afternoon trip to Excelsior, with a three hours' steamer ride on Lake Minnetonka, music, speeches on How to Spend a Vacation, and a six o'clock supper, served in a large pavilion by the ladies of Excelsior church. The program, charmingly decorated with arbutus, and one of the brightest we have seen, considered cycling, gunning and fishing, in both rural and theological aspects, with a paper on Organized Charities to serve as a balance wheel. The meeting was thoroughly enjoyed by the club, and marks the close of one of its most prosperous years.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 801]

WEST ROXBURY.—South Evangelical. With the first Sunday in May Rev. F. W. Merrick began his fifth year as pastor. As a result of his four years' work 55 new members have been received, mostly by letter, owing to the peculiar surroundings of the church. Eighty members of other churches who worship here were sent invitations to the annual meeting. About 30 removals have resulted this year from various causes. Within four years 62 new families have been added to the church, making 187 in all and within two years the Sunday school has increased from 187 to 241 and has enlarged its benevolences from $25 to $254. The gifts of the church are nearly $1,000 annually. As elsewhere, the prayer meeting and Sunday evening services are problems.

Massachusetts

STONEHAM.—After accepting the resignation of Rev. G. E. Lovejoy as acting pastor, the church at once, by a large vote, invited him to remain and become the settled pastor by installation, but having accepted his call to Pittsfield, N. H., such a request was not encouraged, and he closes his labors June 15.

LOWELL.—Swedish. Recent special interest in this church, owing to the installation of a new pastor, Rev. A. P. Nelson, has brought out the fact that there are probably 3,000 and more Swedes in the city, and they are represented in nearly all trades. Mr. Nelson is a Swede by birth, and came to America in 1880, when 22 years old. He is a graduate of Chicago Seminary, and his first pastorate was in Parkside, Ill. Later he studied at Beloit College, and since then has worked in Minnesota and New Jersey. The authorship of books on missions in the Swedish language is accredited to him.

TAUNTON.—Trinitarian has expressed its sympathy for the people of the East Taunton church by taking a Sunday morning collection of about $500 to aid them in rebuilding their house of worship, recently destroyed by fire.——Union. Rev. Frank L. Luce, a graduate of Andover, and at present the pastor's assistant in Boylston Church, Jamaica Plain, has accepted his call to this pastorate, and enters on his new work the first of June.

ATTLEBORO.—Second has packed pews every Sunday. The pastor, Rev. E. L. House, lately delivered an address at the opening of a new baseball ground, and at this season delivers memorial sermons to the G. A. R., Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. He spoke twice Memorial Day.

NORTH CARVER.—At the close of Rev. Nehemiah Lincoln's pastorate, as a result of his illness, his church passed resolutions of regret and sympathy with him in his affliction, and also offering gratitude for his faithful service.

GREENWICH.—Parishioners and friends of the late Rev. Edward P. Blodgett, pastor of this church for 51 years, have recently erected a fine granite monument over his grave in the churchyard, thus giving expression to their loving appreciation of his lifetime labors among them.

Maine

ELLSWORTH FALLS.—Union. May 25 was a day long to be remembered by this church, when its beautiful meeting house, so earnestly labored for during the past year, was dedicated and the pastor, Rev. E. L. Hunt, installed. The house is modern Gothic in style, and cost about $5,000. The small debt remaining was raised as part of the exercises. The sermon was by Rev. D. L. Yale and prayer by the former pastor, Rev. H. W. Conley, which was followed by an original hymn by the pastor's wife, Mrs. M. B. Hunt. Greetings from the local churches were received also. A beautiful Bible from the Hancock County Association and an elegant communion service, in memory of Mrs. S. F. Hinkley, a former member, were presented. The evening exercises were of great interest, and were followed the next two days by Hancock County Conference.

FRYEBURG.—Dr. Lyman Abbott and wife while on a visit to Oxford County were tendered a reception by one of the parishioners of their son, Rev. E. H. Abbott. Dr. Abbott will give addresses at Waterford, Bridgton, Fryeburg, Denmark, N. Fryeburg and N. Conway, N. H.

New Hampshire

MILFORD.—The pastor, Rev. H. P. Peck, having been laid aside with the grip for a time, has been granted a vacation by the church, extending from May 1 to Sept. 1 with full salary. Such action is gratifying to the pastor, and reflects great credit upon the church and congregation.

Connecticut

WINDSOR.—According to the religious census just completed there are 3,409 persons in the town, of whom 693 attend the Congregational church here and 370 the church at Poquonock, or one-third of the entire population. The other half-dozen denominations claim the rest. There are 454 children between the ages of four and sixteen who attend Sunday school and 177 who do not. Special meetings were held during the time the Bible Society workers were taking the census and several conversions are reported.

COLCHESTER.—The Sunday evening previous to his departure for Bradford, Eng., Consul E. S. Day was given an ovation in the auditorium. He made an address reviewing some of the events that have taken place in the church and community during the past 35 years, especially eulogizing some of the former pastors and workers and urging all to emulate their example and work diligently for the cause. Mr. Day is well known for his liberality to the poor and will be sorely missed.

NEW HAVEN.—Humphrey Street. The ninth anniversary of Rev. F. R. Luckey's pastorate was celebrated by the Ladies' Aid Society with a reception, including a musical and literary entertainment. Mr. Luckey was presented with a handsome Dresden table by the members of the congregation, besides flowers.——Plymouth. Dr. W. W. McLane gave an eloquent sermon recently on Birds versus Bonnets, in which he made a strong plea for the preservation of birds.

EAST HARTFORD.—First. For some time the church has owned a piece of land in the rear of its house and parsonage which, although exempt from taxation, has been the source of little income. A piece of land adjoining, just purchased for about $1,000, will permit opening a street which will give the church about 10 good building lots in the center of the town, which can be sold and the proceeds applied to the improvement fund.

NORWICH—Broadway. At the 12th annual meeting of the Woman's C. H. M. U. of Connecticut the reports were all highly satisfactory. The year's contributions amounted to $15,865, and there has been a large increase in membership, 128 auxiliaries having been added. The speakers included Dr. Duncan, Mrs. I. V. Woodbury, Miss M. D. Moffatt, Miss Gilman and Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster.

MONTVILLE observed its 175th anniversary, May 23, with a historical address by Deacon H. A. Baker and a sermon by the pastor, Rev. G. H. Morss. The history of the Sunday school was given by Augustus A. Parker, superintendent for nearly 50 years, and who is now 75 years of age. Greetings from the mother church in New London were given by Judge Belcher and Deacon Wilcox.

TORRINGTON.—About 100 of the French people of the town will formally complete organization shortly as the Fourth Church. It is expected that a house of worship will be erected in the course of a few months, an opening subscription of $1,000 having been received from D. B. Wesson of Springfield.

HARTFORD.—Windsor Avenue. The collection taken on a recent Sunday for the H. M. S. amounted to $1,125, of which $1,000 were the contribution of one family.——South. Dr. E. P. Parker was the Memorial Day orator at Berea College last Saturday.

MIDDLE STATES

New Jersey

VINELAND has recently received a bequest of $1,155. About two-fifths of this is to go into the Dorcas fund; the remainder will be used for repairs. The pastor's wife has a class of young people for weekly missionary study. The Ladies' Home Missionary Society will send the pastor to the national anniversary gathering at Saratoga. Since March 1, when the present pastor, Rev. W. E. Mann, began service, 10 have been added to the church. The services are now well attended and the prayer meetings are supported with earnestness.

Pennsylvania

PHILADELPHIA.—Central. John Edmands, who has been the clerk of the church from its beginning in 1864, has made a practice of keeping printed matter of all kinds connected with the church. At the late meeting of the New Jersey Association, in this city, there were exhibited two large volumes filled with such matter, two volumes of pamphlets and two of church weekly calendars, and one volume of a paper published in the interest of the church.

THE SOUTH

District of Columbia

WASHINGTON.—First. In addition to what may be given Children's Sunday, an offering of $66 has been taken for the Sunday School Society. Regular monthly meetings are held for the Soldiers' Union, the families of all veterans of the war being invited.

Florida

TAMPA.—A Spanish service was held in the house of Rev. E. P. Herrick recently for the instruction of the Cubans in the history, principles and polity of the Congregational Church. The resolutions recently passed by the association of Florida favoring the Cuban cause were translated and read. The room was filled and much interest was manifested. ——The Immanuel Mission Sunday school in Ibor City has now an enrollment of over 100.

THE INTERIOR

[For Chicago news see page 790.]

Ohio

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Rev. E. A. Steiner, the pastor, has supplemented his course of Sunday evening lectures on The Foreshadowing of Christ in the Old Testament by a course delivered Sunday evenings on The Foreshadowing of the Kingdom of God. The topics were: A Kingdom of Righteousness, Savonarola; Of Grace, Martin Luther; Of a Free People, Oliver Cromwell; Spiritual Kingdom, John Wesley; A Humane Kingdom, Florence Nightingale. The lectures were largely attended. The members of the Men's Club are making a study of the history, principles and polity of Congregationalism.

Michigan

GRAND LEDGE.—A great awakening has taken place in the church. Mr. H. E. Sayles has conducted evangelistic services for two weeks. Sunday morning, May 9, was the occasion of admitting 57 new members, most of whom were baptized.

DETROIT.—Boulevard. The organization of this church was completed lately, with a charter membership of 39; 17 united by letter and 22 on confession. Dr. H. P. De Forest spent a recent Sunday evening with the church.

GRAND RAPIDS.—South three months ago adopted the Greenville plan of social work in the parish. Four districts were marked out, and each district will be looked after by officers and committees.

LANSING.—Mayflower. Thirteen Seniors and 15 Juniors were received into the societies lately. The work in this young cause grows, and will soon form the Third Church in the city.

Wisconsin

WHITEWATER.—Rev. E. C. Barnard, D. D., is recovering his health. Meantime his associate, Rev. B. C. Preston, is doing excellent work. The Woman's Missionary Association has been reorganized and is flourishing, its meetings being attended by about 100 women of the congregation. This church has lately raised two jubilee shares for the A. M. A. and is going on to complete the third.

LAKE GENEVA.—Twelve new members were received by Rev. C. A. Osborne at the May communion, six on confession. The Sunday school has increased within a few months from an average attendance of 70 to over 150. Work will begin June 1 on a new church edifice, to cost $10,000.

EVANSVILLE.—Twenty-eight new members have been added to this church within a year, half on confession. A young people's missionary society has been organized. Interest in all departments is increasing under the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Short.

JANESVILLE.—Congregations are large and interest is increasing. A chorus choir of 50 voices has been organized and adds greatly to the evening service. Rev. R. C. Denison began work four months ago.

DELAVAN.—Twenty members have been added within the past year, 16 on confession. The building of a parsonage is contemplated. Rev. W. E. Davidson is pastor.

THE WEST

Iowa

BELMOND.—Father Sands has ministered here for the past 28 years. He is the senior pastor of the State, being 82 years of age. Recently the people celebrated his birthday with him and the wife of his youth. Of the Iowa pastors three only—Dr. William Salter, Burlington, Dr. E. S. Hill, Atlantic, and Rev. Hermann Ficke, Dubuque—have been in their places longer than he. The next in order is Dr. A. L. Frisbie, Des Moines.

BELLE PLAINE has adopted the weekly offering system. More than 50 members contribute each week for the six missionary societies. Rev. A. H. Sedgwick is pastor.

HUMBOLDT.—There have been 32 accessions since Jan. 1, and 80 in the past 18 months since Rev. R. L. Marsh assumed the pastorate.

The Iowa H. M. S. closed its year April 30, with a debt of $871. The receipts of the year were $13,516. Expenditures were cut down more than $3,000, but the shrinkage of receipts was greater than the decrease of expenses.

Continued on page 810.

Pale and Thin

Could Not Help Herself for Three Months—Impure Blood Causes Great Suffering.

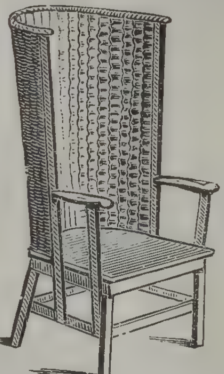
"I have been in poor health owing to impure blood, weak stomach, biliousness and sick headaches ever since I was a child eight years old. I have suffered everything for the past 14 years. I could not help myself for three months, and was pale and thin. I asked my docter if I could take Hood's Sarsaparilla and he said that I could take as much of it as I liked. I soon found it helped me very much. I continued its use until I had taken six bottles, and at that time I looked better than I ever did since I can remember. Hood's Sarsaparilla helped me more than any other medicine. I advise any one who is in poor health to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I owe my life to it." ELIZA A. RUMRILL, Box 1178, Claremont, N. H.

Be sure to get only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The Best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills cure Liver Ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25 cents.



MALAY CHAIR.

Sit down in this chair. Lean back a moment. Now go where you please; it will be hard to forget the pleasure of this experience.

This is a Malay chair, and it has an interesting history. The back is a great mat of tough Malacca grass, heavy and firm, woven by the Malays and imported in its finished state at trifling cost. We frame it inexpensively, and with the Belgian finish, or a "forest green" finish, it makes a most distinguished seat.

It is very comfortable. The curving back supports the body on three sides, and at the same time screens the head from all draughts of air. The seat is low to the floor and of generous depth. Broad arm rests.

This is one of the novelties in our Catalogue of Summer furniture, just issued, sent on receipt of 4 cents for postage.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

HALL'S
Vegetable Sicilian
HAIR RENEWER
Beautifies and restores Gray Hair to its original color and vitality; prevents baldness; cures itching and dandruff. A fine hair dressing.
R. P. HALL & CO., Props., Nashua, N. H.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Dr. Dunning's
Congregationalists
in America.

With Introductions by R. S. STORRS, D. D., and Gen. O. O. HOWARD, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. ROY, Dr. A. H. QUINT, Dr. F. E. CLARK, and Rev. H. A. BRIDGMAN .552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in CHICAGO or NEW YORK, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address
THE CONGREGATIONALIST
1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Not only is it more or less self-evident that the movement of general merchandise is gradually growing in volume, but the financial community is showing a greater degree of hopefulness than has been noted for some time. This access of confidence finds expression in Wall Street in the better buying of and advance in Stock Exchange securities.

The strongest group of stocks have been the Western roads, the Grangers, so called. The reason that this group is leading the market is because all the best authorities agree that general business in the Western country is showing relatively more improvement than it is in New England. It is stated by those who should know that the West is in a position to respond promptly to any quickening of the mercantile pulse.

Take the earnings of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, for example. They show distinctly that general trade through that company's territory (its lines run through several States) must be materially improving. This Chicago, Burlington & Quincy is the same property which for the past two years has given Wall Street so much anxiety. Wall Street "bears" have been predicting the entire suspension of dividends and sometimes even something worse.

But Wall Street has changed its views and is now buying the stock and expects it to be the leader in the coming bull market. It should be stated in explanation of the last phrase that the speculative community is confident of a rising, or bull, market, during which a general advance of from ten to twenty points is anticipated. Let us trust that these expectations will be fulfilled.

Trade in this section is still quiet. The iron and steel trade is depressed, while the demand for lumber and building materials is quite good. Cotton goods move from the counters sluggishly, and further curtailment of production by the cotton mills is being discussed. Wool is rather quiet, but the business in woolens continues moderate.

Monetary rates show no signs of gathering strength, and absolute dullness makes note brokers and lending institutions somewhat disgusted. Collateral loans of the best kind have been made as low as three per cent. on six months. The supply of commercial paper is exceedingly slight.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

LADD—In Auburndale, May 19, Frances R., daughter of the late Henry Ladd, of Portsmouth, N. H., aged 81 yrs.

PEARSON—In Newburyport, May 15, Nancy E. Pearson, aged 8‸ yrs.

MRS. MARY G. COGSWELL

Died in Boscawen, N. H., May 10, aged 92 yrs., 8 mos., 10 dys. Mrs. Cogswell was the daughter of John Greenough, Esq., and granddaughter of Rev. Abiel Foster, who was for many years the pastor of the Congregational church in Canterbury, N. H. She was also a direct descendant of John Rogers, who was burned at the stake in 1555, the first martyr in Queen Mary's reign.

Mrs. Cogswell had been for many years the oldest member of the Congregational church in Boscawen and was a consistent and useful member, greatly interested in all things pertaining to the welfare of the church. She died as she lived with faith in God, sustained with the hope which the gospel inspires in the hearts of all of Christ's disciples. She will be missed on earth but welcomed to heaven.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

The Buckeye Dash Lamp lights the darkest road 200 feet ahead, and is equally good as a side lamp or hand lantern. Has a powerful reflector and bull's-eye lens. Won't blow out in the strongest wind. Send for our catalogue.
Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it if you insist. Mention this paper.
STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Ribbons
All Previous Bargains Eclipsed
4-inch wide ALL-SILK SATIN AND GROS GRAIN RIBBON, 3½-inch TAFFETAS, FANCIES, all in Millinery and Sash widths, Colored and Black,
Only 12½c. Yard
4½ inch TAFFETAS and MOIRE, in Black and all the New Shades,
Only 25c. Yard
SASH RIBBONS FOR GRADUATION, 5½ and 6-inch TAFFETAS and MOIRE,
Only 29c. Yard
A Price Never Before Heard Of!
ORDER BY MAIL.
WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

£ FOREIGN TRAVEL is made easier by the use of
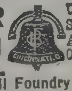
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
ANY TIME AND ANYWHERE
AND ALWAYS AVAILABLE.
Send for Circulars to
Agency of U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

WARRANTS
Safest short time paper, earning 6 to 9 per cent. Carefully selected State, County, City and Public School issues running 6 to 24 months. Write for details.
ROBT. E. STRAHORN & CO., 31 Equitable Building, Boston.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞ Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.



CINCINNATI, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & Co., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, MAY 28

Mrs. Abell read the first chapter of Nehemiah, and found there a type of true prayer, characterized by confession of sin, humility and confidence in the promises of God. Miss Child introduced Miss Jenny Olin, under appointment for Micronesia, to sail June 24 from San Francisco for Honolulu, where she will embark on the Morning Star for Kusaie. In a familiar way she told how she came to think of being a missionary, and it was interesting to note the influence of a pastor who was wont to bring foreign missions before his people in the missionary concert and otherwise. The germ thus fostered in its growth was further developed at Mt. Holyoke College, and the suggestion of Micronesia as her field, only a month ago, met with a ready response.

Prayer for native women in Turkey being the calendar topic for the day, Mrs. J. K. Browne gave assurance of encouraging work among them. The touring missionaries report that never have the people seemed so eager for Christian privileges and spiritual teaching. These missionaries, as they have entered destitute villages, have sometimes found it best to announce at once, "Silver and gold have we none," but have met crowds of listeners ready to receive what they had to give. At Diabekir Miss Bush had large audiences of women upon the house-top, in the stable, the court, or wherever there was room—from two to five hundred.

Miss Stanwood read letters from Miss Sheldon and Miss Hyde of Adabazar, Turkey, telling of calls in native homes, of zeal in raising the pastor's salary, of the progress of the school the past year with its graduating class of six, of the seed sowing, which is as important as the harvest, of the growth of Christian character among the girls and the belief that most of the graduates have gone out Christians, of the self-denial practiced and the gifts to those who are more needy.

It was pleasant to have the aid of Mrs. Wolcott Calkins again after her absence.

Hotels and Travel

PASSACONAWAY INN,

YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. NOW OPEN.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

Camp Idlewild For Select Boys, Lake Winnepesaukee, N.H.
For a beautifully illustrated 28-page booklet address JOHN M. DICK, B. D., Box 62 (Back Bay), Boston, Mass.

HUESTIS HOUSE,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Headquarters for Congregational Home Missionary meetings, held May 31st. For rates and rooms address
W. B. HUESTIS, Prop.

DR. STRONG'S SANITARIUM,
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Centrally located. Elevator, Steam, Suites with Bath, Sun Parlor and Roof Promenade, Elegant Turkish and Russian Baths. A first-class table. We offer a special rate to those attending the Home Missionary meetings of $2 00 per day. Send for illustrated circular and announcements for 1897. Entertainments, bicycle paths, etc.

VERMONT'S ...THE PLACE VACATIONS

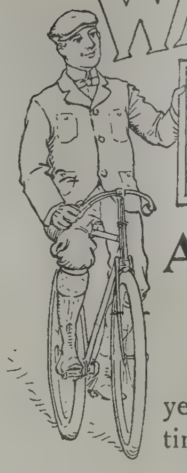
for a quiet, restful, refreshing, thoroughly enjoyable vacation Its particular attractions are its perfect summer climate, unrivaled mountain, lake and valley scenery, opportunities for boating and fishing, and its excellent hotels and hospitable farm and village homes where guests are entertained at from $4.00 to $10 00 per week.

The best description of this region is given in "Summer Homes" (illustrated), sent by mail for 5c. stamp on application to S. W. Cummings, Central Vermont R. R., St. Albans, Vt., or T. H. Hanley, 194 Washington Street, Boston.



WANAMAKER'S
CONTINENTAL BICYCLES

Always Ahead!

MODEL FOR 1898

Early introduction of next year's model places the Continental in the lead.

Continental, 1898, $50
Continental, 1897, $45
Continent, 1897, $37.50

High-grade Wheels at fair prices. Peers of the best. Light. Easy running. Very strong. Made upon honor. Uniform standard.

You pay only for the Bicycle. No charges for business frills. Can be bought only of

JOHN WANAMAKER
NEW YORK · PHILADELPHIA

Our store at Broadway and Tenth Street is the natural center of New York retailing. In point of time and convenience it is the nearest large Store in New York to the Grand Central Station.

Hotels and Travel

Going To... EUROPE?

H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
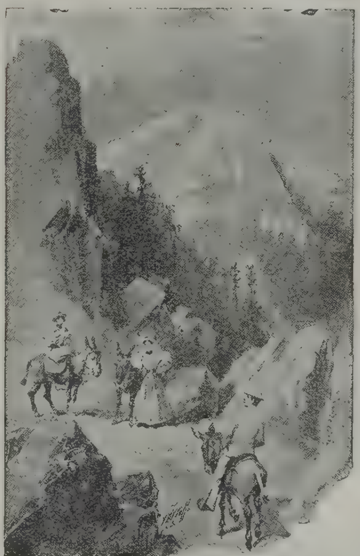
6 Bowling Green, New York.



Enquire of Ticket Agents or at Principal Offices:
212 Clark St., CHICAGO. 423 Broadway, NEW YORK.
5 State St., BOSTON.
Or address the General Passenger and Ticket Agent at Chicago.

COLORADO
SAN FRANCISCO
PORTLAND
SALT LAKE
ALASKA
DAKOTA HOT SPRINGS
YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK
AND THE HEALTH AND PLEASURE RESORTS OF THE WEST AND NORTHWEST MILWAUKEE
ST. PAUL
MINNEAPOLIS
DULUTH
ASHLAND
MARQUETTE
LOW SUMMER TOURIST RATES
VIA THE
NORTH-WESTERN LINE
Chicago & North-Western Railway.
SPECIALLY LOW EXCURSION RATES
TO MILWAUKEE { On account of the N. E. A. Convention July 6 9.
TO ST. PAUL and MINNEAPOLIS { The occasion of the Annual Meeting B. P. O. Elks July 6.
TO SAN FRANCISCO On account of the Christian Endeavor Convention July 7-12.
SOLID VESTIBULED TRAINS
SUPERBLY EQUIPPED

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, June 13–19. The Best Way to Study the Bible. Ps. 19: 7–14

If any one really desires to study the Bible he can easily find abundant helps and suggestions. Almost every week witnesses the printing of some book or pamphlet which, if rightly used, will aid in opening up the Scriptures. To cite only one of recent volumes, Prof. Walter F. Adeney's How to Read the Bible, published by Thomas Whittaker, is an admirable guide. The series of hand-books entitled The Modern Reader's Bible, edited by Professor Moulton of Chicago University, has made many of the books of the Bible new to those already familiar with them. Only the other day a lady who has been a most devoted student of the Bible for many years came to me full of enthusiasm over the book of Esther as Professor Moulton has edited and paragraphed it. Surely we ought to be thankful that we live in an age not of heavy, bulky and abstruse commentaries, but of cheap, attractive and scholarly manuals on Bible study and Bible reading.

It does not, to be sure, require a large supply of even such excellent helps as these in order to find cut what the Bible teaches. I think I could get along fairly well, as respects the New Testament, with Marcus Dods's Introduction. We surely do not want to substitute books about the Bible for the Bible itself, but we may make profitable use of the results reached by men who have grown gray in bending over the pages of Holy Writ. While the Bible is simple enough to be understood by an ordinary mind, it is also true that we do not get at its richest lessons and inspirations unless we are willing to use our mental faculties upon it in the same way in which we apply them to the study of general history or literature.

My experience with Sunday school classes has shown me that what the average young person needs most is an actual knowledge of the contents of a given passage. How few there are who can narrate accurately such familiar stories as that of the prodigal son or of the good Samaritan. We glide over the surface of Scripture. Frequent reading of it in the house of God secures from us only a mechanical attention. Study your Bible until you actually know how, in its broad outlines, the gospel of Luke differs from the gospel of John; what Paul is trying to teach in Galatians as over against his instructions to Timothy; what the book of Joshua actually tells about the conquest of the Holy Land. It is little short of a disgrace that intelligent Christians know so little of what the Bible sets forth in the way of historical fact. Any kind of criticism is better than such dense ignorance as to what the pages of the Bible contain.

We are to study the Bible to obtain food for our spiritual lives. No Christian can be strong for service who does not keep in constant contact with God's revelation of himself through the Scriptures. Intellectual mastery of the argument in Romans for justification by faith is worth much, but a simple, childlike surrender to Christ is worth more. A discernment of the overruling Providence which guided the steps of the children of Israel is important, but of still more consequence is it to obtain a sure sense that as God was with the fathers so is he with us.

Pond's Extract, the household remedy for pain. Beware of imitations weak and sour.

A Curious Frame.—One of the most interesting chairs which has been seen in Boston in many a day is pictured in another column of this paper. It is composed, in large part, of matting woven of tough grass grown on the islands in the Malay Archipelago. It is imported in its woven state at small cost, and made up by the Paine Furniture Co of this city into the charming Malay chairs which are offered today.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

DON'T be penny wise and pound foolish by buying the "just-as-good mixtures," "so called White Lead," or other substitutes for Pure White Lead.

In painting, the cost of labor so far exceeds the cost of material that the best only should be used. The best is Pure White Lead (see list of brands which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

SURPASSING ALL OTHERS

"All over the world."

Either Lock-Stitch or Chain-Stitch.

Each the best of its kind.
See the Latest Model.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Night Gowns

Here is a decided bargain for quick buyers: Cambric Night Gowns, round yoke, trimmed with exquisite pattern embroidery and insertion and finished with narrow ribbon at neck, at $1.30 each.

Which price covers postage.

The gowns open on the side and have box pleating in the back. Orders should be sent immediately.

Strawbridge & Clothier

Philadelphia

Waverley Bicycles

Much is said in advertisements about bicycle finish—that is right—fine finish is important on a bicycle, carriage or piano. It indicates careful work and inspection. Look at Waverley finish. Compare it with any bicycle in the world without exception; take in all the little points about the enamel and nickel, look carefully at all the nuts and bolts and joints; have it taken apart and examine its bearings. We will accept your verdict on the comparison.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
Catalogue free.

Here's a Treat! There's no nicer summer meal than

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Delicious hot or cold. At grocers; send 6c for sample can or postal for free booklet.
Van Camp Packing Co.,
324 Kentucky Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

BICYCLE SUPPORT Light, strong, sure, attached to any wheel, goes with you everywhere; stand wheel any place; sit on if desired; handsomely nickeled. $1.00, express paid. W. H. MORGAN, Manufacturer, Peabody, Kan.

Continued from page 806.

Mr. W. D. King, who has supplied at Moorland for 18 months, was ordained by council May 12.——During the past year, under the leadership of Rev. N. L. Packard, the Buffalo Center church has increased in membership from 15 to 70.——In the four years of Rev. F. E. Carter's pastorate the church at Clear Lake has doubled its membership and built a fine house of worship.

Nebraska

LINCOLN.—Swedish has completed its new house of worship, and the first service was held in it May 25, Professor Risberg of Chicago Seminary preaching, and Rev. Lewis Gregory and Superintendent Bross assisting. The building is comfortable and attractive, and has been erected with painstaking care. The C. C. B. S. helped in the work, and the other churches of the city lent a hand. Great credit is due the hard-working pastor, Rev. J. M. Tillberg, who has labored with his own hands in its erection. This is the first Swedish Congregational church in the State.

WALLACE.—Rev. C. W. Murphy finds the S. S. work at his out stations good preparation for preaching service. Four of these out-stations are maintained with regularity, and secure large coöperation from the communities.

DONIPHAN has renovated the interior of its building, ceiling, papering, and graining the woodwork. An additional chandelier has also been put up. West Hamilton, another field cared for by Rev. R. M. Traverse, is putting a much needed foundation under its meeting house.

Wyoming

MANVILLE has secured a $500 grant from the C. C. B. S., to which $100 has been added by local subscriptions. Lusk has raised $25 to meet a deficit. These churches are yoked together under Rev. A. S. Heathcote, since whose coming both attendance and interest have increased, and the singing is said to be better than ever before

PACIFIC COAST

Washington

SEATTLE.—Edgewater has just celebrated its eighth anniversary, graced by the presence of Supt. Samuel Greene, who planted and nourished the Sunday school from which it grew. About a year later a church of six members was organized by H. M. Supt. R. A. Beard. The membership has since increased to 95. The Ladies' Aid Society reported $375 in the treasury, and its offer to pay in full for the enlargement of the edifice was gratefully accepted. Rev. J. T. Nichols is pastor.

Fellowship meetings were held in May on the fields of Rev. Elvira Cobleigh and Rev. C. T. Whittlesey in Walla Walla County, the pastors being assisted by Rev. Messrs. E. L. Smith and T. W. Walters. The meetings at Whitman-Eells Church and Pettijohn were especially successful.

HAWAII

MAUI.—Lahaina. A beautiful $12,000 edifice was recently dedicated, the gift of Hon. H. P. Baldwin, son of Rev. Dwight Baldwin, M. D., for many years missionary pastor of this church.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY DAVENPORT ASSOCIATION

IN SESSION AT DAVENPORT, IO., MAY 12

Whereas, J. W. Geiger took into his own hands the appointment of a committee and moderator from the Marion church, which right belongs only to the church, to act in considering charges against himself;

Whereas, Abundant and conclusive evidence has been presented to this association against Rev. J. W. Geiger to prove immoral conduct and unfitness for the Christian ministry; and

Whereas, He has persistently opposed the investigation of charges against him, even to the point of serving civil injunction upon a committee regularly appointed by this association to examine said charges, and has resorted to acts calculated to intimidate said committee and this association; and

Whereas, He has without sufficient cause brought a suit at law against a brother minister in this association and against an aged brother of another denomination, destroying the peace of his home and endangering the life of the wife of said brother; and

Whereas, Throughout all this investigation, he has displayed a purpose to thwart the sincere endeavors of this body to establish his innocence or guilt by a full examination;

Resolved, first, That, after hearing the evidence against said J. W. Geiger, this association finds that the said J. W. Geiger has refused to answer these charges, we with pain and regret judge him guilty of the charges preferred against him, and therefore unworthy of standing in this body;

Resolved, second, That the said J. W. Geiger be and is hereby expelled from this association;

Resolved, third, That full copies of the charges and evidence be spread upon the records of this association, together with these resolutions, and also sent to the First Congregational Church of Marion, Io.;

Resolved, fourth, That for the information and protection of our churches the result of this action be published in The Congregationalist, Congregational Iowa and the Advance, and that the registrar is hereby instructed to so publish this action.

Unanimously adopted.

M. A. BULLOCK, Moderator.
G. S. ROLLINS, Registrar.

BIOGRAPHICAL

REV. JOHN WILLIAM TOLLIVER

St. John's Church, Springfield, suffers the loss of its pastor, Rev. J. W. Tolliver, who died May 24, after a short illness, aged 29 years. He was graduated from Howard University in 1891 and engaged in missionary work in Alabama under the A. M. A. He was installed in Springfield in October, 1894, and during his pastorate the membership of St. John's Church has increased from 63 to 118.

PEOPLE buy Hood's Sarsaparilla year after year because it does them good. It will do you good to take it now.

THE Central Vermont Railroad has issued a book, called Summer Homes in the Green Hills of Vermont, that is a complete guide to all the summer resorts of the State, as well as those of the islands and shores of Lake Champlain, the Adirondacks and Canada. The book contains many half-tone plates, including pictures of a large number of boarding houses, and a mine of information as to rates and routes. It will be given to any one who applies for it at the company's Boston office, or will be sent by mail for a five-cent stamp on application to T. H. Hanley, N. E. P. A., 194 Washington Street, or S. W. Cummings, G. P. A., St. Albans, Vt.

Ask your Druggist for a generous
10 CENT TRIAL SIZE.

ELY'S CREAM BALM

contains no cocaine, mercury or any other injurious drug.

It opens and cleans the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals and Protects the Membrane. Restores the senses of Taste and Smell. Is quickly absorbed. Gives relief at once. 50 cts. at Druggists or by mail; Trial Size 10c., at Druggists or by mail.
ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York.

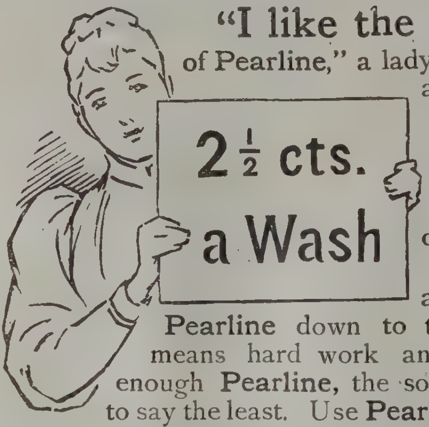
BABY HUMORS

Instant relief for skin-tortured babies and rest for tired mothers in a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, and a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure. The only speedy and economical treatment for itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, and pimply humors of the skin, scalp, and blood, with loss of hair.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Baby Humors," mailed free.

SCALP HUMORS Itching and Scaly, with Loss of Hair Cured by CUTICURA.



"I like the small package of Pearline," a lady says; "it lasts two weeks and does two washings." Then she admits that she has been using soap with her Pearline. Now this is all unnecessary. If you don't put in enough Pearline to do the work easily and alone, you bring Pearline down to the level of soap, which means hard work and rubbing. If you use enough Pearline, the soap is a needless expense, to say the least. Use Pearline alone, just as directed, and you'll have the most thoroughly economical washing.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 505 JAMES PYLE, New York.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF
CURES CATARRH

It has never been equalled for the instant relief of Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Headache. Cures Deafness, restores lost sense of smell. Sixty yrs. on the market. Price 25 cts. at all Druggists or by mail postpaid.
F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

BLINDNESS PREVENTED

The Absorption Treatment a Success. Hundreds successfully treated for all diseases of the eyes or lids without knife or risk at their homes and at our Sanitarium, the largest and most successful institution in America. "Don't wait to be blind."

Pamphlet Free Describing Treatment.

The Bemis Eye Sanitarium, Glens Falls, N.Y.

Physical Confusion

Everything is wrong when the liver or stomach falters—appetite fickle—bowels irregular—energy gone—head dull.

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient
is the remedy to rely on. Agreeable to take, certain in its action, and there is no waiting for results.
Sold by druggists for 50 years. 50c. and $1.
TARRANT & CO., CHEMISTS, NEW YORK.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BANISTER, Chas. D., Utica, Mich., to Thompsonville and Copemish. Accepts.

BARBOUR, Thos. W., Palmyra, Wis., to E. Troy.

BLOMFIELD, Stanley F., Yale Sem., to Boulevard Ch., Detroit, Mich. Accepts.

BOCKOVEN, Wm. A., formerly of Thompsonville and Copemish, Mich., to Bangor and W. Bangor. Accepts.

BURGESS, Wm., Chicago, Ill., to Des Plaines. Accepts.

CHAMBERLAIN, Horace W., Chicago Sem., to Edmonds, Wn. Accepts.

DANFORTH, Jas. R., Philadelphia, to Walnut Hills Ch., Cincinnati, O. He will begin work June 6.

DAVIS, Chas. E. (F. B.), Hebron, N. H., to E. Randolph, Vt. Accepts.

EVANS, Kenneth E., Bangor Sem., to Danvers Center, Mass.

FISHER, Miles B., Yale Sem., to Adams, Mass., as assistant.

HARD, Jasper W., to Kirkland and Bellevue, Wn. Declines.

HENDRICK, Webster L., to remain a fourth year at Second Ch., Huntington, Mass. Accepts.

JANES, Henry, Oberlin, O., to Rantoul, Ill. Declines. Returns to Andrews, Ind., for the summer.

LANGE, John G., Leigh, Neb., to El Reno, Okl.

LUCE, Frank L., pastor's asst., Boylston Ch., Jamaica Plain, Mass., to Union Ch., Taunton. Accepts.

McKINNON, Norman, accepts call to remain at Foxcroft and Dover, Me., where he has supplied for a year.

MARTIN, Moses M., formerly of Allegan, Mich., accepts call to Ovid.

MITCHELL, S. Lewis, recently of Jonesport, Me., to Eastport, where he has been supplying. Accepts.

PAGE, Wesley F., Yale Sem., to remain at Milton, Ct., where he has been supplying.

PETERSON, Mathias, W. Washington (State), to Swedish Ch., Bear Creek, Ida. Accepts.

PIERPONT, John, W. Cornwall, Ct., to Williamsburg, Mass.

POWELL, Chas. H., Oberlin Sem., to Sterling, Kan. Accepts.

PYLE, Hezekiah L. (U. B.), Yale Sem., to Olean, N. Y. Accepts.

ROGER, Geo., Lower Waterford, Vt., to Windham. Accepts.

SCHAEFFER, Grant L. (U. B.), Yale Sem., to supply at Oxford, Ct.

SPENCE, Wm. H., to New London and Fitchville, O., continuing study at Oberlin Sem.

THORP, Chas. N., asst. pastor, Rutland, Vt., accepts call to Oswego, N. Y., and will begin in the fall.

WHEELRIGHT, Joseph, S. Byfield, Mass., to Hebron, N. H., for a year from May 1. Accepted.

WHYTE, Geo. M., Lafayette, Wis., to Grass Lake, Mich.

Ordinations and Installations

BAYLIS, Chas. T., o. p. People's Ch., S. Chicago, May 23. Parts were taken by Rev. G. H. Bird, Prof. S. I. Curtiss, D. D., and Supt. J. C. Armstrong.

CHASE, C. Thurston, o. Tompkins Ave. Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y., May 26. Sermon, Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Henry Lewis and Drs. R. J. Kent, A. J. F. Behrends, H. M. Baird.

FORD, Edward T., o. and i. Pilgrim Ch., Harwichport, Mass., May 25. Sermon, Dr. W. H. Davis; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. I. Rackett, F. E. Ramsdell, H. S. Kimball, G. Y. Washburn, A. W. Archibald, D. D.

HUNT, Emerson L., o. and i. Ellsworth Falls, Me., May 25. Sermon, Rev. H. L. Griffin; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Archie Cullens, Chas. Whittier, J. S. Richards, C. H. Cutler, G. H. Heffion, C. S. McLearn.

KEMP, Geo. H., i. Rhinelander, Wis., May 13. Parts were taken by Rev. Messrs. C. C. Campbell, H. C. Todd, C. J. Jensen, Jere. Kimball, G. C. Haun, Alex. Chambers, W. A. Gerrie.

KING, Willett D., o. Moorland, Io., May 12.

PROVOST, Joseph, i. French Ch. (new), Torrington, Ct., May 26. Sermon, Rev. H. B. Roberts; other parts, Rev. Messrs. W. H. Moore, A. W. Gerrie, Henri Grandlienard, A. H. Norris.

SIMS, Thos., rec. p. Melrose, Mass., May 25. Parts were taken by Rev. Messrs. Dan'l March, D. D., R. A. Beard, D. D., G. A. Tewksbury, B. F. Leavitt, and the pastor.

YARROW, Sidney R., o. Sausalito, Cal., May 14.

Resignations

BING, N. Julius, Second Ch., Britt, Io.

BURT, Chas. W., Lakeview, Mich.

COWAN, J. Whitman, Oregon City, Ore.

DYAS, Joseph P., Salem, Io.

GORTON, Philo, Chapin, Io.

HILL, Chas. J., Second Ch., Stonington, Ct.

LINCOLN, Nehemiah, N. Carver, Mass.

NEWTON, Albert F., Rochester Ave. Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y., after a pastorate of over five years. Resignation will take effect Oct. 31.

SANDWELL, G. Henry, First Ch., New Britain, Ct.

Dismissions

HYDE, Albert M., Greenville, Mich., May 21.

JOHNSON, Jas. G., New England Ch., Chicago, May 24.

Churches Organized

ALPINE CENTER, Mich., 10 May, 26 members.

BOUNTIFUL, Utah, 16 May, nine members.

TORRINGTON, Ct., French, 26 May, 95 members.

Supplies for the Summer

ALLIANCE, O., John W. Thomas, Bangor Seminary.

BANGOR, WEST, Me., John R. Boardman, Bangor Seminary.

BELFAST, NORTH, Me., Harry O. Worthley, Bangor Seminary.

CORTLAND, N. Y., East Side Mission, John P. Deane, Yale Seminary.

GRANBY, Vt., Chauncey J. Hawkins, Yale Seminary.

HARFORD, N. Y., Harold L. Hopkins, Yale Seminary.

MUNNSVILLE, N. Y., Frank B. McAllister, Yale Seminary.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., under City Missionary Society, Burdette B. Brown, Yale Seminary.

NORFOLK, Ct., Henry D. Williams of Hartford.

OUTER LONG ISLAND, Me., Geo. A. French, Bangor Seminary.

STOCKVILLE, Neb., Fred'k C. MacClave, Yale Seminary.

Miscellaneous

BRIER, John W., has been engaged by the ch. in Antioch, Cal., to preach alternate Sundays, instead of every week, as formerly.

DEMOTT, Jacob L., Phillips, Me., has been compelled to give up his pulpit duties on account of illness, and has now gone to Franklin, Mass., to recuperate.

PETERSON, Carl O., a graduate of Chicago Sem., has taken charge of the Swedish Ch. in Brattleboro, Vt., which hopes, with the help of the H. M. S., to retain his services for a year.

WISWELL, Thos. C., and wife were given a reception by Brooklyn Ch., Seattle, Wn., to which he has just accepted a call. Cordial greetings were extended by all the Cong'l pastors in the city and three of other denominations.

Have you Smoked too Much?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It will relieve the depression caused thereby; quiet the nerves and induce refreshing sleep.

4 These competitions will be conducted monthly during 1897.

First Prizes, each of $100 Cash	$ 400
20 Second Prizes, each of $100 Pierce Special Bicycles	2,000
40 Third Prizes, each of $25 Gold Watches	1,000
Cash and Prizes given each month	$3,400 12
Total given during 12 months 1897	$40,800

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM. Competitors to save as many "Sunlight" Soap Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating competitor's full name and address and the number of coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with Number of the District competitor lives in. The districts are as follows:

	NAME OF DISTRICT.
1	New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, and New Jersey.
2	New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3	Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4	The New England States

SEND THIS TOP PORTION

"SUNLIGHT" SOAP
WHY DOES A WOMAN LOOK OLD

$3,400.00 GIVEN AWAY EACH MONTH IN CASH. BICYCLES AND WATCHES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS

The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First-class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

LEVER BROS., LTD., NEW YORK.

RULES. 1. Every month during 1897, in each of the four districts, prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.00.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Bros., Ltd., as final.

Laugh at the Sun Drink HIRES Rootbeer
Keep Cool-Drink HIRES Rootbeer
Keep Well-Drink HIRES Rootbeer.
Quenches your thirst HIRES Rootbeer.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F 1

Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.

Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.

L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.

General Agent for the New England States.

BLANCARD'S

PILLS AND SYRUP OF Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE, for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.

None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.

E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 Days Treatment Free by mail.

Drs. Green & Sons, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.

Turkey and Turkish Problems.

Our April Handbook is now ready, and in view of the deepening war clouds in the East it is especially timely. Entitled Turkey and Turkish Problems, it is a reprint of the article by Rev. Edwin Hallock Byington in our issue of March 18. It was widely commented upon by the newspapers of the country, and in its present cheap and convenient form can be easily circulated.

☞ 100 Copies, $1.25, postpaid. ☜

4 cents each; 50 copies, 75 cents; 25 copies, 50 cents.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

The bright ones in life's ranks use —

SAPOLIO

cleans • scours • polishes •

Whether you write, or send, or ask for it, insist on getting — SAPOLIO : The dealer, who changes your order, insults you.

The housewife who thoughtfully packs for a stay
At seashore or mountains, will part fill a tray
With Ivory Soap; for 'tis best,
as she knows
For her laundress to use on the light summer clothes.

Copyright 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

For Good Health

USE

POND'S EXTRACT

It Relieves all Pain.
Controls all Hemorrhages.
Subdues all Inflammations.

The genuine is put up in bottles only, enclosed in buff wrappers, on which is printed our landscape trademark.

AVOID SUBSTITUTES

Weak. Watery. Worthless.

Note our name on every label and wrapper.

Pond's Extract Co., New York and London.

"A Perfect Type of the Highest Order of Excellence in Manufacture."

Walter Baker & Co.'s

Breakfast

Cocoa

Absolutely Pure.
Delicious.
Nutritious.

Costs Less Than One Cent a Cup.

Be sure that you get the genuine article, made at DORCHESTER, MASS., by

WALTER BAKER & CO. Ltd.

Established 1780.

Volume LXXXII Number 23

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 10 June 1897

THE CHILDREN'S DAY

HOW beautiful this summer's day,
When June repeats the runes of May!

By silver slant of falling showers,
By fragrant breath of blooming flowers,

By velvet slopes of verdant sod,
Where time slips past with feet unshod,

By ripple of the lilting brook,
By nests in many a cunning nook,

By stars that let heaven's glory through
The sky above our dusk and dew—

By wayside stone, by vale and hill,
The loveliness is round us still.

But fairer than earth's fairest flowers
Are these dear little ones of ours,

Who fill our homes with voices sweet,
Who rush our wearier selves to greet,

And in their tender love and thought
For older hearts are heaven-taught.

Sweet is their faith that upward turns,
And toward the blessed Saviour yearns.

We listen, and we hear Him say
Again, as in that elder day,

"Except you come as these to Me,
You cannot my disciples be!"

Ah! Lord, as children we would meet
Today about thy piercèd feet,

Today would with the children give
Our service unto Thee, and live

Henceforth, through all the coming days,
Devoted to thy work and praise.

Written for The Congregationalist by
MRS. M. E. SANGSTER

"My church has adopted 'IN EXCELSIS.' I am very glad. It seems to me the best book yet."

Rev. John E. Tuttle, D.D.,
Pastor Union Church,
Worcester, Mass.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Shall We Continue in Sin?

By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D.

12mo, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

A vital question for Believers answered in the Word of God.

Sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price by
THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO.,
Publishers,
5 East 16th Street, New York.

SACRED SONGS No. 1

Over 160,000 Copies Sold.
236 pieces. 100 are new and over 100 are choice selections from Gospel Hymns. An excellent collection for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc.
Issued in Round and Shaped Notes.
$25 per 100 by Express, not prepaid; 30c. each if sent by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.
Lakeside Building, Chicago.

KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA.

6 vols.

This important Life of Jesus now reduced to $1.80 per vol.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & CO.

THEOLOGICAL.

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD.

HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
HARTFORD, CT.

64th Year Opens Oct. 6, 1897.

Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates. Full information on application to Prof. E. K. Mitchell.

OHIO, OBERLIN.

OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
63d year opens Sept. 22. With special advantages from the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.

COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

VERMONT

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.

ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, M. A.,
Principal.

Educational

MASSACHUSETTS

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRIDGEWATER.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
Bridgewater, Mass. Regular and special courses for the preparation of teachers. Entrance examinations June 24, 25, Sept. 8, 9. For circulars address
ALBERT G. BOYDEN, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
Entrance examinations June 24 and 25, and Sept. 7 and 8, 1897. For circulars address
Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD.

BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and Scientific course of study, also Preparatory and Optional. Year begins Sept. 15, 1897.
Miss Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.

THE SAUVEUR SUMMER SCHOOL
of Languages, at Amherst College, Mass. 22d Session—July 5th to August 13th. For program, address Miss F. M. Henshaw, Amherst, Mass. For particulars and circulars of L. Sauveur's Works, address
DR. L. SAUVEUR, 4613 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph D.

MASSACHUSETTS, EASTHAMPTON.

WILLISTON SEMINARY.
Prepares boys for any college or scientific school. The most advanced methods. Library; physical, chemical, biological laboratories; gymnasium, etc. Founded 1841. Opens Sept. 9, 1897. JOSEPH H. SAWYER, M. A., Principal, Easthampton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, Worcester, Mass Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering and Chemistry. 176-page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 30th year. J. K. MARSHALL, Registrar.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.

WORCESTER ACADEMY.
Prepares boys for college or scientific school. Buildings of modern construction. New Science Hall, seven groups of laboratories. Manual training. Infirmary, Gymnasium. Oval cinder track. Year begins Sept. 8, '97. D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A. M., Principal. Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.

AMHERST COLLEGE.
Entrance Examinations. Examinations for admission to Amherst College will be held at the School Committee Building, Mason St., beginning at 9 o'clock A. M on Thursday, June 24, 1897, and continuing for two days. For further information address E. L. WOOD, Registrar, Amherst, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.

ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies, Andover, Mass. Begins its 69th year Sept. 16, 1897, offering enlarged opportunities; three Seminary Courses of Studies and a College fitting Course. Has a Clark telescope, laboratory, gymnasium, art studios, library, reading and music rooms, etc.; superior accommodations in new and improved buildings, with electric lights, hot water-heating, etc; over 20 acres of lawns and groves. Terms $400 per year. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal. For catalogue, W. F. DRAPER.

MASSACHUSETTS, WEST BRIDGEWATER.

Howard Seminary A Home School for Girls.

LIMITED to fifty. Certificate admits to colleges. Offers thorough academic training with wide choice in electives (including Music, Art, and Languages). Advantages for Home Culture. Library. Gymnasium and Laboratory. Single rooms may be had. Careful attention paid to individual needs Location quiet, healthful, accessible. For circulars address

HOWARD SEMINARY.
Mr. and Mrs. R. W. GIFFORD, Principals.
West Bridgewater, Plymouth Co., Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.

WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.

Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.

BIBLE NORMAL COLLEGE.
A prominent pastor says: "There is no single need of the church today so great as that which the Bible Normal College (formerly School for Christian Workers), Springfield, Mass., is designed and able to meet." Three distinct courses in each of the departments, Bible-school and Missionary. New courses in New Testament Greek and Educational Psychology and Pedagogy. Ten specialists in charge. New Ladies' Hall. Fifty college graduates and as many more of practical experience should enter Sept. 8. Send for catalog to the Sec'y, J L. DIXON.

Educational

MASSACHUSETTS

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.

No ambitious girl need go abroad for study in music—not even "to be finished." The offers advantages in the study of music, musical composition, and elocution, that are not surpassed in any musical center of the old world.

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mangr., Boston, Mass.

RHODE ISLAND

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.
Founded 1802. Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Cottages. Electric light. Elegant new dining hall. Endowed. Twelve courses. September 13. Illustrated catalogue. F. D BLAKESLEE, D. D, Prin., East Greenwich, R. I.

CONNECTICUT

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.

THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year opens Sept. 15, 1897.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.

Mrs. Mead's School for Girls and Young Ladies,
"Hillside," Norwalk, Conn.

Thorough preparatory work. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Exceptional opportunities for study in literature. Fine library. Laboratory. Pleasant and healthful situation.
MRS. M. E. MEAD, Principal.

NEW YORK

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.

COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address
C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, BINGHAMTON.

THE LADY JANE GREY SCHOOL.
Mrs. Hyde and Daughters' Home School for Girls. Special and regular courses. Preparation for College and European travel. Address
Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE, Binghamton, N. Y.

NEW YORK, BUFFALO.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book-keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic, Short hand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

NEW JERSEY

NEW JERSEY, MONTCLAIR.

Montclair Military Academy,
Montclair, N. J.

We keep our classes small for the sake of personal attention. No pupil can, as in large schools, get through a recitation with only one question.

We gladly send our catalogue, but much prefer that parents should visit the school.

J. G. MACVICAR, Head Master.
Lieut. Blanton C. Welsh, West Point, '82, Com'd't.

ILLINOIS

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.

CHICAGO COLLEGE OF LAW
LAW DEPARTMENT LAKE FOREST UNIVERSITY.
Hon. T. A. Moran, LL. D., Dean. Session each week day evening. For information address Elmer E. Barrett, LL. B., Sec'y, 100 Washington Street, Chicago.

Oh Rose-leaf ! flushing when the South
Doth woo thee with a warm caress,
Thy dainty hues enchant me less
Than Hebe's rosebud cheek and mouth;

For nothing ever can repair
Thy tender blushes when they fade;
But Hebe, happy little maid !
Hath Ivory Soap to keep her fair.

Copyright 1896, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cin'ti.

Any person wishing a copy of this picture may mail to us 10 Ivory Soap Wrappers, on receipt f which, we will send a copy (without printing) on enamel plate paper, 14 x 17 inches, a uitable size for framing. THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI, O.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 10 June 1897 Number 23

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
  Paragraphs 815
  Congregational Churchmanship 816
  The Home Missionary Society's Anniversary 817
  Are There Too Many Ministers 817
  The Church's World-wide Field 817
  Current History 818
  In Brief 819
STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:
  New York 820
CONTRIBUTIONS:
  The Children's Day—cover poem. Mrs. M. E. Sangster 813
  What Is the Alternative? Rev. George A. Gordon, D. D. 821
  Method in Giving. Rev. Henry H. Kelsey 822
  Tendencies of Thought Among Theological Students Charles S. Macfarland 823
THE HOME:
  Realization—a selected poem 826
  Paragraphs 826
  Teaching as a Makeshift. John Walcott 826
  Conveniences Multiplied. Lily Rice Foxcroft 827
  Out of the Mouth of Infants—a selected poem 827
  Have Women No Imagination 828
  Home-Made Proverbs. Helen A. Hawley 828
  Hygienic Hints 828
  Closet and Altar 828
  Mothers in Council 829
  Tomorrow and Today—a selected poem 829
  The Rarest Stamp in Existence—a selection 829
  Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 830
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for June 20 831
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for June 20-26 832
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 832
LITERATURE 833
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:
  The Southern Minnesota Circuit 838
  After Many Days 839
  Four Decades at Immanuel Church 839
MISCELLANEOUS:
  Orphans in Marsovan. Rev. Charles C. Tracy 820
  The Completed Year at Hartford 824
  In and Around Chicago 825
  A Notable Philosophical Conclave 825
  In and Around Boston 835
  The Home Missionary Society 836
  Wise and Witty Sayings at Saratoga 838
  Notices 838
  Education 842
  Marriages and Deaths 843
  Commencement Dates 844
  The Business Outlook 845
  Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 846
  Echoes of the Shaw Memorial Orations 847

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 845.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 16, National.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

THAT is a touching picture which President Tracy of Anatolia College paints on page 820 of the way in which the orphan Armenian children are responding to the tender care bestowed upon them, and thereby gradually regaining the spirit of hope and gleefulness which should characterize childhood the world over. Their little heads have been almost stunned and their little hearts nearly broken by the awful scenes which they have witnessed. How good it is that we in this country may have a part in brightening their future and in educating them to be useful in the world. We have also received from Rev. R. M. Cole of Bitlis, where over a hundred orphans are being housed and trained, a letter speaking of the appreciativeness of those whom he calls "the lambs of a terribly decimated flock." He says that as he goes about among them they rush up and kiss his hands from sheer gratitude. The missionaries at Mardin, another point at which the Congregationalist Relief Fund is doing its beneficent work, express through Rev. A. N. Andrus their gratitude to those who have furnished them with means of relief, while similar words come from Rev. G. C. Raynolds at Van. Welcome as this relief is the problem of caring for these children when funds now in hand are exhausted is beginning to weigh upon our missionaries.

What a happy undertaking it would be if only for once our Congregational churches could all agree to do one thing at the same time. We are thinking of Children's Day, so near at hand, and which has grown in favor these last twenty-five years. It was only twenty-one years ago, however, that the National Council asked all the churches and Sunday schools to make, on the second Sunday in June, a special offering to the missionary work of our Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society. Quite a number fell into line at once. More than ever are planning not only to celebrate the day, but to give their offerings in this direction next Sunday, and yet there are more than half that have not heard the suggestion, or, if they have heard it, have not heeded it. What a rattling of coin it would make if every Congregational organization should do something for this work; what an impulse it would give to this pioneer missionary work; what courage to those enduring the privations of the frontier; and what advancement to our whole denominational work! It is not too late to join the ranks yet. If only for once we could all do one thing at the same time.

Recently the Suffolk North Association voted to Rev. Frank Hyatt Smith a letter of dismission and recommendation to any presbytery of the Presbyterian Church. Warm remonstrances followed against such action from various quarters. A special meeting of the association was called for last Monday, which voted unanimously the following statement, the first sentence of which constituted the certificate granted to Mr. Smith at the former meeting:

> This is to certify that Rev. Frank Hyatt Smith, late pastor of the North Avenue Church in Cambridge, Mass., is a member in good standing of Suffolk North Ministerial Association, and at his request is dismissed herefrom and commended with brotherly love to any presbytery of the Presbyterian Church to which he may present this letter. Since Mr. Smith joined this association he has been legally adjudged insane. As the association cannot well obtain material for an intelligent judgment upon his mental qualifications for the ministry at this time, it refrains from all expression of opinion.

The last part of this certificate would seem to furnish ample reason for not voting the first part. If the case under consideration were not so serious, we should be disposed to put this document into our column of Risibles, as the only place in which it could explain itself.

To know what theological students are most interested in reading is to be able to prophesy what will be the preaching of immediately coming years. It is significant that this optional reading in Congregational seminaries, so far as indicated by Mr. Macfarland's article on page 823, is almost entirely confined to writers of the last half of the present century. It is mainly concerned, also, with one type of thinkers. It is philosophical rather than theological. It would be interesting to compare the data here furnished with similar testimonies gathered in Episcopal and Roman Catholic seminaries. Probably church history and the writings of the fathers would there be found to have the leading place. Perhaps it would be well if each class of schools included more of what engages attention in the other, and if biographies like those of McCheyne and Finney were more generally read.

What greater satisfaction comes to a father than that felt at the moment when he sees a son graduating from a theological school equipped and eager for the work of the Christian ministry? Our eyes rested the other day on a man who was passing through that experience. At fifteen his boy had said to him, "Father, I want to be a minister." "Well, my son," was the reply, "if that is your wish, though I see no means with which to put you through college and seminary, go ahead and I think the way will open." The lad did so, strained every nerve, met with the assistance which every boy of pluck and ability, bent on noble things, is likely to receive and today is possessor of both the collegiate and the seminary diplomas. The father, a plain, everyday man, but warm with enthusiasm in Christian service, and with an enviable record himself as a winner of souls, rejoices hardly less than the young man in obstacles overcome and prizes won. And neither of them is much disturbed by the talk about a superabundance of laborers and a scarcity of fields.

These days of strain for the missionary societies are brightened now and then by beautiful instances of self-sacrifice, not only on the part of the workers in the field but of the givers at home. Not long ago a young minister brought to Secretary Daniels of the American Board a ring belonging to his wife, which was an inheritance from a sainted mother. His wife had urged that it be given to the Board, and he reluctantly had consented. The secretary who received the precious offering and his colleagues could not refrain, as they went about, from mentioning it and what it represented. Two or three persons who casually heard the story were moved to purchase the ring and return it to the giver. So the other day Secretary Daniels had the joy of sending the ring back to this modest little woman in a New England parsonage, together with a receipt for $100 paid on account of the ring into the treasury of the American Board. The incident points two lessons—first, that there are still among us men and women who give until it hurts, and, second, that what some people call a chain of circumstances, but what we prefer to designate as the providence of God, continues to bring to pass results favorable to his children which no human wisdom could foresee.

There are some manifest disadvantages in having things settled, if they happen to be settled wrong. For example, the question has just come before the "holy office" of the Roman Catholic Church whether the passage in 1 John 5: 7—"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one"—might safely be expunged as a gloss or at any rate be considered as of doubtful authenticity. The answer was that it may not. The facts of the case are that it is not found in any manuscript of the New Testament written before the age of printing, nor in any ancient version (not even in the Vulgate as completed by Jerome), nor in the quotations of any father of the church, although it would have been of the greatest service to the champions of the faith during the long controversy over the person and nature of Christ. That body which claims to be infallible stands committed, therefore, to an evident bit of false witness in support of a doctrine which is common to the whole church, and to an obscurantism which makes intelligent Biblical criticism impossible.

One of the important steps taken by the Presbyterian General Assembly was the adoption of the following resolution:

> That the board of home missions be directed to so reorganize its methods of administration that the executive work shall be placed in charge of one secretary, with whatever assistants may be necessary, and that he be accountable to the board for its faithful and efficient management.

The special committee appointed on this matter said in its report: "In the interests both of economy and efficiency there should be a careful reorganization of the office. We believe that the division of responsibility between two or more secretaries is undesirable." This indicates a change in the methods of administration of missionary societies which, we believe, will in due time be generally adopted. But it will involve extensive and difficult readjustments and its working in the Presbyterian Church will be watched by other denominations with much interest.

The Southern Presbyterian Church is a very conservative body. It has for a generation refused all overtures looking toward union with the Northern church, because of opposition to the political deliverances of which it held that church to be guilty. It has this year, as we have previously noted, taken steps to set up a new denomition, composed of its members of African blood. It has put the seal of its disapproval upon the tendency of modern women to push themselves to the front in church affairs by recalling and reiterating a deliverance of the General Assembly of 1832, as follows: "Meetings of pious women by themselves for conversation and prayer, whenever they can conveniently be held, we entirely approve. But let not the inspired prohibitions of the great apostle of the Gentiles, as found in his epistles to the Corinthians and to Timothy, be violated. To teach and exhort or to lead in prayer in public and promiscuous assemblies is clearly forbidden in the holy oracles." What a fine moldy flavor of antiquity breathes in the phraseology of this bit of resurrected opinion! We wonder whether infant classes are considered "public and promiscuous assemblies" in the Southern Presbyterian churches, or whether the Southern Presbyterian men teach the infant classes!

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHMANSHIP

This is the title of a remarkable address before the Congregational Union of England and Wales delivered last month by its chairman, Dr. C. A. Berry of Wolverhampton. On such an occasion in England noteworthy utterances are always looked for from the presiding officer, and expectation is usually rewarded. It is much to be desired that a like custom should give opportunity to make memorable the opening of our National Council meetings. It was, indeed, inaugurated at the last council, in Syracuse, two years ago. Dr. Berry's address is an important message to Congregationalists on this side of the ocean. Our English brethren, facing a church supported by the state and claiming exclusive grace and authority as well as exclusive rights, have always been compelled to spend much of their strength in declaring what they do not believe. The names they bear are negations. They are Dissenters and Nonconformists. Dr. Berry's address struck a positive keynote which found emphatic response. He showed that the strength of the churches lies in affirmations rather than in denials. Congregationalists in England have, perhaps almost of necessity, been too conscious of the presence of a state church whose power and arrogance they have felt compelled to resist. The outward pressure has kept them from internal disagreements such as have disturbed us more than them. But it is no less true for us than for them that we gain vigor and usefulness by dwelling on the principles we hold in common, rather than by giving prominence to the destroying of the errors of others.

Our Congregationalism is not merely the polity which distinguishes us from denominations which give authority to priests and bishops and ecclesiastical courts. Others who are not of us maintain our form of government, and from still others whom we would gladly fellowship we are distinguished by our peculiar emphasis and application of principles which we hold in common with them.

Why are we Congregationalists? Because we hold that wherever men are gathered together with Christ in the midst of them there is a true church of Christ; that that single company is sufficient in itself, possessing all the privileges and functions of a church; that it can be formed only of disciples of Christ; that the church does not make men disciples by receiving them into membership, but that it receives them because they are disciples; that Christians associated together receive and confer greater benefits than are possible when they are living apart from one another; and therefore that the growth of Christ's kingdom is promoted, not only by maintaining local churches, but through churches coming into organic fellowship with one another.

These principles Dr. Berry elaborates with much force and eloquence. Then he urges that Congregational churches must make the presence of Christ in the heart of each and in the midst of all their supreme consciousness. They are not societies made by men, but institutions created by the Holy Spirit. They stand apart from the world. This is churchmanship. But they stand apart that they may serve the world. Their life consists in being conscious that they are appointed by Christ to give the gospel to the world; and they recognize that other churches, even those which refuse to them fraternal recognition, are also instruments of the same Lord, to the same end. This is Congregational churchmanship. To make each member realize and enjoy his privileges, to move him to accept his responsibilities as a churchman, is to add to the power of Congregational churches and to exalt the dignity of the whole Christian Church. We realize this far too little. The Congregational idea is far less vital than the church idea. Congregationalists are not only companies of Christians carrying on together work which they have undertaken in common. They are spiritual communities directly related to an unseen Lord, and so sharing one another's experiences that each community becomes one body living and growing under the constant inspiration of their one Lord. "Many of our members," said Dr. Berry, "have not yet learned the alphabet of our church principles, or have learned it only far enough to misspell the watchwords of our faith." "Many others, while adequately grounded in knowledge, and while loyal and firm in their adherence to our doctrine, are singularly and lamentably deficient in active spiritual association with the church." "Our people must be instructed in the origin, the growth, the present significance of our spiritual church principles. But more than that, and perhaps even more urgently than that, they must be exhorted to the personal culture and the personal service of an active church membership."

It is much to have so high an ideal set clearly before us. It is inspiring to see distinctly drawn the picture of a Congregational church held by each member to be the highest visible manifestation of our risen Redeemer, the body which each member holds himself responsible to make perfect, without spot or blemish, and to love with all his heart. How to attain this ideal is the question which Dr. Berry endeavors to answer, but we fear with only a measure of success. He believes it may be realized through a church meeting which he describes. We recognize in it the prayer meeting, a regular service in most American Congregational churches, but which, we believe, is much less common in England. If all our churches could have such meetings as Dr. Berry sketches, we might indeed realize the ideal to which he aspires. "Effective church fellowship," he says, "is the blended life of souls who have given themselves to each other in Christ, and who, in selective association, can exchange the restraints of more public relation for the cordiality and communicativeness of a family circle." "Gladdened with song and subdued by prayer, compacted together in love and spiritualized by the presence of the Master, such meetings would set our churches on high, would fill and thrill them with the peace and power of God." But the most of our church prayer meetings are not of this kind, and even if they approached it more nearly than they do, so long as only about fifteen per cent. of church members, on the average, attend them, as is said to be the case, they would still leave the large majority of the church outside its inner circle of life. The ideal church prayer meeting is as much an effect as a cause. If Dr. Berry can tell us how to secure the diffusion of the spirit which makes such meetings spontaneous, we shall have discovered the secret of a noble Congregational churchmanship. Is not that, after all, to be found in the close relation of individual lives with Christ, bringing his disciples into communion with one another in the experience which is more precious and wonderful than any other? Those who come together with such glow of love for him that they cannot keep from speaking of it can never fail to realize the divine idea of the church, and this is the aim of Congregationalism.

THE HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S ANNIVERSARY

The purpose of this meeting is to transact the society's business and so to place the year's record of its work before the churches as to quicken their interest and increase their gifts. In both respects the meeting at Saratoga last week came near being a failure. Except for the re-election of the officers whose terms had expired, which is simply the adoption of the report of the nominating committee, practically nothing was accomplished in the time set apart on the program for business. Fortunately, the society decided to take an hour which had been allotted to other matters in which to face the gravest financial crisis it has met for many years. If no definite step was taken to meet that crisis at least those present were brought to realize the gravity of the situation.

The program did not fail through lack of able speakers or interesting and pertinent themes. The essential thing lacking was an audience. It was smaller than at any anniversary for twenty years. It included few new faces. Scarcely a young business man was to be seen. Young pastors were rare. The votes cast for officers showed considerably less than 100 delegates present. The best speakers with the most inspiring themes find it hard to stir enthusiasm in those to whom the facts they rehearse are a twice-told tale, and who are present that they may help to arouse interest in the company which has not put in an appearance.

The society wisely voted to take Thursday forenoon next year for open discussion of its business problems. We predict that this will of itself attract a larger audience, and we trust that it will bring out wise counsels. It is due to the executive committee and the officers, especially in these days when their burdens are unusually heavy, that they should have at their service whatever wisdom the members of the society can offer.

The meeting by a decided majority expressed its conviction that the anniversaries of our benevolent societies should be held in one week in the same place. We believe that the time has fully come for this change. Our Baptist brethren, in their recent anniversary at Pittsburg, have put before us an object lesson which we shall do well to consider. The burden of time and expense laid on pastors and laymen to attend three meetings yearly of our three largest societies is greater than they can bear. The Christian Endeavor and other anniversaries absorb the attention of the young people. A succession of meetings presenting in a single week our great national and world-wide missionary work may command attendance that shall worthily represent the churches. Three annual meetings in different places cannot do this. It is not necessary to wait for the slow action of the committee of the triennial National Council appointed to report on this matter. The societies themselves, for their own interest, should give it prompt attention and at least express their judgment. We hope the example of the Home Missionary Society will be followed by the other societies this year.

Meanwhile, the time is at hand when this society will owe hundreds of missionaries the promised salaries without which they can hardly live, and which it will be unable to pay unless the receipts are largely increased over those of the corresponding months of last year. The one fact which must be pressed home on all Congregationalists is that every dollar given during the next six months to this society relieves, by just so much, the poverty of those missionaries who are doing the work which the churches believe is first in importance for the honor and prosperity of our country and the salvation from sin of multitudes of its people.

ARE THERE TOO MANY MINISTERS

Secular papers, such as the New York Evening Post and the Springfield Republican, have lately answered this question emphatically in the affirmative. Religious papers, such as the Christian Intelligencer and the Herald and Presbyter, while admitting that each church with a vacant pulpit has scores of applicants, and that many ministers are out of employment, insist that there are fields enough for men of the right sort.

A careful examination of our Year-Book giving the figures for 1895 furnishes a basis for judgment as to the supply of Congregational ministers. There were then 5,482 churches and 5,347 ministers. If every minister were employed there would still be 135 churches unsupplied. But the church of forty members which can provide sufficient support for a minister is an exception. Of the 5,482 churches 2,148 have less than forty resident members each. A large number have less than ten. Pres. J. K. McLean of Pacific Theological Seminary, whose long residence in California has made him the best authority on the subject, is quoted as saying that "there are 100 churches too many in this State, and if they should die off it would be the best thing for the kingdom of God." The statement is probably meant to include churches of all denominations. Several western States are in much the same condition in this respect as California. Many of these churches are practically dead. Taking out 300—a very moderate allowance—as having no services and little more than a name, perhaps the average membership of those remaining would be not less than twenty-five. To provide salaried ministers for them two or more churches must be yoked together, or one must be yoked with a larger one. To a considerable extent this is done. Nine hundred ministers ought to be amply sufficient to man them, and half of their support, at least, must come from home missionary funds. To provide one minister for each of the 3,334 churches having forty or more members, and 900 ministers for the 2,148 churches with a membership ranging from one to thirty-nine, we need 4,234 ministers.

The Year-Book for 1895 presents a list of 5,347 ministers. If one of every five be taken out to allow for foreign missionaries, those engaged in other business than preaching and those incapacitated by illness and age, there will still be left 4,278 ministers available for 4,234 pastorates. Several hundreds of these are always vacant and searching for pastors, and of course there must always be several hundreds of ministers looking for places. In 1895 there were actually in pastoral work 3,588 ministers.

The supply of ministers is increasing faster than the number of churches. During the five years preceding 1896 the net gain in churches was 665 and the net gain in ministers was 728. The number is also increasing of ministers in other denominations pressing to secure Congregational pulpits. From these ranks it is estimated that about one-third of our annual increase comes, and as many more ministers stand ready to respond to calls. From these facts and figures it seems evident that while there is abundant opportunity for ministers to preach the gospel, as Paul did, at their own charges, there are already ordained men enough to occupy all Congregational pulpits which can afford to give them reasonable support, while more new ministers than churches are being added every year. No doubt there are imperative calls to selected young men to enter the ministry. But so far as Congregationalists are concerned no general call needs to be issued to fill up depleted ranks.

THE CHURCH'S WORLD-WIDE FIELD

The Christian religion often has been called a world-religion, the intent being to indicate its adaptability for universal acceptance. Often this name has been given it by enthusiastic adherents in the heat of public speech or the glow of composition, and there have been some to question its appropriateness. There are not lacking those who insist that Christianity is not meant for all races, that the other religions which many nations have are the best for them, and that Christian missions are needless and foolish.

The definiteness and positiveness of our Lord's command to go into all the world and preach his gospel settles the question, of course, for all who accept his authority. This of itself is enough both to make plain our duty and also to show what we are to believe as to the universality of its fitness and claim to be accepted. But it is well worth while to compare it with the principal religions which in a sense are its rivals. Is any one of them adapted to become generally prevalent? One is Confucianism, of which most of the multitudinous Chinese are adherents. Another is Buddhism, which, with its kindred forms of faith, is professed in India. Another is Mohammedanism, which also has its stronghold in the mind and life of western Asia and northern Africa. There are others, but there is no other which can be compared in importance with these. If there is to be a world-religion other than Christianity, it must be one of these.

But no one of them is adapted to become a world-religion. No one of them appeals with the least hope of success to the great active, aggressive, colonizing, conquering nations, which all are Christian or in sympathy with Christianity rather than with anything else. No one of them has any earnest purpose of winning the world to itself. But Christianity is doing this very thing, slowly, to be sure, but steadily. It already has proved its fitness for all climes, all times and all races.

The world is its field, too, in the sense that it has work for every one and bids him do it. Its duties begin with one's own self and they extend themselves first to the home and the community. Every sort of taste, every type of intellect, every degree of culture, every form of worthy usefulness finds its value and its place in helping on the progress of Christ's kingdom. Christians keep their aim to win the world to Christ distinctly and prominently in view. In spite of their frequent remissness they mean business. Their grand, comprehensive purpose is an inspiration. Not to cherish it is to refuse to follow Jesus himself, for he is the source of it.

CURRENT HISTORY

The Philadelphia Commercial Congress

The International Commercial Congress, called to celebrate the opening of the Commercial Museum, whose purpose is to show what American manufacturers are doing for the sake of attracting foreign customers, was opened with speeches by President McKinley and the representatives of several of the South and Central American republics. The President spoke in a cordial spirit of our desire for closer trade relations with other nations, but diplomatically avoided discussion of the method by which they were to be brought about. On the other hand, more than one of the representatives of South American countries pointed out that the proposed tariff taxes on raw materials—wool and hides especially—were a direct restriction on and discouragement of trade. The dilemma of the tariff was never better presented. In taxing the hides of Argentine and Uruguay, for example, we are at once making it more difficult for our manufacturers of leather to enter the foreign market and reducing, in so far as the rate enacted proves restrictive, the power of the South American consumer to purchase the wares we have to sell. We must always depend upon a tariff for revenue, but such nice adjustments and risks of derangement in trade relations call loudly for an impartial and expert handling of the subject by a commission outside of but responsible to Congress. One of the significant utterances of this congress was a declaration by ex-Secretary of State Olney in favor of American ships.

The Mohonk Conference

The annual International Arbitration Conference met at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., as usual, under the presidency of ex-Senator Edmunds. The tone of addresses was hopeful and aggressive, in view of the growth of favorable public opinion. The declaration of principles, formulated by a committee of which Mr. S. B. Capen was chairman, and adopted by the conference, is as follows:

> The civilized world may well rejoice at the unprecedented progress of the cause of international arbitration during the past year. We deplore the temporary check to the cause by the failure of the Senate to ratify the proposed treaty with England, but we recall the majority of the Senate in its favor, large, though less than the necessary two-thirds, and we believe that while the small minority honestly opposed it their reasons were not such as to command permanent support. The overwhelming majority of the country should only be stimulated by this temporary failure to more zealous activity, urging our Executive to renew the treaty, with such modifications, if any, as may be approved in the light of the recent study of the subject by the Senate. Our country should also make a similar treaty with France, Germany, Austria, Belgium and Switzerland. The thanks of this conference are tendered to ex-President Cleveland, ex-Secretary Olney and to Sir Julian Pauncefote for their eminent services to the cause of international arbitration, and to President McKinley and Secretary Sherman for their hearty support of the same great cause.

This points toward renewed effort with still wider aims in view than even the treaty with England included. In contrast with these hopeful and pacific utterances have been the words of Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt at the Naval War College in Newport, urging the necessity of immediate and large increase of the navy, and especially in the number of battleships. Mr. Roosevelt evidently believes that the necessary prerequisite of arbitration is the ownership of a club.

The Currency Question

Secretary Gage has repeated and emphasized his declaration that the consideration of the currency question would follow upon the enactment of a tariff bill, and his words have helped toward the improvement of the business situation already manifest in some quarters. His statement that currency paid into the treasury in exchange for gold ought not to be paid out except for gold will commend itself as an abstract proposition to the believers in a gold basis, but requires for its practical carrying out an ample government revenue. The treasury officials express confidence in their ability to carry a gold reserve of $140,000,000 through the summer months, an amount which ought to preclude all thought of panic in view of gold exports. But whether the reserve be small or great the Government ought not to be storing gold in good times to lose it in times of distrust at the will of exporters and speculators. Mr. Preston, the director of the mint, reckons that the production of gold in this country for the current year will be $60,000,000, or a gain of $7,000,000 over 1896.

The Tariff

The leaders of the Republican party in the Senate continue to hold their followers in check and the debate moves on with reasonable speed. It is announced that the beer tax is to be abandoned. Let the people take notice that this is done under the selfish political pressure of a great business interest. Everybody agrees that the increased tax on beer is in many ways an ideal tax, easily and cheaply collected, large in aggregate amount, and imposed upon what can by no stretch of terms be called a necessity. No one pays a cent of it unless he chooses. Yet the leaders of opinion are afraid to enact it for fear of its effect upon their political fortunes in several of the States. The sugar schedule, when reached, will give occasion for sharp debate, and the wool rates are likely to be somewhat lowered. Except that the Senate, owing to the political situation, is really dictator, the changes of the bill, which has yet to pass the House and a conference committee, would hardly be worth following, but the desire of business men for stability and the passage, therefore, of any kind of a bill, keeps their attention fixed upon the slow progress of the debate.

Legal Decisions

The case against Mr. Searles has followed the precedent of the Havemeyer trial, an acquittal being ordered by Judge Bradley, on the ground that a simple investigation as to whether the sugar trust had contributed to a campaign fund would be an unwarranted search into private affairs of the company and plainly beyond the power of the Senate. Under these circumstances, said the judge, it must be held that the questions asked were not pertinent, and if construed to be pertinent that they were an unwarranted prying into the private affairs of the company, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate. The judge's distinction is that Chapman refused to answer questions relating to the conduct of senators, but Searles to the private affairs of outsiders. The decision, if allowed to stand, greatly curtails the scope of Congressional investigations. The Supreme Court of Ohio has followed the precedent of that of Illinois in declaring the Torrens system of recording titles, which simplified and insured the titles to land after the pattern of a successful Australian law, unconstitutional. The Orphans' Court in Philadelphia puts another difficulty in the way of graded succession taxes by its decision that the exemption of any amount is unconstitutional, on the ground that it is in conflict with the provision that all taxation upon the same classes of subjects shall be uniform.

The Week's Casualties

The law of recurrence finds an illustration in a fire in a show tent at Lynn, where on a small scale the fire, panic and loss of life of the Paris bazar fire were repeated. A party of young people on a tally ho coach were run into by a train on Long Island and five of them were killed. The inquiry exonerates the railroad and blames the driver of the coach, but it is noted that the grade crossing was a blind one with no full view of the track. Wide as the Atlantic is, some of the most terrible of its accidents have been those of collision. The Atlantic Transport line steamer Mississippi and the Hekla of the Thingvalla line met in the fog, but fortunately with no resulting break below the water line. The coolness of the officers averted a panic and the disabled steamers proceeded on their way. The Mississippi reached New York safely and the Hekla has been reported near the Scotch coast. A heavy storm did much damage in Nashua, N. H. The sewers were choked by the quantity of falling water and the basements of the houses and factories were flooded.

The Spanish Crisis

After summoning and consulting the Liberal leader, Sagasta, and Marshall Martinez Campos, the former governor general of Cuba, the queen regent of Spain has given the Canovas cabinet a new lease of life. So far as can be judged at this distance the recall of Captain General Weyler was the chief point under discussion and the turning point of decision. The Liberals pledged themselves to recall him and Martinez Campos advised it, but Spain is evidently not yet ready to confess that his policy of repression and terror has broken down. At least, however, by the obstruction of the Liberals and the temporary breakdown of the cabinet, the way has been opened for freer discussion in the Cortes, where there is once more an unmuzzled opposition party. The judgment of Martinez Campos must weigh in the long run with Spanish public opinion, and the nation is likely to turn to him at last if its pride and obstinacy are not influenced by outside interference. In the meantime the contest goes on in Cuba with dogged persistence but without well-defined results, and discussion in Washington waits upon events. General Weyler, by proclamation, has extended his policy of concentration which has been the cause of most of the suffering hitherto to the eastern end of the island, where his authority extends, however, only to the points in the actual possession of his garrisons.

European Politics

The interest of the European situation waits upon the dilatory negotiations at Constantinople. In the meantime Turkey is organizing and administrating Thessaly, as if sure of retaining possession. President Faure of France is to visit St. Petersburg, accompanied by M. Hanotaux, who has become one of the prominent figures of European diplomacy, and French public opinion hopes much from the visit for the prestige of France. The English inquiry into the Jameson raid has been brought to an end without the production of the telegrams which passed before and during the trouble. The reason, freely given, for the collapse of the inquiry at this point is that the missing telegrams would have implicated those high in authority. The English jubilee preparations continue. All the colonies are to take part except British Guiana, which has refused to make an appropriation on the ground that the colony is too poor. The lower house of the Austrian Diet has been summarily closed by the Emperor Francis Joseph. Turbulent scenes, growing out of race jealousy between the Germans and Czechs in Bohemia, and the success of the latter in forcing the adoption of the Czech language as the official language of the kingdom, threatened, in the words of the premier, Count Badeni, to undermine the foundations of parliamentary institutions.

NOTES

Vesuvius is once more in violent eruption, the flow of lava being greater than at any time since 1872.

Hawaii refuses to yield the points in dispute with Japan, and the Japanese minister threatens to break off diplomatic relations. Two more Japanese war ships have sailed for Honolulu.

It is difficult to get at the real truth in regard to the Indian outbreak in Montana. The cattlemen's side of the story is that the Indians killed a sheep herder and afterwards several soldiers. What their provocation was we may probably never learn. The outbreak seems to be under control and we may hope that it will be the last of all our Indian wars.

The uprising in eastern Brazil, under the lead of the fanatical preacher, Antonio Conselheiro, has been suppressed by the capture of the rebel stronghold, but not without a desperate battle, in which a government defeat was only prevented by the artillery.

The Postal Congress has concluded its work, and the members are enjoying ten days of travel and sight-seeing east and west before final adjournment. The failure of the proposal to issue an international postage stamp is to be regretted, but the raising of the maximum letter rate for foreign correspondence from one-half to three-fourths of an ounce will be appreciated.

The pressure of the times is shown in the statistics of business failures for the past three years. Bradstreet's report, just out, shows an increase in 1896 of nearly 2,100 over 1895. Of these more than half were retail concerns. The proportion of failures was 14 out of every 1,000 concerns. Clothing and bicycles seem to be the chief risks. In the former 77 and in the latter 51 out of every 1,000 concerns went to the wall.

Rear-Admiral Samuel Phillips Lee died at his home near Washington, June 5. He was a descendant of Light Horse Harry Lee, of Revolutionary fame. He fought at Charleston, and in the passage of the Mississippi forts below New Orleans, commanded the North Atlantic blockading squadron, with which he captured or destroyed fifty-four steamers. Later he commanded the Mississippi squadron, with which he rendered essential service to the armies in the West.

IN BRIEF

We are not disposed to permit the queen's jubilee to pass without appropriate recognition of it, and we shall, therefore, next week flavor our issue with considerable material pertaining to this great forthcoming event. Rev. John Brown, D. D., of Bedford, Eng., the biographer of Bunyan and one of the leaders among English Nonconformists, has written for us a charming article on the higher life of the English people during Queen Victoria's reign. Mr. Edward Porritt, the well-known English journalist now residing in this country, treats of the growth of democracy during the same period. Mrs. Spofford has written a poem addressed to her Majesty.

Prof. George Adam Smith has finally been selected for the important task of writing the life of Henry Drummond, and an admirable choice it is. On both sides of the water the outcome of his literary labors in this direction will be keenly anticipated.

The report that President Slocum of Colorado College has received a call to Oberlin overstates the actual fact of the case. His is one of two or three names being earnestly considered by the trustees, but as yet nothing definite has passed between them and him. So it is too early for the friends of Colorado College to begin to worry, or for Oberlinites to lay in a stock of fireworks.

We are as confident of meeting our friends from Westhampton, Mass, at the annual meeting of the Home Missionary Society as we are of seeing the secretaries there, and this year our expectations were realized again. A delegation of ten came from this hill town five miles from the railroad—an example of interest in and loyalty to the cause which larger places would do well to imitate.

The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, meeting at Charlotte, N. C., has unanimously adopted a measure by which the negro churches and church members will be organized into an entirely separate body. This is the result of long agitation and seems to be satisfactory to both parties. Whether it will result in similar agitation among the negroes connected with the Northern Presbyterian Church, which is strong in many parts of the South, remains to be seen.

Several experts in life insurance have lately declared, as the results of investigation, that habitual beer drinkers are bad risks for insurance. Dr. Bernacki says that the mortality of brewers after forty years of age is very much higher than the average. Self-interest ought to restrain men from fixing on themselves a habit which is demonstrated to be a shortener of life.

That was a clever turn in the speech with which Dr. Spining nominated Sheldon Jackson for moderator in the recent Presbyterian General Assembly. He drew a picture of the apostle Paul coming down to see the assembly, and when it was proposed to introduce to him an ex president of the United States and his postmaster general, both members of the body, the apostle replied, "I will see them later, but just now I should like to see Sheldon Jackson," and when the two met the apostle's salutation was, "Why, you are not any taller than I am!"

It appears that the sultan thought that the Congregational churches of America were an organization like the Jesuits, and that President Angell was one of their emissaries, with dark designs against the Turkish Empire. His Majesty's objection to President Angell as the minister of the United States to that country, now removed, may prove to have been an unlooked-for advantage, by giving him some true idea of the Congregational churches which are doing a beneficent work in his dominions, without cherishing any political designs.

The Minutes of the Association of California contain a report of its auditors, in which, after stating the amounts which were put into the hands of its late treasurer, they say: "We have been unable to secure any information of the late treasurer as to any payments made by him for the General Association, and have been unable to ascertain what disposition was made of the money." If such a statement were made by the auditors of a bank, what would follow? Are not our churches as much bound to sustain principles of honesty as business institutions?

Every one will sympathize with Dr. Parkhurst in his temporary breakdown of health and hope that his summer abroad may bring full restoration. He announced his retirement from politics and city reform activities in a farewell letter to his people, in which he says, "Upon my return in the autumn, and so long as I maintain my present relation to this church, my one devotion will be to my pulpit, to the life and work of this church and to the interests of its families and individual members." A picturesque and powerful figure will be gone from New York public life with the doctor's withdrawal, but the remembrance of his courageous and self-denying work will remain as a legacy of good.

Later news from Japan confirms the statement made in our columns last week concerning the Doshisha. Mr. Yokoi is the new president. Mr. Onishi of the Imperial University takes the place of Mr. Ukita as head of the college department. These changes do not appear to bring encouragement to friends of the Doshisha in this country. The Japanese government is building up in Kyoto well-equipped schools of all grades up to the university. The only plea for American Christians to give money to the Doshisha is the need of a Christian institution for the education of Japanese youth. But Mr. Yokoi is classed among extreme liberals and Mr. Onishi, we believe, does not call himself a Christian.

A New England ministerial association a month or two ago had before it a number of theological students—Middlers and Seniors who were seeking approbation to preach. The examination revealed a greater degree of mental unsettlement with regard to points of doctrine than was agreeable to some of the more conservative examiners. It happened also that the least satisfactory candidates were the men who had studied longest. It was therefore perhaps not to be wondered at, though the resolution sounded rather oddly, that at the close of the examination a member of the association moved that the Middlers be approved to preach and that the Seniors be recommended to study further. No, they were not Andover men.

It is not in New York alone that people are complaining of the noise made by the Salvation Army, but citizens of Evanston, Ill., have been so troubled that, at their request, the police took the matter in hand and caused several arrests. Colonel Brewer, whom we in Boston remember so pleasantly as Major Brewer, defended his associates in an earnest speech, and succeeded in persuading the jury to vote for acquittal. We judge that this crusade in different parts of the country against the disturbance of people's rest by noisy demonstrations is not animated by hostility to the Salvation Army or its work. The same people under the same circumstances would complain against a German street band.

Score one for the South! In Virginia a Negro convicted of an infamous crime was hanged after full legal trial by the regularly constituted officers of the law, while on the same day a mob in Ohio, not many miles from the capital, took from the hands of the sheriff another Negro, sentenced for the same crime to twenty years' imprisonment, and hanged him. All the centuries of Christian civilization seemed to have slipped from the men and women in the brutalized crowd that completed the lynching after they had once been driven off by the militia, who only did their duty. The leaders of the mob are guilty not only of the murder of the Negro, but of the death of those of their own company who were killed. The whole affair is a disgrace to the neighborhood and to the State.

Dr. Griffis is adding unkind limitations to his gift to the Hollanders of leadership in Pilgrim thought. According to his latest announced researches, the passengers on the Mayflower were a very cosmopolitan set. John Alden was an Irishman—which, perhaps, accounts for his selection by Miles Standish as a proxy wooer—and there were others from the Emerald Isle. But we suppose they all learned their church and civil government in Holland, so that the Dutch mortgage on New England influence suffers no diminution. We have always thought it such a pity that the Hollanders, who taught others so efficiently, could not have taught their own people, so that there might have been the moral and political force of a second New England at New Amsterdam.

Here come the baccalaureates again and we pause to hear the strains of hope and incentive which are rising upon the June air, East West, North and South. Last Sunday initiated the procession, and among the valuable discourses preached were Professor Ryder's to the theologues at Andover, Rev. C. M. Southgate's to the young women of Lasell Seminary at Auburndale, President Taylor's at Vassar, Rev. A. E. Cross's before the Springfield Bible Normal College and Rev. G. G. Atkins's at Arms Academy, Shelburne Falls. The 100th anniversary of the birth of Mrs Emily Graves Williston, wife of Samuel Williston, was celebrated at Easthampton, Mass., with special services, including a sermon by Rev. Joseph H. Sawyer of the seminary which owes its endowment to the Williston benefactions and bears their name.

Mr. Joseph R. Farrington, who has just died after serving for twenty-seven years as superintendent of the Maine Reform School for Boys, belongs to the same type of public servants and social reformers as that with which the late beloved warden of Concord, Colonel Tufts, would be classed. Prevented from carrying out his early ardent longing to be a foreign missionary, Mr. Farrington brought to his difficult task that quality of consecration which burns in our most successful workers at home and abroad. His work as an educator was substantial and far reaching, and the hundreds of boys who have passed in and out of the school during his connection with it have felt the touch of his genuine Christian manhood. Happy is the State that can command the services of such a person in so trying a capacity as the management of a public institution.

They are having a quiet laugh in one of the college towns in the western part of Massachusetts over the slip which two prominent Congregational ministers made concerning Whitsuntide, the Sunday which is set apart in Anglican and Roman Catholic churches to commemorate the descent of the Spirit. This year last Sunday was Whitsunday, but one of the ministers alluded to must have consulted his church calendar rather hastily, for the Sunday before, which was Memorial Day, he preached a sermon commenting on the fact that this year Whitsunday and Memorial Day fell on the same day, constituting a coincidence rare enough to merit comment. He therefore drew some very appropriate lessons from the blending of the civic and ecclesiastical festivals. The president of the college in the same town, who heard the morning sermon, was so much impressed with its leading thought that he addressed his students that afternoon at vespers on the same subject, though naturally treating it in a different form. When the Episcopal rector, later in the day, heard of the two discourses preached on the same idea he thought it was his turn to smile, and he has been smiling at intervals ever since.

ORPHANS IN MARSOVAN

BY REV. CHARLES C. TRACY

Some months ago, in obedience to what seemed immediate duty, our station decided to undertake the care of a score of orphans. We soon found that we ought to take in several scores. About the same time came an appropriation from The Congregationalist fund sufficient to support eighty orphans one year. Taking this as a providential indication, we received the helpless little boys and girls till there were forty-six of the former and forty-eight of the latter—ninety-four in all. We are expecting others still to swell the number to about 130. The support of each costs $22 a year. They are decently and comfortably fed, clothed and housed, one of the missionary dwellings being given up to the girls, while the boys are accommodated in rented premises adjoining the mission grounds. There are many more than 130 needy orphans, but we can go no further without addition to our funds. One of the missionary women acts as superintendent of this branch of the work, with half a dozen assistants. There are two well-ordered schools for the orphans; one for the boys, taught by a college graduate of last year, one for the girls, taught by a graduate of the Girls' Boarding School. These teachers are with the children day and night. We now find ourselves with about 400 pupils on these premises, including the students of Anatolia College, the Girls' Boarding School and the orphans.

These orphan children are happy in their new home and the woes of the past are fading out of their minds. As I write, a clatter of feet under my window announces the return of the orphan boys from the fields, where, with their teacher and our cavass as guard, they have been recreating and gathering flowers. At least once a week all the boys and girls who have been orderly and obedient are permitted to go to the fields and vineyards for an outing, and very few are those who have to stay at home.

The children all attend church and Sunday school. Each orphanage has a little stock of books and pictorial papers in the native languages. On Sunday afternoons they may be seen in groups in the orphanage gardens, listening to the reading of this evangelical literature or poring over the pictures.

Poor children! Their fathers perished in the outbreaks, many of them before the eyes of these little ones. The condition of all became sad, that of many distressing. Notice that little boy—he was left to find his living in the street, and for warmth slept at night by the side of a dog in a hollow tree. There are some children who fifteen months ago were huddled, hungry and nearly naked, in their pillaged and empty homes, and creeping to their wretched mother's side said, "It is better for us to be covered up in the ground by the side of our father." But here they are comfortable and happy, improving their minds in school, playing with balls and tops at time of recess, acquiring the knowledge of the way of life, preparing to be useful to their people in coming time.

May blessing rest on all who have given of their substance to help the fatherless.

Marsovan, Turkey, May, 1897.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK

Our Congregational Clerical Union

This pleasant and profitable gathering of "Congregational ministers of New York and vicinity" (both the first and last words of the title are liberally construed) has closed its sessions for the summer, to meet again in October in the quiet "managers' room" of the Bible House. Besides the discussion of topics presented by the regularly attending members, several of the more recent themes of special interest introduced by invited speakers were: Life in Idaho, by Rev. E. A. Paddock; Work in North Dakota, by Rev. H. C. Simmons; Union of Church and State in the Treasury (public money voted for sectarian uses), by Rev. Dr. J. M. King; The Gospel and Working People, by Dr. J. H. Hoadley; City Missions, by Dr. A. F. Schauffler; The Outlook for Missions, by Dr. E. M. Bliss. Just before leaving for Washington Theodore Roosevelt greatly interested the union with a free, confidential talk on The Effort To Do Practical Good in Politics. Another of the most attractive meetings was devoted to African slavery and the Phil-African League. After an address by Rev. Dr. L. T. Chamberlain, president of the league, he introduced Mr. Heli Chatelain, the native African explorer, linguist, scholar and missionary, who is secretary and general manager of the league. The two, with Dr. Josiah Strong, fully set forth the purpose and methods of the enterprise: to establish native, civilized, self-supporting towns on the high tablelands of south-central Africa, about 500 miles from the coast, to be settled by industrious, law-abiding natives, whose influence shall oppose and finally end the slave trade still carried on among 50,000,000 natives, of whom it annually destroys the lives of not less than half a million. The obvious difficulties in the way of the enterprise were considered and shown to be not insurmountable. Information concerning the plan can be obtained from Dr. Chamberlain, 513 United Charities Building, in this city.

The Cooper Union

It was an interesting coincidence that the unveiling of the Peter Cooper statue should take place simultaneously with the annual Commencement of the schools of science and art for which he so liberally provided and with the opening of the new Cooper Union Museum of Decorative Art, to the founding of which his granddaughters, the Misses Hewitt, have given several years of study at home and abroad and a large amount of money. The museum will add largely to the facilities for art study already afforded by the institute, and to the debt of the city to this philanthropist for his generous provision for the culture of boys and girls with capacity and desire to earn an honest and honorable living but hampered by poverty. More than 3,000 of these have been taught in the Cooper Union schools within the year. A brother of Mr. Cooper has added $200,000 to the endowment.

Potato Patch Aid

One of the newer methods of the Salvation Army, far wiser than the supplying of the lazy with free food, is the putting in practice of the “potato patch plan,” heretofore spoken of in these columns. Already seventeen uncultivated acres in Hoboken, ten in Jersey City, six in Elmhurst, L. I., and eight in Flatbush have been “leased,” free of charge, to the army, and more land is promised in Brooklyn suburbs and elsewhere. The plan is to cut these lands into small lots, prepare them for planting, give the seed when necessary, and allot each to an accepted worker for cultivation, the privilege to be withdrawn when not suitably improved, and the land to be restored to the owner when sold or needed for his uses. The worker’s peaceable possession is to be secured by the police, and the proceeds are to be the reward of his toil, with the benefit of having earned them in place of the degradation of having begged them.

The army has secured for its headquarters a new attraction—one of its Chicago officers who calls himself “the champion long-distance singer of the world.” He claims ability to sing sixty hymns in an hour, and on his first evening’s attempt actually sang fifty-five hymns in fifty-nine minutes with accompaniment of the full band of wind, string and taut-sheepskin instruments. But the noise thereof ceased at 9.30 or thereabouts, which was well.

Pastoral Resignation

Rev. Albert F. Newton, formerly of Marlboro, Mass., who became pastor of the Rochester Avenue Church, Brooklyn, in January, 1892, resigned the latter charge on the first Sabbath in June, to take effect on Oct. 1. Mr. Newton, a tireless worker, has given his whole time and strength to the pulpit, pastoral care, Sunday school and other interests of the church and congregation, and his work has been eminently successful (224 new members received), though wrought under serious difficulties arising from a difference of opinion as to a change of the place of worship, leading to a secession of a part of the membership and the forming of a new church.

Our Church Extension Society has recommended that the two churches be reunited, that a new house of worship be built on a more convenient site to accommodate the new organization and members of other churches living near who will be invited to join.

It is to favor this union of the two churches that Mr. Newton unselfishly resigns, as does Dr. J. G. Roberts, in charge of the other (Patchen Avenue) section of the original Rochester Avenue Church. Mr. Newton will be ready for a new pastorate in October, and one with his proved qualities, to which the best known Brooklyn pastors will testify, should not be long unemployed.

Personal

Dr. Behrends goes shortly to give a course of lectures in Bay City, Mich., comes thence to his Shelter Island home, and in August takes a brief trip to Europe, and resumes Sunday service on the second Sunday in September.

Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall closed his Brooklyn pastorate on June 6. A delightful farewell reception for himself and wife, held in the church parlors May 27, was attended not only by his own people but by pastors and members of other evangelical churches of the city. Dr. Storrs voiced the sentiment of the churches and pastors in one of his apt and felicitous addresses, to which Dr. Hall feelingly responded. The Brooklyn pulpit loses much, but Union Seminary rejoices in a corresponding gain.

Rev. John McNeill, the Scotch evangelist, gave the last few days of his month’s stay here wholly to Brooklyn. His last sermon was preached in Lafayette Avenue Church, May 27, after which he left for Pittsfield, Mass., seeking a few days’ rest before sailing for home. HUNTINGTON.

WHAT IS THE ALTERNATIVE

BY REV. GEORGE A. GORDON, D. D.

Nothing could be kinder in spirit and purpose than Dr. Stimson’s criticism in The Congregationalist, June 3, upon a recent book of mine. If Dr. Stimson’s criticism had only been fundamental and thorough; if he had but set his antagonism to my views in some radically contrasted principle; if he had proved that the Christian Church in the persons of its great leaders has always believed in the unlimited moral interest of God in mankind, or, if unable to do this, he had shown that this position could be philosophically reconciled with the traditional creed, or, yet again, if he had stood squarely by his conservatism, there would have been no call for this word from me.

But the fact that Dr. Stimson by no means goes to the root of the matter, that he appears to be unconscious of the logic of his own admission as to the unlimited moral interest of God in the race, leads one to ask, What is the alternative which he would propose in place of the view which he condemns in the book to which reference has been made? For, after all; the real issue between us is whether God is or is not on the side of humanity. Dr. Stimson seems to think that upon this question there can be but one opinion. It is as good as settled at conversion that the moral interest of God in man is universal. This is the new departure of which Dr. Stimson seems to be completely unconscious.

That God has been conceived to be on the side of the elect, and not on the side of the race as a whole, has been the leading position in the traditional theology since Augustine. That great spirit found the sole warrant for the salvation of the saved in the divine predestination. It is God’s work and it begins in his eternal purpose of mercy for the elect. Augustine does not hold to the decree reprobating the wicked. His logic failed him here. He simply says that the Almighty passed the wicked by, as, for example, in our Lord’s parable the priest and the Levite passed by the poor Jew who had fallen among thieves. Surely it is clear as the day that Augustine did not believe in the unlimited moral interest of God in mankind, and Augustine’s view was the prevailing view, at least, until the Reformation.

If Dr. Stimson has any doubts as to the position of John Calvin upon this question, I entreat him to refresh his memory by reading again the twenty-first chapter in the third book of the Institutes. The heading to the chapter may be sufficient: “Of the eternal election, by which God has predestinated some to salvation, and others to destruction.” Were it not that so many rash statements are current regarding the theological opinions of great leaders in past times, it would be wholly unnecessary to quote the Westminster divines upon this subject: “The rest of mankind (the non-elect) God was pleased, according to the unsearchable council of his will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by and ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sins, to the praise of his glorious justice.” Persons of no more penetration than the present writer cannot see a very strong case here in favor of God’s unlimited moral interest in man, or indeed in anything.

But these witnesses are foreigners and strangers to our commonwealth of faith. Let us hear the great founder of American theology, Jonathan Edwards: “Thus it is necessary, that God’s awful majesty, his authority and dreadful greatness, justice and holiness should be manifested. But this could not be unless sin and punishment had been decreed.” In the same discussion this great but bewildered thinker asks whether it is not proper to say “that God would have it be, that Judas should be unfaithful to his Lord.” And he argues that since the sin of crucifying Christ was foreordained of God, and since that is the head and representative sin of the world, it follows “that all sins of men are foreordained and ordered by a wise providence.” And what shall I say more? For time would fail me to tell of Hopkins and Emmons, Dwight and Taylor, Hodge and Park, and numberless other lesser lights, and multitudes with no light at all, who have held to the position expressed by a distinguished New Haven theologian of a former generation: “That God has eternally purposed to renew and sanctify and save a part only of mankind.”

No longer ago than 1830 the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, by an overwhelming majority, recorded “its detestation and abhorrence” of the idea “that the agony of Christ expressed the measure of the love of God for every man.” Thus was McLeod Campbell’s faith in the universal love of God in Christ reprobated sixty-seven years ago. It would seem that not evolution only, but also arrested development, has been an Alexander the Coppersmith, “doing us all much harm.” “And like as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses” so have the traditions of men withstood the truth and blocked the path of wise progress.

From the days of Augustine until recent years, with but few and ineffectual exceptions, the philosophical position of the Christian Church has been that God was on the side of a part only of our humanity. Anything other than a partial redemption was not even dreamed of, and that simply because it was forbidden by the divine decree. The protest of Arminius and the revolt of Wesley, however noble in feeling, did nothing for the overthrow of the philosophical partialism of the traditional creed, did nothing to secure in the purpose of the Eternal ground for a gospel for mankind.

Now I know well that the positions mentioned above Dr. Stimson, and the many able and honored brethren whom he represents, repudiate with all their hearts. But they do not follow up this sentimental repudiation with the necessary intellectual repudiation. They preach and write of the universal and absolute love of God, but the moment that one ventures to draw forth the implicit logic of their sublime sentiment they regard him with serious suspicion. Either the noble preaching of these brethren has a ground in the relation of God to mankind or it has not. It is either in accordance with the infinite purpose or against it. If it has behind it the sympathy of the Eternal there is implied in this position a revision in the metaphysics of the traditional theology that amounts to a revolution.

My difficulty with Dr. Stimson, and with all those who agree with him, is that they are preaching the new theology every Sunday and at the same time refusing to recognize the intellectual principle upon which their whole gospel and their entire power depend. They are eagerly plucking the fruits of the tree of life and all the while denying the eternal root. Their message of the unlimited moral interest of God in mankind is rendered baseless as the fabric of a vision if placed upon the foundations provided by the traditional theology. The issue comes to this: God's purpose of salvation either does or does not include all men. If it does not include all men Dr. Stimson's gospel of God's unlimited moral interest in the race is vain. If the divine decree does include all men the logic of the new theodicy, which Dr. Stimson thinks contains a fatal fallacy, becomes irresistible. If God is for us who can be against us?

We may be against ourselves; free will is an element in human history. It doubtless is an element, but surely it is not the primary or determining one. That contention would again revolutionize the entire body of theological belief. However much one may make of the will of man one must regard it as secondary to the will of God. This has been the note of all the greater thinking in these Christian centuries, and if the appeal is taken to the Scriptures the issue is the same. "By grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Those who regard the human will as primary and final in the process of salvation would invert the maxim of the great apostle, making it read: "By works have ye been saved; and that of yourselves: it is not the gift of God."

The power to obstruct God temporarily certainly inheres in man. That it is not necessarily a permanent obstruction the lives of all good Christians clearly prove; that God's outlook should be hopeful for mankind would seem to follow from the numberless wills that he has already won. But, whatever the outlook may be, one thing should be certain, that while God remains God his moral and redeeming interest in man must continue. And if it shall continue forever, it can only be because of his eternal decree inclusive of all mankind. And if the eternal decree in favor of a part of the race does not destroy the freedom of the elect, it is difficult to see how the same decree made universal can be fatal to free will. It would be an interesting story to show the impossible logic of the old theology at this point, but it cannot be done in this article.

If the scheme to which Dr. Stimson objects is really poor, let us have the alternative. Let us be radical in our mutual criticism, for it is matter of life and death, and any thought other than that of personal kindness cannot enter into so serious a discussion. If the traditional theology is right in its fundamental position concerning the relation of the will of God to mankind, then every man in his senses must know that God is not the Father of all men. Let us honor sentiment where it is the inspiration of truth, but let us scorn it where it is at war with the eternal purpose. Let the conservative brethren have the courage of their convictions. Let them adhere in feeling to the partialism of the old theology, if they still hold to its fundamental idea of the relation of God to mankind. The appearance of Universalism can be avoided in one way only—the old way—by limiting the redeeming purpose of the Eternal Father to a part of the race. But think of the price thus paid for the suppression of a heresy! The moral character of God is discredited, the infinite love dissolves in endless death.

But what is the practical outcome of this sort of teaching? What is its effect upon those who are Christians? "Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid." That appeal is conclusive upon the conscience of every good man. Besides, optimistic philosophies of history are not for wrongdoers. They exist to keep from despair those who labor that Christ's words may be fulfilled: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." They are the secret and essential inspiration of the men and women who labor that the whole earth may be subdued to righteousness. They constitute the plan of campaign, the hopeful outlook for the church militant, and it is as absurd to suppose that good men will substitute ideas for actions as it would be to imagine that brave soldiers should rest solely in the strategy of a great commander. In the first instance only the moral and in the second only the intellectual fool could be guilty of such conclusions. Without hope the church of Christ would die, and it is hard to see how the infinite hope, inspired by the God of hope, should do other than set its inmost heart on fire with the love of righteousness.

But the new conception of the relation of God to mankind, which is the fundamental point in this article, gives a power of appeal to the conscience of sinful men logically impossible to the old. Sin then becomes resistance to God, opposition to the realization of God's holy plan in the personal life, contempt of his bright design for the soul of his child, mockery of the purpose of measureless and ineffable love. Under this view alone is it possible to fill the sinner's mind with the due sense of his inexpressible shame. And hold a man up to shame long enough and he needs no other interpreter of the horror of his sin. It is because the old theology borrows the ground of appeal from the new that it has power over the godless conscience. From personal observation as a youth in Scotland I solemnly aver that the preaching of the doctrinal side of Calvinism—which is the only faith opposed to mine—is one of the most deadening forces to the moral nature that I have ever known. Its uncertain fatalism to sin and woe have proved in numberless instances the machinery of torture and absolute moral despair.

If, behind history and the universe, God's decree exists eternally in favor of all men and every man, then although sin enter, and the ages groan under the accumulation of the evil consequences, where sin abounds grace shall much more abound; all gates open to God's advance; all times are in his hand; all spaces are fields of opportunity for his Christly love, and his pursuing presence must follow the sinner, in infinite pity, to the last hour of his existence. Which shall triumph, God or the sinner, I have ever left an open question, although in building my hope upon God in Christ and siding with him in the eonian conflict I seem to myself not unwise.

METHOD IN GIVING

BY REV. HENRY H. KELSEY, HARTFORD

There are but two methods in giving—the occasional and the proportionate. According to the first one gives as occasion presents itself. An appeal is made for some worthy object and we respond—giving, or not, a dime or a dollar as our feelings are moved, as we feel we can afford to give. One feels that he ought to give, yet feels that he cannot afford to. Often giving by this method is generous; generally it is not. It is spasmodic at best; at its worst it is selfish and small. This is the common method.

The other way is, first of all, systematic, and there is no worst in it. The giver recognizes that a part of all income belongs to God, and when the weekly wage, monthly check or quarterly dividend comes in a proportion is taken out as the Lord's money. Then, when an occasion is presented, the only question ever to be settled is, "Does the Lord want me to give his money to this object, and, if so, how much?"

I have known a few persons who give according to the proportionate plan, who take the tenth as a standard and 1 Cor. 16: 2 as a rule. To find out just how it works, and whether the things said in favor of proportionate giving are true, I recently sent out to such persons the following questions:

1. What is your rule about giving? If you give proportionately, what proportion?
2. On what Biblical teaching do you base your proportion?
3. Do you find it hard or easy as compared with the ordinary haphazard way of giving?
4. Is your income over or under $1,000?
5. What is the size of your family?
6. What is the result to you financially of giving one-tenth to the Lord? Are you richer or poorer? Is it harder or easier to get along?
7. What is the result on the spiritual life of yourself and family?

The questions were sent to persons living in city and country, of large families and single men, wage-earners and people of large incomes, in the East, West and South. Replies were received from thirty fairly representative men. Twenty-eight give one-tenth or more; one gives one twentieth, not including support of the home church; one did give a tenth, gave it up, but was so much helped by the practice that he will begin again.

As to the Biblical basis of their practice and proportion, the general statement is: "The Jew under the law gave one tenth and much more. The Christian under grace ought not to be meaner than the Jew." All say that giving on this plan is easier. Some qualify and say: "Perfectly easy," "Vastly easier," "Easier and feel it less," "I give more and feel it less," "Infinitely easier."

To question six these persons agree without exception in saying that they are not any poorer than they were before they gave so much; all have been prospered and some have enjoyed great prosperity. One man, whose income is $700 and has a family of five, says, "We have been prospered right along since we began the practice." Another says, "The more I give the more I get." Another, "Richer; a complete fulfillment of temporal promises." Another, whose income is $1,000 and who is educating two children in college and has two at home, says: "I give all I can. My ideal is one-tenth or more." He thinks he is richer and is planning to give more. Another says, "Direct result, no financial gain; indirect financial result through character or spiritual development, unknowable."

One now very prosperous man says he began at conversion, when he was very poor, to give on the Jewish principle of devoting one-tenth to the Lord. He now tries to act as the Lord's steward, believing that all he has is his, and that his service is the highest use he can make of all his faculties and possessions. One gentleman, whose name, were it given, would open the ears of the readers of The Congregationalist to his testimony, says: "In answer to your question as to whether I followed the principle of tithing in the matter of benevolence I am glad to say yes. I am grateful to the Lord that he led me to do it before I was twenty years of age and when on a very small salary. It has always seemed to me that the principle of systematic benevolence should be adopted by all our young people as soon as they have any income of their own. The point to be pressed constantly is that all we have we hold in trust; we have nothing of our own. The man, therefore, who fails to recognize God is the meanest kind of an embezzler, for he is stealing trust funds."

These are samples of the testimony received. These people agree in saying that, having tried, they know that the proportionate method of giving is the easiest and most satisfactory, has helped rather than hindered material prosperity and wonderfully increased their spiritual growth and comfort. As these replies came in, in many instances, accompanied by a personal letter, I became overwhelmingly convinced that the argument from experience wipes out every theoretical objection against this method of giving. Instead of any Christian not being able to afford to give so much as one-tenth to the Lord, the fact is none of us can afford not to. Even persons of small income and large family have found uniformly that it pays to be honest with God and to trust him. Persons in debt have found that by paying their debt to God promptly he gives them the wherewith to pay their debts to men. "Them that honor me I will honor." The average Christian fails to honor God with his money. The self demon has a grip on us with respect to our pocketbooks. Nothing will so quickly and thoroughly dislodge him from his possession as the practice of proportionate giving.

TENDENCIES OF THOUGHT AMONG THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS

BY CHARLES S. MACFARLAND

Our theological seminaries are sending forth this year about 150 young men to minister to our Congregational churches. Much interest is naturally felt with regard to the tendencies of thought among these men whose young blood is to be infused into our churches. A leading preacher said recently, "When I want to know the direction in which theological thought is tending, I go to our theological students; that is, to the best of them, and find out what they are thinking." There is reason in this. Our seminaries are the sources of the religious teaching in our churches. And this becomes increasingly so as the college and seminary men take the places of untrained preachers of the past.

Speaking generally, it may be said that on the great questions which today especially agitate the theological world our theological students are divided much as our preachers and pastors are. On such questions as the nature of inspiration, the ontological being of Christ and the theory of evolution the students may be divided into four classes.

There are the extremely conservative, the extremely radical, those whose aim is to steer judiciously, and a fourth class who may be said to be on the fence, but leaning generally to the conservative side under the influence of sentiment or policy. Generally, in a given class, the strongest men will be found among those who are extremely radical and those who try to maintain a "judicial" position. Of course, the proportions in which these types of men exist vary with the general tone of the seminaries.

Comparing the students as a body with the men outside in the pastorate the proportions would be by no means the same. Those who hold to the traditions of the elders would be far fewer and much less tenacious in their grip than their older brethren. Those of radical views are probably a little more "advanced" than those of liberal tendencies outside. For example, with regard to the question of inspiration, there are probably few, if any, of the students in our Congregational seminaries whose studies in Biblical criticism would permit them to stand with Professor Green.

The following results were obtained from interviews with sixteen representative men in one of our seminaries. These are the books which have most interested and strongly impressed them during their period of preparation for the ministry:

In philosophy and theology it is not surprising to find first on the list Dr. G. A. Gordon's Christ of Today. Thirteen out of the sixteen had read it. Five stated that its influence on them had been strong, and that it fell in with their own modes of thought and interpretation. Ten had read largely of Bushnell's works, Nature and the Supernatural being especially praised. Of Lewis F. Stearns's books five had read The Evidence of Christian Experience and nine his Present Day Theology. Six had found him especially helpful. Dr. Newman Smyth's works had been largely read, mainly Old Faiths in New Light, Personal Creeds and Christian Ethics. Seven gave warm expression of indebtedness to Dr. Smyth. Eight had read Fairbairn's Place of Christ in Modern Theology, and five gave it an especially high place. Dr. Lyman Abbott's Evolution of Christianity had been read by five, three of whom gave it exceptional commendation.

The only work on systematic theology that had been largely read was Dr. Clarke's Outlines of Christian Theology, to which seven expressed great indebtedness. Eight had read largely of Bruce's works, mainly The Kingdom of God, The Training of the Twelve and his Apologetics. John Fiske's Destiny of Man and Idea of God had been generally read; so had Drummond's Ascent of Man, Stevens's Doctrine and Life and Allen's Continuity of Christian Thought. Professor Allen's book especially was accorded high praise.

Other works of particular attractiveness were Gordon's Witness to Immortality, Horton's Teachings of Jesus, Ullmann's Sinlessness of Jesus, Briggs's Bible, Church and Reason, Beach's Newer Religious Thinking, Balfour's Foundations of Belief, Robertson Smith's works, Harris's Moral Evolution, Horton's Revelation and the Bible, Ladd's What Is the Bible? Romanes's Thoughts on Religion and his Life, Le Conte's Evolution and Religious Thought and Caird's books on evolution. Professor George Adam Smith's Isaiah was accorded hearty gratitude.

In works on preaching Brooks's Yale lectures stand first. The others were Dr. Van Dyke's Gospel for an Age of Doubt, Dr. Watson's Cure of Souls, Dr. Dale's and Beecher's Yale lectures. Among preachers Brooks heads the list. Fifteen had read largely of his sermons, and ten accorded them especially high tributes. Frederick W. Robertson comes next with thirteen, followed closely by Bushnell with twelve. Other preachers who had been carefully read were Beecher, Dr. Watson, Dr. T. T. Munger, Martineau, Lyman Abbott, Mozley, Maurice, Channing, Newman Smyth, Liddon, Newman, Theodore Parker, Dale, Bishop Butler and Caird.

As respects the poets, thirteen had read Browning, five of whom gave him first place. The same number had read Tennyson. Whittier comes next with nine admirers, and Wordsworth follows with eight. The only other poets largely read were Shakespeare, Milton, Lowell, Burns and Longfellow.

On social problems twelve had read Kidd's Social Evolution. The others most widely read were Ely's Socialism and Social Reform and his Social Aspects of Christianity. Only two had read Herron. Others were Strong's New Era; Dr. Gladden's Applied Christianity, Tools and the Man and The Cosmopolis City Club; Bradford's Heredity and Christian Problems; and Abbott's Christianity and Social Problems.

Carlyle, Ruskin, Emerson and Kingsley had been quite largely read. Hamilton W. Mabie was a favorite among the writers of today. Among the novelists the leading were: Thackeray, Dickens, Scott, Hugo, Eliot, Tolstoi, Ian Maclaren and Blackmore.

In biography F. W. Robertson holds first place, followed by Bushnell, Brooks, Maurice and Thomas Arnold.

Of course these books by no means form the only reading of these students, nor do they adequately represent the thoroughness of the work done in connection with the classroom. Books used in any sense as text-books, read collaterally with their specific study, such as Wendt, Weiss and Beyschlag, books on church history, Biblical criticism and text-books on theology and philosophy were not included. These lists included only the optional reading of the students, and for this reason show more conclusively their trend of thought.

Hardly a man had read any systematic theology outside of that required by the course of study. The nearest approach to such would be Clarke's Outlines of Christian Theology and Stearns's Present Day Theology. Hodge and Smith are passed by and have no real successors of their kind. Such books as Fairbairn's Place of Christ in Modern Theology and Gordon's Christ of Today seem to be taking their places.

One student remarks: "I have read mostly general literature rather than especially theological. I believe that the poets and essayists often reflect the thought tendency of the day much more than the theologians; and the theologians are invariably behind the preachers."

The German writers had not been read. Only one had read Pfleiderer at all. Outside of the poets the reading had been mainly theological. Comparatively few were reading general literature. The essayists were generally passed by. On the other hand, there were none whose reading had been confined to theology exclusively. One said, "Dr. Lyman Abbott has suggested to me many lines of thought." While it is true that bold men like Dr. Abbott have a fascinating influence, they are yet regarded with a considerable degree of caution. Still they are being watched with deep interest and are doing much to direct the thought of students.

This is true even among students of conservative tendencies. For instance, one who gave expression of indebtedness to Dr. Gordon qualified it in this way: "His Christ of Today has been valuable to me more for its general help in theological thinking than for its specific help in framing a doctrine of Christ." It is, however, quite evident that the men who live most among our theological students today are men of the type of Robertson, Maurice, Kingsley, Bushnell, Brooks, Gordon, Fairbairn and John Watson. Perhaps among these Frederick Robertson is most read and revered.

THE COMPLETED YEAR AT HARTFORD

It is always pleasant to drop anchor for a day or two in the quiet haven afforded by Hosmer Hall, the sightly and substantial structure which is today the material embodiment of Hartford Theological Seminary. One is always assured of an ample supply of creature comforts, a warm welcome, and an atmosphere intellectually and spiritually stimulating. The equipment at Hartford can bear comparison with that of any theological school in the land, and every year sees some addition to it of noteworthy value. The intellectual life of the institution centers to a large degree about the noble Case Memorial Library, with its 70,000 volumes and over 35,000 pamphlets. The well-stocked shelves invite to study, and some remarkable collections, such as the Luther literature which was on exhibition last week, whet the appetite of the studiously inclined specialist.

One who has not visited Hartford for several years takes special note of these changes and improvements. He finds the old library occupied in large part by the historic curiosities, which until two years ago were reposing calmly in a back room in the Congregational House. This museum, as it was then known, gathered dust in fine shape, but received little attention from the outside public, and so the American Board concluded to lend it to the seminary, where it has the conspicuous location to which it is entitled. President Hartranft is certainly an acquisitive gentleman, and not all his acquisitions in recent years are in the nature of historical curiosities. He has succeeded in adding to the corps of students several young women, who are as bright and able as the modern girl at her best can be. Most of them are college graduates, Mt. Holyoke having been a particularly good source of supply. To hear one of them exegete a passage in the epistle to the Galatians under the keen scrutiny of Professor Jacobus, and in the presence of venerable members of the Pastoral Union, inclines one to reverse Horace Bushnell's famous dictum and declare that Hartford Seminary is in advance of, not behind, all the ages.

In view of this recognition of women it was an error to state, last week, that Professor Briggs's daughter is the first woman to be honored with a degree in divinity. Hartford in 1894 conferred the degree of S. T. B., which is equivalent to B. D., upon Misses Corwin and Gilson, who had pursued the regular three years' course in the same classes with the men, and had, in addition, taken a fourth year's theological study, which Hartford requires for the bestowal of this degree. Last year Misses Forehand and Locke received the same degree, having complied with the same conditions, so that to Hartford must be conceded considerable precedence in this matter of recognizing women. Two other young women graduated a year ago with honor, but did not remain to study for the degree. During the present year four have been enrolled—two in the Middle and two in the Junior Class. The success of this venture may be judged by the excellent work which the women graduates are doing. One is a teacher of the Bible at Mt. Holyoke College, another at Northfield, a third at Wellesley, and still another is in educational work in South Africa. Apparently there is no glut in the feminine ministerial market.

It is pleasing, too, to mark the intellectual fertility and activity of the present corps of professors. In the Hartford Seminary Record they are giving monthly to the public a strong, well-balanced and well-edited review. Most of them, also, are makers of books and pamphlets that bear the stamp of expert work. Moreover, they are not limiting their labors to the walls of the institution, but becoming more and more favorably known among the churches and throughout the country by their prominence in ecclesiastical gatherings and their ready responses to the frequent calls upon them for special addresses and sermons. This is a wise move on the part of men, several of whom, like Professors Mitchell, Paton, Jacobus and Macdonald, have come to Hartford from other sections of the country and, we believe, from other denominations.

Perhaps as decided a difference in the Hartford of today from the Hartford of a dozen or fifteen years ago is its present theological attitude. Not that there has been a change in the fundamental doctrinal basis of the seminary, or that there is today any less tenacious adherence to it on the part of the men giving instruction. Not that the men of other years, like the noble Carr and Thompson, and Riddle and Bissell of revered memory were narrow and polemical, but the change is in the direction of a broader outlook, a more accurate sensing of the currents of modern theology the world over, and a handling in the classroom of disputed matters somewhat more cautiously and less dogmatically. Hartford can no longer be called "the last stronghold of orthodoxy in New England," and it is just as well for the institution that it cannot be. We doubt whether the theological position of the newer men on the faculty varies appreciably from that of the most of the men on the faculty in the other New England seminaries.

While all this is true, it is no less true that the working of liberal influences and tendencies has not altered in one whit the distinctively spiritual tone of the school or modified its traditional and warmly evangelical atmosphere. Hartford is not primarily a school of cold, scientific theology. It is a training ground for the Christian minister. The ideals are not study for study's sake, but study for equipment for service. And the students are given such an impetus toward the work of the parish minister that few of them stray away into professorial chairs, religious journalism or the insurance business.

The year which ended last week has been a testing one because of the unprecedented financial strain upon the institution. Fortunately it closes with a far brighter prospect, owing to the loyalty of the faculty and friends who—some of them with much personal self-sacrifice—have supplied a sufficient sum to relieve the seminary from its immediate embarrassments. This proffering by the professors of a generous share of their salaries to meet the emergency has revealed their devotion to the school and at the same time cemented the ties of brotherhood among them. The student body, which was never so large, consisting most of the year of sixty-three men, all but one of whom are college graduates, has exhibited the same fidelity to the school, although in different ways. The graduating class, comprising eleven members, is smaller than in some years, but contains much promising material. The winner of the William Thompson fellowship, which affords two years' study in Germany, is Mr. E. W. Bishop of Williams College, '92. Dr. Webb presented the graduating class with their diplomas after three representatives had made creditable platform addresses, and President Hartranft spoke characteristically wise and fervent words, urging them to take for their motto "seek light."

The address of Rev. A. J. Lyman, D. D., on Tuesday evening was one of rare ability and effectiveness. He took up certain unusual applications of the doctrine of the incarnation, and in an intensely suggestive manner pointed out the desirability of considering the incarnation, not as a single historical event alone, but as indicating the divine method as well. So that in the creeds of the church, in the preaching of the church, in so far as it be marked by beauty and force, and in the organization of the church, particularly in the newer fields of Christian enterprise today, we have a perpetual reincarnation of Christ.

The alumni, a fair number of whom returned, divided their proceedings into two parts. In the morning they held their business meeting, electing Rev. D. P. Hatch, '86, president, and then discussing the question, What type of examination for licensure and ordination is to be held forth as the ideal? In the debate Rev. F. W. Green, Rev. F. S. Brewer and Rev. O. W. Means participated, and the general feeling seemed to be that in many particulars the present mode of examination for licensure is cumbersome and unwieldy, and that less emphasis should be laid upon the minute knowledge acquired during the seminary course, and more upon the spirit and temper of the individual student, upon his vital Christian experience and upon the purpose animating him to enter the ministry.

The lighter side of the alumni gathering found vent at the dinner in the spacious lower hall of the library building, to which ninety persons sat down. Rev. J. L. Barton, D. D., as toastmaster, blended happily the jovial and serious elements. He had a line of stories which no one but an American Board secretary who travels widely over the country addressing State associations could ever amass. There were good speeches by President Hartranft, buoyant and full of hope for the seminary and of confidence in its trustees, teachers, students and alumni, from Rev. F. S. Hatch, Drs. Lamson and Stone representing the Hartford pastors, Dr. A. C. Thompson, Dr. Webb, E. W. Bishop of the graduating class and from a representative of the class of '87, which was holding on the same day its decennial reunion. H. A. B.

In and Around Chicago

Protests Against Proposed Legislation

A large meeting in Music Hall was addressed Sunday afternoon by several persons who indulged in harsh language against leading citizens and those legislators who intend to vote either for a consolidated gas bill or for any kind of a street car bill. The severity of the language employed is likely to aid the cause against which it was directed. While the public mind is justly indignant at what it rightly designates as the selfishness of monopoly, it is hardly true that it desires to take from property its protection, or to prevent the owners of our street car lines from securing a fair return from their investments. Were the spirit of the Sunday afternoon meeting to prevail there would be small encouragement to open new lines or to improve those already in operation.

The Lectures of Dr. Barrows

No room on the university campus is large enough to hold the multitudes who wish to hear Dr. Barrows's lectures on Comparative Religion. His third lecture on the Philosophies of Hinduism was even more interesting than the two lectures which preceded it. While recognizing all that is valuable in this ancient system of religion, Dr. Barrows made it clear that its claims to be the universal religion cannot be admitted and that it can never be a prominent factor in the evangelizing of the world. On Sunday he occupied his old pulpit in the First Presbyterian Church.

A Narrow Escape for the New Telescope

Friday evening, May 21, President Harper and a few representatives of Chicago University looked at Jupiter through the forty-inch lens just put into tube prepared for it in the Yerkes Observatory at Williams Bay, Wis. Saturday morning, May 29, fortunately when no one was in the dome, the platform on which observations had been taken, and which had been arranged so as to rise and fall at the will of the observer, gave way, carrying with it in its forty-five feet descent the winding staircase around the supporting column and becoming a heap of worthless ruins. The glass was uninjured although it will be impossible to use it for the present. The repairs will cost, perhaps, $10,000. There is great rejoicing that no lives were lost and that the lens is unharmed. Probably the loss will fall on the contractors, who failed to provide sufficient support for the enormous weight of the platform, or to take into account the strain to which the sustaining cables would be subjected. Professor Barnard and his assistant had been observing all night and had left the dome only a little while before the platform fell.

Summer School for Young Men

The Y. M. C. A. announces that its summer term of eight weeks, tuition a dollar a week, will begin July 5, and that special instruction will be given boys in public schools in subjects which will fit them for business. The text-books used in the public schools will be used in the association. There will be two sessions each day, morning and afternoon, although arrangements can be made by which the pupil may secure a free afternoon if his parents desire. While the commercial course will be most prominent, there is a course in stenography and a large number of special courses. For three years the evening department has had an average enrollment of 816 students, all men, between the ages of sixteen and fifty. More than twenty different teachers have been employed. Few people, unless their attention is called to the fact, are aware of the extent or character of the educational work which the Y. M. C. A. is now doing. The central department in Chicago has already become an efficient Working Men's College.

The Beloit Jubilee

Fifty years ago this month the corner stone of Middle College, the oldest building on the college campus, was laid. Since then more than 4,000 young men have received instruction in the college, and 520 have actually received diplomas from her faculty. Arrangements have been made for an elaborate celebration at the coming Commencement of the fiftieth anniversary in her history. The exercises will begin June 20 and continue four days. A bust of the late President Chapin will be unveiled. There will be addresses by noted men from abroad, like Horace White of New York and Dr. Savage of Chicago. Doubtless the attendance will be large enough to tax the hospitality of the Beloit people to the utmost.

The Lovejoy Monument

On Memorial Day, in the cemetery at Alton, Ill., a monument was dedicated to the memory of Elijah Parish Lovejoy, who was shot Nov. 7, 1837, for his defense of the Negro and the stand he took in favor of free speech. He was only thirty-five years old. He began the publication of the St. Louis Observer, which advocated the gradual emancipation of slaves, in 1833. Leading citizens of St. Louis disapproved his utterances and politely urged him to abstain from any references to slavery. In 1836 Mr. Lovejoy announced his intention of moving his press to Alton, Ill., where he supposed he would be protected by the laws of the State. On the night prior to removal his office was broken into and its furniture destroyed. The press was uninjured and was sent to Alton, where it arrived on a Sunday morning. That night it was seized by a mob and thrown into the Mississippi. The citizens were indignant and at a public meeting promised to make good the loss of the press. Sept. 8, 1836, the Observer was issued again. Opposition to the principles of Mr. Lovejoy immediately appeared. He was denounced in public gatherings, received many warnings of the danger he was running, but persisted in the course he had marked out for himself. Nearly a year later, Aug. 21, 1837, his office was entered and his press destroyed. A third press arrived, but before it could be set up it was thrown into the river. A fourth press was ordered. It arrived Nov. 6, and was safely stored in one of the warehouses of the city. On the night of the 7th, while Mr. Lovejoy was in the building with a few friends, a mob gathered round it and demanded the press. As this was refused a ladder was raised in order to fire the building. While Mr. Lovejoy was endeavoring to prevent the would-be incendiary from carrying out his purpose, some one fired at him. Running back to the counting-room he exclaimed, "My God, I am shot," and, falling back, died almost instantly. His martyrdom was an element of power in the fight for freedom. Alton and Illinois have honored the memory of the hero, and at last, on condition that Alton should contribute $5,000, the legislature appropriated $25,000 for a monument in his memory. The funeral service, which the mob prevented at the burial of the body, was performed last Monday, with grateful hearts and by an immense assemblage at the base of the shaft which has been raised in his honor.

A Branch Church

For five years Pilgrim Church has carried on a Sunday school, known as the Pilgrim Mayflower, in a needy part of the city, about two miles from the mother church. The attendance now averages about 250, or as many as the rooms occupied will contain. A free kindergarten and a free dispensary are features of the work. Authorized by special vote of Pilgrim Church, its pastor, Dr. George R. Wallace, organized Thursday evening, May 27, a branch church, with 64 members, most of them recent converts. It is hoped that this branch, which is to have a pastor of its own, will develop into a strong self-supporting church. Pilgrim Church, under the earnest ministry of Dr. Wallace, is gaining in strength and influence and is already through its membership worthy a place in the first rank of our churches.

Fellowship Meetings

The North Shore churches have agreed to meet once a month for purposes of fellowship and the discussion of subjects of mutual interest. Their last meeting was with the Willamette Church, June 3. These gatherings are developing a spiritual power which promises much for the churches represented in them. The same day the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society connected with the Chicago Association met with the Second Church of Oak Park. The attendance was good. The reports and addresses were encouraging and interesting. Were the men in our churches as much in earnest in the gathering of funds as are the women the treasury of the American Board would not be empty and its officers confronted with the prospect of a debt or the curtailing of work which is almost equivalent to its destruction. The co-operating committee in Chicago is taxing its energies to the utmost to put before the churches of the Northwest information in regard to the nature and extent of the missionary service for which our churches are responsible, and, together with Secretary Hitchcock, to make an appeal to these churches for such an increase in their gifts as will make it possible, not only to close the year without debt, but to take at least a few forward steps in fields where we must either advance or retreat.

Memorial Day

One of the most significant events connected with the day this year in this city was the wheel race. For this elaborate preparations had been made. Hundreds entered for it. The interest taken in it reminded one of the interest taken in the Derby in England. The road race was won by W. D. Smedley, fifty-one years of age, the time race by a young man by the name of Henry O'Brien. Both made better time than the fastest trotter can make. Interest in the marching of veterans was slight compared to that manifested in this contest of the wheelmen.

Chicago, June 5. FRANKLIN.

A NOTABLE PHILOSOPHICAL CONCLAVE

Dr. W. T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, presiding at one of the sessions of the Symposium of Philosophy, held at Illinois College June 3, said he considered the occasion one of national importance, and for that reason had come all the way from Washington to be present. The occasion was the opening of the new chapel and library building presented to the college by Dr. Hiram K. Jones, the distinguished Platonist and founder of the Concord School of Philosophy, and for many years professor of philosophy in Illinois College. In his honor assembled a most notable body of distinguished men from the East as well as the West.

The principal addresses of the three sessions, which occupied the entire day and evening, were: The Public Uses of Philosophy, by Dr. Alexander Wilder of Newark, N. J.; The Development of Individuality and Individualism in Modern Thought, by Dr. James H. Tufts of the University of Chicago; Philosophy in the Higher Education, by Dr. H. K. Jones; and The Fruits of Philosophy, by Dr. Harris, a life-long friend of Dr. Jones. The discussions were participated in by President Wilder of Illinois Wesleyan University, Dr. Walter Smith of Lake Forrest University, Mr. Louis J. Block of Chicago, as well as many scholars of Jacksonville and vicinity.

M. E. C.

The Home

REALIZATION

Sometimes there comes a taste surpassing sweet
Of common things—the very breath I take;
A draught from some cool spring amid the brake;
The wheaten crust that I in hunger eat.

So I have thought that heaven, perhaps, is just
The uttermost perception of all good,
The spiritual rapture of this zest, refined;
An exquisite new taste of friendship, food,
The joys of love, the odors in the wind,
And all that now seems deadened by our dust.
—James Buckham.

The one incurable disease seems to be homesickness. It is this which gave our differing American birds and flowers the old familiar home names in the mouths of the first settlers. It is this which makes the shores or the mountains a dream of delight to the dwellers on the level prairies. Longing for home makes it impossible to keep the French soldiers more than three years abroad, and Kipling in a graphic tale has pictured the passionate remembrance of the London streets in the heart of a British soldier under the hot suns of India. Even Nansen found it difficult to overcome this nostalgia through the long Arctic winter, in spite of the comforts of his well-appointed ship, the Fram. In all the busy days there was no sickness but homesickness. With the homing pigeon's speed and the certainty of the birds' migration the heart returns to its old place. It depends upon women whether this strong passion shall be contented, and whether it shall strengthen with the growth of years and the progress of generations into a transforming power for the race. Those to whom it is given to be home-makers have a career as influential as any that the world affords, because it meets and satisfies the deepest of the instincts of humanity.

In the recently published life of Jowett, translator of Plato and master of Balliol College, Oxford, are many delightful glimpses of a unique character. There was a perennial spring of youthfulness about the man which was largely fed by the college surroundings of young life and his continual desire of helpfulness. "I grow more ambitious every year," he writes in his journal. "All my time, money, thoughts I would like to devote to gaining influence of the best kind and an increasing influence yearly. I must make the best arrangements—get young men and boys around me in the next ten years, neither spend money nor take pleasure except for the sake of health." Such an ambition in such a man could not fail to bear fruit, nor will a like ambition in the humblest of us fail in its due proportion. Lest we should think, however, that influence which is great is always easy, it may be well to note another sentence: "I ought to get rid of shyness, which has detracted at least one-third from my life." That touches a far too common hindrance but hints that even shy people may be influential if they will only make the effort in the service of an unselfish ambition.

It is no new departure for school-teachers in rural districts to introduce nature studies into grammar as well as primary and kindergarten schools. Increasing efforts are made every year to interest country children in our common birds and flowers. But a wild flower garden in connection with a city schoolhouse is a decided novelty. Six years ago the master of a school in the Roxbury District of Boston, who is an enthusiastic botanist, conceived this plan for familiarizing his boys and girls with plants and blossoms. Now there are 150 varieties of wild flowers growing in a bit of ground next to the schoolyard, and a fernery containing twenty different varieties has replaced the dismal clay bed by the front door. Many plants have been brought by pupils and teachers from places visited during vacations. Nor has the interest stopped here. Not a few children have fine gardens of their own and take pride in securing new varieties. Another effort to induce city pupils to cultivate flowers at home, in yards or even in window boxes is worth noting in this connection. The Woman's Improvement League in Minneapolis, assisted by the teachers, distributes packets of flower seeds every spring among children in the public schools. Quickened powers of observation, a delight in growing things and a love for the beautiful are among the fruits of such movements.

TEACHING AS A MAKESHIFT

BY JOHN WALCOTT

It is a fact not commonly known, even to those familiar with colleges and college life, that a very large proportion of college students arrive at the day of graduation without a distinct conception of what they want to do in life, much less of what they are going to be able to do. Some of them, possessed of indulgent fathers or elastic purses, put off the question for a time and remain in the beloved college atmosphere by continuing, as they will tell you frankly, to "work the educational racket." A far greater number, however, not being willing, or able, to linger over post-graduate study with no specific object in view, and unaffectedly anxious to be at something in the world, take the advice which certain well-meaning persons are always ready to give, and decide to teach for a year or two. They mean, perhaps, eventually to go into business, or to study medicine, or law, or theology, but the time seems not yet come and something must be done. Really, why should they not spend a year or two profitably and pleasantly enough on the teaching staff of some good school?

"There's not much money in it, but it will be a good experience for you," somebody says, or, "Better to get eight hundred teaching school than half that sweeping out an office. Try it a while, and something better may turn up."

Independently of advice the prospect is not without its attractions to the unwary young alumnus. What could be a more gradual change—since change must be—than to go from college to school? It is not so long since he was in school himself. As he looks back it seems to him it was rather a pleasant place. Some of the teachers were not all that might have been desired, to be sure, but—well, a fellow who has been fairly popular in college, and who is known to be of rather more than ordinary common sense is sure to succeed. Time will still be reckoned by terms, instead of by months; the number of hours on duty in the classroom will be comparatively few. It will be odd, indeed, if something of the flavor of college life should not go over into this new academic employment. Then there are to be still the long, luxurious vacations with rod or gun or wheel, on this side of the water or that, while the other fellows are grubbing in their stuffy offices or doing menial tasks in sweltering city hospitals. Decidedly, to take up teaching will be the easiest step possible.

This is all very pretty and comfortable, but it is sheer fallacy from beginning to end. There is in my imagination no conceivable step which will so overthrow all one's previous habits and theories of life as that from being taught in June to teaching in September. The business boy is obliged, it is true, to correct certain personal habits, such as dilatoriness and lack of method; but he is still, and probably for years will be, just what he has been—a subordinate. He is thrown wholly on his own responsibility only out of business hours. On the other hand, the young doctor, or lawyer, or minister is brought by the training of the professional school, naturally and by a gradual process, to maturity and a change of spirit before he takes up his serious life-work and becomes one having authority. But for this other there is no evolution; it is bald change. The step from the pupil's prescribed place to the august and self-ordered seat behind the desk means shock and strain and chagrin inevitably, perhaps utter failure.

At the very first the young teacher will take the matter as he thinks naturally. He will treat his boys as equals—joke with them, let a bit of his cherished college slang have its way, allow them such liberties, or even laxities, as (he thinks) he would have liked when he was a boy at school. This is a great mistake. There is nothing an average class of boys more thoroughly dislikes from the desk than familiarity. They would a thousand times rather have a teacher prosy, or goody-goody, or obtuse, or portentous and magniloquent to the point of bombast than have him forget what is due to his position. A teacher is, and should be, not a tyrant, indeed, but unmistakably a monarch. An emperor may chat with his subjects, but not from the throne. A judge may, on occasions, promulgate an awful jest (jest, mind you, not joke), but it must be a valid, ex cathedra and, as it were, venerable jest. No, trifling with the insignia of his office will not do. In the end the young teacher comes to respect the desk. He realizes that he is no longer a boy among boys, nor a man among men, nor even a college man among subfreshmen, and perhaps in that moment of disenchantment he ceases to be a college man and begins to be a man.

With this discovery comes a new danger. Feeling himself to be hopelessly arrayed against himself on the side of authority, this tyro is very likely tempted to make unwarranted use of the greatness which is thrust upon him. The boys will not laugh with him companionably in mere kindliness; he finds that they are always ready to laugh at each other, and so he comes to taste, at first with inward disrelish but presently with increasing satisfaction, the risky joys of sarcasm. Surely there is no more pitiful misuse of power than the sharp verbal fling with which the poor young teacher vents his spleen against himself and the world at the expense of the defenseless schoolboy, and yet it is a perfectly natural consequence of that first shocked feeling of isolation.

If the experience closes at this unlucky moment, if defeat is marked either by flight nto some other employment, or by a still more regrettable congealment into chronic rrogance and arbitrariness, the year or ears have been wasted indeed. Of course he amateur teacher may have reaped to imself some advantage in mental discipline, or, better, in the knowledge of his ailure, but—what about the boys? How will he answer for the moral culpability of his having wreaked his green and time-erving hand—not even to be seriously alled a prentice hand—upon so delicate n instrument as a boy?

Eventually there are other considerations which begin to admonish this mercenary. After two or three years he finds that his ffairs do not compare so favorably as at irst with those of his classmates who have ntered business or one of the active proessions. The time of sweeping offices is past for them. Many whom he knows to be his inferiors in general ability are beginning to reap the rewards of experience in ncreased salaries and larger openings. Looking forward, the lukewarm teacher is not made more zealous by the small possibility and still smaller probability which he future holds for him. His teaching has not advanced his chances in business, cerainly, nor can it in any way shorten the years of drudgery in the seminary or the aw school. Perhaps in the end the poor fellow is once more forced to leap in the dark, and to make the best of the small opening which a few years ago seemed to offer so little.

Fortunately, many who have taken up teaching as a makeshift learn to find satisfaction in it as a serious profession. They are not frightened by the prospect of comparative poverty. In times of business depression they take comfort in the possession of a sure stipend. And they have come, through the reactions and disheartenments of those first years, into a sober, whole-hearted relation to their pupils and their work. If not perfect freedom and equality, there is at least cordiality to be had and a warm though limited confidence between man and boy.

The ministry is no longer a makeshift with us. It has never been such to any considerable degree. The college man who is uncertain about entering this field at worst ends his experiment—if it is to be only an experiment—in the seminary. We want our college bred men in the teaching ranks, but we must have their whole allegiance. They must serve us, not in hasty relays, one crude installment following another, but with deliberate choice of, and faithful adherence to, one of the most serious and venerable, and therefore one of the most exacting, of professions.

CONVENIENCES MULTIPLIED

BY LILY RICE FOXCROFT

Not new conveniences added—the cooking schools and mechanics' fairs and institutes of domestic economy, the very peddlers at our gates, will take care that we do not overlook them; the "up-to-date" woman will be up-to-date in her kitchen as well as at her club—but the old, familiar, indispensable conveniences multiplied: more brooms and mops and dusters, on different floors and at different ends of the house, to save steps; more pans and skillets and mixing-bowls; more can-openers and lemon-squeezers, to prevent confusion and delay in the kitchen; more small dishes about the pantry, to set away odds and ends in. The average housekeeper loses time and strength and temper by stinting herself in just such simple things.

"Where shall I find a dustpan?" asks the tidy visitor, who has upset a vase of flowers on her carpet. "O, I believe the dustpan is downstairs," answers her hostess, and hurries off to fetch it. "I can't make my cake yet," says the oldest daughter, "Hannah is using the"—oven? No, indeed. "The egg-beater." "I don't know how to begin on these peaches," complains her sister, "we can't any of us find the paring-knife." "Mayn't I leave my stockings till after dinner?" begs the twelve-year-old, impatient for her Saturday playtime, "Elsie wants the darning-egg now."

The dust-pan! The egg-beater! The darning-egg! And not one of these articles of everyday necessity costing more than a quarter. "The dish towel," fortunately, is an expression that one does not hear. And yet there are many well-to-do households where the supply of towels and rollers, floor-cloths and dish-mops is not what it should be.

Tack hammers, too, and papers of tacks and nails and screw-drivers and corkscrews and gimlets ought to be more plenty. In fact, so far as these small, inexpensive conveniences are concerned each floor should be complete in itself; as to some of them each room should be. It is absurd to travel upstairs when scissors are wanted or downstairs for pen and ink. In a house of any size there should be three or four different places where one could be sure of finding needles, thread, black silk, scissors, a tape-needle and a thimble, and as many more where paper, envelopes, postal cards, newspaper wrappers, stamps, blotters, pens and ink would be in readiness. A pretty pin-holder would not misbecome even the reception-room, nor would a pencil-tray with pencils, a penknife and a tiny pad to jot down errands and memoranda.

Pencils in particular are so cheap that nobody ought ever to have to waste a minute looking for one. You cannot get so much abiding comfort out of a dime in any other way, unless you spend it for assorted rubber bands. Filing old receipts and letters, doing up the leggings and mittens for the summer, putting papers over your jelly bowls—all these are mere pastime if you can snap on the willing rubber instead of wrestling with the refractory string. But string has its uses too, and upstairs and downstairs both need their deposits of string, with wrapping paper hard by, and perhaps a wooden handle or two for those members of the family who are not too proud to avail themselves of such homely conveniences.

Scrap-baskets are as necessary in the nursery and sitting-room as in the library. Court plaster is as likely to be needed in one part of the house as another. Calendars are consulted everywhere. Time-tables ought to be as much a matter of course on suburban mantelpieces as match boxes. Mail cards are greatly appreciated by guests. Candles here and there are a convenience for new comers who have not learned the location of the gas jets. Paper-cutters, choice or cheap, one cannot have too many of. In summer there ought to be a fan within arm's length of every easy-chair in the house.

This is not a plea for lavishness and waste. "More things and cheaper—those we want," to paraphrase the poet. One silver button-hook costs as much as a dozen ordinary ones, and a dozen is a very fair allowance for a family of six, though eighteen would be better. One ornamental hat-pin would buy enough of plain steel to keep two all the time in every hat of every woman in the family, and save damage to both straw and temper. The cost—to speak of larger things—of one handsome clock would furnish every room in the house with a good, plain timepiece, and greatly promote the comfort of school children. So of thermometers.

With the lesser articles of wearing apparel the same principle holds. One need not use things extravagantly, or throw them aside without sufficient mending, merely because one has a good supply on hand. But not to be obliged to mend at once is often a great relief when other work is pressing. Of the small contrivances necessary to a summer toilet—studs, cuff-buttons, belt clasps, skirt-supporters, safety-pins, shoe-lacings and the like—one needs a number of duplicates to insure one against mishap. Quantity, rather than costliness, say comfort and common sense, and good taste will hardly quarrel with them—in hot weather.

OUT OF THE MOUTH OF INFANTS

Little Jesus, wast thou shy
Once, and just so small as I?
And what did it feel like to be
Out of heaven and just like me?
Didst thou sometimes think of there,
And ask where all the angels were?
I should think that I would cry
For my house all made of sky;
I would look about the air
And wonder where my angels were?
And at waking 'twould distress me—
Not an angel there to dress me!
Hadst thou ever any toys,
Like us little girls and boys?
And didst thou play in heaven with all
The angels that were not too tall,
With stars for marbles? Did the things
Play Can you see me? through their wings?
And did thy mother let thee spoil
Thy robes, with playing on our soil?
How nice to have them always new
In heaven, because 'twas quite clean blue!

Didst thou kneel at night to pray,
And didst thou join thy hands, this way?
And did they tire sometimes, being young,
And make the prayer seem very long?
And dost thou like it best that we Should join our hands to pray to thee?
I used to think, before I knew,
The prayer not said unless we do.
And did thy mother at the night
Kiss thee, and fold the clothes in right?
And didst thou feel quite good in bed,
Kissed and sweet and thy prayers said?
Thou canst not have forgotten all
That it feels like to be small;
And thou know'st I cannot pray
To thee in my father's way—
When thou wast so little, say,
Couldst thou talk thy Father's way?—
So, a little child come down
And hear a child's tongue like thy own;
Take me by the hand and walk,
And listen to my baby talk.
To thy Father show my prayer
(He will look, Thou art so fair),
And say: "O Father, I, thy Son,
Bring the prayer of a little one."

And he will smile, that children's tongue
Has not changed since thou wast young!

—Francis Thompson.

HAVE WOMEN NO IMAGINATION

"Women have no imagination," said Jones, as he laid down his newspaper.

"And why not?" asked Mrs. Jones, looking up from her stocking.

"I suppose because the Lord didn't mean they should."

"That's just a man's evasion. What makes you think that women have no imagination?"

"Well, just see here," and Mr. Jones picked up the paper again and read an item to the effect that Queen Victoria was to wear an aigrette of heron's feathers on her jubilee bonnet.

"I don't see where the imagination comes in. It looks to me like want of pity."

"Not a bit of it. Women who will weep briny tears over a dead bird at their feet seem utterly unable at the milliner's to imagine the mother bird shot on her nest and the nestlings starving. Women are pitiful enough, or the world would be dead of heart chill long ago, but they haven't the carrying power of pity which makes a sensitive man shudder when he sees a wild bird's plume on his sister's hat."

We may not agree with Mr. Jones in his opinion of women, but it is at least worth thinking about. Enlargement of the eyes of the mind is a necessary equipment for woman in the greater place which she is filling in the world's life. I. O. R.

HOME-MADE PROVERBS

BY HELEN A. HAWLEY

It would be interesting, if it were possible, to find out the number of persons who are influenced by those short, pithy, well-worn sentences which we call "proverbs." Some future statistician may enter upon the search, though even one endowed with indefatigable endurance would be appalled, perhaps, before its completion. This is only another way of saying that their influence is world-wide. It is a good influence, too, for the most part, as the majority of proverbs give wisdom and courage. Therefore he who sets another one afloat may be in a small way a benefactor.

Who does not know of wise saws which are the possession of families, and do not spread much beyond these narrow limits? Who does not sometimes hear words dropped with apparent carelessness, yet which are truly "words of wisdom"?

One day I sat by the bedside of a sick friend. He was too ill to write, and I was taking down, at his dictation, a letter to his sister. As I finished I handed him the envelope and said: "Wouldn't it be better for you to address it if you are able? Your sister might be alarmed at the strange superscription from this place."

He took the pen, then handed it back to me. "No," said he, "I have taught Fanny to open a letter and be afraid afterwards."

"Open a letter and be afraid afterwards!" I turned the words over and over in my mind. Here was a proverb to be laid away for future use. What memories of absolute terror came to me—terror at the sight of those fateful yellow envelopes, or of a special delivery stamp, yet how seldom had the message inside been anything alarming. "Open first—be afraid afterwards," that is, if there is anything to fear, but spare yourself needless apprehension. Ah! my new proverb covers more than mere telegrams or letters.

It looked like rain, the clouds were somewhat threatening.

"It's certainly going to pour, better not go over there tonight."

The man addressed quietly proceeded to put on his overcoat, answering with a smile, "My father used to say, 'Never let the rain stop you, until it does stop you!'" It is safe to conclude that he who follows such a rule will not be hindered in a right course by small difficulties.

Akin to this is one which came to my ears a few days ago. I was begging a friend not to run a risk which, in my opinion, was unnecessary. He did not agree with me as to his duty, and this was the brave reply: "If we took counsel of our fears, there would be very little done in the world."

There is another which I am tempted to add, though some may not deem it properly to be classed with the others. It is certainly a wise saying. I was experiencing the "night of faith," when a devoted Christian friend said to me: "You are holding on with all your might. Faith is not clinging; it is letting go!" Was not that a true word? For "underneath are the Everlasting Arms."

HYGIENIC HINTS

A piece of chamois skin placed inside the clothing next the skin is said to be a sure preventive for bed sores.

For binding up cuts and wounds linen, not cotton, should be used, as the fibers of cotton are flat and apt to irritate a sore place, while those of linen are perfectly rounded.

If housewives will remember that gelatine is used by medical men to attract germs, they will not be apt to place their jelly to cool before an open window without covering it with a piece of muslin.

A medical journal advises persons with shattered nerves not to go to the seashore for rest. There is something about the everlasting rolling in of wave after wave which suggests to some restless natures the ever-recurring cares and struggles of life.

"Bask in the sun all you can and you will seldom need medicine" is a wise bit of advice. A sun bath is a wonderful tonic for an invalid, and persons of sedentary habits whose work confines them within doors need to walk on the sunny side of the street and occasionally to steep themselves through and through with the delicious warmth.

Prof. W. O. Atwater, in an article in the June Century giving the results of dietetic experiments at Wesleyan University, says that the diet of a large number of people is out of balance. Persons whose labor is mostly mental and indoors are inclined to eat more than they need, and the special excess is due to the eating of fat meats, sugar and the starchy foods.

A Boston physician, in a recent article on pneumonia in Our Dumb Animals, claims that the giving of stimulants, frequent nourishment and the use of morphine are all wrong, and that instead plenty of fresh water should be drunk and cold compresses of ice, or ice water, should be kept on the chest. This treatment is given at the Massachusetts General Hospital and by other physicians with success.

The danger of contagion from fruit is not sufficiently realized. Persons who would never eat berries or dried fruits without thorough washing often buy apples or oranges at a fruit stand and bite into the skin without a thought of its uncleanliness. Parents frequently purchase fruit for their children at open fruit stands which are exposed all day to clouds of dust likely to contain disease germs. It is a good rule never to allow a bit of fruit to pass our lips which has not first been washed.

Closet and Altar

Power like character comes from the fountain of prayer.

O God, who art the truth, make me one with thee in everlasting love! I am often weary of reading and weary of hearing; in thee alone is the sum of my desire! Let all teachers be silent, let the whole creation be dumb before thee, and do thou only speak to my soul!—Thomas à Kempis.

My God, permit me not to be
A stranger to myself and thee;
Amidst a thousand thoughts I rove,
Forgetful of thy highest love.

Be earth with all her strife withdrawn;
Let noise and vanity be gone;
In secret silence of the mind,
My heaven, and there my God, I find.
—Watts.

We are far too little alone with God; and this, I am persuaded, is one of the very saddest features in our modern Christian living. It is work, work, work—at the very best some well-meant, Martha-like serving; but where are the more devoted Marys, who find the shortest, surest way to the heart of Jesus by ceasing very much from self-willed, self-appointed toils and sitting humbly at his feet to let him carry on his blessed work within ourselves? If the Mary-like method were carried out more, it might abridge considerably the amount of work apparently accomplished, but it would incomparably enhance the quality. What though we should lose a hundredweight and get instead of it only a pound—if the hundredweight lost were only lead and the pound gained were pure gold?—Methodist Times.

Father! replenish with thy grace
This longing heart of mine;
Make it thy quiet dwelling-place,
Thy sacred inmost shrine!
Forgive that oft my spirit wears
Her time and strength in trivial cares;
Enfold her in thy changeless peace,
So she from all but thee may cease!
—Angelus Silesius, 1657.

The unconscious knowledge of God is good, but it is not enough. We need, not only to know God, but to know that we know him. This is life eternal, this fills the soul with spiritual life.—J. F. Clark.

The soul in its highest sense is a vast capacity for God.—Henry Drummond.

Almighty God, we would rest in thine eternity, in our Father's sovereignty, in the throne of the one Majesty; because the Lord reigneth, the earth should be all sunshine and song and joy and worship. The riches of Christ Jesus are unsearchable riches, therefore we can never be poor and weak. Father, we would know the mystery of living wholly in thee and so dwelling in the world as to live apart from it. Even this miracle lies within the scope of thine almightiness. The Lord's own spirit, more beautiful than light, be with us: an inward glory, a lamp shining on the hidden parts that we may know what is right, not only in conduct but in thought, and live that interior, profound life, which the ever-blessed Spirit himself must approve. In our Saviour's name, infinite in excellency, we ask great things. Lord, if our prayer be great, thy throne is greater, thy cross is infinitely more. Amen.

Mothers in Council

PLAYING CHURCH

A rainy Sunday in one household is hailed with delight as an opportunity for having church at home. The little girl of ten and her brother a year younger have a large family to whom they always allude as "the loves." The name is appropriate, for every one of the forty, from the nine-years-old rag doll, as big as a baby, down to the little one-eared mouse, is truly "a love." It is a happy family, including dolls of all sizes, shapes and descriptions, goats, cats, dogs, rabbits, mice, a reindeer, a rooster and an elephant. It is needless to say that none of them are alive, otherwise there could hardly be such agreement and perfect harmony.

As the children go regularly to church in the morning and Sunday school in the afternoon, besides learning a passage of Scripture to repeat at evening prayers, they have little chance to give "the loves" proper religious instruction and it is a source of deep regret. Consequently, when there is a free Sunday morning, preparations for a church service are joyfully begun immediately after breakfast.

First, rows of chairs are arranged across the long parlor, a table is converted into a pulpit and a hymn-book of some description is placed in every other chair. Then toy money is prepared for the collection, for "a love" who had nothing to give when the opportunity was presented would feel hopelessly disgraced. The next step is the assembling of the congregation, and this is often a work of time, as the forty are sometimes widely scattered and it is considered very important that every member should be present. When at length all have been found and placed in their proper seats, with money at their side, the service begins with the singing of the Doxology. The children take turns in acting as minister, and the one who does not preach sits with the congregation, assisting to find the place in the hymn-books and in taking up the collection. The service is carried on exactly as in a real church and everything is conducted with reverence and propriety. Occasionally some one has to be rebuked for tumbling off his chair or lying down, but as a whole the congregation is remarkably quiet and well behaved. There are always notices read which are of interest to all present, and the sermon is often a model of clear thought, simple expression and forcible illustration.

A guest who chanced to be a witness of one of these services remarked: "I never before thought it worth while for children to go to church, as I didn't suppose they got anything out of the service. But it is evident that nothing has escaped these children, and it is really a pity that they haven't a congregation that could be benefited by the sermon."

They are only ordinary children, with more than an ordinary love for climbing, running, jumping and all kinds of outdoor sports and with a great dislike for sitting still. Yet, having been taken regularly to church, they have made the most of it, as we believe bright children always do. Some mothers feel that a church service is too sacred a thing to be imitated by children in their play, but these children never speak of playing church. It is always: "We are going to have church for 'the loves' today," and to them the service is very real and important. M. C. B.

ONE MOTHER'S ORIGINAL METHODS

I suppose that there are as many ways of discipline as there are mothers. I was visiting, not long ago, a friend who seemed to have a rather novel method of punishing her little children when they were naughty. She did not scold, but told them that they must sit for an hour in a certain chair in the parlor. So far it was an ordinary enough punishment; the part of it that surprised me was that the children could choose their own time for sitting still. Each used his or her baby judgment as to what would be the best time to take the punishment. When I was there little Jean was having a naughty spell, and I heard her mother say to her one night, when she had been especially unamiable, "Well, Jean, I think it is about time for you to begin to sit still, for you have twenty-four hours saved up now." I asked the meaning of this remark, and was told the family custom. The next morning little Jean went demurely into the parlor and seated herself in the most comfortable chair. There she stayed till dinner time, directly after which she went back and was still sitting there at four o'clock. Then her mother took pity on her and asked her which way she would prefer to finish her punishment, by sitting out the remaining hours another day or by then having a spanking instead of keeping still any longer. Little Jean thought about it and decided for the spanking. I think that she never again saved up so many hours of sitting still.

This friend had what seemed to me an equally interesting, though entirely different, manner of dealing with her older daughter, a girl in the last years of the high school. When Florence wanted her mother's consent to any plan, mother and daughter had a sort of conference over the matter to see what would be best, especially if the mother was not quite inclined to give her approval. Each brought forward the reasons and arguments of her side of the question, and the one who established the stronger case won the decision. I do not mean that they argued each other down, or anything like it, but fairly brought forward all the reasons at command in a serious, good-natured conference.

Probably not every one could use this mother's methods of discipline and discussion, but one thing is certain—this mother had well-behaved and lovable children. E. P. T.

THE SUNDAY HEN

Hickety, pickety, my black hen,
She lays eggs for gentlemen,
Gentlemen come every day
To see what my black hen doth lay.

It cannot be claimed that this is a perfectly accurate description of the hen of which I am about to tell you, though it is often quoted of her. She is not black and she lays for the one little lady of the family quite as much as for her four brothers, and indeed is not satisfied until the contents of her nest have been shared by every member of the household, and many is the guest who will remember the Sunday hen.

Her nest is not inspected every day as was that of the black hen of the Mother Goose ditty, for our hen was never known to lay except on Sundays, holidays and birthdays, but especially felicitous is the jingle's description of the uncertainty concerning the character of the eggs. No one can tell in advance what our hen is to lay, and the young gentlemen who came every day were never more curious to know what they would find than are the little people who surround our table. Our hen came to us about two years ago, or rather we found her in a tea store on Washington Street. She is made of white glass, the cover being the hen and the dish part the nest, and was intended for boiled eggs, but we have a far better use for her.

At dinner on Sunday, after the plates are removed, the hen is brought in, nest and all. This is the last course, and you may be sure it is the one most eagerly anticipated. It not infrequently happens that the contents are furnished by the one whose privilege it is to prepare them, and this privilege is shared by the children in turn. We do not think it well for them to eat much candy, yet occasional indulgence at meal time is not discouraged. Therefore most of our confectionery comes from the nest of the dear old hen, and she has been known to guard her secret faithfully for two or three days before Sunday, when by some good fortune the one who was to fill her has come into possession of the "eggs" for having run an errand for a neighbor. This was the case last week, when the lifting of the hen from her nest revealed salted peanuts and a candy fish, deposited there by the little six-year-old, gladly purchased for the common enjoyment with his own hard-earned pennies.

There is just one more important thing about our hen, and that is that no one must disturb her before the proper time. It is considered very dishonorable to "peek," and the one who does it almost forfeits his share in the eggs.

It really takes very little to make or mar the happiness of children, and our hen has proved of so much worth as a producer of joy that I thought some others might like to make their little people happy in the same way. MRS. W. E. BARTON.

TOMORROW AND TODAY

Tomorrow hath a rare, alluring sound;
Today is very prose; and yet the twain
Are but one vision seen through altered eyes.
Our dreams inhabit one; our stress and pain
Surge through the other. Heaven is but today
Made lovely with tomorrow's face, for aye.

—Richard Burton in the June Century.

THE RAREST STAMP IN EXISTENCE

This precious possession of a Washington dealer in curios is one of the Confederate "provincials," used by cities and towns in the Southern States soon after the beginning of the Civil War and before the regular adhesive stamps were issued by the Confederate Government. Every post office used its own local stamps and many of them have become extremely scarce. Of this rarest of all the Boston Globe says:

> The distance a letter had to go often regulated the amount charged, and when adhesive locals were not to be had the postmaster simply stamped the name of the postoffice on one corner of the envelope, and within the circle the word "paid," together with the amount. On the opposite corner of the letter were stamped the town and the date, which served as the postmark, the other being the postage. This was the case with the stamp in question.
>
> The newly discovered stamp, which was hitherto absolutely unknown to those who made a study of stamps and a business of collecting them, was issued April 10, 1861, by the postmaster at Milledgeville, Ga. It originally cost the sender of the letter ten cents. Its discovery came about in an interesting manner. The local dealer has an intimate friend who travels extensively through the South. Recently, while in a Georgia town, the friend was discussing war relics and mementos with a gentleman, and the difficulty the southern people experienced in getting stationery during war times. A package of old envelopes was produced, showing some made of common brown paper, others of ordinary wall paper cut out in the form of an envelope and pasted together, and many which had been turned inside out and used to convey a communication a second time.
>
> Among a number of more or less value was the Milledgeville ten-cent stamp of 1861. It was used by Mrs. Peter J. Williams, of Milledgeville, to convey a letter to her daughter, Mrs. Charles J. Williams, at Columbus, Ga. By a singular coincidence the younger Mrs. Williams, just two years later, in 1863, had reversed the envelope to inclose a letter to her mother at Milledgeville, bearing the adhesive Confederate stamp which had then come into general use.
>
> The stamp was obtained for a trifle and turned over to the Washington dealer. It was a new one to him. In all his long experience in dealing in stamps he had neither seen nor heard of the Milledgeville ten-cent variety.

The secret of life is not to do what one likes, but to try to like that which one has to do; and one does come to like it—in time.—D. M. Craik.

The Conversation Corner

DEAR CORNERERS: Last week we cornered Putnam descendants from distant parts of the country but here is a little bit of a letter which got tucked down one side in my drawer and only came to sight two minutes ago:

CLINTON, MO.

Dear Mr. Martin: I want to be a Cornerer. I know something about Israel Putnam. My Grandfather went into the cave where Israel Putnam killed the woolf. It was very dark. It first went downward into the ground then it was levil a little way then it was a little rough. Israel Putnam is my grate-grate-grate-uncle. Good-by. ALMA P.

I "guess" the cave would have seemed a little rougher if the Putnam who crawled in had expected a greeting from a growling, angry "woolf"! Of course this Missouri girl is cousin to the Oklahoma and California members mentioned last week. Now I have three letters from three different States—only one is not a State at all—whose writers are not satisfied without going right back to the Mayflower and Plymouth Rock.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

. . . I enjoy the Corner very much. We are descendants of the Brewsters. I would like to know where we can find dates of Miles Standish, and if Josias was his son. He is our ancestor. He is buried in Duxbury MRS. C.

Justin Winsor's history of Duxbury—a rare book now, but to be found in large libraries—has notes of the early generations of the Standish family, and there is a recently published genealogy bringing down some branches to living descendants. Capt. Josiah was the fourth son of Capt. Myles, and he had a Josiah, as well as a Myles, a Samuel, an Israel, a Mary, a Lois, a Mehitabel, a Martha and a Mercy.

ATLANTA, GA.

Dear Mr. Martin: Although I have lived in the South for nearly seven years, I am descended from the old "Pilgrim Fathers." Elder Brewster, Gov. Prince and Stephen Hopkins were ancestors of my father, while my mother is lineally descended from Miles Standish. ROSE STANDISH D.

If Rose ever comes to the Old Bay State and will visit the Corner Cabinet I will show her a bit of a brick from Elder Brewster's chimney and of stone from Capt. Standish's well. What a lot of cousins she must have—since I began this Corner a young bicycle rider called on me, and assured me that he was descended from Elder Brewster in two lines!

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dear Mr. Martin: I noticed that in the Corner of May 13 you spoke of the "Mayflower Log." If any Cornerer would like to see a photograph of it let him look in the Scientific American for May 8. You see I am personally interested in it because I am the ninth in direct descent from Governor Bradford. Do you suppose that there is any way to induce people to stop calling it the "Log of the Mayflower"? For, as you said, it is not a log-book at all. FAITH B.

The calling it a "log" began in England; it was, in fact, the term employed in the legal decree of the London court. The Illustrated London News speaks of "William Bradford, who kept the log of the Mayflower," as though the future governor of the colony was the sailing master of the little old ship. I have looked up the picture referred to above, but do not care for it, for I have seen the book itself!

Fortunately, I was in Boston on the day of its transfer (May 26), but knew that the exercises under the "gilded dome" were only open to the legislature and a few guests specially invited by the governor—and his Excellency evidently had not noticed the name of "Mr. Christopher Martin" registered by Bradford among the Mayflower passengers (right after "Captin Myles Standish, and Rose, his wife") and was not aware of my close relationship to "Mistris Alice Bradford" (let Faith B. note this) so that I was not specially invited! But having a historical errand at the State House I went up (with a friend) to do it and, of course, waited to see the procession, headed by the sergeant-at-arms with his white mace and including the handsome governor, the distinguished ambassador, the eloquent orator and the specially invited guests, pass pompously by. Well, somehow or other, when they had passed into the House of Representatives, and it was announced that there was "room for fifteen more," we were right on hand and passed in too! The "room" was standing room against the wall, but "the member from Greenfield," who chanced to sit near, was courteous enough to secure me a camp-chair beside his desk—if any of our Cornerers live in that town I wish they would thank him for his kindness.

I wonder if all our Corner members know about this remarkable book and what makes it remarkable. It is not a printed book at all, but a small manuscript volume, in which Governor William Bradford, two hundred and fifty years ago, wrote down his account "Of Plimoth Plantation." It is really the only reliable history of the Pilgrims' exile from England and their settlement on the wild shores of the new world. Early New England historians quoted largely from it. In 1728 Governor Bradford's grandson (Faith's very great-grandfather) gave the manuscript to Thomas Prince, pastor of the Old South Church, who placed it in his famous library, kept in the "steeple chamber" of that meeting house. Governor Hutchinson used it about 1767, in publishing his history. After that it disappeared—how and where no one knows. Perhaps the Tory governor carried it to England with his own books. As Mr. Prince's will provided (in bequeathing his library to the church) that no books should be borrowed therefrom, it has been supposed that the British soldiers who occupied the old meeting-house on the corner of Milk Street as a riding school carried it off in 1776 to Halifax, as they carried other books of the library (including Bradford's "Letter Book"), and that thence it was sent to England.

About forty years ago a Boston scholar discovered in an English history a quotation from Bradford's history, recognized by readers of the early New England histories, but credited to "a manuscript history in the Fulham Library." This led to the discovery of Governor Bradford's original manuscript in the Bishop of London's palace, at Fulham on the Thames. He permitted an exact copy to be made, which was published in 1856 in Boston, and so has become familiar to students of our early history.

All this and much more was told in a thrilling way by Senator Hoar of Massachusetts in his splendid address, including the story of the attempt, now successfully accomplished, to secure the book itself. The Senator himself was the principal instrument of bringing it about, by visiting the Lord Bishop of London (introduced to him by Mr. Grenfell, I think a relative of our Deep Sea Mission Dr. Grenfell), and securing his promise that he would consult the Archbishop of Canterbury and "speak to the Queen about it"! Mr. Hoar was very eloquent in his description of what he called "the most precious manuscript on earth," and of its record of the perils and sufferings of the Pilgrims in the wilderness for freedom's sake—"there is nothing like it in human annals since the story of Bethlehem"!

Mr. Bayard—remember and call him Bi'yard—our late ambassador to Great Britain, who, by the decree of the "Consistorial Court of London," was charged with bringing the book to the Governor of Massachusetts, before delivering it spoke of the long legal process and of the precedent on which the Court justified their action. It was this: over a hundred years ago a library society in Philadelphia returned to the English Government some manuscripts belonging to the reign of James I. That long forgotten incident has now its reward in the return of this priceless treasure to our country. "A generous or kindly deed is never unwise between individuals or nations." The whole assembly arose as the ambassador presented the package to Governor Wolcott, who made an eloquent reply, and afterwards took off the wrapper and showed the opened book.

I have postponed some letters which I know children expected this week, and overrun our Corner with this story, because I thought you all ought to know about it, and would be thus interested—in due time—to read for yourselves the Pilgrim history, the long-lost manuscript of which has in such a remarkable way come back to the city whence it was taken so long ago. It will do you good to be told over and over again the story of those who have been heroic and brave for a good cause, whether in 1621 or 1861—and help you to be heroic in 1901 or in 1921! I stopped in the midst of this writing and went into a public school close by, which had a patriotic hour in anticipation of Memorial Day. An old soldier told of his experience at Fort Wagner and of Colonel Shaw—another hero you will read much about at this time—and you ought to have heard the children cheer as the veteran showed them his medal, and heard them sing at the close,

Land where my fathers died,
Land of the Pilgrims' pride,
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring!

Mr. Martin

P. S. I had quoted in this column the closing sentences of Senator Hoar's address at the State House upon the Bradford manuscript, beginning, "Wherever it shall go it will be an object of reverent curiosity," so that you might preserve it in your Scrap-books and perhaps use it sometime for a declamation. But just now, as I am reading the proof, D. F. informs me that the same extract appears at the close of Mr. Dexter's fine account of the ceremonies in last week's Congregationalist, page 802. Be sure and save that passage for future reference, indexing it Bradford's History in your Scrap-book. MR. M.

The Sunday School

Lesson for June 20 Rom. 14: 10–21

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The epistle to the Romans may be outlined as follows:

1. Paul proves that all mankind are sinners —Gentiles and Jews also.

2. That sinners may be reckoned as righteous in the sight of God, through faith in Jesus Christ.

3. That sinners reckoned as righteous may be made holy through the work in them of the Holy Spirit.

4. The rest of the epistle, after showing that God, in providing the way by which Gentiles might be reckoned as righteous, also included Jews, consists of directions for the holy living of justified believers.

Probably this part of the letter was prompted by questions which deeply agitated primitive Christians, some of which may have been sent to Paul with the request that he should answer them. We should study the section including ch. 14: 1 to 15: 13. Jews and Gentiles were in the same church. Jews had grown up in the belief that it was wrong to eat the meat of animals butchered by Gentiles, or which had been offered to idols, and that it was wrong to sit at the same table with Gentiles. They had been trained to believe in the necessity and sacredness of Jewish laws concerning the Sabbath. They could have lived by themselves and had peace of conscience. But how could they live in loving fellowship with those who made no account of the rules which they felt that they ought to obey? And how could Gentiles keep in loving fellowship with Jews whose habits, if not their words, kept reminding them that they were regarded as living unrighteously?

Some sought to avoid the difficulty by eating no meat at all, only vegetables, and eating by themselves, and probably they kept the Sabbath after the Jewish fashion and perhaps the Lord's Day also. These were the weak ones. Others, with hearty faith in Christ, cared nothing about Jewish laws distinguishing between clean and unclean food, between the Sabbath and other festival days and days without holy names. They ate everything they wanted and thanked God for it all. They served Christ every day and made no distinction, esteeming every day alike. They were inclined to look with pity not unmixed with contempt on their Jewish brethren, with whose scruples they had no sympathy; these in turn were shocked by the freedom of Gentile disciples, which seemed very much like the license of unbelievers.

Many of the questions which then seemed so important have no meaning to us. But others have taken their places and many believers are not less perplexed by them than the primitive Christians were with their questions. Is it right for Christians to dance, to play cards, to go to the theater, to ride a bicycle on Sunday? Still more vital are these questions: May a Christian smoke, drink wine or beer? Some professing Christians do these and other things concerning which there are divided opinions. Many more have decided that these things are sins against God, and churches have passed rules forbidding any of their members to commit what are regarded as sins. Others have decided that if these things are not wicked in themselves, they are not right for any one under present conditions. They give strong reasons for their positions. To these reasons every Christian ought to give candid thought. It does not follow, because they are not in the Bible, that they are not conclusive, only that they are not authoritative.

We find, however, that the apostle did not lay down rules concerning the questions of common habits which had been presented to him. He did not attempt to quote the Scriptures to answer them, nor even the decision of the council at Jerusalem, which had assumed to settle some of them. But in the passage we are considering he laid down these four principles:

1. Don't judge your brethren. Paul seems to have most in mind those who are not troubled about the questions. He says to them, Fellowship your weak brother, but don't undertake to decide his doubts for him [v. 1]. Let him hold himself aloof from common customs and feed on vegetables and keep the Jewish Sabbath. Then he turns to the weak brother and says to him, Don't set up your standard of living for your brother who eats all things and regards all days alike. He is not your servant but Christ's. Before him he will stand or fall. Don't think, either, in your heart that he is sure to fall, "For the Lord hath power to make him stand." You both profess to be servants of Christ. Let each believe the other honest. Neither will escape just judgment. "Each one of us shall give account of himself to God."

2. Help all your brethren. You all are brethren, Paul said. I know through knowledge given me by the Lord Jesus that these things are not wrong in themselves [v. 14]. But any one who thinks it is wrong to do them sins if he does them. Therefore, if you do them, don't parade your freedom before those who think them wrong. Don't invite an evil reputation among weak brethren. The eating is not of itself important, nor the drinking either; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost are of prime importance, and if you truly seek these great things which are the kingdom of God you will find that both God and men approve of you [v. 18].

3. Understand the meaning of Christian service. It consists in building up the kingdom of God. Eating meat and drinking wine are small matters when they become questions of what and where and how you shall eat and drink. You live to do the work of God. Don't overthrow it for the sake of any habit, however sure you are that it is right [v. 20]. To do that is to do evil.

4. Deny yourself for the sake of others. It is better to deny yourself meat, or wine, or any other thing by the use of which you would make your brother do wrong. Stand squarely on your own faith in God. Don't insist that your brethren shall test their faith by the same conditions by which you test yours, and don't measure your faith by the conditions which they set up. You are fortunate if all your habits stand approved by your own conscience. But if you are in doubt as to the righteousness of any of these habits, you are doing wrong to practice them. Whatever you do, as a Christian you must do it to the glory of God. So doing others have no right to judge you, and you have no right to judge others. You may safely and contentedly commit yourself and them to him before whose judgment seat we all must stand and give an account of ourselves.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, June 13–19. The Church's World-Wide Field. John 1: 40–46; Mark 5: 18–20; Luke 24: 44–49; Acts 8: 1–8.

The field at our doors. In our own land. Everywhere.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Copeland & Day. Boston.

NEW POEMS. By Francis Thompson. pp. 139. $1.50.

IN TITIAN'S GARDEN By Harriet Prescott Spofford. pp. 108. $1.25.

PATRINS. By Louise Imogen Guiney. pp. 334. $1.25.

Roberts Bros. Boston.

HIRED FURNISHED. By Margaret B. Wright. pp. 455. $1.25

THE LIFE AND WORK OF FREDERIC THOMAS GREENHALGE. By James E. Nesmith. pp. 456. $3 00.

Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Boston.

M. TULLI CICERONIS CATO MAIOR DE SENECTRITE. With notes by C. E. Bennett. pp. 129. 60 cents.

Harper & Bros. New York.

THEORY OF THOUGHT AND KNOWLEDGE. By Borden P. Bowne. pp. 389. $1 50

AN EPISTLE TO POSTERITY. By M. E. W. Sherwood. pp. 380. $2.50.

THE PURSUIT OF THE HOUSE-BOAT. By John K. Bangs. pp. 204 $1 25.

SWEET REVENGE. By F. A. Mitchell. pp. 248. $1.00.

Baker & Taylor Co. New York.

THE ROMANCE OF A JESUIT MISSION By M. Bourchier Sanford. pp 292. $1.25.

Macmillan Co. New York.

CASTLE MEADOW. By Emma Marshall. pp. 286. $1.25.

Thomas Whittaker. New York.

OLIVER CROMWELL. By R. F. Horton, D.D. pp. 208. $1.25.

Eaton & Mains New York.

THE SACRED FEAST. By George Lester. pp. 68. 35 cents.

Funk & Wagnalls Co. New York.

THE STORY OF JONAH. By Luther T. Townsend, D.D. pp. 119. 50 cents.

Edward Arnold. New York.

THE TREATMENT OF NATURE IN DANTE'S "DIVINA COMMEDIA." By L. O. Kuhns. pp 208. $1.50.

J. S. Ogilvie Pub Co. New York.

THE LOWLY NAZARENE. By J. Leroy Nixon. pp. 308. $1.00.

Vir Pub. Co. Philadelphia.

WHAT A YOUNG BOY OUGHT TO KNOW. By Sylvanus Stall, D.D. pp. 190. $1 00.

A. C. McClurg & Co. Chicago.

NOTES ON THE NICARAGUA CANAL. By H. I. Sheldon. pp 214. $1 25

PAPER COVERS

Ginn & Co. Boston.

VERTICAL ROUND HAND WRITING BOOKS, Nos. 1 to 7. By H. W. Shaylor. 90 cents per dozen.

MAGAZINES

May. PULPIT.—OUR DAY.—SOUTH AFRICAN PIONEER.

June. CATHOLIC WORLD.—NEW WORLD.—PALL MALL.—POCKET.—LIPPINCOTT'S.—HOMILETIC.—BOOKMAN.—SAILOR'S.—NEW ENGLAND.—INTERNATIONAL.—THE BOOK BUYER.—TEMPLE.—MCCLURE'S—COLONIAL TRACTS.—CHAUTAUQUAN.—PREACHER'S.—OUR ANIMAL FRIENDS.—CENTURY.—PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.—BOOK NEWS.

A good rule—"Buy the Best."

Cleveland's

Baking Powder

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD"
packages 25 cents. Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.
GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

BABIES THRIVE ON IT.

GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK.

OUR ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET ENTITLED "BABIES" SHOULD BE IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD. SENT ON APPLICATION.
NEW YORK CONDENSED MILK CO. NEW YORK.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

A COLLEGE Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY FOR CHINA

A few years ago the leading missionaries of all denominations in China, headed by Dr. H. C. Blodgett of the American Board Mission in Peking, appealed to the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. to undertake work for the student and literary classes of China. They spoke of the 500,000 students studying for the first degree, the 150,000 studying for the second, the 10,000 studying for the third—these corresponding to our degrees of Bachelor, Master and Doctor. This unparalleled opportunity was equaled, to be sure, by the difficulty of the work, but in 1895 the international committee answered the call by sending out D. Willard Lyon. Such progress had he made that last fall John R. Mott was able to organize the College Y. M. C. A. of China, which embraces twenty-seven associations in both government and Christian institutions. The national committee is composed of seven missionaries, such as Dr. D. Z. Sheffield and B. C. Atterbury, M. D., and seven scholarly Chinamen. The conferences held by Mr. Mott at Chefoo, Peking, Shanghai and Foochow were attended by 2,400 Chinese delegates and 411 missionaries, the largest and most representative assemblies ever seen in China.

Upon returning to New York Mr. Mott's first care was to secure a coadjutor for Mr. Lyon, in order that the movement so auspiciously inaugurated might not lack the leadership essential to its continued success. He selected one fitted by long training for such a post—Robert E Lewis of Boston. After graduation at the University of Vermont, he became secretary at St. Johnsbury, where within two years the membership grew from 313 to 500. While serving as aide-de-camp to Gen. J. J. Estey, he inaugurated the Military Christian Association for militiamen. In 1894 he became college secretary for Massachusetts and Rhode Island, but resigned in 1895 in order to devote his entire time to the work which he had started among the professional students of Boston, the second largest student center in the United States. Within eight months there were six associations organized with 287 members, of whom seventy were in student Bible classes.

In July, 1896, he accepted the position of traveling secretary of the student volunteer movement. During the past six months he has visited 124 colleges, addressed 12,000 students, and held 325 interviews with students about their life work. Although great caution has been exercised, and none are allowed to sign in public, over 800 volunteers for foreign missions have enrolled, and $50,000 will be given by students to the mission work of their boards.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis will sail next September for Tientsin, where he will have headquarters in the college Y. M. C. A. building, recently erected by an American lady.

A PROGRESSIVE A. M. A. SCHOOL IN NEW ORLEANS

Straight University has been enlarging the scope of its services to the colored people. Under its auspices a series of popular meetings were held in its chapel, May 3, 10 and 17, to discuss the Unusual Death Rate, the Industrial Condition, and Methods of Improvement and Progress, and Public Education.

The large and intelligent audiences of both white and colored were a gratifying indication of the growing appreciation of the subjects under consideration. The presence at the opening meeting and address of the mayor of the city, Hon. Walter C. Flower, who represents the best culture and the best traditions of the South, was something new. The officers of the charity organization of the city, which is doing a noble work and is instituting a free kindergarten system, were present to encourage the movement.

A special feature of the meeting on education was the address of Mr. Andrew H. Wilson, a member of the city school board. He said the school board had great interest in the schools for the colored people, and would always be found willing to assist them.

The underlying idea of the movement is university extension. The method adopted is to throw each subject open for general discussion after its presentation by some competent person or expert. The plan worked well in realizing the double aim of imparting useful knowledge and in arousing general interest. There is also the further purpose of bringing into united and organized effort for the general good the graduates and other intelligent young people from our various schools who, as individuals, are liable to be lost in the multitude.

The meetings were quite fully reported by the city dailies with favorable editorials. The ultimate aim is to extend the movement throughout the State.

THE WORLD AROUND

Mrs. Bishop's Testimony for Missions. If any additional confirmation of the value of missions were needed, it could be supplied from the testimony of Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, the renowned traveler and author. During her three years in the far East she has made special personal observations of mission stations and work in China and Japan and Korea, and since her return to England she has borne public witness more than once to the fidelity of the missionaries whom she has met, and to the merit of their services. She gives especial praise to several missionary hospitals, notably those of the Scotch mission in Manchuria, the English Presbyterians at Swatow and the Church Missionary Society at Hangchow. She also commends warmly the educational and religious aspects of mission work as she has examined it in the Orient. She has brought back with her no fewer than twelve hundred photographs. The testimony of an observer so well equipped in respect to knowledge both of the world and of mankind is worth the sober heed of those who decry missionaries.

Uganda. Bishop Tucker, addressing large audiences in England recently, stated that an enormous change has taken place in the once terrible conditions under which the natives in east equatorial Africa lived when white men first penetrated into the country. Whereas there was only one church in Uganda in 1890, there are now 361, and the congregations number 25,000. There are also 60,000 adherents under instruction, and education is rapidly spreading. In addition to eleven native clergymen there is a staff of native lay workers wholly supported by native contributions. The Scriptures have now been translated wholly into Ugandese. Eager to learn, the natives are equally zealous to carry the gospel news abroad. It is hoped ere long to penetrate the dark forests where Stanley found the pigmies, more than one of this race being under instruction with a view to return as teachers to their own people. Commenting on these triumphs, Mr. Stanley says that twenty years have passed since he stood on a little island in the midst of Victoria Nyanza and wondered how long it would be before the country was permeated by the ethics of a higher humanity, and today one-half his vision was realized. With the completion of the railway from Mombasa to Victoria Nyanza he believed that another twenty years would see the peoples of the south shaking hands with those of the north, instead of shaking their spears with murderous intent.

FRESH FACTS

During the past year the total income of the London Missionary Society, including contributions to the centenary fund (£10,039), Indian famine (£5,606) and Bechuana relief fund (£603), was £153,061. The year closes with an adverse balance of £7,851.

The Baptist Missionary Magazine for May states that in the Congo region in Africa the men are beginning to help the women in field work, which hitherto they have held to be degrading. This may seem a trifle to some, but to the well-informed it is a very significant proof of the healthful social charge which the entrance of Christianity is bringing to pass.

At the second annual General Assembly of Evangelical Workers in Mexico Rev. J. D. Butler, D. D., read a strong paper on Comity, enforcing the duty and the privilege of proper mutual consideration and co-operation for the sake of both economy and efficiency. An earnest appeal for the districting of territory among the different societies was made, and the conference indorsed the paper by vote. The policy advocated ought to have been the rule in both home and foreign missions as a matter of course from the outset.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, June 20-26. Our Brothers' Keepers. Gen. 4: 3-16.

Daniel Webster once said that the most impressive thought that ever entered his mind was that of his personal accountability to God. Solemn as this thought is, that of our responsibility for our brethren is only a little less momentous. Jesus laid almost as much emphasis upon the business of religious people to look out for others, especially for the erring and fallen, as he did upon achieving the salvation of one's own soul. The trouble with the Pharisees was that they thought of religion as a means of getting for themselves the favor of God and "despised others." Jesus, with his great doctrine of the brotherhood of man, swept away class and racial distinctions. Selfishness in religion was to him the worst form of selfishness. We need to read over and over again the parable of the prodigal son, and not to miss the main point of the story, which was to rebuke a self-satisfied virtue that felt contaminated by contact with publicans and sinners.

We are not our brothers' keepers in the sense that we are to regulate all their acts and settle for them all details of opinion. We are not to be tactless and officious in the way in which we express our sense of accountability for them. But we are responsible first of all for their good name, to defend it where we honestly can from abuse and misrepresentation, to put a kindlier construction upon their behavior than the world is apt to do. We are keepers also of our brother's faith in himself. Unless we can somehow keep that alive in him he is sure to stumble and fall. More than one man has been kept from perdition by the thought that his mother in a distant country town or across the sea still believed in her wandering boy. Most of all we must preserve our brother's faith in God. We must try so to interpret even the sorrows and woes of his life that behind them he can still discover the face of a loving Father in heaven. What a responsibility and what a privilege, too, it is to help add to the sum total of a man's faith in God. To minister to his body, and to deny one's self some personal gratification for his sake, may often be the way in which he learns that there is one above who cares for him.

The question which guilty Cain heard, and at which he trembled, rings down through the centuries and may some day sound in our ears when at the last God shall ask us, "Where is thy brother—the man whom I put near you in order that you might save him? Where is that neighbor, that companion of your student days, that man with sorrowful eyes who accosted you on the street and whom you impatiently put one side?" What shall we say when God requires of us the brother for whom, as well as for us, Jesus died?

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

DRS. BEHRENDS AND BRIGGS ON THE BIBLE

The first of the two books before us, The Old Testament Under Fire, by Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D. D., might be dismissed briefly if it did not point so important a lesson. The Old Testament is under fire from friends as well as foes, and it proves its vitality by surviving defenses not less than attacks. Dr. Behrends has ceased to care, he tells us, for the fifty or sixty men who assume to have the monopoly of scholarship. But doubtless he cares for the thousands of his countrymen who have a jealous eye to the honor of the American ministry. One cannot but respect the eminent author's straightforward attitude, and one is drawn to him still more by the frank revelation of his desperate inward conflict on this subject. If Dr. Behrends could know how many such struggles—not as intense, perhaps, but as real—are being experienced by his Christian brethren of opposite critical convictions he would cross hands instead of swords with them.

One of the fundamental errors of his book is its conception of the critics assailed as holding a sort of religion, which is put to shame if inconsistencies are found among its followers or "concessions" extorted from them. In truth, criticism is a science, which deals in probabilities, and proceeds by continual revision and readjustment. The true critic does not always stop to say, but he always means: "My assertion today is my best explanation of the data accessible; tomorrow may reverse it." The problems of Biblical criticism demand patient, reverent investigation for years, perhaps decades, until the results of a multitude of honest workers can be tested and co-ordinated. It was partly the fear of what would happen meanwhile that drove Dr. Behrends into print. But, according to his own statement:

> Destructive criticism discredits its own results by its unhistorical and unscientific assumptions; and as the foundations are laid in the quicksand, the elaborate superstructure is doomed to collapse without the cost and the fatigue of bombardment [p. 24].

Why, then, this bombardment from him? Moreover, these critics are being watched by other scholars, like Professor Beecher on this side of the Atlantic and Professor Robertson on the other.

Let us turn to a few of the many "utterances which defy both fact and logic" [p. 141]. As to logic, the following sample may serve:

> When it is remembered how jealously the Jews, 200 years before Christ, guarded their sacred writings, and what superstitious reverence they paid them, what recondite meanings Philo found in names and numbers, we must be permitted to believe, and we cannot resist the positive conviction, that those early students were better equipped to pass judgment upon questions of authorship and date than are we [p. 87].

A typical instance of utterances which defy fact is the writer's use of the El-Amarna and the Hammurabi tablets. The former he dates during Joshua's conquest.

> These tablets mention the Hebrews as invaders, and they speak definitely of Jerusalem and of its king, Ebed-Tob, a royal priest, whose name Major Conder translates as Adonizedek, the equivalent of Melchizedec, "king of justice." . . . Thus from the sands of the Nile and from the mounds of Assyria [this last refers to Hammurabi] rise the long-buried bricks, which prove the fourteenth chapter of Genesis, confidently relegated by the critics to the realm of legend, to be simple, straightforward history. Down goes the whole legendary fabric at a touch, and it is critically certain that Abraham is no myth [p. 156 f.].

On the question whether Abraham was a myth we support the negative, but our author in accepting the myth that has grown up around El-Amarna is leaning on a broken reed.

Parallel to this error is his assurance that the critics have been thoroughly overthrown on New Testament ground. There is no Hommel to popularize the present contests in that field. We will say nothing about Harnack, who is depicted as tolling the knell of Wellhausen and his legions, although we regard Dr. Behrends's confidence as excessive. But we cannot help regretting occasional, we might truly say frequent, lapses in these discourses from that calmness and caution of utterance so essential in the discussion of such a theme. We are obliged to add that the list of books commended to students of the subject includes some which cannot be ranked as important and omits some whose value should have been recognized by their mention. [Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1 00.]

Dr. Briggs's volume, The Higher Criticism of the Hexateuch, is a new edition of his well known work, reviewed in these columns 30 March, 1893. His manner also lacks urbanity, and he sometimes discredits his cause by what can only be called unfairness of judgment. For instance,

> Prof. W. Henry Green gives himself away when he says: "The author frankly confesses for himself that, while he felt at every point the weakness and unsatisfactory character of the arguments of the divisive critics, he was long deterred by the complexity of the task from undertaking to prepare such a treatise as the nature of the case required. He might have continued still to shrink from it but for the proposal, in 1888, by his friend, Dr. W. R. Harper, of an amicable discussion of the subject in the columns of the Hebraica. The kindly proposal was accepted, though with some hesitation, lest the cause whose defense was thus undertaken might suffer from unskillful advocacy." [Unity of the Book of Genesis, 1895, Preface, p. viii.] It is evident that Dr. Green, although he had been a teacher of the Old Testament for nearly fifty years, had not taken part in the critical study of the Hexateuch himself, and had paid little attention to the labors of the critics until 1888. Then he entered the lists as an advocate to oppose the results of modern criticism [p. 98].

The quotation would make it evident, on the contrary, that before 1888 Dr. Green had paid much attention to the labors of the radical critics, and had felt the weakness of their arguments at every point. It is strange, but true, that the very book before us contains extended replies to Dr. Green's Moses and the Prophets, 1883, not to mention the more elaborate Hebrew Feasts, 1885.

The author's unfairness is further illustrated by the claim that this new edition represents a thoroughgoing revision of the book. There was great need of such a revision, to supply at least two deficiencies. First, Dr. Green's painstaking articles in Hebraica have been treated as Professor Mead prophesied that they would be. No detailed answer has been so much as attempted. Secondly, Professor Robertson's Early Religion of Israel ought itself to have occasioned such a revision, whereas it has a name in the book and nothing more. Most of the body of this edition corresponds in the paging, and line for line, with the old edition. Here and there some information about new books or another allusion to Dr. Green is thrown in. A few new words are treated on pp. 69–74, and the last four appendixes are new. In treating the decades and pentades of laws full credit, instead of no credit, should have been given to Professor Paton's researches. On the main question, as our readers know, we differ from both Briggs and Green. We regard Robertson's book as suggesting a fundamental ground of conciliation, which should either be built upon or undermined. When America produces her representative book on Old Testament criticism it must combine the diligence of Bacon with the versatility of Schmidt, the brilliancy of Brown with the accuracy of Paton, the insight and vigor of Moore with the dignity and courtesy of Lyon, the learning and caution of Toy with the reverence and wisdom of Beecher. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.]

RELIGIOUS

We do not know how generally the Presbyterian Book of Common Prayer [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50] is in use in the Presbyterian branch of the church, and we suppose that its use is exceptional rather than common. Nevertheless, there has been such a book for many years, and it is a good one. A new edition of it has been edited, with a supplementary treatise by Prof. C. W. Shields of Princeton, and it is a work of much interest in its way as well as admirably adapted to be used profitably in divine worship. The type of a considerable portion of this edition is too small, but the body of the work is, for the most part, printed with sufficient clearness.——Barbed Arrows [F. H. Revell Co. $1.00] is by the late Mr. Spurgeon, and is a companion volume to Feathers for Arrows, of which he was also the author in the sense that each volume is a compilation of short extracts from his discourses. Some of these selections are anecdotes, some are terse and pithy utterances of sentiment or truth, all are practical and helpful.——Indirect Testimony of History to the Genuineness of the Gospels [David G. Francis. $1.00], by Frederick Huidekoper, has reached its tenth edition. This is proof that it has met an actual practical want. It is intended alike for students and for ordinary readers, although the former class will doubtless derive most from it in the way of instruction. It is helpful to a correct and complete understanding of the New Testament.

Christianity and Property [American Baptist Pub. Society. 50 cents] is by A. E. Waffles. Its purpose is to declare the teaching of Christ and the Holy Spirit on the subject of property. We notice in it nothing which has not been suggested by others, but it is a plain and earnest treatise, setting forth the author's ideas of duty effectively and likely to have considerable influence of an enlightening and stimulating character. ——Look Up and Hope, by Mrs. Ballington Booth, Branded, also by Mrs. Booth, and Faith in the Power of God, by Rev. Andrew Murray [A. D. F. Randolph Co. Each 25 cents], are three little books intended to promote deeper and more widely reaching, sympathetic and helpful personal piety. They are prettily printed and deserve attention.

In When, Where, Why [Editor Pub. Co. $1.00] Mr. Allan Nicholson has retold the story of the earthly life of Jesus, using Scripture language largely and weaving the Scripture narrative together by means of simple and appropriate sentences of his own. The task has been done before, and well done, by others, but this, also, is a successful effort in its way.——The South African Pioneer [Marshall Bros.], issued monthly in behalf of the South Africa General Mission, is undenominational and full of fresh and useful religious information. Rev. Andrew Murray contributes to it largely. The current number for May includes the annual report.

STORIES

Paul, a Herald of the Cross [Henry Altemus. $1.50], by Florence M. Kingsley, is a narrative dealing with the personal history of the apostle in the form of a novel. It succeeds well in throwing into bold relief the individuality of its great subject, and the background of minor characters and changing circumstances is well drawn and is exceedingly interesting. This will prove an excellent book for Sunday school and home libraries.

In Soldiers of Fortune [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50] Mr. Richard Harding Davis has touched the highest level he has yet attained. The book has been running as a serial and many of our readers may be familiar with it. It is a bright, spirited study of one or two types of modern men and women, and the actors figured prominently in a South American revolution which gives opportunity for abundant incident. The romance which is the thread of the narrative is managed adroitly and the book not only is eminently interesting but is a capital piece of work.

The Choir Invisible [Macmillan Co. $1.50], by J. L. Allen, embodies some of the material of his earlier story, John Gray, and is a Kentucky tale of the last century. It is a graceful, picturesque and very entertaining study of individual character and of frontier civilization. The author has exceptional power in making personality vivid and impressive, and the real heroine of the book is one of the most symmetrical, attractive characters with which we have met in literature in a long time. The book is more than ordinarily pleasing.

In The Day of His Youth [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00], by Alice Brown, a novel, is written in the form of a biography and to some extent an autobiography. It is a picturesque and powerful character study, representing the experiences of an unconventional and unstained character brought to approximate maturity apart from mankind in the midst of beautiful natural surroundings, and then introduced to ordinary humanity and society and subjected to the experience of love. The story is that of an unusual and very winsome nature and, although unlikely to be true of most men, is quite natural in the case mentioned. The author's literary grace and skill add much to the inherent attractiveness of her material. The book is one which is likely to be discussed more or less.

Tatterly [D. Appleton & Co. 50 cents], by T. Gallon, describes the deception practiced by a miser in permitting belief in his death to prevail, and the beneficial effect upon his character of witnessing the behavior of his heirs and others. It is a light and somewhat improbable but sweet-spirited story.

EDUCATIONAL

Mr. A. J. George has edited Carlyle's Essay on Burns [D. C. Heath & Co. 30 cents] and supplied it with an introduction and notes, and it is issued in a neat little volume.——The same Essay on Burns [25 cents], with an introduction and notes by G. R. Noyes, is one of four numbers of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s Riverside Literature series. The others are Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress [40 cents], edited by W. D. Moody, Grimm's Household Tales [40 cents] and Shakespeare's Macbeth [25 cents], based upon Richard Grant White's Riverside edition and supplied with additional notes by Helen G. Cone.——Mary C. Smith is the author of Life in Asia [Silver, Burdett & Co. 60 cents], which is the sixth book of the work called The World and Its People, edited by Dr. Larkin Dunton. It is a sort of reader and geography for children, is illustrated freely and well and will answer its purpose successfully.——Messrs. Ginn & Co. have brought out La Pierre de Touche [70 cents], a comedy by Emile Augier and Jules Sandeau, edited by Prof. G. McL. Harper, Ph. D., and Doña Perfecta [$1.00], by Benito Pérez Galdós, edited by Prof. A. R. Marsh. They, too, will find favor with French and Spanish educators.

Students in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have been chiefly in the minds of Professors F. H. Bailey and F. S. Woods, Ph. D., in the preparation of Plane and Solid Analytic Geometry [Ginn & Co. $2.15], they being instructors in that institution. This fact and a glance at the work itself make plain its adaptation to serve students anywhere else. It is a first-class treatise on its subject.——Light and Shade [Ginn & Co. $1.10], by A. K. Cross, is intended for teachers and students of drawing, has chapters on charcoal, pencil and brush drawing, and contains much valuable material in small compass.——The Third and Fourth Readers [Ginn & Co. Each 40 cents] in the Educational Music course, compiled by L. W. Mason and others, are small but scholarly manuals such as find ready place in connection with the public schools.

A Short History of Education [C. W. Bardeen. 50 cents], by Dr. W. H. Payne, is a reprint of the article by Oscar Browning in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica on education. Dr. Payne has supplied an introduction, notes and references. ——Chesterfield's Letters [Maynard, Merrill & Co. 24 cents] belongs to the English Classic series, and has been well edited by Dr. H. H. Belfield.

The Story of Oliver Twist [D. Appleton & Co. 60 cents] is a condensation of Mr. Dickens's famous novel, for home and school reading, by Ella B. Kirk. The condensation appears to have been accomplished without interfering with the interest and solid value of the story.——Asia [American Book Co. 60 cents] is by F. G. Carpenter. It is a reader intended to teach geography at the same time. Apparently considerable attention is devoted not merely to geography proper, but to ethnology, sociology, etc., all being adapted to juvenile comprehension. It is prettily illustrated.

MISCELLANEOUS

Apparently Mr. John A. Logan, Jr., went to Russia in a semi-official position to attend the czar's coronation. He has described his experiences in that country in a volume entitled In Joyful Russia [Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.50]. Going, as he went, practically as the guest of the Russian nation, and being fêted and entertained day after day and night after night, it was to be expected that the impression upon his mind would be rose-colored. And it certainly was. The graver, sadder side of Russian life is wholly unknown in this book, except in an occasional admission that possibly something of the kind may exist, although he believes it has been greatly exaggerated. That he has written a charming book, which is true of Russia as he saw it, which is delightful as a picture of the coronation and its attendant scenes, and which is unusually readable from cover to cover, is true. But such a book must be taken simply for what it is as a picture of official Russian life, and that in gala costume and under circumstances of exceptional and dazzling festivity. The chapters on the Russian Church and Slavic Literature and Art are not without value, but they have less significance than the more descriptive portions of the book. It is handsomely illustrated.

Seventeenth Century Studies [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50], by Edward Gosse, a contribution to the history of English poetry, is that distinguished author's volume issued first in 1883, revised and with a few emendations, and also with an index. This is the third edition, and the author's comments on Lodge, Herrick, Cowley, Etheridge and Otway and the others are widely known and need no special comment here. We need only say that the book, in its way, is a standard.

The French Revolution and English Literature [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25] contains the lectures delivered by Prof. Edward Dowden of the University of Dublin at Princeton University in connection with the late sesquicentennial celebration. They have been somewhat rewritten for publication. They point out the influence of the French Revolution upon English authors of that period, in the way of foreshadowing, to some extent, as well as in that of direct impression and subsequent influence. Professor Dowden is a close student and goes considerably into the analysis of motives and feelings. He writes with a positive individuality, differs decidedly sometimes from other students and critics, and always gives his readers abundant cause to think, and generally reflection seems to justify his positions. The literary style of his work is exceptionally forcible and polished.

Another series of lectures are Prince Serge Wolkonsky's Pictures of Russian History and Russian Literature [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $2.00]. They have been delivered before the Lowell Institute in this city last year, and in several other places. They are of special interest, because they give an inside view of the subject, affording a study of Russian literature by a Russian who at the same time is sufficiently cosmopolitan to be in touch with writers and readers of other countries than his own. The lectures necessarily are sketchy, but they deal entertainingly and informingly with their successive subjects and they embody a historical résumé of Russian history, particularly in connection with its literature, and contain many brief portraits in words of Russian authors and estimates of the value of their work. Although one cannot always indorse Prince Wolkonsky's estimates, which are naturally favorable to a very high degree, they are of more than ordinary interest. One may not agree with everything which he says about Tourgenieff or Tolstoi for example, yet his judgments are not to be disregarded. A portrait of the author serves as a frontispiece to the book.

Mr. F. M. Chapman's Bird Life [D. Appleton & Co. $1.25] is a guide to the study of our common birds. The author is assistant curator in the department of mammalogy and ornithology in the American Museum of Natural History, and therefore speaks from the point of view of an expert. His book is somewhat technical yet sufficiently popular for ordinary use. It describes the different kinds of birds tersely but sufficiently, is illustrated freely and will serve as a convenient handy-book of reference in families which are fortunate enough to have country homes, especially in those in which there are young people. ——Dr. Leroy M. Yale's volume, Nursery Problems [Contemporary Pub. Co. $1.00], is out in a new and enlarged edition. We remember commending it on its first appearance as an eminently practical, comprehensive and valuable treatise, and this new edition deserves equally to be welcomed.

Pioneers of Evolution [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50] is by Edward Clodd. It undertakes to tell the story of the origin of the evolutionary theory in Ionia, by Thales at about 600 B. C., and of its partial development by others down to the time of Lucretius, half a century before Christ. Then, the author claims, there was an arrest of inquiry, and its resumption has been in progress since the beginning of the seventeenth century. Special attention is paid to the researches of Darwin, Wallace, Spencer and Huxley. The author is an advanced believer, and some of his claims are not justified by any facts thus far discovered, as the very leaders whom he eulogizes have more than once admitted. The spirit of the book towards religion is not always fair or even courteous.

NOTES

—— Last year 3,300 new books by American authors were printed.

—— The Great West magazine has removed from Denver to Chicago.

—— The Metaphysical Magazine will change its title to Intelligence this month and will be enlarged.

—— The late William Morris's Kelmscott Press is to be discontinued. The founder alone gave it its unique power.

—— Julian Hawthorne has returned to New York from India where he went to study and describe the famine for the Cosmopolitan Magazine. His articles will be interesting but painful.

—— Two prizes—$1,000 and $500—are offered by the David C. Cook Publishing Co. of Chicago for the two best manuscript religious stories submitted before Sept. 1. They must contain from 60,000 to 65,000 words.

—— It takes more people than many suppose to run a great newspaper. One New York journal has between five hundred and six hundred on its pay roll. Probably all its chief competitors also have as many.

—— The late Professor Jowett urged Sir Hallam Tennyson, who is writing the life of his father, the poet, not to satisfy "the desire of people for gossip about him," adding, "He led a dignified private life and ought not to be made a show of to the public." Here is a useful hint for all biographers.

—— The Papyrus Club of this city of which the late editor and poet, John Boyle O'Reilly, was a beloved member, has given $1,000 to the Boston Public Library in memory of him, together with a handsome memorial book-plate, a copy of which is to be inserted in every volume purchased by the proceeds of the fund.

—— They are accusing Mr. Kipling of inaccuracy in his latest story, Captains Courageous, but thus far investigation has justified him. Careful preparation for work is one of his strong points. By the way, the report that he went to the seat of the Greek war with Turkey as correspondent of the London Times was not correct.

For Books of the Week see page 831.

In and Around Boston

The Congregationalist's Pilgrims Have a Happy Reunion

Pleasant memories of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage were revived last week on Tuesday, when thirty-five of the forty-six New World Pilgrims to Old World Shrines gathered at Young's Hotel in Boston. With their friends they made a company fully as large as that which a year ago sailed from New York for Plymouth. Some of those present made a long journey to renew old acquaintance. Letters from the absent ones were read by the secretary, Gen. Elbert Wheeler, and some after-dinner speeches were made by Dr. W. E. Park of Gloversville, N. Y., Mr. F. E. Murrell of London and others. By the use of a stereopticon and the excellent slides prepared by Mr. N. J. Littlefield of Pawtucket, R. I., the Pilgrims traversed their journey over again, revived delightful experiences and refreshed their recollections of scenes and faces which will always be a delight.

Memorial to Phillips Brooks

Phillips Brooks was one of the most popular university preachers at Harvard which the university has ever had, and it has long been the intention of the friends and alumni both of the college and of Dr. Brooks to establish a fitting memorial to him on the university grounds. The original ideas have had to be somewhat modified, owing to a failure to obtain all the money originally counted on. Two hundred thousand dollars were at one time contemplated, but $50,000 is the amount raised, so far without any actual canvass. The plans at present call for the expenditure of about $40,000 on the building, leaving the rest for contingencies. Accommodations will be provided for the religious and charitable societies of the university and a large hall for both religious and secular purposes, also a small parlor and a dining-room.

A Pastor's Decade and a Half

Winter Hill Church, one of the youngest but most important churches in Somerville, owes a great deal of its success and growth to its present pastor, Rev. C. L. Noyes, who was called there the year after his ordination in 1881 and during the year which preceded the organization of the church. His is the longest pastorate of any of the local Congregational ministers. His fifteenth anniversary as pastor was pleasantly celebrated last week Friday evening. A purse of $100 in gold, also a valuable painting, were presented to him. The numerous guests were welcomed to a reception, and later a musical program was rendered. Then a review of the first pastorate of the church was read by Mr. E. A. Stone. Three memorial windows, as gifts from Mr. Charles Payson, Mrs. George Fox and the Ladies' Society, are soon to be placed in the church. Altogether the occasion was an appreciative testimonial of the esteem in which Mr. Noyes is held by the church and the community. His connection with the Associated Charities of the city, of which he has been president since the beginning, has widened his influence and the scope of his labors and brought him in close contact with those most needing help.

A New Form of University Extension

Whosoever can spare a Wednesday or a Saturday afternoon from his work, and a few small car-fares from his purse, may have a half-holiday of the rarest kind. One may stretch one's legs and breathe the salt air in a seashore tramp, and at the same time be admitted to many of nature's secrets. All one has to do is to join a free excursion from the Natural History Museum, and to listen to the easy, friendly conversation of the learned "Tech" instructor in biology, Mr. Amadeus Grabau.

The public is invited to all the work of the class, which was formed about May 1. It assembles at the museum on Berkeley Street, near Boylston, at 9.30 Saturday mornings, and until 10 30 is occupied in the laboratory over specimens gathered the week before. In the afternoons teacher and pupils visit some interesting place on the shore. Persons who may not be able to attend the morning lectures are welcomed to the outdoor trips. One need not be versed in science to enjoy them, or to understand what is said about the geological, geographical and biological treasure of the places visited. Every Saturday excursion is repeated the following Wednesday afternoon.

The class party went recently to Marblehead Neck, where they looked with new eyes on the great cliffs, the bowlders, the pebbles and the terrace-like ridges of the sandy beach, while Mr. Grabau described the processes by which these things had been so made. Perhaps the most fascinating occupation of that excursion was among the pools and slimy sea-weeds, where many interesting little creatures were found for the special studies of hydra, to which much of the laboratory work has been devoted for the past few weeks. This week the special studies are sea anemones and corals, and on Saturday and the following Wednesday the excursions were made to Nantasket.

The Theology of the Preacher

This was the theme of an able and scholarly paper by Rev. Daniel Merriman, D. D., read at the Ministers' Meeting last Monday. At the outset he sharply discriminated between theology and religion, affirming that the apostles, who were the best of preachers, had no theological system. If they had been examined upon any of the great systems known to us as a test of their soundness, they would have been as much astonished as if they had been told that the earth was round. The speaker, however, affirmed, on the other hand, that every minister is a theologian, and in a certain sense must have a theology of some sort. Its main characteristics should be as follows: It must be his own, the result of his own thinking and experience. It must be the theology of his times. It should be progressive, proportionate, sympathetic.

There was some friendly dissent from certain of the positions advanced by the essayist, Drs. Little and Allbright giving voice to it.

Boston Superintendents' Union

The June festival of the union is marked annually as the most popular night of the year. The eighteenth occasion of this kind, last Monday night, added another testimony to the fact. The members were accompanied very generally by lady friends, so that the company at the banquet numbered about 250.

Pres. J. W. Brown was assisted during the after dinner exercises by Rev. Thomas Sims, D. D., the new pastor at Melrose; Hon. J. L. Bates, speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives; Mr. F. O. Winslow of Norwood, and Rev. F. E. Ramsdell of the Pilgrim Church, Cambridge. These gentlemen enlivened an hour before the evening session with bright speeches, which contained the pith of helpfulness.

The address of the evening was by Pres. G. S. Hall of Clark University. His suggestions to teachers of the Sunday school were a plain and practical review of the results of research in special study of the youth. His particular thought lay in the need of developing the educational principle in religious work, making the relation of the Sunday school to the church what public education is to the upbuilding of a nation. To accomplish the most the child should be surrounded with watchful care during the years of greatest change and growth, so that the enthusiasm of youth may be particularly directed and expended along the higher plane, leaving less chance of its dissipation on a lower grade. The speaker predicted great things from the awakening age in which we live, and encouraged Bible teachers to accept their responsibility.

The Home Missionary Society

Last Week's Gathering at Saratoga

The seventy-first anniversary of this national society began in Saratoga, Tuesday evening, June 1, in the Methodist church. A business session of the officers, the State secretaries and superintendents had occupied most of the afternoon. American flags decorated pulpit and platform, challenging the patriotism of the audience which faced the field of effort, a large wall map of the United States. The familiar but freshened ceiling and walls looked down on familiar faces, the scene suggesting that the assembly was only an adjourned meeting, with considerably lessened numbers in attendance.

THE SERMON

After devotional services, led by Rev. P. B. Davis, the sermon was preached by Rev. F. T. Bayley of Denver. His texts were John 4: 13, 14, compared with John 7: 37-39. His theme was the Holy Spirit—God in the heart of man resident and regnant. The individual in whom God dwells is the unit of life and power. The progress of the kingdom of God is through the contagion of love and the propagation of faith from man to man. Here is the essential philosophy of missions. As water will flow down and on and faster toward the deepest places, so divine love must flow out of every heart in which God dwells to make it like his own heart. There is enough money, despite the hard times, for self-gratification and gain. The lack is of love rather than of money. O for the incoming tide of God's almighty love! The sermon, which occupied an hour and a half, was throughout spiritual, uplifting and inspiring.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

Major-General Howard leads the Congregational home missionary hosts with the same determination, ardor and religious devotion which won him renown as his country's defender on other fields. He reaffirmed his conviction that this is the Lord's work and that, while we are compelled to look on whitening harvests with insufficient laborers, we must cast on him our burdens of anxiety. Still we must examine the extent of the field and seek an answer to the question why we cannot secure an equipment necessary to gather the harvest. General Howard answered the criticism that the society is not as economical as it might be. He thought that the falling off in contributions was not entirely the result of hard times, but that there is a change of feeling among the vast majority of Christian people toward missions. They do not realize the infinite peril of not attaining unto eternal life. But there is no remedy for the misery of men astray from God other than their conversion through him who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." If the everyday Christian everywhere would return to his first love for his Saviour and for his unsaved neighbor there would be no more trouble about debts of the home missionary society and the precious harvests of ripening fields would be gathered.

THE AUXILIARY SOCIETIES

Wednesday morning's session began with a fair attendance, the devotional meeting being led by Rev. Joel Ives of Stratford, Ct. Rev. Alexander McGregor of Pawtucket spoke for Rhode Island. The eight years' service of a State missionary have resulted in the organization of twelve churches, with a membership of 900, and $40,000 have been raised for church buildings and parsonages. In order to retrench expenses the missionary has been discharged, but the committee, following the example of the first disciples, are going out two by two and visiting the missionary churches. If all the States had done proportionally as much as Rhode Island to relieve the general treasury the story of its emptiness would not be told in such mournful numbers.

Sec. W. H. Moore, the veteran bishop of Connecticut, told of the changing conditions of that ancient commonwealth, of the missionary zeal of the churches for the regions beyond, and of the increasing burdens laid on them to maintain their prestige at home. Sec. T. O. Douglass, for fifteen years the H. M. secretary for Iowa, spoke of the growth of Congregationalism in that State, till now it counts 200 churches and 100 parsonages, and has raised $800,000 in contributions to expenditures, and appropriations have been cut down till the salaries of home missionaries average only $500. Men are bravely holding their posts and carrying on their work, with a support so insufficient that it is becoming a reproach to the churches.

THE WOMEN'S MEETING

At this point in the services a company of honorable and fair women marched two by two up the center aisle and took possession of the platform. They were representatives of the W. H. M. U., which now has organizations in forty-two States. Mrs. H. S. Caswell presided. She briefly outlined the work of the union. Last year it put into the treasury of the H. M. S. $45,550, and raised for the five societies $107,797. In fifteen years it has brought to the H. M. S. $448,000, and to the five societies $878,000. Mrs. Caswell gave a tender and appropriate address in memory of Secretary Kincaid, whose recent death was often recalled through all the sessions, showing the strong affection felt for him by the workers throughout the wide field. The addresses which followed illustrated the remarkable changes which are going on in the relations of women to the work of the churches. Each lady was entirely at home before the large audience, spoke naturally in tones easily heard throughout the church, and held the attention as effectively as any of the ministers who preceded or followed them. Mrs. R. B. Wright of Boise City contrasted the opinions about Idaho held by those at a distance or by the casual visitor with the knowledge of those who have discovered its splendid climate and fertile valleys, and have come to love its people and to enjoy laboring for their highest prosperity. Without a word of cant or complaint she pictured the life of a missionary's wife, and of the new churches which are doing so much for the State and which so much need the support of Christian brethren in the older States. The five churches seem a small beginning for a country rapidly growing, where twenty new churches ought to be planted every year. Mrs. Wright, her husband accompanying on the organ, sang with him a duet, and he made a short address almost as interesting as hers.

Mrs. Dr. J. B. Gregg of Colorado Springs, a pastor's wife in that city for fifteen years, in an address of twenty minutes made the audience understand the spiritual, educational, political and social life in town and village and mining camp, and the burdens which rest on the pastor of one of the stronger churches in a State which has sixty churches, half of them in five cities and only eight as yet self-supporting.

The Slovaks, of whom there are about 100,000 in America, mostly in Pennsylvania, were described by Miss Marie Zoltak, a young lady just graduating from the Bible Readers' School in charge of Dr. H. A. Schauffler of Cleveland. The story of her conversion, of the work she has already done, and of the obstacles which she fearlessly faces and feels sure of conquering in the name of Christ won the warm interest and hearty applause of her hearers. The morning session ended with a song by Miss Zoltak, who has a fine and cultivated voice, and with prayer and benediction.

SISTER SOCIETIES

In the afternoon an audience, whose largest number was 176, heard three twenty-minute addresses from three affiliated societies. Secretary L. H. Cobb, who was effectively aided in different sessions by remarks of missionaries from the field, set forth the work of the Church Building Society, its disposition of the Stickney legacy now in its hands, and the calls for money for church edifices, which it can answer only in part. Rev. G. A. Tewksbury read a paper presenting the efforts and claims of the Education Society, and Rev. Dr. N. H. Whittlesey pleaded for one generous gift from each church in aid of aged and disabled ministers. A venerable Methodist minister emphasized this last appeal; and Bishop Foss was warmly welcomed as he extended greetings for that denomination.

THE WOMAN'S MEETING ON TUESDAY AFTERNOON

The pleasant Congregational church, more attractive than ever now that sacred memories of former meetings fill the place, was well filled on Tuesday afternoon at the public meeting of the woman's unions, Mrs. C. L. Goodell presiding. As was most suitable, four of the six subjects presented for consideration were treated by women. Twenty suggestive and oft asked questions regarding missionary work, boxes, the debt, methods were concisely and wisely answered by Mrs. H. S. Caswell. A pioneer in banding women together to work for home missions was Mrs. Elizabeth Kneeland McFarland of Concord, N. H., the story of whose life, written by Mrs. J. T. Perry, was read by Mrs. Joshua Coit. Five years before the American Board was formed the Female Cent Society was organized in 1804 by this prayerful minister's wife, who, on a salary of $350, with eight children to care for, reckoned no sacrifice too dear for the Lord. To those who have had the inspiration of hearing Mrs. Goodell interpret the Bible it is needless to say how tender and fruitful were the lessons she drew from King David's experience at Besor. The strong paper on A New Departure, by Mrs. Washington Choate, showed how God uses crisis hours for some high purpose and at this time calls to sacrifice, service and a higher life with Christ. As Pres. Thomas McClelland made a forcible appeal for Pacific University in Oregon, so likewise did Rev. E. A. Paddock arouse interest in Weiser Academy in Idaho.

FROM THE SUPERINTENDENTS

Several of these missionary bishops made addresses on Thursday afternoon, each one showing, not only his thorough knowledge of his field, but his deep sense of the pressure of its opportunities and his large faith in its possibilities. Rev. A. K. Wray spoke for Missouri, Rev. Harmon Bross, D.D., for Nebraska, Rev. E. H. Ashmun for New Mexico, Rev. L. P. Broad for Kansas, Rev. W. H. Thrall for South Dakota, Rev. T. W. Jones, D. D., for Pennsylvania and Rev T. G. Grassie for northern Wisconsin.

BUSINESS MEETINGS

The hours set apart for the business of the society were mostly occupied by a discussion of an amendment providing that members of the executive committee, after serving for one term, should not be eligible for re-election for one year. This amendment was, according to instructions voted at the last meeting, presented by the executive committee, but without its recommendation. It was earnestly advocated by Rev. Drs. H. A. Stimson, Nehemiah Boynton and others, opposed by Secretaries Joshua Coit, W. H. Moore and several others, and was finally defeated by a vote of thirty-two for to thirty-eight against. Notice was given, however, of an amendment to be acted on at the next annual meeting, providing that members of the executive committee, after two terms of three years each, shall not be eligible for re-election till after one year. Rev. Dr. W. E. Park presented a report on the report of the executive committee, ably reviewing that document and suggesting the necessity of a readjustment of the work to the changed business conditions of the country, which indicate lessened incomes and seem to necessitate reduced expenditures. The ballot for officers, as presented in the report of the nominating committee, resulted in the re-election of the president, General Howard, the treasurer, secretaries and vice-presidents. The terms of five members of the executive committee having expired, three of them were re-elected, as follows: Messrs. George P Stockwell, Asa A. Spear and John F. Anderson, Jr., all of New York; also Rev. C. M. Lamson, D. D., of Hartford, and William H. Wanamaker of Philadelphia. Rev. C. A. Savage of Orange, N. J., was elected to fill a vacancy for one year.

As it was generally felt that the time allotted for the business meeting had been consumed while some of the most important matters connected with the administration and policy of the society had not been considered, the secretaries were requested to arrange for a special meeting. This was fixed at the beginning of the Thursday morning session. After brief but earnest devotional exercises, led by General Howard, discussion followed for an hour and a half, mainly on the financial outlook, and many questions were asked of the executive committee and answered by the chairman, Mr. William Ives Washburn, and other members. From their printed report it appears that for the year ending March 31 the receipts fell $180,503 below those for the preceding year. The debt up to that date amounted to $127,505. A reduction of $73,782 has been made in the estimates for the current year. But on the basis of reduced appropriations, if the receipts up to Oct. 1 should be the same as last year, the debt at that date will be $219,798, which will be about $40,000 beyond the borrowing power of the society. Either the contributions must be soon largely increased, or the society must fail to pay its obligations to the missionaries, or it must cut down its work still further, to its great and lasting injury. Increased prayer and effort on the part of ministers and churches were urged, but not many practicable suggestions were offered. It was voted, on motion of Rev. A. E. Dunning, that "it is the sense of this meeting that the annual meetings of our six benevolent societies should be held in the same week and in one place." On motion of Dr. Reuen Thomas, a committee was appointed to consider the relation of the auxiliaries to the national society and to report at the next meeting. On motion of Dr. E. N. Packard, it was voted that the second morning of the next annual meeting be devoted to discussion of the business interests of the Society. On motion of Dr. W. E. Park, it was voted to request the churches to observe the Sunday following Thanksgiving Day each year as Home Missionary Sunday. At 10 45 A. M. the regular session was resumed.

FIXED FACTORS

This was the theme of Sec. Washington Choate's paper. He first glanced at the shadows of the past year and set over against them this saying of Dr. Kincaid, "There is nothing in all this emergency to alarm us, unless the church loses its hold upon God." Then he discussed these four fundamental factors which have stood unchanged through all the seventy-one years of the society's history: (1) The spiritual need of men; of men spiritually powerful to make out of the vast heterogeneous peoples gathered in this country a life that shall be one and Christian in its qualities, aims and motives. (2) The divine command to preach the gospel to all the people; our definite duty to this nation, permanently resting on Christ's Church and impelling us to obedience. (3) The necessity of organizing and maintaining local churches, organized bodies of Christian believers, wherever men are. It is the organized body of Christian believers, the permanent ministry of the Word, the prolonged influence of the missionary pastor upon the community where he is placed and maintained from year to year by this arm of the churches, the sustained ordinances of God's house, the hallowed Sabbath, the trained youth that does constructive work in the Christian upbuilding of the nation. (4) Christian patriotism to send forth and permeate our nation's life—her institutions, laws, customs, her political, civil, industrial, social forces with the spirit and qualities of the gospel of Christ.

These abiding needs, duties and opportunities must be by earnest men borne in on the heart of the Church of Christ to move her to rise up in her might and pour forth the wealth of which God has made her steward, to make the almost paralyzed arm of her missionary service thrill with a new and an enlarged ministry.

Time remained for only two addresses, the first by Rev. H. H. Kelsey of Hartford. His picture of the weakening of belief in evangelical doctrines, the prevalence of intemperance, the increase of crime, the passion for amusements, the growing indifference to public worship and the appetite for Sunday newspapers—Sunday conscience destroyers—was so dark that the president was moved to declare that a great deal of good is being done, for which we ought all to rejoice. Mr. Kelsey especially dwelt on the importance of evangelizing the cities, and urged that the society should set itself to secure in every city of 40,000 or more at least one Congregational church where the people are thickest, and keep it open and at work.

The morning session closed with a stirring address by Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, who, with many effective illustrations, enforced the truth that the great need, in order to restore to its full power the work of missions, is the recovery of the sense of God, which will only be realized by the experience of individual souls in their personal relations with the loving Christ who has redeemed them.

THE EVENING SESSIONS

Wednesday evening's session began with Secretary Clark's able paper, entitled A Year of Distress. He recited the facts concerning the decreased receipts, the extraordinary efforts to secure larger contributions, the steps in retrenchment, the illness and death of Secretary Kincaid. He reviewed the history of the society, showing a steady advance of gifts by decades, and expressed the conviction that the eighth decade will excel all the others in the average annual volume of home missionary gifts. He declared that, in spite of the severe reduction in appropriations, the fruits of the work in fact and promise are unusually large throughout the field. He said that a patient and thorough examination of all the missionary churches had been made, with the purpose to close every one not needed, or occupying a field already supplied with those of other denominations. It was found that more than half the home missionary churches are in fields not occupied by any other kindred denomination. No missionary work of the society has been started for merely sectarian gain or purpose. Wherever it can be made clear that some other church can best do the work in any place Congregationalists will promptly retire and give Godspeed to the presumptive heir.

Rev. Dr. A. F. Sherrill of Galesburg, Ill., made a sensible, racy and suggestive address. He aimed to put heart into the friends of missions. We have not yet reached, he said, the extreme of sacrifice and suffering. Cubans have burned their homes and joined the insurgents. We are yet far from these straits. Thousands have starved in India, but corn is so cheap in Nebraska that it is being burned for fuel, and in Kansas the hopelessness of the people comes from their inability to dispose of their supplies. The home missionary who has brains and heart—the only kind we want—expects to make more sacrifices than any one has a right to ask of him. Reduction in the home office is an experience most business men have known. These times of stress teach the churches to take care of themselves. It is too great a temptation to a church to know it can get $200 or $300 by asking for it. God is tremendously committed to make this country a success as a Christian nation by the immense investments he has made in it.

Rev. J. H. Parker spoke for Oklahoma with its ninety Congregational churches, sixty-two of them housed, and with twenty-four parsonages, a home missionary college and two academies. Congregationalists have more meeting houses in Oklahoma than all other denominations put together. We'll hold the fort till better days come.

Rev. Dr. H. A. Schauffler described the work among Bohemians, Slovaks and Poles, giving special attention to the latter, of whom there are between one and two million in this country. They are the hardest part of the Slavic population to reach with the gospel. They are under the domination of the Roman priesthood, but they are becoming an important political element in our large cities. A hopeful beginning has been made among them in several places. The Bohemian church in Cleveland of 165 members, not yet having completed its first decade, has furnished five men and five women as missionaries, and through their labors ninety-nine have this year been added to the Slavic churches.

Rev. W. G. Puddefoot closed the Wednesday evening services with one of his unreportable addresses, bristling with statistics before unknown to the audience, and demonstrating that there is plenty of money if we only think we have it. He at least put every one in a cheerful mood for the night.

If Saratoga skies were inclined to drop a few tears in welcoming the guests on Tuesday, they wept copiously and persistently in the closing hours. Not even the widely known names on the program for Thursday evening could beguile a large audience to walk through the flooded streets to the churches.

The words of Dr. J. L. Scudder of Jersey City were prompted by personal experience of a peculiarly successful work in a difficult city field, and were a fitting sequence to the prominent treatment given to this topic. Rev. Dr. A. H. Bradford took the broad, general view of our mission as a nation. He contrasted the two ideals which are striving for supremacy in this country. One ideal, which is selfish, is America for Americans. The other, which is Christian, is America for the world. Our country is in danger of losing its moral leadership among the nations. Selfish leaders have succeeded in defeating the treaty of arbitration with England—the most righteous, the most truly American suggestion concerning international affairs ever yet proposed. Money is coming to be the great aim of many of our citizens. Secularism, materialism and paganism are coming in like a flood. Yet, though our moral leadership is imperiled, it is not lost. What is needed is a revival of that pure and historic Americanism which realizes that we have a mission and a worthy destiny. We must insist that there is a moral order for nations as well as for individuals; that it is better to trust to law and love than to force; that Christ is the Saviour of States as of men; and that the kingdom of God must take form in a nation before it can come in the world. This is the mission which our society is fitted grandly to fulfill.

Rev. Dr. Reuen Thomas looked at the causes which have led to the apparent decline of interest in missions. If the spiritual sensitiveness of the people had been acute, the economizing would not have been begun at the charities and the church. Criticism has been the dominant intellectual habit. In science, literature and theology, nothing has escaped this tendency. We have been living through an age of doubt, and doubt means irresolution and inactivity. We have ourselves been half afraid that we are on insecure foundations. The fact that we have maintained ourselves as well as we have is one for congratulation. Simple loyalty to Christ will bring us out of the mists and miasmas into the clear oxygenated air where is that robust health we need for body, soul and spirit. We can urge the lower loyalties only as they are included in the higher loyalty to Christ.

Resolutions were unanimously adopted expressing the fullest confidence in the management of the society. General Howard announced that the receipts for last month were $17,000, as against $5,800 in May of last year. With this cheering news the meeting closed. The next place of meeting will be chosen by the executive committee, and probably will be one of the larger cities of the Eastern or Interior States. A. E. D.

WISE AND WITTY SAYINGS AT SARATOGA

If the devil has the cities he has the country.—Rev. H. H. Kelsey.

"Doubt in the pulpit never brings faith in the pews."—Dr. Thomas.

Life wouldn't be worth living in Idaho were it not for the Church Building Society.—Mrs. R. B. Wright.

God keeps the best women in the world to be the wives and mothers of ministers and missionaries.—Nehemiah Boynton, D. D.

Fifty per cent. of the people of our cities prefer the carrion of the Sunday newspaper to the worship of God.—Rev. H. H. Kelsey.

When you are in the East you are being formed by society; when you are in the West you are forming society.—Mrs. Gregg.

A man doesn't have to be born in America to be an American. Americans were born before Columbus discovered this country.—Rev. W. G. Puddefoot.

You who have the moral support of all your old friends and associations don't know how to estimate its value till you have missed it.—Mrs. J. B. Gregg.

An epigram worth remembering and pondering by all city dwellers is this of Dr. Scudder's: "When tenements run up the better classes run off, the churches run down, Christianity runs out."

A poor Polish woman insisted on paying for some tracts, though she was told they would be loaned to her. She said, "They seem to speak to my heart better when they are mine."—H. A. Schauffler, D. D.

If all the wives of the home missionaries are lubricators, as Mrs. Wright calls herself, we do not wonder that no grumbling over the hard times was heard from those on the field whose salaries have been cut to the quick.

Indifferentism, materialism, Romanism—these were the three obstacles most dwelt on as hindering the advance of the kingdom of God in our time. They were equally prominent in the discussions of the Presbyterian Assembly.

Mrs. Gregg compared the gift of suffrage to the women of Colorado to the gift of a jackknife to a little sister in the family. At first it causes some alarm, but don't worry. She will not long prefer whittling to taking care of her dolls.

Hard times sweep away with them much useless rubbish. They dispose of unnecessary expenditures, antiquated forms and loose methods. They put on all missionary work the pressure of the survival of the fittest.—Dr. W. E. Park.

The substance of many things said in papers and addresses was written many centuries ago in a letter of the apostle John: "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the vain glory of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Not soon to be forgotten was the scene in the Huestis House at the late after meeting on Wednesday evening. The dozen or more superintendents and missionaries might be likened to a company of noble braves in whose ears still rings the noise of the battle, whose eyes still see the very great land to be possessed, gathered around the council fire to renew their strength. Most fervently did Dr. Richards implore help from above.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

BOSTON MINISTERS' MEETING, Pilgrim Hall, June 14, 10 A. M. Topic, Reports from Home Missionary Society, Saratoga. Speakers, Dr. Reuen Thomas, Rev. W. G. Puddefoot and Superintendents T. G. Grassie and W. H. Thrall.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of Missions, in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, every Friday at 11 A. M.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY, annual meeting, Wednesday, June 16, 2 P. M., Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House. All annual members bringing proper credentials are entitled to vote. With usual business amendments of by-laws will be considered, authorizing president and directors to make conveyance of any real estate owned by the society.

SPRING STATE MEETINGS

Additions or changes should be sent at once

Conn. Asso.	New Haven,	Tuesday, June 15.
Pennsylvania,	Ebensburg,	Tuesday, June 22.

Benevolent Societies

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

The review of work for the people of a large Connecticut city is the record of the only efforts of their kind conducted by any church in the place for the dependent classes. The location of the enterprise gives it a tinge of foreign mission work, and its character makes it possible to enlist college and seminary students in large numbers. Fortunately, the church which conducts it has been able to make and continue ample provision for the necessities of such extensive operations. "This preaching of deeds reaches many hearts that are not reached by words."

The church members in a Western State who last year were stripped of both homes and meeting house by a cyclone, and have struggled to rebuild the latter even before the former are completed, have a just estimate of values. The Christian does not let God's work wait till his own material needs are satisfied, but labors simultaneously "for God and home and native land."

Children's Day, observed in May on the Pacific coast, is a good time to review the Sunday school work of the past year. California's investment in this line, merely from a financial point of view, yields ample returns. The spiritual harvest is no less satisfactory, though no instrument or process sufficiently delicate to measure it has yet been discovered.

The success of great undertakings is so often diminished by lack of sufficient preparation, whether it be a matter of revival services or of debt raising, that exceptionally favorable results of well-planned efforts engage unusual attention. Such an auspicious work has been done in a neighboring city of Boston as to commend its methods and spirit generally.

A plan which has worked excellently during its few years of operation in the Pine Tree State provides for the economical and amicable settlement of cases which might otherwise magnify the differences between denominations, while this method tends to obliterate them.

The Kansas church which magnanimously shares its pastor and the minister who willingly gives his service to neighboring unshepherded flocks have the true idea of brotherhood, through which the kingdom of heaven will come on the earth.

The self-reliance developed in weak churches by the exigency in the Home Missionary Society will be worth far more to them than any amount of financial aid could be.

The first roll-call of an ancient church in the Green Mountain State brought out some features which could not be duplicated often.

Babies and bicycles have drawn largely of late on the attention of the churches in a central city of the Bay State.

A St. Louis church receives a revival impulse from an unusual source.

Departing pastors in Michigan cause heart aches.

Of Special Note

A suggestive comparative statement of Protestant and other church attendants from Connecticut.

The first-class record of a self-reliant church in California.

A monopoly of pastoral oversight in a Vermont town.

THE SOUTHERN MINNESOTA CIRCUIT

Many of the churches in this section are small and the hard times and consequent reduction in missionary aid make it difficult for them to maintain regular services. At least eight of the twenty churches comprising the Owatonna Conference are at present pastorless. How to provide for some of them is a serious problem.

On the other hand, the conference boasts several strong, self-reliant organizations, abreast of the times as to methods and extent and variety of activity. Among these the Northfield church ranks first in every way. It has a membership of upwards of 500. Its benevolent contributions last year exceeded $4,000, being surpassed within the State by only Plymouth Church, Minneapolis. Rev. J. E. McConnell has been the beloved pastor at Northfield for more than seven years. Carleton College, which is tributary to this church, has always ranked high as an institution of learning and is specially noted as a center of deep spiritual life.

The Nestor of Minnesota Congregationalism is Rev. C. E. Wright, D. D., of Austin, who has shepherded that flock for nearly twenty-three years. Meanwhile a strong and efficient church of nearly 400 members has been built up and a beautiful house of worship secured.

Recently this section of the State has been blessed by the coming of Rev. J. H. Chandler to Owatonna, which is coming to be one of our best churches. Just now extensive repairs and improvements are being made upon the house of worship, and under Mr. Chandler's wise and vigorous leadership the church has surely a promising future.

Another strong church is that at Faribault, one of the most beautiful small cities in all the West. The pastor, Rev. G. S. Ricker, has recently begun his fourth year of service. The city is celebrated for its institutions of learning, and is known as the Athens of the West. Three State schools—for the deaf, the blind and the feeble-minded—are located here, also three Episcopalian institutions. The Congregational church has in its membership many of the leading families of the city. A recent social was entertained by a committee of gentlemen, among whom were the mayor and four ex-mayors, five lawyers, four manufacturers, one large railroad contractor, one bank president, one superintendent and one clergyman. R.

AFTER MANY DAYS

The Christian workers of Utah need patience. In some respects progress in their work is slower than in heathen lands. But every little while God cheers his laborers with a blessed surprise. Congregational workers have just had such an experience. And as another evidence of the delightful fellowship of Christian workers in Utah, the representatives of other denominations shared liberally in the recent blessing.

Rev. David Peebles, after years of labor in the South, came to Utah with his wife fifteen years ago and began work at Bountiful, a thickly populated and fertile district eight miles north of Salt Lake City. Mrs. Peebles taught the New West school, which was prosperous from the start. Most of the non-Mormons were infidels in religion but desired education for their children, and the New West school provided Christian instruction. After a few years Mr. and Mrs. Peebles were sent elsewhere to labor. Other teachers continued the school and other missionaries followed at intervals. In 1895 missionary work became more regular, but the field was most discouraging. In the East last summer the H. M. superintendent referred to Bountiful to illustrate fields demanding patient waiting with small encouragement.

Miss Whiteman took the school last fall and decided that there must be closer hand to hand work among families friendly to the work. Mrs. Peebles was secured as assistant teacher and missionary worker, and Mr. Peebles spent Sundays with them. Their former pupils had pleasant memories awakened. The three faithful missionary workers at first doubted, but when young people began to stand up, confessing a desire and determination to become Christians, the patient laborers realized the blessing that was coming. One Sunday fifteen young persons went into the inquiry room—an act which means far more in Utah than in the East. The old restraints were broken. Some reputed infidels attended the services and rejoiced to have their children take this stand.

The interest reached its climax, Sunday, May 16, when a church of nine members was organized, composed of these converts and other Christians. Mr. Peebles, who was chosen pastor, was overcome with emotion as he compared the past and present. The New West schoolhouse, a solid stone building, was filled with an interested audience, including many Mormons. Superintendent Hawkes conducted the services, and the pastor baptized the candidates, ranging in age from fourteen to sixty-five. His own son, twelve years old, was among the charter members.

This and other hopeful indications appear when missionary funds are so meager that some needy fields must go pastorless, and the remaining forces know not how to reach all who are ready to hear the Word. The Mormon church is active, sending out more missionaries than ever before, and many indications point to a renewal of the old struggle with renewed zest. Yet the young Mormons are more independent than formerly, and the door for the Christian worker was never so wide open in Utah as now. O for men and money to "enter in"! W. S. H.

FOUR DECADES AT IMMANUEL CHURCH

The completion of an existence of forty years by Immanuel Church, Roxbury, was the occasion of impressive morning and evening services last Sunday. The fine edifice, standing on a prominent corner, was a center of attractiveness to large congregations at both gatherings. The interior was elaborately decorated with floral and patriotic adornments, and the special music was a rich addition to the exercises.

The morning discourse of the pastor, Rev. C. H. Beale, D.D, outlined in interesting form the chief facts of the early and later history of the church. At its organization there was no Congregational church on the Boston side nearer than what is now Berkeley Temple, and on the other side Eliot Church was nearest. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., becoming pastor at the latter in 1842, showed a special interest in the Roxbury district by establishing a Sunday school, which continued several years but was finally abandoned. It was revived again, however, in 1852, under the Eliot City Mission Society. A chapel was built in a few years, and in the spring of 1857 a church of twenty-seven members was formed under the name of Vine Street. The little company flourished under the leadership of its first pastor, Rev. J. O. Means, and during the first year erected a suitable building. The center of the parish changed rapidly within a decade and a half, and a new site, that on which the present house stands, became the location of a $50 000 edifice, which was dedicated free of debt. A disastrous fire within a few years made a new structure a necessity and the present splendid meeting house was built.

REV CHARLES H BEALE, D. D.

The succeeding pastorates have been filled by Rev. L. H. Blake, Dr. Michael Burnham and Dr. A. P. Foster. In forty years the church has received 1,143 members, and has raised $80,000 for church building, $200 000 for expenses and $105,000 for benevolences. The present membership is about 400

The evening service was a Sunday school anniversary. Addresses were given by former superintendents. The Sunday school enrolls 450 members. Monday night a social reunion was held, at which there were informal remarks, letters from members and former pastors and greetings from neighboring churches.

A DECADE OF WORKS AND GIFTS

Pilgrim Church of Pomona, Cal, celebrated its 10th anniversary May 30. By the arrangement of its pastor, Rev. L. H. Frary, who with his wife is on the way to Europe, the former pastor, Rev. C. B. Sumner, preached a historical sermon in the morning. Three of the professors of Pomona College, former members, made addresses in the evening. The original membership of 35 has increased to 400, representing 29 States and Territories beside the District of Columbia and Old Mexico. The church has never had any members with large incomes, nevertheless, it has raised $50,122, an average of $5,000 a year. Two-thirds of this amount has been applied to buildings and other home expenses and one-third to benevolence. The H. M. S. sent its founder and first pastor into the field, agreeing to pay him his whole salary for six months. At the end of that time a church had been organized, Pomona College had been incorporated, $200 had been sent to the H. M. S, lots had been purchased, a chapel begun and the church had voted unanimously to become self-supporting. Each year not less than $2 per member has been given to the H. M. S., a sum amounting at this time to about $5,000, or one-tenth of the whole amount raised in the ten years. Pomona College, which owes its existence to this church, and to which the church gave its first pastor and at one time 25 members to form the College Church at Claremont, has received from the mother church about $8,000. This church is now the second or third largest in its general association, has the second largest Sunday school and is first in its benevolences.

ST. LOUIS BOHEMIANS NEWLY HOUSED

The new Bohemian edifice was dedicated in May, in the presence of pastors and other representatives of the St. Louis Congregational churches and an audience that filled the building. Rev. H. A. Schauffler, D.D, and Rev. John Prucha of Cleveland and Rev. Jos. Jelinek of Chicago were also present and, with local pastors, participated in the exercises. Dr. Schauffler spoke upon Bohemian Protestantism.

The structure, which stands at the corner of 13th Street and Allen Avenue, was planned and its construction supervised by the recent superintendent of the City Missionary Society, Rev. A. L. Love. It is of brick, resting upon a stone foundation, and measures about 45 x 71 feet. The cost, including furnishings, has been about $8,500. It stands on ground leased for twenty years, costing nothing for the first decade, and after that six per cent. a year of the appraised valuation of the land, irrespective of the building.

Inside the main entrance a stairway leads downward to the basement and another to the main floor, on which is the auditorium flanked by two Sunday school rooms. Above are two other rooms of about the same size which open on the auditorium by windows of figured glass, as the rooms beneath open upon it by rolling doors.

The basement, which is partly finished, will furnish three large Sunday school rooms, or two Sunday school rooms and a kitchen. The building is equipped with closets, electric lights and gas. The main auditorium is furnished with reversible ash seats, a neat oak pulpit, an organ and a piano. The entire building is heated by two return-draft furnaces. The auditorium will seat 250 people, but within sight of the pulpit 600 persons can be accommodated, and the Sunday school rooms will hold 750 to 800 children and teachers.

The Bohemian work, which has been badly housed for seven years, is now splendidly equipped and is ably led by Rev. Edward Wrbitzky and his devoted wife. It is the purpose of those interested in this field to make this church not only the center of the religious life of the community, but a stimulus to its intellectual life and a center of rational enjoyment.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES

Andover

W. H. Rollins of the Middle Class has been elected by the students a life member of the A. M. A. because of his efforts in raising the $50 which the seminary pledged.——The Society of Inquiry has elected P. H. Cressey president and W. W. Rockwell secretary.——The following men have been approbated to preach by the Andover Association for two years: Messrs. Sloan, Cressey, Dean, Dunbar, Greeley, Ray, Rollins, Wright.——Professor and Mrs. Taylor have gone abroad for the summer, sailing June 2. He hopes to make a study of the old Bibles in the British Museum before returning.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

ME.—The 72d annual meeting of Penobscot County Conference was held with First Church, Brewer. Topics were: Lessons from the Successes of the Year, What to Do with Converts, The Prayer Meeting, The Sunday School, Evangelists, Missions, A Survey of Four Fields. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. J. S. Penman and D. E. French. A ladies' meeting surveying missions, home and foreign, was held with five minute papers. The good work of the lady visitors at Holden and Dedham was commended and a movement begun to supplement their work for a time in that hopeful field by another.

N. H.—Grafton County Conference held its annual session at Plymouth, June 1, 2, with a good attendance, one young minister coming 50 miles on his bicycle. The exercises included a symposium on different aspects in the use of the Bible in several well-prepared papers by pastors, a discussion of The Civic Duties of the Church and Social Obligations of the Church, missionary addresses and the usual devotional services, closing with the communion. The reports from the churches were fairly encouraging, showing faithful work and progress.

Ind.—The Kokomo Association held a special meeting with this church, May 24, to consider the case of the recent pastor, Rev. S. S. Condo, who had been received by letter from an Ohio body. After consideration of the matter in hand, the association withdrew fellowship from him. The charges bore in part upon his fitness for the Congregational ministry and his personal judgment and discretion. The church, which has passed through a severe trial, is united and harmonious. Rev. L. E. Ratliff, a minister of the Friends Church, is supplying the pulpit pending the call of a new pastor. Mr. Condo has instituted legal proceedings against the church.

Mich.—Grand Traverse Association met at Northport. Topics were: Limit of Organization, The Claims of Foreign Missions upon the Churches, Does the New Testament Afford the True Ideal of Church Work for All Time, To What Extent Do the Churches of Today Conform to the New Testament Ideal in Polity, in Doctrine, in Administration and in Missionary Activity, Pulpit Themes. The meeting was enthusiastic all through.

Wis.—Lemonweir Convention met here June 2, 3. Rev. Edrys Jones preached the sermon. Topics were: Loving Christ, What Does It Mean? Christian Stewardship; Giving in the Old Testament; Giving in the New Testament; Women's Foreign Missions; Church Work and Church Extension; Tramp Preachers and What to Do with Them; Elements of Strength and Weakness in the C. E. Societies. A symposium was held on The Causes Which Prevent the Spirituality of the Churches.

N. D.—Wahpeton Conference met at Dwight, June 1, 2, and despite rainy weather was well attended. Rev. Samuel Williams preached the sermon. Sunday School Work, Fargo College and Bible Work were among the subjects considered.

CLUBS

Vt.—Passumpsic Club met in St. Johnsbury, May 27. After-supper speeches were made by Prin. D. Y. Comstock on Congregationalism and Education, A. F. Stone on The Editor Abroad and J. A. Sault on the Editor at Home. In the evening the general public were invited to hear an address by Rev. M. C. Julian of New Bedford, Mass., on The Huguenots in New England, with stereopticon illustrations.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 835.]

Dorchester.—Pilgrim has just sent $120 to the famine fund for India. At the prayer meeting on a recent evening over $40 were given to Weiser Academy, Idaho, after listening to the vigorous address of Missionary Paddock. Ladies' night of the Fraternal Association was attended by 130 members and their wives who, after a reception and refreshments, were entertained with a lecture and stereopticon views of Venice by Rev. J. F. Brodie of Salem, a classmate of the pastor, Rev. W. H. Allbright. Last Sunday marked the 30th anniversary of the church, recognized by a special service in the evening. Mr. Seth Mendell reviewed the early years and Mr. E. B. Worrell spoke of the present. The future of the church was considered by the pastor.——Second. A special event last Sunday was the missionary rally in the afternoon, in which the four missionary organizations in the church combined forces and heard a moving address from Miss Ellen M. Stone of Bulgaria. Nearly 400 persons were present.

Massachusetts

Revere.—First. The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. W. S. Eaton was observed May 15. During this period 106 new members have been received into the church, 66 on confession. There has been a natural and healthful growth in all the departments, and the outlook for the future was never more encouraging to people and pastor. Mr. Eaton is now making special efforts to increase the benevolences. By vote of the church committee an offering will be taken this year for each of the six national societies.

Winthrop.—Union. The Sunday evenings at Tewksbury Chapel during part of May and all of June have been devoted to the general subject, Business and Christianity. Addresses have been made by laymen such as ex-Mayor Carter of Chelsea, Mr. Richardson, dean of Burdett Business College, Mr. Lewis, pitcher of the Boston Baseball League, and others. Rev. Arthur Truslow is pastor.

Malden.—Maplewood. The church has recently met a financial crisis and debt raising heroically. A letter was sent to all the people from the standing committee; then a day of fasting and prayer was called by the pastor; then, after a brief sermon, the pastor stood before the congregation with a blackboard having on it 10 squares, representing a total of $1,000, to be rubbed off as subscriptions came in in sums from $100 to $1. Hearty responses were received until over $200 were promised beyond the thousand first asked for. Then came a time of rejoicing, a quickening of Christian fellowship and an increased love for Christ and his church. Rev. W. A. Evans, the pastor, preached the Memorial Day sermon May 30, the Grand Army and city government attending in a body. The subject was God's Teaching by the War. Many were unable to gain admission.

Newton.—Second of West Newton is to make extensive changes in its chapel, adding a gallery and making classrooms for the Sunday school.——Auburndale. The first number of a small weekly church paper, The Greeting, has just been issued.

Lowell.—Kirk Street has usually closed for a part of the summer, but has voted to maintain the usual services each Sunday of the coming summer. The Sunday evening services have been exceptionally popular, and Rev. W. A. Bartlett has firmly established himself in the good will of the city.

Middlefield is manifesting new and vigorous life. A recent financial campaign effected results which surprised the people themselves and suggest the great possibilities of united church work here. More than the amount required for the current year's expenses was pledged and the members of the church and many friends of the church deserve great credit for the heartiness and unanimity of their response to the appeal. The ordination of the pastor, Rev. H. A. Youtz, May 27, was an occasion of interest and inspiration. The presence of the neighboring pastors and of Dr. Judson Smith, a native of Middlefield, brought a blessing.

Worcester.—Pilgrim. Last week the women held their eighth annual reception for the babies in the parish, 175 guests being present and nearly 100 little ones under three years. The Men's Association invited the public to a lecture by Rev. Sherrod Soule on The Pilgrims Before 1620 and a description of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage of last summer.——Old South, Bethany and Summer Street Churches have organized bicycle clubs.

Maine

Bangor.—Perhaps no movement is more important to the churches than the Interdenominational Commission, represented at a recent meeting here. The organization was started in 1890 and consists of representatives of five denominations, each of which is fully, heartily and finally committed to the principles of the commission. The sixth year demonstrates the practical success of the work, as there has not been a single case of encroachment by one denomination on another's field, while there have been inquiry and quiet adjustments. Vigilance is maintained in carrying out the principles and reporting to the secretary.

Machias.—The Social Circle having cleared the parsonage of debt has insured the church buildings for $5,000. Farther improvements in heating and lighting are projected. At the recent jubilee the pastor was presented with $25 in gold as a surprise.

Cranberry Isles.—Rev. C. E. Harwood's sudden death left parish affairs in an unsettled state, and Rev. Charles Whittier is supplying and arranging the work of the church. Mr. Harwood willed several pews to the church.

Cape Elizabeth.—First. Rev. Robert Lawton, recently received from the Methodist church to membership in the church in Yarmouth and in Cumberland Association, has been called to this church.

Auburn.—High Street. Extensive repairs on the edifice, including new ceiling, windows, stairs, etc., are decided upon. The sum needed is about $5,000, a considerable part of which is already pledged.

Rev. E. M. Cousins of Gray supplies the two union chapels in Raymond Sunday afternoons.——Rev. M. S. Hartwell of Yarmouth supplies in Pownal Sunday afternoons.——A Sunday school of 63 members has been organized in Brooks, and the outlook is hopeful.——Union services are to be held once a month at the various churches in Thomaston.——The C. E. Society and Epworth League of Aroostook County have agreed to send a car load of flour to the starving people of India, and the B. & A. R. R. gives free passage over its line.——Rev. B. B. Merrill, the faithful and efficient pastor of the First Church, Brewer, has just passed the 14th anniversary of his settlement.——Rev. R. G. Harbutt has returned from Clifton Springs to his work in Searsport.

New Hampshire

Hinsdale.—The work of canvassing the town to ascertain the religious characteristics of the people with a view to aid the pastors in their church work shows that the adult attendants at church number 906, non-attendants 233, church members 675, number of children in the Sunday school 325, not attending 138, number of adults in the school 231, in the home department 40.

Kingston.—The pastor, Rev. W. F. Warren, lately introduced a new feature into the Sunday evening service, previously arranging with several of his parishioners to prepare brief papers or talks upon the subject How to make Secular Things Sacred. The result of the experiment was an unusually interesting and helpful service.

Atkinson.—Two women of the parish, interested in its welfare and desiring to make proof of their liberality while living, have recently given $2,000 to the society, a portion of the income of which is to go for the support of preaching. The church is also to receive a legacy of $500 by the will of a friend.

Exeter.—First. The church has lately received $1,000 from Dr. A. L. Merrill, to be known as the Henry R. Merrill Fund, in memory of the donor's brother, the income to be used perpetually for the support of preaching.

Vermont

Northfield celebrated its 75th anniversary last week, and the fact was brought out that the first pastor, Rev. Calvin Granger, and the present incumbent, Rev. W. S. Hazen, are the only ones of the church's pastoral leaders who now survive. The former addressed the gathering briefly. The sermon was preached by Rev. Norman Seaver, D.D., and addresses were given by neighboring pastors. An evening reception was held at which interesting reminiscences were given.

Weathersfield.—This old church recently held its first roll-call. Messages were received from six members over 70 years of age and two over 80. New life seems to have come to this depleted organization and two new deacons were elected. Miss Brokaw, who has been with them since January, will immediately be followed by Mr. Prentiss, who will work here and at the Bow.

Corinth, East, has five church buildings and as many religious organizations, but the Congregational pastor, Rev. E. W. Hatch, is the only resident minister in service. He is invited to resume Sunday services in the Old Center meeting house, where he preached during his first four years in this place.

Newfane.—The society has voted to accept the offer of the Ladies' Aid Society to replace the old pews with new ones, and otherwise to repair the house of worship.

Connecticut

New Haven.—Memorial Day the Sunday schools of the city and the Boys' Brigades united with the Grand Army in the exercises of the day. In the forenoon the Boys' Brigades assisted the veterans in decorating the soldiers' graves. In the afternoon the brigades and the Sunday schools assembled and marched on the Green 10,000 strong. All denominations, 10 in number, were represented. Afterwards the different divisions assembled in the various churches. The children and young people repeated in concert a pledge of patriotism. In the evening services were held in the Hyperion Theater.——United. Dr. Munger leaves this month for the White Mountains. During his absence the assistant pastor, Frederick Lynch, will preach. During July United and Center Churches will unite in their services.——Center. Dr. Newman Smyth has rendered valuable service in the recent investigation of the city street sprinkling and advertising contracts.

Hartford.—Center. The Hartford City Guard attended a special memorial service in the church last Sunday evening with a sermon by Dr. Lamson.——Fourth. The vacancy caused by the appointment of Evangelist Gillette as city missionary, an office newly created, will be filled by the assistant pastor, Rev. W. F. Norris, who recently announced his intention to take an extended vacation, this decision being arrived at partly on account of the low financial condition of the church, which he proposed to help in this way.——The usual memorial sermons were delivered in all the churches May 30.

Bristol.—The home department of the Sunday school has increased to large numbers. A recent Sunday morning was especially devoted to it, the pastor preaching a special sermon and extra class exercises taking place in the Sunday school. The walls and ceiling of the chapel are being newly decorated and a new carpet is being laid.

Berlin.—The recent canvass of the town shows 271 Congregational families, with a membership of 1,112 persons out of a total population of 2,983. Only 19 Roman Catholics against 523 Protestants do not attend church.

Norwich.—First. Two afternoon exhibits of rare and interesting curios at the home of Mrs. A. W. Dickey at Norwich Town for the benefit of the church were largely attended, and were a success financially.

Stonington.—Rev. C. J. Hill preached his farewell sermon May 30. He has been a successful pastor here for several years and resigned on account of ill health. He will visit Europe this summer.

Wolcott has secured the services of Rev. F. P. Waters, who takes charge of the parish immediately and expects to occupy the parsonage as soon as it is ready.

Pomfret.—The exterior of the meeting house has received a fresh coat of paint, and the audience-room a new carpet with other needed repairs.

Newington.—The Church Aid Society, with its usual activity and helpfulness, has voted to assume the debt of $200 of the society.

Ground has been broken for the new chapel at West Suffield.——The receipts of the strawberry tea at Pilgrim Church, Canaan, were over $26.——The Huntington church is free from debt, through the generosity of some friends.——Rev. J. P. Hawley of Columbia, who has been seriously ill, is slowly convalescing.——Thieves entered the meeting house at Goshen recently but secured nothing.——Electric lights have been put in the meeting house at Suffield.——New carpets have been laid in the auditorium of the church at South Manchester.——Rev. J. P. Trowbridge of Eastford preached a special sermon on the 25th anniversary of his ordination.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

Maine has taken a collection for the famine sufferers in India and has forwarded it to the missionaries in that field. The Ladies' Aid Society, after having incurred a considerable debt for church improvements, reports itself free from incumbrance.

Cortland has just received a beautiful communion set, the gift of Mr. T. A. Gage of Newark, N. J.

New Jersey

Little Ferry.—The Union Church of the neighboring town of Ridgefield Park has for years been maintaining a mission Sunday school in this place. As the population is largely German, however, need was felt of religious worship in that tongue, and Rev. F. W. Martini, a local preacher in the Methodist church, has for a year past met that need and has gathered together a church of about 30 members. A council was held, May 14, at the Methodist church of Ridgefield Park for the purpose of recognizing the new church and ordaining and installing its pastor. The Union Church presented a formal protest, but as this after consultation was withdrawn, and it appeared that no English speaking Sunday school could do the work of the new church, the latter was recognized and its pastor installed, Rev. C. A. Savage making the recognition address and giving the right hand of fellowship. Rev. H. S. Bliss offered the ordaining prayer. Rev. George Wechbacker, a graduate of Chicago Seminary, was ordained as evangelist at the same time.

THE SOUTH

Georgia

Atlanta.—First. On his visit to Atlanta to preach the baccalaureate sermon at the Atlanta University, Pres. C. C. Hall of Union Seminary spoke in this church at the evening service on the influence of secret prayer as illustrated in Christ's life. The pastor, Rev. H. H. Proctor, is preaching a series of sermons on prayer, and Dr. Hall's subject, selected without his knowledge of the present series of sermons, was most appropriate and its treatment by him especially helpful.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

Cleveland.—Plymouth. The church chorus and soloists, under the direction of Mr. D. J. Pratt, the pastor's assistant and musical director, gave a fine rendering of Gaul's Holy City on a recent Sunday evening. The great auditorium was crowded and the cantata will be repeated another Sunday evening.

Illinois

[For Chicago news see page 825.]

Bunker Hill continues to have large congregations morning and evening. A chorus and several soloists assist in the services. There have been additions to the church at nearly every communion during the present pastorate. The mayor of the city and a member of the church have recently placed electric lights in the building, thus making the church one of the most conveniently furnished in this part of the State. Rev. A. F. Hertel is pastor.

Indiana

Solsberry, in the hill country of southern Indiana, is isolated from close Congregational fellowship. It was formed by a colony from Ohio, and has sent out a number of missionaries and ministers. Superintendent Curtis visited the field May 23, and was received with hearty welcome and the congregations at four services were large. The church is in excellent condition, and the high character of its membership makes it a light shining in all that region. Its original members were anti-slavery and temperance advocates, and the church retains in adverse circumstances its power as a living Christian force.

Indianapolis.—Mayflower. Rev. C. A. Riley, ordained June 1, graduated from the Butler Bible School (Disciple) in 1896. He has united with this church and has lately preached with acceptance in various Congregational pulpits.——Plymouth. May 30 the morning service was given up to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Woman's Relief Corps. The house was handsomely decorated and Rev. F. E. Dewhurst discoursed to the veterans on The Sword Which Was Bathed in Heaven.

Cannelburg.—The church at this mining town was greatly hindered in its growth by changed conditions due to the Debs strike. For weeks Indiana militia were quartered here and a wholesale change was made by the mine owners in their workmen. Recently Rev. Thomas Smith has taken up the work at this point as an out-station, holding service on Sunday. The Sunday school has been re organized, and matters are looking more hopeful in a spiritual way. He has visited a great many homes of the miners and people are astonished at the number which come to church.

East Mount Carmel on the Wabash river bottoms, 75 miles south of Terre Haute, is doing a good work under Deacon Z. F. Van Sickle. A small village and saw mill and farms are being cleared. The church has 20 members, the Sunday school 60 attendants and the average congregation numbers 100. The schoolhouse is used. A church building is in progress of erection and $200 aid has been asked of the C. C. B. S. The people are earnest and self-sacrificing.

Fort Wayne.—Plymouth is deeply affected in the sudden death of Mrs. W. B. Douglas, the oldest charter member of the church, a royal woman in every way and always full of good cheer.

Michigan

Detroit.—Old First. Dr. Boynton has been East preaching to the students at Amherst College and addressing the home missionary society at Saratoga. He is much missed when from home.——Mt. Hope. An excellent concert was arranged for two evenings last week, the sale of tickets being so great that all could not be accommodated on one evening. The proceeds will go toward the new building. The Men's Auxiliary was in charge.

Essexville has been practically raised from the dead. Rev. C. T. Patchell of Bay City and some of his earnest workers have tried several methods of resuscitation, and have finally succeeded. There is a future for the cause here, and there seems reason to hope that a strong church will grow up in this suburb of Bay City.

Vicksburg.—The meeting house was crowded recently to hear the parting words of Dr. D. H. Reiter. The Methodist Episcopal church united in the farewell service. Mr. Reiter will be much missed in the church and community, and strong complimentary resolutions were passed, setting forth the esteem in which he is held.

Greenville.—Rev. A. M. Hyde preached his last sermons as pastor on a recent Sunday. The farewell address was reserved for the evening, and the other churches united in the service. The house could not accommodate all who came. The visiting pastors took part, and Mr. Hyde's sermon was a powerful appeal.

Imlay City.—The Men's Club closed another season of splendid work in the church and community by a grand banquet, held last week Wednesday evening.

Dexter has raised its apportionment for home missions, which is a great encouragement to pastor and people. The organizations are all doing good work. The Ladies' Missionary Society is small but active, having raised $20 for home missions.

Traverse City.—Rev. Demas Cochlin is giving a course of sermons at present on Pauline Theology. Each subject is focussed upon present day life.

Wisconsin

Oshkosh.—Plymouth has inaugurated a vesper service at 5 P. M., Sunday evenings, to take the place of the regular service during hot weather. Music is made a special feature, and, to create a more fraternal spirit, speakers from the different churches are invited to speak on questions that interest all churches in common.

THE WEST

Missouri

St. Louis.—Compton Hill made a special effort, May 23, to raise a debt of $1,200. In a few moments $1,400 were pledged in $5 shares.——Reber Place is enjoying a delightful revival through the immediate agency of workers from the Salvation Army. About 30 conversions are reported. The C. E. Society and the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip have also been greatly blessed.

Minnesota

Minneapolis.—Fremont Avenue. Increasing congregations, especially in the evening, the payment of old debts to the amount of over $250 and good benevolent contributions are reported.——Robbinsdale. The church is growing, having received welcome accessions. The C. E. Society is specially efficient and cares for the Sunday evening services. The pastor is supplying Mayflower Church, a small mission in the city, which he hopes to develop.——New Brighton. Increasing activity in the stock-yards has caused growth in the town, which it is hoped will affect the church favorably.

Clarissa.—This little church, formed a few months ago, has erected a building and called a former presiding elder of the United Brethren denomination, who also is a practicing physician. The membership is so small that it is unable to secure a pastor for full time.

Rose Creek has been pastorless for several months, owing to a depleted treasury, but arrangements have been made with Rev. C. J. Swain of Lyle to supply every Sunday afternoon in connection with his present charge. It is hoped to secure a pastor in the autumn.

Sauk Center has an opportunity to sell its building and lot for school purposes and plans are being considered for securing a new site and the erection of an edifice to seat 400 persons. The church is making progress under Rev. G. E. Smith.

Grand Meadow and Dexter are uncared for, but arrangements are being made to secure a student at one town and a pastor at the other. Dexter has suffered severely by fire and the church has been weakened in various other ways.

Kansas

Goshen, whose building was destroyed by cyclone in May, 1896, dedicated a new house of worship May 16. Led by its devoted pastor, Rev. W. H. Knight, it has worked heroically to get the new building, many members at the same time restoring their own homes. About 100 families met with great loss by the cyclone. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. C. L. Mills, L. P. Broad and W. H. Knight, and enough money was pledged to assure the payment of all remaining indebtedness.

Blue Rapids.—At a recent communion service the pastor, Rev. William Haresnape, asked for special pledges to reduce the amount of aid to be asked from the H. M. S. for the coming year. They were quickly and willingly made and brought the amount asked for 40 per cent. below the estimate of the State board of directors.

Argentine, though pastorless, finds encouragement in a large Sunday school and an active Y. P. S. C. E. The church is an important one, with the opportunities of a Kansas City suburb containing 6,000 souls and the difficulties of a town in which numerous operatives are required to work on Sunday.

Ellis has cheerfully voted to spare its pastor, Rev. R. H. Harper, occasionally on week days to visit pastorless churches on the line of the U. P. R. R.

At Kiowa Rev. R. L. Layfield, the Kansas City evangelist, has recently assisted the pastor, Rev. J. E. Everett, in a helpful revival.

North Dakota

Havana.—The work on this field is rapidly gaining. Though the church is only 15 months old, steps are being taken to erect a house of worship, and if the C. C. B. S. can aid, an edifice will be built at once.

Hankinson recently celebrated its 10th anniversary with appropriate services. Six persons united at that time. The Sunday school has a home department. Rev. G. S. Bascom is pastor.

Abercrombie, under the lead of Rev. W. A. Wilkinson, is paying off its debts and making substantial progress.——Though without a pastor, the little church at Dexter sustains its home Sunday school and has recently organized another, tributary to this one.

PACIFIC COAST

California

San Francisco—Richmond. Lumber is already on the ground for a new edifice.——Bethany. Major Winchell and Colonel Palmer of the Salvation Army presented its colonization scheme on a recent Sunday evening.

Saratoga celebrated, May 10, its 25th anniversary. In the quarter-century 210 members have been received, 102 on confession. The present membership is 104.

The Pacific, largely through the efforts of Supt. L. L. Wirt, devoted its issue of May 26 to Congregational S. S. work. This tireless laborer for the children in his seven years of service has organized 339 schools, in which nearly 10,000 persons have studied the Bible. Of these schools 185 still live. Twenty Congregational churches, two Presbyterian, two Baptist and one of the United Brethren have grown out of this work, with a present membership of 700. Seventeen of them have erected houses of worship, and their property aggregates $40,000 in value. During this period the State has contributed to the C. S. S. and P. S. $11,400 ——Santa Rosa has pledged the last dollar on its loan from the C. C. B. S.——Since Jan. 1 sixteen members have been added to the church at Porterville.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BACHELER, Gilbert H., Hartford Sem., to Perry, Me.
BARTLETT, Ernest M., Andover Sem., to Rockdale Ch., Northbridge, Mass.
BELL, John W., to supply another year at Newington, N. H.
CHASE, Jas. B., Correctionville, Io., to Hull.
CLARK, Ward R., Oberlin Sem., to Almena, Kan., for six months. Accepts, and has begun work.
DONNELL, Albert, late of Wellfleet, Mass., to Slatersville, R. I. Accepts.
DUNN, Simeon B., Shoreham, Vt., to S. Dartmouth, Mass. Accepts, to begin work July 4.
EVANS, Kenneth E., not called to Cong'l Ch., Danvers Center, Mass., but to a church of another denomination in Danvers.
GILT, Henry F., Eugene, Ore., to Moravia, N. Y.
HJERPE, Erik G., New Britain, Ct., declines call to Swedish Ch., Boston, Mass.
HUCKEL, Oliver, First Ch., Amherst, Mass., accepts call to Associate Reformed Ch. (Ind. Presb.), Baltimore, Md.
HYDE, Chas. L., recently of Central Ch., Toledo, O., to Longmont, Col. Accepts.
JOHNSON, W. J. (formerly Meth.), W. Superior, Wis., to Le Mars, Io. Accepts.
KENYON, Frank E., Denmark, Io., to Wauseon, O. Accepts.
LAWTON, Robt., Yarmouth, Me., to First Ch., Cape Elizabeth.
LYND, S. Edward, Fishhook, Ill., to Whitehall, Mich. Accepts.
MCCLELLAND, Raymond G., Austinburg, O., to Dayton, Wn.
MORACH, Jacob, German Ch., Princeton, Neb., to Avoca. Accepts.
MORSE, Morris W., Chicago Sem., to Bridgewater, Ct. Accepts.
MOULTON, Ezra C., Red Oak, Io., accepts call to Corning.
PEDERSEN, Ludwig J., Scand. Ch., Fargo, N. D., accepts call to Merrill, Wis.
PEEBLES, David, to new church at Bountiful, U., where he has been at work.
PIHL, G. E., Chicago, to Swedish Ch., Woodstock, Ct.
ROPER, Elijah H., Andover Sem., to Westford, Mass. Accepts.
SEVERANCE, Claude M., late of Japan Mission, to Denwai Ave. Mission (late Lorain St.), Cleveland, O. Has begun work.
SHATTO, Chas. R., to Danville, Io., where he has been supplying. Accepts.
STEARNS, Wm. F., formerly of Marlboro, Mass., to Norfolk, Ct.
STROUP, Chas. A., Mesopotamia and Farmington, O., to Freedom and Charlestown. Accepts, with residence at Freedom.
THAYER, Henry E., recently of Longmont, Col., to Plymouth Ch., Wichita, Kan. Accepts, and has begun work.
UNGER, Sam'l L, Malta, Ill., to Rockton. Accepts.
WATERS, Frank P., Waterbury, Ct., to Wolcott. Accepts.
WAY, Wm. H., withdraws acceptance of call to Parishville, N. Y., and goes to Rensselaer Falls.
WEBBER, Berthold L., Aurelia, Io, to Milford. Accepts.
WEBSTER, Franklin G., Oswego Falls, N. Y., declines call to Eaton.
WHITE, Levi, Westfield, Ind, to South Side Ch., Indianapolis.
WIARD, H. DeForest, Chicago, Ill., accepts call to Fort Dodge, Io.
WILD, Joseph, late of Bond St. Ch., Toronto, Can., to Plymouth Ch., Los Angeles, Cal. Accepts.
WOOD, Morgan, Plymouth Ch., Detroit, Mich., to Bond St. Ch., Toronto, Can.

Ordinations and Installations

BARNETT, J. W., i. South Ch., Columbus, O., June 1. Sermon, Rev. B. R. Long; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Washington Gladden, D. D., J. C. Jackson, Jr., D. D., D. F. Harris, Alex. Milne.
CAMERON, Malcolm J., o. p. Lynxville, Wis., May 10. Sermon, Dr. Henry Faville; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. Willan, Philo Hitchcock, A. L. P. Loomis, J. H. Dixon and W. A. Griffith.
KNODELL, Jas. R., i. Pilgrim Ch., Oakland, Cal., May 20. Sermon, Rev. G. R. Hatch; charge to the people, Rev. L. H. Hallock, D. D.
LADD, Geo. E, o. and i. Waterbury, Vt., June 3. Sermon, Rev. Norman Seaver, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. S. N. Jackson, H. L. Hartwell, Peter McMillan, W. S. Hazen, D. D.
MARTINI, Fritz, o. and i. over new German Ch., Little Ferry, N. J., May 14. Sermon, Rev. C. A. Savage; other parts, Rev. Messrs. H. S. Bliss, J. A. Chamberlin, J. L. Scudder, D. D.
NOBLE, Edwin L., i. Wendell Ave. Ch, Brockton, Mass., June 1. Sermon, Rev. C. E. Jefferson; other parts, Rev. Messrs. E. S. J. McAllister, R. L. Rae, A. W. Archibald, D. D.
PATTERSON, Sam'l C., o. and rec. p. Lodi, Cal., May 18.
RILEY, Chas. A., o. Mayflower Church, Indianapolis, Ind., June 2. Sermon, J. W. Comfort; other parts, Dr. N. A. Hyde, Rev. Messrs. O. D. Fisher, F. A. Jefferey, F. M. Whitlock, E. D. Curtis, D. D.
SCOFIELD, Cyrus I., i. Northfield, Mass., May 26. Sermon, Dr. A. H. Plumb; other parts, Rev. Messrs. S. P. Cook, D. H. Strong, G. G. Atkins, G. W. Judson.
WECHBACHER, Geo., o. as evangelist, Ridgefield Park, N. J., May 14. Sermon, Rev. C. A. Savage; other parts, Rev. Messrs. H. S. Bliss, J. A. Chamberlin, J. L. Scudder, D. D.
YOUTZ, Herbert A., o. p. Middlefield, Mass., May 27. Sermon, Dr. Judson Smith; other parts, Rev. Messrs. G. W. Andrews, J. C. Seagrave, T. D. Murphy, J. H. Laird.

Resignations

GALLOWAY, Emil R., Eighth Ch., San Francisco, Cal.
HAYWARD, Chas. E., Fairfield and E. Fairfield, Vt.
JOHNSTON, Wm., Western Ch., Toronto, Can.
KEEP, Elisha A., Conway, N. H., to accept call to Walpole. He will begin work this month.
LANPHEAR, Nath'l D., Fisher's Station and Grandville, Mich.
MACCOLL, John A., North Ch., New Bedford, Mass., after a pastorate of more than seven years.
MCSKIMMING, David D., Plymouth Ch., Youngstown, O.
PERKINS, Henry M., Derby, Vt., after a pastorate of four and a half years, resignation to take effect Aug. 1.
SINGLE, John, German Ch., Avoca, Io.

Churches Organized

CHICAGO, Ill., Mayflower Branch of Pilgrim Ch., 27 May, 64 members.
CUSTER, Wn., Swedish, — May.
LITTLE FERRY, N. J., German, rec. 14 May, 30 members.

Supplies for the Summer

NORFOLK, Ct., Chas. H. Williams, Hartford.
PARKERSBURG, Io., John P. Clyde, Yale Seminary, called.
SPRING VALLEY, Wis., Wm. H. Short, Yale Seminary.
WALKER, Minn., Ira G. Hambleton, Chicago Seminary.

Miscellaneous

DOUGHERTY, Jas. G., was recently tendered a reception in the parlors of First Ch, Kansas City, Kan., to mark the 25th anniversary of his coming to the "Sunflower State." Though his opposition to the lottery and other evils has been active and outspoken, the large attendance of citizens representing various political and religious opinions showed that he has a host of friends. A large cake, frosted with silver and gold coin, was presented to him.
HAWLEY, John P., of New Hartford, Ct., is suffering from nervous prostration, induced in part by anxiety and care during Mrs Hawley's recent long illness. She is now able to walk a few steps with crutches.
KIMBALL, John, formerly managing editor of the Pacific, has returned from Lytton Springs somewhat improved in health, but still a sick man.
WILLIAMS, W. Tyrer, pastor at Linwood, Kan., is in Chicago, where his wife is receiving medical treatment. A student from Washburn College is supplying during his absence.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES

	Conf.	Tot.
CALIFORNIA
Ferndale,	8	9
Harrison Gulch,	4	13
Los angeles, Central,	3	5
Mills College,	4	4
Pasadena, North,	10	10
Perris,	—	6
Porterville,	6	11
San Bernardino,	—	5
San Francisco, Fourth,	5	5
Santa Barbara,	5	6
CONNECTICUT
Barkhamsted,	—	5
Ridgebury,	—	5
Shelton,	—	4
Torrington, French,	—	95
ILLINOIS
Bunker Hill,	—	3
Chicago, Doremus,	9	10
Gross Park,	4	4
Pilgrim Mayflower,	50	64
S. Chicago, First,	19	22
Streator, First,	—	12
INDIANA
Brightwood,	5	5
Fort Wayne, Plymouth,	2	7
Washington,	4	4
IOWA
Britt,	—	17
Danville,	12	14
Elma,	5	9
Genoa Bluffs,	2	4
Golden,	5	9
Humboldt,	7	7
Manson,	3	5
Preston,	9	11
Riceville,	4	4
Waterloo,	5	9
KANSAS
Kirwin,	4	4
Manhattan,	17	21
MAINE
Bangor, Central,	4	4
E. Hiram,	4	4
MASSACHUSETTS
Dalton,	3	10
Middleboro, First,	6	8

	Conf.	Tot.
MICHIGAN
Alpine Center,	—	26
Detroit, Boulevard,	8	11
Grand Ledge,	46	63
Grand Rapids, Smith Memorial,	—	6
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Berlin Mills,	9	11
Lancaster,	11	12
NEW JERSEY
Little Ferry,	—	30
Upper Montclair,	—	12
NORTH DAKOTA
Dawson,	4	4
Fessend n,	4	4
Hankinson,	—	6
VERMONT
Cabot,	2	4
E. Corinth,	4	4
Londonderry,	4	6
Weybridge,	6	6
WASHINGTON
Kalama,	—	3
Seattle, Green Lake,	30	30
WISCONSIN
Antigo,	—	11
Lake Geneva,	6	12
Milwaukee, Plymouth,	—	21
Oshkosh, Plymouth,	—	21
Pittsville,	6	6
Rio and Wyocena,	8	8
OTHER CHURCHES
Beresford, S. D,	3	3
Bountiful, U.,	—	9
Breckenridge, Mo.,	3	3
Brooklyn, N. Y., Plymouth,	17	17
Philadelphia, Pa., Central,	5	8
Sylvan, Ore.,	—	12
Trenton, Neb,	65	66
Winnepeg, Can., Central,	—	30
Churches with less than three,	32	55

Conf., 501; Tot., 974.

Total since Jan. 1: Conf, 9,519: Tot. 17,194

EDUCATION

—— Mills College in California has just graduated seventeen young women. Dr. L. H. Hallock preached the baccalaureate sermon.

—— Amherst College hopes to receive, within a few weeks, $100,000 as its share of the $2,000,000 of the Fayerweather estate, which is at last free from litigation. Generous members of the Pratt family of Brooklyn, who have already given largely to the college, have just made an additional gift of $20,000 to endow the infirmary which they erected.

—— The new school building of Eells Academy, Colville, Wn, was dedicated May 20. The sermon was by Rev. William Davies of Spokane. Three hundred dollars were secured to pay last bills. On the following evening Prof. E. S. Woodcock, principal of the academy, conducted an oratorical contest, the first prize being a term of tuition in the academy, and the second half a term. There were over forty students enrolled last year. The teachers received but meager pay. It needs an organ, library and necessary apparatus.

—— Tuskegee's sixteenth Commencement marked the close of a most successful year. The number enrolled reached 1,073 in the normal department and 200 in the training school. Twenty-one States, Indian Territory, the West Indies and Africa have been represented. The average number on the school grounds for the year has been about 1,500. Cash receipts from all sources have been $104,595.62. Of this the students have paid about $8,000. They have paid in work done for the school $40,000. The number of graduates is forty-eight.

—— The anniversary of the theological department of Howard University occurred May 28. Six men were graduated, three with a classical diploma. One of the graduating addresses was upon Hildebrand and another upon Monasticism, and both were complimented for the broad historical treatment that characterized them. Another address was upon the colored preacher's duty to his race, and it showed such a manly, comprehensive appreciation of the condition of the colored people that the leading paper of the city requested it for publication. The report of the examiners was very commendatory. There was one pleasant new departure in an alumni banquet, at which an alumni fund was inaugurated. The Junior Class is the largest for a number of years. Any gifts will be doubly appreciated because of the straitened finances of the A. M. A., which supports this department of the university. The department issues a modest bulletin, whose last number has reports from a number of its graduates. These show the faithful, self-denying service which they are rendering in various denominations and in hard fields both in America and in Africa.

Royal makes the food pure,
wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Marriages

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

ALLEN—BRYANT—In Olivet, Mich., June 2, Rev. Ernest B. Allen, pastor of Pilgrim Church, Lansing, and Mary R. Bryant.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

AIKEN—In Hanover, N. H., June 2, Henry O. Aiken, general secretary of Y. M. C. A. at Dartmouth College, aged 32 He was son of the late Dr. Edward Aiken of Amherst, N. H, and grandson of Dr. Silas Aiken, formerly pastor of Park Street Church, Boston. President Tucker attended his funeral at Amherst, June 4, and paid touching tribute to his noble character and useful life. After graduation at Dartmouth, in 1887, he taught successfully in Vermont and at the Hill School, Pottstown, Pa., until a year ago, when he accepted the position at Dartmouth. His manly character won the respect of the entire student body, and his work, already effective, promised large results in the future.

DENT—In Troy, N. H., May 2, of consumption, Edwin Bullock Dent, only son of A. C. and E. B. Dent, aged 30 yrs., 4 mos.

FARLEY—In Ipswich, May 22, Nathaniel Rogers Farley, aged 82 yrs., 8 mos.

PIERCE—In Auburn, May 30, Elizabeth Peabody, wife of Rev. Charles M. Pierce, aged 59 yrs.

RICE—In New Haven, Ct., May 30, Richard G. Rice, an officer of the United Church and secretary of the Class of 1839, Yale, aged 82 yrs.

TOBEY—In S. Berwick, Me., Elizabeth, widow of Rev. Alvan Tobey and daughter of Chester Adams of Charlestown, Mass., aged 85 yrs.

HON. BARAK MAXWELL

Died in Wells, Me., March 28, aged eighty-two years. He had been an active member of the First Congregational Church since the beginning of his religious life, and a constant attendant till near the time of his death. He was superintendent of the Sunday school for nearly forty years. Our brother was a very warm friend of missions and a large contributor to all the benevolences of our denomination, leaving legacies for several of them in his will.

He did not grow old. He had a large heart and a well-balanced, superior mind. He seemed twenty years younger than he was. As a wise counselor and a prosperous business man he was well-known in the county and State. He built many vessels, was a large ship owner, and extensively interested in foreign commerce. He was a member of the State legislature in 1861 and 1878, serving respectively in the lower and upper chambers. His death is a great loss to the church and the town. He was one of the few who fully realized what one writer says is the most cherished hope of all good men, "To be kindly remembered and lovingly honored on the spot which gave them birth." B.

MISS SARAH ELIZABETH ANDREW

Died May 30 at her home in Winchester, Mass., in the seventy-fifth year of her age. She was a sister of the late Governor Andrew and possessed many of his noble characteristics. Miss Andrew was a woman of rare Christian culture and strongly devoted to every good cause connected with the Congregational church of which she was a member. Her ready wit and humor and ability for story telling made her attractive to young and old alike.

In all respects Miss Andrew was a true home maker, as all who ever shared her generous hospitality would testify. She leaves a large circle of friends who deeply mourn their bereavement.

◆

From Germany comes news of the successful sewing up of the heart of a man who had been stabbed in an affray. The organ was laid bare and continued its beating while the surgeon was at work upon it.

Do you feel Irritable?
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage and is an invigorating tonic, soothing to the nerves.

Extremely Nervous

Barely Able to Crawl Around—Now Perfectly Cured and Doing Her Own Housework.

"I was extremely nervous, barely able to crawl around, with no strength or ambition. I could not sleep, would have very bad spells with my heart, and my stomach was in a terrible condition. I had dreadful neuralgia pains in my side, and would be dizzy. In the midst of it all I had malarial fever. I was miserable for months after; could not sit up over half an hour without being all exhausted. At last one of my neighbors wanted me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was persuaded to do so and in a little while could eat and sleep better. This encouraged me to continue. I have now taken five bottles, and am perfectly cured. I am doing my housework alone." Mrs. Fred Turner, Barre, Vt. Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The Best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mild, effective. All druggists. 25 cents.

Shirt Waists

Cool comfort in White Lawn Shirt Waists—that's the special attraction we offer you this week. Values that cannot be equaled elsewhere:

Lot 1.—WHITE LAWN SHIRT WAISTS, tucked fronts, soft cuffs,

Only 98c. Each
Actual value $1.50 Each.

Lot 2—Fine Quality WHITE LAWN SHIRT WAISTS, embroidered fronts, Hamburg insertions, soft collars and cuffs; also 500 WHITE SHIRT WAISTS, with white linen detachable collars and cuffs,

Only 1.50 Each
Worth from $2.00 to $2.25 Each.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Organist. A position as organist desired by a lady of ten years' experience. Address L., The Congregationalist.

White Mountains. To rent, a private house for summer months; 14 rooms, with stable. Address Thorn Hill, Jackson, N. H.

Wanted, by young lady of some education, position to take care of children and give instruction in English branches. Address I. T., The Congregationalist.

An old-fashioned pulpit can probably be secured without cost by applying to Rev. D. W. Waldron, 19 Congregational House, 7-A Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

To Let. Furnished Cottage on Lake Whitney, New Haven, Ct. Furnished Cottage on Money Island, off Stony Creek, Ct. Howard Sherman, Whitneyville, New Haven Co., Ct.

Wanted, boarders in an American family, 10 miles from Boston. Every accommodation for comfort, good beds, home table. References given and required. Box 34, Braintree, Mass.

Companion. A teacher wishes a position as companion to a lady, either at the mountains or seaside, for the months of July and August. Address M. L. C., Bridgewater, Mass.

Cottage to Rent at Amagansett, L. I. Containing 8 rooms, kitchen and bath. Fine ocean view. Ten minutes' walk to R. R. depot, five minutes to ocean. Address E. B. Leek.

Wanted, by lady of middle age, the care of an invalid in vicinity of Boston. References all that would be required as to character and ability. Address Mrs. M., office of The Congregationalist.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Wanted, by a refined, middle-aged lady, thoroughly competent, a position as matron, or lady in charge, in a private school or seminary for the ensuing school year. Address B. F., Northampton, Mass.

Stereopticon. For sale a double dissolving stereopticon complete, with 18 feet screen and telescope poles, etc. Suitable for church work. Address Stereopticon, 9 Warren Avenue, Boston.

Board and Rooms. A desirable location at Old Orchard, Me. Ten minutes' walk from the beach. Country and seashore advantages. Electric cars. Terms reasonable. Address Box 190, Old Orchard, Me.

Seashore Cottage for Sale at Rye, N. H. 9 rooms; on bluff overlooking broad Atlantic; good stable, bathing, boating and fishing; finest beach on the coast; furniture if desired; price low. F. D. Butler, Portsmouth, N. H.

Cottage to Rent. I would like to rent my furnished cottage for the season. Located on high hill, with fine view. Five minutes' walk from post office, one mile from R. R. station. Address M. W. Leach, Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Ct.

Wanted, position as housekeeper in an elderly widower's Christian home, by a refined, middle-aged lady, who understands the care of a nice, quiet home. Not over twenty miles from Boston. Address, A. R., The Congregationalist.

Housekeeper's Assistant. Middle-aged woman or young girl wanted to assist in doing housework for her room and board in the family of a physician residing near Boston. Must furnish satisfactory proof of good character. Address L. H., this office.

For Summer Guests. A Congregational pastor opens his delightful home for summer guests. Spacious rooms, bath; shady lawns, fine country, elegant drives; first-class table. $1 per day. Accessible from New York or Albany. Rev. J. Marsland, Franklin, N. Y.

Wanted, refined Christian lady for housekeeper in Christian home. May have one girl over six years old. Graded schools and academy, in beautiful, healthy county town. Only two in family. References required. State wages wanted. Address Box 54, Monson, Me.

Summer Home for Children. A lady having a delightful home, with fine grounds, will receive a few children into her family for the summer, giving each a mother's careful personal attention. Highest references given and required. For particulars and terms address S., The Congregationalist.

Seashore Cottage at Bass Rocks, Gloucester, Mass. 8 rooms, all furnished; drainage to the sea; city and spring water; right on Ocean Avenue; $250 to the proper party; the Sanitarium of the North Coast; safe surf-bathing upon good harbor beach. Address Wm. R. Pedrick, Lawrence, Mass.

Summer Boarders. Large airy rooms, with fire if required. Pure mountain air, near Lake Memphremagog, home comforts, piano and organ, near church. Terms reasonable. Rooms without board if required, with use of kitchen for invalids. Address, Box 86, Stanstead, P. Q., Canada.

Boarders Desired at Hillside Farm, two and a half hours' ride from Boston. Location high and healthy. Good rooms and table. Wide verandas, shade trees, pine grove. Lake near by. House open in May. Adults preferred. Terms reasonable. For further information address Box 94, Greenfield, N. H.

To Let for the Summer. First floor (six large rooms) and two chambers, well furnished, for general housekeeping, in house on a farm bordering on Lake Winnepesaukee, 1½ miles from Wolfeboro village and R. R. station. Location and scenery unsurpassed. Good water, piano, etc. Terms reasonable. Address Box 116, Wolfeboro, N. H.

The NEW Form of Admission

The committee appointed by the National Council to prepare a new Form of Admission have reported, and their Form of Admission is now printed in convenient form as an 8 pp. leaflet, No. 7 of the Congregationalist Leaflet series.

Sent, postpaid, for 3 cts.; 10 copies, 25 cts.; 100 copies, $2.00

MAHOGANY AND BRASS.

It is hard for a native Bostonian to keep his "isms" under control, but he is justified in getting a little excited over this new bedstead.

It is a brass frame with mahogany rails and footboard. The combination makes the richest kind of effect. We select the dark grain of old growth San Domingo Mahogany, deeply veined. With the polished brass above the contrast is striking. It dispenses with any valance. With an ordinary brass bedstead you can never "tuck the sheets in." There is no way of covering them except by a drapery. Here is something twice as convenient as a drapery and five times more beautiful.

Naturally it is inexpensive. The simple addition of 10 inches of mahogany makes little effect on the price. Yet it makes twice as beautiful a bed.

Our new catalogue of Summer Furniture will be mailed on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

COMMENCEMENT DATES

The following list includes the Commencement and Anniversary days of the leading educational institutions:

UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Adelbert, Cleveland, O.,	June 23
Amherst, Amherst, Mass.,	June 30
Bates, Lewiston, Me.,	July 1
Beloit, Beloit, Wis.,	June 24
Berea, Berea, Ky.,	June 23
Bowdoin, Brunswick, Me.,	June 24
Brown, Providence, R. I.,	June 16
Carleton, Northfield, Minn.,	June 16
Colby, Waterville, Me.,	June 30
Colorado, Colorado Springs, Col.,	June 16
Cornell, Ithaca, N. Y.,	June 17
Dartmouth, Hanover, N. H.,	June 30
Doane, Crete, Neb.,	June 24
Drury, Springfield, Mo ,	June 17
Fargo, Fargo, N. D.,	June 16
Fisk, Nashville, Tenn.,	June 16
Gates, Neligh, Neb.,	June 23
Hamilton, Clinton, N. Y.,	June 24
Harvard, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 30
Hiram, Hiram, O ,	June 24
Illinois, Jacksonville, Ill.,	June 10
Indiana, Bloomington, Ind.,	June 16
Iowa, Grinnell, Io.,	June 16
Iowa (Univ.), Iowa City, Io.,	June 10
Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, Md.,	June 15
Lafayette, Easton, Pa.,	June 23
Lake Forest, Lake Forest, Ill.,	June 10
Marietta, Marietta, O.,	June 17
Massachusetts Agricultural, Amherst, Mass.,	June 23
Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.,	July 1
Middlebury, Middlebury, Vt.,	June 30
Mt. Holyoke, South Hadley, Mass.,	June 23
New York (Coll), New York, N. Y.,	June 24
Northwestern, Evanston, Ill.,	June 17
Oberlin, Oberlin, O.,	June 23
Olivet, Olivet, Mich.,	June 17
Pacific, Forest Grove, Ore.,	June 16
Pomona, Claremont, Cal.,	June 30
Princeton, Princeton, N. J.,	June 16
Radcliffe, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 29
Ripon, Ripon, Wis ,	June 23
Roanoke, Salem, Va.,	June 16
Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.,	June 16
Rutgers, New Brunswick, N. J.,	June 15
Smith, Northampton, Mass.,	June 22
Talladega, Talladega, Ala.,	June 15
Trinity, Hartford, Ct.,	June 24
Tufts, Medford, Mass.,	June 16
Vanderbilt, Nashville, Tenn.,	June 16
Vermont, Burlington, Vt.,	June 30
Wabash, Crawfordsville, Ind.,	June 16
Washburn, Topeka, Kan.,	June 16
Wellesley, Wellesley, Mass ,	June 22
Wesleyan, Middletown, Ct.,	June 30
Whitman, Walla Walla, Wn.,	June 16
Williams, Williamstown, Mass.,	June 23
Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.,	June 24
Yale, New Haven, Ct.,	June 30
Yankton, Yankton, S. D ,	June 23

SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES

Cushing, Ashburnham, Mass.,	June 16
Dow, Franconia, N. H.,	June 17
Freehold, Freehold, N. J.,	June 11
Lawrenceville, Lawrenceville, N. J.,	June 22
Leicester, Leicester, Mass.,	June 21
Mount Hermon, Mount Hermon, Mass.,	June 15
Phillips, Andover, Mass.,	June 24
Phillips, Exeter, N. H.,	June 22
Pinkerton, Derry, N. H.,	June 18
St. Johnsbury, St. Johnsbury, Vt.,	June 18
Thayer, Braintree, Mass.,	June 26
Wheaton, Norton, Mass.,	June 23

The merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla
Is literally written in blood.
It is traced in the vital fluid
Of millions of the human race.
Its positive medicinal merit
And curative power is written
Upon the hearts, and graven upon
The minds of thousands
Of people whom it has cured
And given good health
When there seemed nothing before
Them but darkness and despair.
It cures all diseases arising
From or prompted by impure
Blood by its intrinsic merit as
The one true blood purifier.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC } New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER } St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

CONSIDER THE COST. Suppose the building is 60x25x20. It will require to paint it, 14 gals. ready-mixed paint at $1.25 per gal.—$17.50.

Or, four 25-lb. kegs of white lead, $6.00; five gals. pure linseed oil, $2.00; four cans tinting colors, 80 cts.; ½ pt. Japan dryer, 15 cts.; ½ pt. turpentine, 5 cts., Total, $9.00—a saving of $8.50 in favor of Pure White Lead without considering its greater durability. Examine the brand (see list).

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.

Hotels and Travel

Going To... EUROPE?
H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

St. Denis Broadway & 11th Street, NEW YORK.
Opposite Grace Church.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.
The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine, and its very moderate prices.
William Taylor & Son.

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. NOW OPEN.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

VERMONT'S VACATIONS ...THE PLACE
for a quiet, restful, refreshing, thoroughly enjoyable vacation. Its particular attractions are its perfect summer climate, unrivaled mountain, lake and valley scenery, opportunities for boating and fishing, and its excellent hotels and hospitable farm and village homes where guests are entertained at from $4.00 to $10.00 per week.
The best description of this region is given in "Summer Homes" (illustrated), sent by mail for 5c. stamp on application to S. W. Cummings, Central Vermont R. R., St. Albans, Vt., or T. H. Hanley, 194 Washington Street, Boston.

Summer Cruise
to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.
ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,
BY THE
AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"
Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.
Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

Enquire of Ticket Agents or at Principal Offices:
212 Clark St., CHICAGO. 423 Broadway, NEW YORK.
5 State St., BOSTON.
Or address the General Passenger and Ticket Agent at Chicago.

COLORADO SAN FRANCISCO PORTLAND
SALT LAKE ALASKA DAKOTA HOT SPRINGS
YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK
AND THE HEALTH AND PLEASURE RESORTS OF THE WEST AND NORTHWEST
MILWAUKEE ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS DULUTH ASHLAND MARQUETTE
LOW SUMMER TOURIST RATES
VIA THE
NORTH-WESTERN LINE
Chicago & North-Western Railway.
SPECIALLY LOW EXCURSION RATES
TO MILWAUKEE { On account of the N. E. A. Convention July 6-9.
TO ST. PAUL and MINNEAPOLIS { The occasion of the Annual Meeting B. P. O. Elks July 6.
TO SAN FRANCISCO On account of the Christian Endeavor Convention July 7-12.
SOLID VESTIBULED TRAINS
SUPERBLY EQUIPPED

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The general trade situation continues "spotty" in character, here quiet and there showing increasing activity. The fall trade is now on, and there is more activity noted. That is to say, the consumptive demand has not started, of course, but goods are being ordered and made in preparation for the fall trade. There is no question of the growth of confidence in the mercantile community. Things are better than they were, and after the tariff is settled it would not be at all surprising to see general business gain considerably.

We hear a great deal of complaint now about the great dullness of trade, but a better way to put it would be the smallness of profits. The facts show that more goods are moving than in the good year of 1892, but that prices are lamentably less. The great trouble in this country in recent years has not been underconsumption but overproduction.

Prominent in the business situation is the improvement in the demand and prices for iron and steel. Crop reports from the Southwest are enthusiastic, and indications point to large exports of wheat from the Pacific coast. In the cotton goods market prices continue depressed, and the demand does not start up in satisfactory manner. The opinion grows that the New England mills will come together on some sort of an agreement for restriction of production during the hot months. Wool is quiet, and lumber is in fair movement. The orders for boots and shoes are not up to expectations.

The tone of speculation in the stock market has undergone the greatest improvement, and security values have advanced quite materially. The sentiment seems to favor a further advance in prices, although Wall Street leaders are waiting a little for the publication of Mr. Calhoun's report on the Cuban situation.

Dr. Dunning's
Congregationalists
in America.

With Introductions by R. S. STORRS, D. D., and Gen. O. O. HOWARD, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. ROY, Dr. A. H. QUINT, Dr. F. E. CLARK, and Rev. H. A. BRIDGMAN 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

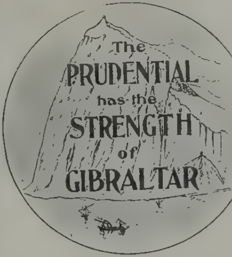
☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in CHICAGO or NEW YORK, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address
THE CONGREGATIONALIST
1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

BIG AND STRONG
The Prudential
Is one of the largest and strongest Life Insurance Companies in the world. Whether you seek Protection, Investment, or both combined, THE PRUDENTIAL can supply your wants.

Assets, - - $19,541,827
Income, - - 14,158,445
Surplus, - - 4,034,116



Ages 1 to 70. Amounts $15 to $50,000
Men, Women, and Children.
Write for particulars.
The Prudential Insurance Company of America,
HOME OFFICE, NEWARK, N. J.
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE: NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Seventh Semi-Annual Statement, Jan., 1897.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$306,032.86
Real Estate	1,748,857.41
United States Stocks	1,497,762.50
State Bonds	25,000.00
City Bonds	821,974 81
Rail Road Bonds	1,624,495.00
Water Bonds	83,500.00
Gas Stocks and Bonds	115,925.00
Rail Road Stocks	2,476,595.00
Bank Stocks	311,500.00
Trust Co. Stocks	85,150.00
Bonds and Mortgages, being 1st lien on Real Estate	423.786.71
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	183,100.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	602.866.76
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1897,	55,678.34
	$10,362,224.39

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,280,827.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims,	735,128.68
Net Surplus	2,346.268.71
	$10,362,224.39

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, E. G. SNOW, } Vice-Presidents.
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries
NEW YORK, January 12, 1897.

8% NET FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES on Improved Red River Valley Farms. Loans to actual settlers only. 15 years' experience in business. Send for formal applications, list of references and map showing location of lands. Over $100,000 invested. None but SAFE, PROMPT PAYING loans on my books.
WILLIAM T. SOUDER, Financial Agent,
303 Century Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

£ Superior to Letters of Credit, Bank of England Notes, and Sovereigns:
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
Reasons told in circulars, which will be mailed on application.
Cashed in every country of the world.
Agency of U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

A Solid 8%
Can be assured on your surplus funds if properly invested in Municipal Warrants. A trial of our exceptional facilities for handling them will convince you that Warrants are the cream of short time paper. Choice State, County and City issues (having same security as Municipal bonds), always on hand. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co., 31 Equitable Building, Boston.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
CAPITAL, - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000
ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS subject to check or on certificate.

STERLING DRAFTS ON ALL PARTS OF GREAT BRITAIN BOUGHT AND SOLD.
COLLECTIONS MADE.
COMMERCIAL LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.
DIRECTORS.
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
August Belmont,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Alexander E. Orr,
Walter G. Oakman,
Henry H. Rogers,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

The Congregationalist
SERVICES
No. 16, National.
100 copies, with music, 8 pp., 60 cents, postpaid.
Less than 100 copies of one number 1 cent each.
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
BOSTON.

"THRIFT IS A GOOD REVENUE." GREAT SAVING RESULTS FROM CLEANLINESS AND SAPOLIO

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JUNE 4

Miss Grace Weston, in charge of the meeting, brought a valuable lesson concerning the power of personal influence. "Ye are the salt of the earth, the light of the world." "Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts." Much is often accomplished by a few words. One important link in the chain of circumstances resulting in Chief-Justice Bradley's useful career was his going to a minister's house one morning with a load of coal. Being obliged to wait for directions the boy picked up a book, which so enlisted the minister's interest in him that just the right help and impetus were given. Browning's girl in Pippa Passes who sang:

God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world,

influenced the four great people of the town.

Mrs. Hubbard of Sivas being mentioned, an extract was read from a letter from Mr. Hubbard, in which, speaking of their orphanages, he says, "Mrs. Hubbard has two sewing machines humming continually and a corps of sewing women making up the clothing, and the business seems quite brisk"; also, "We Hubbards are especially busy setting up the boys' department for the 200 Armenian orphans on the Swiss fund, whom they purpose to support in our station for five years." The Cæsarea missionaries, the Farnsworths, Fowles, Dodds and Wingates, were all remembered, as well as Miss Burrage with her kindergarten and Miss Closson and Miss Nason with their company of girls in the Talas school

Miss Day recalled her pleasant meeting with many of these missionaries in Constantinople, her observation of work similar to theirs in Adabazar and Brousa, and her visits in the homes of former pupils of the missionary schools there it was evident that they made better wives, mothers, sisters and daughters for the influence of these schools and teachers. Mrs. Noyes spoke of the special interest of her society in Miss Closson and Miss Burrage, resulting in a yearly box.

Sympathy was expressed for the Herrick family in Constantinople in their present sorrow in the death of their daughter Abby in this country, and prayers were offered for them and for the various interests which had been mentioned.

Mrs. Capron expressed the belief that missionaries have most influence by what they really are, and told the story of a woman who came to her dispensary one day, and after she had been attended to waited a long time, nodding and smiling as she watched Mrs. Capron and her assistant as they listened to one patient after another and gave directions for their relief, while they wondered why she waited. At last, when asked why she did not go, she said, "I am waiting to see how long your patience will hold out." After Mr. Capron's death a native, expressing his sympathy, said, "The gentleman never seemed in a hurry to have us go"—a comment upon the patience of the missionary in entertaining callers to whom time seems of no account.

Miss Child recalled a meeting which she attended in Madura, where among the women she noticed one, a Hindu, very beautiful, decked in fine attire, with necklaces, earrings, bangles, anklets and toe-rings, whom no one knew, who, when spoken to, said she came because she heard there was a lady there from America who knew Mrs. Capron and lived near her, and she wanted to see her.

An incident was also given of a Japanese girl who was sent to this country to be educated, and who boarded in a minister's family, with the understanding that he was not to attempt to persuade her to accept Christianity, but the power of Christian living was mightier than words, and she became a disciple.

The announcement was made that after next Friday, June 11, the meetings will be suspended until the autumn.

THE practice of giving mementos for engagement and wedding events has broadened out to a general custom, and the china stores and jewelers show activity at this season. Jones, McDuffee & Stratton have their share of attractive novelties.

NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS.—Every year our sales have increased. This has been going on for more than 30 years. Hundreds of thousands of people rely exclusively on Adamson's Botanic Cough Balsam, whenever troubled with coughs or lung diseases. Sold at all druggists.

DON'T MISS THIS.—No reader of this paper should miss reading the description of the new brass-bound bedstead on exhibition this week at the Paine warerooms on Canal Street. As the latest novelty in furniture, it has created much enthusiasm. A full description of it appears in another column. Nothing finer has been brought out in many years.

B. & O. SUMMER BOOK.—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has just issued a very handsome book for summer travel, describing the mountain resorts, springs and baths located on and adjacent to its lines; also the various watering places on the Atlantic coast. The routes for reaching them are set forth in a comprehensive and clear manner.

NEW ENGLAND'S SUMMER RESORTS.—The summer season will soon be upon us and then comes the task of selecting the vacation grounds. New England in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont has hundreds of resorts which are visited each year by multitudes of tourists, and to these resorts, which include the mountains, the seashore and lake regions, during the period from June 1 to Sept. 30, the Boston & Maine Railroad will have on sale at all of its principal stations reduced-rate round-trip excursion tickets. This company also issues an excursion book which is replete with information for tourists and travelers regarding routes and rates to all points in Northern New England, while a list of the leading hotels and boarding houses of this region is also included in this book, which is sent free to any address upon application to the general passenger department of the Boston & Maine Railroad, Boston.

June Weddings.

An unexcelled Stock of Pieces and Sets adapted to Wedding Gifts.

Richly Cut Crystal Glass pieces, $2 to $120.

VASES from France, Germany, Austria and England, $2 to $300.

Rich colored and gold Carlsbad Glass, $2 to $50.

Exquisite Cloisonné from Japan, $5 to $150.

Superb Satsuma pieces, $5 to $125.

Jardinières and Pedestals from Mintons, Doultons, and Canton, $6 to $150.

Fine Lamps, with Parisian Silk Shades, $5 to $90.

Salad Sets. $5 to $90.

Dinner Sets, $8 to $800.

Loving Cups, China or Glass, $5 to $75.

Rich China Plates, in single dozens, $5 to $300 per dozen.

China Tea Sets, $5 to $120. Adapted to Bridal Gifts.

In brief, intending buyers will find in our Art Pottery Rooms (3d floor), the Glass Department (2d floor), the Stock Pattern Room (4th floor), the Lamp Gallery and Main Floor, attractive exhibits from the best known sources, foreign and American, of fine Pottery and Glass from which to choose; and we are not undersold on equal wares, if we know it.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.,
China, Glass and Lamp Merchants,
120 Franklin St.

MORTGAGES.

If, in the past, you have confined your Western investments to mortgages secured by Iowa Farm Property, your holdings are now causing you but little trouble. If you want to continue to be easy in mind and free of annoyance, we may be of service to you, for we handle choice Iowa mortgages bearing 6 per cent. interest. We are also always ready to purchase them at a fair price.

HENRY R. WILSON,
41 WALL ST., N. Y.
The care of Western and Southern Interests a Specialty.

Waverley Bicycles

It is always safe to buy a Waverley. Waverley reputation has built up in five years the largest single high grade bicycle establishment in the world. Only good work and fair dealing could have accomplished this. Waverleys are built right and thousands of Waverley riders will tell you so.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
Catalogue free.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
CINCINNATI. O.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

LADIES! your beauty depends on your health. Are you suffering from any of the ailments which cause impaired digestion, nervous prostration and premature age? You need

...VITAL TONE...

It never fails. Sent, postpaid, securely packed, on receipt of one dollar. VITAL TONE CO., No. 1 Beacon St., Room 76, Boston, Mass.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST. OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

ECHOES OF THE SHAW MEMORIAL ORATIONS

From the orations on the occasion of the Shaw Memorial unveiling we quote the following striking passages:

THE NEED OF CIVIC COURAGE

The men who do brave deeds are usually unconscious of their picturesqueness. For two nights previous to the assault upon Fort Wagner the Fifty fourth Massachusetts Regiment had been afoot, making forced marches in the rain, and on the day of the battle the men had had no food since early morning. As they lay there in the evening twilight, hungry and wet, against the cold sands of Morris Island, with the sea fog drifting over them, their eyes fixed on the huge bulk of the fortress looming darkly three quarters of a mile ahead against the sky, and their hearts beating in expectation of the word that was to bring them to their feet and launch them on their desperate charge, neither officers nor men could have been in any holiday mood of contemplation.

War has been much praised and celebrated among us of late as a school of manly virtue, but it is easy to exaggerate upon this point. Ages ago war was the gory cradle of mankind, the grim-featured nurse that alone could train our savage progenitors into some semblance of social virtue, teach them to be faithful one to another and force them to sink their selfishness in wider tribal ends. War still excels in this prerogative and whether it be paid in years of service, in treasure or in life blood, the war tax is still the only tax that men ungrudgingly will pay. How could it be otherwise, when the survivors of one successful massacre after another are the beings from whose loins we and all our contemporary races spring? Man is once for all a fighting animal; centuries of peaceful history could not breed the battle instinct out of us, and military virtue is the kind of virtue least in need of re-enforcement by reflection, least in need of orator's or poet's help.

What we really need the poet's and orator's help to keep alive in us is not, then, the common and gregarious courage which Shaw showed when he marched with you, men of the Seventh Regiment. It is that more lonely courage which he showed when he dropped his warm commission in the glorious Second to head your dubious fortunes, Negroes of the Fifty-fourth. That lonely kind of valor—civic courage, as we call it in peace times—is the kind of valor to which the monuments of nations should most of all be reared, for the survival of the fittest has not bred it into the bone of human beings as it has bred military valor; and of 500 of us who could storm a battery side by side with others, perhaps not one would be found ready all alone to risk his worldly fortunes in resisting an enthroned abuse. The deadliest enemies of nations are not their foreign foes; they always dwell within their borders. And from these internal enemies civilization is always in need of being saved. The nation blest above all nations is she in whom the civic genius of the people does the saving day by day, by acts without external picturesqueness, by speaking, writing, voting reasonably, by smiting corruption swiftly, by good temper between parties, by the people knowing true men when they see them, and preferring them as leaders to rabid partisans or empty quacks. Such nations have no need of wars to save them. Their accounts with righteousness are always even, and God's judgments do not have to overtake them fitfully in bloody spasms and convulsions of the race.

The lesson that our war ought most of all to teach us is the lesson that evils must be checked in time, before they grow so great. The Almighty cannot love such long postponed accounts or such tremendous settlements. And surely he hates all settlements that do such quantities of incidental devils' work. Our present situation, with its rancors and delusions, is the direct outcome of the added powers of government, the finances and inflations of the war. Every war leaves such miserable legacies, fatal seeds of future war and revolution, unless the civic virtues of the people save the state in time.—Prof. William James.

THE CIVIC PARTNERSHIP

There is a higher and deeper sense in which both races must be free than that represented by the bill of sale. The black man who cannot let love and sympathy go out to the white man is but half free. The white man who would close the shop or factory against a black man seeking an opportunity to earn an honest living is but half free. The white man who retards his own development by opposing a black man is but half free. The full measure of the fruit of Fort Wagner and all that this monument stands for will not be realized until every man covered by a black skin shall, by patience and natural effort, grow to that hight in industry, property, intelligence and moral responsibility where no man in all our land will be tempted to degrade himself by withholding from his black brother any opportunity which he himself would possess. Until that time comes this monument will stand for effort, not victory complete.

One of the wishes that lay nearest Colonel Shaw's heart was that his black troops might be permitted to fight by the side of white soldiers. Have we not lived to see that wish realized, and will it not be more so in the future? Not at Wagner, not with rifle and bayonet, but on the field of peace, in the battle of industry, in the struggle for good government, in the lifting up of the lowest to the fullest opportunities. In this we shall fight by the side of white men North and South. And if this be true, as under God's guidance it will, that old flag, that emblem of progress and security which brave Sergeant Carney never permitted to fall upon the ground, will still be borne aloft by Southern soldier and Northern soldier, and in a more potent and higher sense we shall all realize that

The slave's chain and the master's alike are broken,
The one curse of the races held both in tether;
They are rising, all are rising,
The black and the white together.

—Pres. Booker T. Washington.

RELIEVES every sort of bleeding—Pond's Extract. Do not be imposed upon by weak imitations.

TIRED, nervous, sleepless men and women—how gratefully they write about Hood's Sarsaparilla. Once helpless and discouraged, having lost all faith in medicines, now in good health and "able to do my own work," because Hood's Sarsaparilla has power to enrich and purify the blood and make the weak strong—this is experience of a host of people.

HOOD'S PILLS are the best family cathartic and liver medicine. Gentle, reliable, sure.

ECZEMA

Most Torturing, Disfiguring, Humiliating

Of itching, burning, bleeding, scaly skin and scalp humors is instantly relieved by a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure, and a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures.

Cuticura

REMEDIES speedily, permanently, and economically cure eczema, when all else fails.

Sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston.
☞ "How to Cure Every Skin and Blood Humor," free.

PIMPLY FACES Purified and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

AN EFFECTIVE COMBINATION.

Perfect Design, Best Materials, Skilled Workmanship, Unequaled Facilities.

This combination produces best Sewing Machine on earth—THE SINGER.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

of Hires Rootbeer on a sweltering hot day is highly essential to comfort and health. It cools the blood, reduces your temperature, tones the stomach.

HIRES Rootbeer

should be in every home, in every office, in every workshop. A temperance drink, more healthful than ice water, more delightful and satisfying than any other beverage produced.

Made only by the Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia. A package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

BLANCARD'S

PILLS AND SYRUP OF Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE, for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.

None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.

E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
All druggists.

HEADACHE WISDOM.

Cure headaches by removing the cause and you cure them for good. Drug away the pain with narcotic remedies and you invite repeated attacks.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

is a mild, pleasant, effervescent remedy that removes the cause of headaches. Aids digestion, stimulates the liver, cures constipation. Endorsed by physicians for 50 years. 50c. and $1.00.

TARRANT & CO., CHEMISTS, NEW YORK.

Mothers Appreciate

Ferris' Waist

FOR BOYS

Constructed on new principles. Button's won't pull off. Button holes won't tear out. Elastic suspenders, readily removed, simple, durable. Hose support with each waist. Best material throughout. 50 cents each.

For sale by leading retailers.

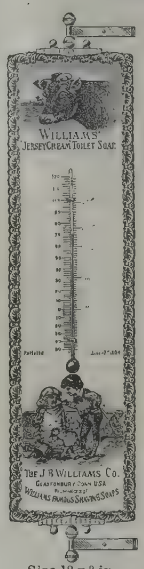
A Beautiful Window Thermometer to fasten outside the window, will be given . . . .

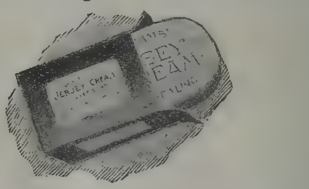
Free

for a limited time only, with every dozen cakes of

WILLIAMS'

Jersey Cream





Toilet Soap.

Size 12 x 3 in.

Jersey Cream Soap is strictly pure, delicately scented and has the soft, healing effect of

SWEET RICH CREAM.

Any druggist or dealer in Soaps can supply you, but if unable to obtain it for any reason, we will deliver to any express office in the U. S., all charges paid, a package of this Soap (one dozen cakes), with Thermometer, on receipt of $2.00.

Sample Cake (full size), 15c. postpaid.

Address Dept. G.,

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., - Glastonbury, Conn.

Mfrs. for over fifty years of Williams' Shaving Soaps.

Insist on a Genuine Hunt free with your new wheel.

Hunt

Padded Hygienic Saddles Excel in Ease.

The famous saddle with leather strands, now made with padded cover, lifting rider free from the pommel (horn) of the saddle.

Can be had of any cycle dealer or send for catalog F 1

Hunt Mfg. Co., Westboro, Mass.

THERE IS ONLY

ONE

POND'S EXTRACT

A SAMPLE LETTER.—ONE OF MANY.

"Almost twenty years of medical experience have led me to know that POND'S EXTRACT is of greater clinical value than any commercial Witch Hazel that I have seen."

G. E. POTTER, M.D.

NEWARK, N. J., March 30, 1897.

Sold only in bottles with buff wrappers and our landscape trade-mark thereon.

POND'S EXTRACT CO., New York & London.

Queen's Jubilee Number

Volume LXXXII
Number 24

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 17 June 1897

Victoria

*IN the remotest region of the seas
  Where the full tide-wave sweeps,
Bringing along all shores and all degrees
  Murmur of awful deeps,
Wherever the far sails go to and fro,
Where the four winds like four great trumpets blow
  Her happy name,
Out of the gray, out of the dark, love leaps
  Up like a flame.*

*And as the tide-wave bearing its broad swells
  In farthest bends and bays,
Softly and silently and slowly wells,
  And fills all salt sea ways,
So refluent again returns the tide
Of hearts' devotion gathering far and wide
  As winds are blown,
To break with sweet spent fall these summer days
  About her throne.*

*And here, where East and West the seas keep guard,
  And their blue surges pour
—Holding the outposts with bright watch and ward—
  In thunders down our shore,
Great Empress of a mighty people's life,
Sweet woman, tender mother, widowed wife,
  With sorrows crossed,
The hearts are hers that in the battle's roar
  Were long-time lost!*

Written for The Congregationalist by
HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

To the "Gulf of Maine."—Thousands will soon be flocking to the salubrious down East coast. In no department of the great New England summer vacation field have more extensive preparations been made this season for the increased accommodation of tourists than in the picturesque seashore section of the "Gulf of Maine." Some one has happily revived this fitting old time appellation of that part of the Atlantic lying between Cape Ann and the beginning of the Bay of Fundy, and to its alternately rock-bound and shingly shores thousands of expectant vacationists will shortly be hieing. At the scores of favorite resorts scattered along the coast line of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, the hotel and boarding house managers have been getting their hostelries in shape for the summer army, and, wisely foreseeing that this is likely to be a "record breaker" in the summer outing line, have in many instances added materially to their accommodations and conveniences. True to its traditions as an up-to-date transportation line, the Boston & Maine Railroad has made advance preparations for the comfortable and expeditious handling of this season's big hegira of seekers after outdoor pleasures that will make any serious delays or discomforts practically impossible. Its connections with "down East" railroad and steamboat lines will be better than ever this year, the most important change in this respect being the placing of the favorite steamer "Frank Jones" upon the new Portland, Mt. Desert & Machias route. The steamer will this season leave Portland for its various Eastern calling places instead of Rockland, as formerly, enabling the tourist to enjoy a full night's rest on the boat, close connection being made with express trains from Boston. Those who contemplate a visit to any portion of this glorious surfside section of New England should send to D. J. Flanders, General Passenger Agent, Boston & Maine Railroad, Boston, for the company's Summer Tour Book, containing hotel and boarding house list, and any other general information they may desire

Dr. Dunning's Congregationalists in America.

With Introductions by R. S. Storrs, D. D., and Gen. O. O. Howard, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. Roy, Dr. A. H. Quint, Dr. F. E. Clark, and Rev. H. A. Bridgman 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to subscribers to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in Chicago or New York, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Library Bookcases, with glass doors, adjustable shelves, in excellent condition. Henry P. Noyes, Andover, Mass.

Companion. A teacher wishes a position as companion to a lady, either at the mountains or seaside, for the months of July and August. Address M. L. C., Bridgewater, Mass.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Wanted, by a refined, middle-aged lady, thoroughly competent, a position as matron, or lady in charge, in a private school or seminary for the ensuing school year. Address B. F., Northampton, Mass.

Stereopticon. For sale a double dissolving stereopticon complete, with 18 feet screen and telescope poles, etc. Suitable for church work. Address Stereopticon, 9 Warren Avenue, Boston.

Seashore Cottage for Sale at Rye, N. H. 9 rooms; on bluff overlooking broad Atlantic; good stable, bathing, boating and fishing; finest beach on the coast; furniture if desired; price low. F. D. Butler, Portsmouth, N. H.

Cottage to Rent. I would like to rent my furnished cottage for the season. Located on high hill, with fine view. Five minutes' walk from post office, one mile from R. R. station. Address E. W. Leach, Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Ct.

Housekeeper's Assistant. Middle-aged woman or young girl wanted to assist in doing housework for her room and board in the family of a physician residing near Boston. Must furnish satisfactory proof of good character. Address L. H., this office.

Summer Home for Children. A lady having a delightful home, with fine grounds, will receive a few children into her family for the summer, giving each a mother's careful personal attention. Highest references given and required. For particulars and terms address S., The Congregationalist.

House to Let in Amherst, Mass. House very suitable for family putting a son into the College; excellent plumbing etc. Fine shade and fruit trees; grape vines beautiful hedges Photograph. Rent $350 John Jameson, 113 Devonshire St., Boston, or B. H. Williams, Amherst.

Dry Goods Manager (married, 35), 20 years' continuous experience as all-around salesman and in entire management of a business, desires to correspond with view of new relations. Merchant needing a reliable and profitable associate can verify details by addressing Buyer and Manager, care of this office.

WARRANTS

Safest short time paper, earning 6 to 9 per cent. Carefully selected State, County, City and Public School issues running 6 to 24 months. Write for details. ROBT. E. STRAHORN & CO., 31 Equitable Building, Boston.

£

CONVENIENCE, NEGOTIABILITY, IN OTHER WORDS,
CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES.

Travelers to any foreign country will find them more convenient than Credits and more negotiable. Why, is told in circulars, mailed on application.

Agency of U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE: NO. 119 BROADWAY.

Eighty-Seventh Semi-Annual Statement, Jan., 1897.

SUMMARY OF ASSETS.

Cash in Banks	$306,032.86
Real Estate	1,748,857.41
United States Stocks	1,497,762.50
State Bonds	25,000.00
City Bonds	821,974 81
Rail Road Bonds	1,624,495.00
Water Bonds	83,500.00
Gas Stocks and Bonds	115,925.00
Rail Road Stocks	2,476,595.00
Bank Stocks	311,500.00
Trust Co. Stocks	85,150.00
Bonds and Mortgages, being 1st lien on Real Estate	423 786.71
Loans on Stocks, payable on demand	183,100.00
Premiums uncollected and in hands of Agents	602,866.76
Interest due and accrued on 1st January, 1897,	55,678.34
	$10,362,224.39

LIABILITIES.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000.00
Reserve Premium Fund	4,280,827.00
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Claims,	735,128.68
Net Surplus	2,346,268.71
	$10,362,224.39

D. A. HEALD, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, } Vice-Presidents.
E. G. SNOW, }
W. L. BIGELOW, T. B. GREENE, Secretaries.
H. J. FERRIS, A. M. BURTIS, Ass't Secretaries

New York, January 12, 1897.

Hotels and Travel

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.

ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Parties will leave Boston in June, July, August and September, 1897, for

60 SUMMER TOURS

of Five to Nineteen Days to the Principal Resorts of New England, Canada and New York, including

Saratoga, Lakes George and Champlain, and Ausable Chasm.

The White, Adirondack, and Green Mountains.

Niagara Falls, the Thousand Islands, Montreal, Quebec, and the Saguenay.

Poland Spring, Old Orchard Beach, Mt. Desert, and Moosehead Lake.

The Maritime Provinces.

June 26. Special Tour through Europe.

June 28 and July 12. Alaska and Yellowstone Park.

July 15 or 29 and August 31. Yellowstone Park tours.

July 29. Yellowstone Park, Utah and Colorado.

August 24 and September 13. Hawaii, Japan and China.

August 31. Yellowstone Park, the Northwest and California.

Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine and Other Principal Lines; also, Steamship Tickets to all points.

Send for descriptive book, mentioning tour desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opp. School St., Boston, Mass.

Going To... EUROPE?

H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),

The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out

30 ESCORTED PARTIES

Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.

W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Summer Cruise to the LAND of the MIDNIGHT SUN.

ICELAND, NORWAY, SWEDEN, DENMARK, FINLAND, RUSSIA,

BY THE

AMERICAN S. S. "OHIO,"

Sailing from New York June 26.
Duration of Cruise 70 days.

Price of passage, including side trips, $475 and upwards. Send for full information and pamphlet to

International Navigation Company,
6 Bowling Green, New York.

VERMONT'S VACATIONS ...THE PLACE

for a quiet, restful, refreshing, thoroughly enjoyable vacation. Its particular attractions are its perfect summer climate, unrivaled mountain, lake and valley scenery, opportunities for boating and fishing, and its excellent hotels and hospitable farm and village homes where guests are entertained at from $4.00 to $10 00 per week.

The best description of this region is given in "Summer Homes" (illustrated), sent by mail for 5c. stamp on application to S. W. Cummings, Central Vermont R. R., St. Albans, Vt., or T. H. Hanley, 194 Washington Street, Boston.

PASSACONAWAY INN,

YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. NOW OPEN.

ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY, 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON.

Light for Street and Driveway.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN CO'S Tubular Globe Street Lamp is equal to the best gas light. Will not blow out, smoke, or freeze. Can be set by wick regulator to burn from four to sixteen hours. Is cheap, yet perfect. Burns four hours for one cent.

Buy it of your dealer. He has it, or can get it if you insist. Send for our complete lamp catalogue. Mention this paper.

STEAM GAUGE & LANTERN COMPANY,
Syracuse, N. Y.

Hamburg Embroidery

Don't miss these bargains!

The greatest value we ever offered! Hamburgs in neat and fine patterns, washable edges, at 5c., 8c., 12½c. and 17c.

PER YARD.

Worth about double the price.

Order by mail.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Waverley Bicycles

It's a wonderful invention—that new Waverley bearing.—Have you seen it? If you buy a bicycle before you see it you may regret your purchase when it is too late. Anyone can understand the principle.—It is very simple but very effective.—Makes Waverleys run easiest.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
Catalogue free.

600 Second Hand BICYCLES to close out. All makes, GOOD AS NEW, $5 to $15. NEW, HIGH GRADE '96 Models, fully guaranteed. $16 to $24 '97 Models $20 to $30. Shipped anywhere on approval. Special Clearing Sale. EARN A BICYCLE by helping advertise us. We will give one agent in each town FREE USE of sample wheel to introduce them. Write at once for our Special Offer.

N. D. MEAD CYCLE CO., Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E. W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

BELLS

Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 853
Great Britain's Jubilee 854
The Critics of a Critic 854
A Serious Breach of Fellowship 855
God's Handiwork in Nature 856
Current History 856
In Brief 857

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

Scotland 858
Australia 871
CURRENT THOUGHT 859

CONTRIBUTIONS:

Victoria—cover poem. Harriet Prescott Spofford 849
Queen Victoria's Reign and the Higher Life of Her People. Rev John Brown, D.D. 860
Queen Victoria's Reign and the Common People. Edward Porritt 861

THE HOME:

Feet of Clay—a selected poem 863
Paragraphs 863
Our College Girls. Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster 863
The Gentle Side of the Iron Chancellor. Janet Sanderson 864
A Queen Yet a Woman—a selection 865
Clover—a selected poem 865
About the Queen 865
A Big Gain in Morals—a selection 865
Closet and Altar 866
Tangles 866
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 867
Corner Scrap-Book 867
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for June 27 868
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for June 27-July 3 878
LITERATURE 869

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

The Vermont Convention 874
Rhode Island Conference 875

MISCELLANEOUS:

In and Around Chicago 862
Our Readers' Forum 872
In and Around Boston 873
Anniversary Week at Andover 873
Notices 874
Education 878
Woman's Board Prayer Meeting 879
Marriages and Deaths 879
The Business Outlook 880
Everlasting Punishment—a selection 880
Science Notes 851
Commencement Dates 882
Risibles 883
Baptists and Close Communion—a selection 883

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

AND BOSTON RECORDER

The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

"Wherever 'IN EXCELSIS' is adopted it will tend to raise the musical tone of the singing at once."

Rev. Jas. H. Hoadley, D.D.,
Pastor Faith Pres. Church, N.Y.

SACRED SONGS No. 1

Over 160,000 Copies Sold.
236 pieces. 100 are new and over 100 are choice selections from Gospel Hymns. An excellent collection for Sunday Schools, Young People's Societies, etc.
Issued in Round and Shaped Notes.
$25 per 100 by Express, not prepaid; 30c. each if sent by mail.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
76 East Ninth Street, New York.
Lakeside Building, Chicago.

FIVE HUNDRED PRIZES.

Value—$1,252.00

To be Given to Subscribers to THE UNION GOSPEL NEWS.

Do You Want One of These Beautiful Prizes?

See how many legitimate words you can make with the letters in the words "Union Gospel News," using each letter as desired, but not more times in any word than it appears in "UNION GOSPEL NEWS." Proper nouns, foreign or obsolete words, suffixes and prefixes, Scotch and provincial English words and Anglo-Indian words are not allowed, and words that are spelled alike but have different meanings can be used but once. To illustrate the work: On, in, go, peg, sew, sun, new, gun, etc. You may use these words in your list. A few hours' work will give you many words. Try it.

Our Offer:—For the largest number of legitimate words we will give One Elegant Piano—$300. For the next two largest lists we will give Two Fine Parlor Organs—$200. For the next three largest lists Three Splendid Bicycles—$300 For the next largest list, One Excellent Sewing Machine—$40. For the next largest list, One Complete Encyclopedia—$40. For the next two largest lists, Two Unabridged Dictionaries—$20. For the next largest list, One Solid Oak Writing Desk and Book-Case combined—$6. For the next largest list, One Oak Sewing Table—$2. For the 100 next largest lists, One Hundred Cameras—$100. For the next 388 largest lists, Three Hundred Eighty-Eight Music Folios—$194.

To Every One who enters the contest and sends a list of words not less than twenty in number we will give one of the popular "Moody Books."

Anybody may take advantage of these exceedingly generous offers who will send us either fifteen 2-cent stamps to pay for six months' subscription to the UNION GOSPEL NEWS, or twenty-five 2-cent stamps to pay for one year's subscription to the UNION GOSPEL NEWS, a monthly, illustrated, up-to date, wide awake, undenominational, aggressive and progressive religious paper. This offer closes August 31st, but send in list at once.

A little work may give you a piano, organ, bicycle or some other one of these beautiful Presents.

No lists counted unless thirty cents for a six months' subscription, or fifty cents for one year's subscription, is sent with list.

Average copies each issue of the UNION GOSPEL NEWS for 1896 was 125,000. We want to increase this to 200,000 during '97. Therefore, these wonderful offers.

Address, THE UNION GOSPEL NEWS,
Dept. 103. 147 Seneca St., Cleveland, O.

KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA.

6 vols.

This important Life of Jesus now reduced to $1.80 per vol.

N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston.

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

LAY COLLEGE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, Station R, Boston, fits for all kinds of Christian work.

AMERICAN SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

JAMES W. ELWELL, President.
Rev. W. C. STITT, Secretary.
W. C. STURGES, Treasurer.

IT WILL SERVE THE INTERESTS OF ALL CONCERNED IF, IN CORRESPONDENCE SUGGESTED BY ANNOUNCEMENTS IN OUR ADVERTISING COLUMNS, MENTION IS MADE OF THE FACT THAT THE ADVERTISEMENT WAS SEEN IN THE CONGREGATIONALIST.

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100 paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & Co.

THEOLOGICAL

MAINE, BANGOR.
BANGOR THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
Full regular course in all departments, with additional instruction in New Testament Greek. Entrance examination Wednesday, Sept. 1, 9 A.M. For catalogue or further information apply to Prof. John S. Sewall, Bangor, Me.

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
63d year opens Sept. 22. With special advantages from the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXETER.
THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY.
The 115th year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For Catalogue and illustrated Supplement, address
HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

VERMONT

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.
ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, M. A.,
Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph D.

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
Entrance examinations June 24 and 25, and Sept. 7 and 8, 1897. For circulars address
Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD
BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and Scientific course of study, also Preparatory and Optional. Year begins Sept. 15, 1897.
Miss Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, EASTHAMPTON.
WILLISTON SEMINARY.
Prepares boys for any college or scientific school. The most advanced methods. Library; physical, chemical, biological laboratories; gymnasium, etc. Founded 1841. Opens Sept. 9, 1897. JOSEPH H. SAWYER, M. A., Principal, Easthampton, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE, Worcester, Mass Courses of Study in Mechanical, Civil and Electrical Engineering and Chemistry. 176-page Catalogue, showing appointments secured by graduates, mailed free. Expenses low. 30th year. J. K. MARSHALL, Registrar.

MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST.
AMHERST COLLEGE.
Entrance Examinations. Examinations for admission to Amherst College will be held at the School Committee Building, Mason St., beginning at 9 o'clock A. M on Thursday, June 24, 1897, and continuing for two days. For further information address E. L. WOOD, Registrar, Amherst, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies, Andover, Mass. Begins its 69th year Sept. 16, 1897, offering enlarged opportunities; three Seminary Courses of Studies and a College fitting Course. Has a Clark telescope, laboratory, gymnasium, art studios, library, reading and music rooms, etc.; superior accommodations in new and improved buildings, with electric lights, hot water-heating, etc; over 20 acres of lawns and groves. Terms $400 per year. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal. For catalogue, W. F. DRAPER.

MASSACHUSETTS, WEST BRIDGEWATER.
Howard Seminary A Home School for Girls.
LIMITED to fifty. Certificate admits to colleges. Offers thorough academic training with wide choice in electives (including Music, Art, and Languages). Advantages for Home Culture. Library, Gymnasium and Laboratory. Single rooms may be had. Careful attention paid to individual needs Location quiet, healthful, accessible. For circulars address
HOWARD SEMINARY.
Mr. and Mrs. R. W. GIFFORD, Principals.
West Bridgewater, Plymouth Co., Mass.

Educational

MASSACHUSETTS

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL,
Worcester, Mass. An English, French and German Home and Day School for Girls. College Preparatory, Intermediate, Academic, Literary, Music, and Special Courses. Excellent gymnasium. Send for Illustrated Manual.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER ACADEMY.
Prepares boys for college or scientific school. Buildings of modern construction. New Science Hall, seven groups of laboratories. Manual training. Infirmary, Gymnasium. Oval and cinder track. 64th year begins Sept. 8, '97. D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A. M., Prin., Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, SPRINGFIELD.
BIBLE NORMAL COLLEGE.
A prominent pastor says: ' There is no single need of the church today so great as that which the Bible Normal College (formerly School for Christian Workers), Springfield, Mass., is designed and able to meet." Three distinct courses in each of the departments, Bible-school and Missionary. New courses in New Testament Greek and Educational Psychology and Pedagogy. Ten specialists in charge. New Ladies' Hall. Fifty college graduates and as many more of practical experience should enter Sept. 8. Send for catalog to the Sec'y, J L. DIXON.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG WOMEN.
Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

RHODE ISLAND

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.
EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.
Founded 1802. Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Cottages. Electric light. Elegant new dining hall. Endowed. Twelve courses. September 13. Illustrated catalogue. F. D BLAKESLEE, D. D, Prin., East Greenwich, R. I.

CONNECTICUT

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.
THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year opens Sept. 15, 1897.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

CONNECTICUT, NORWALK.
Mrs. Mead's School for Girls,
"Hillside," Norwalk, Conn.
Certificate admits to Wellesley, Vassar, and other colleges. Advanced study in literature and lower College branches for special students

CONNECTICUT, STAMFORD.
"Miss Aiken's" School for Girls,
Stamford, Connecticut.
Pleasant and healthful grounds and buildings. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method of study. Academic, College Preparatory, and Special courses. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Only forty-five minutes from New York.
(Mrs.) HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, A.B.

CONNECTICUT, GREENWICH.
Greenwich Academy and Home School for Ten Boys,
Greenwich, Connecticut.
Superior teaching. Genuine home. Careful selection of pupils. High moral and intellectual cultivation. Special literary training. Individual attention. Three graduating courses. Unusually healthful and attractive situation. 72d year of Academy and 18th of Home.
J. H. ROOT, Principal.

NEW YORK

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N.Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, BINGHAMTON.
THE LADY JANE GREY SCHOOL.
Mrs. Hyde and Daughters' Home School for Girls. Special and regular courses. Preparation for College and European travel. Address
Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE, Binghamton, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
MRS. LESLIE MORGAN'S
Boarding and Day School for Girls, 13 and 15 West 86th Street, New York City. Thorough English from Kindergarten through College Preparatory. Miss Catherine Aiken's Method of Concentrated Attention in Mind Training a special feature; also conversational French and German. Home and chaperonage for special students.

Educational

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY
64th Year. Prepares for Colleges and Government Schools. Thorough business course. Open all year. Fall term Sept 15 Col L. H. ORLEMAN Principal, Peekskill, N. Y.

NEW YORK, FORT EDWARD.
COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG Women and Girls. Established 1854. Regular and Elective Courses. Departments in Music, Art and Elocution. For illustrated catalogue address JOS. E. KING, D. D, President, Fort Edward, N. Y.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.
Summer Courses.
Third Session, July 5–August 13. Twenty-nine courses in Mathematics, Science, Languages and Pedagogy. A delightful suburban locality in New York City. For announcement write to CHAS B. BLISS.
University Heights, New York City.

NEW YORK, BROOKLYN.
The Brooklyn Heights Seminary,
138-140 Montague St., Brooklyn.
An exceptionally well-equipped boarding and day school for girls. Each department in charge of a specialist. Certificate admits to leading colleges. Special attention to hygiene and physical culture.
47th year.
CLARA R. COLTON,
CORNELIA H. FULTON,
KATHARINE S. WOODWARD, Principals.

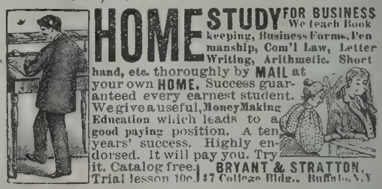
NEW YORK, BUFFALO.



HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic. Short hand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 47 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y

Chautauqua...

Health. Best sanitation, ample opportunities for exercise, gymnasium, outdoor games, etc

Intelligence. Schools, classes, lecture courses, discussions, library facilities, etc.

Beauty. Natural surroundings, art lectures and exhibitions, classic music, literary interpretations, etc.

Sociability. Clubs for young and old, receptions, entertainments, etc.

Recreation. Amusements, illustrated lectures, illuminations, fireworks, readings, etc.

Religion. The whole life dominated by a religious spirit which finds special expression in worship and sacred song.

Do you not want these influences for yourself or your family?
W. A. DUNCAN, Sec., Box 18, Chautauqua, N.Y.

ILLINOIS

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, 151 Throop Street.
THE NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.
University Extension and Non-Resident Courses lead to the usual College degrees, including all post-graduate. Instruction by mail in any desired subject. Established 12 years. Address
F. W. HARKINS, Ph. D., Chancellor.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.
CHICAGO COLLEGE OF LAW
LAW DEPARTMENT LAKE FOREST UNIVERSITY.
Hon. T. A. Moran, LL. D., Dean. Session each week day evening. For information address Elmer E. Barrett, LL. B., Sec'y, 100 Washington Street, Chicago.

OHIO

Oberlin College

The College, the Theological Seminary, the Conservatory of Music, the Academy.
The fall term begins Sept. 22. Full information from the treasurer.
JAMES R. SEVERANCE, Oberlin, Ohio.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 17 June 1897 Number 24

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75 net. See Advertisement on page 850.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 16, National.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

SEC. J. B. CLARK takes exception to our last week's editorial on the home missionary anniversary. He regards the meeting as "the most spiritual, helpful and practical the society ever held." "Every phase of the work," he says, "was presented with unusual care." We have no word of dissent from these statements so far as those present were concerned. The sense of dependence on God, of confidence that he will care for his work and the sense of personal responsibility to work with him were earnestly, spiritually, courageously expressed. Our ground for expressing the opinion that the meeting came near being a failure was simply that the churches were not largely represented, so that the society could not present to them its record of work. But Dr. Clark is encouraged by the fact that nearly 170 delegates and life members were present, a larger number than have sometimes been seen at Saratoga. We rejoice to chronicle every sign of genuine and growing interest in home missions and in our Home Missionary Society. Such interest we regard as a thermometer showing the spiritual life of the denomination. The sympathy of the stronger churches for the weaker and the desire of all our churches to extend the gospel of Christ through the whole country must be constant and controlling in the hearts of those who are reproducing Christ's life on earth. We hope that next year, in some city where Congregationalists have a larger local constituency, the anniversary of the Home Missionary Society may be attended by much larger numbers; and we shall welcome the day when it will be possible in a single week's meetings to survey the year's work of all our missionary societies.

The skies were not very promising in this vicinity last Sunday morning for Children's Day, and they were altogether out of sympathy with the floral concert exercises in which many children were prepared to participate in the evening, when rain fell copiously. Yet in most churches sermons were preached appropriate to the day, a number of infants were baptized, Bibles were presented to the baptized children who had reached the age of seven years, and contributions were taken at both services for the missionary work of the Sunday School and Publishing Society. We have heard of several notable sermons which will make the Sunday memorable, among them one by Dr. A. H. Plumb on the meaning and impressiveness of Christian home life, and another by Dr. Arthur Little on heroes, with especial reference to Robert Gould Shaw, whose monument on Boston Common is every day preaching a notable sermon to a succession of interested audiences. Children's Sunday is an opportunity which no wise pastor will miss to enforce most important lessons on hearers peculiarly open to receive them.

The emphasis of the baccalaureate sermons is more than ever this year upon personal responsibility in view of the social obligations and opportunities of the time. Dr. McKenzie at Cornell made a strong appeal to manliness from the text, "God give us good speed." "A real man," he said, "asks for no favors or luck. He is willing to stand up and earn his place. So called good luck is a discriminating thing and is wonderfully just, for it comes only to those who deserve it. It finds people where they ought to be." At Princeton President Patton spoke of personal responsibility in social morality, illustrating the subject by the lessons of current history. "It is evident," he said, "that Greece, after the manner of the traveler in the parable, has fallen among thieves, and as we look over the map of Europe it is easy to see who the priest is. We may also recognize the Levite, and we have been looking all these months for the good Samaritan to put in an appearance." He also asserted, what we are glad to believe is true, that university sentiment in this country is absolutely in favor of the arbitration treaty.

The corner stone of the John Robinson Memorial Church at Gainsborough, Eng., was laid in June of last year, in the presence of The Congregationalist's pilgrims, by United States Ambassador Bayard. The building is now so far completed as to be ready for dedication services. These began June 9, with a luncheon in the Caskgate Church, where the congregation has worshiped hitherto, but which is now to be sold. Addresses were made by Dr. Archibald Duff, a graduate of Andover Seminary, and Mr. G. F. Parker, United States consul at Birmingham. Mr. Parker's address was a strong and scholarly defense of Puritan principles, making the responsibility of the individual the corner stone of Christian faith. This he declared to be the central idea of Christ's teaching, "whether it relates to the duties of this life or to preparation for that to come," and therefore that if what is called Christian Socialism—which makes society the end and the individual merely the incident—is Christian, it cannot be socialistic, and if it is socialistic it cannot be Christian. Later in the day a dedication service was held in the new building, with a sermon by Dr. C. A. Berry. Further services are to be held this month, also Aug. 29, Sept. 5 and Nov. 14. Dr. C. R. Palmer of New Haven is to preach Aug. 29.

Our staff letter from Scotland contains an unusual amount of interesting news. The recent meeting of the Congregational Union, which was notable as being the first session held since it and the Evangelical Union were merged into one body, is described at length. It seems that the United Presbyterians have finally disposed of the case of Rev. Alexander Robinson, which has been pending for some time. He wrote a book advocating extremely modern views with reference to the person of Christ and the Scriptures, and he has now been practically deposed from the ministry by a large majority vote. He certainly must have been extremely free in his utterances, for the sentiment in Scotland today is not favorable toward the prosecution of men for heresy. Yet perhaps the atmosphere of the Established Church, to which Mr. Robinson belonged, is somewhat stricter than that of the Free Church which so recently acquitted Professor Drummond and some years ago Professor Dods, when on trial for heresy. The event in Scotch ecclesiastical circles which will just now particularly interest many Americans is the election of Dr. James Denney of Broughty's Ferry to succeed Professor Candlish in the Glasgow Free Church College. We have always had the expectation that sooner or later Dr. Denney would reach a position as honorable as this. We congratulate him, and the institution which is to feel the influence of his strong thinking, his positive and broad convictions of truth and his delightful personality.

Among the fighters on the Turkish side of the recent war were many Jews but no Christians except the Germans. Jewish patriotism has been called in question, but wrongly, we think. It is certainly not lessened with the majority of the people of that faith by any hopes of an immediate restoration of Jewish nationality. If it seems strange at the first glance that Jew and Mohammedan should fight side by side, it is to be remembered that down almost to our own century the lot of the Jew was worse in Christian than in Moslem lands, and that this is still true in most of Eastern Europe. The volunteering of the Jews is really less remarkable than their acceptance as soldiers by the Turks in disregard of a fundamental law of Mohammedan tradition.

We have no sympathy with the habit of abusing the bicycle because some people misuse it. It has come to stay, and is as truly a boon to mankind as was the locomotive or the electric wire. But when men or women on the bicycle disturb religious services on Sunday, or ride through the streets regardless of pedestrians, or in other ways make themselves nuisances to the public, they ought to receive such condemnation as will make the disgrace of their rowdyism appear. The mayor of Chicago, riding at the head of a procession of cyclers past churches in that city on Sunday, at the hour of morning service, was conspicuously offensive, not only to Christians but to every lover of good order. Any city is disgraced by such an act of one of its officials. Acts of that character, though less widely heralded, are altogether too common. One such is complained of by the pastor of the Congregational church of West Suffield, Ct., and the Springfield Republican expresses the sentiment of all decent people in saying: "None but born rowdies, dead to all the proprieties of life, would repeat the offense complained of. Offenders like those at West Suffield last Sunday bring discredit upon all wheelmen and are an unmitigated evil."

If any one imagines that credulity and fanaticism have died out of the world a very slight reading of the news of the day ought to convince him of the contrary. From a single page of a newspaper we gather such incidents as the burial alive of fifteen Russians of a fanatical sect of the Roskolinki dissenters, who had been assured by a prophetess that it was necessary, to avoid the contamination and damnation of the census; the hallucination of a Posey County, Ind., farmer's wife, who dreamed that the Lord commanded her to sacrifice her infant daughter, and upon awaking proceeded to obey; and the self-mutilation of a man of the hill country in central New York, who took a Bible into the woods and tore his own eyes out, as he told the physicians afterward, because the Lord had commanded him to tear out his eyes, and he had been doing the will of the Lord. None of these incidents, or a thousand others like them, prove anything but the power of religious enthusiasm and the necessity of wisdom and self-control. It is natural that insanity should take a religious form, because religion is the most potent and enduring of the forces which shape and control man's thinking. It was not carelessly that the apostle, familiar with the mad ecstasies and cruel orgies of heathenism, so often urged the churches to be sober. In the gospel of the grace of God we have a great power committed to us, and a great responsibility as well.

The Sacred Heart Review is unkind enough to quote, for the benefit of the Protestant Episcopal newspapers of the ritualistic and Romanizing sort in these jubilee days, a portion of the coronation oath which Queen Victoria took at her accession, and which her successor is required by law to take. That passage which bears upon the points in controversy between the pope and the Episcopalians runs in part as follows: "I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation, and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint and the sacrifice of the mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous." We have never doubted that in a fair reading of the history of the English Reformation it must be decided that the Church of England intended to and did put itself outside the line of the Roman corruptions of the Catholic faith, and we are in hearty accord with the declarations to that effect of the coronation oath. But then we are Congregationalists, and believe in the right of individual churches to profess what creed they believe—at their peril, of course, if it be a creed that denies or obscures the immediate sovereignty of Christ in the church and in the conscience of the individual. The Romanizing churches ought to secede from the Church of England, and then they would be free to go into papal slavery—if they thought it worth their while.

GREAT BRITAIN'S JUBILEE

All English-speaking people are interested in the celebratian next week of the completion of sixty years' reign by the ruler of the British empire. It will be of great service to Great Britain in intensifying and giving expression to the feeling of loyalty to the queen and her government. It will help to educate all Englishmen in the progress of the empire and in the principles to which it owes its strength. Americans, too, have hardly less reason than Englishmen to be interested in this celebration. They gladly recognize and honor the noble character and wisdom of the Christian woman who sits on the British throne. Far more than that, their interest is because Great Britain's triumphs in civilization are ours almost as much as theirs. In the movement for the advancement of the human race, we stand with them in the front of the procession. Our rivalry, so far as it is honorable, is altogether friendly. The three most powerful nations of the world today are Great Britain, the United States and Russia. There can be no question with which of the other two our sympathies are strongest.

The chief glory of the Victorian reign is the progress of democracy. In the essentials of freedom, safety and stability no government outranks Great Britain, and no other has made so rapid strides in this direction during the last sixty years. When Victoria was crowned the aristocracy claimed England and held firmly to the inherited conviction that the nation existed for their benefit. Today the rights of the people predominate and their privileges are multiplied. Every man has a voice in government. Working men have shortened hours of labor, higher wages, cheaper food and rent and clothing. If the rich have carriages, parks, picture galleries and universities so have the poor. The best museums, art collections, lectures are at the service of the wage-earner at public expense. If his children seek education good schools are open to them. If he is sick a hospital is ready to receive him and skilled physicians wait on him. The government is by the people and for the people, and all share in its prosperity.

Many of the steps toward democracy, which from time to time have intensely excited England, are practically forgotten. The Chartist Agitation marked the earliest years of the present reign. The Corn Laws and their repeal, the movement toward free trade which the opposition to those laws accelerated, the Reform Bill establishing manhood suffrage are foremost among great political movements powerfully resisted whose beneficent results are now established. An effective system of national education, the emancipation from labor of young children, a marked advance in the cause of temperance and the development of organized philanthropy give splendid reasons for Englishmen to rejoice, and encourage the efforts for further advancement in the interests of humanity.

Great Britain's growth in area has not been less remarkable than her internal development. She has completed her possession of India, and has taken additional territory in Asia as large as Germany. She has extended her rule over about half of the continent of Africa. In North America and Australasia her flag flies over one-ninth of the dry land of the earth. She controls half the world's commerce. Her people at home and in her colonies and in the territory she governs number about one fourth of the world's inhabitants. And wherever her rule has extended it has brought better government and greater blessings to the common people. We say this confidently, not forgetting her greed for land nor her imposition of the opium traffic on China. The citizens of her island kingdom have spread out over the earth, and are making her sway welcome over lands far distant in space and peoples far separated in history and in character. Her colonies take pride in the mother country. They are approaching, more and more completely, toward self-government, and toward a great federation of sovereign states which will tend to increase the strength of the empire.

Great Britain has made mistakes in internal administration, of which Ireland furnishes the most conspicuous example; and in her foreign policy, the most costly of which was the Crimean War. The penalties for these mistakes, especially for the latter, as yet have by no means fully been paid. But at heart she is conscious that they are mistakes, and in this lies her hope.

Americans find fault with Great Britain, as they criticise opposing parties when in power in our own government. But we cannot fail to recognize that in our highest aims and mission the two nations are one. More and more, as invention and skill and concentrated efforts bring the whole human race into closer fellowship, must Great Britain and the United States accept their common duties and responsibilities as nations leading the world's progress. Our language, our principles of government, our religion and our ideals are the same. As nations we shall stand or fall together. Therefore we join with all our hearts in the jubilation of our brethren on our northern borders and across the sea, and say with them, God save the queen! Long live the queen!

THE CRITICS OF A CRITIC

The greatest of living French critics, M. Brunetière, has set our American critics by the ears in a few lectures delivered in his own tongue in New York, and widely circulated through the translations in the newspapers. It is significant of the basal unity of all literature that what he had to say about the history and prospects of French poetry, history, drama, criticism and the novel should have come so directly home to the consciences of many of our American artists, literary producers and judges of literary art. The spirit of the age has become a cosmopolitan spirit, and affects more directly than ever the form and tendency of art production everywhere.

M. Brunetière is himself a critic, but criticism in France has long been elevated to the rank of a fine art. As editor of the Revue des Deux Mondes, the most authoritative critical journal in the world, he brings to us a message which is heard, if not heeded, at home. He is not a voice crying in the wilderness, but the accepted mouthpiece of the saner and more wholesome elements in the life of France.

Historically he is an evolutionist, using the Darwinian vocabulary and mode of thought to account for the changes and progress of literary expression. The varieties of art embodiment develop out of each other, he tells us, as by the Darwinian hypothesis specific variations appear. A variant genius is somehow born, asserts himself, wins followers, who work in his manner with lesser power until they give place in turn to a new and more powerful variation and impulse. In this regard his criticism is a true expression of the dominant philosophy of the time and contradicts the individualistic theories which still hold their own in some art circles.

There is also a strenuous note of duty in the thought of M. Brunetière, which we are glad to have sounded in the ears of the self-indulgent writers and readers of our time. "My principal effort," he says, "has been to get outside of myself and to give criticism a basis, not scientific, for I dislike that word applied to art and letters, but solid, objective, independent even of the works which are criticised, a formal criticism, like formal logic or algebra, a science or an art of general processes." To sit still and be pleased is not enough. We must ask ourselves whether we have any right to be pleased, whether the apparent harmony which delights us in any work of art springs from agreement with our own imperfect taste or from inherent and eternal harmonies to which our souls ought to vibrate and respond. This is wholesome doctrine, even though the definitions of such a formal criticism must still evade the critic's grasp. It transfers admiration from the lower to the higher side of human nature, as holding the soul to an ideal responsibility must always do.

It is not surprising that with these theories of art evolution and art responsibility M. Brunetière has been a consistent and powerful opponent of Zola and his school of naturalists; nor that, in smiting their chief representative, he has called down upon himself the wrath of the whole school on both sides of the Atlantic. Zola, the naturalist, he tells us, is not natural. He gives him credit for constructive imagination, but not for clear or comprehensive vision. "Never was any observer less accurate, less conscientious, less true. The peasants of M. Zola are not French peasants, his working men are not French working men, his middle classes are not the French middle classes, nor are his soldiers and officers French officers and soldiers. We have faults in France, but we have not this sustained grossness, this absolute lack of morality, this perfect cynicism which Zola depicts. His French people are caricatures—pessimistic and calumnious caricatures. He has neither literary conscience nor æsthetic sense." It is well to have an authoritative denial on this point in the interest not of France alone, but of calumniated human nature. Man has undeniable affinities with devil and with beast, but when the bestial and the devilish fill the whole foreground of the picture sober criticism must join with indignant self-respect in denying that it is a true portrait of humanity.

If any word from over seas can fix these three thoughts of literary art in the mind of the rising generation of American writers and readers we shall have better hopes for the future. All art is rooted in and grows out of the past. We may call it evolution, growth or mere historic continuity, but, consciously or unconsciously, the artist's work is never done in isolation. It takes the torch from those who have gone before; it hands it on to those who are to follow. Out of this grows responsibility. Upon observation follows the duty of selection. The artist is not a pipe for any wind to blow its music through; he is a player who chooses out of all the airs he hears the worthiest and the best. And out of this grows dignity. There are elements of nature and of human nature which are beneath the dignity of literary record, as they are beneath the dignity of common speech. There are enjoyments of literary workmanship, as well as reading, which leave the bitter taste of self-contempt in the artist's or the reader's soul. If the strenuous note which has offended some among the critics of M. Brunetière holds public thought to a higher sense of the artist's responsibility, it will count among the forces making for the future greatness of America.

A SERIOUS BREACH OF FELLOWSHIP

On another page we print an account of the meeting of the Chicago Association of Congregational churches, which voted to admit Rev. C. O. Brown, D. D., into its membership. This case having now assumed such proportions as to threaten the integrity of Congregationalism, we here rehearse the main facts concerning it.

In the autumn of 1895 Dr. Brown, then the pastor of the First Church, San Francisco, was charged with having committed adultery with Miss Overman, a young woman who had lived in his family. The woman who made the charge, Mrs. Davidson, was a member of the First Church. She had been convicted of crime and imprisoned in Massachusetts, but her record up to that time was not known to the First Church. On her demand Dr. Brown paid her $500. He soon afterwards caused her arrest for blackmail.

A mutual council called by Dr. Brown and the church investigated the charges, holding many very excited sessions, and the testimony was printed verbatim in the city newspapers. The council in its result, March 8, 1896, declared that "the evidence before us does not sustain the charge of adultery," but censured Dr. Brown for unministerial conduct, referring to menacing and intimidating language used by him in several cases to persons involved in the charges against him. In respect to one case the council said: "We find his conduct to have violated all rules which should control the actions of a gentleman and a Christian minister, and we censure him for it, while we gladly recognize the kind and manly words of appreciation and reparation offered by him." The council also declared that it was not altogether satisfied with Dr. Brown's explanation of his reasons for paying money to the woman who first made the charge against him, nor with certain other evidence placed before it. Mrs. Davidson was afterwards discharged from custody by the court, Dr. Brown having testified that his payment to her of money was not caused by fear.

The Bay Conference of churches, at a meeting held April 21, suspended Dr. Brown from membership in that body till he should satisfactorily explain certain matters connected with the charges which had been made against him, concerning which the conference was in doubt.

Dr. Brown had been for several years, previous to his work on the Pacific coast, pastor of the First Church, Dubuque, Io. His son is now pastor of the church at Strawberry Point. Both these churches are included in the Dubuque Association. This body, of which Dr. Brown was formerly a member, April 28 passed resolutions of sympathy with Dr. Brown and confidence in him, and called in question the action of the Bay Conference in withdrawing fellowship from him. The Bay Conference, Aug. 11, sustained its former action by a vote of fifty-five to ten, and requested the Dubuque body to rescind its votes, reminding it that the proper remedy for any alleged injustice was a mutual ecclesiastical council. To this request the Dubuque Association responded, Sept. 28, by laying the resolutions of the Bay Conference on the table. Dr. Brown, being present, requested to be received into the Dubuque Association and pleaded his own case. After hot discussion he was received by a vote of twenty-two to seventeen, sixteen of the affirmative votes being cast, according to the report of our correspondent, by representatives of the two Dubuque churches and the church at Strawberry Point.

The Bay Conference, Oct. 29, passed resolutions stating the usage of Congregational churches concerning the relation of co-ordinate bodies and the standing of members, and declared the action of the Dubuque Association "unwarranted, and in open violation of Congregational fellowship." It also called on the Dubuque body to consider the case as presented in its resolutions and to take action to conserve the interests of denominational fellowship. At the same time it appointed a committee with power to request a mutual council or, if necessary, to call an ex parte council. No response to this action, so far as we have record, was made by the Dubuque Association. But the State Association of Iowa, at its annual meeting last month, unanimously condemned the attempt of one local association "to reverse, on what must of necessity be ex parte evidence, the solemn decision of another like body, in that it strikes a blow at one of the fundamental principles of Congregational polity, gravely endangers the fellowship of the churches, is liable to force a local association into unwelcome relations with its own previously discarded members and involves the denomination at large in responsibility for such members."

Dr. Brown, who had removed to Chicago, preached in several churches during the winter, and recently accepted a call to the Green Street Church in that city. The Dubuque Association granted him a letter, which he presented to the Chicago Association of churches. This body, having received from the Bay Conference and from members of the Dubuque Association protests against its admitting Dr. Brown into membership, at a meeting May 4 appointed a committee to consider the whole matter and report June 7. The proceedings of that meeting and the result, admitting Dr. Brown to membership, are given in another column.

We have carefully refrained, in the history of this lamentable case, from expressing any opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of Dr. Brown, or concerning the justice or injustice of the action of the Bay Conference in suspending him. But we have no hesitation in giving voice to the judgment on which the leaders of our denomination, past and present, are agreed concerning the sacredness of the principle which the Dubuque and Chicago Associations have violated.

"Two principles, the independence and autonomy, under Christ, of the local church and the obligation of fellowship with others always resting on it, give to Congregationalism its name and impart to it any virtue which belongs to it as a scheme of general church order." This is the statement of Dr. R. S. Storrs describing our polity, with which all Congregationalists will agree. The Chicago Association, following the example of the Dubuque Association, has deliberately violated the second of these principles. Declining to avail itself of time-honored usages by which the peace of the churches has been maintained for more than two centuries, it has committed a gross breach of Congregational propriety, done itself grave discredit and cast reproach on our form of church government from which the entire denomination must suffer. To say the least, it owes to the churches with which it may desire to continue in fellowship some prompt explanation of the course it has taken.

We are not disturbed as to the final result. Congregational churches, by weathering many a storm, have proved that sound sense, mutual good faith and Christian purpose will in the end prevail over excited feeling. We are confident that wiser counsels will be heard by the churches of the Chicago Association, and that they will not long consent to rest under the imputation of having thrust aside one of the two fundamental principles on which their fathers and they have builded.

GOD'S HANDIWORK IN NATURE

A few weeks ago a certain scientist declared that he had discovered proofs of life in crystals. His claim does not seem to have been established but there is life in many natural objects which not very long ago were assumed to be inanimate. And the whole natural world is in constant movement and change. God is rebuilding it, shaping it anew, day by day. Among the most reverent admirers of the ways of God in the earth have been many of the greatest experts in natural science. For their study has revealed to them wonderfully the infinite power, wisdom and skill of the divine Creator.

Whether his handiwork in nature be examined on a large scale or a small one, whether it be a mountain or a crystal, an ocean or a drop of sap, a tornado or a snowflake, his boundless resources of creative ability, his delicate adjustments of part to part and of structures to surroundings, and the marvelous beauty of many of his creations, tell us a thrilling story of what he is himself. They teach his love of order and plan, his ceaseless care of what he has made, his untrammeled freedom in shaping and executing his designs, and his delight in beauty for itself. The most magnificent sunset which we ever have seen, stately in its cloud-structures and gorgeous in its coloring beyond any words, was in mid-ocean, where, so far as could be known, only the human beings in a single ship were allowed to see it. Many such must go absolutely unwitnessed by men. God makes them for his own enjoyment.

It is wholly impossible to do more than hint thus at the significance of the divine handiwork in nature as we can trace it. But one suggestion may not go unnoted. If our Heavenly Father cares thus for the material world how he must care for our living, eternal souls. If he takes such pains to complete his handiwork in soil and vapor, light and shadow, what must be his desire to see his highest, noblest creation, the human spirit, work out its mission by his help, grow into its intended beauty, usefulness and happiness, and become all which he meant it to be, but which—because it was necessary to leave it free—he cannot force it against its will to become. The God of nature, because he is the God of nature, is the God of every human soul who is willing to receive him.

CURRENT HISTORY

Home Affairs

President McKinley's tour through parts of the South, including a visit to the Tennessee exhibition at Nashville, has added to his popularity and to the national good feeling. The hopeful utterances of Secretary Gage on the financial question have quickened the slow progress of commercial improvement. The tariff debate has reached the sugar schedule, and the Senate amendment has been once more amended under pressure of the Republican caucus by the narrow majority of two, which is said to be the assured majority for the bill as a whole. The most significant result of the debate thus far has been the development of a sentiment in favor of protection among Southern Democratic senators, whose votes were given for the addition of a duty on cotton to the bill. Speaker Reed still holds back the House from consideration of the Cuban belligerency resolutions, and there are no startling developments in regard to our relations to Spain. The President evidently finds it less difficult to choose a strong man for the Spanish mission than to persuade him to accept the post when chosen. The South American delegates to the commercial congress in Philadelphia have been visiting the manufacturing centers of New Jersey, New York and New England. There has been much interchange of good wishes and an evident growth of good feeling from their visit, and there is hope of the establishment of an international bank and of new lines of steamers by way of helping on in trade relations.

Augusta's Centennial

The 100th anniversary of Augusta, Me., was fittingly celebrated, June 9, with public meetings and an address by perhaps the most distinguished living native of the town, Chief-Justice Fuller of the United States Supreme Court. The first settlement of the locality was a trading post called Cushnoc, founded in 1629. In 1713 a stone fort was built as one of the outposts in the eastern wilderness, but was destroyed and only rebuilt in 1754 under the name of Fort Weston. The settlement was incorporated as a part of Hallowell in 1771, but set off as the town of Harrington in 1797, changing its name to Augusta within a year. The following year it became the shire town, and was made capital of the State soon after its admittance to the Union in 1820. It was incorporated as a city in 1849. Situated at the head of navigation on the Kennebec, with large water power from the falls of the river, it has been a successful manufacturing and export center and the residence of many of the most distinguished men of the State.

The Greatest of Lens Makers

In the death of Alvan G. Clark the world loses one of its greatest makers of telescopes. We recorded recently his journey from Cambridgeport to Williams Bay, Wis., carrying the great lens of the Yerkes telescope belonging to the University of Chicago, and the more recent accident which has temporarily disabled that telescope. Mr. Clark was born in Fall River, Mass., and took up with his father the manufacture of telescopes, and especially the grinding of lenses, in which he brought his work on a large scale to a perfection never reached by any one else in the world. The list of his great lenses is a long one, beginning with the Princeton University telescope with a twenty-three-inch lens. That of the Harvard instrument at Arequipa, Peru, of the University of Virginia, of the Russian government at Pulkowa, of the Lick Observatory in California and the forty-inch lens of the Yerkes instrument were all ground by him. As the work owes nothing to machinery, but depends upon personal skill and judgment and enormous patience, the world's loss is for the moment irreparable, though the business will no doubt be carried on successfully by his trained assistants. Mr. Clark was himself an observer and had devoted much time to the study of double stars. The Lalande gold medal was awarded to him by the French Academy of Sciences in 1862 for his discovery of the companion of Sirius.

A Lynching in Maryland

The lesson of last week's lynching has been driven home by a repetition of the offense, this time in Maryland. The criminal and victim was again a negro, but this time he had been sentenced to death by the court. The death penalty executed with all the decencies of the law was not enough for the mob. In spite of the pleading of the judge who had just passed sentence and the resistance of the officers of the law, the "respectable citizens" of Princess Anne took the prisoner out of the hands of the sheriff, threw him to the ground and kicked him into insensibility. They stamped upon his face with their heavy boots and hacked him with their knives, and at last dragged him with a rope around his neck to a tree, where they jerked him up to a limb and shot bullets through his body. "No attempt at disguise was made by any of those who took part in the lynching," say the newspaper reports. Will there be any attempt to vindicate justice in Maryland? Or is the wild beast instinct, which loses its senses at the sight of blood, still unconquered in our nature? After Ohio, Maryland! What community will be safe henceforward if these are given up to mobs?

The Ruin of the Rain

The weather of June thus far exceeds all previous record in rainfall, tornado and destructive floods. In China it is impossible to send relief to plague and famine stricken regions because of flooded rivers. Recent cloud bursts have wrought havoc in France. A tornado in South Italy swept the mountain valley of Caprino clean of growing crops and in destroying the mulberry trees ruined the silkworm crop of the neighborhood for the year. At home the territory about Lyle in southern Minnesota was devastated by a windstorm with much destruction of property and some loss of life. A cloudburst on the slope of Pike's Peak cut off traffic on the railroads west of Denver and flooded the lower part of the city. In northern and central New England the rivers have overflowed and the dams been threatened. Railroad embankments and bridges were swept away and the season's harvest of logs on the Connecticut bursting through boom after boom was largely carried down stream toward the Sound. Such excess of summer rains insures an unprecedented hay crop if the sun will shine long enough for its harvesting, but is bad for corn, summer boarding houses and human patience everywhere.

Hawaii, Japan and America

Reports from Hawaii represent Japan's reception of the Hawaiian answer to her demands as threatening at first, but afterward more conciliatory. The principle of compensation in cases where the law was violated in sending back qualified immigrants Hawaii accepts, but refuses to recede from its laws governing immigration, of which Japan complained. It is doubtful whether the Japanese authorities have any other end in view than that of vindicating their national honor. In the meantime reports of renewed annexation projects come from Washington. According to the story, which is given at length by the newspapers as a forecast of a message soon to be sent to Congress by President McKinley, the two governments are to appoint commissioners who shall arrange a treaty for the admittance of "the territory of Hawaii," which is to be governed temporarily under a special arrangement which will exclude Asiatics from the suffrage and from the right of emigration to the United States. In view of these hopes and plans the present reciprocity treaty will probably not be withdrawn by the new tariff legislation.

Great Britain Abroad and at Home

Abroad Queen Victoria's jubilee is clouded by one of the little frontier wars which have been such common incidents in recent British history. One of the wild Afghan tribes in the difficult country containing the frontier passes from India toward the northwest fell upon a body of 300 native British troops and overwhelmed them by force of numbers. The subjugation and policing of these high mountain valleys, inhabited by a turbulent population, is always a difficult task, but every war hitherto has ended in an extension of British authority and the enforcement of peace, and this is likely to be no exception to the rule. Shocks of earthquake have done much damage in India, extending from Simla and Darjeeling on the foothills of the Himalayas to Calcutta, where the shock was very severe, throwing down the spire of the cathedral and ruining many large buildings. On the Nile the troops and stores are being brought together for an advance toward Khartoum sometime in July, and on their side the Mahdists are said to be gathering for a decisive struggle.

At home the crowds are gathering in London, the buildings in whose main streets are cased in wooden seats in anticipation of the great jubilee procession. On Sunday next there will be special religious services in every church affiliated with the Church of England in the queen's dominions. On Monday, June 21, the queen and court will move in state from Windsor to London, and in this journey the representatives of foreign nations will join, the United States being represented by Special Ambassador Reid and his staff. Tuesday will be the day of the great procession by which the queen will be escorted to the Houses of Parliament. She will ride in an open carriage drawn by twelve cream-colored ponies and be followed by volunteer troops from all parts of the world. The religious ceremony will be held, in passing, at the north entrance of St. Paul's, under a canopy, but the queen will not leave her carriage. On Wednesday there will be a large garden party at Buckingham Palace, and a review of 10,000 school children in the afternoon. On Thursday the court will return to Windsor.

The English Liberals are greatly dissatisfied with the program of the jubilee, owing to its omission of the civic and industrial elements of the life of the kingdom. The presence of the Turks and the Germans, and the absence of Gladstone, arouses indignant comments. The premiers of the colonies are the most talked about guests of the nation, and their presence and popularity are being used to push schemes of an imperial federation with free trade among its members and differential duties for all outsiders. England is too dependent upon foreign nations for raw material and food to lightly abandon her long experiment of free trade, but the temptation is the strongest that has assailed her since the days of Cobden. The Canadian premier, Sir Wilfred Laurier, however, has declared in a public interview that Canada has nothing to fear from war with any nation except the United States, and has no need of great schemes of naval defense, and at the same time distinctly disavowed any wish for English abandonment of her commercial policy. Whatever may be the outcome of the agitation, the presence of the colonial soldiers and representatives has added immensely to the imperial self consciousness of the British people, while it has, no doubt, increased colonial loyalty to the crown.

Persuading the Sultan

The commissioners of the Powers and of the sultan are playing out their game of peace and war in Constantinople behind closed doors. The main outlines of their discussion are clear enough, but only now and then does a hint reach the public of the progress of the debate. The question of Thessaly is evidently the crucial one. The representatives of England and France are said to have insisted that Thessaly must be returned to Greece, whereupon the sultan withdrew his commissioners altogether for a day. He has since made a personal appeal to his good friends the czar and the Emperor William to support him in his demand for the annexation of the province—an action on his part in which he evidently overreached himself, because it has enabled the representatives of the other Powers to insist that the question of Thessaly must be settled before any other is considered. In the meantime the Turks are increasing their forces under arms, gathering the Thessalian harvests, and settling after their own fashion the administration of the country, and the brigandage which the Greeks had suppressed has broken out again in the parts not occupied by their armies. France, England and Russia are all feeling the result of the Turkish victories in Thessaly in the awakening of unrest among the Mohammedans under their sovereignty in Africa and Asia.

NOTES

It is a satisfaction to note that justice has been meted out and punishment is sure in the case of the Boston city clerk and contractor, Mulrey and Finneran, who conspired to cheat the city by false pay rolls. The sentences are not too heavy for the offenses and the rebuke to the too prevalent feeling that cheating the public is not really cheating is very much needed.

It will be a relief of mind to the compassionate everywhere to hear that the monsoon, or early summer rains, has begun in full force on the west coast of India. The famine stricken people will take new heart and the work of the Indian Government, of enormous complexity and difficulty at best, will be greatly lightened.

Men in the highest public office in Europe always run a certain risk of assassination. "It is one of the perquisites of the profession," as King Humbert of Italy, who escaped death at the hand of an assailant not long ago, remarked. This time it is the president of France, Mr. Felix Faure, near whose carriage a bomb was exploded. No one was hurt and the president's popularity is greatly increased by his cool bravery.

Barney Barnato, born Barney Isaacs, who fell (or jumped) overboard from an English steamer homeward bound from the cape, was the most picturesque figure in British South Africa after Cecil Rhodes. The younger son of a London Jew, he went to Cape Colony, where he was for a time a member of a company of strolling players. He went to Kimberley after the diamond discoveries, and by industry and shrewdness acquired a fortune in the mines. His recognition of the possibilities of the gold discovery in the Transvaal and his investments and manipulations in the London stock market made him, in British popular opinion, the richest man in the world, although his wealth was much lessened by the collapse of the boom in African mining stocks a year ago. He was one of the central figures also in the planning of the Jameson raid.

IN BRIEF

The Turk is rapidly becoming a cosmopolite. In his dispatch denying a story of Turkish outrages in Epirus Mustapha Bey speaks of the lynching at Urbana as "a great cruelty." We are of his opinion, to which Americans ought to give all the more heed because the Turks, judging by the fate of their Armenian subjects, are experts in the art of cruelty.

Sec. C. J. Ryder's restoration to a good degree of health rejoices the hearts of the multitude of his friends. His has been a painful and alarming illness, and his recovery is something of a surprise even to his physicians. None of our benevolent societies has a more tireless worker than this faithful official of the A. M. A. Slow up a little, brother, now that you have had this warning!

One problem of college discipline has been admirably solved at Harvard recently, where four Freshmen who celebrated a baseball victory by painting the status of John Harvard have been discovered by a committee of the students and forced to resign from the university. This is as it should be. The line between fun and vandalism must be drawn by student hands and fixed in undergraduate traditions before it can become a permanent landmark of college life.

The reported sale of several thousand acres on the eastern side of Mt. Washington calls renewed attention to the shortsighted policy of the State of New Hampshire in allowing the White Mountain region, which ought to be a great public park, to pass without reserve into the hands of the lumbermen. Not even the recent floods, we fear, nor the decrease in the number of summer visitors to the mountains, who are the State's best customers, will suffice to awaken a public sentiment powerful enough to override the immediate selfish interests of the lumbermen and the railroads.

Apropos of our recent suggestion, that it does not hurt a pastor now and then to hear kind words, this anecdote is called forth: A minister, on being cautioned against becoming proud by the complimentary words spoken of him on a certain anniversary occasion, replied: "If as the pastor of the church in X—— I have not enough to keep me humble I am exceedingly sorry."

The pope talks good politics as well as good Christianity when he says, in a communication to a newspaper in Rome with reference to the affairs of France, that he disclaims all intention of recommending any preference for either the republican or the monarchical form of government, and that he has observed that the interests of religion in any country are best served by loyal support of the constituted government. If the bishops of Rome had only found that out a millennium ago the world might have had a different history.

Discoveries of ancient Chinese inscriptions in Mexico and researches by F. W. Christian of the Polynesian Society in the Caroline Islands, and elsewhere in the South Pacific, seem to point toward belief in an ancient and extensive intercourse between Asia and America long ago. Many hints and suggestions used to bolster up the hypothesis of an Asiatic origin for the American Aztec and Indian tribes will fit very naturally into this theory, which is one more nail, by the way, in the coffin of the hypothesis of the aboriginal diversity and separate origin of the races of men.

"If people do not want to be hurt or killed they should not go rioting," says the New York Tribune in commenting upon the Urbana lynching. The final sanction of law in our imperfect civilization is, and must be, force, and the militia exists as a reserve behind the ordinary instruments of enforcement. This should be understood both by the militia and by the people. It is a grim duty to shoot men down, but if private soldiers in the ranks are to be judges of the necessity there is an end of all discipline. No one can blame a soldier for obeying orders, and if he is not ready to obey he should not become a soldier.

The French Government adds yearly to its collection of pictures by purchase from living artists. These pictures are hung in the Luxembourg Palace, whence the choicest of them are ultimately transferred to the gallery of the immortals in the Louvre. Such a purchase of a picture by an American artist is rare indeed, but has just occurred in the case of the picture of the raising of Lazarus by H. O. Tanner, born in Philadelphia. Let those who are doubtful of the capacity of the Americans of African descent take notice that Mr. Tanner is a Negro, the son of Bishop Tanner of the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Christian Advocate's leading editorial last week was a vigorous condemnation of the Maine Wesleyan Seminary because of the appointment of Mr. Frank Jones, a wealthy brewer of Portsmouth, N. H., as one of its trustees. The Advocate justly ridicules the two leading arguments presented to the Maine Conference for his election: first, that the institution needs money and hopes to get it from Mr. Jones; second, that his election to this office is going to bring him into the kingdom of heaven. When men cannot urge a man's character and standing in the esteem of Christians as the first reason for his election to administer the affairs of a Christian institution, they can never justify their action.

There seems to be some danger of a split in the Reformed Episcopal Church over the question whether its ministers shall dress in white or black in the public services. The General Council after a long and somewhat heated debate decided to forbid the use of the surplice except in parishes where it has already been introduced. Upon this Bishop Cheney of Chicago resigned all his posts in the gift of the council as a protest against its action. The present position in which the surplice is allowed to some and forbidden to others seems to us as outsiders neither logical nor tenable, and is it worth while to waste the nervous and spiritual energy of the churches over clothes?

The Central Christian Advocate says:

> As long as a man is wholly loyal to Jesus Christ, as long as he leads a devout life and seeks to re-embody the spirit of the Master in his own character, as long as he believes in the deity and the atoning sacrifice of our Lord, in the ministry of the Holy Spirit, in the new birth and in the divine authority of the Word, we know of no doctrinal reasons why he should abandon his place as a Methodist preacher because he inclines to accept some of the assured results of higher criticism.

We would adopt this as a description of the doctrinal fitness of a Congregational minister, only qualifying it by saying that if he is sufficiently intelligent to present these doctrines to his people he will certainly accept "assured results" of Biblical study when he understands them.

We are glad to notice that the treasurer and alumnæ of Mt. Holyoke College are organizing a movement to raise an endowment fund for a memorial to the late Catharine Hopkins, one of the early principals, whose memory is as tenderly cherished today as it was at her death, thirty-two years ago, at the age of thirty years. Among those who have given their lives to this mother of female colleges throughout the world, Miss Hopkins's brilliant scholarship, progressive views, deep religious consecration, strong and fascinating personality and loving heart have left an abiding impress. It is eminently fitting that, among the new buildings now being erected at Mt. Holyoke, there should be a Catharine Hopkins Hall.

A growing interest in New England history is indicated by the increase of facilities for seeing the historic places. At least two well-arranged pilgrimages are projected for the present season. One is offered by the Old South Historical Society for June 26—a trip from Boston for a single day to the homes and haunts of Whittier beside the Merrimac, including travel by rail, electric car and steamer, and giving a good idea of the surroundings in which the poet lived and did his work. The other offers to the people of the Old Colony a five days' trip, beginning Oct. 5, under the direction of Rev. Charles H. Washburn, pastor of the First Congregational Church in Falmouth, Mass., to Boston, Concord and Lexington, with optional trips to Salem and New Bedford. There will be much to be gained of knowledge and civic enthusiasm from either of these excursions.

James Martineau, now in his ninety-third year, is called a Unitarian, though he declines to accept the name. He worships with the Camden Road Congregational Church, London, though no doubt he would not permit himself to be classed as a Trinitarian Congregationalist. Yet few men in this century have written words more prized by many Christians of all denominations than he. Possibly his choice in worship may be explained in these words which he lately wrote, declaring his preference for the name Christian above that of Unitarian and his reverence for Jesus Christ as representing the religious character to which he aspires:

> The genuine essence of that life, when found and appreciated, is still so far beyond our present standards as to shame our past indifference and to quicken our sense of the high calling before us. With this feeling ever stronger in me, I must still seek my supporting fellowship with those who frequent the Christian sanctuary.

Some months ago the Kingdom, just before its suspension for the summer, published an article by President Gates of Iowa College severely criticising the business methods of the American Book Company. The same article, or the substance of it, was issued by the Kingdom Publishing Company in pamphlet form. The Book Company applied to the courts for an injunction restraining the Publishing Company from circulating any further copies of the pamphlet, on the ground that the defendant was insolvent and unable to answer in damages. The court denied the application on the ground that restraint of freedom of the press by injunction is contrary to the Constitution of the United States, at the same time declaring that "this pamphlet is a serious attack upon the business methods of the American Book Company." That company has now brought a libel suit against the Kingdom Publishing Company for $100,000 damages. We chronicle the facts without comment because of the importance of the decision against issuing injunctions in restraint of the press and because of the wide interest in the result of such a suit, the defendants in which are prominent Congregationalists.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM SCOTLAND

Professor Drummond

The memory of Henry Drummond is still fresh among us and his rare influence will go on working. Among the many beautiful tributes that have appeared I have reason to know that the appreciative notice in The Congregationalist was specially interesting to the relatives of Professor Drummond. Dr. Dods, whose influence over him was great, remarked in the funeral sermon at Stirling that probably the work his gifted friend did by his addresses to the students of Edinburgh University would have the most abiding results. It was the work into which Drummond put the whole force and charm of his personality. The announcement that Prof. George Adam Smith has undertaken to write a short memoir will give universal satisfaction. Dr. Smith's reading of David's lament over Saul at the funeral service held in Stirling was singularly powerful.

The Congregational Union

Our Scottish May meetings were begun by the holding of the first united gathering of the Evangelical Union of Congregational bodies in Augustine Church, Edinburgh. Rev. Fergus Ferguson, D. D., of Glasgow, was honored by being called to the chair on an occasion new and important in the history of these bodies. Dr. Ferguson is ready in conversation and with his pen, and the success of the proceedings and the spirit of brotherliness and harmony that prevailed were due in no small measure to his genial tact and unfailing good humor. His appointment to the chair may—on this its eighty-fifth annual meeting—be regarded as a generous act of reparation on the part of the Congregational body, and as showing the contrast between the policy of fifty years ago and now; for in 1844 he was one of nine students expelled from the theological hall of the Congregational church for holding the Wesleyan view of the resistibility and universality of divine grace. This view went beyond the teaching in those days of Dr. Wardlaw and Dr. Lindsay Alexander, who maintained that, while Christ died for all men, the Holy Spirit worked with invincible energy and was given only to the unconditionally elect. The advanced view held by the nine students brought about the existence of the Evangelical Union body in Scotland, and it was to this body that Dr. James Morison was attracted and brought the weight of his scholarship and character.

Delegates from England and Ireland were welcomed, the most prominent being Rev. Dr. Mackennal of Bowdon. Prin. A. M. Fairbairn was also cordially received. The conversazione drew together an audience that filled the Edinburgh Music Hall. Mr. Somerville of Dalkeith, a wealthy layman, presided, and among the speakers was the well-known Dr. Guinness Rogers. Another speaker, Rev. George Gladstone of Glasgow, made a powerful impression. The union now comprises 180 congregations, with a membership approaching to 40,000.

A Heresy Trial and Its Outcome

The case of greatest interest in the Established Church Assembly has been the trial of Rev. Alexander Robinson of Kilmun for the alleged heresies of his book, The Saviour in the Newer Light. Mr. Robinson was suspended from his ministry by the assembly of last year, and when questioned this week if he now repudiated the teaching of his book he boldly answered "No"! After some delay and a keen debate, which illustrated the different doctrinal tendencies of the Scotch Church, the assembly, by a large majority, decided that Mr. Robinson's views on such points as the truthfulness of the gospels and the divinity of Jesus Christ cannot be tolerated within the church, and it was left to Mr. Robinson's presbytery to accept his resignation of his charge or, failing that, to depose him from the ministry of the Church of Scotland. Mr. Robinson was not without his friends and advocates, who pleaded for greater tolerance and sympathy on the ground of his youth and excellent character, but it was generally admitted that his book was thoroughly hasty and immature, and that the writer had undertaken a task beyond his powers.

Progress Toward Union

The event of greatest significance in the Free Church Assembly is the advance made in the negotiations towards union with the United Presbyterian Church. The opposition of the conservative party in the Highlands has been in a great measure overcome, and now that a joint committee is at work on the various questions that come up for adjustment we may be said to be within measurable distance of actual and incorporating union. Whether this result will hasten disestablishment, or pave the way for the reconstruction and union of the three great Presbyterian bodies in Scotland, remains to be seen.

New Professors and Publications

Two appointments made in the Free Church Assembly were of special interest. Rev. Alexander Martin of Edinburgh was unanimously given the chair of apologetics and pastoral theology in the New College made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Blaikie, who is fully as well known by his Life of Livingstone as by his theological writings. Mr. Martin has not yet won his spurs like Dr. Denney, but he had a high reputation as a student and as assistant to the professor of moral philosophy in Edinburgh University; and it was a marked tribute to his fitness for the chair that Professor Iverach of Aberdeen, who had been nominated also, withdrew in Mr. Martin's favor and left the field clear for his unanimons appointment. Quite as much is expected from the other appointment, made in favor of Dr. James Denney, who was chosen by a large majority to succeed Dr. Candlish in the chair of systematic theology at Glasgow. Dr. Denney's views, however, on sin and the atonement were called in question by several critics, but this did not disturb the confidence of the assembly in Dr. Denney's substantial soundness. There are a few in every age who would thus scour the face of the sun! It is undoubtedly by the publication of the lectures he first delivered in America that Dr. Denney has won his place among us as an able theologian and a writer of great candor and independence.

We are looking forward to the publication of the first series of Dr. A. B. Bruce's Gifford Lectures. The full title of the volume will be The Providential Order of the World. It will appear early in October and be published simultaneously here and in America.

Growth of Christian Endeavor

It appears from the convention held last month at Greenock that this movement is making steady progress, and that our Scottish Endeavorers are full of enthusiasm. The number of societies is now close on 400, with a membership of upwards of 16,000. These figures denote a large increase. Scottish Endeavor, the monthly organ of the union, is making headway, but complaint is made that the press in this country is much less disposed than American papers to give recognition to the work of endeavor. The interest taken in foreign missions continues to be a marked feature. The retiring president made a vigorous appeal for a revival of ethics and pointed out the harm done to the gospel by characterless, emotional people.

Glasgow, May 29. W. M. R.

CURRENT THOUGHT

AT HOME

"Major Hardie, an ex-Confederate of Birmingham, Ala., who presided at the Y. M. C. A. International Convention," says the Christian Register, "faced the Southern race question as bravely as he ever faced Federal guns. This is the way he talked. I heard a man say the other day that the colored race was on trial, but it is my opinion that it is the white race that is on trial. God gave us the African when he permitted man's avarice to penetrate the wilds of Africa to shackle him and bring him to our shores. He finally brought about the means by which he was declared free. And I take it that this was God's way of taking him away from his idols. Shall we be like the priest or Levite, who passed by on the other side, or shall we, like the good Samaritan, take these people and lift them up, and make them a blessing to themselves and to their race? It is the white race that is on trial. Are we going to meet this question and bring these people to God?"

In the department of Men and Letters in the June Atlantic Mr. Rollo Ogden writes of the New Pathos. He asks, with reference to the different literary appeal of the writer of the day: "Does all this argue that manners have really changed as well as literary taste? Do we take our sorrows more stoically than our grandfathers did? That depends upon who we are and who our grandfathers were. The unconventional classes in society are now what they have always been. Having emotions of any kind, why should they conceal them? Children of nature, their grief is as immoderate as their laughter. Now fifty years have undoubtedly extended outwards and downwards the sway of social conventions. So it would be true that many more people nowadays feel the weary weight of the unintelligible world upon them without crying out so unguardedly, and in this sense it may be said that manners have really undergone a transformation."

In its review of Letters from the Scenes of the Recent Massacres in Armenia by the English professor, J. Rendell Harris, and Helen B. Harris, who went out at their own charges to investigate the need, the New York Evening Post says: "Everywhere the Harrises found themselves working hand in hand with the American missionaries, and eulogies on the devotion, the heroism and the sound, practical common sense of these missionaries occur with a frequency very gratifying to American ears. On the other hand, when we read their story of the attack on the mission buildings and the American missionaries at Harpoot by the Turkish troops and officials, accompanying our admiration of the heroism of the missionaries there is a feeling of shame that our Government practically left them to their fate, and that to this day no one has been punished for the outrage and no indemnity exacted."

Bishop Westcott, in a suggestive article published by the Churchman, sums up the lessons of Queen Victoria's reign. He says: "Looking back over the experiences of my life, I seem to see clearly that in our queen's reign we have learned a great truth, we have received a great hope, we have been face to face with a great danger. As we deal with the truth, the hope, the danger, so will our future be. We have learned a great truth. We have gained a practical conception of the solidarity, the continuity, the dependence of life. The individual is no longer regarded habitually as an end in himself. It is seen that his personality is contributory to a larger being, in which he is not lost; that he is modified by his environment, and that in turn he modifies it. We recognize that we cannot isolate actions; that all we do has a reference to the whole and to eternity. . . . Out of the truth springs a great hope. Feeling welcomes the thought of solidarity and hallows it into fellowship. There is among us, on all sides, in men and in classes, a growing acknowledgment of mutual duties and a strenuous endeavor to understand one another. . . . Our dangers spring out of the vast industrial development in which we commonly find our national glory. The rapid, if precarious, accumulation of wealth has disturbed the power of a quiet life. . . . But the great truth and the great hope which I have indicated—a truth, a hope, confirmed in their infinite fullness by the incarnation—are able to save us from this fatal degeneracy."

ABROAD

Congregationalists in England are probably nearer in agreement than we are with respect to the main conclusions of the higher criticism of the Bible. But they are less disturbed by it than we are. Dr. G. S. Barrett no doubt well represented them in saying recently: "I want to avow my definite belief that when the higher criticism has done its best—or, some of you might say, its worst—with the Bible, the Bible remains unique. The longer I live the more certain I am that you may trace in that Book, from Genesis to Revelation, running like a thread of gold, the unfolding of the redeeming purpose and mercy of God. But it is not a true order to say that you believe in Christ because of the authority of the Bible; the true order is this, you believe in the authority of the Bible because you believe in Christ. To a man who is not converted the Bible is no authority. It speaks to him with the voice of God; but he is deaf—he does not hear it; he is blind, he does not see the light. Nay, if certainty depends on the Bible, how did the Galatian Christians reach that immense certainty of which I spoke just now? There was no Bible in Galatia, and yet the apostle addresses them as if he were just as certain they knew that Christ was true and Christ was real as he himself was. An infallible book never creates certitude."

Queen Victoria's Reign and the Higher Life of Her People

By Rev. John Brown, D. D., Bedford, Eng.

With the dawn of morning on June 20 it will be sixty years since William IV., the childless king of England, passed away, and since state messengers hurried through the still, silent streets to old Kensington Palace to announce to the Princess Victoria, a mere girl of eighteen, her accession to the throne as queen of England. Older men can still remember the thrill of emotion which passed through the heart of the nation as the people came to hear of the way in which the young princess received the tidings brought to her on that eventful morning. With tears and prayers she stepped forth into that fierce light which beats upon a throne, "weeping to wear a crown," the sense of responsibility and insufficiency overpowering the lower promptings of vanity and ambition.

The sixty years which have come and gone since then have more than justified the high expectations begotten by that first simple and natural scene in the story of her reign. And what memorable years they have been both in her own history and in that of her people! During their course there have been greater developments on the material side of things—the advance of science and its practical application to the needs of life—than perhaps during all the centuries of civilization before. A modern writer has emphasized the fact that when Sir Robert Peel was summoned from Rome to England in 1834 to form a cabinet he traveled in precisely the same way as did Constantine the Great when he was summoned from York to Rome to be crowned emperor fifteen centuries before, that is to say, they both had only such help as horses and sails could give, and they were both of them weeks upon the road. Whereas if Sir Robert had made the same journey a few years later he could have traveled all the way by steam and have reached London in forty-eight hours. So that advance in many directions has been by leaps and bounds, and in many important respects society has been revolutionized during these sixty years. But our purpose now is to measure, so far as we can, what progress the English nation may have made in the higher departments of life—intellectual, moral and spiritual. When we come to these we feel at once that we are in an altogether different region in which a measurement of forces is largely beyond our range. You may register to a pound the pressure of steam, but you cannot tell what may be the effect of a single speech or a single book upon a nation's history. You can no more tabulate the dealings of God with human souls than you can weigh the fragrance of flowers in scales or the beauty of the landscape in a balance.

Yet a modified survey is possible and may be instructive, filling us with hope and confidence while we wage warfare with those reactionary forces which are still so powerful and oftentimes so disheartening. It may help us to see and feel that the world does move on after all. Taking the shorter look of a year or two, it may seem as if the waves went backward as well as forward; but taking the longer look of sixty years, or over two generations of men, we see how,

> Far back through creeks and inlets making,
> Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

To glance at the intellectual region first. England had been far outstripped in the matter of the education of the people by the United States when in 1870 she, by the elementary education act, set herself more seriously to her high duty in this respect. As early as 1807 the member for Bedford carried a bill through the House of Commons seeking in statesmanlike fashion to stem pauperism and crime by means of better education, but when the bill reached the House of Lords—that charnel house where the dead bones of so many noble schemes lie scattered—it was strangled out of life.

If there had been a national scheme of education in 1807 instead of 1870, the English people would have been farther on their way today. But happily, during the last quarter of a century, a whole generation has been growing up under better auspices, the result of which is becoming more and more manifest. In the matter of higher education, also, steady advance has been made. University life is better organized, more accessible and more efficient. It also breathes a freer air of liberty. When Victoria came to the throne there was no admission for Nonconformists to what were called the national universities; nor could a Dissenter, however distinguished for genius, learning, scientific and literary attainment, obtain a degree in any one of them except by taking a course which involved perjuring his own conscience and renouncing the faith of his fathers.

Now a Nonconformist can enter any of the colleges, compete for any university and college prizes, exhibitions and scholarships, and when he has taken his degree is just as eligible as other men, not only for a fellowship, but also for the honor of serving his college as tutor or lecturer. And the young men of the Nonconformist churches have shown themselves worthy of the privileges which have been won for them, as will be seen from the fact that the senior wranglership, the highest attainment at Cambridge, was taken, nineteen years out of thirty, and that against all comers, by Nonconformists.

The principle of religious liberty has not only been advanced during these years in the national universities, but also in other departments of the nation's life. Sixty years ago church rates were levied on the whole community for the benefit of the Episcopal Church and the churchyards were closed against the ministration at funerals of all but the clergy of that one church. The rates were enforced against resolute Nonconformists by seizure of their household goods, which were then sold by public auction amidst scenes which brought no credit to the cause of religion. Fortunately, in 1868, by the abolition of penalty, this state of things came to an end and no church gained more by this than the one which so long resisted the change.

The principle of a free church in a free state has not yet reached the point it has attained on the American side of the Atlantic. Still it has made progress of distinctly hopeful sort. The reign of Victoria will always be memorable as the time when, by a noble act of self-sacrifice, the Free Church of Scotland came into existence. In 1843, for freedom's sake and in vindication of the crown rights of Christ, 474 ministers signed the deed of demission, by which they surrendered all claim to and interest in the churches, manses, glebes and stipends they had enjoyed as ministers of the Established Church. This heroic deed, done in the sacred name of conscience, was like life from the dead to a nation whose church had been steeped in a lifeless moderatism and hide-bound by crippling bonds of state. In Ireland, too, a change for the better was brought about by the disestablishment of a church which was merely that of a rich minority, and which, while claiming to be Protestant, was the one great hindrance to the cause of Protestantism.

In the religious life of the nation there have been both losses and gains during these sixty years. It may be doubted whether there is as much prayerful meditation, as firm a grip of Bible truth, as vivid a sense of eternal things with the many in our time as there was with the few in the days of our fathers; it may be feared, also, that there has been such a reaction among a large section of the clergy of the Episcopal Church in the direction of sacerdotalism and superstition as there has not been before since the Reformation became an accomplished fact. On the other hand, among the Free Churches there has been a more direct and earnest setting forth of Christ as the way of salvation, the gospel has been kept more free from the entanglement of such hopeless controversies on abstract doctrine as once delighted the contentious, and the spiritual life of the churches has shown itself in more real and practical endeavors for the elevation of the people.

In the Episcopal Church, too, if there has been a revival of superstition and of priestly ideas in some directions, there has also been a revival of spiritual life and of earnest religious zeal, which good men of every communion are glad to see, and abuses and scandals which once prevailed dare not now face the light of day. In all the churches the worship has become brighter and more attractive; indeed the danger is lest spirituality should be sacrificed to æstheticism, and that the people should come to lay more stress in worship on what is pleasing to themselves than upon what is acceptable to God.

The questions of evolution and the literary structure of the Bible, which of recent years have agitated the mind of the religious world, have well-nigh become adjusted to their true focus. As a result life and revelation have not become less sacred or wonderful, but more. The all-pervading reign of law is not felt by the truly devout to supersede the personality of a ruling mind, but to demand it all the more strenuously. The process of creation by development is even more wonderful than creation of special forms. As Charles Kingsley put it: "We knew of old that God was so wise that he could make all things; but behold he is so much wiser even than that that he can make all things make themselves."

The action of what has been called the higher criticism upon the various documents of the Old and New Testaments has, of course, variously influenced different orders of mind among our people. But what scare there may have been here and there is quietly passing away for the most part. It is felt that whatever is true will live, while mere hasty deductions will vanish as they came. Whatever may be the truth as to the mode of revelation, it is being increasingly felt that God has in very deed spoken to men, first in broken portions and at sundry times by prophet and seer, and now finally and completely by his own Son. No literary theories, no questions of mere authorship, can diminish the grandeur and spiritual majesty of that Christ who is the King of glory and everlasting Son of the Father. The Saviour is and ever must be the center of life and hope to a sin-stricken world. No light has yet shone on the great spiritual world brighter and clearer than that he gave, and his cross is still and ever must be for an ensign to the nations.

Love, the treasure worth possessing
More than all the world beside,
This shall be her choicest blessing,
Oft to royal hearts denied.
—Wordsworth, on the Queen.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S REIGN AND THE COMMON PEOPLE

BY EDWARD PORRITT

To students of English political institutions the pre-eminent fact of Queen Victoria's long reign is that her Majesty is the first sovereign who has not sought to exercise an undue and unconstitutional influence on the House of Commons, but has stood apart from Parliament in the exalted place to which the sovereign is assigned by the constitution. To many people this may seem a remarkable statement. They have read, or they have been told, that the government of England has for centuries past consisted of the Crown, the House of Lords and the House of Commons, and that the House of Commons represented the people. This is so today, but up to the eve of Queen Victoria's reign it was so only in theory, and her Majesty's predecessors back to the days of Henry VIII., if not to a much earlier period, occupied a vastly different position towards the House of Commons to that occupied by Queen Victoria.

Almost as soon as the House of Commons came into existence the sovereigns began to seek to possess and to exercise a power over it contrary to the constitution. They interfered in parliamentary elections, and practiced the devious arts of political bosses, in order that they might have groups or parties in the House of Commons prepared to do their bidding. From the reformation it is easy to trace this manipulation of the House of Commons by the sovereign. It went on increasingly during the time of the Stuarts, and, in spite of a resettlement at the Revolution, held to be in the interests of popular liberty, William III. was soon an adept at electioneering and at manipulating the House of Commons.

After the union with Scotland it was easier than ever to manipulate the House of Commons and override the popular will, because the members from Scotland were usually a purchasable element. The system of unconstitutional control of the popular chamber was at its worst during the long reign of George III. He was the greatest election manager, the greatest political boss ever on the throne of England, and while he was king the House of Commons represented the people less than at any other period. His unconstitutional hold upon the House of Commons was greater than that of any of his predecessors, and for a while, as students of the American Revolution are aware, the king was absolute. With the help of the Scotch members, and through the woefully corrupt state of the English electoral system, George III. was supreme in Parliament, and in England there was none to say him nay.

George IV. and William IV. were not continuously active, as George III. had been, in seeking to control the House of Commons. They left this work to ministers, who continued it nearly up to the time when the queen came to the throne. George IV. and William IV. did, however, take some part in the unconstitutional proceedings; they were fully cognizant of all of them. Queen Victoria's reign then must always stand out in English history as the reign in which the common people once more came into possession of their own. As regards the parliamentary and the municipal franchises, the common people are now again in the possession of political rights and privileges which were theirs from the fourteenth century, and out of which they were gradually cheated, largely owing to the fact that it suited the purposes of successive sovereigns to exercise unconstitutional control over that branch of the legislature to which the people's representatives were sent.

The restoration of the common people to their old constitutional rights began when the queen came to the throne, went on slowly and intermittently and stopped only in 1894, when the Gladstone Rosebery government carried the measure establishing parish and district councils. The movement began as far back as the days of Pym and Hampden. It was attended with some measure of success at the time of the Commonwealth, but at the restoration what little had been gained under Cromwell was lost, and the old agitation for popular electoral franchises had to be begun over again. For a while it made no headway. The forces were too strong for it. At the time of the American Revolution, however, it was moving slowly forward. But before the movement could successfully assert itself there came the French Revolution, which set it back another half-century; so that it was 1832, only five years before the queen came to the throne, before the movement, begun in the early years of the seventeenth century, passed its first legislative milestone.

This success, important as it was, was only partial. The reform act of 1832 enfranchised only the middle classes. It gave parliamentary votes to the larger tenant farmers in rural England, and in urban England it enfranchised the people of the professional and trading classes. When Queen Victoria began her reign the common people had no larger share in political life than they had at the time of the American Revolution. They were agitating for a share when the queen came to the throne, for they had soon discovered that the reform act of 1832 had done nothing directly for them. Just thirty years, however, were to elapse before the movement for the restoration of the political rights of the common people was to pass the second parliamentary milestone. This success was achieved in 1867, when the franchise was conferred on householders in the large towns, and when for the first time for four centuries the common people became a political power. But the act of 1867, like the act of 1832, had its shortcomings. It left out the working people of rural England, and not until 1884 were they put into possession of the parliamentary franchise and placed on a level of political equality with the work people of the towns. Thus Queen Victoria was on the eve of celebrating the jubilee of 1887 before the movement for parliamentary reform, begun two and a half centuries ago, had achieved a complete and final success. The reform acts of 1867 and 1884 and the local government acts of 1888 and 1894 have all been achieved during this reign, and in themselves must make the reign memorable in the political, industrial and social history of England.

These acts never came alone. Each was followed by other measures for the common people. The act of 1832, the great turning point of modern English history, was followed by the reform of the poor laws and of municipal government. That of 1867 was followed by the elementary education act of 1870 and by a long series of measures in the interest of trade unions and of the working classes generally, while that of 1884 was followed by the county government act and the parish and district councils act, which have placed local government in every corner of England on a democratic basis. It has been stated that all these reforms only restore to the people of England rights and privileges which they possessed centuries ago. That is so. But there has been more than a restoration. England today is more democratic than she was before the corruption of the House of Commons and the municipalities began in the middle ages. Then England had generally a household franchise for municipal and parliamentary government. Today the electoral system comes near to manhood suffrage, and women, although without the parliamentary franchise, possess other political franchises and rights withheld entirely in the middle ages.

The possession by the common people of these privileges has told and is telling enormously on English life. The development of the municipal spirit, in itself an outstanding feature of Queen Victoria's reign, dates not much further back than the early seventies, when the working classes in the towns were beginning to exercise the parliamentary franchise and to feel that at last they were possessed of political power. Since then, too, Parliament has given continuous attention to labor questions. At first the movement in this direction was slow. It was greatly accelerated by the reform act of 1884, and since then there has hardly been a session of Parliament in which some measure has not been passed in the interest of the working classes. Nor is this interest any longer confined to one political party. The movement goes on whether a Liberal or a Conservative government is in power. Adequate proof of this is forthcoming in the present session of Parliament, in which the principal government measure establishes a general system of compensation for men or women who are killed or injured by accidents while at work.

The jubilee rejoicings will not be confined to any class; but no part of the nation has greater reason to survey the reign with satisfaction and pleasure than the middle and working classes, for they, more than any others, have profited by the political, social and economic changes by which the reign has been so gloriously marked.

In and Around Chicago

College Commencements

Sunday was a great day for baccalaureate sermons and special addresses to students in the colleges and universities in which the region contributory to the growth of Chicago takes an interest. The address at the University of Illinois at Champaign, given by Pres. Andrew S. Draper, was on The Law of Equipoise. Its chief thought was that that life is the highest, will reach the farthest and accomplish the most which obeys the laws of the Almighty and stands in harmonious relations with the universal plan. Dr. Caspar Hiatt of Peoria spoke to the graduating class of Knox College, his subject being the treasure stored in heaven and made evident in deeds done in love. Knox has been prospered the past year and sends out a class of fifty-six. President Finley urged the Seniors to make their characters as symmetrical in proportion and as beautiful as the New Jerusalem represented by John in the Apocalypse. Prof. W. D. McKenzie, at Jacksonville, emphasized the thought that Christianity occupies the middle ground between optimism and pessimism. The great event for Illinois College was the dedication, Monday, of the Jones Memorial Building, which will serve for a library and chapel building for many years to come. It is both elegant and convenient. Dr. H. K. Jones, who has furnished the money for its erection, is an old resident of Jacksonville, who, in addition to his practice, has found time to study Plato with as much thoroughness as any man in the country. Although seventy-eight, he is still vigorous and as full of interest as ever in the welfare of young men. Dr. N. D. Hillis preached the baccalaureate at the University of Iowa, and took for his subject the tendency of all things to move upward. Bishop Vincent was at De Pauw University, Greencastle, Ind. The graduating exercises of Ferry Hall, Lake Forest, took place Wednesday June 10, the prominent feature being an address by Dr. J. L. Withrow.

Ministers' Meeting

The subject discussed was the rights of children or the laws which should be followed in their religious instruction. The paper by Rev. Sidney Strong was instructive and thorough. The interest in the subject was universal. Evidently Chicago pastors are not indifferent to the demands which the children in their parishes are making upon them. Rev. Mr. Gulick of Japan spoke briefly and gave high testimony to the work of such men as Colonel Davis, formerly of the Doshisha. He says that Japan needs the gospel as never before; there is a growing desire to hear it.

Dr. Barrows and the Y. M. C. A.

The Y. M. C. A. for several weeks has secured leading ministers to lecture on some attractive topic at the noon hour, Monday, and in this way has drawn large audiences. Last Monday Dr. Barrows gave a lecture on what he had learned about Christianity in India. His previous testimony to the fact that India's only hope is Christianity was repeated, although the excellencies of Hinduism were not overlooked. He said that Christianity is making giant strides in India, and although its triumph may not come immediately it is surely destined to conquer the land. Next Monday ministers of all denominations will unite to give him a reception.

The Election

The election, Monday, of judges for the Supreme Court and the lower courts was one of the most important of the year. The nonpartisan ticket triumphed by a very large majority. This may be considered a Republican victory, inasmuch as the Democrats, under the lead of Mayor Harrison, put up a partisan ticket and did all they could to elect it. Throughout the State the principle prevailed that men who had served well should be reelected and that questions of politics should not be considered. There is great relief over the fact that our legislature has adjourned, and still so many important matters have been neglected that it seems almost certain that a special session will be called.

The Case of Dr. C. O. Brown

As was anticipated, Dr. Brown was received as a member of the Chicago Association at its adjourned meeting, Monday afternoon, June 7. The attendance was large, though there were some notable absences. The First Church was not represented in the final vote. Its pastor, Dr. Goodwin, though chairman of the committee, was unable to be present or even to give any attention to the subject which had been intrusted to him. Mr. E. D. Redington of the Evanston church took his place. Plymouth and New England Churches were not represented, Union Park Church only by its pastor, and the seminary by a single individual. The smaller churches were well represented. It was evident from the first that the younger members of the association were fully in sympathy with Dr. Brown, and that nothing would prevent them from voting to receive him. It should be said, in justice to those who voted against his admission, that there was no desire on their part to do him any injustice, or to burden him with continued delays, or to compel him to submit to a new trial. They felt that, in justice to himself, he should defer his request for admission till the matters in dispute between himself and the Bay Conference could be settled. What ought to pass for the majority report, although unfortunately the committee was equally divided, two being for immediate admission and two for delay, was read by Mr. Redington and signed by himself and Dr. Willard Scott. It advised the calling of a mutual council by the Bay Conference and Dr. Brown, to be held in or near Chicago, to which the question of the legality of the action of the Bay Conference in suspending Dr. Brown from the ministry should be submitted. To Dr. Scott and Mr. Redington the answers from the conference in reference to this proposal seemed satisfactory, to Dr. Waterman and Mr. Blanchard they did not. Consequently they presented a long report in which the action of the council in San Francisco acquitting Dr. Brown was considered, the illegality (so asserted) of the Bay Conference in suspending Dr. Brown after this acquittal demonstrated, and the action of the Dubuque Association in receiving him to fellowship defended.

Several addresses advocating immediate reception followed the presentation of this report. Dr. Scott and Mr. Redington were allowed to answer them, which they did briefly, and fortified their position with what seemed to them and to the minority very strong arguments for delay and the calling of a council, but so determined were many that the minority should not be heard that a substitute for the questions before the house was presented, recommending immediate admission, the previous question called for and carried. Further resistance was out of the question. The vote was taken by ayes and nays and stood eighty-nine to twenty-five, a few declining to vote. The majority took the ground that, having been acquitted by a council which sat upon the case over a month, Dr. Brown was unjustly suspended by the Bay Conference, and that no other association is bound to consider its action as legal, and that therefore the letter from the Dubuque Association should be received just as if its bearer were not under suspension. The minority felt that Dr. Brown, having joined the Bay Conference and having been suspended by it, was bound by all the precedents of our ecclesiastical history to submit to this suspension until he could show, either by a mutual or by an ex parte council, that he had been unjustly treated, that, therefore, the action of the Dubuque Association in receiving him was irregular and gave him no standing whatever, and that his reception by the Chicago Association could give him nothing in addition to that which the reception by the Dubuque Association had given him. The minority does not feel that the Chicago Association could in courtesy to the Bay Conference receive Dr. Brown in the present circumstances into its fellowship, and that in doing so it has done Dr. Brown an injury which a council would have rendered impossible.

Monopolistic Legislation

By the signature of the governor the Yerkes-Allen Bill has become a law. It was the successor of the notorious Humphrey Bill, which seemed to take away from our cities the privilege of home rule, and which roused such opposition that it was speedily withdrawn. The Allen Bill claims to put all the power of control of street railways, to which it alone relates, into the hands of local authorities, and in this respect is free from the objections made to the former bill. It gives these local authorities the privilege of granting a franchise for fifty years, or so much shorter time as may seem to them desirable. It fixes the fare during the lifetime of the present franchises at five cents, grants the authorities the power to fix a five-cent fare for twenty years thereafter, and requires them to readjust the fares at the end of that period for twenty years more. It provides for the protection of property owners, requires ten days' notice to be given of the intention to petition for a franchise, but seems to make no provision, as the Humphrey Bill did, for the payment of any portion of the earnings of the roads into the city treasuries. Great pressure was brought to bear upon the governor to prevent his signing the bill. He declares that he signed it, after careful consideration, because he deemed it a wise measure and in no way injurious to local interests. For cities, towns and villages the local councils have the entire control of the franchises asked for; for country roads and public grounds the authority is lodged with the county boards. Men of the highest standing are bitter in their denunciation of the measure and of the governor for permitting it to become a law, while others equally reputable see in it nothing objectionable. Possibly, had the opposition to it been made a little more wisely, and by some other person than Alderman Harlan, who sometimes is rather too emphatic in his language even when on the right side, the result might have been different. The discussion of this bill and of the consolidated gas bill, which also has been made a law, will do good in opening the eyes of the people to the value of the franchises which common councils control, and in leading them to nominate men who can be trusted to represent them, not only in the council but in the legislature. The chief objection to the bill is the favor it seems to give to corporations.

Fifty Years of Journalism

June 10 completed fifty years in the journalistic life of the Chicago Tribune. The event was celebrated by an issue in colors, with illustrations covering the history of the half-century, a carefully written account of the struggles through which the paper has passed to its present commanding position at the head of the journalism of the West, as well as of the men who have been employed on the paper, and of those who have been prominent in the history of Chicago. The issue is one which lovers of enterprise will be interested in reading. We cannot refrain from extending hearty congratulations to a paper which, old as it is, is a good many years our junior.

Chicago, June 12. FRANKLIN.

The Home

FEET OF CLAY

I burned my heart as incense night and day
Before a shrine where scorners turned away.
Upward I gazed, and only cared to see
The glorious face that showed a god to me.
I kissed the garment's hem
That swept about the feet and covered them.
But hands unhallowed tore the robe aside.
"Behold thine idol!" mocking voices cried;
"He whose wingèd flight thy blind embrace would stay
Hath feet—ah, hear!—of clay!"

Pass, bitter hearts! the smile of scorn is mine;
The worship his, whom still I deem divine.
What if the touch of earth, its base desires,
Its dross unpurified in passion's fires,
Cling to the feet I kiss?
O light were love to forfeit faith for this!
What loss were his, what woeful gain were mine,
If from that sun-and-star-illumined shrine
One heart's poor candle I should take away—
I, who am all of clay?

Haply our homage had not seemed so dear,
Haply he had not sought a temple here,
Nor in his service had I known such joy,
But for the mingling of that earth alloy!
O soul that woke for him,
What larger hope hath lit thy prison dim!
May I not rise from these unquickened clods
To claim eternal kinship with the gods?
To godlike stature grow, though bearing—yea,
Like him—the print of clay?

—Louise Betts Edwards.

What could be more suggestive of the social and legal position of English women when Victoria ascended the throne than these words of Macaulay's, written early in the reign: "If there is a word of truth in history, women have always been and still are playthings, captives and beasts of burden." In those days woman's position was one of more or less honorable servitude, and her place was almost entirely dependent upon her agreeableness and usefulness to man. But in two generations there has been a greater advance than in centuries preceding. The legal subordination of one sex is gone. There is now almost nothing that an English woman may not do. She is enfranchised municipally and welcomed to sit with men on most administrative boards. She is practically on an equality with man in the university and the hospital, in business and on the platform, on the street and in outdoor sports. As the higher position of woman is a proof of progress in the state, so also is the increasing regard for little children. During the Victorian era they have been rescued from slavery in mines and factories and provided with schools, playgrounds and wholesome literature.

Queen Victoria has gained the love of her subjects and the admiration of all the world largely by virtue of her true and gracious womanhood. Her influence upon public affairs has been none the less powerful because hidden under the reserve befitting her position, but her power over the sympathy and imagination of the public has largely arisen from the dignity and purity of her life in the ordinary family and social relations. We like best to think of her as mother and friend to all her people, and, indeed, few monarchs have given so much reason for affection and confidence, in not even fearing frankly to share with them in published journals the recollections of her own private joys and griefs. A writer in Blackwood's declares that her name, her influence, her character, her unique and great personality have had an almost incalculable part in reviving the old passion of loyalty in Great Britain. "The tie is warmer, softer, between her and her peoples than ever is woven between man and man," he says. "A sense of motherhood steals into the relationship. The queen is a monarch and more. 'We are the children of one mother' is the meaning of the shout that will go around the whole earth on the approaching day of triumph."

In these days, when religious societies are so numerous and varied that children hardly emerge from babyhood before they are enlisted in a mission band, Junior Endeavor or other organization, there is danger that our young people will forget their responsibilities as individuals. Getting up missionary teas, serving on committees and taking part in prayer meetings will not make up for the neglect of uninteresting home duties or for crossness and selfishness in the family circle. No doubt the Master is pleased with the service rendered him by these societies organized in his name, but unless the members can work for him just as faithfully without the stimulus of these organizations they are not serving him in spirit and in truth. When a girl is so absorbed in outside work that she has no time to help her mother or to interest herself in the welfare of her brothers and sisters, then it is time for her to consider that she was a member of the home before she was of the society and that her duties to her own family are of the first importance. Surely all our young people's societies ought to recognize the fact that their place is only a secondary one.

OUR COLLEGE GIRLS

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A great, influential and, on the whole, earnest and conscientious body of young women, our college girls, leave their four years of training behind them and enter on a course of work which distinctly affects society for the better. Few of the graduates of our higher institutions have failed to receive an impulse toward future, and often toward strenuous, work during their period of study. Before their diplomas were even in sight they were selecting professions on which they hoped to enter and, as best they could, were laying foundations for the years of their independent maturity.

In a host of cases the girl's first duty to the home which has sent her to college, and to the parents whose self-denials have kept her there, is to become self-supporting. Not so much as some would imply is it a desire for a career, or simply a wish to satisfy personal ambition, which induces girls to enter at once the ranks of the breadwinners. They are simply doing the obvious thing and the right thing when they besiege the professions or enter a business life, or bring to bear in any legitimate field the disciplined intellectual powers which the college training has given them as its best endowment.

A merely superficial and sentimental view is often taken by persons who do not stop to think or who are ill informed. "Susie or Rebecca," they say, "should now stay quietly at home and help her poor mother." Why poor, pray? If her mother is a capable woman of middle age, as in nine out of ten cases she is, she may enjoy her daughter's society, but beyond that she does not need her nor is she willing to resign her housekeeping cares into the younger hands. Of course Susie might do a maid's work and save a maid's wages, but that is rather poor economy when Susie's earnings might easily be enough to pay those of a dozen maids. Why should not Susie lay something up for herself, add something to the family exchequer, help to send a sister or a brother to college, and above and beyond this have the feeling that she is employed in the great army of the world's workers.

I have great faith in the simple common sense and the Christian dignity and balance of the average college girl. I do not doubt that when and where she is wanted there she will be. If the home people do need her presence, her loving, daily ministries, her strong hand under their feeble shoulders, she will resign cheerfully all other plans and stay where Providence appoints her place.

In such a case her years of study and her intercourse with clever and cultivated minds will be far from wasted. One can order a household better for an acquaintance with geometry. A familiar friendship with Browning or Tennyson will hurt nobody's bread or cake. In any subsequent rôle—from that of amateur nurse or trained attendant on the sick to that of astronomer or professor or surgeon, from the most obscure to the most conspicuous field of service—the training of a good college will prove itself a decided advantage and help.

As for the happy girls who will marry early, and some of them certainly will, their husbands and their homes will receive great benefit from the mingled drudgery and delight of the years in cap and gown. An educated man needs a comrade, open-eyed, candid, lovingly critical, as well as a wife subservient to his every wish. Rather he does not want a too subservient wife, though sweetly serviceable she may be. Comradeship in marriage insures its highest happiness and its mutual and reciprocal good. Our college women as wives shine from their homes like candles which shed golden light far afield. They are at our mission stations, in our parsonages, in stately and in lowly homes, for they are too self-respecting to wed for any but sacredly pure and unmercenary reasons.

The college training thus far has touched home life like a benediction, elevating and broadening it, giving it a flavor of new interest and proving, if proof were required, that the thoroughly educated woman fits well into whatever worthy sphere may beckon her. She is more practical, not less so, in her conduct of affairs because her mind has been made facile by dealing with studies and problems involving thought and reasoning. As a wife, as a mother, as a friend, as a member of society, the woman who went to college in her girlhood will equal, if she do not surpass, her acquaintance whose school life was abridged.

Physically our college girls compare more than favorably with any other set of young women of the same or an approximate age. They have healthy bodies and good appetites, they take regular exercise and have more outdoor life than the farmer's daughter thinks essential. They have pure air to breathe, as the city girl has not always. They are aware of the need of perfect bodily health, if the mind is to receive and assimilate as it should, and they live according to hygienic rules.

The religious life in our women's colleges might, perhaps, be more pronounced than it is. The atmosphere is favorable to piety and sympathetic with spiritual growth, and in no college with which I have acquaintance is there any influence inimical to the culture of the soul or opposed to true religion.

THE GENTLE SIDE OF THE IRON CHANCELLOR

BY JANET SANDERSON

The nineteenth century was still young when the child, Otto Edward Leopold von Bismarck, destined to make a greater figure on its stage of action than any of his contemporaries, was born in an old family mansion in the village of Schönhausen. In his youth he was called by all his comrades and neighbors "Mad Bismarck." He was of robust physique, tall of stature and stalwart of frame. As a student at Göttingen he got himself up in the traditional long boots, velvet jacket and saucer cap, he flaunted the colors of his club, he sported a pipe a yard long and led about a ferocious mastiff, he reveled, he drank in time honored German style and fought duels. He did nothing by halves, and when he studied he did so with an absorbing energy and intentness.

But gay and effervescent as he was he had his serious and reflective side, and was now and then plunged into gloomy fits of melancholy. Even in youth he had ideas and hopes that Germany might be united, and boasted that he would be the saviour of his country by making it a great and powerful empire. The fellow-student whose company he most courted was the genial young American, Motley, with whom he formed a friendship that was to last through life. Bismarck furnished an interesting account of the origin of this acquaintance to Motley's biographer, Oliver Wendell Holmes.

After student days he occupied his first years of manhood by managing his father's property, and the story goes he led a life not exactly like that of a hermit. His neighbors said his consumption of champagne was phenomenal. He raced about the country on horseback during the night, and often frightened the whole neighborhood who, hearing numberless pistol shots fired in quick succession, roused up to learn it was simply the young squire amusing himself. He never made any secret of his having lived this unsteady life, but, on the other hand, he never boasted of it.

When the young man found himself in love he captured his dear Johanna in the same intense manner in which in later days he captured kingdoms. In 1846 Bismarck took a journey in the Harz country with a family of friends. In the party was Fräulein Johanna von Puttkammer, with whom Bismarck had become enamored some time before at a wedding. On his return from this trip he wrote to Johanna's parents, with whom he had no acquaintance, and demanded their daughter in marriage. The simple folk were naturally surprised at such a proposal and were rather frightened in view of the reputation which the candidate enjoyed, but as Johanna did not look upon the young gentleman unfavorably, and as she saw in him the making of a great man, they yielded to her entreaties and invited him to visit them. He came immediately and as he alighted threw his arms around the maiden, who stood with eyes modestly bent upon the ground, and embraced her vigorously before anybody had time to tell him that his conduct was improper. In July, 1847, they were married. Bismarck is very fond of telling this story, always adding, "And you have no idea what this lady has made of me."

The home life of the great chancellor has been truly delightful. He has many fine estates—one at Schönhausen, another at Friedrichsruh and in his later life at Varzin—while the Berlin home in Wilhelm Strasse is familiar to many Americans. His Johanna always arranged comfort for him. He was fond of passing the evenings in the bosom of his family, where he forgot about the cares and annoyances of public life listening to the sonatas of Beethoven and other favorite composers. His friends were always welcome and went away refreshed in heart and mind by the atmosphere of peace and cheerfulness. Perhaps nothing can give a better idea of this home life than a letter of Motley written when he was in Europe pursuing his historical studies. He says: "The Bismarcks are as kind as ever. It is one of those houses where every one does what one likes. The show apartments where they receive formal company are on the front of the house. Their living rooms, however, are a salon and dining-room at the back, opening upon the garden. Here there are young and old, grandparents and children and dogs all at once; eating, drinking, smoking, piano-playing and pistol-firing (in the garden) all going on at the same time."

BISMARCK AT THE AGE OF NINETEEN

The chancellor succeeded in educating his two sons, Herbert and William, so skillfully in diplomatic affairs that they became his most useful colleagues. He never confided his state secrets to any but members of his own family, in whose devotion and discretion he could put implicit trust. His daughter Marie, the Countess von Rantzau, possesses an intelligence of the first order, and has had a thorough diplomatic education. In the matter of writing and reading cipher dispatches she reached a degree of cleverness surpassing any of the employés at the Foreign Office. She has a lively disposition, is witty and prompt at repartee, and it is told that even in Bismarck's moments of gloom and melancholy he has never been able to refrain from laughing at his daughter's flashes of wit.

The prince's whims have always been indulged by his family. One of them is to try the weight and measure the hight of persons staying at Friedrichsruh. In pursuance of this caprice one New Year's Eve he made all his family pass under the measuring-rod, and superintended the operation himself to see that no one cheated. As each was measured he wrote down the hight on one of his bedroom doorposts. By the side of these figures he made a note saying that his "dear Johanna tiptoed a little."

Johanna is described as the model of a practical, methodical German matron, who has an eye for every detail of household arrangement and economy and a heart for the well-being of each housemate from the highest to the lowest. She loves Bismarck with her whole heart, and once remarked: "That my husband is a public character is a fact to which I often find it painful enough to resign myself, but as for me, his wife, what have I to do with publicity? I do not exist for that, but wholly and solely for him."

This great man, who bowed his will to none, yielded with grace and often with humor to her wishes. When an excursion to the seaside was projected he said: "I have held out against it for a long time, but as all the mothers and aunts are unanimous in declaring that nothing but sea air and sea water can do our Mariechen any good, I know that if I refuse every cold in the head which may befall her to the seventieth year of her age will be set down to my avarice and paternal barbarity," and later he said: "Yesterday I was reduced to such a state of despair by all these plannings that I determined to give up the whole journey, and I went to bed with the firm resolution, at all events, to travel straight through without stopping anywhere on the way. But Johanna attacked me in the night with the youngster in her arms, and by dint of all the arts which drove man out of paradise she, of course, gained her point, and the original scheme is to be carried out."

When absent from home he sent her tender, loving letters, and we get a glimpse of his thought for her when at Biarritz he wrote: "I have a bad conscience because I am seeing so much that is beautiful without you, my dear."

That the princess sometimes yearned for the country quiet of her early married life we cannot doubt, for once at a dinner, when repeatedly called "Excellency," she said: "I beg you will not call me 'Excellency.' I like best to be called 'Frau von Bismarck.' That brings back the sweet remembrance of a quiet, gladsome time when Otto and myself, as simple, rural gentry on the banks of the Elbe in our fine old Schönhausen, had leisure to live for each other and for our village folks, but now my husband belongs to all the world." Bismarck, on hearing her express such sentiments, said, "My dear, those good old times will come back again, God willing, when we grow old and the world can make no further use of us."

Bismarck's character presents the most striking contrasts. In public he is the cold, imperative dictator, but in his family he is simple, frank and domestic. Every one stands in awe of him but his wife, children and dogs. Although he is called the "Iron Chancellor" and all the world knows how he has ruled Germany with a rod of iron, which has also proved a rod of wisdom, yet by the sweet influence of woman's love he has conquered his own heart and become the loving, devoted husband, father and friend. It has been said: "Prince Bismarck has a way of taking hearts by storm; the princess has a way of gently winning them. He is the German knight and hero, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot; she the German lady, full of grace and amiability."

A QUEEN YET A WOMAN

The most tender and appreciative word about the queen's personality which we have seen in the current magazines is by Mrs. Oliphant in Good Words. This picture of the aged monarch is most human and touching.

The queen has not been exempted by her high estate from any of those blows to which we are all subject. She has had the sound health of a vigorous constitution, which is, however, by no means exempt from many personal sufferings, though it gives strength to bear them without complaining; and now that she has reached her sixty years of rule, that strength enables her to overcome many infirmities whenever duty calls, but does not the less make these infirmities very real, and not smaller, perhaps greater, than those which usually accompany her age. We are too apt to forget that this is the case, that the queen is not one of those exceptional persons who see their eightieth year approach with eyes undimmed and feet almost as light as ever. We have all known individuals like this, as light of limb and easy in possession of every bodily faculty as they were thirty or forty years before. And very few remember that this is not the case with the queen.

The lengthened round which we are all so delighted to see her undertake to please her people will be no holiday promenade for her Majesty. It will involve great fatigue, a serious trial of strength and patience, and an actual personal sacrifice of a kind which few of her age care to make. Her people, for whom she undertakes so great an exertion, ought to know this in order to estimate at its full cost to her the effort the queen makes to do them pleasure. It ought to be all the more profoundly appreciated by those for whom it is made. What to her are the plaudits of the crowd? Her honor, her praise cannot be increased. They are set high beyond any popular utterance, known to all the world.

What the queen now does is purely and simply to carry pleasure to the masses, to make a bright day, a pageant splendid and beautiful for their enjoyment; it is an offering of kindness on her part to the least of her people. "Come and see," she seems to say, "O my poorest ones, who see so little! Come and see our soldiers, our princes who are yours and mine, and all that is gay and fair around them; come and hear the music, which is a delight to both of us. Come and say good morrow to your old queen, who so often when she too was young and fair sent her greetings to you. Come and thank God for me that I have lived and reigned so long and helped to do something for you, and, women, from you at least I know that amid your thanksgiving there will sometimes fall a tear."

And well may that be so; amid the cheers and shouts many eyes will gush full of water to think of all that has been and will be no more. It is not an easy thing to grow old; the path is marked by more than milestones, by many a cross of anguish and green mound. If her Majesty carries a thankful heart with her to the great gates of St. Paul's under the sunshine, it can scarcely fail to be a sorrowful one too. Even in that close surrounding bodyguard of her own house and blood, two, nay, three are gone since last she made her offering of praise. And how many less known, less prominent, the friends of her maturity, the companions of her youth. If her heart should sink or her eyes fill, what wonder? They will not, we know, for it is her office to restrain emotion and maintain a royal calm. But we are glad to think that great sympathy loosens these cords, especially with women, and that throughout the multitude there will be tears as well as smiles, and shouts and a thunder of voices as great as the sea—for the queen.

Be sorry for her, O people! be glad for her! Her heart has never failed to throb for you; her voice has never been silent in your times of trouble. Remember how her own heart has bled, how many sorrows have come with the snows of nature. No unfeeling pageant is this, no glitter of outside splendor alone; but love that has wept and been widowed, that has mourned for children and lost friends, and now feels the grasshopper a burden, yet comes forth with blessing and greeting to say God save you, while we all cry, God bless her, our lifelong friend and sovereign!

CLOVER

Little masters, hat in hand,
Let me in your presence stand,
Till your silence solve for me
This your threefold mystery.

Tell me—for I long to know—
How, in darkness there below,
Was your fairy fabric spun,
Spread and fashioned, three in one.

Did your gossips gold and blue,
Sky and Sunshine, choose for you,
Ere your triple forms were seen,
Suited liveries of green?

Can ye—if ye dwelt indeed
Captives of a prison seed—
Like the Genie, once again
Get you back into the grain?

Little masters, may I stand
In your presence, hat in hand,
Waiting till you solve for me
This your threefold mystery?

—John B. Tabb.

ABOUT THE QUEEN

Oddly enough, neither the birth, baptism nor confirmation of Queen Victoria is a matter of official public record.

Victoria has more royal blood in her veins than any sovereign who ever sat upon the English throne. She traces her descent in an unbroken line from Egbert.

The queen has now no less than seventy living descendants. Seven of these are sons and daughters, thirty-three are grandchildren and thirty are great-grandchildren.

Before the royal marriage the queen was asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury if she wished the word "obey" omitted from the ceremony. "It is my wish," she replied, "to be married not as a queen but as a woman."

Many incidents are told to illustrate the simple and sensible way in which the Princess Victoria was brought up. Once in her youth when asked at Maidstone, where her mother stopped to change horses on a journey, what she wished for refreshments she replied, "A small piece of stale bread."

Only twice since the death of Prince Albert has the royal widow appeared in full state—once when a national thanksgiving day was observed, after the recovery of the Prince of Wales from a serious illness, and again on her jubilee in June, 1887.

Among the numerous portraits of Queen Victoria none are more interesting and historically suggestive than those which have appeared on the British postage stamps. The device printed on the first English adhesive stamp was the head of the young queen in profile. British conservatism and British loyalty are both manifested by the fact that this same youthful portrait is still the favorite.

An evidence of the youthful queen's tact and consideration was given in the letter of condolence she wrote after the death of William IV. to her newly widowed aunt. She addressed it not to the queen-dowager, but to "her Majesty, the queen." Some one called her attention to the irregularity, but Victoria answered that she would not be the first to remind Queen Adelaide that she was no longer queen.

England's monarch has as much sentiment in cherishing keepsakes as a young girl. It is said that everything in the queen's boudoir remains as it was arranged by the prince consort many years ago, and a conspicuous object, protected by glass, is the bouquet he presented to her on their wedding day. Victoria still wears a small enamel ring with a tiny diamond in the center, given her by Albert when, as a lad of seventeen, he first visited his pretty English cousin.

An amusing story is told about the Prince of Orange, one of the suitors for the hand of the maiden queen. After a period of indecision she finally dismissed him peremptorily. The ladies-in-waiting thought it a sign of relenting when she went to the window to take a last look at his retreating figure; but when, after gazing intently at his scarlet uniform surmounted with nodding green plumes, she exclaimed, "How like a radish he looks!" it was felt that his fate was sealed.

The religious instruction of her children the queen regarded as a sacred duty to be delegated to no one else. Of the little Princess Royal she wrote in a memorandum: "I am quite clear not only that she should have great reverence for God and religion, but that she should have the feeling of devotion and love which our Heavenly Father encourages his earthly children to have for him, and not one of fear and trembling; and that the thoughts of death and an after life should not be represented in an alarming and forbidding view, and that she should be made to know, as yet, no difference of creeds, and not think she can pray only on her knees, or that those who do not kneel are less fervent and devout in their prayers."

A BIG GAIN IN MORALS

An English writer, who as a child saw the coronation of Queen Victoria and has been for many years in public life, says that manners and morals in England have much improved during the last sixty years. Comparing the habits of forty years ago with those of today he writes:

I see improvements everywhere, with few exceptions. Men's morals, and certainly their language, have improved; excessive drinking has become unfashionable and almost unknown in the society of gentlemen; cigars and cigarettes have replaced the filthy habit of taking snuff; night caps and stuffy four-posters and sweltering feather beds have been replaced by fresh air and tubs; and electricity has snuffed out cotton-wicked candles and rid us of tinder-boxes, and may ere long rid us of gas. Everybody is clean, and it would be difficult to find a man or a woman in society who is not engaged in some good and useful work, or some endeavor to help others in the sorrows and struggles of life.

Closet and Altar

Power like character comes from the fountain of prayer.

God's Spirit falls on me as dew-drops on a rose,
If I but like a rose my heart to him unclose.
—Angelus Silesius.

George Fox, the Quaker, says that when he was first converted to faith in the divine love and went out into the fields the whole world around him glowed with new life. The skies were full of a divine presence, the air breathed a divine love. The birds in their songs seemed to say, "Let us praise God." The same spirit in the Hebrew Psalms calls on the hills to clap their hands, and the waters above and below to be thankful. So is nature transfigured by the soul and grows full of life. The earth becomes a Bible—the rocky strata its book of Genesis, the singing of the birds its book of Psalms, the air full of sunlight and fragrance its gospels, and the changing lights, the advancing hours, its book of Revelation, showing to us how God is all in all.—James Freeman Clarke.

Father it is enough! My full soul drank
Such a deep draught of beauty and delight
From this fair day, just fading into night,
How shall my lips thy goodness ever thank?
All is so fair; the clover-dappled bank,
The tendrilled branches drooping from the vine,
Through whose lapped leaves the glowing clusters shine;
The giants of the forests, rank on rank,
Into the misty distance far withdrawn;
And through them all, around, below, above,
Felt like a presence thy unchanging love.

If we cannot find God in your house and mine, upon the roadside or the margin of the sea, in the bursting seed or opening flower, in the day duty and the night musing, I do not think we should discern him any more in the grass of Eden or beneath the moonlight of Gethsemane.—James Martineau.

The fairest day that ever yet has shone
Will be when thou the day within shalt see;
The fairest rose that ever yet has blown,
When thou the flower thou lookest on shalt be.
—Jones Very.

O Lord, we thank thee for a day so sweet and fair as this, when the trees lift up their hands in a psalm of gratitude to thee, and every little flower that opens its cup and every wandering bird seem filled by thy spirit. We thank thee for the senses that take hold of the world of sight and touch and sound and are fed and beautified thereon. We praise thee for the spiritual powers which lay hold of justice and truth and love and faith in thee—these flowers of the soul, these imperishable stars of the human spirit. We thank thee that as thou feedest the grass by the roadside and every flower of the field with dew by night and rain by day, so thine inspiration falls upon the souls of thy children. Lord, what shall we render for the least of thy mercies to us? We pray that we may live as blameless as the flowers of the field; that our lives may be as fragrant within and as fair without, and that what is promise in our spring, what is blossom in our summer, may in the harvest of heaven bear fruit of everlasting life. Amen.

Tangles

[For the leisure hour recreation of old and young. Any reader who can contribute odd and curious enigmas, etc., of a novel and interesting kind is invited to do so, addressing the Puzzle Editor of The Congregationalist.]

54. ADDITION

On the "Notice" board at school one night,
The master chalked in characters great:
"A short ONE essay on Homer write—
The tenth exercise into French translate."

The boys all smiled, next day, at the call,
"The class in Greek will their essays read."
The first scarce touched the subject at all,
And the teacher frowned as he said, "Proceed."

The next one flowed in a trifling vein,
Made light of the great Greek poet's fame;
No weight had the third, yet so lofty his strain,
One hardly knew whether to praise or blame.

The fourth was rude and personal, too;
The master was liked to the mighty Greek.
Then his puzzled face like a dark cloud grew,
As he thundered, "What means this—can't you speak?"

They looked at the board; he turned his head,
And saw—but scarce could credit his sight—
That a prefix was added; the sentence read:
"A short TWO essay on Homer write."

E. E. C.

55. "ALL IN A GARDEN FAIR"

George likes historical and legendary plants. He has the flower that sprang up where Apollo killed his follower with a quoit (1), and the one that grew from the youth who died from admiration of his own beauty (2). There are the flowers of York (3) and Lancaster (4), of Bourbon (5), Bonaparte (6) and Hohenzollern (7).

Here is the flower with which girls tell their fortunes (8), and that by which fortunes were made and lost during a strange mania in Holland (9).

In a small pond floats the lily whose fruit brings forgetfulness of care (10), and on the bank is the plant used by St. Patrick to help his hearers understand the Trinity (11).

From the vegetable garden had crept in the plant a Welshman wears on St. David's Day (12), and near by was a fine specimen of that which once saved the Scottish army from surprise (13).

"It's handsome, but I can't have it here," said George, and grasping it boldly he uprooted the savage beauty.

"Nemo me impune lacessit!" he muttered—at least I hope it was nothing worse than that—as he wrapped his hand in his handkerchief, which he would have been wiser to do before the attack. M. C. S.

56. CHARADE

To the FIRST, one bitter day,
Rode my SECOND, proud and gay.
Sad at heart, I WHOLE in vain—
Never came he back again.

M.

57. A DROVER'S PROBLEM

In a stock-yard there are seven pens, each 30 by 27 feet, for cattle; eight pens, each 27 by 25 feet, for hogs; and eighteen pens, each 24 by 20 feet, for sheep. Allowing cattle each 21 square feet, hogs each 8 square feet and sheep each 4 1-2 square feet, how many of each will the yard contain? NILLOR.

58. ANAGRAM

Good Mayor Peter Podgers, not deeply learned was he,
But money he had plenty, and with it he was free;
So workmen and contractors, householders and their lodgers
Marched to the polls in order and cast their votes for Podgers.
They owned his education had been somewhat neglected,
But fortune—or misfortune—was close at hand to score him.
An alderman one evening a paper laid before him.
"Now, will your Honor sign it? The space is rather small;
Just put down your initials, we understand it all."
Said Podgers, quite bewildered, "Vernitials, what is them?"
"Why, just the two first letters, two P's, you know, ahem!"
A lucid explanation puts any one at ease.
The mayor nodded, smiling, and gravely wrote, "too pese."
"A true sign" of his Honor, but no one, wise or witty,
Would dare to criticise it; the mayor ruled the city.

M. C. S.

ANSWERS

50. 1. Chaucer. 2. Pope. 3. Bryant. 4. Shelley. 5. Thomson. 6 Wordsworth. 7. Spenser. 8. Cowper. 9. Burns. 10. Southey. 11. Scott. 12. Addison.

51. Crows, row, O. (Owe, naught.)

52. Well-a-day.

53. 300.

Recent solvers include: George N. Shepard, 47, 48, 49; Nillor, 46, 47; L. B. M., 46, 47, 48, 49; L. C. Droning, 47, 48, 49; H. R. Palmer, 46, 47, 48, 49; Mrs. F. W. Bush, 47, 49; M. M. S., 47, 48, 49; Cora E. Kellogg, 47, 49; Nancy C. Bunner, 46, 47, 48; E. La Mira Hayward, 47, 48, 49; H. E., 47, 48, 49; James R. Beede, 38; Pine Cone, 47, 48, 49; H. T., 46, 47, 48, 49; Walter C. Richards, 47, 49; C. A. S., 47, 48; Janie K. Holmes, 47, 49; and a hundred or more solvers of 47 alone.

The answers to 47 have varied considerably, the greatest difficulty encountered having been to find "islands of the Grecian Archipelago" suitable to roast. The correctness of the answers given has been determined on the authority of Lippincott's Gazetteer. Judged by this standard, the best lists have been found to be those of George N. Shepard, West Epping, N. H., who is awarded the first prize, and Mrs. F. M. Bostwick, Medina, O., who is given the second award. The youngest of the competing solvers is ten years, and a lady of eighty-one appears to be the oldest.

Tangle 57 looks easy. Yet we venture the information, although we may be exposing a secret, that the author believes that three solvers in every four at least will fail to get the correct answers at the first trial!

There is nothing about which we so deceive ourselves as about our sins. We don't feel sin as deeply as we ought. We don't feel sin as deeply as our mothers and fathers did in the good old days. Don't misunderstand me. A terrible sense of public iniquity is prevalent today. The sins of the community are denounced in a splendid way, but underneath this sensitiveness to public sins there is an insensibility to our own individual sins, out of which public sins grow.—Rev. Henry van Dyke.

May children of our children say,
"She wrought her people lasting good;
Her court was pure; her life serene;
God gave her peace; her land reposed;
A thousand claims to reverence closed
In her as Mother, Wife and Queen."
—Tennyson, To the Queen.

CLEVELANDS
PURE & SURE
400 Receipts Free
Send stamp and address. Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York
BAKING POWDER

The Conversation Corner

DEAR CHILDREN: I had arranged for a picture of a pig in this Corner, but I am afraid he might crowd out these letters from two little girls —and I don't believe they could keep their secret any longer!

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Dear Mr. Martin: The Congregationalist has been in my home ever since I can remember, and two of my grandmas have taken it for a long, long time. I enjoy reading the Conversation Corner very, very much. We all try to solve the questions. I wish to become a member, and may I not? My little friend, Marguerite E., wanted me to write you a letter with hers. This is all a secret between Marguerite and me, and nobody knows but ourselves. I wish you would print our letters so as to surprise our parents. One question before I close. What do you think our National Flower ought to be?

GERTRUDE N.

After all our rejoicing over the old Plymouth manuscript, I cannot change the preference expressed in the Corner when the subject was discussed a few years ago, that the beautiful little Mayflower which must have first greeted the eyes of our Pilgrim Fathers after their terrible winter of 1620-21 should be the National Flower. I know that it is not universal in our country, but is not this offset by its simple beauty, its fragrance, its inheriting the name of the Pilgrims' ship, its association with the Pilgrims' town, and the fact that the Pilgrim virtues have blossomed all over our wide land? Read Whittier's poem,

Sad Mayflower! watched by winter stars
  And nursed by winter gales,
With petals of the sleeted spars,
  And leaves of frozen sails—

and see if you do not think so too.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

I am a little girl eight years old. I go to school and like my teacher very much. I have four brothers. Their names are George, Daniel, Willie and Arthur. Arthur is the smallest. He is four years old. He has got the measles. All the rest of us have had the measles. My brother Daniel has got 8 chickens. We do not like cats very well for they catch our chickens. One hen is speckled. We call her speckle. The cats have caught 7 of her chickens. We have got a horse. His name is Charlie. This letter is a secret with Gertrude and me. Daniel and George want to see it but they can't. They don't know who I am writing to. Good bye.

MARGUERITE E.

P. S. I want to be a Cornerer.

Both girls are accepted as members of course, but I did not dare to send their certificates, until the letters were printed, lest Daniel and George should find out the great secret! Notice that I have omitted the name of the place, so that no one can guess who they are! I hope Daniel will be able to keep from the cruel cats Speckle's last surviving chicken. When it grows up it will be like the sole inmate of the farmer's henroost, about which he told his boy, "Now, Daniel, go and wake up the old speckled hen and count her, and then you can go to bed!"

Speaking about the Pilgrims and having the measles, here is a note from the grandmother of a new member, saying that . . . she and her sister are just getting over the measles. Elizabeth, who is six years old, says "measles are not much to have after you get over them"! She is a lineal descendant of Anne Hutchinson, of Priscilla Alden and also of Mary Chilton, who, I believe, is said to have been the first woman to step upon Plymouth Rock.

Yes, that has been "said" very many times, but without a bit of truth, for the shallop that started out on the exploring expedition from the Mayflower in Provincetown harbor had, according to Governor Bradford's manuscript, "10. of their principall men, & some sea men." There would have been no women in such a party, and not even John Alden or John Winslow, who married Mary Chilton, were among them—for the history gives the names. Here is the new Cornerer's letter (written before she had the measles):

PRAIRIE AVENUE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Dear Mr. Martin: I received your letter. Thank you for letting me be a cornerer. Yes, we have dogs, but we do not call them prairie dogs, but I hear people talk about having buffalo bugs, these are the nearest we come to having buffalo, so I think Prairie Ave. is a good name for our street. The ten cent piece is for Pomiuk.

MARY H.

Something had been said about the pleasant names of the streets in Providence, which I always noticed had a very kindly, friendly sound, as Benevolent Street, Benefit Street, Peace Street, etc. Here's another:

FRIENDSHIP ST., PROVIDENCE, R. I.

My Dear Mr. Martin: I am eleven years old and I want to join the Corner. I carry papers and have 7 customers and I earn 21 cents a week. I have three brothers younger than I am, one is 8, one is 3 and one is 1. I go to the Union Congregational Church, and I will send you one of the calendars.

HENRY B.

And the church is on Plenty Street! That is right—earn all you can, lay up a little of it every month, keep up in your studies—I shall look out for your name in a few years in the Freshman Class of Brown University!

The "ten cent piece for Pomiuk" reminds me of another inclosed in a letter from California, with a picture of an old-time minister settled in Edgartown, on Martha's Vineyard, for nearly fifty years, and before that a soldier at Concord and Bunker Hill and a chaplain in Washington's army. The letter says:

I saw in a newspaper that the old Thaxter house in Edgartown had lately been sold. I wish I had been able to buy it and give it to the town for a public library or something as a memorial of my grandfather. I am very much interested in the Conversation Corner, in Kitty Clover, the General and all the rest. The General appears to be quite highly educated, judging from his letter—it is said you can tell persons' character by their handwriting! [I do not know what the lady would say if she should see the pig's letter, spoken of in the beginning of this Corner!] How good it is to read about Dr. Grenfell, the Deep Sea Mission and Pomiuk. I send twenty cents for the Corner cat.

So I read it, but as Kitty Clover knew nothing of it, and neither he nor the General are objects of charity, I looked again and found it was meant for Corner Cot! One of the dimes looked remarkably bright and proved to be just out of the San Francisco mint, dated 1897. I put it in my pocketbook, thinking some lover of Pomiuk and of coins might like it.

The dime from the Pacific coast reminds me of several silver coins from the Black Sea. They are from a missionary, and are for the Armenian orphans. There are five of them—a medjidieh (twenty piastres), a ten piastre piece, a five, a two and a one piastre piece, and three thin, copper coins. Does any one want them? The lady writes:

Those that have holes in them or a ring on them have been used as ornaments. They are often hung from a baby's cap on the forehead, with the addition of one or two large blue beads, which are supposed to keep off "the evil eye," as in the United States one sees a horseshoe. The copper coins are ten paras, five paras, and the tiny one, one para. That could never have been in circulation. Years ago an old man got it for me as a curio.

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

The Florida Lady's Book. A day or two after her query a boy rode up on his bicycle from a neighboring town with this memorandum as an answer: "Original Poems for Infant Minds, by the Taylor Family, New York, 1862." Then another boy wrote:

In answer to the inquiry of "Lowell" in the Corner Scrap-book of May 20, I write to say that I have the book. It used to belong to my mother, but not long ago was found and given to me. Its name is "Original Poems for Infant Minds, written by Jane Taylor and her Sisters," C. S. Francis & Co., New York, 1857. "Meddlesome Mattie one ugly trick possessed"—meddling. The poem goes on to the point that Mattie's grandmother went out of the room, leaving her spectacles and snuff-box. Matilda opened the snuff-box and the snuff blew into her face and hurt her eyes, so that she never meddled any more. The name of the one about "Marianna and Maria" was "The Good-natured Girls."

CHARLES R.

Then this came from Somersworth, N. H.:

Dear Mr. Martin: I am an old lady of seventy-five years, but delight to read the Corner page and always eager to read everything concerning Pomiuk and Dr. Grenfell's Deep Sea Mission. I own the book inquired for by the lady in Florida. It was a New Year's gift from my father when I was three years old. Its title is "Original Poems for Infant Minds," published by Munroe & Francis, 4 Cornhill, Boston, 1823.

MRS. W.

Then this from Beloit, Wis.:

Dear Mr. Martin: I think the "Florida Lady" has in mind "Original Poems for Infant Minds." When a child this was a favorite with an elder brother and myself. Mother purchased it in New York city, in connection with two volumes of Gallaudet's "Child's Book on the Soul." These books held a prominent place in our juvenile library, being read and reread, and much of the contents committed to memory. The book was an English collection. Many of them were signed "Jane Taylor," and some others, "Adelaide." My brother still keeps the thumb-worn book as a sacred relic of childhood days.

MRS. W.

Still another Mrs. W. writes the same in substance from Manchester, Vt. After a few such hints as these I looked on my upper shelf and there was my copy of "Original Poems, by the Taylor Family," which I had owned for forty years save one, but not having read it in my boyhood I had not remembered its contents! In it I find at once "The Apple Tree," beginning,

Old John had an apple-tree, healthy and green,
Which bore the best codlins that ever was seen,

and "The Wooden Doll and the Wax Doll," beginning,

There were two little friends, a charming little pair,
Brunette the brown, and Blanchidine, the fair.

Perhaps the most familiar of all the poems is "My Mother":

Who ran to help me when I fell,
And would some pretty story tell,
Or kiss the place to make it well?
My Mother.

But the lines about "Father William" are not in the book at all, and I have had a long search for them, finding at last they were written by Robert Southey—"The Old Man's Comforts, and how he gained them,"

'You are old, Father William,' the young man cried,
'The few locks which are left you are gray;
You are hale, Father William, a hearty old man,
Now tell me the reason, I pray.'

This may be found in Southey's Works, and in the Children's Garland (Cambridge, 1863). Perhaps the book in which the "Florida lady" found all the pieces was the one mentioned by Mrs. C. of Woodstock, Ct., viz., a little old reading-book, called "Easy Lessons, published in 1824." [I omit one paragraph in which Mr. Martin seems to claim that he and Dr. Grenfell are related to the author!—D. F.]

L. H. M

The Sunday School

LESSON FOR JUNE 27 REVIEW

BY SOPHIA C. STEDMAN

During the quarter our lessons have given us some delightful glimpses of the church in the second decade of its existence. We have seen Peter on an apostolic tour, exercising his miraculous gifts for the comfort of the "saints." We have met Dorcas, whose loving ministries to the poor and especially to widows endeared her to all and whose very name has become a synonym for benevolence. We have found the church in Jerusalem holding an all-night meeting to pray for Peter's deliverance from prison, and have sympathized with them in their rejoicing over his miraculous release, which at first seemed too good to be true. We have seen the converts at Antioch so loyal to their Lord and Saviour that they were called "Christians."

But our attention has been held not so much by the internal life of the church as by the extension of its work, the development of its doctrine and some characteristics of apostolic teaching.

1. Work extended. The work of the church, as outlined by the command of Christ, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was accepted heartily from the first. But it was only under the guidance of direct revelations and providential openings that the largeness of the commission was fully apprehended.

Peter, with his Jewish prejudices, would not have dared to preach Christ to the Roman centurion if the vision on the housetop had not prepared his mind and heart for the work. And had not the descent of the Holy Spirit set the seal of God's approval upon it, the step might and probably would have been condemned by the other apostles. But while the influence of this event was doubtless felt in the reception of Greek converts into the church at Antioch, the work of carrying the knowledge of Christ to the Gentiles was not entered upon as a definite and systematic undertaking until that church was supernaturally called upon to set apart Barnabas and Saul for special evangelistic work, and then only after the Jews had rejected the message.

Thus naturally, but very gradually, a distinctive branch of the work of the church became missionary work.

2. Doctrine developed. With the expansion of the work of the church there was a corresponding enlargement of vision, and truth seen in its wider application crystallized in the statement of that fundamental doctrine of the Christian system—justification by faith.

The admission of Gentiles into the church upon equal terms with Jews occasioned the first serious difference of opinion.

Paul, although a "Pharisee of the Pharisees," was born and reared in Tarsus in an atmosphere of Greek culture and thought, and doubtless, in common with the western Jews, was more hospitable than those of Palestine toward new ideas and less slow than they to subordinate, or if needful even to surrender, traditional beliefs and practices. This fact both fitted him for the aggressive work to which he had been appointed and made him the natural leader of the progressive party.

Equally natural was the determined and bitter opposition of the conservatives, whose representatives went from Jerusalem to restrict the liberty of the Gentile Christians.

In the council whose decision settled this question in favor of the liberal party, it was Peter, the apostle to the Jews, who formulated the doctrine of free grace, and James the Just, the leader of the church in Jerusalem, a strict observer of the Jewish ceremonial, whose opinion was accepted as the judgment of the church.

Thus we see how the promise of our Saviour was fulfilled. The Comforter took of the things of Christ and showed them unto men of different temperaments and opinions, whose convictions were in part the result of environment, but whose hearts were loyal to truth. Their common sense, illumined and guided by inspiration, enabled them to see eye to eye and to discern, beneath the peculiar circumstances and the special question of that day, a great fundamental truth, and they came to a decision which placed Christianity before men as a universal religion, and which established for all time the principle of religious liberty, while it none the less magnified the law of love and recognized its universal application. Salvation by faith, faith working by love—these two phrases have thenceforth summarized the creed and the code of the Church of Christ.

3. Characteristics of teaching. This controversy, emphasizing as it did varying aspects of truth viewed by different men from different standpoints, might have resulted in a wide divergence in the teaching of that day. And as we examine and compare the instructions of the three men most influential in the apostolic church at this period, as they have come before us in our lessons, we naturally find the personality of each stamped upon both his spoken and his written words. Peter's addresses to Cornelius and before the council breathe the impulsive, earnest spirit of the man. James's words in the council, as well as his epistle, reflect his calm, upright, austere life. While Paul, whether speaking to Jew or Gentile, whether writing the weighty doctrinal epistle to the Romans or the personal letter to his "son" Timothy, is always the courteous gentleman, the great-hearted, fearless "apostle of faith."

But when we look below the surface, through style and manner to matter, we find an agreement in doctrine and general purpose quite remarkable when we consider the variety of subjects treated and the specific aim of each particular passage.

(a) Doctrine. While the teaching of Paul and Peter may be summed up in the familiar phrase "Jesus and the resurrection" all three agree in proclaiming a salvation for all mankind, free alike to Jew and Gentile. All teach that faith is essential to salvation. All insist that genuine faith must manifest itself in good works. All magnify the Scriptures by frequent references and quotations, for they were the source from which, in part, they drew their message and the standard by which they tested their own fidelity in its proclamation. And perhaps just here we touch upon one reason for the harmony of their teaching. Inspired by the same spirit, instructed by the same sacred writings, how could the message vary save as, in the wisdom of God, it was adapted by human agents to human needs?

(b) General purpose. If the unity of doctrine is apparent, the oneness of aim is even more marked. To Paul Christianity was more than a system of doctrine, to James it was more than a faultless morality. To them all it was a plant whose roots were faith, whose blossoms were professions and whose fruit was holiness—a life having its source and end in God. Therefore they became preachers of righteousness and their message was both strongly ethical and intensely spiritual. Sin was rebuked in no measured terms. Perfection was placed before men as their goal and love as the supreme motive. Minor differences were all forgotten in the overmastering desire to extend the kingdom of God, which is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic, June 20–26. God's Handiwork in Nature. Ps. 104.

His care of all. His delight in order and beauty. His authority.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

No one has yet discovered the word Jesus ought not to have said, none suggested the better word he might have said.—Ian Maclaren.

Enameline

Enameline
Manufactured by J. L. Prescott & Co.

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS, BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.

Try it on your Cycle Chain.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

ELECTRO-SILICON IS THE BEST SILVER POLISH

It's a True Sign

As the workman is known by his tools, so the housewife is known by her methods. Nearly a million brilliant housewives know the best method of cleaning Silverware. They use

SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH

Another million would if they knew its merits. We're looking for those who do not, are you one? If so, simply send us your address and you'll soon join the army of wise ones. It's unlike any other silver polish.

Trial quantity for the asking. Box postpaid 15 cts. in stamps. Grocers sell it.

The Electro Silicon Company, New York.

VAN CAMP'S PORK AND BEANS

Here's a Treat! There's no nicer summer meal than

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Delicious hot or cold. At grocers; send 6c for sample can or postal for free booklet.
Van Camp Packing Co.,
324 Kentucky Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

GRANŪLA

Our Home Granula Co., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

Originated by Dr. James C. Jackson, founder of the Jackson Sanatorium, Trial box 25c. Book with recipes FREE.

The Perfect Health Food

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

THE LITERARY HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Prof. Moses Coit Tyler, the author of this work, in this, the first, volume covers the thirteen years between 1763 and 1776. His purpose is to outline the spirit and feeling of the American people which brought about the war of the Revolution as they expressed themselves and exerted their influence in their literature. At that time we were not a nation, and the colonies contained comparatively few authors of general repute here at home, and still fewer whose writings received any attention abroad. It is necessary, therefore, for his purpose to consider the productions of men some of whom do not occupy a large place in history, although their influence at the time was deservedly great. Others of them, however, were truly famous, and will remain so, if only because of their connection with the accomplishment of American independence. The correspondence of the time, the state papers and the addresses, secular and religious, the political essays, the satires, the latter being often in verse, and the popular lyric poetry of the period are treated.

The importance of the influence of these classes of literature has not been overlooked in the past, and the power which they exerted often has been commented upon, but Professor Tyler discusses them with a somewhat keener historic sense and a more judicial balancing of values than has been common. He has not confined himself to the patriotic side, but very properly also has paid attention to Tory literature, doing justice to the conscientiousness and loyalty of many of the Tories, and making it possible for the modern reader to appreciate quite clearly the opposite states of mind which existed. Comparatively small attention is paid to legislative proceedings or to the maneuverings of statesmen and politicians, nor are military matters made prominent. The attention is fixed primarily upon the publications of the period covered, allusions to public affairs, of course, abounding therein, but seldom in the way of actual description. As the author puts it, he aims to afford a presentation of the soul rather than of the body of the American Revolution.

Among the authors whom he describes and whose work he outlines are James Otis, Oxenbridge Thatcher, Stephen Hopkins, "a gentleman at Halifax"—believed to be Martin Howe of Newport—Soame Jenyns, John Adams, Daniel Delaney, Jonathan Mayhew, Capt. Jonathan Carver, Maj. Robert Rogers, Francis Hopkinson, Philip Freneau, John Trumbull, John Dickinson, Arthur Lee, Jonathan Boucher, "The Westchester Farmer"—who was Rev. Samuel Seabury, afterwards bishop—Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Paine, William H. Drayton and Thomas Jefferson. This is a representative list, illustrating not only many different types of mind and methods of utterance, but opposite politics and both English and American points of view. We can only indicate the quality of the volume briefly. It is the fruit of wide research, thorough study, sympathetic yet controlled interest and skillful handling, and it accomplishes its purpose effectively. Personalities come to the front, but vivify without dominating the narrative. Quotations abound, but do not overweigh the book. The more important productions are analyzed fully, and the author's own comments are uniformly enlightening and helpful.

The spirit of the time, the gradual growth of patriotic and national feeling, the development of a purpose to become free, the ability illustrated in establishing the moral and political grounds whereon a conflict for independence might be based, and the ingenuity and at times the force of the arguments to the contrary all are set before the reader lucidly and instructively. In a word, the author has done his work in a masterly manner and has made a most important contribution to those works which are properly regarded as standards in relation to the history of our struggle for national freedom. A second volume soon will complete the task so well begun. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.]

RELIGIOUS

In The Open Mystery [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25] Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney has departed from her usual departments of authorship, the story and the poem, and has given her readers an interpretation of the Mosaic record. It is a careful, reverent, inspiring study of the beginning of the Biblical narrative, as we have it, and is suited to both the young and the mature. It is conservative, theologically, without being hidebound, and it follows the main lines of the Biblical narrative with the purpose of revealing afresh the divine meaning in the successive events and the practical lessons to be learned from them today. It comes down to the death of Moses and its portrayals of individual character are among its strong features. It aims to bring out the absolute unity which is at the heart of all truth, and looks at the actors in the solemn drama as far as possible from the point of view of their own time, dealing with them justly and not comparing them with the standards of our own day. But it also indicates the progress which has been made between their time and our own, suggesting how inadequate their standards of morals and religion would be for us. As a volume of interpretation, suggestion and inspiration it deserves to be read and reread, and cannot fail to exert a lasting and helpful influence.

The New Apologetic [Eaton & Mains. 85 cents] contains five lectures by Prof. M. S. Terry on True and False Methods of Meeting Modern Philosophical and Critical Attacks upon the Christian Religion. The first lecture is preparatory, and consists of definitions and a historical retrospect. The second deals with philosophical objections to Christianity and its defense. The third deals with the opposition from the literary-critical source, the fourth with the subject of comparative religion, and the last contains a positive argument for Christianity. The volume is clear, candid, logical and able.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Berger has written a history of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ [United Brethren Pub. House. $3.00]. It is more than a third of a century, during which period the work of this branch of the church has greatly developed, since an account of it has been issued and this history is the fruit of a resolution adopted by the General Conference in 1889. The author has written with the enthusiasm of a leader in the body and with the essential knowledge of its character and growth. He has outlined its history with sufficient fullness. The work is well proportioned and goes into details enough to render it serviceable as a work of reference, and it contains desirable statistical tables and a bibliography of denominational literature. It will take good rank at once among histories of its class and the Christian body which it describes will prize it highly.

A new Self Pronouncing Sunday School Teachers' Bible [A. J. Holman & Co. $4.00] is issued, following the text of the King James version and containing all the usual helps in the way of maps, tables, concordances, etc. Although the paper is thin and the type in the minor portions very small, it is exceedingly clear, and ordinary eyes will not find difficulty in reading most of it with ease. We notice no special features except the reduced price, which we commend. It is a handsome volume in limp covers and is well adapted for practical service.——The latest volume of the Lutheran Commentary, edited by A. P. Jacobs and containing an exposition of the New Testament by scholars of the Lutheran Church in America, is by President R. F. Weidner and deals with the Epistles of James, Peter, John and Jude [Christian Literature Co. $1.50]. It is intended for the use of ordinary readers as well as experts. It is a good example of plain, practical and also scholarly interpretation and exposition and is handsomely printed.

Bible Readings for Schools [American Book Co. 35 cents], by Dr. N. C. Schaeffer, contains judicious selections from the Scriptures, to be read in schools. Unsectarian and practical, they embody a good degree of variety. The Scriptural order is not observed, but this neglect is not a matter of much consequence. The book is tastefully issued.——A wholesome and effective little volume is The Ethics of Gambling [Henry Altemus. 35 cents], by W. D. MacKenzie. It is thoughtful, free from cant, and should do good service.——Arnold's Chart of Paul's Journeyings [J. D. Wattles & Co. 20 cents] is a neat map in cloth covers accompanied by suitable tables and easy to be carried in one's pockets.

BIOGRAPHICAL

A fine portrait of its subject forms the frontispiece of Mr. J. E. Nesmith's volume, The Life and Work of F. T. Greenhalge, Governor of Massachusetts [Roberts Bros. $3.00]. It is appropriately dedicated to the Republican party of this State. The author has had some experience in biographical composition, and he has done here a good piece of work in its way. It is not a biography of the more thoughtful and elevated sort, but is a record and compilation of its distinguished subject's performances, public and private, poems, orations, etc., with enough biography to supply essential information. Undoubtedly it is the sort of a biography which most of Governor Greenhalge's admirers prefer. Another portrait of him, also a fine one, is included, and the book is of permanent value and interest, not merely because it tells the story of a worthy man, deservedly successful and honored, but also because it throws useful light upon important portions of the political history of our State and nation.

An Epistle to Posterity [Harper & Bros. $2.50] is by Mrs. M. E W. Sherwood, and contains rambling recollections of many years of her life. The author has been long a somewhat prominent figure in social circles in this country, and has had a pleasant and somewhat extended acquaintance among people worth being known abroad. She is also an author of good standing. Her life has been one of exceptional interest in some respects, and she has described many of its experiences in this present volume. She takes the reader into confidence in a chatty and even gossipy fashion, but always with discretion and kindness, and her pages afford many vivid and valuable pictures of men and women who have been, or who still are, eminent and widely known. A considerable portion of the book describes experiences in foreign travel, and the whole will be regarded as exceedingly pleasant reading.

Dr. Johnson's biography of Alexander Pope [Harper & Bros. 60 cents] has been re-edited by Kate Stephens. It makes an attractive volume, which from its appearance possibly may have been intended for use in schools, although that fact is not stated.——Blessed Memories of Mrs. Mary A. Blanchard [Ezra A. Cook. 50 cents] is a short biography of the wife of Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, formerly president of Knox College and Wheaton College, by their daughter, Mrs. Julia W. Fischer. Mrs. Blanchard's face, which forms the frontispiece, is marked by an expression of blended firmness and gentleness, which her daughter's brief account of her life indicates as among her prominent characteristics.

POEMS

The portrait of James Clarence Mangan, whose Selected Poems [Lamson, Wolffe & Co. $1.50] have been edited, with a biographical study, by Louise Imogen Guiney, is that of a delicate, sensitive, shrinking, but exceptionally intellectual and in a good sense a sentimental man. The sketch which the editor has supplied of Mr. Mangan confirms this impression. He must have been a strange character indeed. Poor, shabby, neglected, overworked, morbidly shy and apparently the victim of intemperance and the opium habit successively, and dying at an early age, he must have been, nevertheless, one of the most brilliant intellects of his time, which was the first half of the present century. He was one of those intellectual Irishmen who have been like comets to those who have discovered them at all in the world of mind. Miss Guiney's sympathetic yet frankly critical sketch of him is of great interest, and his poems illustrate the striking, one might almost say the unique, character of his genius. He was a prolific writer, used many forms of verse, excelled in expressing the peculiar spirit which characterizes the Celtic poetry, and made many translations from other tongues than his own, including the Arabic, and also wrote many pretended translations, which are strikingly faithful to the spirit of the poetry which they profess to reproduce. His story was as painful as it was picturesque, and his poetry is as impressive as it is unusual.

Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford's new book is called In Titian's Garden and Other Poems [Copeland & Day. $1.25]. Most, if not all, of its contents have been printed in our own columns or those of other journals. This volume, too, appeals to the more thoughtful reader, although one must be careless indeed not to relish the dash and sparkle of some of the poems, for example, The Hunt. But Mrs. Spofford appeals to what is highest in her readers, and knows well how to enforce her appeal. Her exceptional power in putting weighty and vital thought into musical form is the chief source of her eminence as a poet. She endows with grace and charm what in many other hands would fall heavily even in rhyme. Her volume is one to be kept at hand and to be pondered over.

New Poems [Copeland & Day. $1.50], by Francis Thompson, is one of those books of verse which are not as easily read as some others, but many of which insist upon being read a second time. The author possesses the true instinct of the poet and much of the master poet's art. His verse prompts to meditation and in some of its expressions delights by its music. Some of the shorter poems have impressed us unusually. Those of our readers who enjoy the more serious work of the poets, and who appreciate good work in verse when they find it, will prize this volume most highly. We commend it heartily.

We have printed occasional poems, and good ones, from the pen of Mr. James Buckham, and have read, with pleasure, his volume, The Heart of Life [Copeland & Day. 75 cents]. He possesses the instinct of the true poet and also his deftness and felicitous utterance. Some of the poems are rich in noble and uplifting sentiment, some reproduce nature with unusual vividness, some are jaunty narratives in verse and some reach the real depths of human nature and feeling. All are short and musical.

The Romance of Arenfels and Other Tales of the Rhine [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25], by C. E. Stevens, offers the reader the somewhat elaborate title poem and a number of shorter productions. The author has caught the spirit of the famous river and its legends well, and his other poems are thoughtful and suggestive in sentiment, but his versification is often defective, and although his lines do not lack a certain spirit they cannot be called verses of the first class.

Two volumes of poems by Louis M. Elsheimer are published by Eastman Lewis. One is Mammon, a Spirit Song, the other "Lady" Vere and Other Narratives [Each $1.25]. They contain rather labored productions, not without some excellent conceptions or without some musical and pleasant lines, but it is a fair general criticism that too much of the author's poetry is essentially prose in the form of verse. His mastery of meter also leaves much to be desired.

MISCELLANEOUS

The Will to Believe, and Other Essays in Popular Philosophy [Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00] contains ten papers by Prof. William James of Harvard University. They all have been printed before, and discuss such subjects as that which furnishes the title to the book, Is Life Worth Living? The Sentiment of Rationality, The Dilemma of Determinism, Great Men and Their Environment, and What Psychical Research Has Accomplished. They are good specimens of the actual work of a philosophical expert aiming to do practical service to his fellowmen in popularizing philosophical truth, and enabling his readers to grasp its substance and to use it worthily and with permanent advantage. In the essay on the worth of life, for example, the argument is weighed and ably shaped so as to meet current objections and to inculcate a genuine and proper religious spirit and to stimulate nobility, self-sacrifice and high ideals. Without advocating any particular creed the paper exerts a positive and useful religious influence. Many readers will be specially interested in the last paper, which deals with the success of psychical research thus far, and although the actual results will strike most people as disappointingly small in amount, they will be interested to learn that the quality of these results has been such as to convince the author, who is by no means easily convinced, that there is substantial basis for some claims which have been made in regard to thought transference and similar subjects, and that there is reasonable hope of striking and lastingly valuable discoveries in the future.

A capital book for the public at large is Corporation Finance [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25], by Thomas L. Greene. It popularizes a kind of knowledge which is too largely confined to bankers and others who have to deal with the subject of finance. It discusses various forms of corporate enterprises, Corporation Accounting, Railway Reports, Public Policy towards Corporation Profits, Corporation Reorganizations and Receiverships and similar subjects in an unusually clear, full and enlightening manner. It is candid in spirit, and points out both the benefits and the dangers attending the modern development of a great corporation. Apparently the author believes that they have come to stay, and that it is possible to remedy what is amiss with the management of some of them so that the public welfare need not be imperiled. For those who feel attracted to this theme the book will possess true interest.

Talks for the Times [$1.00], by Prof. W. H. Crogman of South Atlanta, Ga., contains a selection of the public utterances of the author, who is a prominent representative of the colored race in Georgia, and has attained distinction as a thoughtful and eloquent representative of his people. This book contains memorial addresses upon Frederick Douglass, President Ware, Bishop Haygood and others, and discusses the education of the Negroes, their needs and claims and other timely and important topics. The different addresses treat their respective themes with wisdom, earnestness and practical aptness, and sometimes rise to a noteworthy level of eloquence.

Good sense, well compacted and fully meriting careful heed, is found in College Training for Women [T. Y. Crowell. $1.25], by Dr. Kate H. Claghorn. Many a parent is anxious for just what the author here has to say. She shows how expectation in regard to a college course may be enlightened, how preparation may be made wisely, how a college should be chosen, what the perils and advantages of a college career have been found to be, and indicates what the effect of a college course ought to be upon the future of the student alike in society and as a wage-earner. She has done well an important work.

Prof. F. V. N. Painter in Part First of his Introduction to American Literature [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. $1.00] has begun a companion work to his Introduction to English Literature. It is devoted to Colonial and Revolutionary literature as well as to that of our national life. It does not profess to be a comprehensive manual of reference, but deals only with leading periods and the principal writers, and makes judicious selections of authors to be considered and describes their lives and characters and their works.

Students of natural history will find Prof. A. A. W. Hubrecht's lecture on the Descent of the Primates [Charles Scribner's Sons.

$1.00] full of value. It was delivered on the occasion of the sesquicentennial celebration of Princeton University. It is too technical alike in theme and treatment for ordinary readers, but all who have some advanced knowledge of the subject will value it. The book is illustrated.

The Vines of Northeastern America [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2 50] is a sequel to two earlier volumes dealing with trees and shrubs, respectively. It is a scientific book in arrangement and substance, fully illustrated by diagrams and describing the nature, appearance, habitat and any other important features of the various forms of the vine. Botanists and horticulturists are addressed, of course, directly in such a work, and they will comprehend its large value.

Volume 53 of the Century Magazine [Century Co. $3.00] contains the numbers from last November to last April inclusive, in the usual handsome binding. It is pleasant to recall the delights of the successive numbers in this effective and beautiful form.

NOTES

—— Nine-tenths of the lectures delivered in New York city in these days are stated to be given in private before audiences of women.

—— Eleven letters by Carlyle recently brought $176 at auction in London. One of them contained many allusions to Frederick the Great and went for nearly $23.

—— Now it is the publishing business which —in France, at least—complains of the bicycle. There, they say, book sales are falling off greatly because people bicycle so much that they have no time for reading!

—— The manuscript of Lord Nelson's autobiography is to be sold before long by Messrs. Sotheby of London. It was written by him for Mr. John McArthur, and sent from Port Mahon in 1709. A letter was sent with it which will be sold at the same time.

—— The Lounger in The Critic reminds the reader that one of Macaulay's famous essays was devoted to a review of Mr. Gladstone's first book. They came out fifty-eight years ago. Macaulay called Gladstone "the rising hope" of "the stern and unbending Tories," which sounds drolly enough as one looks back.

—— The annual report of the famous—or infamous—gambling casino at Monte Carlo mentions an item of $310,000 for subsidizing the press. This sum is said to have been distributed among newspapers to bribe them not to mention the painful events which frequently occur, for example, the suicides of those who have ruined themselves at play. Another item is $30,000 spent in helping persons who have lost all to return to their homes.

—— A committee of the Association of Collegiate Alumnæ, under the supervision of Miss Mary H. Rollins, has just completed a Bibliography of the Higher Education of Women which the Boston Public Library has issued. Over 1,300 titles are included in spite of the small attention hitherto paid to the subject. The work is well done and copies are for sale at the Public Library and its branches. The Monthly Bulletin of the library is distributed free.

For Books of the Week see page 880.

* * *

It is fifty years since Rev. T. L. Cuyler's first contribution to the religious press was published by the New York Observer. His pen is still blessedly busy, and probably copies of his articles number more than 100,000,000. The pen may be mightier than either the sword or the tongue. To handle it as wisely as Dr. Cuyler has done is a rare gift which can be kept only by diligent cultivation.

LETTER FROM AUSTRALIA

American or British Precedents

More than once I have referred to the subject of Australian federation. Six years ago an Australasian convention was held and drew up a bill which, however, was never submitted to the Parliaments of the several colonies concerned. Now an Australian convention is sitting in Adelaide (New Zealand takes no part in the concert this time), and is engaged in drawing up the bill for another constitution. One of the questions repeatedly raised in the discussions before and during the convention is whether American or British precedents should be followed in framing the federal constitution. This question has come to the surface more frequently in connection with the adjustment of the relative boundaries of state and federal rights than with any other matter. The democratic sentiment in the colonies is strongly averse to giving to the chamber representing the states a parity of powers with a body like your Senate. It is insisted that some means shall be provided (by the referendum or otherwise) whereby a majority of states representing a minority of electors shall be compelled to bow to the will of a minority of states representing a majority of electors. By democratic writers and speakers the blame of your Civil War is laid upon your Senate. Its rejection of the arbitration treaty is also urged against it. It is, no doubt, difficult for us to judge justly concerning other people's affairs, but it may be interesting, if not edifying, for readers to have an Australian view of the American Constitution as it is set forth in a leader published in the Sydney Daily Telegraph of April 6, 1897:

> In a federated community, the constituents of which have grown to maturity under representative government, there must be provision for the majority to rule. The Americans paid nearly a million lives for an experiment in aid of such a provision, and have not yet got it. Only a day or two ago the arbitration treaty, which by far the larger part of the people desire, took its deathblow from an autocratic and uncontrollable Senate. In this country we have the advantageous opportunity of profiting by the mistakes of others.

Denominational Debts

For the last four years the Congregational denomination in New South Wales has been groaning under a burden of debt, which has strangled in the birth pretty nearly every attempt at aggressive effort. Four years ago the debt stood at nearly £1,500. It has been reduced to £1,000. At the same time the bolder spirits in Congregationalism are clear that the twentieth century shall not dawn without seeing "something attempted, something done" for the denomination. These desire that the extinction of the debt on the denominational funds should be followed by the extinction of the debts on the several churches.

Missionary Visitors

The Congregational foreign mission work in Australasia exists as an appendage to the London Missionary Society, and the Australian auxiliaries are in the position of troops too far from their base to keep up effective communications. The English management does what is possible to keep in touch with Australia. A proof of this was the recent visit of Rev. Ralph Wardlaw Thompson and Mr. William Crosfield. Mr. Thompson is the famous and indefatigable foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society. Not the smallest part of his important mission is to take personal notes of the situation in Madagascar and decide what is best to be done there. These Christian gentlemen left a good impression. Mr. Thompson is a long-headed and statesmanlike missionary ambassador, and Mr. Crosfield a good sample of the capable and genial British globe-trotter.

A Cardinal as a Candidate

The greatest excitement of the month of March in N. S. W. was the election for the federal convention now sitting in Adelaide, and the most exciting incident in connection with the election was the candidature of Cardinal Moran. It was one of the surprises of the election that the cardinal was defeated. To no one, perhaps, was it a greater surprise than to the cardinal himself. His entry into the field transformed the contest, to some extent at least, into a trial of strength between the Protestant and Catholic sections of the community. As a candidate the language of peace and toleration was on his lips, but, under the strain of criticism and censure, his temper betrayed him into some undignified expressions. Moreover, his many attacks on Protestant doctrines and institutions and an unretracted slander against the L. M. S. were in evidence against him. Apart from the fact that clerics as clerics are by many not fancied in the political arena, Cardinal Moran was not the kind of cleric to conciliate Protestants who hold strong opinions as to Rome's love for meddling in affairs of state.

A Large Donation

In South Australia there has been an illustration of that magnificent style of giving to which in America you owe not a few philanthropic and educational institutions, but of which there have been too few in Australia. Sir Thomas Elder, who died recently, left for distribution £154,000. This amount was divided between the Adelaide University (to found chairs) and various philanthropic societies and churches.

Our Premier Bound for America

Hon. G. H. Reid, colonial treasurer and premier of the colony of New South Wales, like the other colonial premiers, has accepted the invitation to attend the celebrations in connection with Queen Victoria's reign. He will visit America on his way back to Australia, sailing from Vancouver Aug. 8. For more reasons than one he is a man worthy of notice. One fact in his record (for which he will not receive unqualified approval in America) is that he has established in his own colony the most complete system of free trade in the whole world. In New South Wales practically the whole of the customs revenue is derived from tobacco and spirits.

The most eventful incident in Mr. Reid's career was his conduct of the general election which won free trade for New South Wales. No politician ever faced a serried phalanx of more determined foes. All that wealth and social influence could accomplish was done to defeat him, but all in vain. His tireless energy and unflinching courage were the despair of his adversaries. In this campaign his gifts as a platform speaker shone out. Probably he is the best political platform orator in Australia. When interjections (and more solid things) are flying about, he seems quite at home. These accompaniments of an oration, which discompose and dishearten most speakers, seem to put new life into him. His opponents taunt him with being a comic man. A comic man, on occasion, he certainly is. He has shown himself, nevertheless, sufficiently earnest in his work, and his exhaustless flow of humor is, perhaps, the weapon of which his political adversaries are most afraid.

Mr. Reid has manifested during his course a great deal of sympathy with the aspirations of the democracy for more enlarged powers of self-government and a higher standard of comfort in living. With a special view to meeting the needs of the unemployed he has instituted a "labor department" with a "minister for labor" in his government.

Such is the "chiel" who comes "amang" Americans, and, unless his character has suddenly and violently changed, he will be "takin' notes" for use when he gets back to Australia. Could he not be got to deliver a speech during his visit? W. A.

* * *

Queen, as true to womanhood as queenhood,
Glorying in the glories of her people,
Sorrowing in the sorrows of the lowest.
—Tennyson.

Our Readers' Forum

Dismissal and Withdrawal of Members from the Church — Pulpit Exhibits — As to Ceremonial Rites — Christian Endeavor Expense Versus Missionary Debts

ALIENATED AND USELESS MEMBERS

¶ Ought a Congregational church to allow a member voluntarily to withdraw from membership, without taking a letter to any other church, if in his judgment it is right for him to do so? I have no particular case in mind, but such causes as those of change in belief so radical that it affects the honesty of worship or loss of all spiritual interest are what I allude to. In the same line, is it, in your judgment, right for such a church to try to secure the withdrawal of members against whom, perhaps, no charge sufficiently grave to warrent excommunication or withdrawal of watch and care could be made, or against whom it would be likely to do more harm than good to make a charge if it were possible, but who, nevertheless, are wholly useless members, never joining in its worship, its support or its work, and who might be willing to request an ending of the connection? My question, of course, assumes that all has been done that, so far as known, could be done to secure revived interest and co-operation. A PASTOR.

Why should a church wish to retain in its membership one who has no sympathy with it and who does not share in its worship or work? If he wishes to withdraw formally from a fellowship from which in spirit he has already withdrawn, while outwardly he has kept his vows, the church, failing to recover him after all known means have been tried, may vote to erase his name from the list of members, placing on its records the reasons for so doing.

When such persons do not themselves request release, but have ceased all connection with the church, neglecting their covenant vows, it is for the church to decide by what means it will relieve itself of watch and care over them, after being convinced that such watch and care are of no avail. But if no steps of discipline are taken with those who never join in the worship, support and work of the church, and at some future time they should ask for letters of dismission to other churches, the church could not honorably make such a request an occasion for discipline or refuse to grant the letters. [THE EDITORS]

IS THERE A BETTER WAY

The question as to the best method of dealing with church members who find themselves out of sympathy with its standards and principles and to whom the covenant of the church has become distasteful is a serious one and should find a solution. Hitherto the standards seem to have acknowledged only one method of dealing, called by the severe name of discipline. The same relentless law must be applied to all disaffectants alike, moral and immoral, and with the result of putting the excommunicant under a shadow. But it is a rational question if the logic of Congregationalism or the consistency of the gospel requires this. Cannot the church cancel a contract it has itself ratified? Can it not terminate a membership itself has created? We have nothing to say about the mystic covenant of the soul with God. That is a matter with which the individual alone has to do. The only thing with which we are concerned is membership in the visible church. And we claim that the church with which the contract was made has an equal power to cancel it when sufficient reasons appear, and in any manner that will most perfectly fulfill the law of Christian kindness.

One church, at least, is struggling with this question and is anxious for a wise solution. The following rule has been proposed, but before adoption it is desired to test the sentiment of the churches about it. If it is permissible, expressions of opinion and suggestions through the columns of The Congregationalist are requested. The proposed rule is as follows:

Any person who has ceased to be in sympathy with the principles and standards of the church, and to whom its covenant has become an unacceptable burden, may, on application, be granted an honorable release therefrom. Application must be made to the standing committee. The committee shall first do all they wisely can to win the applicant to a different mind; but failing in this, and convinced that the application is a proper one, they shall report to the church with recommendation. If, however, they believe that the applicant is a worthy Christian and is laboring under a mistaken sense of duty, they shall not report to the church.

Such requests shall be granted only on recommendation of the committee. Such honorable release shall not be considered as casting any reflection on the moral character of the person so released. Such release shall be considered as leaving the person as nearly as possible in the same relation to the church as before uniting with it.

The released person shall be notified immediately in the following letter in writing:

Dear Friend: Your request for release from membership in the Blank Church has been carefully considered. Being convinced that the request was a proper one and was actuated by a worthy motive, the church has voted to grant it. Your membership in the church is therefore terminated. This vote is intended to cast no reflection on your moral character, contains no invidious implications whatever, and is supposed to leave you, so far as possible, in the same relation to the church as before you united with it. But you will allow us to assure you that we shall still feel a sincere interest in your welfare, and to express the hope that in God's good grace you may sometime return to us again. And we beg you to cherish the same kindly feeling toward us. Do not let your sympathy for the church be alienated. May we not ask you to take an interest in its secular affairs? Speak kindly of the church, and of us, its unworthy members. And may the God of all grace keep you and us from all sin, and bring us all at last to his heavenly home, saved by the precious blood of Christ.

Yours in Christian love,
(Signed)

Criticisms and expressions of opinion on the above would be very acceptable and may be widely useful.

Westfield, Mass. L. H. BLAKE.

THE PULPIT A SHOW CASE

Rev. Mr. Brown was pastor in one of the hill towns of New England. Of course the children of his parish were Yankee children. "Yankee children have brains," often giving evidence of the fact by their quaint remarks concerning what they hear and see. One little boy, the son of the village merchant, saw many things on his first visit to church and thought a good deal. On the return his parents were curious to know his impression. "What did you hear" they inquired? "What did you see, Harry?"

"I saw Mr. Brown up in the show case."

This comment, like many humorous remarks, contained a truth well worth recognizing by those whose calling necessitates their being upon exhibition weekly, if not like merchandise, still as examples.

Many times has this little boy's expression come to me when I have seen the uncouth attitudes, where the full form is exposed, unshielded by pulpit or desk of even meager dimensions. Perhaps I ought to speak to the young brethren who make such an exhibition of themselves. Men ought to be as careful as women when they are in positions that make them the foci of many eyes and minds. Carelessness in dress would not be countenanced, why should ungainly posture in sitting or standing pass unchallenged? In seeking a church home once, I attended service where an able young man preached. There was nothing to screen him from a full exposure of his form. His attitude as he sat upon the sofa showed such carelessness and thoughtlessness as no young man of ordinary breeding should be guilty of anywhere, much less in front of an audience of people. How I wished that among the modern ways, such as no desk and no text, he had adopted also the donning of the gown. The same impression was made upon my wife, which I found out, without questioning, on our way home from church.

It would do ministers, young or old, good, now and then, to think of their pulpits as a show case. J.

WHO MAY PERFORM THE MARRIAGE CEREMONY

What is the standing of a Congregational minister who has resigned his church and his faith and has become a member of the Episcopal Church? Has he a right to perform marriage or burial services for any not Episcopalians? In other words, can he be an Episcopal layman and a Congregational minister at the same time? INQUIRER.

The laws deciding what persons have the legal right to perform the marriage ceremony differ in different States. Massachusetts's law says that "a marriage may be solemnized by a minister of the gospel, ordained according to the usage of his denomination, who resides in the commonwealth, and continues to perform the functions of his office." This sufficiently answers the question for this State. In any State we should say that good taste and decency required one who had withdrawn from the Congregational ministry, as in the case mentioned, to lay down entirely the functions of a minister in any denomination till he received ordination in the Episcopal Church. Any one, whether a minister or a layman, may officiate at burial services. [THE EDITORS.]

WOULD IT BE TRUE ECONOMY

I am told that the Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in California in July will necessitate the expenditure of $4,000,000. Is this a justifiable outlay? Many of our churches are facing deficits in their accounts. Others are reducing the salaries of their pastors, already too small. Our great benevolent societies are practically crippled in their work. The managers of every charitable enterprise look into the coming days with grave apprehension. Orphaned Armenians appeal to the Christian world to be rescued from starvation and death. Famished India cries for bread. May it not be asked in all kindness, Is this a time to expend so much money in an undertaking from which there can be so little return in spiritual results? For what are our Christian Endeavorers of the East going to California? Every one knows that the great majority are going simply for a pleasure trip because they can go cheaply.

What will this convention accomplish for the churches? Will our young people come home with any more of the spirit of consecration? Will they have any larger ideas of self-sacrifice for the kingdom of God? Would it not be a nobler act of Christian service if, for instance, the half of every dollar to be expended in traveling to the convention should be turned into the treasuries of our benevolent societies? What would that mean? Relief from debt! Enlargement of work! Release to overburdened officials! Do our young people realize what an opportunity is afforded them to remove a tremendous hindrance from the progress of the kingdom of God? A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORER.

[We expressed our view of this question on page 669 of The Congregationalist, May 13, where we took occasion to point out the fact that such great gatherings promote sympathy between the different sections of the country and furnish inspiration to better work.—THE EDITORS]

In and Around Boston

The American Antiquarians

A great many interesting things were told, and, what is more, put on record, at the recent semi annual meeting of the American Antiquarian Society at the Boston Athenæum building. Stephen Salisbury, A. M., of Worcester was, as usual, the presiding officer. It was somewhat of a memorial meeting also for two eminent members who have died recently, Dr. Gould and General Walker. Of Dr. Gould's Harvard life personal recollections were given by his student and life-long friend, Senator Hoar, especially of the remarkable calculations on the comet of 1843 by the boy astronomer of seventeen years.

A paper of much general interest was a full account of the abandoned and fast disappearing customs of the North American Indians in dress and ornaments, read by Lucien Carr of Cambridge.

Some idea of the society's collections may be gained from the statement that accessions since the last meeting have been received from fifty-one members and over 130 persons not members, besides from some 130 societies and institutions. In all these amount to 666 books, 5,391 pamphlets and twenty-one volumes of bound, and 160 of unbound, newspapers. The secretary has just finished a catalogue of the early colonial and American broadsides, to which announcement Dr. Edward Everett Hale added the interesting statement that there are a large number of MS. broadsides in the State archives which were not printed in their day for fear of the magistrates.

One of the latest additions to the society's treasures represents an enormous piece of work in sifting the files of nearly seventy years' general correspondence. This collection, arranged with a manuscript catalogue, contains all the acceptances to the society's membership since the foundation in 1812. These autograph letters show the sentiments felt toward the society's work, and contain promises of aid from many of the most distinguished men of the nineteenth century.

Among the new elections to membership were Dr Frederick Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury; Dr. Mandell Creighton, Bishop of London; and Joseph Floremond, Duc de Loubat of Paris.

Omnibus Boats on the Charles

Boston is soon to be treated to an innovation which will make one more link to connect it with the customs of its big sister London. The winding river Charles is to be made still more to resemble its English conemporary, the Thames, by a line of steam launches to ply between the Craigie Bridge at East Cambridge and various points along the river, including Boston, Cambridge and Brighton, as far as Allston. In 1895 the agitation began which is to result in the opening on June 17 next of this line. The Charles River Navigation Company was incorporated under the laws of Maine. One fare will be charged for the whole route. Three steam launches are being provided. Each is forty-five feet long and is intended to seat forty people. The power will be a gas engine. The promoters of this scheme, before completing their arrangements, had made a study of the systems of omnibus boats along the Thames at London and near Hamburg on the Elbe. The route on the Charles is six miles in length. The fare will be ten cents for a trip, whether short or long. If the venture succeeds next year there is likely to be put on a line running on the Charles River from the Newtons to Waltham, and probably another to connect the North End Park, via East Boston, with the Marine Park at South Boston.

The river already is the thoroughfare for some 1,200 canoes which are kept along its shores, and this system of public conveyance promises to still farther develop life and interest on what might well become a formidable summer rival of both subway and elevated railroads.

A Methodist Anniversary

The Methodist Episcopal Conference in Chicago and New York have each celebrated the silver anniversary of the episcopal election of their bishop. Not to be outdone in honors to a venerable leader the New England Conference has likewise given a celebration for the twenty-five years of episcopal work of Randolph S. Foster, D. D., LL. D , but last year retired. The exercises were held in People's Temple, Monday evening, June 7.

Father Endeavor Clark's Return

A year ago this month Rev. F. E. Clark, well known to every Christian Endeavorer in this or any other land, at least by name, had a reception in People's Temple just before he started on a tour around the world to visit C. E. Unions wherever they were to be found. Now that trip has been successfully completed, and Dr. Clark and his wife are expected to land about the 18th from the transatlantic steamer at New York. Before leaving the city a reception will be given them in Carnegie Hall, at which Hon. John Wanamaker will probably preside. Wednesday evening, June 23, at People's Temple the Boston C. E. Union will give a reception It is expected that Mr. Samuel B. Capen will preside, and the governor has been asked to be present, besides other interesting speakers. The Boston Union, through its president, Mr. J. A Floyd, and other officers, is making a great effort to have it such a welcome as the C. E. favorites never got before. To those who will signify their intention of attending, in spite of rain, heat or almost anything else, tickets for reserved seats for that night are being issued.

About the Saratoga Meetings

Interesting reports and comments upon the home missionary anniversaries were presented at the Ministers' Meeting last Monday in fifteen-minute speeches from Superintendents T. G. Grassie and W. H. Thrall, Dr. Reuen Thomas and Rev. W. G. Puddefoot. While commenting upon the fact that the audiences were smaller than in previous years, and consequently a certain inspiration was lacking, each speaker felt that the meeting had been useful and helpful. Mr. Grassie considered the meeting productive of much good, because the critical spirit, manifest at the opening sessions, was completely cleared away by the reports and frank explanation of the affairs of the society and the methods of its management, while the devotion and consecration of the men at the front touched the hearts of all who learned of their efforts to increase their work on reduced salaries. Dr. Thomas gained a truer recognition of the magnitude of the society's work than he had ever had before, and of the strength and manliness of the missionaries, and felt that he could now assure the business men in his congregation that the Home Missionary Society was wasting neither men nor money. If merchants and politicians in the newer States were actuated by right motives the home missionaries would not come into collision with them, but would be recognized as the most important of the elements developing our Western country.

Mr. Puddefoot, who was introduced as that "philosopher with wings," said the audience at the meeting was small because people were tired of going to Saratoga, and the talk about saving the country was a twice-told tale. "But then," he added, "so is the Lord's Prayer." He indulged in a little sarcasm over the cry of hard times, and the general expectation that some one in Washington would change things, and urged people to stop whining and get to work on the Lord's business, trusting that Christ can and will bring this nation out "into a large place." He left with the audience an inspiration and renewed courage for the future.

ANNIVERSARY WEEK AT ANDOVER

Had Dr. John Watson been in attendance at Andover Seminary last week to share the ceremonies of the anniversary, he would have seen one of his novel assertions fully verified, "People in these days are interested in theology."

The throng of visitors, official and unofficial —examiners coming from remote corners of New England to "lexow" the seminary, alumni returning like the class of '92 to renew old associations, laymen from round about bent upon theological inquiry, and young ladies from Abbot Academy with the conventional polychrome bonnets on their heads and the red-edged volumes of Westcott and Hort in their hands—all alike followed with keen interest the progress of the examination.

It is more properly an exhibition. The Waterloo has commonly been the examination in systematic theology, and in order to secure greater precision of statement, together with a more condensed arrangement of material, President Harris has adopted a method of examination by essays, each student reading a paper and then being subjected to cross-questioning upon the views presented. Only once in the whole examination was there anything to suggest Mrs. Phelps-Ward's story of Emanuel Bayard and his judges, but even then the temper of the most persistent questioners was kindly and considerate. The positions taken might be broadly characterized as fundamental orthodoxy—modern but not radical, progressive but not reactionary, critical but not destructive. And yet this was not what most deeply impressed the visitors. It was rather the reverent spirit of the students, their composure and self-command under examination, and the evident thoroughness of the work they had done.

Professor Churchill's class in homiletics gave a series of brief extempore addresses upon subjects assigned individually, and then two sermon outlines were presented by their authors for criticism by classmates. The professor's elocutionary class, however, gave the usual exhibition drill, uttering sounds that printers' ink can never hope to reproduce in imagination. This exercise, at once the most amusing and the most beneficial of all possible systems of vocal discipline, was designed by Professor Churchill, and resembles the Episcopal liturgy in two points at least—it is largely antiphonal and it improves with repetition. Even the drenching rain of that week in "darkest Andover" failed to reduce the throng of admiring visitors.

Two magnificent addresses—one the baccalaureate sermon by Professor Ryder and the other the lecture by Pres. Charles Cuthbert Hall before the Society of Inquiry—embodied the religious spirit of the anniversary. Both were concerned with the work of the Christian ministry. Both emphasized, though in very different ways, the practical aim of all ministerial endeavor. Just as Dr. Hall began his address all the electric lights in town suddenly went out. Fortunately there were two lamps on the desk, throwing a glare of light upon the speaker's face and moving hands and casting long shadows from the Gothic rafters across the roof of the church. The service closed with the doxology, the room being too dark for the use of hymn-books, and just as the congregation rose to sing up went the electric lights again as if the whole calamity had been pre-arranged.

The alumni meeting Wednesday afternoon, in spite of the heavy rain, drew a considerable audience. Rev S. W. Dike, Ph. D., presided. Rev. C. C. Carpenter presented the necrology of the year. The State of Religion in New England was ably discussed by four appointed speakers—Rev. Messrs. C. B. Rice, D. D , C. S. Patton, B. W. Lockhart, D. D., and W. E. Barton, D. D. Several others took part in the discussion. It is proposed to publish next year a full address list of past members of the seminary, and it is hoped that so many of the alumni will join the association that their membership fees will be sufficient to provide for a general catalogue in 1900.

Two social gatherings, the "theological teaparty" and the alumni dinner, followed the usual custom. The after-dinner speeches were fewer than usual, but of excellent quality and in fine spirit. Dr. Fiske, though in feeble health, spoke with his characteristic elegance and tenderness as president of trustees; Professor Harris with characteristic force and wit as the new president of the faculty; Dr. Little responded wittily and cordially for the board of visitors; Rev. S. P. Fay of Dorchester, who graduated fifty years ago, spoke of the professors and the Andover of that time; Rev. E. R. Smith of Farmington, Me., for the class of 1892, a full apostolical dozen of whom had held a reunion here; Rev. F. H. Page of Lawrence for the neighboring churches; and Rev. C. E. Jefferson of Chelsea for the delegates of the associations.

The Commencement speaking was uniformly excellent. Mr. Bartley, who received the degree of Ph. D. from Yale two years ago, spoke on The Old Testament of the Apostles. Mr. French, discussing The Use of the Study of Religions, showed how the critical comparison of ethnic beliefs established Christianity as the universal religion and Christ as "unclassifiable," the Lord of a "peerless faith." Treating of Cyrus and Yahweh in Prophecy and Inscription, Mr. Holmes showed that Cyrus never became a monotheist, the testimony from the tablets running contrary to prophecy and tradition. It was an able address, though the choice of the Hebrew rather than the Latinized name for the God of Israel was rather unfortunate. I overheard a layman telling how Mr. Holmes had been "talking about Cyrus and another Old Testament fellow"! Mr. Parks, who has been nearly blind from early childhood, and who is not yet able to read, having acquired his education wholly through oral instruction, spoke upon The Final Cause of Theology, contrasting past and present tendencies of religious thought. Mr. Merrill delivered a finished and telling address upon The Message of Christian Monasticism. Mr. Dutcher's address was in the best sense an oration. He spoke on The Ideal of Public Worship. Mr. Hodgdon spoke on The Preacher as a Prophet, losing himself in his message, and doing what few men can ever do—actually preaching to a Commencement audience. The last address was by Mr. Mattson on The Pulpit and Material Progress, an able plea for alliance between the leaders of the church and the leaders of the world. Mr. Mattson has been awarded the fellowship, but declines to go abroad for study. Instead he accepts a position of large usefulness in the active ministry. After the singing of the class hymn, "Lead on, O King Eternal," Professor Smyth offered the closing prayer.

Following are the names of the graduating class: George H. Baker, George S. Ball, Ernest M. Bartlett, William T. Bartley, Ph. D., Alfred V. Bliss, Frank E. Drake, Norman H. Dutcher, William C. Fessenden, Edgar B. French, Byron F. Gustin, Frank W. Hodgdon, William T. Holmes, Albert W. Howes, Albert J. Lord, Halah H. Loud, Bernard G. Mattson, George A. Merrill, W. Ulmer Parks, Elijah H. Roper, Frank N. Saltmarsh and Alexander Sloan, Jr.

Several members of the class have received calls. Mr. Bartlett goes to Northbridge, Mr. Bartley to Salem, N. H., Mr. Mattson to Medina, O., Mr. Roper to Westford, and Mr. Sloan to Groveland, while Mr. Holmes becomes Dr. E. C. Moore's assistant in Providence, R. I. Mr. Dutcher, called to Vergennes, Vt., has not yet accepted. R. L. H.

The Christian Register, loyal as ever to Unitarianism, declares that "it is a fact patent in history that all progress has been made through the work of unsafe men." Does this indicate that our contemporary is going to support Mr. Bryan in the next presidential election?

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

BOSTON MINISTERS' MEETING, Pilgrim Hall, June 21, 10 A. M. Subject, A Forward Movement in Church Work. Speakers, Mr. J. L. Dixon of the Bible Normal College, Springfield, Rev. Drs. Reuen Thomas, G. M. Boynton and Rev. S. L. Loomis.

THE Friday morning prayer meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions will be omitted until September.

Benevolent Societies

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY—Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer. Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

Six embryo churches in Iowa, showing that religious life abounds in spite of poverty, call for continued patience and self-denial on the part of pastors and peoples, till we have, if not more money, yet a larger proportion of it consecrated to the Master's work. We believe that these organizations will grow up all the stronger and purer for a rigorous infancy.

The State society of home missions in Vermont has had an excellent year, all things considered. Thus it reported at the annual meeting lately. Its reputation is "No debt, no appropriations on the basis of inflated expectations, and doing God's business on business principles."

A church in the Hawkeye State can boast both pastor and superintendent whose staying qualities are rare and valuable in this age of change. We infer that they find the work rewarding and the people appreciative, else they would not so cleave to them.

In the face of such extensive parish work as a Michigan church has done of itself under the lead of its pastor, no one would hesitate to commend the thought, "Every member a pastor."

More additions to the churches than any year for a quarter of a century—that cheering news from the Green Mountain State must not pass unnoticed.

Of Special Note

Summer arrangements in a few important Chicago churches.

A fruitful half-decade of work by an Iowa pastor.

Generosity between churches in Michigan.

THE VERMONT CONVENTION

Looked at from any point of view the State meeting, June 8–10, was a success. Middlebury hospitality was taxed to the utmost by the large number of delegates from the churches and the people responded nobly. Abundant lunches were provided at the church parlors and an abundance of carriages conveyed the delegates to and from their temporary homes. The village was made doubly beautiful by this thoughtful and cordial attention.

From a business standpoint the convention had a new experience. In the formation of the roll three young women presented themselves for admission. They were sent by the churches of which they are pastors. The assemby caught its breath. The young women had not been ordained, but the constitution provides that a church may be represented by "one who has been chosen as pastor by special vote of the church." A committee on credentials considered the matter and recommended that the voting membership be composed of ordained ministers and delegates and that licentiates and ministers of other denominations serving our churches be admitted as honorary members. The report was adopted and the traditions are safe yet.

The Fairbanks Boards of Relief and of Education showed the pressure of hard times. So did the report of the committee on the Vermont Chronicle. But an unexpected response was awakened on the part of business men and pastors and the Chronicle, now seventy-two years old, bids fair to enter on renewed prosperity.

Sunday schools have shown an increase in membership and a decrease in average attendance. There is increased activity in house to house visitation and in normal classes. Endeavor Societies show diminished membership. The report of corresponding secretary, J. M. Comstock, was luminous in facts and comprehensive in its view of church life. There are 206 churches on the roll, two new ones having been organized in communities otherwise destitute of religious services. The church membership is 21,817, a gain of 274 in the year.

In intellectual and spiritual thought the sessions maintained a high level. The communion sermon, by Rev. J. E Fullerton, the first afternoon was a helpful beginning. The theme was The Necessity of Forgiveness and the Sufficiency of Christ's Work. The subject of an inspiring paper by Dr. Edward Hawes was Spiritual Life in Our Churches. Rev. Dr. Jackson presented the Comparative Claim of Educational and Evangelistic Effort in Church Work. Rev. G. T. Smart awoke our slumbering corporate conscience, and on The Meaning of Church Membership and Lay Work helpful discussions were held.

Missionary interests were not forgotten. For the first time in its history the convention gave its initial evening to the Woman's Home Missionary Union, Mrs. Van Patten presiding. The speakers were Miss Hartig, Professor Foster, Miss Zoltak, Rev. and Mrs. R. B. Wright, who are loyal children of Vermont, and the elect Mrs. Caswell. Foreign missionary interests found an able advocate in Rev. Dr. J. L. Barton. The Vermont Domestic Missionary Society reported, as usual, a fruitful year under the direction of its able secretary, Rev. C. H. Merrill. About $10,000 have been used in State work, $4,240 have been sent to the national treasury—$10,000 less than last year. Half of this shrinkage is in legacies and half in special gifts for the Howard Roll of Honor. The number of additions to the churches is the largest since 1872.

On the whole, Congregational life in Vermont may be said to be vigorous. There are especial efforts to evangelize outlying districts. Successful efforts are made to reach young men and boys. Abandoned fields have been reclaimed, new churches organized. Training classes for Sunday school teachers, for young people and for children raise the standard. The kingdom of God is among us.

F. F. L.

RHODE ISLAND CONFERENCE

Clouded skies and a cool atmosphere were nature's accompaniments to the genial, fraternal fellowship of the churches whose pastors and delegates gathered Tuesday morning, June 8, at Newport for the annual meeting. The hospitality of the United Church, whose old name is particularly fitting since Rev. T. C. McClelland became pastor, was so generously extended that the indoor warmth of heart made up for the outdoor want of sunshine. The completed organization of the conference found Rev. A. L. Clark moderator, Rev. E. T. Root scribe and Rev. E. H. Hadlock assistant scribe. The program was crowded as nearly always, and interest was sustained all through.

A cheery tone was in the reports from all the churches. Only four reported no additions, only three are without pastors. The benevolent gifts have been sustained at about the usual mark and the home expenses kept well up. Two churches in Providence, beside the Edgewood, which is "digging away" in its enterprise for a building, reported their want of enlarged house room.

Tuesday afternoon Dr. E. C. Moore spoke upon The Order of Worship in Our Congregational Churches. The combination of worship and instruction in the one religious service was shown to be peculiar to the modern Christian church life, and the pith of Dr. Moore's instructive address was a plea for such services as would always produce in its participants an uplift of soul toward a conduct and character nearest the ideals of Christ.

Rev. E. T. Root spoke on Newer Methods of Church Work and suggested that changing conditions demand changes in the application of the eternal principles which never vary. Christ could say, "Come unto me" because he came unto them. People discussed his preaching in his presence and with him. Why not allow such practice today? Then the press can be made the church's servant more than as yet. Discussions freely followed two such themes.

The Tuesday evening service of sermon and communion was tender in spirit. From the text Rom. 8: 6 Rev. J. J. Woolley led the thought and aspiration toward the spiritual life, the attainment of its perfection being the most important of all problems.

The R. I. Congregational Historical Society, Rev. J. G. Vose, D. D., presiding, occupied part of an afternoon session. A historical paper was read by Miss Hazard on Judge Sewall and His Gift to South County. The Ministerial Relief Fund was reported to be nearing the $10,000 mark, there being $8,633 on hand and the prospect of an additional $1,000 from a legacy.

The work among the societies was ably presented by Dr. F. P. Woodbury for the American Missionary Association, Dr. Judson Smith for the American Board, Dr. N. H. Whittlesey for the National Ministerial Relief Society and Rev. George A. Hood for the Church Building Society. Three ladies represented woman's work for women: Mrs. L. A. Kellogg of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Association; Miss Rebecca Kurkjian, a graduate of Robert College, who pleaded for the continued sympathy of Americans for her stricken country of Armenia, paying high tribute to the work of our missions in Turkey; Mrs. Slocum of Providence, who spoke for the R. I. Branch of the Woman's Board. Home mission work was represented in the regular annual meeting of the Rhode Island H. M. S. by reports and by a stirring address from Superintendent Grassie of Wisconsin.

Greetings of fraternal feeling were brought from the State Free Baptist Association; a resolution was passed expressing a determination to extend cordial help to all wise effort to secure a true observance of the Sabbath; delegates were named for the Anti-Saloon League's annual conference at Columbus, O., in accordance with a request for such representation. The report of the committee on the state of religion noted the hopeful spirit of the churches.

Newport, the summer city of millionaires, luxuriant as to its seabeach palaces, with their beautiful park-like grounds seaward inclosed with their high walls streetward, rich in its historic associations, interesting in every aspect, chilly and churlish of sunshine in its welcome to the Congregationalists, wept floods of rain tears at their departure on Wednesday evening. The conference will meet next year with Elmwood Temple Church, Providence.

F. B. P.

A FOREIGN MISSION AT HOME

The past year at Welcome Hall of Redeemer Church, New Haven, Ct., has been a period of unique and diverse efforts, which are carried on in a building erected about four years ago at a cost of $25,000 and situated in the midst of a dense foreign population. The annual expenses amount to over $3,000, all raised by this church. Besides the assistant pastor, Rev. H. E. Peabody, a lady missionary and two other paid helpers are engaged with this branch. The work began nearly nine years ago. In the Sunday school the average attendance has been about 200. In addition to the regular religious meetings, informal cottage prayer meetings and a Christians' training class have been carried on. Various kinds of philanthropic work have also been conducted. More than 50 persons in the church have regular work at the hall. Among the special efforts are a mothers' meeting, at which about 100 mothers of eight nationalities are reached, a free kindergarten attended by 60 children, clubs and classes for instruction in sewing and other arts, a boys' club, a men's reading-room and a mixed choral class. Special work at special seasons adds much also to the duties of the laborers. The pastor is Rev. W. L. Phillips.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

ME.—Of the three meetings of Cumberland Conference held annually that held with one of the rural churches in June is always the best. The conference at Windham, June 9, was largely attended, and the topics discussed were practical and profitable: The Right Attitude Toward the Bible, The Blessings Attending It, The Place of Power in the Church, How Far Does the Success of the Church Depend on Individual Effort, The Claims of Young People on the Church and The Claims of Missions on the Church. The sermon was by Rev. W. G. Mann. At the evening session Rev. J. S. Chandler of India presented the work of the American Board.

The annual meeting of Cumberland North Conference was held at Cumberland Center. The topics were: Decadence of the Prayer Meeting, Evangelists and Their Work, Opportunities of the Country Church, The Place of Authority in Christian Training. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. Arthur Smith and E. C. Brown. Dr. E. B. Mason gave a masterly address on Paul, the Roman Citizen, the Jewish Pharisee, the Christian Saint, the New Testament Writer. Mrs. Foster and Miss Burdette occupied the woman's hour with reports from the field. The sessions were well attended and full of interest.

At Oxford County Conference Secretaries D. P. Hatch, C. H. Daniels and Missionary S. S. York were all present with live addresses. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. J. B. Carruthers and Sampson Nichols. Topics were: How to Have a Live Church, Sunday Observance and Desecration, Revival Needs and Obstacles, How to Promote Greater Benevolence, How to Get the Gospel to the Back Districts, Summer Sunday Schools. The ladies missionary meeting was well attended and bright.

VT.—Chittenden Conference met at Richmond. Among the subjects were Music in Religious Worship, The Sunday School, The Mission of the Church in Molding the Life of the Community. An interesting address upon Home Missionary Experiences was given by Rev. Mary D. Norton. The sermon was by President Buckham.

Lamoille Conference was held at Morrisville. The main topic was The Place of the Bible (1) in Public Worship and Private Devotions, (2) in Theology, (3) in History. The sermon was by Rev. S. F. Drew.

MINN.—Western Conference held a delightful meeting at Springfield, June 8, 9. At the session in Sleepy Eye a year ago only three ministers were present, most of the churches were unsupplied with pastors and the outlook was so discouraging that the conference debated union with some other organization. At the present meeting every church was represented. Rev. H. W. Johnson, who has recently begun work at New Ulm, preached the sermon. A paper upon The Church of Christ in Our Smaller Places advocated the union of different denominations. Other subjects considered were: The Pastor as a Shepherd, Fellowship and Efficiency, The Church and Moral Reform, National Evangelization. At the women's meeting, which was well attended, topics discussed were: How to Have an Interesting Meeting, How We Should Give, and Home Missions. Three new ministerial members were received. Good progress has been made by all the churches of the conference during the year.

The Minnesota Valley Conference gathered at Graceville, June 1, 2. The sermon was by Rev. A. H. Tebbets. Papers were read and addresses made upon Christian Education, S. S. Work, Church Building, Home Missions and the Work of the A. M. A.

CLUBS

R. I.—The summer festival of the Providence Club was held June 7. The spacious parlors of the Mathewson Street Methodist Church were used for the social hour. The banquet was served at the adjoining Trocadero, and the order of exercises was continued when the 450 members and guests had reassembled in the beautiful audience-room of the church. An address by Prof. W. S. Pratt upon Modern Church Music was heard with keen interest, and then followed a full vocal program of sacred solos and quartets.

CT.—The New Haven Club held its 14th annual meeting at Dwight Place Church, June 14. An address on The Puritan Pluck was given by Rev. J. H. Twichell, D. D. The present membership is 193. Rev. F. R. Luckey is president.

O.—The new Toledo Club has elected Rev. G. A. Burgess, D. D., president, and Rev. G. W. Belsey, secretary. The next meeting will be held June 22

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 873.]

CHARLESTOWN.—First has been greatly cheered by a visit from Miss A. H. Bradshaw, once a child in its Sunday school, now a missionary in Japan, who made an interesting address Sunday evening, May 30. She comes back with affectionate words for "the dear old church," congratulating its present members on the hearty, united, hopeful feeling which prevails today. All the expenses of the past fiscal year have been easily met, the debt of the parish has been reduced and benevolent contributions have been resumed. Rev. C. H. Pope supplies the pulpit.

Massachusetts

WINCHESTER.—Rev. D. A. Newton received a generous welcome from the large congregation which greeted him last week Sunday morning. After an absence through illness of about six months he returns from Clifton Springs, N. Y., greatly benefitted, and will gradually resume the work.

MILFORD.—Rev. Webster Woodbury, the pastor, is enjoying a three months' vacation given him by his people for rest and recuperation. Among the pulpit supplies are Rev. Messrs. Walcott Fay, A. F. Newton and Rev. Drs. F. E. Emrich, E. F. Williams and F. A. Warfield.

WOBURN.—North gave the pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. G. H. Tilton, a genuine surprise the evening of their 21st wedding anniversary. About 250 persons gathered in the vestry and the chairman of the parish presented them with an envelope containing a new $100 bill. A beautiful wedding cake was also given. Light refreshments were served by the young ladies and an enjoyable evening was spent. During the nine months of Mr. Tilton's pastorate he has endeared himself to old and young.

NEW BEDFORD.—North. Rev. J. A. MacColl, the pastor, has resigned after a period of seven years with this church, but his church by a nearly unanimous vote refused to accept his resignation, and earnest protests against accepting it were signed by many outsiders, by the C. E. Society and by those members of the church prevented by illness from being present at the meeting.

Lowell.—High Street. The effort to increase the attendance at the second Sunday service has been a marked success, with a series of vesper services held late in the afternoon with music of a high order.——First has had a course of lectures upon That Boy and His Sister, with special singing and an increased congregation.——Kirk Street, whose musical programs have drawn large evening congregations all winter, was recently filled to overflowing at a bicycle service.——First Trinitarian. The pastor is an expert with the stereopticon, and has regularly as many uses of it as the limited place of worship can accommodate.——John Street has been heartily congratulated upon a service rendered to the community by an address upon Municipal Reform by Mr. H. N. Shepard of Boston, to which the city government was invited and at which two thirds of a large congregation were men.

Spencer.—First. The fourth anniversary of the pastorate of the present pastor, Rev. S. W. Brown, was celebrated June 6. He has been out of health but is now greatly improved. His earnest efforts have greatly built up the church. During the past four years 103 persons have come into fellowship with the church, 82 on confession.

Worcester.—Union. Dr. J. E. Tuttle devoted the morning and evening of June 6 to the subject of Sabbath Observance, preaching two vigorous sermons to large congregations ——Belmont recently reminded its pastor, Rev. W. B. Oleson, and his wife of the 15th anniversary of their marriage by taking possession of their home for the evening and leaving numerous gifts.

Springfield.—First. The Bible school has passed the 1,000 mark in membership, the largest in the history of the school. The pastor's assistant, Mr. M. A. Dixon, is superintendent, and regularly introduces special features. Recently a male quartet, in which the pastor and superintendent took part, gave selections. The Sunday evening services continue to attract large congregations. Of late there have been no special exercises, but only the gospel preaching by the pastor, Rev. F. L. Goodspeed.——Hope is now holding Sunday services at 5 P. M. and finds the change beneficial, with increased attendance. The service is largely devotional, with music by the choir and a short address by the pastor, Rev. R. W. Brokaw. He has begun a series of sermons on Character Contrasts.——Park. Rev. A. E. Cross preached the baccalaureate sermon to the students of the Bible normal college. He has just finished a series of interesting talks on The Great Books of the Day.——Eastern Avenue. The C. E. Society holds its meetings after the regular church services Sunday evenings. The plan approves itself readily.

Maine

Portland.—High Street. Rev. Dr. W. H. Fenn and his wife start this week for Europe, where they will spend the summer on account of Dr. Fenn's health.——State Street. Rev. Dr. J. L. Jenkins and wife sail the 23d for Europe, to be absent until September.——St. Lawrence Street. The beautiful new edifice will be ready for occupancy early in July, but owing to the vacation season will not be opened and dedicated until the middle of September.——West. The government of the church having passed from an outside body of trustees to the church itself, the way is now open for an immediate enlargement of the edifice and ground has already been broken for an addition suited to the needs of the various departments.

Bangor.—The 24th annual meeting of the Maine Branch, W. B. M., met at Central Church. The address by Miss A. B. Child was much enjoyed by a large congregation. The reports were, on the whole, encouraging. Papers and addresses by Mrs. W. H. Fenn, the first and only president, Mrs. J. F. Thompson, Mrs. L. F. Stearns, Mrs. A. B. Cole and Miss Abbie Martin were all helpful. Three auxiliaries have been formed the past year. The cradle roll and Junior work were presented. The Bangor auxiliary entertained the friends with a delicious lunch at noon.

South Portland.—Bethany. This wide-awake church has grown from 17 members to 54 in its two years' history, has built a substantial and commodious edifice, the vestry of which is completed and doing admirable service, while the church wisely and cheerfully waits for funds to complete the main auditorium.

Fort Fairfield.—The beloved pastor, Rev. G. B. Hescock, has read his resignation, but his people protest and hope to prevail upon him to rest for a season and return when health is re-established. The tasteful little house has been built during his pastorate and the membership has increased from 50 to 120.

The cancelation of the debt on the beautiful First Church edifice, Brewer, was celebrated with a jubilee service lately.——Rev. J. A. Lawrence of Machiasport supplies at Whitneyville.

New Hampshire

Exeter.—First. The church has been greatly afflicted in the unexpected death, from heart failure, June 11, of Mrs. Sarah Perry, wife of John T. Perry, so well known in journalistic circles. Her abounding helpful services will be greatly missed.

North Hampton has been sorely bereaved by the death of Mr. Eben Gove, one of its oldest and most useful members. Rev. T. V. Haines, the late pastor for 30 years, has decided to build a residence and remain in town.

Hollis.—The King's Daughters and friends in the parish have done a graceful act in paying the expenses of the faithful pastor and his wife in attendance upon the missionary meetings at Saratoga.

Portsmouth.—The late Mrs. M. E. Ladd of this city left, among other bequests, $2,000 to North Church and $6,000 in trust for the Y. M. C. A.

Vermont

Rutland.—June 6, at a special children's service, 20 infants were baptized and five received the rite at their homes. Thirteen Bibles were given to children in token of baptism seven years ago. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Phillips, D. D., and wife, sail for Europe June 12, to be absent three months. The assistant pastor, Mr. C. N. Thorp, will remain in charge during their absence. He will enter upon his new pastorate at Oswego, N. Y., in October, followed by the best wishes of this church.

Simonsville has engaged Miss A. C. Billings to remain with it until October. The standing debt of the church has been met by pledges, and the people are encouraged.

Norwich.—At the recent annual meeting 130 responses were given to the roll-call. About twice that number sat down to supper. An indebtedness of only $30 was reported.

Morrisville.—The pew holders have completed the organization of the First Church Meeting House Association. A small assessment has been voted to meet expenses.

The Granby parsonage has been made ready for the new pastor.——Rev. E. H. Eppens has closed his work in Pittsfield.

Rhode Island

Providence.—Central. Rev. W. T. Holmes of Montclair, N. J., began work as assistant pastor June 1. A course of four addresses on Sunday evenings by Dr. E. C. Moore on The New Testament Canon has recently closed. They were the substance of a course given at Haverford College in the spring. A Monday noon Bible class at the Portuguese Mission under care of this church is attended by 40 to 50 men and 33 have united with the church from this mission in a year. The mortgage debt has been considerably reduced during the year.——Union. Dr. Wallace Nutting sails this week for an extended tour in Europe, with special reference to observation and study of the cathedrals of the Old World. Losses by death have been among the sad experiences of this church during the winter and spring.——Plymouth. Quite recently $600 for a new carpet and needed repairs were promptly given on a Sunday morning. The sum was collected for the increase of the present building fund of several hundred dollars.——Academy Avenue. Rev. W. E. Smedley resumed pastoral work May 30 after a severe illness of many weeks. Rev. F. F. Emerson supplied his pulpit part of the time.

Wood River Junction.—A pulpit for the new edifice was purchased by the results of 20 persons investing the total of $1 distributed between them. A silver communion service is the gift of three Providence churches. Rev. A. J. Small resigns on account of ill health.

Cranston.—Edgewood. In face of the great strain and suspense of building problems, the current expense fund has been increased by more than $700 over last year and $190 increase in benevolence.

Connecticut

New Haven.—Taylor, during its six months without a pastor, has cleared off its debt and looks forward hopefully to the future under its new pastor, Rev. A. M. Hall of Yale Divinity School, who until now has been a member of the United Brethren. He was three years professor of Hebrew and Old Testament literature in Butler College. He begins work with this church June 20.——The first institute of the New Haven Primary Union was held June 10 at the Church of the Redeemer. Delegates were present from all over the State. In the afternoon an address was given by Mrs. S. W. Clark, president of the New York union, on How to Use the Crayon. She illustrated her method with a class of children present, and a talk to mothers was given by Mrs. E. P. Armstrong. In the evening the conference was addressed by Mrs. Clark, Mrs. M. I. Hicks, president of the New Haven union, Rev. W. L. Phillips, D. D., and Rev. E. P. Armstrong.

Windham.—A brass railing with draperies has been placed around the platform occupied by the choir, and the singers and organist will remain there during the entire service instead of retiring to the ante-room as heretofore.

Litchfield.—The past year has been most prosperous. All debts have been paid, the parsonage repaired at a cost of $350 and over $200 is left in the treasury. Rev. John Hutchins is pastor.

The Milton meeting house has been shingled and it will be papered within and painted without.——The bell at Riverton, being insecurely fastened, fell from its hangings recently, doing quite a little damage.——Thirty-three dollars have been collected at the church at Centerbrook and the chapel at Ivoryton for the starving in India.——The Ladies' Aid Society of Wethersfield cleared $154 from the suppers and entertainments given the past season.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

Norwich.—First has issued a neat manual, with colored cuts of the meeting house and pastor, Rev. E. J. Klock, and with the usual lists and historical sketch. Besides the other ordinary contents there are rules for business meetings, a digest of State laws regarding religious bodies and facts about Congregationalism.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

Cleveland.—Rev. C. M. Severance, recently a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. in Japan, has accepted a unanimous call of the trustees of the Congregational City Missionary Society to be pastor of the Denison Avenue Mission for a year from May 1. He is already living on the field, and attendance both at Sunday school and morning and evening services is encouraging. It is hoped that a church will be organized in the near future.

Cincinnati.—Walnut Hills. Rev. J. R. Danforth, formerly of Philadelphia, has begun work and preached his first sermon recently.——Price Hill. The pulpit is temporarily supplied by Professor Penniman of Berea College.——Newport. This pulpit, recently vacated by Rev. G. A. Veitz, is supplied by ex Pres. J. W. Simpson of Marietta.——The Congregational Ministers' Association has adjourned for the summer.

Geneva.—First. The more commodious quarters recently added include two stories and a basement at the front of the meeting house and a new tower. Thus a prayer meeting room, a S. S. room and parlors are provided, and also a new choir section and pulpit rostrum were built. The auditorium has been reseated and the floor recarpeted. Memorial windows are placed in the first floor walls.

Illinois

[For other Chicago news see page 862.]

Chicago.—California Avenue has granted its pastor, Rev. Dr. D. F. Fox, leave of absence from the middle of June to the first of September, chiefly on account of Mrs. Fox's health. Mr. and Mrs. Fox will spend their vacation in Colorado, with headquarters at Manitou. Supplies have been secured for every Sunday during the pastor's absence. At the last communion, June 6, 14 members were received, 12 being adults who received the ordinance of baptism. Illness has made the year a hard one for the pastor, but the work of the church has been successful ——Plymouth has voted to give its pastor, Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, three months' vacation in which to recuperate. Probably he will go abroad. Although steadily improving, as yet he is unable to leave his room. June 13 Dr. J. H. Barrows occupied his pulpit and preached the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Armour Institute.——First. Dr. E. P. Goodwin is still too feeble to preach, but is slowly regaining his strength.——Union Park. Dr. F. A. Noble will leave the city the first of July for a two months' absence. During July his pulpit will be supplied by Professor King of Oberlin, and in August by Dr. Fiske of St. Louis.

Waukegan.—German. This people is moving on with faith and courage, though the past year has been one of trial financially. The pastor, Rev. Karl Freitag, gave instruction on the Bible and the way of salvation to a class of young people every Saturday for 12 months. As a result nine bright boys and girls between 13 and 16 years of age united with the church on a recent Sunday. Such additions augur well for the future of the church.

Pana.—The pastor, Rev. W. C. North, is seeking to enlarge his field of usefulness by holding open air services at the grand stand in the fair grounds, the use of which the authorities freely granted. The attendance is fine, a good number of young men being included. These meetings have already borne fruit, and seem to give promise of cheering results.

Emington has called to the pastorate Mr. J. B. Losey, who has for some time served as stated supply. He will be ordained this month. Both pastor and people look forward with pleasure to a season of earnest work, which it is hoped will strengthen and enlarge their borders.

Indiana

Central.—This field, with the Beechwood and Cedarwood churches, makes large demands upon Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Murray, the missionaries. Mrs. Murray conducts much of the home work. June 6 was Children's Day at Central. The house was crowded, and decorated with evergreen and flowers. The Cedarwood congregation still worships in the schoolhouse. Recently the sole remaining trustee of the Heidelberg German Reformed Church united here with his family, and steps are now being taken to purchase the Heidelberg building. The community was originally constituted of German families from Pennsylvania, but German services are now no longer desired.

Indianapolis.—Mayflower. Rev. N. A. Hyde, D.D., recently preached in the absence of the pastor, and Rev. George E. Hill preached for the Southside Church. The latter has removed its quarters from Odd Fellows' Hall to a rented chapel on a prominent corner, which it hopes to purchase.

Michigan

Greenville.—During Rev. A. M. Hyde's three years' pastorate, now terminated, more than 250 persons have come into the church. Every department has flourished, and through the "worker's unions" every member has done some pastoral work. Through this system more than 10,000 pastoral calls a year have been made. At the farewell reception the church gave Mr. and Mrs Hyde many beautiful and costly presents.

Grand Rapids.—Barker Memorial has received a beautiful communion set from the Consolidated Workers of Park Church. The young church is grateful for the gift.——Smith Memorial has received 26 additions, all on confession. These are largely the fruit of Rev. Joel Martin's evangelistic services, so well followed up by the faithful work of the pastor.

St. Johns.—Rev. H. E. Butler closed his pastorate of three and a half years the first of June. During this time 113 persons have been added to the church. His address for the present is Alma.

Wisconsin

Vircqua, Rev. J. H. Dixon, pastor, held impressive closing services in the old meeting house preparatory to erecting at once a fine modern building. Sec. H. W. Carter preached the sermon. An invitation from the Christian Church to share their fine new building was accepted for June 6.

Lake Mills.—Sec. H. W. Carter conducted the communion service and received into membership the pastor, Rev. T. F. Murphy, his wife and their two children with three others the last of May. The congregations are growing, and a Sunday Evening Club assists.

THE WEST

Iowa

Osage.—May 9 was the fifth anniversary of Dr. W. W. Gist's settlement. In these years there have been 192 accessions, the benevolences have been $4,116 and the home expenses $12,667. The prayer meeting attendance has increased fourfold. The meeting is held in the auditorium, having outgrown the lecture-room. The pastoral calls for the five years exceed 3,600. At the close of the anniversary address a member, in the name of the church, congregation and community, assured Dr. Gist of their esteem, affection and appreciation of his work.

Manchester.—Rev. H. W. Tuttle began the ninth year of his pastorate May 6, having served longer here than any other pastor. The church is united and prosperous in all its departments, and hopes for many more years of service with its devoted pastor. When he came the membership was 142; it now numbers 275. The same superintendent has had charge of the Sunday school for the past eight years.

Gomer.—Rev. R. E. Roberts closed a five years' pastorate here June 13. During this time the membership has nearly doubled. Mr. Roberts expects to spend six months or a year at the Moody Institute. In this Welsh church a part of the services are held in English.

In spite of hard times and the H. M. debt, new fields insist on opening up. Steamboat Rock has called a council asking recognition as a new church. Radcliffe has taken steps to organize, Clermont, expecting to organize, has engaged a student for the summer, and Cushing, Lawn Hill and Wesley are seeking to enter the Congregational fold. In each of these six places there is room, material and demand for a church of our denomination.

Pioneer, a country church, is being supplied by Rev. J. D. Mason of Clear Lake.——At Kellogg the women have expended $40 in decorating the interior of the audience-room.

Minnesota

Biwabik.—The work is prospering under the charge of Rev. C. E. Wilcox, the Sunday school having been largely increased and some local entertainments given which attract the miners. The church has voted to withdraw from the Northern Pacific Conference and unite with another to be formed. Evangelist Fellows is visiting there at present.

Springfield has made great progress during the year. A troublesome debt of $250 has been raised, and the pastor has preached three times every Sunday, driving 25 miles. The out-station at Selma has so prospered that a resident pastor is desired, and it is believed that he can be supported without H. M. aid.

Walker.—Mr. W. A. Kennedy has closed his six months' work and is succeeded by Mr. Ira G. Hambleton of Chicago Seminary, who will probably remain for the summer. He has just graduated at Chicago. The outlook is hopeful in this growing town, which at present has but one church.

Duluth.—Mayflower. Mr. Ernest Day has closed his work, the church being too much discouraged to continue services. It awaits the approach of better times.——Plymouth, yoked with Morley, is prospering. Rev. W. W. Newell preaches there evenings.

Sleepy Eye.—Rev. William Blackwell has completed six years' service with this church, during which it has come to self-support, and has increased in membership and in influence. The members are heartily united in the desire to keep Mr. Blackwell.

St. Cloud.—Rev. H. S. McCowan has closed his work and Rev. H. F. Gilt is preaching for two Sundays. The attempt at uniting the different denominations has fallen through and the Congregational church will probably call a pastor.

Brainerd.—First. Rev. G. W. Gallagher has begun work under favorable auspices.——Second. Rev. M. B. Bird finds the meeting house too small, it being crowded at every service. A subscription is being raised for a new building.

New Ulm.—Rev. H. W. Johnson has been successful in reviving and increasing the congregations. Much interest is manifested. An attempt to start a Unitarian church does not interfere with his success.

Waterville and Morristown have been pastorless since Rev. W. A. Warren went to Spring Valley. A new minister has now been secured, and the churches will continue to be self-supporting.

Clearwater and Hasty.—Rev. J. L. Jones has accepted an invitation to remain another year. Welcome additions to each church are among the encouraging items.

Lake Benton.—Rev. William Lodwick has been for nearly two years upon this field, preaching also at Tyler and Lake Stay. This necessitates a drive of 50 miles.

Nebraska

Omaha.—Plymouth has collected a sum sufficient to pay the debt on its building and is now undertaking repairs which are greatly needed. Rev. H. S. MacAyeal is pastor.

Long Pine.—Rev. J. H. Andress preaches at an out-station seven miles distant, where interest is growing. At the home church the work is steadily gaining.

PACIFIC COAST

California

San Francisco.—Richmond now requires the entire time of Rev. Philip Coombe, through whose exertions much success has been realized in the past three years. Relinquishing work at Pierce Street he begins morning service at Richmond.——Mariners'. From 15 to 20 services are held weekly. Conversions are frequent, and a week without one is exceptional.——The third Missionary Extension Summer School is to be held the last two weeks in July. Aside from local representatives several prominent speakers from the East are expected. Miss Berry, State superintendent of missions for C. E. Societies, at her headquarters will have an exhibit of missionary extension on the Pacific coast from early missions to the present time, including work among the Chinese, Japanese, Spanish, Indians and other nationalities.

Oakland.—First. Rev. and Mrs. C. R. Brown were cordially received by their people on returning from a trip to the Holy Land. They arrived in time for Children's Day.

Interesting evangelistic services at Park Church, Berkeley, have been conducted for two weeks, with encouraging results.——First Church, Santa Cruz, received to membership on Children's Day Mr. and Mrs. Charles Newell. The former is 81 years old. ——Rio Vista has purchased, for $2,000, a parsonage, soon to be occupied by the new pastor, Rev. C. C. Cragin of San José.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES

No dances or theatrical exhibitions have taken place in Waterloo, Me , since the C. E. Society was started.

Older members of an Ohio society hold monthly meetings by themselves to consider new ways of working.

At a convention in a small Kentucky town that could entertain only 60 delegates, 18 offered themselves for foreign work.

For June the Prayer Chain is praying for universal peace, that war everywhere may give way to arbitration, and that Christian nations may become examples of fellowship and mutual toleration.

Each society applying during June can receive copies of three pamphlets on systematic giving in sufficient quantities to supply each family represented in the society. Apply to "Layman," 312 Ashland Avenue, Chicago.

Endeavorers of Puget Sound are arranging excursions for delegates to California, returning by the northern lines. For information about this section of the country, and best ways of seeing it, address W. H. Lewis, Seattle.

After two or three years of effort for better government in their city, Toledo Endeavorers succeeded this year in a movement resulting in the choice of a Christian mayor, a majority on the police board and two-thirds of the aldermen and councilmen.

Many local conventions in California are given up this year to concentrate more effort at San Francisco. The State convention will be held July 10 for business and a reception. California is working hard for better observance of the Lord's Day.

At an annual meeting of a China local union 15 congregations were represented, one of them 80 miles away. The matter of entertainment caused no difficulty since the delegates came in houseboats. Some of them spent time in evangelistic work on shore.

At Powellville, Liberia, there was given a report of the Washington convention by their only delegate to Washington, Rev. G. P. Goll. During his absence he had collected badges from 20 or 30 different societies to make into a banner, which is offered to the society forming the most new societies within a year.

The cause of systematic giving in Cleveland, O., has received a strong impulse from an enthusiastic rally. Each society in the union was asked to send a representative. Every person present was given a leaflet containing pertinent facts and questions. The questions were discussed, and three brief addresses on tithe-giving followed. The work of the Tenth Legion was presented and literature and pledge cards were distributed for all the societies.

A society in a mission school in Burmah decided to attempt to improve the Sunday schools in the jungles and to establish schools in places where there were none. Four boys were chosen to look after this work—two to be supported by the society and two by missionaries. The plan was to visit a village and urge every one to attend the sessions. The effectiveness of the work may be seen from the fact that in one village of 90 there are 89 attendants, the remaining one being an invalid.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK

The 21st annual meeting of the Niagara Bible Conference for Bible study will be held at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, Canada, for seven days, beginning July 7. All the sessions are devoted to study, with devotional meetings. The subjects this year are the Minor Prophets and Paul's Letter to the Churches. Other subjects will pertain to the enlargement of Christian life and to world-wide evangelism. The following teachers will be present: Drs. Erdman, Goodwin and Parsons, Professors Moorehead and Streeter and Messrs. Howitt, Needham and others. The conference pavilion is situated on a high bluff at the mouth of the Niagara River, and offers abundant opportunity for sight-seeing. Besides the Queen's Royal Hotel there is ample accommodation in the quaint old village. Information may be secured from Dr. W. J. Erdman, 1157 Morris Street, Germantown, Pa.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BARBOUR, Thos. W., Palmyra, Wis., has begun work at E. Troy.
BARTLEY, Wm. T., Andover Sem., to Salem, N. H. Accepts.
BUSHELL, Richard, Marysville, Wn., to new ch. at McMurray. Accepts.
CHAPIN, Miss Abbie, to Sudbury, Vt., for a year. Accepts.
COWAN, John, S. Deerfield, Mass., to Southampton. Accepts.
DAINS, Chas. H., Newaygo, Mich., to Pittsfield, O. Accepts, and will study at Oberlin Sem.
DOLE, Sylvester R., Parkman, O., to Edinburgh. Accepts.
DUNCAN, Calvin W., Dexter, Minn., to Waterville and Morristown. Accepts.
EDDY, Wm. D., recently of Rensselaer Falls, N. Y., to become Adirondack Field Supt. of N. Y. State S. S. Association. Accepts, with residence at S. Glens Falls.
EDWARDS, Rosine M., Pacific Sem., accepts call to Hillyard, Wn., and has begun work.
GILT, Henry F., Eugene, Ore., declines call to Moravia, N. Y., and accepts one to Fifth Presb. Ch., Minneapolis.
GRAHAM, John J., formerly of Huntley, Ill., to Jefferson Park Ch., Chicago. Accepts.
HADLEY, Willis A., North Ch., Lynn, Mass., to Southbridge.
HAINER, Levi W., recently pastor of First Ch., Newark, N. J., to become acting pastor of George St. Ch., Oxford, Eng.
HOLMES, Wm. T., Andover Sem , to be asst. pastor of Central Ch., Providence, R. I. Accepts.
LOSEY, John B., Chicago Sem., to Emington, Ill., where he has been supplying.
MACFARLAND, Chas. S., to remain another year at Bethany, Ct., where he has been supplying.
McCLEARY, Owen L., formerly of Owen's Grove, Io., to Ionia and Bassett. Accepts.
MERRILL, Chas. C., Yale Sem., to Steubenville, O.
MULLENBACH, Jas., Chicago Sem., to Chassell and Jacobsville, Mich. Accepts.
PIERPONT, John, W. Cornwall, Ct., accepts call to Williamsburg, Mass., for a year.
SLOAN, Alex., Jr., Andover Sem., accepts call to Groveland, Mass.

Ordinations and Installations

ALDRICH, Benj. F., rec. p. Ypsilanti, Mich., June 11.
HILL, Charles W., o. Caseyville Ch., Diamond, Ind., June 8. Sermon, Rev. C. H. Percival; other parts, Rev. J. A. Griffin, Supt. E. D. Curtis, D. D., L. F. Purdue, Esq.
HOLMES, Otis H., o. p. Cresco, Io., June 1. Sermon and prayer, Rev. C. A. Marshall; other parts, Rev. Messrs. V. B. Hill and Mahlon Willett, D. D.
McELVEEN, Wm. T., i. New England Ch., Brooklyn, N. Y., June 10. Sermon, Rev. A. J. Lyman, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. C. Wilson, Alex. Lewis, Drs. S. H. Virgin, A. J. F. Behrends, J. T. Duryea, J. D. Wells.
WIDDEMER, Howard S., i. Asbury Park, N. J., June 8.
WISWELL, Thos. C., o. and i. Brooklyn Ch., Seattle, Wn , June 1. Sermon, Rev. W. H. G. Temple; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Sam'l Greene, J. T. Nichols, W. C. Merritt and A. J. Bailey.

Resignations

COOMBE, Philip, Pierce St. Ch., San Francisco, to devote his whole time to Richmond Ch., same city.
HESCOCK, Gustavus B., Fort Fairfield, Me.
KING, Walter D., Highland Station and Hartland, Mich.
LEWIS, Edwin J., North Ch., Mansfield, Ct., to take effect at end of the present pastoral year.
PRESTON, Wm. F., Onondaga, Mich.
RIGGS, Geo. W., Edmore and Six Lakes, Mich.
ROBERTS, Rob't E., Gomer, Io.
SMALL, Andrew J., Wood River Junction, R. I.
STACEY, John W., Webster, Mich.
TURNER, John M., Sergeant's Bluff, Io , to accept call to Bellevue. He will begin work July 1.

Churches Organized

BUNKER HILL, Wis., rec. in connection with Dodgeville.
CHICAGO, Fellowship Chapel, 6 June, 43 members.
LA CANADA, Cal., 23 May, 19 members.

Miscellaneous

ALLEN, Ernest B., on returning to Lansing, Mich., with his bride, was given a reception by his people of Pilgrim Church and a purse of money sufficient to pay a year's rent of the parsonage.
BLISS, Chas. R. closes his official connection with the Congregational Education Society with its present fiscal year, and has accepted the position of financial secretary of Salt Lake College.
DAY, Ernest, has closed his work at New Duluth, Minn., and will spend the summer at Aitken.
OTTMAN, Walter H., son of Rev. H. A. Ottman of St. Luke's Church, Elmira, N. Y., has received from Cornell University a fellowship in American history.
PORTER, Sam'l E., Wahpeton, N. D., will supply at Windsor, Mt. Pleasant and out-stations during the summer.
TITUS, Herbert R , has returned from his European trip to Vergennes, Vt., where he awaits a pastoral charge.
TROW, Wm. A., of Sherburne, N. Y., has been granted leave of absence for a month, in addition to the annual vacation, to allow of a trip to Europe. He will sail July 14.

EDUCATION

—— The American Institute of Sacred Theology, whose work is under the direction of a body of Biblical instructors from the leading universities and seminaries of the country, makes its usual announcement of summer work at twelve different points in the United States, including Chautauqua and the University of Chicago. These are schools of Bible teaching in the original tongues and in English, and last year enrolled 5,000 pupils.

—— It is a good sign for our colleges that the interest in debating continues to increase. The contests between Harvard, Yale and Princeton were this year especially well managed and awakened much undergraduate enthusiasm. The Cornell Era devotes a special number to a verbatim report of the annual debate of Cornell with the University of Pennsylvania, which gives good evidence of the growth of the interest in these quarters also.

—— The first summer school of theology, held under the auspices of the Kansas Bible Institute in connection with Washburn College, May 10–21, was a success in point of numbers in attendance and interest. Professors Curtiss and Scott of Chicago Seminary lectured daily, the former on Messianic Prophecy and the latter on The Times of Jesus. Professor Scott also gave a series of evening addresses on Modern Missions and Culture. Rev. Messrs. Dougherty, Sheldon, Veazie and Bauer-Griffiths also gave valuable lectures.

—— Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla., has closed an unusually prosperous year owing largely to the enthusiastic lead of Pres. G. M. Ward, who has just rounded out his first year in that office. Since his election friends have been won for the college, and the course of study has been revised. The annual catalogue, lately published, shows advance also in the entrance examinations. Two new departments have been added—the normal and the business school. The attendance last year, over 200 in all classes, was double that of the preceding year.

—— Lasell Seminary Commencement season at Auburndale, Mass., included an excellent concert of vocal and instrumental music, entertainments by the two clubs of the school, Class Day exercises, the principal's reception with a repast and orchestral music and the Commencement address by Dr. R. S. MacArthur. At the alumnæ meeting Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer gave the address. The baccalaureate sermon, June 6, was preached by Rev. C. M. Southgate. Many friends from neighboring and distant places enjoyed the closing days of the year.

—— Among the many institutions that are holding their graduating exercises few are so unique as that of Clarke Institution, Northampton. Miss C. A. Yale and her twenty associate teachers are enthusiasts in their devotion to the work in behalf of deaf mutes. The motto of the class that graduated June 9, "Quit you like men," was appropriate for the four manly fellows who go out to other schools, well prepared to enter into competition with their fellows who are not crippled by deafness. Pres. Franklin Carter's address on the life, the work, the fight against great odds, of Samuel Heincke, the pioneer of oral education for the deaf, was presented in vivid style. Elegant specimens of cabinet and carved woodwork were exhibited by the pupils.

—— Wisconsin certainly deals generously by its State University, charmingly located in the beautiful city of Madison. The last legislature provided for a sufficient addition to its income to insure that yearly $450,000 will be at the disposal of its trustees. It, in addition, provided for the speedy completion of the library building, which will accommodate half a million volumes. It is already rich in books relating to the history of the Northwest. Meanwhile, the development of the various departments goes on constantly. The recent transformation of the ladies' hall furnishes a good proportion of the 350 women connected with the university with ample accommodations. Pres. C. K. Adams and his accomplished wife are widely influential throughout the State and in the five years of their service at Madison have succeeded in disarming altogether the criticism which is apt to be rife with reference to a State University. Professor Ely continues to be one of the most potent members of the faculty, while the occupants of the other important chairs have been carefully selected and keep the level of scholarship fully equal to that of any university, east or west. It is worth remarking that President Adams, like President Northrup of Minnesota University, President Angell of the University of Michigan and President Bradley of Illinois State University, is a loyal and useful member of a Congregational church. As long as such men hold the helm of State universities the relation between them and the denominational colleges is likely to be friendly and mutually beneficial.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, June 27–July 3. How To Get Patience and Why. Jas. 5: 7–20.

Patience with God's ordering of our lives, with our own infirmities and with the mistakes and weaknesses of others, is acquired first of all by cherishing large views of life. There are times in the spring when the progress of vegetation seems to be arrested by what seems to us unseasonable weather. We almost begin to worry lest the flowers and fruits of summer and autumn shall be blighted, but somehow or other nature seems to come to a certain average of fruition at about the same time every year. This chilly waiting period in nature finds its parallel over and again in human life. God does not bring events to pass as rapidly as we think he might. The important cause in which we are interested lags; the indifference and conservatism of others obstruct our cherished purposes; the network of human relationship in which we find ourselves becomes more and more tangled despite our best efforts; we have done our very best, and still the thing which we want does not come to pass. What then? Hear the clarion call of the apostle, "Having done all, to stand." Learn that waiting, quite as much as doing, is the service which we render our Master. Provided we have been brave and persistent and energetic enough, we are relieved as to the responsibility for the outcome of our action. God may have ways of bringing it to pass without our aid, and at any rate he may be wanting to teach us the lesson which is so hard to learn—the power to hold ourselves steady and patient, and simply wait his own time.

Prayer helps, as it does with the cultivation of any Christian virtue, but it is of particular service here because it is only through prayer that we get a broad view of God's plan in the direction of the individual life. It helps, also, to remember God's patience with us. However much others may irritate and excite us, however disgusted we may get with ourselves, it must be that we have given our Heavenly Father occasion to be a thousand-fold more impatient with us, if it be possible for him to be swayed by such feelings.

The root idea of the word "patience" carries with it the thought of suffering, and no one ever becomes genuinely patient who has not endured some pain in acquiring it. It does not come simply from yielding one's self up impotently to the inevitable. It comes from bravely shouldering one's cross and going forward either to achieve victory or to endure defeat, or perhaps to wait quietly year after year unconscious whether the final issue shall be victory or defeat. It was in this spirit that our Lord acquired his patience. Think of the waiting years in Nazareth when there must have been moments when the eager soul burned to be off and at his life work. Think of the periods which came later, when he had to curb his own impatience, to adjust himself to the will of the Father. Think of the slow, tedious way of suffering which he trod at the last. We who follow in his footsteps must learn from him how patience is won.

Parallel verses: Job 1: 21, 22; Ps. 37: 7; Prov. 14: 29; Eccle. 7: 8; Rom. 2: 7; 12: 12; Heb. 10: 36; 12: 1.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JUNE 11

Miss Emma T. Bird presiding read Phil. 1: 27: "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ," especially appropriate at this last meeting in view of the summer scattering. Life often seems to be cheapened in the summer time, and the Christian needs to remind himself of his citizenship. If in the winter the Martha spirit is prone to gain the ascendency, the summer gives the opportunity to sit with Mary at the Lord's feet.

The subject Micronesia came to the fore, a field which has enlisted the first special interest of many in mission work. Mrs. Judson Smith gave a running commentary upon the individual workers. The Morning Star will carry upon its next voyage Miss Olin to Kusaie and Miss Beulah Logan to join her mother at Ruk. Mrs. Thompson and Miss Stanwood gave additional items, and the last numbers of the Missionary Herald and Life and Light were commended to all who would learn the encouraging information received by the recent yearly mail. Mrs. Goodell spoke of the inspiration gained from these Friday meetings and of confidence in the promises of God.

Mrs. Stedman reported from Miss Daniels of Harpoot, whose disappointment at finding one box thoroughly water soaked and useless was followed by comfort in receiving another box which was not spoiled. Miss Daniels was longing for a manifestation of the Spirit with power in the hearts and lives of the students.

It was a delight to welcome Miss M. S. Morrill, just arrived from China. With great regret she had heeded the doctor's decision for her to leave for a time her beloved work in Pao-ting-fu. She brought messages from Chinese women and from friends in this country along the way. She told of money given by the women in Pao-ting-fu, who said: "Send it to some women who are more miserable than we are," choosing Micronesia as the place where it should go and receiving a certificate of shares in the Robert W. Logan. She is glad to work in a land of promise.

Miss Colby of Japan spoke of the pleasure of always being known in that country as "the Jesus women." Miss Atkinson read extracts from a letter from Miss Stillson of Umzumbe, recounting a wonderful work in all the stations of the Zulu Mission. Mrs. Strong presented a request sent by Miss Seymour of Harpoot for earnest prayer for the Armenians and Turkey. Miss Stone of Bulgaria gave an encouraging word about workers there who are helping those in other lands.

The various interests mentioned during the hour were reiterated in the prayers which were offered. After singing

Blest be the tie that binds, notice was given that the Friday meetings will now be discontinued till the autumn.

Marriages

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

BOYNTON—REYNOLDS—In Rome, Italy, May 10, by Rev. William Burt, D. D., Louis Holmes Boynton of Boston and Maud Franklin Reynolds of New York city.

MOFFAT—WAGSTAFF—In Detroit, Mich., June 9, by Rev. Morgan Wood, Rev. T. Aird Moffat, pastor of Grace Congregational Church, Chicago, and Sophia A., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Wagstaff of Detroit.

TALCOTT—CHURCHILL—In New Britain, Ct., on Wednesday, June 9, at the residence of the bride's mother, by Rev. J. Frederick Talcott of New York and Rev. J. W. Cooper, D. D., of New Britain, May, elder daughter of the late Frederick H. Churchill, and George Sherman Talcott.

THURBER—FISK—In Wilburtha, N. J., at "Riverside," the home of the bride's mother, June 9, by Rev. Edward G. Thurber, D. D., pastor of the American church, 21 Rue de Berri, Paris, France, Bertha, daughter of the late Harvey Fisk of New York, and Samuel W. Thurber, M. D., of New York.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

DORT—In Troy, N. H., May 2, of consumption, Edwin Buttrick Dort, only son of A. C. and E. B. Dort.

TUCKER—In Dorchester, June 11, Rev. Joshua T. Tucker, D. D., aged 84 years.

REV. JOHN L. HARRIS

When a Christian minister passes on to his reward, after serving the churches for nearly forty years, it seems fitting that something more should be said than the simple announcement that he lived, labored and died. The subject of this sketch was born in Rock Hill, Belmont County, O., May 27, 1831. He was of Quaker parentage, and had the advantage of spending his early life on a farm under the benign influence of a godly father and mother.

A combination of circumstances led him into the Methodist Episcopal Church. There he received his call to the ministry, and on completing the course of studies as prescribed by the discipline was ordained in 1860. His most important charges while in the Methodist church were at Lockport and Waukegan, Ill.

In 1872 he came to New England and entered into the more congenial fellowship and ministry of the Congregational church. Here he did his best work while pastor of the Pacific Church, New Bedford, Wellesley Hills and Essex, Mass., also Derry and Newmarket, N. H. It was while serving the last named church that he was stricken down, about six years ago, with grip, from which he never fully recovered. The last years of his life were spent in Everett, Mass. They were years of great suffering, in which he exhibited great patience and a sweet spirit of resignation, thus exemplifying the virtues he taught. No wonder he often longed to go home, for he felt that "to depart and be with Christ was far better" than to remain a helpless pilgrim in a strange land. At length, in the early morning of May 7, the Master said "Come," and he went, leaving a widow and two sons to cherish his memory.

His spirit with a bound
  Left its encumbering clay;
His tent, at sunrise, on the ground
  A darkened ruin lay.

The pains of death are past,
  Labor and sorrow cease,
And life's long warfare closed at last,
  His soul is found in peace.

We think of Brother Harris as a man of great energy, a tireless worker, always anxious to "push things." New churches, reconstructed churches, and churches relieved from debt bear testimony to his grit and perseverance. Better still, his sympathetic interest in young men, and his continuous efforts to save and help all, tell of his warm and loving heart.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

A. W.

POND'S EXTRACT for pain without an equal for forty years, carries this prestige with every bottle.

BOILS, pimples and eruptions, scrofula, salt rheum and all other manifestations of impure blood are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Royal makes the food pure,
wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

A Good Appetite

Is essential for perfect health and physical strength, but when the blood is weak, thin and impure, the stomach Cannot perform its duty and the appetite fails. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an Appetite and giving sound digestion. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones the stomach and digestive organs and Gives strength to the nerves and health and vigor to the whole system. Be sure to get Hood's and only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness 25 cents.

Bargains in Pianos

FOR THE

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Suitable for either Church or Sunday School use.

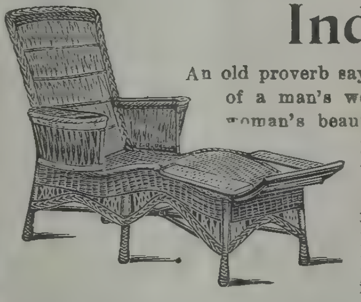
IVERS & POND GRAND. Has been used a little, but you would hardly know it. Is in splendid condition throughout. Rich, powerful tone, delightful action. Easily worth $500. Special price $300.

IVERS & POND SQUARE. Almost new. Full size, 7⅓ octaves. Beautiful tone. Specially adapted to Sunday School use, the player being able to look over the piano and see the school. This piano will give just as good satisfaction musically and will wear as well as the most expensive piano you can buy. Special price $175.

IVERS & POND UPRIGHT. Oak case. Small size. 5½ octaves. Just the thing for Chapel or Sunday School use. Will last a lifetime and give good service to the end. Special price $150.

We include stool and cover, prepay railway freights to New England points, ship subject to approval and sell on Easy Payments. If inconvenient to call, full particulars by mail if you write.

IVERS & POND PIANO CO.,
114 Boylston Street - - - Boston.



Indescribable.

An old proverb says that you can believe only half what you hear of a man's wealth, and only a quarter what you hear of a woman's beauty. But on the question of a chair's comfort you can believe twice what you hear, for no words can describe it.

Not until you sink into this seat can you realize the full possibilities of summer luxury. It is one of the old Fayal "shaped" chair-couches. In the broad table arms there is a recessed opening for a goblet, with extra space for books, etc. Beneath the arms are huge pockets for newspapers, a cracker jar, embroidery work, smoking utensils, or any useful articles.

At the lower end of the couch are two seats, one on either side, and a raised foot rest. Cushions may be added if desired. It is the very apotheosis of comfort.

Catalogue of Summer Furniture, 36 pages, mailed on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The entire situation as regards trade and finance has undergone marked improvement and a stronger feeling is noticeable all round. The continued rainy weather has been unfavorable to business activity in some lines, yet notwithstanding this adverse factor the authorities report gains in several directions. Thus, business in iron and steel has increased to such an extent that prices on pig iron and steel billets have gone up $1 per ton.

It is always a good indication when iron and steel products advance in price and the market for them becomes active. The late Jay Gould regarded iron as the barometer of trade, although nowadays railroad earnings, collectively taken, are regarded as a much more faithful barometer of business conditions.

Business men are looking forward with impatience to the passage of the tariff bill, for they almost universally believe that the settlement of the tariff will give an impetus to general trade. Money rates continue easy and the tendency at the moment is certainly not towards much strength. Cotton goods still lag behind, but mill agents have not given up bright hopes of a good fall trade.

Lumber, boots and shoes, hardware and building materials are moving in moderate volume. Wool is quiet and woolen goods are in fair request. The greatest display of strength in the business world is in the stock exchange. Security values ruled very strong all last week, and those in a position to watch the course of speculation give it as their opinion that we are only beginning a bull market which will last all summer. West End stock has gone up in the local market on the signing of the L. bill by the governor.

◆

EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT

It is often said that the doctrine of future punishment is seldom preached in our pulpits, and the saying is no doubt true. The fact is sometimes cited as an evidence that orthodox preaching is being permeated with Unitarianism. It is therefore interesting to find in a recent sermon by a Unitarian pastor of Boston, Rev. H. N. Brown of King's Chapel, such pungent utterances as these, based on the text Matt. 18: 8:

> It is idle to urge that we no longer believe in everlasting fire as a literal fact. The evidence is of the slightest that to Christ it was in any sense a literal reality. But as we are tried and saved here on earth, "so as by fire," in like manner we are warned of a punishment hereafter which burns and stings as if a fire had been kindled in the depths of the soul; and no wise man neglects that warning because of the insufficiency of the symbolism through which it is conveyed.
>
> All roads, assuredly, do not lead to heaven. Side by side with the upward path, which men have climbed through tears and blood, whose difficulties have been vanquished by many a costly sacrifice, and up which every soul must toil at some expense of heroic effort—side by side with this, at every point, there runs a downward way whose final end we do not see.
>
> The dangers and disasters that lie along that road of degeneration, here and hereafter, no one can exaggerate. They are everywhere written in the history of the past, and make such a lurid tale as no imagination of an inferno can surpass. "Upon whomsoever this stone shall fall, it will grind him to powder," it is written; and the wheels of fate, whether designed by devil or by deity, do crush men as remorselessly as millstones crush wheat.
>
> When the soul of man gives up its striving for the best and highest aims, forgets to count all things but loss for the glory that is set before it, ceases to cut off the lower good that stands in the way of its attainment of heaven, it has begun a descent toward the bottomless pit of horror and great darkness; and to that soul God and angels cry, with infinite compassion, to turn from its wickedness and live.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

Flight of a Tartar Tribe. By Thomas De Quincey. Edited by Milton H. Turk. pp. 78. 25 cents.

H. L. Hastings. Boston.

Fireside Readings. Written and Selected by H. L. Hastings. pp. 382 $1 50

Lamson, Wolffe & Co. Boston.

At the Queen's Mercy. By Mabel F. Blodgett. pp. 261. $1.25.

De Wolfe, Fisk & Co. Boston.

Samuel Sewall and the World He Lived in. By Rev. N. H. Chamberlain. pp. 319.

D. Appleton & Co. New York.

England. By Francis E. Cooke. pp. 253. 60 cents.

Germany. By Kate F. Kroiker. pp 251. 60 cents.

In Brook and Bayou. By Clara K Bayliss. pp. 180 60 cents.

Woman and the Republic. By Helen K. Johnson. pp. 327. $1.50

Dodd, Mead & Co. New York.

The Personal Life of Queen Victoria. By Sarah A. Tooley. pp. 276. $2 00.

The Romance of Lady Isabel Burton. 2 Vols. Told in part by herself and in part by W. H. Wilkins. pp. 374, 378. $7.50.

Harper & Bros. New York.

Alexander Pope. By Samuel Jehnson. pp. 197. 60 cents.

De Merle Co. New York.

In Which Hearts Lead. By John L. Merrill, Jr. pp. 152. $1.25.

American Book Co. New York.

The Story of Troy. By M. Clarke. pp. 254. 60 cents.

Rice & Hirst. Philadelphia

Gateways to the Bible By Rev. Cunningham Geikie, D.D., LL.D., and others. pp. 122. 50 cents.

J. J. Hood. Philadelphia.

Songs of Love and Praise. No. 4 pp. 222. 35 cents.

American S. S. Union Philadelphia.

Hymnal for Primary Classes. Word Edition. pp. 232. 15 cents.

PAPER COVERS

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Boston.

The Æneid of Virgil (The First Three Books) Translated by Christopher P. Cranch. pp. 102. 15 cents.

The Princess. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited by W. J. Rolfe, Litt. D. pp. 190. 30 cents.

Trustees of Public Library Boston.

Contributions Toward a Bibliography of the Higher Education of Women.

G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York.

Rosa Bonheur. By Elbert Hubbard. 10 cents.

Kenyon Press. Des Moines

Song and Fable. By Barton O. Aylesworth. pp. 121.

Open Brotherhood. Fond du Lac.

The Church and the Churches of the New Testament. By Rev. D. L. Holbrook.

Rev. R. T. Cross. York, Neb.

The Holy Spirit. By Rev. R. T. Cross.

MAGAZINES

May. Charities Review.

June. Art Amateur.—Review of Reviews.—Musical Record.—Education.—Good Words.—American Kitchen.—Unitarian.—Bulletin of Books Added to the Public Library.—Forum.—Donahoe's.—Atlantic.—Expositor.—Month.—Sunday.—Literary News.—Biblical World.—Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.—Educational Review.—North American Review.—Journal of Hygiene.

Prepare for Summer's Heat.—It is doubtful if the same amount of money spent in any other way will bring a man as much summer comfort as if it was spent for one or two pieces of lounging furniture. In another part of this paper there is a picture of a willow "shape couch" (one of the wonderful inventions in Fayal furniture), and it will be hard to imagine a more delightful companion in the hot days of midsummer than this cool, luxurious hammock bed, with its pockets, shelves, seats and every convenience for comfort.

"When I Reflect that if I had not used Ayer's Hair Vigor my hair would have been thin and faded, instead of glossy and abundant, I realize how much of her charm a woman owes to beautiful hair. It is the one feature of woman's beauty that may be preserved in spite of age and time."

Ayer's Hair Vigor is a standard toilet preparation. It restores the normal color of gray or faded hair, and makes hair grow.

SCIENCE NOTES

The appearance of another European insect pest, the brown-tailed moth, in the orchards of eastern Massachusetts, must be discouraging to those who are intrusted with the responsibility of fighting the gipsy moth. It is rash to introduce strange birds, as the sparrow plague has proved, but may there not be an acclimatizable bird of kindly manners to which the brown-tailed moths are tid-bits?

The experiment of introducing European birds, tried in Oregon a few years ago, has apparently succeeded. The nightingales seem to have died out, but the Willamette Valley is full of skylarks, and a dozen or more other varieties, including starlings, thrushes, robins, linnets and finches, seem to be flourishing. The pheasants, very carefully protected at first, have grown so plentiful that they have become a menace to the grain fields and will have to take their chances with the other game birds of the region.

A surgical experiment of great interest took place in Buffalo last winter and its success has been shown recently by the use of the X rays. F. H. Moir, the foreman of a factory at Niagara Falls, was brought to a Buffalo hospital with a crushed leg. Dr. Wilcox removed the crushed bone and inserted in its place a portion of a live sheep's bone five inches in length but of a different shape. The graft shows vitality at each end which is extending toward the center, and already the sheep's bone is half an inch wider than when it was put in. The surgeons are assured that their patient will entirely recover the use of his limb.

Congress has appropriated $5,000 for the investigation of the water hyacinth, a beautiful plant introduced from Mexico to the bayous of Louisiana and thence to Florida, where its abundant and peculiar growth threatens to put a stop to navigation in the St. John's River and to choke up the ponds of the State into which it has been introduced. It is carried in floating masses into the channels and accumulates in the bays and about bridges or other obstructions, stopping the steamboats and making logging and fishing difficult or impossible. It is hoped that a parasitic disease may be found and introduced which may check its growth, and in the meantime the experiment of dredging it out of the channels is being tried.

A French scientist, M. Stanislas Mennier, quoted in Harper's Weekly, has been trying his hand at a solution of the puzzling question of the duplication of the so-called canals on the planet Mars. This doubling often appears and disappears quite suddenly and has in the past given rise to serious controversies among the astronomers. M. Mennier shows that it might be produced by a light mist hanging over the surface of the planet, which would allow both the canals and their shadow upon the mist itself to be seen apparently side by side. This is ingenious and interesting, but (as he is not a speculative theologian) we shall not expect the author of the theory to excommunicate his astronomical brethren if they reserve their judgment in regard to it.

◆

Prayer is to me the quick and instant recognition that all law is God's will, and all nature is in God's hand, and that all our welfare lies in linking ourselves with his will and placing ourselves in his hand through all the operations of the world and life and time. —R. F. Horton, D. D.

OBSERVATION SLEEPING CARS ON B. & O.—Commencing Sunday, June 13, the B. & O. R. R. will place in service, between Baltimore and Chicago, Pullman Observation Sleeping Cars. The cars have a saloon parlor in the rear, furnished with easy arm-chairs, upholstered revolving chairs and sofas This will enable passengers to view with better advantage the scenic wonders that have made the B. & O. famous.

B. & O. SUMMER BOOK.—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has just issued a very handsome book for summer travel, describing the mountain resorts, springs and baths located on and adjacent to its lines; also the various watering places on the Atlantic coast. The routes for reaching them are set forth in a comprehensive and clear manner. The book is printed on fine paper, beautifully illustrated and will prove of valuable assistance to parties contemplating a summer tour. Copies can be had by applying to various B. & O. agents, or by sending ten cents in stamps to cover postage to J. M. Schryver, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.

SIXTY SUMMER TRIPS.—Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb have arranged a most tempting list of short summer excursions, occupying from five to nineteen days, to the chief resorts of the Middle States, New England and Canada. These tours are very popular, and are carried out with the same attention to details that characterizes all of the enterprises of this firm. In addition to these shorter trips there are more extended tours to the Yellowstone National Park, the Northwest, Alaska, California, Hawaii, Japan, China and Europe. Those desiring descriptive circulars of the various tours can secure them without cost of Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington Street, opposite School Street.

MONTREAL VIA CRAWFORD NOTCH.—A special arrangement for American Institute. It is announced that a special train will be run via the Western Division, B. & M. Railroad, Lawrence, Haverhill, Dover, North Conway and the sublime Crawford Notch to Montreal. This train will leave Boston at 9 A. M, July 8, and will undoubtedly arrive in Montreal in the early evening. Arrangements have been made with Col. Oscar G. Barron to serve one of his famous Fabyan House dinners at the nominal charge of seventy-five cents. There should be 500 teachers and their friends, at least, who wish this most delightful of all the attractions en route to Montreal. How accommodations may be arranged for all is set forth in a circular just being issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway, which also gives all other necessary information, including side trip rates and attractions, and is a fitting supplement to their charming illustrated book on Montreal, either of which is obtainable of various prominent teachers and railway agents in New England, or at the company's office in Boston.

URIC ACID POISON

Eminent medical authorities emphatically attest the claim that

BUFFALO
LITHIA WATER

IS A NATURAL SPECIFIC for URIC ACID POISONING in its varied forms, embracing Gout, Rheumatism, Lithiemia, Stone of the Kidney or Bladder, Bright's Disease, Neuralgic Affections, Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Eczema, Dyspepsia, etc. In other conditions also this poison shows itself in swellings of various parts of the body, Dropsical effusion, an unnatural Drowsiness or Coma and Convulsions, and not infrequently is sudden and fatal in effect. Used as a common beverage or table water it will be found a sure PREVENTIVE of all troubles arising from URIC ACID POISON.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally. Pamphlets on application.

Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

Springs open for guests June 15 to Oct. 1.

"Sanitas"
Book
Free.

"How to Disinfect, an illustrated book giving practical instruction for disinfection in everyday life and during cases of infectious illness, sent free.

Every one having the care of a house or an institution should have it.

The American & Continental "Sanitas" Co. Ltd.
636 to 642 West 55th St., New York City.

Always Ahead!

MODEL FOR 1898

Early introduction of next year's model places the Continental in the lead.

Continental, 1898, $50
Continental, 1897, $45
Continent, 1897, $33

High-grade Wheels at fair prices. Peers of the best. Light. Easy running. Very strong. Made upon honor. Uniform standard.

You pay only for the Bicycle. No charges for business frills. Can be bought only of

JOHN WANAMAKER
NEW YORK PHILADELPHIA

Our store at Broadway and Tenth Street is the natural center of New York retailing. In point of time and convenience it is the nearest large Store in New York to the Grand Central Station.

COMMENCEMENT DATES

The following list includes the Commencement and Anniversary days of the leading educational institutions:

UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Adelbert, Cleveland, O.,	June 23
Amherst, Amherst, Mass.,	June 30
Bates, Lewiston, Me.,	July 1
Beloit, Beloit, Wis.,	June 24
Berea, Berea, Ky.,	June 23
Bowdoin, Brunswick, Me.,	June 24
Colby, Waterville, Me.,	June 30
Dartmouth, Hanover, N. H.,	June 30
Doane, Crete, Neb.,	June 24
Gates, Neligh, Neb.,	June 23
Hamilton, Clinton, N. Y.,	June 24
Harvard, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 30
Hiram, Hiram, O.,	June 24
Lafayette, Easton, Pa.,	June 23
Massachusetts Agricultural, Amherst, Mass.,	June 23
Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.,	July 1
Middlebury, Middlebury, Vt.,	June 30
Mt. Holyoke, South Hadley, Mass.,	June 23
New York (Coll.), New York, N. Y.,	June 24
Oberlin, Oberlin, O.,	June 23
Pomona, Claremont, Cal.,	June 30
Radcliffe, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 29
Ripon, Ripon, Wis.	June 23
Smith, Northampton, Mass.,	June 22
Trinity, Hartford, Ct.,	June 24
Vermont, Burlington, Vt.,	June 30
Wellesley, Wellesley, Mass ,	June 22
Wesleyan, Middletown, Ct.,	June 30
Williams, Williamstown, Mass.,	June 23
Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.,	June 24
Yale, New Haven, Ct.,	June 30
Yankton, Yankton, S. D ,	June 23

SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES

Abbot, Andover, Mass.,	June 22
Lawrenceville, Lawrenceville, N. J.,	June 22
Leicester, Leicester, Mass.,	June 21
Phillips, Andover, Mass.,	June 24
Phillips, Exeter, N. H.,	June 22
Pinkerton, Derry, N. H.,	June 18
St. Johnsbury, St. Johnsbury, Vt.,	June 18
Thayer, Braintree, Mass.,	June 26
Wheaton, Norton Mass.,	June 23

WILL MEET IN MONTREAL.—Attractive vacation convention of the American Institute of Instruction. The city of Montreal in late years has become one of the most popular tarrying places for the summer tourist on the continent. Retaliatory tariffs can never serve to bar out the American visitor from his annual enjoyment of Canada's picturesque scenery, and they certainly will never temper the proverbial hospitality of the people of Montreal toward their Yankee cousins. The members of that great educational organization, the American Institute of Instruction, are to be felicitated on the fact that their annual meeting is this year to be held in this charming city by the St. Lawrence, the sessions to begin July 9 and continue till the 12th. For various reasons this is expected to be one of the most notable conventions ever held by the institute. It occurs in the midvacation season, is to be held in one of the most salubrious, picturesque and historically interesting sections of North America, and will be subject to a low priced excursion rate that will place it within the reach of all. The program of the meeting itself will be interesting to all who are in sympathy with educational movements, and especially helpful to all grades of teachers and school officers. The Dominion of Canada has some of the brightest speakers and strongest educational thinkers of America, and their leaders will have a place in the official program. Some of the most prominent educational workers in the United States, including both men and women, will also be heard, and one of the striking features will be a meeting in honor of Hon. Henry Barnard of Hartford, who, at the age of eighty-seven, is the most eminent living educator. Special preparations for the accommodation of the visitors have been made by their Montreal entertainers and the committee in charge. The rates at the first-class hotels will be from $1.75 to $3.00 a day, and from $1 00 to $1.50 a day at private boarding houses. The round trip excursion fare from Boston by any direct route will be $9.00, with correspondingly low rates from other New England points. Innumerable side trips from Montreal may be enjoyed, including excursions to the Ottawa River by rail and back by boat down the St. Lawrence and the famous Lachine Rapids for $1.00; to Quebec and return by rail $3.50, or one way by boat $5 00; and from Quebec to the picturesque Saguenay River, by boat both ways, $4.00. Opportunities for independent side trips to the far-famed Thousand Islands, the city of Toronto, Niagara Falls and other noted places along the Canadian border will also be offered. Participation in all these reduced rates will be contingent on membership in the institute. This costs only $1.00, and membership is not restricted to those who are actually connected with school work. Applications for board in Montreal may be sent to Mr. E. W. Arthy, Superintendent of Schools in that city, and for out of town accommodations to W. A. Kneeland, Montreal. Information regarding excursion tickets from Boston may be obtained at City Ticket Office, 322 Washington Street, Union Station and the principal ticket offices on the Boston & Maine system. The tickets are good going July 5 to 9 and good returning July 12 to 31. Stop-over privileges will be allowed at points north of Plymouth, White River Junction, or North Conway.

4 These competitions will be conducted monthly during 1897

First Prizes, each of $100 Cash	$ 400
20 Second Prizes, each of $100 Pierce Special Bicycles	2,000
40 Third Prizes, each of $25 Gold Watches	1,000
Cash and Prizes given each month	$3,400 12
Total given during 12 months 1897	$40,800

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM. Competitors to save as many "Sunlight" Soap Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating competitor's full name and address and the number of coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with Number of the District competitor lives in. The districts are as follows:

NAME OF DISTRICT.

1 New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, and New Jersey.
2 New York State (outside of N.Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3 Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4 The New England States

$3,400.00 GIVEN AWAY EACH MONTH IN CASH, BICYCLES AND WATCHES FOR SUNLIGHT SOAP WRAPPERS

The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First-class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

LEVER BROS., LTD.,
NEW YORK.

RULES. 1. Every month during 1897, in each of the four districts, prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100.00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.00.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Bros., Ltd., as final.

For Catarrh — Hay-Fever — Cold in Head
ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES COLD IN HEAD
CATARRH
ROSE-COLD
HAY-FEVER
DEAFNESS HEADACHE
TRADE-MARK
ELY BROS. NEW YORK

ELY'S CREAM BALM is a positive cure. Apply into the nostrils. It is quickly absorbed. 50 cents at Druggists or by mail; samples 10c. by mail. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren St., New York City.

HAIR HUMORS

Itching, irritated, scaly, crusted Scalps, dry, thin, and falling Hair, cleansed, purified, and beautified by warm shampoos with CUTICURA SOAP, and occasional dressings with CUTICURA, greatest of emollients and skin cures.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Hair Humors," free.

SKINS ON FIRE with Eczema instantly relieved by CUTICURA REMEDIES.

REDUCED FROM $25 TO $10

This Most Wonderful Treatment Now Within the Reach of All.
Circulars, Testimonials, etc., Free.
L. A. BOSWORTH, 36 BROMFIELD ST., BOSTON, MASS.
General Agent for the New England States.

BLANCARD'S

PILLS AND SYRUP OF Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE, for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.
None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.
E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

MARSHALL'S CATARRH SNUFF
CURES CATARRH

It has never been equalled for the instant relief of Catarrh, Cold in the Head and Headache. Cures Deafness, restores lost sense of smell. Sixty yrs. on the market. Price 25 cts. at all Druggists or by mail postpaid.
F. C. Keith, Mfr., Cleveland, O.

LADIES! your beauty depends on your health. Are you suffering from any of the ailments which cause impaired digestion, nervous prostration and premature age? You need

...VITAL TONE...

It never fails. Sent, postpaid, securely packed, on receipt of one dollar. VITAL TONE CO., No. 1 Beacon St., Room 76, Boston, Mass.

Forgotten Stomachs.

Your stomach is only right when you are unconscious that you have one. Any distress after eating calls for Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient.

It corrects acidity, aids digestion, and rids the stomach and bowels of disease producing bacteria. Cures constipation and biliousness. 50c. and $1.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT TRADE MARK REGISTERED.

Sold by Druggists for 50 years. TARRANT & CO., Chemists, New York.

RISIBLES

Dr. Quint used to tell a story of a very dignified lady, whose equally dignified husband, quite a prominent man, was slightly recovering from paralysis. In fact, he partially recovered his speech and spent most of his breath in expletives at his body-servant. His wife was one day telling some visitors how remarkable it was that the gentleman still survived. Said she, with perfect unconsciousness of the joke, "The doctor says it is only his unusual vituperative power that keeps him alive."

"What sort of band is that playing under the window?"

"As nearly as I can judge from their dress and general appearance, the fiddler is an Italian, the trombone player is a German, the man with the clarinet is an Englishman, the drummer is a Russian and the flute player is a Frenchman."

"Then it must be the 'European concert' we've heard so much about."

"Why, mother," said Farmer Gray to his wife, "what be you a-lookin' at John's bicycle so long for?"

"I was a-wonderin', Silas," said she, "if I couldn't have one of them ere things that tell how fur you go hitched to me somewhere. I'm cur'us to know how many miles I travel in a day doin' this ere housework."

A Maine woman called on a local insurance agent the other day to inquire about a policy for her house. "Ye see, 'square," she said, "we haven't had it insured for some time. We've been kinder trustin' in the Lord for better'n seven year; but, to my mind, in these times it's ter'ble risky."

An old lady, who was bewailing her misfortunes, being told that she ought not to dwell upon her troubles but should try to rise above them, replied firmly, "Young man, when the Lord sends us tribulations he expects us to tribulate, an' I ain't a-goin' to disappint him."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Wickwire, looking up from her paper, "but women are getting brave nowadays." "Brave?" echoed Mr. Wickwire. "Yes. Here is a story about a woman who shot a mouse. She—pshaw! I read it wrong. It was only a moose."

"Do you ever catch any whales, captain?" asked a fair passenger on the ocean liner. "Often, ma'am," answered the dignified captain. "How very wonderful! Please tell me how you catch them." "We drop a few of the old salts on their tails, ma'am."

He: "So you visited Pompeii?" She: "O, yes." He: "How did you like it?" She: "Well, I must say I was awfully disappointed in the place. Of course it was beautifully located and all that, but it was so dreadfully out of repair!"

Josiah Hayseed, after having heard Paderewski, was asked his opinion of the entertainment. He replied: "Them parts thet hed er tune to 'em wus all right, but I can't see no good in them Beethoven's snorters."

"I wish merely to remark," said the parrot that had come in a cage all the way from Boston, "that my name is not Polly, and I do not desire a cracker. Will some person kindly bring me a plate of beans?"

"What makes that hen in your back yard cackle so loud?" "O, they've just laid a corner stone across the street and she's trying to make the neighbors think she did it."

AFTER THE CONFERENCE

It used to be a custom among the Methodist preachers to open their annual conferences with the hymn:

And are we yet alive
To see each other's face?

In a certain town where the conference was held the preachers were treated with extraordinary hospitality. Every housekeeper had the table groaning with fried chicken and yellow gravy. All the choice fowls were killed off to satisfy the white-cravatted epicures. The day after adjournment the evening paper of the town had a picture showing two scrawny-looking young roosters peeping at each other out from under the barn and then crossing their necks, saying:

And are we yet alive
To see each other's face?

◆

BAPTISTS AND CLOSE COMMUNION

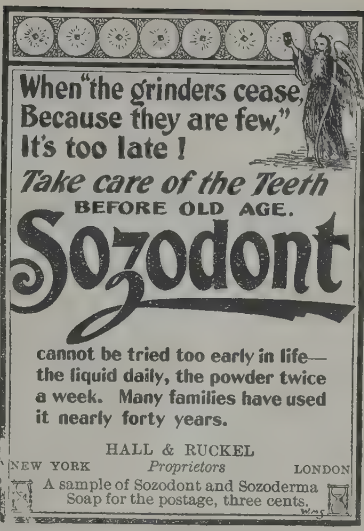
Most Baptists in the United States are as widely separated from the brethren of their own denomination in Great Britain as from Congregationalists in this country. To be logical, they would have to refuse to commune with English Baptists on the same grounds that they decline to commune with Free Baptists in this country. This, probably, was one important reason why Mr. Spurgeon never was urged and never seemed inclined to visit America. The Sword and Trowel, which was his magazine, reports his answer to the question, Is Close Communion Scriptural? It is easy to imagine what the effect would have been had he made his answer to a Baptist congregation in this country. He said:

> You must argue that question among yourselves, brethren. I will suppose, for a moment, that close communion is right and Scriptural, and if so, you ought never to have any communion with any unbaptized person; you should never pray with him nor praise God with him, for that is a form of fellowship; you should not be a sharer with him in any spiritual blessing—in fact, you should not go to heaven with him. If, on the other hand, it is right and Scriptural to give to a brother in Christ that which is the reality and essence of Christian communion, you may as well have fellowship with him in that which is the sign and symbol of your true union in the Lord.

◆

A prayerless race of men has never been fed long; it has soon ceased to exist. God's plan of salvation and ordering of the universe includes prayer as a means of blessing and good things as an answer to prayer. God says, "I make you a co-worker with me"—J M. Tyler.

After a Day's Hard Work
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It makes a delicious drink, and relieves fatigue and depression. A grateful tonic.



When "the grinders cease,
Because they are few,"
It's too late!
Take care of the Teeth
BEFORE OLD AGE.
Sozodont
cannot be tried too early in life—the liquid daily, the powder twice a week. Many families have used it nearly forty years.
HALL & RUCKEL
NEW YORK Proprietors LONDON
A sample of Sozodont and Sozoderma Soap for the postage, three cents.

On a red hot day Hires Rootbeer stands between you and the distressing effects of the heat.
HIRES
Rootbeer
cools the blood, tones the stomach, invigorates the body, fully satisfies the thirst. A delicious, sparkling, temperance drink of the highest medicinal value.
Made only by
The Charles E. Hires Co., Phila.
A package makes 5 gallons.
Sold everywhere.

FROM MAKER TO USER.
Singer Sewing-Machines cannot be obtained through department stores or merchandise dealers; they are delivered directly from maker to user only through our own employees. They are offered to the public on their intrinsic merits as the best device obtainable for family sewing.
CAN YOU TRY ONE FREE? CERTAINLY. Deliver it at your door, in our own wagon, upon application to any of our offices, located in every city in the world.
EITHER LOCK-STITCH OR CHAIN-STITCH
ANY STYLE OF CABINET WORK.
Sold for Cash, or Leased.
Old Machines Exchanged.
SINGER SEWING-MACHINES ARE SOLD ONLY BY THE SINGER MFG. CO.

"Better work wisely than work hard." Great efforts are unnecessary in house cleaning if you use . . . SAPOLIO

Another Great Library Offer.

25 Excellent Books at almost half price.

THE "PILGRIM ENDEAVOR" LIBRARY

The following books are not the old-fashioned kind, but have all been published within the past few years They are by some of the best writers for young folks. They are not English books reprinted, but are all by American authors and copyrighted. All have been strongly commended and many have been remarkably successful. Hundreds of schools no doubt have them in their library. Those who have not should welcome this offer. We sell them only in sets at this price, but can sometimes arrange to substitute other books of equal value to save duplication. The books are all handsomely illustrated and strongly bound in cloth, uniform in style, making a very handsome set. The titles are well assorted and the list contains something adapted to readers of all ages above the primary.

Title.	Author.	Pages.	Price.
Dear Gates. One of the brightest and most charming stories of this gifted author.	Josephine R. Baker.	333p.	$1.25
Pen's Venture. The venture was an attempt to help and elevate the cash girls in a big store.	Elvirton Wright.	278p.	1.25
The Patchwork Quilt Society. Natural history taught in an entertaining way.	Mary S. Corning.	280p.	.75
Three Years at Glenwood. The story of a girl who made the most of herself.	Margaret E. Winslow.	362p.	1.25
The Enderby Bible Class. How some young people decided upon their motto for life.	Margaret E. Winslow	320p.	1 25
One Girl's Way Out. A way out of a thoughtless life into one of serious purpose. A lady lent one book by this author to fifty eight families, wearing out two copies by use in this way.	Howe Benning.	368p.	1.25
The Sewells. Teaches that there is a work in the world for every one to do.	Margaret E. Winslow.	358p.	1.50
Eleanor and I. A story of the superstitious days of Richard II.	Mary E. Bamford.	335p.	1.50
Asaph's Ten Thousand. Tells how labor troubles were settled on a Christian basis.	Elizabeth Glover.	325p.	1.50
The Choir Boy of York Cathedral. Five good stories, each full of interest.	Rev. A. S Twombly.	392p.	1 25
Patty's Granduncle. Showing how disinterested friendship was tested and rewarded.	Helen P. Barnard.	425p.	1.50
Boyhood of John Kent. A story of travel and adventure with strong temperance teaching.	Willis Boyd Allen.	388p.	1.50
Knives and Forks. Tells about two classes of young people and how each influenced the other.	Mrs. Frank Lee.	402p.	$1 50
Chubby Ruff. A bright book for children.	Prof. Geo. Huntington.	200p.	1 00
Christmas at Surf Point. A sprightly story by a popular author.	Willis Boyd Allen.	168p.	1 00
Marie's Story. A story of Huguenot persecution and Christian bravery	Mary E. Bamford.	145p.	90
Fussbudget's Folks. One of the brightest books by this excellent writer for children.	Anna F. Burnham.	198p.	1 00
St. Peter and Tom. Two unlikely heroes develop Christian principles through adventure and trial.	Belle S. Cragin.	196p.	1.00
Janet and Her Father. A story of Scottish persecution under Claverhouse.	Mary E Bamford.	200p.	1.00
Four Miles From Tarrytown. A story of war time and its influence on the home.	Fanny H. Gallagher.	200p.	1 00
Duxberry Doings. The effect of wholesome rural life on a frivolous city girl.	Caroline B LeRow.	400p.	1 25
In the Vulture's Nest. A historical story of the time of the St. Bartholomew Massacre.	Mildred Fairfax.	396p.	1 50
At Mount Desert. The story of a summer on the Maine coast.	Mildred Fairfax.	374p.	1 50
Marjoribanks. This story emphasizes purity of life, of speech and of heart.	Elvirton Wright.	280p	1 25
Neighbors in Barton Square. A story which touches the heart and teaches lessons of helpfulness and self sacrifice.	Alice Eddy Curtiss.	346p.	1 50

The list price of the above 25 books is $31.10. We offer the set for $16.00 net.

J. H. TEWKSBURY, Gen'l Agent,
Congregational House, Boston.
New York, 23 Bible House.

The Pilgrim Press
Beacon St Boston
A.D. 1620

E. H. BROWN, Chicago Agent,
175 Wabash Avenue, Chicago,
Minneapolis, Phœnix Building.

CALIFORNIA

IN 3 DAYS

$25.00

SAME RATE RETURNING

TWO TRAINS DAILY
FROM CHICAGO
6.00 P. M. and 10.30 P. M.

PALACE AND TOURIST SLEEPING CARS Without Change

COLORADO

$12.50

Fast Time and Through Cars between Chicago and Denver

Tickets Sold June 29 to July 3, 1897

For Particulars Inquire of Your Nearest Ticket Agent and Ask for Tickets via

CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN RY.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:

212 Clark St., CHICAGO.
423 Broadway, NEW YORK.
5 State St., BOSTON.

For Good Health

USE

POND'S EXTRACT

It Relieves all Pain.
Controls all Hemorrhages.
Subdues all Inflammations.

The genuine is put up in bottles only, enclosed in buff wrappers, on which is printed our landscape trademark.

AVOID SUBSTITUTES

Weak. Watery. Worthless.

Note our name on every label and wrapper.

Pond's Extract Co., New York and London.

Volume LXXXII Number 25

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Boston Thursday 24 June 1897

Si jeunesse savait! Si viellesse pouvait!

If Youth Could Know

If youth could know, what age knows without teaching,
Hope's instability and Love's dear folly,
The difference between practicing and preaching,
The quiet charm that lurks in melancholy;
The after-bitterness of tasted pleasure;
That temperance of feeling and of words
Is health of mind, and the calm fruits of leisure
Have sweeter taste than feverish zeal affords;
That reason has a joy beyond unreason,
That nothing satisfies the soul like truth,
That kindness conquers in and out of season—
If youth could know—why, youth would not be youth.

If age could feel the uncalculating urgence,
The pulse of life that beats in youthful veins,
And with its swift. resistless ebb and surgence
Makes light of difficulties, sport of pains;
Could once, just once, retrace the path and find it,
That lovely, foolish zeal, so crude, so young,
Which bids defiance to all laws to bind it,
And flashes in quick eye and limb and tongue,
Which, counting dross for gold, is rich in dreaming,
And, reckoning moons as suns, is never cold,
And, having nought, has everything in seeming—
If age could do all this—age were not old!

Written for The Congregationalist by SUSAN COOLIDGE

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

The signs multiply from day to day that the general trade situation in this country is on the mend. The movement of merchandise is fair, the principal thing needed being an advance in prices of staples and commodities. It would be difficult to make many believe that goods were moving in as large volume as in 1892, yet such is the case. Business men at first sight don't understand how this can be so, because they do not look at tonnage figures but at those representing profits.

In the latter, it must be admitted, that for the past three or four years the margin has been dwindling. However, production has been curtailed as one of the results of the lack of profit, and there is every reason to believe that the situation has been cleared to such an extent as to make a gradual rise in commodity values inevitable. In this connection it should be remembered that a comparatively small advance in prices will mean a great deal as to the margin of profit for manufacturers.

The encouraging feature of the whole business situation is that orders for goods for fall delivery are increasing and at steady prices. The movement thus far, or rather the volume of orders, exceeds that of a year ago. This is, of course, very gratifying, and it is thought that if the tariff bill can be disposed of during the early days of July the fall season will be a very active one. The improvement in iron and steel is maintained. Print cloths have likewise advanced a fraction, which is considered a forerunner of higher prices in all manufactured cotton goods. The latter, however, continue quiet, although a better inquiry in New York is noted. Crop prospects are promising, and the wheat harvest is expected to be large.

In the stock market, while a reaction in prices has been expected, the feeling remains confident and bullish in the extreme. The bettering trade conditions, together with the prospect of an early settlement of the tariff, make Wall Street interests inclined to speculate on the long side of the market. There are, moreover, very good indications that the stock market is in the hands of big men who have started the present upward movement for big profits, and that, barring some unforeseen contingency, values will continue to be manipulated in an upward direction.

For a Nerve Tonic
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. M. HARLOW, Augusta, Me., says: "I regard it as one of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York.
Mutual Life Building,
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.

CAPITAL, - - - - - $2,000,000
SURPLUS, - - - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN. EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS subject to check or on certificate.

STERLING DRAFTS ON ALL PARTS OF GREAT BRITAIN BOUGHT AND SOLD. COLLECTIONS MADE.

TRAVELERS' LETTERS OF CREDIT AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD, AND COMMERCIAL LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, JR., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec
JOHN GAULT, Manager Foreign Dept.

DIRECTORS.

Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
August Belmont,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy,
Alexander E. Orr,
Walter G. Oakman,
Henry H. Rogers,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

8% NET FIRST GOLD MORTGAGES on Improved Red River Valley Farms. Loans to actual settlers only. 15 years' experience in business. Send for formal applications, list of references and map showing location of lands. Over $100,000 invested. None but SAFE, PROMPT PAYING loans on my books.

WILLIAM T. SOUDER, Financial Agent,
303 Century Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

£ European Travelers
who carry books of
Cheque Bank Cheques
are better off than most holders of Credits, because they are available where credits are not. Shops Hotels, etc., cash them. They are available any time, day or night: Circulars on application.

Agency of U. S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Mgr.,
40 and 42 Wall St., New York.

A Solid 8%

Can be assured on your surplus funds if properly invested in Municipal Warrants. A trial of our exceptional facilities for handling them will convince you that Warrants are the cream of short time paper. Choice State, County and City issues (having same security as Municipal bonds), always on hand. Robt. E. Strahorn & Co., 31 Equitable Building, Boston.

Subscribers' Wants

Notices under this heading, not exceeding five lines (eight words to the line), cost subscribers fifty cents each insertion. Additional lines ten cents each per insertion.

Christian Homes wanted for three healthy, attractive and promising American girls, 13, 11 and 9 years of age. Address M. H. Hitchcock, 3 Allston St., Boston.

Library Bookcases, with glass doors, adjustable shelves, in excellent condition. Henry P. Noyes, Andover, Mass.

Collector. Wanted, by a responsible man, a position as collector for some publishing house or business firm. No canvassing. References given. Address P., 37 Mason Street, Worcester, Mass.

Companion. A teacher wishes a position as companion to a lady, either at the mountains or seaside, for the months of July and August. Address M. L. C., Bridgewater, Mass.

The Elderage. Summer Home School for Girls, where they can remain through the year under the care and instruction of kind and capable teachers. 136 Sherman Ave., New Haven, Ct.

Wanted, by a refined, middle-aged lady, thoroughly competent, a position as matron, or lady in charge, in a private school or seminary for the ensuing school year. Address B. F., Northampton, Mass.

Stereopticon. For sale a double dissolving stereopticon, complete, with 18 feet screen and telescope poles, etc. Suitable for church work. Address Stereopticon, 9 Warren Avenue, Boston.

High School Graduate, with best of references wishes work to help him enter college in September Could fill position as clerk, companion, waiter, gardener, or any similar employment. Address Box 275, So. Framingham, Mass.

Seashore Cottage for Sale at Rye, N. H. 9 rooms; on bluff overlooking broad Atlantic; good stable, bathing, boating and fishing; finest beach on the coast; furniture if desired; price low. F. D. Butler, Portsmouth, N. H.

Cottage to Rent. I would like to rent my furnished cottage for the season. Located on high hill, with fine view. Five minutes' walk from post office, one mile from R. R. station. Address M. W. Leach, Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Ct.

Housekeeper's Assistant. Middle-aged woman or young girl wanted to assist in doing housework for her room and board in the family of a physician residing near Boston. Must furnish satisfactory proof of good character. Address L. H., this office.

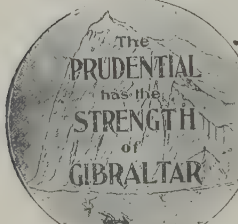
West View, Northfield, Mass. Airy, comfortable rooms, with good board, in a pleasant home, eight minutes' walk from the Auditorium and Seminary buildings. Persons wishing choice of rooms for conventions should apply at once. For terms, address E. H. Marshall, East Northfield, Mass.

Summer Home for Children. A lady having a delightful home, with fine grounds, will receive a few children into her family for the summer, giving each a mother's careful personal attention. Highest references given and required. For particulars and terms address S., The Congregationalist.

House to Let in Amherst, Mass. House very suitable for family putting a son into the College; excellent plumbing etc. Fine shade and fruit trees; grape vines beautiful hedges Photograph. Rent $350. John Jameson, 113 Devonshire St., Boston, or B. H. Williams, Amherst.

Dry Goods Manager (married, 35), 20 years' continuous experience as all-around salesman and in entire management of a business, desires to correspond with view of new relations. Merchant needing a reliable and profitable associate can verify details by addressing Buyer and Manager, care of this office.

The Best Investment
In the World is Life Insurance.



THE PRUDENTIAL
Offers every form of Life Insurance for sale.

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.
Ages 1 to 70. Amounts $15 to $1,000.
Premiums payable weekly.
Collected at the homes of the Insured.
Send for information.

ORDINARY BRANCH.
$1,000 to $50,000.
Premiums payable yearly, half-yearly, quarterly, weekly, at the local offices of the Company.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America,
Home Office, Newark, N. J.
JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

The Congregationalist
SERVICES

Eventide and General Worship.

5. FORGIVENESS OF SINS.
6. TRUST IN GOD.
7. DAYS OF THY YOUTH
8. HOUSE OF OUR GOD.
11. HOMELAND.
12. HUMILITY
13. GOD IN NATURE.
17. "ABIDE WITH US."
18. "ETERNAL LIGHT OF LIGHT."
19. "I WILL EXTOL THEE."
20. "GOD BE WITH US FOR THE NIGHT IS CLOSING."
21. "I AM."
22. "I AM THE BREAD OF LIFE."
23. "I AM THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."
24. "I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD."
25 "I AM THE WAY, THE TRUTH, THE LIFE."
26. "I AM THE LIVING ONE."
27. THE MASTER AND HIS DISCIPLES.
29. SIMON PETER.
30. JAMES.
31. JOHN.
32. PAUL.

All the above services are complete WITH MUSIC.

60 cents per 100 copies.

Sent, postage prepaid. Sample copies 1 cent each.

Address SERVICES,
THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
Boston, Mass.

Educational

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY.
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established, 1855.
3 EAST 14TH STREET, N. Y.

THE FISK TEACHERS' AGENCIES.
4 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; and Los Angeles, Cal. 100-paged Agency Manual free EVERETT O. FISK & Co.

THEOLOGICAL

CONNECTICUT, HARTFORD.
HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
HARTFORD, CT.
64th Year Opens Oct. 6, 1897.
Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates.
Full information on application to Prof. E. K. Mitchell.

OHIO, OBERLIN.
OBERLIN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.
63d year opens Sept. 22. With special advantages from the College and the Conservatory of Music.
E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec'y.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW LONDON.
COLBY ACADEMY. (For Both Sexes.)
A New Gymnasium. A Fully Equipped Laboratory. Five Complete Courses of Study. Special Prizes for High Grade Students. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, President.

VERMONT

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY.
ST. JOHNSBURY ACADEMY.
DAVID Y. COMSTOCK, M. A., Principal.

VERMONT, SAXTON'S RIVER.
VERMONT ACADEMY.
Coeducational. College Preparatory and Academic Courses. Special departments in Music and Art. Military Instruction for boys, under officer detailed by Secretary of War. Physical Training for girls. Infirmary with trained nurse. Certificate admits to best colleges. EDWARD ELLERY, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS

BOSTON, 9 Ashburton Place,
BOSTON UNIVERSITY Law School.
Fall term opens Wednesday, Oct. 6. For circulars address, EDMUND H. BENNETT, Dean.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
MISS KIMBALL'S SCHOOL,
Worcester, Mass. An English, French and German Home and Day School for Girls. College Preparatory, Intermediate, Academic, Literary, Music, and Special Courses. Excellent gymnasium. Send for Illustrated Manual.

MASSACHUSETTS, FRAMINGHAM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
Entrance examinations June 24 and 25, and Sept. 7 and 8, 1897. For circulars address
Miss ELLEN HYDE, Principal.

MASSACHUSETTS, BRADFORD
BRADFORD ACADEMY.
Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and Scientific course of study, also Preparatory and Optional. Year begins Sept. 15, 1897.
Miss Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, WORCESTER.
WORCESTER ACADEMY.
Prepares boys for college or scientific school. Buildings of modern construction. New Science Hall, seven groups of laboratories. Manual training. Infirmary, Gymnasium. Oval and cinder track. 64th year begins Sept. 8, '97. D. W. ABERCROMBIE, A. M., Prin., Worcester, Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, ANDOVER.
ABBOT ACADEMY
For Young Ladies, Andover, Mass. Begins its 69th year Sept. 16, 1897, offering enlarged opportunities; three Seminary Courses of Studies and a College fitting Course. Has a Clark telescope, laboratory, gymnasium, art studios, library, reading and music rooms, etc.; superior accommodations in new and improved buildings, with electric lights, hot water-heating, etc.; over 20 acres of lawns and groves. Terms $400 per year. Address Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal. For catalogue, W. F. DRAPER.

MASSACHUSETTS, BOSTON.
A tree is known by its fruit, and we are willing that the
New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
should be judged by its graduates. Many — very many — of the leading vocal and instrumental artists in the public eye to-day were instructed here.
GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Musical Director.
Send for our catalogue to
FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Mangr., Boston, Mass.

Educational

MASSACHUSETTS

MASSACHUSETTS, SALEM.
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.
New building. First-class equipment. Modern methods. Expenses reasonable. Address
Principal W. P. BECKWITH, Ph. D.

MASSACHUSETTS, WEST BRIDGEWATER.
Howard Seminary A Home School for Girls.
LIMITED to fifty. Certificate admits to colleges. Offers thorough academic training with wide choice in electives (including Music, Art, and Languages). Advantages for Home Culture. Library, Gymnasium and Laboratory. Single rooms may be had. Careful attention paid to individual needs Location quiet, healthful, accessible. For circulars address
HOWARD SEMINARY.
Mr. and Mrs. R. W. GIFFORD, Principals.
West Bridgewater, Plymouth Co., Mass.

MASSACHUSETTS, NORTON.
WHEATON SEMINARY
FOR YOUNG WOMEN.
Regular and elective courses, literary, scientific, classical. Pupils also fitted for advanced courses in leading colleges. Excellent advantages in art and music. Fine library, laboratory, observatory, gymnasium, bowling alley, outdoor sports, careful physical training. Perfect sanitary arrangements. Best home influences. Beautifully situated, 28 miles from Boston.
Fall term of 63d year begins Sept. 15, 1897. Illustrated prospectus. Address
Rev. SAMUEL V. COLE, President, Norton, Mass.

RHODE ISLAND

RHODE ISLAND, EAST GREENWICH.
EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.
Founded 1802. Both sexes. On Narragansett Bay. Cottages. Electric light. Elegant new dining hall. Endowed. Twelve courses. September 13. Illustrated catalogue. F. D BLAKESLEE, D. D., Prin., East Greenwich, R. I.

CONNECTICUT

CONNECTICUT, LAKEVILLE.
THE HOTCHKISS SCHOOL
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year opens Sept. 15, 1897.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE.
LYNDON HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.
50th year. Academic and College Preparatory.
SAMUEL W. BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
THE PEEKSKILL MILITARY ACADEMY
64th Year. Prepares for Colleges and Government Schools. Thorough business course. Open all year. Fall term Sept. 15. Col. L. H. ORLEMAN Principal, Peekskill, N. Y.

NEW YORK, PEEKSKILL.
COL. WRIGHT'S MILITARY ACADEMY
Peekskill, N. Y. Thorough military system. Preparation for college or business. For catalogue address
C. J. WRIGHT A. M.

NEW YORK, BINGHAMTON.
THE LADY JANE GREY SCHOOL.
Mrs. Hyde and Daughters' Home School for Girls. Special and regular courses. Preparation for College and European travel. Address
Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE, Binghamton, N. Y.

NEW YORK, BUFFALO.

HOME STUDY FOR BUSINESS We teach Book-keeping, Business Forms, Penmanship, Com'l Law, Letter Writing, Arithmetic. Shorthand, etc. thoroughly by MAIL at your own HOME. Success guaranteed every earnest student. We give a useful, Money Making Education which leads to a good paying position. A ten years' success. Highly endorsed. It will pay you. Try it. Catalog free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 17 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

ILLINOIS

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO.
CHICAGO COLLEGE OF LAW
LAW DEPARTMENT LAKE FOREST UNIVERSITY.
Hon. T. A. Moran, LL. D., Dean. Session each week day evening. For information address Elmer E. Barrett, LL. B., Sec'y, 100 Washington Street, Chicago.

OHIO

Oberlin College
The College, the Theological Seminary, the Conservatory of Music, the Academy.
The fall term begins Sept. 22. Full information from the treasurer.
JAMES R. SEVERANCE, Oberlin, Ohio.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Paragraphs 889
The Moon of Leaves 890
Theological Responsibility 890
The Tyngsborough Council 891
Living in the Light of God's Knowledge 891
Current History 891
In Brief 893

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE:

New York 894
CURRENT THOUGHT 919

CONTRIBUTIONS:

If Youth Could Know—cover poem. Susan Coolidge 885
A New Departure in Congregationalism. Rev. F. E. Clark, D. D. 894
An Appeal to the Highest Court. Rev. E. N. Packard, D. D. 895
The Companions of the Sorrowful Way. Ian Maclaren 896
A Run Southward. H. A. B. 897

THE HOME:

The Hermit—a poem. James Raymond Perry 899
Paragraphs 899
John Parnell Explains. Katharine Pearson Woods 899
How to Furnish the Piazza. Eunice D. Everett 901
A Rare Case of Generosity—a selection 901
Closet and Altar 901
Mothers in Council 902
Chat About Women 902
Conversation Corner. Mr. Martin 903
Corner Scrap-Book 903
SUNDAY SCHOOL—Lesson for July 4 904
Y. P. S. C. E.—Topic for July 4-10 917
PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM 905
LITERATURE 906

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES:

The Connecticut Association 910
From Cincinnati and Vicinity 910
Canadian Congregationalists at Kingston 911
Weekly Register 916

MISCELLANEOUS:

The Business Outlook 886
In and Around Chicago 898
At Drury 905
Biographical 908
Our Readers' Forum 908
In and Around Boston 909
Notices 910
Education 914
Index to Volume LXXXII. 915
Marriages and Deaths 916
Commencement Dates 916
International Missionary Union. Mrs. W. H. Belden 918
Again at Moody's 919

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
AND BOSTON RECORDER
The Recorder founded 1816: The Congregationalist, 1849

Published every Thursday,
At 1 Somerset Street, corner of Beacon Street.
PER COPY, 6 CENTS. PER YEAR IN ADVANCE, $3.00.
TWO YEARS IN ADVANCE, $5.00; FIVE YEARS, $10.00.
IF PAYMENT IS DELAYED, $3.50 PER YEAR.
ONE OLD AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION, $5.00.
CLUB OF FIVE, ONE AT LEAST BEING NEW, $10.00.
On Trial, 6 Months, $1.00; 3 Months, 25 cents.

RECEIPTS for subscriptions are indicated by the date of expiration following the subscriber's address, as printed upon the paper. If a special receipt is wanted a stamp should be sent with remittance.

DISCONTINUANCES.—In accordance with the almost universal wish of our subscribers, papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop. In connection with such an order all arrearages must be paid. An order of discontinuance can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

ADVERTISING RATES.—25 cents per agate line each insertion, 14 lines to the inch; 11½ inches to the column. Discounts according to amount of contract.
READING NOTICES, leaded nonpareil, 50 cents per line, each insertion, net.

W. L. GREENE & CO., Proprietors, Boston

Entered as second-class mail. Composition by Thomas Todd

✠ ✠ ✠

British Review, London.—"We know nothing which gives so clear an idea of the roots and growth of American Congregationalism, and a more hopeful view of its prospects."

✠ ✠ ✠

Dr. Dunning's Congregationalists in America.

With Introductions by R. S. Storrs, D. D., and Gen. O. O. Howard, LL. D., and special chapters by Dr. J. E. Roy, Dr. A. H. Quint, Dr. F. E. Clark, and Rev. H. A. Bridgman 552 pp., with numerous portraits and illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top.

Heretofore sold only by subscription at $2.75 net.

By special arrangements with The Pilgrim Press, which now controls the book, we are able to offer it to SUBSCRIBERS to THE CONGREGATIONALIST for

ONE DOLLAR.

☞ This is the price delivered at our office. If sent by mail, 25 cents additional for postage. Subscribers who may find it convenient to call for this book, either in Chicago or New York, may send us one dollar and receive an order on The Pilgrim Press in either of these cities, which will enable them to get it without the additional charge for postage.

This offer is limited strictly to our subscribers, old and new. To get it at this special price, your name must be on our list of subscribers and your subscription must be paid at least to the end of 1897. There is no other condition.

Address

THE CONGREGATIONALIST
1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

✠ ✠ ✠

Boston Transcript, Boston, Mass.—"The author, also those who wrote special chapters and those who wrote introductions, have placed all Congregationalists under lasting obligations to them for this great work. The book should find a place in every pastor's study, and in every Congregational household in America."

✠ ✠ ✠

Religious Notices

Religious and ecclesiastical notices, addresses of ministers, etc., published under this heading at ten cents a line.

American Seamen's Friend Society, No. 76 Wall St., New York. Incorporated April, 1833. Object: to improve the moral and social condition of seamen. Sustains chaplains and missionaries; promotes temperance homes and boarding houses in leading seaports at home and abroad; provides libraries for outgoing vessels; publishes the Sailor's Magazine, Seamen's Friend and Life Boat.

Contributions to sustain its work are solicited, and remittances of same are requested to be made direct to the main office of the society at New York.

James W. Elwell, President.
Rev. W. C. Stitt, Secretary.
W. C. Sturges, Treasurer.

KEIM'S HISTORY OF JESUS OF NAZARA.
6 vols.
This important Life of Jesus now reduced to
$1.80 per vol.
N. J. BARTLETT & CO., 28 Cornhill, Boston.

Every number is better than its predecessor.—Times, Troy, N. Y.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
FOR JULY

SHERIDAN'S RIDE
By General GEORGE A. FORSYTH, U. S. A., who was one of the two aides-de-camp whom General Sheridan took with him, and who is the only survivor.
Illustrated by R. F. ZOGBAUM

FRANK R. STOCKTON'S NEW SERIAL
THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS
Illustrated by PETER NEWELL

THE MILITARY ACADEMY AND NATIONAL DEFENCE
By Captain JAMES PARKER, U. S. A.

THE CELEBRITIES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS
By T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P.

THE KENTUCKIANS
A Novelette by JOHN FOX, Jr., dealing with the broadly contrasted types of the mountains and of the Blue-Grass region.
Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY

Brightest and best illustrated magazine in the language.—London Daily News.

Just Ready.

Lazarus.
A Tale of the World's Great Miracle.
By LUCAS CLEEVE.
12mo, 388 pages, gilt top, $1.50.

This powerful story, reproducing the times of our Saviour on earth, is meeting with much success in England, and a large sale is confidently expected in this country.

"Both as a narrative and as a picture of life in a momentous period it has interest and value."—N. Y. Times.

Beyond the City Gates.
A Romance of Old New York.
By AUGUSTA CAMPBELL WATSON.
12mo, 328 pages, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

"The story is exceedingly well told and is well worth reading."—Church Standard.

The Sultan and His Subjects.
By RICHARD DAVEY.
2 vols., 8vo, cloth, $7.50.

"No doubt the vivid picture which this work presents will be widely appreciated at the present moment."—Morning Post.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
31 West 23d Street, New York.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE CHURCH UNION has arranged for a series of articles running through the coming months on present day themes and by thoughtful and earnest men, as follows:

The Negro, His Strength and Weakness, Mr. Booker T. Washington, President of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial School, in August.

Religion in the Public School, Rev. J. H. Ecob, D. D., in September.

Religion and Citizenship, Rev. Newman Smyth, D. D., in October.

The Intermediate State, Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D. D., in November.

Religion in Business, Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., in December.

The New Theology, Rev. Benjamin W. Bacon, D. D., of Yale Theological Seminary, in January.

A Social Experiment, Rev. George Hodges, D. D., Dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Cambridge, Mass., in February.

The Outlook says: "Since the Church Union has changed hands it has become virtually a new paper, so greatly has it been improved. Mr. Samuel T Carter, its editor, is to be congratulated for his success in producing a journal so admirable for intellectual substance, literary quality, Christian spirit and practical directness."

Subscription price, one dollar per year. Special rate to Clergymen and Theological Students, fifty cents a year.

Trial subscription, twenty cents for three months.

Address, THE CHURCH UNION COMPANY,
18 Wall Street, New York.

"We like 'In Excelsis' better and better. We believe it to be the best hymn-book obtainable."
Rev. Geo. A. Gordon, D.D.,
Pastor "Old South," Boston.

Sacred Songs No. 1
No other New book equal to it. $25 per 100; 30 cts. each, if by mail.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., 76 E. Ninth St., New York.

Bargains in Pianos
FOR THE
SUNDAY SCHOOL.
Suitable for either Church or Sunday School use.

IVERS & POND GRAND. Has been used a little, but you would hardly know it. Is in splendid condition throughout. Rich, powerful tone, delightful action. Easily worth $500. Special price $300.

IVERS & POND SQUARE. Almost new. Full size, 7⅓ octaves. Beautiful tone. Specially adapted to Sunday School use, the player being able to look over the piano and see the school. This piano will give just as good satisfaction musically and will wear as well as the most expensive piano you can buy. Special price $175.

IVERS & POND UPRIGHT. Oak case. Small size. 5⅓ octaves. Just the thing for Chapel or Sunday School use. Will last a lifetime and give good service to the end. Special price $150.

We include stool and cover, prepay railway freights to New England points, ship subject to approval and sell on Easy Payments. If inconvenient to call, full particulars by mail if you write.

IVERS & POND PIANO CO.,
114 Boylston Street - - - Boston.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Volume LXXXII Boston Thursday 24 June 1897 Number 25

DR. DUNNING'S
Congregationalists in America
may be obtained by subscribers
to The Congregationalist at the
special price of
ONE DOLLAR.
Heretofore sold, by subscription only, at $2.75
net. See Advertisement on page 888.

TRIAL SUBSCRIPTIONS
6 Months for $1.00
3 Months for 25 cts. 4 Weeks Free.

OUR SERVICES
No. 16, National.
With Music, complete, 100 Copies, 60 Cents.

WHEN Queen Victoria came to the throne Martin Van Buren, the first President of the United States who had taken no personal part in the war of the Revolution, had just been inaugurated. Side by side, with not infrequent misunderstandings, but no open contests, the two countries have in sixty years grown in numbers and in power, the differences of government being indicated by the fact that the English queen, during her long reign, has been in official communication with seventeen different Presidents of the United States. Americans look on with cordial sympathy and good feeling while our neighbors across the sea are celebrating with religious rites and civic pageantry the completion of these long years of the queen's service to her people, and wish her many happy days of peace in which to enjoy the loyal affection of her subjects. If, because we are not Britons but Americans, her position as head of one of the greatest of modern empires appeals less to us than her private character, and her unaffected piety and loyalty to duty more than her, to us, anomalous and doubtful position as "head of the church," we are none the less sincere in our hope that she may still serve her generation with a wisdom that makes for peace, and that the awakened imperial self consciousness which has come to her subjects all round the world in these jubilee days may serve to make them strong for righteousness and considerate of the rights and needs of the weaker peoples of the earth.

We noted briefly last week the conviction and sentence of a Boston clerk and contractor for stealing from the city by falsifying pay rolls, but the matter deserves a somewhat larger notice. Apparently these two men had learned in a bad school of politics to draw a distinction between cheating and cheating the government. To steal from an individual, according to this way of thinking, is disgraceful and well deserves the penalties of the law, but to steal from all the individuals of a neighborhood organized as a city or a State is well enough, if only it be done so quietly or cleverly as to elude attention. Theft from a neighbor is larceny, but theft from neighbors is a legitimate exercise of wit and skill. There is great power to salve the conscience in that single letter S. How often do we hear it said of a political leader high in public life that he is an "honest" man, by which is not meant that he is strictly scrupulous in all his relations to the public, but only in his relations to individuals. He would not steal from or be careless of your private estate, but he connives at carelessness and theft from your public estate, and perhaps builds up his own political fortunes by promoting notoriously unfit men for places of public trust. It is as a blow to this false and corrupting distinction of morals (or rather of immorals) that we welcome the conviction and punishment of these two particular robbers of public funds.

It is noticeable, we think, that more of our churches than formerly are observing the anniversaries of their foundation, and are doing this in a more intelligent and enjoyable manner. This is wise. It causes some trouble to make ready for such a celebration, but it pays well. There is an evident quickening of interest in the church. Many well disposed but hitherto not specially enthusiastic towards it become zealous. It does all good to see something of the living ex-members, and to hear from those who cannot be present. It enkindles more heartily the loyalty of the young people to the church. It makes plain in an agreeable way something of the fraternal feeling for the church which neighboring churches cherish. It has real value in helping to impress upon the whole community the importance of the Christian religion to one and all. The church which neglects such observance may think the matter trivial and imagine that it does not lose very much. But it loses more than it appreciates. Let it once do honor to such an occasion and it will understand how real, even if somewhat indefinable, the benefit is which is gained. The older churches of course possess records of chief historic interest, but even the young churches soon grow to have abundant reason for proper self-congratulation in their retrospects. Let the custom, already very common, become universal.

It is usually half-hearted belief that fears discussion. Men who are sure of their ground do not expect to be swept off their feet by gusts of opposition. Truth is best established by free utterance of all honest views concerning it. To any of our readers who profess alarm because we admit divers views to our columns, or because we do not give with every contributed article a positive utterance of our own position on the subject treated, we commend Milton's counsel, which is as appropriate today as it ever was:

> Though all winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so truth be in the field, we do injuriously, by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength; let her and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter? . . . She needs no policies, nor stratagems, nor licenses to make her victorious; those are the shifts and the defenses that error uses against her power; give her but room and do not bind her when she sleeps.

Philosophy offers strong reasons to hope that all men ultimately will be saved. Salvation is assuredly offered to all mankind. And He who offers it is almighty. But so long as the acceptance of that offer depends on the will of those to whom the offer is made, no man has yet appeared who understands human nature well enough to declare with authority that salvation will ever be universally accepted. The only one who could do this is the man Christ Jesus. And he has not done it. To our view, Dr. Packard's Appeal to the Highest Court, printed on another page, is so far unanswerable. Candid study of the words of Christ convinces us that he was moved in all his mission to earth by the consciousness that sinners against God's law are in real and awful peril of endless moral death, and that refusal of his offers of deliverance aggravates that peril till, when continued long enough, there is left no ground for hope. In the face of Christ's teaching, as we understand it, to proclaim the final salvation of all men would be to assume a responsibility from which a thoughtful Christian would recoil. Whatever argument for it we may find in philosophy, it was not Christ's teaching, and therefore it cannot be ours.

It is a mistake to suppose that the occasional and too frequent instances of lynching in the United States are due to a spirit of lawlessness peculiar to this country. They spring from a disregard of law, of course, but the same thing exists and manifests itself in much the same way in other countries. Moreover, lynching, bad as it is, is not as bad as assassination, which is common in some countries. Lynching is not the act of an individual, but of a body of men, sometimes a multitude, and often, among us, of a body of men who, however mistaken, are eager to vindicate justice, for which they deem legal process too slow or too uncertain. We condemn lynching unqualifiedly. It is a disgrace to civilization. Yet it is not quite as evil as some of our foreign critics suppose. But it is high time that it were caused to cease. We do not wonder that our colored fellow-citizens, who have furnished too many victims, are aroused on the subject or that their gatherings of clergy are discussing it afresh. Their public protests and resolutions and those of other upright citizens doubtless will do good. But there never will be any satisfactory remedy except the general fortifying of reverence for law and good order in all our communities. The lesson needs enforcement that law must be obeyed because it is law, and that no man, no matter how wise and good in other respects, may venture to disregard it. Then evil laws will be quickly modified or rescinded, and all lawbreaking will come to be regarded with as much abhorrence as most breaches of the law now receive. This is Christian, as well as civil, common sense.

THE MOON OF LEAVES

The pluvial days of early June were not encouraging to wanderers in wood or meadow paths. By way of compensation, however, they have brought the foliage everywhere to an unwonted perfection of luxuriant beauty. The desiccating winds and scorching heats of breathless summer days have not begun their work and clouds look down upon such leafage as our hurrying climate seldom waits to show. In the calendar of those who love the open sky and the wood dimness, this month of the meadow's growth and the full wood shadows is emphatically the moon of leaves.

The world is like a festival. Its ways seem full of merry crowding folk in gala dress, bent upon making use of every moment of the favorable time. The strength of youth is in its out-reaching of boughs and up-springing of grain. It is a busy world, but not too busy to listen for the wind's music and the bird's ecstasy of song. It is no longer necessary in this perfection of June leafage to pick and choose the point of view. The world for once is beautiful wherever grass grows and trees lend their shadow and water runs.

The meadows are gay with moon daisies and buttercups and clover, while the worn-out fields make their protest against starvation with spikes of sorrel in ruddy background for sparse blades of meager grass. The eye wanders delighted over an infinitely varied beauty on rounded slopes and in the lush growth of hollows. All trace of harsh or broken outline has for the moment disappeared from field and hill, as the rough strength of a man's life is sometimes rounded out by the growing enthusiasm of affection. Then comes the wind who, man like, tends to become a poet in the spring, and invents new pictures of harmony and beauty. The waving grasses yield, but will not yield too far. They return to bow their heads again to the wind's piping in a continual play of strength and fragile beauty. It is worth while to grow, if only for a happy day of June, and we may hope that the life of man more precious than any other of God's works may outlast its perishable beauty, even though "in the morning it is like grass that groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up. In the evening it is cut down and withereth."

This, too, is the hour of perfected beauty in the hemlock woods. To enter their cool shadow is like stepping from the full sunlight of the street into the dim, religious light of some great church. The lofty columns that uphold the roof and the floor, strewn with cones and needles, have attained their summer hue of warm cinnamon red. A light rain of falling needles tells us that the wind is busy and that it is ripening time. This stirring wind, although not felt, is seen even here, indeed, in noiseless swaying of tree trunks and moving outlines of the sungleams on the broken floor. It is shadow that moves, not light, is the lesson of the hour of forest worship. The light shines on, ready to enter at all openings which are made for it. Clouds are eclipse. Night is but the hiding of the earth in its own shadow. Above all and behind all the sun is shining in serenity of strength.

What can the bumblebee be wanting in these cool shades that he goes stumbling about among the roots and stones? Surely he has no liking for the green worms that let themselves down by long threads from the hemlock boughs for the convenience of the catbird, who flies nestwards with his beak full of choice, wriggling morsels. There is food enough, too, for the phœbe, lover of shadows, who hovers with quick wing strokes, hawking for the gnats that show in the sungleams, and then perches upon a jutting point of rock and goes through his wagtail drill with practiced skill and complete self-satisfaction.

Across an open glade on the hilltop flies posthaste a rose-breasted grosbeak, but stops short and dodges into a tree at the sight of mortals resting in the neighborhood of his nest. There he sits, a spot of fire among the leaves, and wishes he were rid of us. How many generations of mortals must walk circumspectly and be on their good behavior before we can win the confidence of the birds? Perhaps some elimination of original sin and inherited suspicion may be necessary on both sides. The worst of it is that all gayly painted birds, like the grosbeak, have reason just now to be especially afraid of human women, who postpone the growth of their own wings by wearing those of slaughtered birds upon their hats. What shall we do if we cannot put our sisters forward as types for the birds of what is most trustworthy and compassionate among men?

Outside and above the dim wood spaces the hemlocks are clothed in that fresh summer dress which makes them for a while the most beautiful and cheerful of all our forest trees. Against the background of the darker green of last year's foliage and the soft blue of the summer sky their drooping, wind-tossed feathers are the embodiment of youth and grace. An open wood glade in their inclosure filled with young oaks and birches, with foreground of green moss and sparse rock grass, over which the white clouds move and dissolve in the faint blue sky, seems overflowing with glad life.

Yet even here man is regarded as an intruder. A gray squirrel hurries away with interrupted leaps. A chipmunk, homeward bound across the rocks, squeals with sudden fright and flings himself into his hole, at whose mouth his head presently emerges and remains fixed, unnoticeable but for the bright eye, white eyelid mark and rigid whiskers, studying the monsters on the rocks. After long vigil, which we sustain with much less patience than his own, he musters courage enough to stealthily emerge halfway and leap over the bare floor of hemlock needles toward the shelter of a bush. A chewink peeps out from the bushes and is gone again. The crows' low flight through the treetops is turned aside by the unwelcome presence. Only the bees and butterflies, each in its own fashion, industriously and aimlessly show their disregard of man.

The trees reach over to narrow or close in the woodland paths. The dewberry vines are all in blossom at our feet. Overhead a tulip tree lifts up its multitudinous cups. Through wood openings long slopes of a meadow snowy white with daisies gleam in the warm sun. A turn of the path brings us out at last to the full splendor of sunlight on the open fields. A poet might have imagined April, or perhaps October, but who could ever have risen to the daring imagination of the unstinted and impartial beauty of the moon of leaves.

THEOLOGICAL RESPONSIBILITY

The doctrinal basis of fellowship of Congregational churches as declared by the constitution of our National Council is that they "agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only infallible rule of religious faith and practice; their interpretation thereof being in substantial accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith, commonly called evangelical." On this broad but safe platform Congregationalists by mutual consent stand together in common fellowship.

Within these limits there is room for decided differences in theological belief, and such differences have marked the successive stages of Congregational history. Parties have always existed within the denomination, and often representatives of one party have claimed exclusively to represent the entire body. Their interpretation of the Scriptures has seemed to them the only one in proper accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith. Not to go back of the present century, we may recall the sharp contention between Old Calvinists and Hopkinsonians, which would probably have resulted in the founding of two theological seminaries in Massachusetts had not the opposition to Unitarianism, which was then beginning to assert itself, brought both parties to unite against a common foe in forming Andover Seminary in 1808. Less fortunate was the issue of the conflict between Taylorism and Tylerism, which a quarter of a century later led to the founding of a second theological school in Connecticut, now Hartford Seminary. These contentions, once so intense as to destroy friendships and lead Congregational ministers to denounce one another to the Christian public, have so completely passed away that few now living could explain the differences of belief which caused division. Yet these are only two out of many illustrations. In the council of 1865 it seemed as though no statement of faith could be formulated on which all the delegates could agree, and the adoption of the Burial Hill Declaration was regarded as averting a grave danger of division. The affirmation of Dr. Budington, six years later, at the National Council in Oberlin—"we stand on the grave of buried prejudices"—has become historic. Yet new prejudices are continually arising, and some brethren are as ready to nurse them as others to dig their graves. Each time a notable funeral of this kind occurs there is great rejoicing in the new sense of unity as evidence of a larger bestowment of the Holy Spirit.

Present differences seem far more vital than those which are past, but not more vital than they seemed to contending brethren of those times. The Congregationalist is often urged to place itself squarely with one party or another within the denomination. It is admonished, on the one hand, that the traditional belief in the history of the Bible must be maintained; that a particular theory of the atonement must be defended; that the nature of future punishment must be clearly described and the beliefs which men must hold in order to escape it; and that if the editors of this paper do not do these things, we are shirking our theological responsibility. Further, we are told that we ought to point out the men who do not hold our views and warn the churches against their leadership.

On the other hand, we are exhorted to place ourselves in the front of advance movements in theology; to welcome and spread new light; to wake up to the fact that many of the theological beliefs of the past are already discarded; and to let the public know who the men are who retard the progress of the kingdom of God and how completely they are being left behind. We are assured by our friends in both parties that, if The Congregationalist would take its stand firmly on the positions they hold, it would demonstrate its ability for leadership and command greater confidence. It is even intimated that we might suppress or perhaps drive out of the denomination those who hold views which some of the brethren regard as unsound.

We are not ambitious to gain any such partisan leadership. We hold firmly to "the great doctrines of the Christian faith." We believe not only that those within the Congregational denomination may stand in fellowship on the basis of these doctrines, but that other denominations who hold them might come into closer relations, and thus hasten the advance of Christ's kingdom on earth. We hold our own views conscientiously, and we differ from some of those held by some of our brethren. But we labor and pray for this larger fellowship of believers in Christ. We believe that truth will be more firmly established by the union than by the division of disciples, and that greater knowledge of God will best be attained by giving respectful consideration to every discovery of him which those who profess to obey him claim to have made; and that the old saving truths of the gospel will most prevail through fair and candid discussion of them with brotherly spirit toward all disciples of Christ. We do not believe that enthusiasm for those truths is fostered by charges of heresy or threats of destroying the influence of those who bear the same Christian name, and who stand together outwardly as mutually accredited teachers of truth. Our faith is strong that the Holy Spirit, fulfilling the promise of Christ, is guiding his disciples into all the truth. To this guidance we reverently yield ourselves, and rejoice in the fellowship of those in whom the same Spirit is working, though with diversities of operations. We do not seek to avoid our theological responsibility. We remember the apostolic counsel, "Be ye, therefore, of sound mind." We would not forget the exhortation which accompanies it, "Above all things, being fervent in your love among yourselves." We are confident that theological problems will best be solved by "giving diligence to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

THE TYNGSBOROUGH COUNCIL

In our columns of church news we make mention of the recent ordination of Miss Sarah A. Dixon in Tyngsborough, Mass. One or two special features of the proceedings of the council deserve comment.

It is not usual for women to become pastors of Congregational churches. Already, however, there are nearly thirty women on our list of pastors, and several others have been regularly licensed to preach. Probably the number of women in the pastorate never will become large among us, but experience now has shown that there is no sufficient reason in the nature of things why some women may not make useful pastors. Every case must stand upon its own merits. Miss Dixon, who was a Methodist until she joined the Tyngsborough church a few days before the council, has passed creditably through both the academic and the theological departments of Boston University. She made a fine appearance under examination for ordination and seems abundantly qualified for the pastorate.

A peculiarity of this council more noticeable than its approval of a woman is found in the facts that a Baptist and also a Methodist church were invited to membership, and that three of the eleven individuals called were not Congregationalists. Seven of the thirty-three members present were not of our own order. The invitation of members of other branches of the church to sit in Congregational councils called for our own business is not absolutely unprecedented, but it is a mistake. The end sought to be obtained, usually to express a commendable spirit of fraternal courtesy, can be gained otherwise. Such an invitation is an example of looseness in practice which should not be approved. Only Congregationalists have any right to conduct our own denominational affairs, especially in inducting our pastors and extending our fellowship. To permit others to vote upon applicants for a place upon our official list of ministers is clearly inconsistent, however well intended, and is equally perilous.

In this instance, however—unless it be used hereafter as a precedent, as it should not be—no great harm is likely to result. The council, although not a pure and proper Congregational council, was Congregational in its large, controlling majority. The candidate also had become a Congregationalist by joining the Congregational church inviting her to its pastorate. Moreover, the representatives of other denominations courteously and carefully avoided influencing the action of the body. No criticism should be made upon them. The Baptists declined to vote, and the Methodists only voted after special request and in a complimentary way, without a possibility of altering the result.

The exceptional character of the council lay chiefly in the membership of some who are not Congregationalists. When the presence of such friends is desired, why do not our churches invite them in the letter-missive to come as honorary members without the right of voting? The compliment paid them then would be equally sincere and acceptable and no question of irregularity could arise.

LIVING IN THE LIGHT OF GOD'S KNOWLEDGE

Ignorance always causes the feeling of being at a disadvantage, sometimes of absolute helplessness. The wisest often appreciate this most keenly, because they understand better than others how much there is to be known. Their superiority over others in wisdom they see to be comparatively small, while nobody else appreciates as they do the magnitude of the possibilities of knowledge. This consciousness of ignorance, by whomsoever felt, is depressing. It sometimes almost unnerves us.

There is relief, however, in the thought of the divine knowledge. God knows all things and, so far as his wisdom is necessary to us, it is at our service freely and fully. If we are trying to live in unity of spirit with him and to do his will, the wealth of his wisdom is available by each of us, no matter how humble or needy we may be. He will not dispel for us all the mysteries or solve all the problems which perplex us. That would be to enervate us and to rob us of the opportunity of cultivating faith and courage. But so far as our honest study and earnest effort in our own behalf needs the enlightenment which he alone can afford, we may depend upon receiving it.

To realize that he who is our creator, our daily guide and ruler, our tenderest friend, knows all things and means to use that knowledge for our good is full of comfort. It is a help in the hour of temptation. We are checked, when likely to yield, by the recollection that the divine eye is upon us and that all the consequences of our sin are foreseen by him. It is a help in the day of trouble. It is consoling in some degree to be sure that God knows why we have been afflicted and how good can be made to result from our bitterest trials. Whatever knits us closer to our Heavenly Father is of present, permanent and the utmost benefit, and our consciousness that he is all-knowing as truly as all-loving helps to bind us fast to him.

Even the consciousness that he knows our follies and our faults should have the same effect. For we may remind ourselves that he understands, as no one else does, our struggles against sin. He knows of the secret inner strifes, the penitent resolutions to try again and again, the shame which we feel when we have been overcome, and the longings for goodness which, in spite of the evil within our hearts, we have. Yes, the more we reflect upon the divine knowledge, the better we comprehend that it throws steady light upon our human way.

CURRENT HISTORY

Hawaiian Annexation

The President's message accompanying the Hawaiian annexation treaty lays stress upon the long history of commercial and political relations and the offers of cession by the Hawaiian Governments in 1851 and 1893. Of the antecedent missionary relations the message, wisely, perhaps, says nothing. Most significant for the light it throws on the historic attitude of our Government is the answer of 1888 to the proposal for a joint guarantee of the neutrality of the islands by the United States, Germany and Great Britain declining on the ground that the relation of the United States to the islands was already sufficient for the end in view. The conditions of the problem have changed rapidly in the past few years, especially by the development of land hunger among the great nations, the relation of the reciprocity treaty to American commercial and agricultural interests, the development of a colonizing spirit by the Japanese and the proved capacity of the Hawaiian republic to sustain itself as a government with which it is safe to treat. The ex queen Liliuokalani has filed a protest, but can hardly, after her abdication, be regarded as a factor in the problem. How it looks to the people of American blood and sympathy in Hawaii is indicated by an extract from the Honolulu Friend, which we print in the department of Current Thought this week.

The Treaty

The treaty itself provides for the absolute cession of the islands. We are to assume all government debts and obligations, not to exceed $4,000,000, and to receive in return all government rights, lands and public property of every kind and description, the revenue and the proceeds of sale of which, except so far as used for the civil, military or naval use of the United States or local governments, is to be used solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the islands for educational or other public purposes. Until Congress acts, the power of appointment to public office in Hawaii is vested in the President of the United States. Hawaiian foreign treaties are abrogated, but municipal law continues subject to the approval and amendment of Congress. Further Chinese immigration is prohibited, and the Chinese in Hawaii are excluded from the United States. Five commissioners, at least two of them residents of Hawaii, are to recommend legislation to Congress.

Public Opinion and the Treaty

So far as foreign interference is concerned there is a clear way for the treaty. Japan will, no doubt, make the best claim she can, but Count Ito, in an interview in London, has publicly announced that Japan will not create international difficulties in connection with Hawaii, and he undoubtedly knows the mind of his own government. The real difficulty which the scheme of annexation must encounter is in the division of American public opinion. The treaty contemplates the creation of a territory to be governed very much as the District of Columbia is governed, by the direct action of Congress but outside our continental bounds. By accepting oceanic territory we give bonds to become a naval power. Evidently we have come to the dividing of the ways. We must at last abdicate the real but undefined control which we have had over Hawaii, or we must assume full responsibility for its future, with all the resultant complications of our own political life, some of which are so threatening as abundantly to justify hesitation, if not actual refusal, to favor annexation. This is our dilemma, but the dilemma of Hawaii is that, if she cannot throw herself under our protection, she will be completely Japanized inside of a decade: The Americanization or Japanization of the islands is the question under debate, and it admits of no further postponement.

The Minister to Spain

The President, after long delay, has at last found a minister to Spain in the person of Gen. Stewart L. Woodford of Brooklyn, who has had considerable experience in public office as member of Congress and lieutenant governor of New York. The only criticism which we are disposed to make upon this appointment is that General Woodford is said to be totally ignorant of Spanish, a serious handicap for the delicate and difficult negotiations upon which he must enter. There are numerous and conflicting reports in regard to the instructions which have been given him by the President, but we have seen nothing to indicate that there is any purpose of an immediate departure from the course of the Government thus far in dealing with Spain and Cuba. Indemnity will, no doubt, be demanded in individual cases like that of Dr. Ruiz, an American citizen, who died in solitary confinement in a Cuban prison, and the good offices of our Government will probably once more be offered with a view to procuring something like the autonomy enjoyed by English colonies for Cuba, but we question the truth of the bellicose rumors which have been so common. How much we are affected by the state of war existing in the islands is indicated by the shrinkage in trade from $102,864,204 in 1893 to less than $20,000,000 for the present year; and by the refusal of the American steamers to accept Captain-General Weyler's paper currency in payment of freight, which has forced the Cuban merchants to charter a line of steamers of their own.

Diplomatic Affairs

The Porte has at last definitely accepted President Angell as American minister to Turkey, and the country will hope for a speedy adjustment of the pending claims against the Turkish Government from his knowledge, dignified firmness and wide diplomatic experience. The missionaries especially are assured of a sympathetic, if impartial, representative at the court of the sultan.

Ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster has been successful in negotiating with Russia for the better protection of seal life in the north Pacific and Baffin's Bay. He will next seek to arrange with Japan, leaving only England of the four north Pacific Powers to be dealt with later. England's refusal to enter into negotiations has been in the interest of Canada, whose sealers have done most of the mischief by the destruction of seal life in the open sea. Perhaps after the others agree England may, in the interests of her world-wide diplomacy, force her Canadian subjects to hear reason. The mission has given opportunity for a display of Russia's traditional friendliness to the United States. The London Times recently expressed the feeling that Great Britain had been slighted by the prior application to Russia, but Commissioner Foster takes occasion to explain diplomatically that he passed by London because it was the time of the queen's jubilee, when it would be difficult to get a hearing for business from the overoccupied British statesmen.

Victoria's Celebration

The queen's jubilee week began appropriately with religious services in Windsor and London, and, in fact, wherever there are English people and an English church. The queen's own special service was held at St. George's Chapel, Windsor. The Empress Frederick of Germany, the queen's oldest daughter, was her attendant, and there were present only a part of the royal family with a very few invited guests. The service itself was simple and solemn and was followed by a display of that strong family affection which has endeared the queen to her people. At the same hour the Prince of Wales, as his mother's personal representative, attended a fuller service in St. Paul's Cathedral, accompanied by the visiting royalties and special representatives of other governments, while the two Houses of Parliament assembled for worship, the Commons at St. Margaret's Church, under the shadow of Westminster Abbey, and the Lords in the Abbey itself. We have printed elsewhere the special prayer appointed for these services. The hymn written for the jubilee by the Bishop of Wakefield is neither better nor worse than the average occasional hymns written for special days by people who are without much poetic gift.

The Second Day

Monday was the day of the queen's solemn entry into the capital. She left Windsor in the morning, and her special train was never out of sight of groups of her subjects who had assembled along the track to see her pass. At Paddington Station she was received by the vicar of the parish with an address of welcome, to which she handed him a written reply. Her progress through the streets, in its popular welcome and acclaim, must have satisfied the most enthusiastic of royalists. Arrived at Buckingham palace she received the special envoys in the afternoon, and entertained them at a banquet in the evening. Special Ambassador Reid presented President McKinley's dignified and cordial letter, and the queen in reply expressed her sincere thanks to the President and "the great nation of our kinsmen." The list of jubilee honors proves to be a meager one. All the colonial premiers are made privy councilors, and knighthoods are given to a number of colonial judges, thus emphasizing the note of imperial unity and extension which has been dominant in the feeling of the jubilee thus far. The queen, in spite of all rumors to the contrary, seems to be in good health for a woman of seventy-nine, and the stories of her intended abdication are denied.

Peace Negotiations

The first sign of real progress toward the conclusion of a treaty of peace between Greece and Turkey comes in the reported letter of the Emperor William of Germany to the sultan advising him to withdraw his troops from Thessaly as soon as possible. The evacuation of Thessaly being determined upon, with a slight rectification of the frontier giving the crests of the mountains to the Turks, the indemnity and the right of Greeks in Turkey to trial before their own consular courts come up for settlement. The amount of the former is apparently to be determined by the capacity of Greece to pay, and will probably become a lien upon Greece in the hands of Russia by its transfer to her in part payment of the Turkish indemnity outstanding from the last Russian war. There will probably be some yielding of the rights of Greeks in Turkey also, but not of their freedom from the authority of Turkish law—a point which the Powers cannot afford to yield for the sake of their own subjects in Turkey.

Fatalities and Casualties

The destruction caused by the earthquake in India proves to be much more serious than the first accounts revealed, especially in Assam, on the southern foothills of the Himalayas, and will add materially to the difficulties from famine under which India is suffering. The city of Tehuantepec in Mexico has been destroyed by earthquake shocks which were severely felt as far north as San Francisco. Wind and rain have wrought widespread havoc in France and Spain. At Asnières, near Paris, a fair was in progress. All the machinery of business and pleasure was completely demolished, several lives were lost and many were injured. At Calgary in the Canadian Rocky Mountains a cloud-burst flooded the lower part of the town and swept away houses and bridges. At different points in the West, as far to the East as Ohio, heavy storms have destroyed property and lives. At Roselle, Kan., the whole village was wiped out and at Burdette not a building escaped uninjured. In Lincoln, Ill., the storm demolished a large barn belonging to the State institution for the feeble-minded in which a number of persons had taken refuge, killing four and injuring five others. At Newport News, Va., houses were blown down and there were many narrow escapes from death. Altogether the unusual meteorological conditions of the month seem to be still in evidence both in scorching heat in the South and destructive local storms of rain and wind in the West and North. The explosion of powder in one of the buildings of the Hazard Mill at Hazardville, Ct., instantly killed three workmen.

IN BRIEF

Anxious days these for fervent aspirants after doctorates of divinity. Peaceful days for those who don't care a button.

What a multitude of prayers for the good queen ascended on both sides the Atlantic last Sunday! Not all were couched in the stately language of the Anglican collects but they were none the less sincere and fervent.

By all means attend your college reunion if it be a possible thing. No institution is too strong to dispense with the expressed loyalty of its sons and no man or woman can afford to lose the quickening that comes from revisiting the college home.

Endeavorers all over the country will be setting their faces toward San Francisco during the next few days. The Boston special train starts next Monday afternoon and there will be probably about 500 Massachusetts delegates upon it. Other New England States will send out sizable companies. The convention is in session from July 7–12, and there is every prospect that it will be a noteworthy gathering.

A woman committed suicide in Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church in New York not long ago, and now the Episcopalians are debating whether the church must be reconsecrated. If the consecration depends upon the acts of strangers we should think there was such a need. If it depends upon the reverence and devotion of the worshipers we do not see how de-consecration could be possible without their act.

The right of the resident public to consideration in the disposal of the water front has begun to find recognition in New York. The first of the new playground piers, the lower floor of which is given up to merchandise but the second to public recreation, was opened not long ago. In the torrid heats of the New York tenement district in summer the relief and pleasure which this simple provision will bring must be worth a great deal more than it can possibly cost.

The Congregational Union of Canada, whose meeting in Kingston is reported on page 911, introduced a pleasant innovation in giving up an hour one morning to the women. Mrs. Macullum, president of the Woman's Board, presided, and the addresses of the women are said to have converted several of the ministers present from their hostility to the prominence of women in public meetings. If the women accomplish so much in missions, it must always be profitable to the men to hear what they are doing.

A picture is before us of the proposed new mission house of the California Chinese Mission of the A. M. A. We hope the association can secure it free from debt. It can be had only by direct contributions for the purpose of those who would see the project accomplished. At any rate so good an opportunity and so important a work are set forth in the circular which presents this picture that every pastor who receives it ought to give it his considerate attention. It is under the wise and experienced management of that well-known veteran, Dr. William C. Pond.

The decision of the Court in the remaining contempt cases in Washington follows the precedents set in the acquittal of Havemeyer and Searles. The newspaper correspondents, Shriver and Edwards, were both acquitted under instructions of Judge Bradley, on the ground that they had not been legally summoned and that the question asked them was not pertinent. The judge refused to commit himself to the proposition that communications to newspaper men are privileged, which was one of the points raised by the defense.

Independence Day falls this year on Sunday, and the opportunity will no doubt be wisely used by ministers for the enforcement of the lessons of Christian citizenship. The National Christian Citizenship League proposes also that "all who love our country unite in observing Saturday, July 3, with rousing celebrations on definite Christian citizenship lines," offering free literature and suggested programs for the Saturday celebration, by Gen. C. H. Howard and others, and also suggestive outlines and messages for sermons, all of which may be obtained by addressing the league at 153 La Salle Street, Chicago.

The language of this country is English. This is getting to be common law as well as manifest destiny. In Pennsylvania Judge Beitler has just put the matter in form by refusing to approve amendments to the charter of a German Lutheran church by which it was proposed that English should be excluded from the services of the church, declaring that they were against public policy. He said: "The language of this State and this country is the English language, and this court cannot sanction or in any way approve an effort on the part of the German-speaking citizens composing St. Peter's Church to prevent their successors, if they desire to change the language spoken in the church to the English tongue, to do so."

Alaska is to be congratulated upon its new governor, Rev. J. G. Brady, who, like Sheldon Jackson, began his career in the Territory as a home missionary. Failing to secure recognition and support from the Presbyterian Home Mission Board for plans of industrial training which he found necessary for the development of his work among the Indians, he organized a business enterprise for himself, which has grown to large proportions and contributed to the success of training among the Indians, as well as to his own prosperity. Governor Brady knows the great Territory well by widely extended travel, is in full sympathy with the Christian work in it, and will bring his proved capacity as a business administrator to the service of its government.

Oklahoma was settled under picturesque conditions of sudden opening and immediate possession by a crowd of would-be owners who had been encamped under military restraint upon its borders. It has had a reputation for lawless life. We are glad to note that a revival, similar in its methods and effects to those of the "great awakening" in the raw colonies more than a century ago, has transformed life in many of its towns and villages. Preacher Johnston and his helpers, by God's grace, seem to have turned the course of life in the region near Hell Roaring Creek. In Ingalls the saloons have all been closed and former liquor sellers and outlaws become teachers in Sunday schools and men of Christian life. May the work deepen and extend and not in Oklahoma alone.

It was not until our issue of July 28, 1837, that we printed the news of the death of King William IV. and the accession of Victoria, just received by the packet ship, St. James, which had arrived in New York with English dates to June 20. Two weeks earlier the coming of age of the present queen and the announcement of her engagement to the second son of the Prince of Orange were in the English news, the later item showing that false reports are not of recent newspaper invention. There is no editorial comment upon the queen's accession, but the paper of Aug. 11 calls attention to the fact that the death of William severed the connection of Hanover with Great Britain, the former descending only to heirs male. This separation was one of the special blessings which the British owe to their queen, since the possession of Hanover could hardly have failed to entangle Great Britain in the wars of the continent.

We trust that the recent refusal by a Nebraska association to approbate a young man to preach, on the ground of un-Scriptural views of Christ and the future life, and its affectionate recommendation "that he seek more fully to know the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures, that he pursue the full course of preparation in one of our accredited seminaries, and that he withdraw his application till the usual time in the seminary course," may suggest to other aspirants the desirability of becoming fully grounded in faith and knowledge before presenting their applications. The decision of the association that to allow him to preach "while holding such views would be misleading to him, would do him wrong, and would violate the confidence reposed in us by the churches," shows that it not only believes in an educated ministry, but appreciates its own responsibility in the matter. Would that all our associations were as careful!

The case of Herman Warszawiak, who has been a missionary to the Jews in New York under the care of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of that city, reached its end ecclesiastically when public announcement was made, last Sunday, of his suspension from membership in that church by its session, after trial upon charges of gambling and other immorality. The public protest of the suspended man's wife that her husband was innocent added a pathetic element to the scene, and she will have the sympathy of every one in her trials. It will be remembered that this was the man whose plausible words held the support of his pastor, Dr. John Hall, until it was shown, upon his application to be received into the presbytery of New York, that he had been seen entering gambling houses in Wehawken. Our Hebrew friends have had too much cause to complain of the character of a few of the agents whom Christians have supported in the effort to win them to Christianity. We are not to cease the effort to commend Messiah to his own people, but we ought to win their respect by the unblemished character of the messengers whom we send. A tainted agent creates more prejudice than he can possibly win favor.

The special collect used at the services in St. George's Chapel, which the queen attended, demands preservation among the choicest memorabilia of the current celebration. It runs:

> Almighty God, who rulest over all the kingdoms of the world and disposeth of them according to thy good pleasure, we yield thee unfeigned thanks, for that thou wast pleased to place thy servant, our sovereign lady, Queen Victoria, upon the throne of this realm. Let thy wisdom be her guide, and let thine arm strengthen her; let justice, truth and holiness, let peace and love flourish in her days. Direct all her counsels and endeavors to thy glory and the welfare of her people, and give us grace to obey her cheerfully for conscience. Let her always possess the hearts of her people, let her reign be long and prosperous and crown her with immortality in the life to come.

Appropriate as this is it hardly equals the regular collect which for sixty years has been offered twice a day in churches all over England. There are many of our readers whose eyes have moistened as they have heard it chanted in the great cathedrals:

> Endue her plenteously with heavenly gifts, grant her in health and wealth long to live, strengthen her that she may vanquish all her enemies, and finally after this life may attain everlasting joy and felicity through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The University of Kansas, a State institution, graduates a class of one this year—so low has political interference brought its reputation. In Texas the professors of political economy and kindred sciences, who have been teaching the facts of financial history and theory as generally accepted by the learned of Europe and the world, are under fire and will probably be driven out by the believers in free silver. In New England there is a concerted effort to force President Andrews of Brown University to resign because he is opposed to the exclusive gold standard. These are related facts, the meaning of which is clear. With the disappearance of academic freedom the prestige of any institution is certain to disappear. To come to the rescue of truth with violence is to lose the respect of the scholarly and ambitious. President Andrews's isolation among the teachers of the country is itself significant. The decline of State universities where freedom of teaching is hampered carries its own condemnation. A great institution can afford to hear both sides. Let the other side be represented, if possible, in Brown and Kansas and Texas, and in the long run truth is sure to win. The only teaching, by the way, which President Andrews does at Brown is in the department of moral and intellectual philosophy, in which he is notably strong, and where it is hardly to be expected that his financial heresies would find expression.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE

FROM NEW YORK

Our Schools

The private schools of the city are closing their sessions for the summer, and the near-by end of the term of our public schools stirs up new interest in them and in plans for their improvement. In a speech before the Citizens' Union Prof. N. M. Butler urges that the first need of this commercial and manufacturing city is not so much classical as good technical, industrial and commercial schools. In these he says we are a whole generation behind England, France and Germany, "which protect their trade with brains and highly developed skill." Apropos to this idea is the announcement of Baroness Hirsch's proffer of $90,000 for land and building on the East Side to enlarge the Hirsch Trade School so that it shall accommodate 400 Russian and Roumanian Jewish boys of sixteen years and over, to be taught the principles and practical operations of plumbing, carpentry, wood turning, house and sign painting, machine work and other trades, thus making the boys independent of trades' union tyranny. (Where are the men of wealth and far-seeing benevolence ready to enlarge manifold the facilities in this line for others than Hebrews?)

The successful experiment of vacation schools is to be tried in July and August for the fourth season on this side and the first in Brooklyn. Over there a company of energetic ladies, with the superintendent's hearty co-operation, is raising the money for one school to begin with, to hold a daily session from 8 to 11 A. M., in one of the schoolhouses. It is to be called the "Brooks Vacation School," in honor of Professor Brooks of Harvard, whose lectures on the results of the Boston experiment moved the ladies to undertake this work.

On this side the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor, which has hitherto had the project in hand, is asking for $10,000 to carry on ten schools, if practicable, for six weeks, the children to be kept out of the streets and taught, not so much in the usual school studies as in various manual arts by which they can earn an honest living. Last year more than 109,000 were taught at a cost of less than ten cents a day for each—schoolhouses being used free of charge.

The Brooklyn board's estimate of cash needed for 1898 is $3,296,829 for its 117 public schools with more than 3,000 teachers, and has secured legal authority to expend it. The number of different pupils taught last year was 153,391; average daily attendance 106 449.

Our Universities

Columbia opened her 143d Commencement with a baccalaureate sermon from Rev. Dr. Huntington of Grace Church. His theme was Facing the Evil Day. The graduating services, after prayer, began with an inspiring address by President Low, urging every young man to make the most of himself by doing his best for his country and his time. The university is rich in prizes, and the winners (thirty or so—more than a quarter of them went to the ladies of Barnard) were named amidst great enthusiasm. The degree of B. A. was conferred on fifty young men and twenty ladies; that of LL. B. on seventy-two; M. D. on forty.

New York celebrated its sixty-fifth year's close with a baccalaureate by Dr. Schenck from Eccle. 3: 25, another timely, impressive and stimulating discourse. About a dozen prizes and fellowships were allotted and 335 degrees conferred—109 in the medical, 142 in the law and eighty-four in the other departments. The degree of Doctor of Pedagogy (given after four years of successful teaching) was conferred on four ladies, that of LL. D. on one lawyer and D. D. on two ministers.

Our Hopes

It is now more than a week since Pres. Seth Low, in answer to inquiry from the Citizens' Union, expressed his probable willingness to accept a nomination for the mayoralty of greater New York on these conditions: that the nomination should be so united and hearty that its acceptance would be a unifying force among the friends of good government in the city, and that if elected he should be untrammeled by any obligation whatever except that of his judgment and conscience and the mayor's official oath to make the interests of the city the paramount concern in the discharge of every duty. This characteristic letter at once put heart into the thousands of citizens whose first choice he is and has been, but who were hopeless or doubtful of his acceptance. He has not yet been nominated, but his availability has, since his letter, been the one matter of discussion in all parties and cliques. How to secure his election is the question with those who seek the new city's best welfare; how to defeat it is puzzling the brains of those who see in the new city only larger opportunity for plunder and for vicious indulgence. The election will be the most important action to which the city has been called since the war, if not in its entire history. On the result hangs the question whether enlarged New York shall henceforth be a safe city for honest, law-abiding people to live in, or a den of thieves of the Tweed stripe and a cave of Adullam for the vile outcasts of all nations. The hearty union of feeling for Mr. Low among decent citizens of all parties is very encouraging, but Tammany is not going to be denied the handling of so many millions without desperate resistance. Her Croker is leaving even his dear race horses to come home and rally the corner groggeries, the gambling dens and hiding holes of criminals, to prevent an administration that would make life a burden to Tammany and its entire constituency. Good men and women are hoping for Mr. Low's nomination and election, and praying that it may not be defeated by selfish party plotting and dickering.

HUNTINGTON.

A NEW DEPARTURE IN CONGREGATIONALISM

A HINT FROM THE ANTIPODES

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D. D.

To find the particular new departure of which I write we must go to the opposite side of the globe—nearly to the antipodes—to be more exact, to the city of Durban in the colony of Natal. There are four Congregational churches in the city and suburbs managed on the co-operative system. Not one minister for one church and one parish, according to the immemorial custom of those who went out from Scrooby, but four ministers for four parishes.

Now what is the difference between four ministers for four parishes and one minister for one parish? Just this. The four ministers and the four churches pool their issues, to use a commercial phrase. Each minister has four churches on his hands, and each church has four preachers. But as each minister has three assistants or associates and each church can have but one preacher at a time, the ministers are neither overburdened with work nor the churches overburdened with an embarrassment of preachers. Every week a schedule is made out, or perhaps once a month, and it is decided where, on the next Sabbath, each minister shall preach, and when the Saturday papers are issued, if not before, the parishioners know whether they will be favored with a sermon from Parson A. or Parson B. or C. or D.

The parochial work falls, naturally, more consecutively to one pastor who lives near one portion of the quadruple flock and is looked to for parish calls, for funeral and marriage services and others of like nature. This system is evidently borrowed from the Wesleyans, who manage their own churches in this way, not only in Durban but in some other parts of South Africa.

How does the new departure work? Well, there are conflicting opinions. "Admirably," said most of the Congregationalists with whom I talked. "It enables us to join our forces, to guard the weak points, to strengthen our outposts, to occupy mission fields in the suburbs which we should not dare to attempt otherwise. It unifies our work and gives us the advantage of an organized army over the guerilla warfare method."

How does the plan work? "I do not like it," frankly confessed a Wesleyan minister, who is working under precisely the same system. "It makes the close, affectionate ties of pastor and people impossible. I do not know in which of half a dozen churches I shall preach in Sunday after next. I do not know what people I may lead in their devotions at the prayer meeting next week. I feel as though I had no people of my own. Divided up into so many parts, I am too thin to go around. I would rather centralize myself, focalize my efforts upon some one field."

I tell the tale as 'twas told to me. The experiment at least shows the adaptability of Congregationalism to all climates and classes and conditions of men. If it does not find that its abode is under the north star, it will adapt itself to the southern cross.

“But,” do I hear Dr. Hazen say? “this plan may be all right, but, whatever it is, it is not Congregationalism, and does not guarantee the individuality of the local church.” At any rate, it calls itself by that name, and my commission does not call me to go behind the face of the returns.

It cannot be said that as yet Congregationalism is a very vigorous plant in any part of South Africa, though like the rest of the country it has time enough and room enough to grow. The Dutch Reformed Church, the Church of England, the Wesleyans and the Presbyterians overtop it in numbers. There are, I suppose, forty or fifty Congregational churches in Natal, the Transvaal, the Orange Free State and the Cape of Good Hope, including the “colored” churches (as the half castes, “Eurafricans,” to coin a needed word, are called). But when we remember that in all South Africa there are not as many white people as there are within two miles of the gilded dome (not “guilty dome,” as one of my friends persists in calling it) of the Massachusetts State House the showing is not so bad after all.

Of one feature of Congregationalism in South Africa American Congregationalists may be justly proud, and that is the work of the Zulu mission of the American Board. No mission in any part of the world, I thoroughly believe, is conducted with greater energy and enterprise, and none, I am sure, with greater dependence on the Spirit of God. It impressed me (would that I had seen more of its work) as a peculiarly consecrated mission, and the missionaries as among the most unselfish and thoroughly devoted men I have ever seen in any part of the world. I am glad to say that this is saying a great deal.

The younger missionaries are following in the footsteps of the old warriors—the Lindleys, the Grouts, the Tylers, the Pixleys, the Irelands, the Edwardses—and never, I was assured by those who know, was there ever greater harmony or efficiency in the mission. The inevitable result of this spirit of self-surrender and devotion has followed and a greater revival than the Zulu mission has ever known in all the threescore years and ten of its existence is, as I write, sweeping over it. The native converts have been broken down by a sense of their sins, the night is scarcely long enough for their meetings. Personal, definite and heart-searching confession of sin has been one feature of this remarkable revival. It has taken hold with special power of the hearts of the educated natives, and the young men and women in the schools have been most deeply affected.

“Never in all my forty years in South Africa have I seen anything like this awakening for spiritual power,” said the venerable Mr. Pixley to me the other day.

The missionaries themselves have been no less aroused, quickened and kindled than their converts. Nor is it strange that this wind of the Spirit blew first and most strongly upon their hearts. Whatever new policies and plans may be adopted, may this new departure, new devotion, new consecration, new spiritual power be characteristic of Congregationalists and Congregationalism the world around.

AN APPEAL TO THE HIGHEST COURT

BY REV. EDWARD N. PACKARD, D. D.

Dr. Gordon, in his books and in his article in The Congregationalist of June 10, takes his position as a Universalist upon the philosophical principle that God being love his love must result in securing its own acceptance at last by every one of his children.

But the seventh chapter of Butler's Analogy meets this deduction by saying that while the government of God is good and means good to the universe, it is administered by a plan which is essentially inscrutable. None of us can determine, a priori, how the love of God will manifest itself, nor how far it will make successful progress against the sin of man. There is no answer to this general position on the field which it covers. With it we cannot meet many doubts in open field, but we can flank them. This sort of agnosticism may well be adopted by all of us who feel constrained to withstand the inferential theology which now prevails. A second probation was only an inference from the principle of the universality of the Christian religion, but it easily became the very center of the Andover theology as put forth during ten years.

Dr. Gordon's Universalism, I say, is an inference from the premise of God's moral interest in all his children. But great systems of thought, and especially great working systems of faith, cannot rest on inferences, even though such inferences may be the outcome of the Christian consciousness.

The most significant defect of Dr. Gordon's position is that he cannot summon Christ to his side nor the apostles who began to preach Christ to the nations. Let us take the case, therefore, to the highest court of appeal—to the words of our Lord.

It so chanced that I had been reading with special care the eleventh chapter of the gospel of Matthew when I took up Dr. Gordon's article. From the twentieth verse of that chapter on to the end almost every dark problem of the divine government and character is touched upon and the attitude of our Lord towards them and towards all men brings us a profound lesson. He began to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works had been done because they had not repented. He had brought to bear upon them a very high degree of moral influence by his presence in their streets, by his signs and wonders and by his warning words. But it was in vain. They had rejected him. Their sin was going before them to judgment. Almost unlimited opportunities had proved only the hardness of their hearts. All ran on to an end, to a summing up and decision of the case, when everything should be manifested.

But Jesus makes an undisguised assertion that God had used different degrees of moral power in his dealings with the wicked. He had done less for Tyre and Sidon than he had been doing for the people to whom he was speaking in his Son. He does not, however, point to a rounding up of opportunity in ages to come, but to a varying punishment at the last day. Both the ancient cities and the cities then standing should be condemned, but there should be less stripes for the one than the other. This is what might be called “partiality” in God's dealing with his children who had rebelled against him, but Jesus does not so view it. It was just at this time, when he saw into the eternal issues of history and gazed far into the dark mystery of the mind of God, just then when he stood face to face with the incorrigible sins of men around him and the seeming inequality of their opportunities of repentance, that he broke forth into a sort of hymn of sublime praise. He thanks the Father, who is at the same time Lord of heaven and earth, that he has hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes. But pass on. He proceeds to declare t all things are delivered unto him of the Father, but with it comes the limitary thought—the thought of the different modes which the Father uses. “No man knoweth the Father but the Son and he to whomsoever the Son shall reveal him!” There is only one implication possible here. The revealing process is not unlimited. “All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me.” “Father, that which thou hast given me, I will that where I am they also may be with me.”

Now upon this dark background, where the intellect cannot rest in itself and where no inferences concerning God's love help us, Jesus stands and offers the most moving and tender and all-embracing invitation, “Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.”

There is a great want of logic here. If Christ looked forward to the judgment seat and heard nations receive their doom, he ought not to have offered free salvation to the world. But he did. And so shall we.

In this passage there comes in the prevailing idea of the New Testament, the idea of dispensations in the movements of redemption. All admit the elective principle in the history of Israel. The difficulty comes not upon the principle of election, which is historically vindicated up to the time of Christ, but in its application to individual souls. But the difference is more apparent than real. We are under a dispensation today which has its beginning and end. We are taught to look forward to an end of all things. The idea is plainly brought out that opportunity is limited and the door shuts sometime. If at any time the opportunity is limited, the original difficulty remains and this is created by God himself and set forth by Christ himself, who is the love of God incarnated.

I have been permitted to see some words of a distinguished theologian, written for private perusal, upon the modern movement towards Universalism. Were I at liberty to use his name it would come with a weight which no words of mine can bring to the momentous and solemn theme. He says: “I wish I could be a Universalist. I could easily be were it not for Christ and his gospel. Not, indeed, but all nature and what we call providence would howl against me in that case, but I think I would blind my eyes and shut my teeth and determine against all I saw to believe nothing like what Dr. Gordon calls ‘partialness’ or ‘loss.’ But it is Christ's words which stand in the way. Nature and providence backed up by Christ are too many for Universalism. I cannot brush away what Christ says simply because it does not agree with what I call Christian consciousness. It is not logical nor humble to do so. And the attempt (often made before) to deduce Universalism from Christ's teachings is certain to fail, in spite of the eloquence of the new advocate, as it has time and again.”

The Companions of the Sorrowful Way*

The Owner of Gethsemane

By Ian Maclaren

Among the vivid scenes of our Lord's life his arrest in the garden of Gethsemane is the most weird, and various circumstances fascinate the imagination. The moon filled the open glades with silver light, but underneath the trees the darkness hung heavy. Within an olive grove the apostles lay huddled in a heap upon the ground, and a short distance farther the Lord prays alone. The stillness of the garden is cut by a thrice repeated cry of agony, but no sound comes from the guilty city which lies in sleep and in the awful light of judgment. Jesus wakes his friends and gathers them round him in the shadows. A band of soldiers led by a guide comes cautiously up the open way; they peer into the gloom beneath the trees, flashing light from their lanterns; the Master comes forth undismayed and Judas kisses him in token that this is the man. There is a confusion of figures and clashing of arms, during which St. Peter strikes with the sword, and then Jesus is led away a prisoner through the garden where night after night he had spoken with God.

Before the excited company—among whom only one Man possessed his soul—had escaped from among the trees with their mysterious shadows, some one, more nervous than his fellow, glancing fearfully round, discovers that they are followed. A figure in pure white flits among the trees, appearing and disappearing as if keeping watch and yet desiring to be unnoticed. As one after another catches sight of this ghostly attendant a vague fear spreads through the band. It was an eerie expedition and every incident was strange. They had been gathered suddenly at the temple and set out under secret orders. They had crept through the midnight streets of Jerusalem like thieves, guarding against the rattle of arms and speaking each man with his neighbor in a whisper. They were led by a stranger who seemed ill at ease and half repentant of his work. They were going to lay hands on Jesus, and round this Man there gathered a certain indescribable divinity. They trembled in the silence and moonlight of the Mount of Olives, and at the sight of Jesus coming out from the trees and looking at them with those eyes some strong men had fallen to the ground. They had come on ill-omened work, and now what meant this sight, as if a corpse had risen from the dead to be a sign to them? Some soldiers, braver or less brave than their fellows, spring suddenly aside and catch the whiteness, to find the undergarment of a man left in their grasp, while its owner—the naked body glistening in the light—plunges into the wood and vanishes.

Amid the dramatic events which were to fill the next twelve hours this slight incident would be soon crushed out of the soldiers' minds, but it was treasured by some one, and at last found its place in the history of the passion. No one in the gospels made so brief and strange appearance—a mere flash of white from darkness to darkness—and our curiosity is fired. Can this young man be identified, who, being no apostle and having no invitation to the garden, rose from bed and haunted the very place where Jesus was praying? Who did not lose heart of a sudden and forsake his friend, when even St. John and St. Peter had escaped for their lives? Who could not resist the attraction of love and the desire to be with Jesus whithersoever he went? Who hung upon the outskirts of the band, and only fled when rough hands woke him into self-consciousness and outraged his modesty? This was not a coward, else he had gone with the apostles; he was rather a lover and a recluse.

Was there any one among Jesus' private friends who was likely to have been present that night of his own part, because he knew Jesus would be in the garden, and because he also knew every recess of the garden? What about the owner of Gethsemane? We read in the gospels that after Jesus had spoken with the people in the temple, and they had gone every one to his own house, that Jesus left the hot, noisy, restless city and spent the night on the Mount of Olives. Jesus had various homes, beneath whose kindly roof he could rest, but he loved the open air, and so it came to pass that he had the use of two gardens. One was that in which he slept well after the battle had been fought, and the owner thereof was Joseph of Arimathea. The other was that which was an ever ready and welcome sanctuary for the Lord when he was worn out and sick at heart through the gainsaying and vain ambitions of men, and the owner thereof—was it not a certain young man?

If his nation was misled and rejected Christ, how many were the kindnesses he received of his friends, and none could have been more grateful than the affording of this garden. It is good to feed them which are ready to perish and to send light to them which sit in darkness, but finer gifts still remain. Bread is good and knowledge is better, but best of all is peace, and the place of quietness has ever been and ever will be a garden. What wiser and kindlier gift could any one make to his brethren who are compelled to live amid the pressure and publicity of the city, where one is hardly allowed to possess his own soul and ofttimes has not a solitary place wherein to weep, than a sheltered place with trees and flowers? Temptations could be overcome and perplexities would unravel themselves and sorrows be comforted and the will of God grow luminous where the noise of the city is stilled and heaven is near. One day this young man, having come in from the Mount of Olives to hear his Friend speak in the temple, and standing in his shyness on the edge of the crowd, could see even at that distance the weariness on Jesus' face, and there came to him a gracious inspiration. When the crowd, discussing and wrangling, had dispersed, and the last scribe had left Jesus alone, his friend approached and made a simple request that the Master would come with him. They passed swiftly through the streets where the people stood in groups and up the side of Olivet in silence, for they were not acquaintances. They came at last into the garden and stood in its heart, and the young man found words to plead that if Jesus counted him a friend he would make this place his own. So it came to pass that if for Jesus there was no room in palaces or great men's houses he had his home, the fairest on earth, beside which carved ceilings and many colored curtains are as nothing and vanity, where the morning light turned the gray olive leaves into silver, and the birds settling down into their nests at even spoke of their Father's care, where the gentle rustling among the leaves at noon was as the movements of the divine Spirit, and the lilies in the glades bore witness to the gratuitous magnificence of God. There are friends who can respect one another's silence, and I see that gentle gardener going about his work in quietness while Jesus meditated and prayed apart, yet sometimes he would catch the look on Jesus' face or a word falling from his lips, which were more to him than all his harvests. For any one to hear Jesus say Father in Gethsemane was worth a world's ransom, and to this man it was given to hear the prayer John lost and to preserve it for the church. He doeth shrewd business who lendeth home or land to Christ, or, best of all, his heart, for it is the way of our Master to pay tribute not in silver or gold, but in the spiritual treasures which last forever. Fortunate that man who possesses the very ground on which a battle for freedom was fought, who has in his library the Bible which is stained with a martyr's blood or the manuscript of Wordsworth's Ode on Immortality, but whose good fortune is to be compared with his to whom belonged Gethsemane, where the Lord endured his bitter passion and gained unto himself the victory?

Must we know him only as a certain young man? Is it impossible to call him by name, to discover him in other offices of friendship? Just over the summit of Olivet, and but a short distance from Gethsemane, was Bethany, where Martha and Mary lived with their brother Lazarus. It was from their house Jesus went forth each morning in passion week till the last; to it he returned after the toil of the day. Was there no connection between the home of Bethany and the garden of Gethsemane? Could Jesus have had two friends so devoted and so loving, living so near and so like one another as Mary's brother and this young man? Does not this faithful, retiring, mystical form suggest the character of Lazarus? Over Lazarus hung the shadow of a terrible disease, for he was the son of Simon the leper; for him there could be no marriage or family joys. An only brother, he lived with his sisters in that pathetic affection which is deepened by a common sorrow. Unto him had been vouchsafed an awful experience, since this man had lain four days under the power of death and then come back into the light of day and the affairs of human life. None love so intensely as those hidden and reserved natures, and one can understand that the heart of Lazarus was given to Jesus as the kindliest of dumb animals is devoted to its master. Each evening, as we suppose, he waited anxiously, going often to the brow of Olivet, till Jesus returned from Jerusalem, and his heart failed him when Jesus came not on passion night. He lay down upon his bed, but could not sleep, he arose and went where he expected the Master to be. So he was found clad in a linen garment following him whom he loved in the shadows of Gethsemane. For this fond soul was like unto the bride in the Song of Songs: "By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth."

---

* Copyrighted, 1897, by John Watson, in the United States of America.

Lazarus is the type of them whom God has called aside and made to walk in a solitary way; who are taken into secret places and see strange sights. With the light-hearted gayety of life and its practical methods of speech and action they can have no part, for life has been to them a sacred mystery. The ordinary forms of thought and the conventions of society fail their experience, for what they know is beyond our present language and our prosaic rules. Like Dante they have been in hell, like St. Paul they have been in the third heaven, and they have heard things which it is not lawful to utter. They follow Jesus beneath the trees of Gethsemane, partakers of his love and travail. We, of the multitude, are startled by those separate souls and regard them with apprehension. What is the meaning of this far-away look in their eyes, the awe-struck accent in their speech, this preference of loneliness? Sometimes we grow irritable and demand that they should declare themselves—who they are, what they are thinking, why they so carry themselves. We lay rough hands upon them, and would tear off the pure covering of their souls, whereupon they elude us and hide themselves in the protecting darkness of Gethsemane, where we know not the ways. It were wiser for us to respect their reserve and give no sign that they are seen. It is enough for us to carry the Lord with us in creeds and sacraments, along the beaten road and where the light is shining; let us leave to them the darkness and the loneliness which are to them as home. Nor let us boast, for if we hold the Master by many outward symbols they carry him in their hearts, who, possessing Gethsemane, have also possessed Gethsemane's Lord.

A RUN SOUTHWARD

BY H. A. B.

Eclipsed in splendor, it must be confessed, by the glories surrounding President McKinley's tour through the northern tier of Southern States, but important in its own humble way, and full of delight and profit to those participating in it, was the recent trip of a small party of New Englanders and New Yorkers to Nashville and back. No reporter's car was attached to their train, but the scribe providentially present carried a good supply of pencils, in order that whatever in connection with the expedition might be of public interest and whatever might contribute to the gayety of nations should not fail to be handed down to posterity. Incidents and episodes of a more private nature, and having to do with such minor matters as individual preferences respecting meat and drink and Midway Plaisance diversions, this scribe is under bonds not to divulge. The party owed its week's outing to a gentleman in New York to whom the interests of Fisk University are particularly dear. It was his happy thought that an expedition could be arranged which should have three objective points in view—the Tennessee Centennial, the Fisk University Commencement and a glimpse of the southland. I shall speak in this article only of the city and the exposition, reserving for other issues the description of the exposition and of Fisk.

The party left Jersey City June 11, journeying via Cincinnati and Louisville, and was made up of Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, Dr. and Mrs. Henry A. Stimson, Secretary A. F. Beard of the A. M. A., Dr. Charles M. Lamson of Hartford, Ct., Dr. S. H. Howe of Norwich, Ct., and Rev. E. S. Tead of Somerville. At Nashville they were re enforced by Charles L. Mead of New York, chairman of the executive committee of the A. M. A., and late Tuesday evening, as the graduating exercises of the normal department at Fisk were nearing their close, Rev. W. E. Barton, D. D., put in an appearance, accompanied by an artist friend, with whom he is doing the Tennessee mountain region with a view to future literary out-puts. Dr. A. W. Hazen of Thomaston, Ct., was another late arrival, having on the previous Sunday preached the baccalaureate at Talladega. It is needless to say that the members of the party speedily found themselves to be congenial spirits, and that their week of pleasuring together fostered and cemented ties of brotherhood. When we reached Nashville the air was still quivering with the excitement produced by the President's sojourn. He and his "cabinets," as the boy conductor of the trolley car denominated the venerable John Sherman and the other dignified secretaries, had left only a few hours before our arrival, and on every hand we heard warm expressions of praise for the chief Executive and of appreciation of his splendid speech at the exposition. This is all the more significant when it is remembered that Tennessee last November was in the Bryan column.

Nashville, though touched constantly by Northern influences, is essentially a Southern city, and as such it served as a window through which we gazed into the southland. It is not only that the skies are softer and vegetation more luxuriant, even though a prolonged drought has seared many a field and wayside, but the tone of life is perceptibly different from New York or Boston. Its pace is slower. Almost every man wears a negligee costume, and indeed why shouldn't he in a land where bedclothes, judging by our experience last week, are about as much out of place as straw hats would be in Iceland. The Southern people, however, have learned the art of adapting themselves to the long, fervid summers, and their women, particularly, clothed in soft, light fabrics, give you the impression that the temperature about their persons never rises above sixty degrees. There are numerous other indications, too, that you have passed the Mason and Dixon's Line. The black faces which greet you everywhere, the drawling Southern accent, fascinating on the lips of either men or women, the use of such colloquialisms as "I reckon," "sure enough" and "right smart," all show that you have entered a new and interesting zone of American life.

But Nashville attracts one, not merely as a typical Southern city, but because of its own history, scenic attractions and present day life. Its admirers call it the "Athens of the South," and its numerous educational institutions—Vanderbilt and the University of Nashville for whites, Fisk and Roger Williams for the colored people, Ward Seminary, Belmont College and Boscobel for young women—are all creditable and influential schools, and together they generate an intellectual atmosphere which pervades the entire city. Municipal reform has recently made a decided change in the political atmosphere of the city, and Mayor McCarthy, who welcomed so heartily the members of Fisk University and their friends to the exposition last week Monday, was elected by the righteous element, and is a Christian gentleman of fine bearing.

The 100,000 or more inhabitants of Nashville seem to be amply supplied with churches, and the church-going habit is much more strongly established than in the North. The largest church in the Southern Presbyterian Assembly is here—the First, with a membership of 1,200 and a youthful but able pastor, Dr. James I. Vance, who has recently become pleasantly known to students of the life of Christ through his suggestive little book, The College of Apostles. Sam Jones is a great favorite, and preaches often in the big brick tabernacle which bears his name. Street preaching, too, seems almost as common as in English cities, and I was struck with the patience, not to say the gallantry, with which groups of men listened to itinerant evangelists. The type of theology in this belt of the country is not viciously modern. Dr. Vance, who has the reputation of being one of the most liberal men in his church, told us that the Southern Presbyterians have no use for Professor Briggs, and as for "roadmaster" Harnack, we fear he would not receive an ovation at the hands of our Southern brethren, even though he may have repented of some of his former chronological errors.

Nashville must be a lovely city to live in, summer or winter. It abounds in hills, from which extended views of the smiling Tennessee country are to be had, while no less than thirteen splendid turnpikes—"pikes" they call them—stretch out in all directions, along which one may journey in comfortable brakes to such points of interest as the famous horse-raising farm of 5,400 acres, known as "Belle Meade," and owned in part by Richard Croker, my lord of Tammany. You see there the famous "Iroquois." He could be sold any day for enough money to pay the debts of any of our missionary societies. Still more pleasing to the eye than this piece of expensive horseflesh is Belle Meade's noble deer park, where majestic oaks and walnuts stretch out beguiling arms, and as you rest beneath their shade you think yourself to be in Chatsworth or the Forest of Arden.

But, after all, it is the reminders of the Civil War that lend chiefest interest to Nashville and its environments, for hereabouts centered year after year many of the activities of both the Union and Confederate forces, and not far away some of the most decisive battles were fought. Within the city limits they show you earthworks thrown up at the time that Hood and Thomas were hurling their battalions at one another. Difficult indeed is it to realize, as one on a peaceful summer day stands on these historic spots and gazes upon a prosperous and beautiful city, that the ground under one's feet ever felt the shock of battle, and that citizens of the same great Union contended here for interests which both parties alike held to be sacred and righteous. How good it is that those days of carnage and dissension are gone forever, and that South and North together are working out, slowly to be sure but perseveringly, the problems of our great and united republic.

In and Around Chicago

Children's Day

The interest in this "day for the children" seems to increase every year. Some churches, like the Third Presbyterian, have the service in the afternoon and by bringing the members of the home Sunday school and the members of the mission schools together gather an audience of more than 2,500. The collections for our Sunday school work are growing and will continue to increase as the object of the society becomes better known. The work of Mrs. Bryner in the Interior has been of great service the past year. Applications for her assistance continue to be in excess of her power to respond to them. This is easily understood by those who remember the marvelous skill with which she conducted the primary department of the Union Park Sunday School, or who heard her address Sunday evening before the united schools of that church. The services of Children's Day suggest a question concerning the character of our church services in general. Are they not too stately for the average attendant? Certainly few complaints are heard in this vicinity over thin audiences on Children's Day.

Another Reception to Dr. Barrows

Monday morning the ministers of the city, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational, united to express their appreciation of Dr. Barrows as a former associate in their work, their interest in his mission to India, and their gratitude over his safe return from his long journey. The meeting took the character of an appeal for the India famine sufferers, so that Dr. Barrows was not permitted to speak till after representatives of the various denominations had made brief addresses and Mr. C. C. Bonney had spoken at considerable length. Most were surprised to learn that Chicago had already sent $12,000 to India and a ship load of corn in addition, although this is far less than our share and far less than we hope to send. The address of Dr. Barrows was in his best vein, and his sermon to the graduating class of the Armour Institute, the first class to complete the course, Sunday morning in Plymouth Church, was on hope as a much needed element in the present pessimistic atmosphere of American society. The degrees were conferred later in the week by Professor Roney, as Dr. Gunsaulus is still unable to leave his house. He will sail for Europe as soon as his health will admit.

Honor for the Pilgrims

Monday evening, June 14, the Society of the Mayflower Descendants was organized, with William M. Howland as governor and Dr. James Gibson Johnson as elder. A charter has been granted from the State, in answer to a petition of twenty members of a similar society in New York and Connecticut. It has been decided to hold the annual meetings Nov. 22, the anniversary of the signing of the compact in the Mayflower. It is said that there are nearly 200 descendants from the Mayflower party in Chicago alone. It will be of great service, not only to the fortunate members of this society, but to all who care to search into the beginnings of a great State, if its organization direct attention to Bradford's History of Plymouth, Morton's New England Memorial, Winthrop's Journal and the writings of some other men who belong to the first half-century of New England life. Undoubtedly the restoration to this country of the Bradford Manuscript has increased the interest taken in the beginnings of New England history.

A Beloit Memorial

Prof. Joseph Emerson of the Greek department has been connected with the college from the beginning of its history. Members of his classes testify not only to his skill and thoroughness as a teacher, but to his rare power to give life to the authors out of which he and his classes have read, and to deduce lessons in manhood and patriotism from the events of other times for the young men of our time. These young men for half a century now have been showing the world in the various spheres which educated Christian men fill the value of the instruction imparted by such men as Professor Emerson in this new college on the prairies. It has seemed fitting that some of the addresses given at different times through half a century and some of the sermons preached in the chapel and the pulpits of Illinois and Wisconsin should be permanently preserved for the use of pupils and friends who will soon look upon the face of their author no more. The character of the volume, which is published by P. F. Pettibone & Co., Chicago, and which contains only about 350 pages, will be suggested by the titles of the addresses which appear. They are: Homer and the Infancy of Greece, Fine Art, Ancient Civilizations, The Golden Age, Empire, Socrates as a Teacher, Martyrdom, Our Martyrs. Some of the titles of the sermons are: The Preacher to the Poor, The Great Mercy of God, The Perfect Man, John the Loved Disciple, Peter the Smitten Rock. From these titles one can infer the richness of the volume. Those who have heard these addresses and sermons or are acquainted with the wealth of knowledge and the felicity of illustration for which Professor Emerson is remarkable will want to read for themselves.

Another Minister for Chicago

Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, once served by such men as Robert Patterson of Christian Commission memory and President Patton of Princeton University, has extended a call to Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage of Buffalo, son of the famous Washington divine. The style of the son resembles that of the father in its dramatic character. He is intensely earnest, and has already become popular as a lecturer. Report makes him orthodox in his doctrinal views. The pulpit is not an easy one to fill. The drift of population is away from the church, but it is altogether probable that Mr. Talmage will find little difficulty in crowding the auditorium and thus, temporarily at least, restoring the prosperity which this church has enjoyed.

Mr. Debs and the A. R. U.

Mr. Debs has been in Chicago this week. He has hardly attracted the attention bestowed upon him three years ago. Nevertheless, the work he has inaugurated may prove to be far more important than anything he did in the summer of 1894 First of all the papers say that the old A R. U. organization has been given up for an American Co-operative Brotherhood, whose aim is going to be the formation of colonies in different States out of the ranks of the unemployed. If Mr. Debs can gather colonies of 5,000 or 10,000 unemployed people, and through them develop flourishing towns and cities, he will put the whole country under obligation. He says that 100,000 have already signified their intention of joining in this colonizing movement and that he counts upon an income of not less than $25,000 a month with which to push it. The first settlement will be made in the State of Washington. Such men as Rev. Myron Reed of Denver, B. Fay Mills, Prof. E. W. Bemis and Henry D. Lloyd are said to be behind the movement.

Civil Service in Chicago

Since the last election there has been a good deal of fear lest all that had been gained for civil service reform in connection with the city government were to be lost. The Common Council is evidently quite ready to do its part toward destroying the efficiency of the Civil Service laws. It looks as if the city attorney were ready to join them in any attempt to do this. He was the cause of the removal immediately after the incoming of the present mayor of two commissioners, whose ability and fitness for the place they filled were unquestioned. He has also come into collision with the commissioners appointed to take the place of those who were so unjustly dismissed. The Citizens' Association has therefore carried a test case up to the Superior Court, but as its decision will not be made known till October the old law will till then remain in force and persons appointed under Civil Service rules continue in office unless some way, not quite illegal, be discovered for turning them out.

Bishop Cheney and the White Surplice

It may be safely asserted that Bishop Cheney's resignation of all his offices in the Reformed Episcopal Church because the majority voted at New York, last week, that the white surplice should not be worn save where it is now in actual use, but the black robe only, seems to many of his friends in Chicago a very insufficient reason for the serious step he has taken. The bishop regards the action as an infringement on the personal liberty of the pastor and the parish, and a violation therefore of the principle for which the Reformed Church was organized. To many the white robe is ecclesiastical and traditional, while the black robe is simply academical, official and therefore harmless. Bishop Cheney has not resigned his pulpit nor his office as bishop. He has only declined to be responsible for matters which he cannot approve. Perhaps another gathering of the church will reverse the action now taken. Meanwhile vacant offices have been filled and a member of Bishop Cheney's congregation chosen as treasurer of the theological seminary.

The Year's Finish at Armour

The prominent feature of the graduating exercises of Armour Institute was the address by Pres. D. C. Gilman of Johns Hopkins University on The Remedies of Discontent. He admitted the existence and wide prevalence of discontent in this country, and pointed out some of its causes. He was careful to discriminate between a discontent which is reasonable and brings about improvements in social conditions and that which is unreasonable and is based on jealousy and slothfulness. Then he called attention to the improvements in the conditions of life connected with the rise of great cities—sanitation, supply of water, transportation, reduced hours of labor, wholesome sports, books, magazines, newspapers, libraries, picture galleries, museums, etc., all of which is the common property of each citizen. In the closing portion of the address President Gilman explained the modern methods of education, and spoke of their probable influence in counteracting discontent. For manual training and its introduction into all our schools he had only words of approval.

Rockford College

This college for women, in the beautiful city of Rockford, has had an exceptionally fine year. Applications for admission next year are in advance of those of previous years, and seem to prove that the opening of Beloit to women has not seriously diminished the attendance at Rockford. Judge Kohlsat of Chicago delivered the Commencement address. The Hull House Summer School, which is held every year in the college buildings, begins July 10.

Chicago, June 19. FRANKLIN.

Speaking of degrees, that New York business man who declined an honorary A. M. not long ago on the ground that the only A. M. he deserved or cared for was the degree of Average Man was as sensible as he was modest. To exhibit so high a pattern of average manhood as he does is as great an honor as almost any row of letters after his name.

The Home

THE HERMIT

BY JAMES RAYMOND PERRY

I've walked on plains where far as eye could see
No sign of habitation was in sight,
And where no man to left hand or to right
Nor any living creature seemed to be;
And I have walked in forests, when with me
No being was, in gloom that seemed like night,
And in such solitude, with thought alight,
I have not felt the lack of company.

I've stood in crowded ballrooms, in the blaze
Of flashing jewels; heard the music play
And seen the waltzers gliding through the maze,
And heard the little things that people say,
And had my thought disturbed; then have I known
The dreary sense of being quite alone.

A striking commentary on a recent sensible article in this department, entitled Parents in League, was afforded the other day when we passed a group of school children in the street. They were intently examining some object, and drawing near we discovered that it was a present which they had just selected for their teacher. We repressed a groan as we saw the tawdry, useless article, and wondered how the recipient could ever return honest thanks. We knew, too, that one of the donors came from a home of actual want, and as we reflected that similar offerings were being laid upon the shrine of a foolish custom all over the country we felt that the time had come for a vigorous crusade on the part of parents against all such unwise expenditures of money. It may be too late to set a wholesome example for the present school year, but let the subject be agitated during the long vacation and a reform inaugurated through the stirring of public sentiment.

One sometimes wonders if Sunday school teachers realize their responsibility in regard to dress. Every woman who has girls under her charge would do well to ask herself what effect her clothes may have upon her class. If the teacher marks the beginning of each season by a noticeable new hat, and exhibits herself to her class in showy and expensive gowns, if she is one of the first to adopt a novel style of sleeve or collar, what wonder if her girls try to pattern after her in this as in other respects, and are discontented and unhappy because their clothes in comparison appear shabby and out of date? Is it strange if their thoughts are distracted and their eyes wander over the costumes of teacher and mates when they ought to be on their Bibles? It is no light matter to have stimulated and encouraged an undue love of dress and regard for fashion in the minds of girls in their teens. One teacher of our acquaintance awoke to her responsibility when she discovered that some of her scholars were staying at home because they had not new spring hats. The impression on her was such that she made it a point thereafter to dress for church simply and quietly, and to be behind rather than ahead of the season.

Agitation against the wholesale destruction of our song birds, and especially against the use of their plumage by milliners, has finally borne fruit in a law just passed by the Massachusetts legislature. It provides that "whoever shall have in his possession the body or feathers" of any wild or undomesticated bird (with certain exceptions) and "whoever shall wear such feathers for purpose of dress or ornament" shall be punished by a fine of ten dollars. Massachusetts has set a praiseworthy example in protecting her feathered songsters by law, but the crusade against killing birds for sport or for adornment is by no means confined to this section of the country. Protests have come from newspapers, scientific organizations, humane societies and women's clubs, North, South, East and West. Numerous Audubon societies are being established and Louisiana women have organized for the purpose of placing a monument to this famous son of Louisiana in the Audubon Park, New Orleans. The Chicago Woman's Club has recently taken a decided stand on the bird question. The Cantabrigia Club of Cambridge is following up its work for the protection of birds, begun in a big mass meeting, by a series of talks on our common birds by Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller. It is interesting to note how this agitation is leading to a wider dissemination of information about birds and a greater appreciation of their services to man in controlling insect pests.

JOHN PARNELL EXPLAINS

BY KATHARINE PEARSON WOODS

"I give you my word, John Parnell, it was one of the hardest times of my life, even worse than when you and the children all had the measles together. It certainly did seem a mysterious providence that you had to be away from home just that one fortnight out of all the year."

"Not to me," said her husband, gravely, yet with a twinkle in his eyes.

"Well, men are born selfish, and there's no good in expecting anything better from them," replied his wife. "The only use of them is to tell things to when they come home after all the trouble is over, yet they are very apt to complain even of that. However, if you will take the glue pot and your penknife and mend these broken toys while I get my stocking bag I'll tell you all about it. And I certainly am grateful to you, John, for not using tobacco in any form. If you had been a smoker life would not have been worth living, so far as I was concerned, during the Reform Congress and the visit of Cynthia and her children."

Mr. Parnell did not reply. He was used to Polly's arrangements for the combination of business and sociability, and had come to enjoy them as much as she did. She was a busy, active, bustling little woman, and hated idle hands as she did a snake, she often told him, but as she secured plenty of time for his sermon writing, and other pastoral duties, by her ingenious apportionment of the hours, he submitted to such other duties as she laid upon him with only a smile and an amused twinkle in his brown eyes.

"You see," she began, as she deftly drew two strands of darning cotton through her needle, "I have seen so little of Cynthia for the last twelve years that it seemed as though a stranger were coming, and while I wanted to see her I kind of dreaded it, too, for she, being president of half the reform societies in the country, vice-president of the other half, and secretary of the rest, so to speak, would naturally expect perfection from everybody, especially children. And ours have tempers, all of them, not to speak of Willie and Clara being no respecters of persons, and hating shams and sentimentality as much as you do yourself, John."

"Well, you remember they were to get here just in time for tea; but of course the train was late, and so it was eight o'clock before we sat down to table. I had made desperate efforts to have everything just right for them, for I knew that hygienic food was one of Cynthia's fads—I mean strong points. And I must say I never saw the table look prettier. I had put on great-grandmother's china with the little moss rosebuds and all our prettiest silver and our crystal wedding presents, and so on, and our children were so delighted with the result that they were perfectly good-humored even after their long wait. So no sooner had we taken our seats than Minnie volunteered, in her shrillest treble: 'We don't use these things every day, Cousin Cynthia. Mamma put them on because you are company!'"

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Parnell. "What's the matter with that statement, Polly? It seems to me terse, accurate and very much to the point."

"John Parnell, you're exactly like a man! I suppose you'll say Cynthia's reply was to the point also. 'O Polly,' she said, 'is it possible you allow yourself to have company things? Surely no outsider can be as dear to us as our own. Our most precious things should be reserved for the home circle and not for strangers.'"

"And the vestry haven't spoken of raising my salary either," said Mr. Parnell; "but Mrs. Brenton was always one for speaking her mind."

"The trouble is," said Polly, "she has so much mind! And yet you know in your heart of hearts, John Parnell, that her view was the correct one, and all I could answer was: 'It is the rosebud china, Cynthia; surely you remember great-grandmother's rosebud china. I thought you might like to see it again, but if I were to use it every day there would soon be none of it left.' There I stopped, but Minnie's great eyes were fixed on my face, and I knew that was not the whole truth, so I went on: 'Besides, we are not so well able as you, Cynthia, to replace our pretty things, so the only thing to do is to take care of them.'

"'O Polly, Polly,' she said, 'don't set your savings bank account against your home happiness; don't, my dear! And as for great-grandmother's china, I should keep it to use as a reward when any of the children had done a good deed—sacrificed their own ease or comfort to the welfare of humanity.'

"'What's that?' asked Johnny; and, John Parnell, if you had been here and had seen the way in which Cynthia and her children looked at each other and smiled, big man as you are, you would have wanted to sink into the earth. I never was so mortified in my life—to think of the child not knowing the very name of the welfare of humanity!"

"I saw him lending a fly of his kite this afternoon to the raggedest little boy I ever saw," replied Mr. Parnell, quietly. "Sometimes, Polly, it does almost as well to know the things themselves as the names of them."

"Then shall I put out the rosebud china at breakfast, John?"

"I do not think," said Mr. Parnell, "that it would be altogether advisable."

Mrs. Parnell laughed a little as she bent her face closer over her work. "Well," she said, "I felt so ashamed about the china and humanity that it helped me to bear things when Cynthia found fault with the Graham bread because it wasn't made of Franklin flour."

"How very illogical! In that case it would have been Franklin bread."

"Well, she thinks no other kind is fit to eat, and Walter Baker's breakfast cocoa is the only preparation that could possibly be used by any self-respecting person. As for the sorts that are prepared at table, she says that nothing can take the place of boiling, and that most of them are medicated—with potash! Just think of drinking potash for tea!"

"There might be a difference in the taste," admitted her husband, gravely, "and of the two, Polly, I prefer tea. One soon tires of potash."

"But don't mention tea or coffee to Cynthia, John Parnell, if you love a quiet life! Let us see! Twice fourteen are twenty-eight—yes, twenty-eight times, morning and night, did that woman discourse upon the subject of stimulants, until she made me feel worse than any professional drunkard! But to go back to that first tea-time. I had not ordered oatmeal porridge because I thought people of advanced thought ate it for breakfast. But it seems Cynthia belongs to the school who think it is better to sleep on it, and so her children cannot eat their supper without it, and all of them grumbled audibly, while little Cynthia was carried away shrieking with rage. I knew they were all tired and sleepy; but, John, why isn't one kind of slavery almost as bad as another?"

"I really don't know," said Mr. Parnell.

"Well, it is a question that I asked myself several times even before bedtime," said his wife. "I had provided separate beds for the children, of course, but their baths and their rubbings and their ventilation and their coverings were all just as wrong as wrong could be. I do think, John Parnell, when people train up their children in the way of bondage to porridge and olive oil and Jaeger blankets, they ought to carry the things along when they pay visits; but Cynthia seemed to consider me an outer barbarian because I did not have all of them ready for her. I shouldn't want our children to tithe massage and physical culture and neglect the weightier matters of courtesy and regard for the feelings of their hostess. And that is the solemn truth, John Parnell."

"Well?"

"Well, that is only the beginning. I never was so—so"—

"Called to order?"

"That's it exactly. I tell you what, John Parnell, it made me sympathize with your parishioners; but as a minister's wife it came kind of hard to me to consider myself in the light of a heathen and a fit subject for conversion. And then the meetings of the congress which I had looked forward to expecting to learn so much! Well, I did hear a great deal that was true, to be sure, but the trouble was that the very next moment some one would get up and expound the very opposite doctrine."

"That's what they were here for—free discussion, Polly."

"Then they should not have admitted me, for it is awfully confusing to the mind of a heathen. How did you ever grow to be the man you are, John Parnell? For I know your mother never heard of the psychology of childhood and the development of the spiritual sense. And as for menticulture and all the rest of it"—

"She knew the value of obedience," said Mr. Parnell, "and when we failed to come up to time, she developed our spiritual sense with a good stout hickory switch."

"But corporal punishment was the one thing the whole congress was agreed in denouncing," said Mrs. Parnell; "and it really was refreshing, because it was the only thing they were united upon, except the advocacy of physical culture, and each of them had her own brand of that and considered all the rest deleterious. What brand was yours, John? It didn't do ill by you!"

"Hunting, fishing, climbing trees, and especially splitting wood. Best sort, too; trade-mark unnecessary. Wish we could get it for our boys. Go on," said Mr. Parnell.

"Well, the worst of all was the session on religious education. Cynthia, you know, is very religious, and her children are members of Junior Endeavor Societies, Bands of Mercy, and all sorts of things; but another woman read a paper on the Evils of Superstitious Education, which went to prove that children ought to be left alone to choose their own religion after they grew up. And, do you know, I heard Horace Brenton whisper to Hal that, if mother were to try that plan, his choice would be none at all, and that it would be pretty good fun anyway."

"The speaker would have scored one if she had heard that," said Mr. Parnell. "Were Willie and Clara there?"

"Why, you know, I thought they need not bother about going," said their mother, "especially as they did not want to. In fact, I was rather sorry I went myself after I heard that speech, for the speaker scored some very strong points and it made me wonder whether our plan were the best after all, though of course in your position we could hardly do differently."

"But were you not reassured," asked her husband, "by your cousin's success in developing the spiritual sense of her own family?"

"Now, John Parnell! After what I've told you! Besides, I don't want to speak evil of the poor children, who are surely not responsible for their own bringing up, but, benighted as I am and away behind the times, I wouldn't, no, that I wouldn't, change families with Cynthia!"

"I suppose," said Mr. Parnell, "that Mrs. Brenton is too busy reforming the world to have time to reform her own family."

"That is a cheap thing to say, but it isn't one bit true. Cynthia just wears herself out on her own family, and as for that maid of hers, she has the most patient look out of her eyes that I ever saw in woman. If she tries to make her family a model by which to reform the world, that is only because it embodies in her theories and plans the best things she knows. Now, John Parnell, explain it to me. You know you can, for all you pretend to misunderstand. I do want to do the best by our boys and girls, but with twenty different theories on every point of their education, from the multiplication table up to truthfulness and temperance, what is a poor heathen body to do? Am I to flavor my mince pies with brandy, and give them a taste for liquor, or be a fanatic and have them turn drunkards out of pure contrariness?"

"Poor Polly!" said John Parnell. "Cannot you satisfy yourself, my dear, with the farmer's invective against theoretical agriculturists and the proverb about old maids' children?"

"These women, John Parnell, were all mothers of families. And as for theories, one must have them, of one sort or another. Your mother has often told me that she brought up her children as she was raised herself, and that if I succeeded half as well with mine it would be all the Lord would ask and more than the neighbors expected. That was her theory, and it was simple and short, anyway."

"It is true that one must have theories," said her husband, "but their value only begins, little woman, when we cease to be conscious of them. I do not know whether I make myself clear"—

"You don't," said Mrs. Parnell, succinctly.

"Then let me try to do better. When you thread your needle do you theorize as to the process? Must you think out the position of each piano key and the value of every note before you can play Schumann's Traumerei to me in the twilight? Is there any difference of opinion among civilized people as to the necessity of washing one's face in the morning? Yet certainly the last case that I have cited, in its day, represented a reform, and its advocates were wild theorists in the opinion of outer barbarians like yourself and myself, Polly. This age of ours is a wonderful one, but it has not yet learned to play in the twilight; its theories are too numerous and, as you have discovered, too contradictory to have been assimilated even by their discoverers, far less to have become a part of the heritage of the race. A generation or two hence they will have been sifted out, and such as have proved most serviceable will have become instinctive. They will have passed into the care of the sub-conscious self, the feminine half of the intellect, which is said to reside in the back of your head, my Polly."

"I can tell with the front of my head that you are talking nonsense. What do I care for what will happen a generation or two hence? Though of course it is satisfactory to know that something will have been settled by that time. But what am I to do about it now, John? That is the question for me, for really life is too short to solve all these problems."

"Life is the only solution of them, Polly. We may experiment as much as we like with this theory or that; we must, if we are intelligent beings, be more or less modified, intellectually, by modern views of education and the like, but what we really impart to our children—yes, not only to them, but to every one with whom we come in contact—is the self that has grown up within us and been nurtured by education, environment and our own self-discipline or self-indulgence. It is the sub-conscious self, Polly, that does the work of influence."

"If you were to call it character, John Parnell, it might not sound so learned and wise, but I should understand better what you mean."

"It may be, Polly, that character exactly expresses what modern psychology calls by the name I have used. For certainly we cannot love what is opposed to our characters, and it is the thing we love that we are able to give to those about us. A taste for good literature, for example, is an excellent heritage, but the books that you yourself really love are those which you can teach your children to like also. If you try to force upon them something which you have been told is good, though of yourself you would never choose it, you will surely find that they will reject it also, and that you would have done better to let it alone, be it Shakespeare, or be it even the Bible, that they might have come to it in after years unbiased by your dislike. Learn all you can, but remember that the key to life is not to know, but to be. Even in the kitchen department, I believe that unconsciousness is a much more important factor than is generally recognized, and that many of our experiments fail simply because we are so conscious of applying a test. As between Franklin and Graham flour, for example, that which we eat deliberately, for its nourishing qualities, is the least likely to be wholesome. This quality of wholesomeness is the province of the house-mother, and of her alone; the family should be able, through her care and wisdom, to eat what is set before them, asking no questions either for conscience or digestion's sake."

"Well, that's about what we have always done," said Mrs. Parnell, "but it is of no use to speak of Franklin flour, for the children detest the very name of it on account of Cynthia. After all, John, it seems to me that her greatest mistake is that she is always 'travailing in soul,' as she calls it, with her children and never seems to let them alone for a single moment. Don't you think a child wants room to grow as much as a flower? Then, too, I am sure our children have taught me more than ever I taught them, but Cynthia never seems to care for what her children can teach her."

"'And Jesus took a little child and set him in the midst of them,'" said Mr. Parnell. "You have reached the center, Polly. The proper attitude towards our children, as towards the rest of the world, is the attitude of humility. It is not as philanthropists, but as humble students and imitators, that we should open the door of a nursery or schoolroom. It is to the likeness of the Child of Nazareth that we must conform both ourselves and our little ones if we with them would enter the kingdom of heaven."

"Well, said Mrs. Parnell, "I felt sure you could explain it to me, John Parnell, and so you have, and now let us ring the bell for prayers."

HOW TO FURNISH THE PIAZZA

BY EUNICE DALE EVERETT

Since the piazza forms a part of so many American houses it is well to have it so furnished that the family will naturally spend much of their time there during the summer months. Shade can be obtained by means of vines trained on a trellis. The madeira vine is a rapid grower, and may serve to protect the piazza from the too ardent sun. The perennial woodbine is always beautiful, but has the objection in some localities that it is apt to be infested by an ugly worm. There are various kinds of clematis which are desirable but hard to grow. The wild clematis is a handsome vine and a strong grower. It will furnish abundant shade, but will need frequent trimming lest it shut out air as well as sunshine. Awnings are convenient for extending the shade and diminishing the too strong light without excluding the air. There are piazza screens which are useful and inexpensive, and if not so pretty as vines have the advantage of being easily rolled up when not needed.

A hammock will, of course, be found on every piazza. One that has hooks instead of rings, so that it may be easily removed, is most convenient. Each family must suit the chairs to their means and taste, but it is well to have enough seats so that one may entertain an unexpected friend on the piazza without the trouble of bringing out another chair. A table which will stand exposure to the weather will be found very convenient if there be room for it. If not a folding table which is easily taken in at night may be used. A shelf that can be turned down when not needed will answer the same purpose very well. Something of the kind is almost a necessity for holding the workbasket, book or writing materials.

Cushions made of some strong cotton goods filled with hay or excelsior and covered with turkey red or any pretty washable material will be found conducive to comfort. To protect a dainty gown from the floor there should be a rug or strip of carpet to spread under the hammock or rocking-chair. This reminds me that where space permits it is desirable to have on the piazza a covered wooden box, about three feet long and one foot high, in which may be kept at night the rug, hammock, cushions, duster, one or two palm-leaf fans and any other little articles which are likely to be in frequent use in this summer room. The box may also serve as a seat on occasions.

A piazza is too often looked upon merely as a place for idlers. It should be made a comfortable resort for busy people likewise. One can shell the peas or hull the strawberries or do the mending just as well here as in the kitchen or sitting-room. If it is some work to take care of the piazza it saves much sweeping and dusting in the house. A comfortably furnished piazza is a constant invitation to outdoor life, and is thus conducive to the health and happiness of the family. If it should tempt us to do a little less work and to take a little more rest during the hot months perhaps we shall be just as well off in the end.

A RARE CASE OF GENEROSITY

The Commissioner of Patents, Gen. Benjamin Butterworth, made a number of promotions recently. Among the clerks advanced was a woman who called upon him shortly after she had learned of her good fortune. "Mr. Commissioner," she said, "there is a woman who sits alongside of me in the office whose necessities are much greater than mine. She is a splendid clerk, and is now supporting her sick sister and child. Her brother, who previously assisted them, died a short time ago. The lines of her life are drawn in much harder places just now than are those of mine. I want to ask a favor of you." Major Butterworth naturally expected that the other promotion would be asked for, and he knew there was no opportunity to make it, at least in the near future. But his visitor continued: "I want to ask if you will not let this other woman have my promotion and allow her to draw the increased salary until she is placed in better circumstances. When that time comes perhaps we may change about again." Major Butterworth was dumfounded. Ever since he has been Commissioner of Patents he has listened to the importunities of clerks in his office seeking promotion. He had never before heard of a clerk who wanted a promotion for some one else. Of course her request was granted. The fellow-clerk whose necessities she regarded as greater than hers will receive the promotion intended for her.—The Washington Star.

Closet and Altar

Power like character comes from the fountain of prayer.

Every real and searching effort at self-improvement is of itself a lesson of profound humility, for we cannot move a step without learning and feeling the waywardness, the weakness, the vacillation of our movements, or without desiring to be set upon the Rock that is higher than ourselves.—William E. Gladstone.

O, humble me! I cannot bide the joy
  That in my Saviour's presence ever flows;
May I be lowly, lest it may destroy
  The peace his childlike spirit ever knows.
I would not speak thy word, but by thee stand
  While thou dost to thy erring children speak;
O, help me but to keep his own command,
  And in my strength to feel me ever weak;
Then in thy presence shall I humbly stay,
  Nor lose the life of love he came to give;
And find at last the life, the truth, the way!
  To where with him thy blessed servants live;
And walk forever in the path of truth—[illegible]
A servant yet a son; a sire and yet a youth.
—Jones Very.

When Christ showed us God, then man had only to stand at his highest and look up to the infinite above him to see how small he was. And always the true way to be humble is not to stoop until you are smaller than yourself, but to stand at your real hight against some higher nature that shall show you what the real smallness of your greatness is. The first is the unreal humility that always goes about depreciating human nature; the second is the genuine humility that always stands in love and adoration, glorifying God.—Phillips Brooks.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
  In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bears him down
  Then most when most his soul ascends;
Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility.
—James Montgomery.

Honor must grow out of humility, freedom out of discipline, righteous joy out of righteous sorrow, true strength out of true knowledge of our own weakness, sound peace of mind out of sound contrition.—Charles Kingsley

Father of all mercies, we mourn our sins, we express our sorrow until we become familiar with the self-accusation: God forgive us, God pity us. Destroy this temptation of familiarity, and give us to feel that every providence is new, every day a new opportunity because a new revelation of God's purpose and love, and may we wait upon God and cry for the spirit of obedience that we may do his will unto death. Lift us up when we are cast down; carry us a while when the way is too heavy for us, the sun too hot or the wind too cold; when there is no water on the road find a fountain for us, and grant us refreshment by the way; when we are tired of earth and time and space, because they mock our souls, show us visions which reveal how high, how infinite, how glorious is our Father's house. We leave our prayer at thy cross, O Christ; thou wilt turn it into an answer and we shall have great peace. Amen.

Mothers in Council

THE EYESIGHT OF SCHOOL CHILDREN

In the June Review of Reviews Dr. Frank Allport, professor of clinical ophthalmology and otology in the University of Minnesota, considers these urgent questions: Is human eyesight degenerating? If so, from the operation of what causes? Do the eyes of children of school age share in the supposed degeneration? If they do, is a practical remedy within reach of the masses? To the first and third of these inquiries ophthalmic science gives an affirmative reply.

In order to remove the causes of eye mischief Dr. Allport says that the environment of school children with regard to its influence upon their eyes must be carefully studied. In the structure of the school building as few obstacles to vision as may be should be permitted. Ample illumination, whether natural or artificial, should be had from the left side of the desks. The desks themselves should be of such sizes as to permit the pupil's feet to rest firmly upon the floor. They should be provided with comfortable backs and slanting tops, the latter placed at such distances from the eyes as to render sight easy without the close approximation of books. The blackboards, maps, etc., should be so situated as to be readily seen. An erect style of handwriting, less irksome to the eye than slanting characters, should be taught.

The writer next considers the means to be adopted for the discovery and remedy of defects in the eyesight of school children, and describes a plan for ocular examination in the public schools which has been successfully put in practice in Minneapolis. It consists in the training of school principals in the detection of eye disorders, and in a system of notification to the parents of discovered defects, carrying with it the suggestion that a competent authority should be consulted.

Of the operation of this plan Dr. Allport writes:

"In the city of Minneapolis, with the earnest co-operation of Prof. C. M. Jordan, superintendent of the public schools of that city, the eyes of 23,049 school children have been satisfactorily examined by the principals, after due instruction by the superintending oculist. Among this number 7,293 defectives have been found, and largely beneficial results have already followed.

"The method is, briefly, as follows: An oculist is to be appointed by the board of education, whose duty it shall be to lecture to the principals upon the elementary facts in ocular anatomy, physiology and hygiene, and upon the uses and application of the test types, etc., making a practical demonstration of the method upon some fifty pupils. The principals shall thereafter annually report their work to the superintending oculist, who shall submit such statements, with his conclusions, to the board of education. A Snellen test card is provided for every building, with some accompanying printed matter.

"The 23,049 pupils examined in the city of Minneapolis have been distributed in fifty-four schools. The percentages of defectives found in the different buildings have varied greatly, ranging from ten per cent. to sixty-four per cent. The maximum number was discovered in a building of a notoriously poor and unhygienic character, and closely surrounded by other buildings, excluding sufficient illumination. The great variation in percentage is to be accounted for (1) by the inaccuracies of a first examination, (2) by the varying quality and quantity of light, (3) by the pupils' varying degree of intelligence, (4) by the variable number of pupils previously cared for by oculists, and (5) by general home, school and personal hygiene.

"The general percentage of defectives was 31 per cent., exclusive of those already wearing satisfactory glasses.

"Notwithstanding that this was an initial examination, subject to the inevitable difficulties of inexperience, ignorance and unjust criticism, the principals have become the warmest advocates of the method, and report that the tests have been easily performed; that practically no opposition from parents or children has developed; that parents are quite generally awakening to the gravity of the situation; that already large and in some cases startling benefits have been experienced; and that by another year, as prejudice diminishes and a better understanding of the subject prevails, greater and still more salutary results of the test will become apparent."

A SPOILED BOY

"Boys must make a noise or they will burst." So said Johnny's father, as the little boy rushed into the parlor with a succession of war cries, whoops and yells.

Aunt Myra, who had lately arrived at Johnny's house, demurred at this doctrine. She had brought up three boys, giving them large liberty, winking at many childish escapades, sympathizing in their boyish pranks, trying always to be the friend and comrade as well as the provider and guide. But while wishing them to be free and happy citizens in the little republic of home, she insisted on the rights of their fellow-citizens.

"If," she said, "my boys are not trained from their babyhood to be gentlemen they will never reach that high estate." So morning, noon and night Aunt Myra's boys were reminded that there were other persons in the world besides themselves, and by many a little easily comprehended lesson by denials and rewards they were taught to ask themselves: If I do thus and so will it hurt anybody's feelings? Will it disturb anybody? Will it cause anxiety or alarm? Thus, little by little, to think of the comfort of others became a second nature to them.

When Aunt Myra came to stay a while at her brother's she was daily astonished, outraged, dismayed, at the doings of Johnny. Instead of the cozy meals that the lady had been accustomed to, with pleasant conversation and bright sallies of wit, followed by the laugh that aids digestion, there was—Johnny. Johnny burst into effusive talk at the most inopportune times. Johnny wanted something that was not included in the menu, and, with loud raking of chair-legs, left the table. Johnny didn't like his meat, or he wanted more pudding—in short, he succeeded in making himself the family center from the beginning of the meal to the end. Aunt Myra protested for a while, but finally gave up to Johnny, like all the grown-up people who at any time became a part of the household.

"What do you propose to do with Johnny when he gets a few years older?" asked Aunt Myra of her brother one day.

"O, he will behave when he comes to the years of understanding," said the gentleman. "You mustn't expect too much of such a little fellow."

Alas! the father did not live to see Johnny grow up. When the boy was fourteen Aunt Myra, full of sympathy for the desolation of the family, went to live with them for a while. Was Johnny the helper, the consoler of his widowed mother? Far from it. While not a bad boy, he was thoughtless, heedless, noisy, rasping, worrying, always drawing upon the patience and forbearance of the household.

"Aw! a fellow can't be expected to be on his good behavior all the time," was one of his favorite expressions. Another was: "What's a home for, anyway? You've got to be stiff and proper among folks, but home's the place to do as you wanter in."

Alas for Johnny's home, and for Johnny's mother, and for Johnny himself! M. F. B.

A little pamphlet entitled How to Make Sabbath Afternoons Profitable and Pleasant for Children, by Mrs. F. A. Welcher of Newark, N. J., contains several helpful and practical suggestions. Mothers who have not solved this problem will find the booklet well worth the twenty cents which it costs, and may obtain it of the author.

CHAT ABOUT WOMEN

Victoriamania is raging fiercely in England. The Boston Pilot comments sarcastically on an English "magazine for ladies" having in one number an article on the Aunts of Queen Victoria and in another a poem entitled Queen Victoria's Nurses.

The public school authorities of Brooklyn, soon to be of the Greater New York, have at last recognized woman's ability as an educator by appointing Mrs. Sherville as their first woman principal of a grammar school, with a salary of $3,500 a year.

While Queen Victoria has been ruling Great Britain a Gloucestershire woman, Hannah Brewer, has been delivering the village mail, tramping eleven miles a day for sixty years. She has just retired on a pension, proud of a record of a quarter of a million miles trudged on foot.

Shirt waists were in order on Commencement Day at Bryn Mawr this year. Instead of gowns of organdie, muslin or silk, the Seniors decided to wear this simple, everyday dress with their black gowns and mortar-board caps. These girls are heartily to be commended for their good sense.

The setting apart of one room in the old ladies' home in Amesbury as a memorial to the poet Whittier is especially fitting, for he was one of the founders of the institution and gave it much financial assistance. Mrs. S. T. Pickard, the poet's niece, is arranging the room, which will contain furniture from Mr. Whittier's Amesbury home.

The corporation counsel of Chicago has appointed a young woman lawyer as his assistant. Her salary will be $3,500 a year. She was chosen over a score of men who were scrambling for the position because, in the opinion of the chief law officer of the city, she is better fitted than any other attorney to discharge the duties of the office.

It is reported that the women of Unity Church in Oak Park, a suburb of Chicago, will remove their hats and bonnets during church services at the request of their pastor, Rev. R. F. Johonnot. He believes that the church of the future will have a dressing-room where ladies can leave their hats and garments, and a checkroom for coats and umbrellas. Mr. Johonnot's reasons for this innovation are that it gives a more homelike and devotional aspect to the meeting, and makes it easier for persons in the back seats to see the preacher. He says that the theater is in advance of the church in this matter, and that he "cannot see why the children of darkness should always be wiser than the children of light."

The University of Pennsylvania has conferred its degree of Doctor of Philosophy upon Mrs. Alfred Colin, a French lady, whose maiden name was Henriette Louise Thérèse Fornachon de Peseux. She took her first diploma from the Académie de Neufchatel. Then she gathered more knowledge at the Muséum d'Historie Naturelle, at the Sorbonne, at the College de France and l'Ecole des Hautes-Etudes. In the United States, meantime, the Stanford University conferred upon this learned young woman the degree of Master of Arts; Bryn Mawr gave her its fellowship of the Romance languages, and retained her for two years as a reader. Pennsylvania University's honors are for researches in archaism of modern French, Romance philology, with Italian, Spanish and English philology.

Life is a long lesson in humility.—J. W. Barrie.

The Conversation Corner

THIS week, as our Cornerers know, is wholly given up in England to jubilant celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of Queen Victoria's reign—the longest of any of the British sovereigns for 1,000 years. We all have a special interest in this great festival, for England is our mother country. Only a few generations back our ancestors lived in Yorkshire or Essex or Hampshire of the Old England, and shouted Long live the King. Even after the emigration—we are likely to forget that—our grandfathers or great grandfathers, in some cases our fathers, were actually Englishmen, born in an English colony. It is true as Senator Hoar said at the time of the reception of the Bradford Manuscript, that the English island is half ours, the story of their ancestors and ours the same. So that although we live under another government now, and are proud to be Americans, we ought to be heartily interested in the past and the present of what Hawthorne calls "Our Old Home."

It seems very appropriate to print this week a letter from a good friend of ours who is a true Englishman, whom Charles Kingsley took upon his knee when a boy and called a "real Saxon," and who has won our love by his labors of Christian kindness on our own continent. The letter is dated in May, "On board the steam trawler Vancouver, Red Cross Fleet, at sea, off the coast of Denmark." The picture shows him paddling his Eskimo kayak, which he brought from Labrador, among the North Sea fishermen.

Dear Mr. Martin: If you could peer in now and see the dirty, disreputable looking person that stands at a locker, writing to you in a Guernsey frock and fisherman's long boots, you would hardly own him as an acquaintance. But here I am, trying to write with the remains of some ink unearthed by my beloved friend and skipper, Admiral John McKew, otherwise known as "Fenian Jack." We are with a very large fleet of vessels, some forty five steamers and one hundred sailing vessels. Such a lovely sight in the morning, all boxing round the fish carrier, putting their fish aboard to carry it to London! I had a grand time last week in the "Short Blue Fleet." The Holy Spirit is at times so manifested at sea one does feel very close to God. The redeemed lives of these men are beautiful to see, but the advent of steamers has made gatherings for prayer and praise difficult just for this time. The men dare not leave their vessels as they used to do. I do love these men—such big, powerful, simple, affectionate, earnest men, yet, alas! so easily led into sin.

Well, a letter should convey news. Here we are, sometimes off Heligoland, then off Germany, then out in mid-ocean, then up as far as Holland, and then again off Denmark. We have got our net out now, and just come fast on a sunken wreck. I've been up on deck to know what the noise was. The skipper says it is the wreck of a fishing vessel, called the "Lincolnshire Lass," sunk here last winter. It has brought many vessels into trouble by their coming foul of it. Isn't that a parable? The wrecks we make of our lives are very snags for other poor fellows to come foul of— Now our rope has broken, and we have lost half the net. Will take many hours to repair it, and meantime we are losing fish we might be catching. I believe in the spiritual race half our punishment is in opportunities lost and in capacity undeveloped.

I have my Eskimo canoe out here, and cruise about among the fleet in it. The fishermen cannot make it out, being so small and slight. One or two have tried it and capsized immediately. It is like riding on your bicycle, simply a piece of confidence. It's like the Christian's walk, not our strength, but our confidence, our trust. I went to visit the post in it this morning; that is the fish cutter which brings our letters from Billingsgate. A man-of-war, H. M. S. Hearty, sighted me as she passed through the fleet and steamed around me— They have just got the fish-end or "cod-end" of the net in and shot the fish on board. Oddly enough it has hung on intact, though the net is in pieces. The fish are flapping about on deck, and I have sent the steward up to clear the deck-light, over which the soles and plaice are floundering as the vessel rolls. These vessels roll horribly. I think if a man was not a good sailor no better purgatory could be invented than a month on a steam trawler—the smell of fish and oil, the dirt and the rolling would punish him!

I've had to bolt and write on my knee. I wish you could see these men, built like horses—to see our skipper knocking two half-hundred weights complacently together over his head is a sight! He holds them out easily at arms' length, and they can stand on these rolling, slushy decks as well as you and I can on a sidewalk. The hospital ship is away at home, due back tomorrow. I am really out on pioneer work, finding out all I can about how steam trawling hospitals would suit us. This morning I took in a poor, sick boy. He had neither friends nor relatives, and looked a miserable, woe-begone object, as pale as a tombstone. He looked snugger when we packed him into a clean bed, having washed him in hot, fresh water. Dinner is called. Love to all. WILFRED GRENFELL.

DR. GRENFELL IN HIS KAYAK IN THE NORTH SEA

Now I am going to copy for you from the London Toilers of the Deep a letter from our boy in the "Corner Cot." It was written at Battle Harbor Hospital just after Christmas—earlier, you notice, than the one printed May 20. Little Elsie was the girl sick with hopeless hip disease. She died one morning in November, having sung the night before,

Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me,
Bless thy little lamb tonight.

Aukshenai Dr. Grenfell: Sir Donald went away too fast. I want to look at her long time more. Some time in sleep I see you, Dr. Grenfell. I lonesome when you gone away two or three days. I afraid you get lost in Sir Donald, because it very rough, lot of wind, and very much snow. Poor little Elsie very fast gone to Father in Heaven. I very glad. Nice singing in the night. Elsie gone in the morning. Sister go home next year, me like to go too. Me got a nice time at Christmas. I'm glad I got something Christmas morning when I wake up. Me got a book, sweets and a cake. Lot of little girls and boys got a tea. It makes them laugh to look at Christmas big tree. Sister gave Tommy and me Jack-in-the-box. I opened box. I very frightened and make some people laugh very much. I make some paper chains very long. Sister put candles in lanterns, all very very pretty. Next day lots of people came to tea. After tea, lot of singing. I sing Takpanele. Boys say hip, hip, hurrah! for sister lot of times. I learn, "There is a better world, they say, O! so bright." I want a letter by and by, please. Me like to see you next year. I'm sorry you stop home. One night in sleep I see sister with big wings, like gulls' wings, only very white and very big. Aukshenai, Dr. Grenfell, very much.
GABRIEL POMIUK.

Sister Cecilia describes the Christmas, the boys going up the bay early in the morning (18 degrees below zero) for a tree and bringing it on the dog sledge, Pomiuk's pink and white paper chains festooning the room, how he "fairly screamed and clapped his hands with delight" when the tree was lighted up, how he sang four Eskimo hymns, etc. She adds, "Gabriel's large surface wounds are very small now, through frequent dressing, but the temperature at night is still high." Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK

Victoria the Good. These two interesting suggestions were recently mentioned by a lady in lecturing upon the "Current Events" of the world. One was by Frances Power Cobbe, that the Queen should be styled "Victoria the Great," calling attention to the fact that only one woman had ever received that title—Catherine the Great. But an English bishop objected, saying that although such monarchs as Alexander and Napoleon and Catherine had been thus titled, it would be far better to call the English Queen "Victoria the Good," for goodness is greater than greatness, and her Gracious Majesty would be long remembered by her people as pre-eminently good. This reminds us of the recent items in the Scrap-Book about the poem, "Why Alexander Was Called Great." Soon after I visited Whittier's birthplace at Haverhill and heard this curious story of his boyhood. The President of the United States and a menagerie visited the town on the same day, but the boy was not allowed by his Quaker parents to see either. But the next day little Greenleaf was determined to see the steps of the great ruler of the nation, and going to town followed for a long way the footprints of—the elephant, supposing that he was actually walking in the footsteps of the great Madison! But the greatness of Victoria and Lincoln and Whittier is infinitely superior to that of the warriors of history, whom people have foolishly agreed to call "Great" because, in their ambition for power, they succeeded in murdering great numbers of their fellowmen!

Children's Commemoration. In one English village the people planted fruit trees to mark the royal anniversary. But the children set an arbor of trees, whose initials in order should spell the precept, "My son, be wise." A birch stood for the letter B!

The Month of Victoria. One loyal subject proposed this method of commemoration—to divide the year into thirteen lunar months, the thirteenth to be called Victoria. That month was to consist of twenty-nine days and to include the period celebrated as anniversary of the coronation.

Those Sixty Years. The magazines and papers are giving accounts of the events and discoveries during Victoria's long reign. It would be a good exercise for us to make lists of our own. What would you put under Inventions? Railroads (?), ocean steamships, the telephone, electric light, electric cars, the sewing machine, the bicycle—what else?

L. H. M

The Sunday School

Lesson for July 4 Acts 16: 6–15

FIRST CONVERTS IN EUROPE

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

During the first ten years of the Christian Church it was confined mainly to Palestine. During the second decade it extended through Asia Minor, and the third marked its spread through Europe. About fourteen years after the crucifixion Paul, then called Saul, appears at Antioch as the helper of Barnabas, and from that time rises into increasing prominence till he becomes the acknowledged leader of the whole church. After Christ Paul is the most magnificent character in New Testament history. His passionate devotion to Christ, his unconquerable energy, his splendid statesmanship, his unalterable love for those converted under his ministry, his forensic power, his inspiring leadership, his sublime patience in all kinds of trial and his magnificent organizing ability must in every lesson be kept before our minds if teachers and pupils would gain the highest spiritual results from studying the Acts. Paul is the ideal man in that record. In this lesson, beginning a new quarter, let us note:

1. The missionaries directed to Europe. Paul, from the beginning of his Christian life, relied on special divine guidance in every crisis. Did he have it? Let the results of his labors answer. He saw Jesus on the road to Damascus. On that fact he rested his claim to apostleship. "Have I not seen Jesus our Lord?" The Holy Spirit set him apart at Antioch to preach the gospel to the Gentiles. Now on this second journey he would have preached in the province called Asia, in the southern coast of Asia Minor, but was forbidden to do so by the Holy Spirit. That was not because the gospel was to be withheld from that region, for he spent much time afterward in preaching there. Ephesus was his home for three years. But at this time God had a different plan for him. Then, with Silas and Timothy, he turned toward Bithynia, in the region lying south of the Sea of Marmora and the Black Sea. Again the Spirit would not allow them to go in that direction. This was not to shut the gospel out of Bithynia, for sixty years later Pliny found it filled with churches. It was one of the provinces Peter mentioned in a general epistle to the churches.

With the way so plainly blocked on one hand, they waited for further guidance. It came through a vision to Paul in the night as they were stopping at Troas. But the call was distinct and it was promptly answered. Immediately they sought to go forth to preach the gospel in Europe.

Can we have such guidance from above in our life work as Paul had? Let his success make answer. God vouchsafes visions to those who want them. But those who would see heavenly visions must have made up their minds about what they are living for. Paul sought simply to follow the call of personal duty. He had probably but a faint conception of the significance of the step he was taking. The division between the two continents was not marked as it now is. Mysia and Macedonia were both Roman provinces. Yet Alexander's conquest of the world was of small moment as compared with the triumph of Christianity throughout Europe, which began on the day when Paul started from Troas for Philippi. Longfellow says that success is doing faithfully what you are called to do without a thought of fame. Every one who listens for God's calls and responds to them promptly makes the most of his life.

Luke, as is generally believed, joined the missionary party at Troas. At this point in the narrative the pronoun "we" begins to be used. Perhaps he was a Greek. Paul distinctly intimates that he was not a Jew [compare Col. 4: 11 and 14]. Professor Ramsay suggests that he may have been the man of Paul's vision.

2. The place chosen to begin the work. They were in Macedonia when they landed at Neapolis. But they did not preach there. They went on to the first city of the district, Philippi. They chose a central position, whence their influence would radiate throughout the country. It was a Roman colony, planted there by the authority of Rome. Already Paul's eyes were fixed on the world's capital as the place where he would preach Christ. The wise man plans his work for God as though everything depended on his own judgment. He trusts God as implicitly as though divine guidance would make it impossible for him to make mistakes. Paul's choice of strategic points at which to begin work and to plant churches kindles our admiration for his genius. He seems to have foreseen the conquest of the world for Christ.

3. The first steps in preaching. Paul always sought those with whom he had something in common in beginning a new work, and began with some subjects in which he and they had common interest. He was a Jew and he sought Jews. They were not wanted in Philippi [v. 20], and there were not enough of them to maintain a synagogue. But Paul and his companions supposed they would find a proseucha, a place of prayer, somewhere by the river outside the walls. They waited till the Sabbath and found a little company of women. There Paul began his preaching. It must have seemed a small beginning, but to those who are obeying divine orders no work is small. The seed was sown by the side of the little river Gangas whose fruits blessed all Europe.

4. The first convert and her household. One of the women at that first meeting was a Jewish proselyte. She came from Thyatira. That was one of the cities where Paul had wanted to preach, but had not been permitted to do so by the Holy Spirit. In later times the church at that place became famous [Rev. 2: 18–29]. It is possible that Lydia helped to found it. Paul's words made a deep impression on her. They convinced her that Jesus was the Messiah. As soon as she believed she brought her household and they were baptized. As soon as she was baptized she pressed on Paul and Silas and Timothy and Luke her hospitality.

Baptism is not often mentioned in the Acts, but when it is mentioned its significance is plain. When the first church was organized [Acts 2: 38], when the first Gentile family was received into the church [10: 47, 48] and when the first church was founded in Europe [vs. 15, 33], the act of baptism is mentioned to show that this sacrament belongs with the organization and building up of churches.

The simplest lesson and the most impressive to be drawn from this incident is that when our plans seem to be defeated we must not give way to discouragement, but must watch for the new direction to which God will call us. The new call might well have seemed unpromising to Paul. He was shut out of the provinces of Asia Minor where he had planned to preach, where he would have found multitudes of Jews and where he would naturally have expected that the religion which sprang from their nation would find the strongest foothold. He was called into another continent. He went at once, but he found no place where he could preach except to a little company of women outside the city where he had chosen to begin. But there the Lord opened the heart of one woman to receive his words. So began that movement which gave Christianity its most congenial home, which at last made it dominant among English-speaking people and brought us in this country to receive the gospel and to be transformed by its power. If we each obey implicitly the voice of God he will lead us to share in the triumph by which the whole world is to be subdued to his sway.

THE CHURCH PRAYER MEETING

Topic for June 27–July 3. Living in the Light of God's Knowledge. Ps. 139: 1–12, 23, 24; Jer. 23: 23, 24; Rev. 3: 1–7; Isa. 54: 7–10.

Remembrance of God's perfect knowledge as a curb for sinful wishes. Its help in temptation. Its comfort in sorrow.

[See prayer meeting editorial.]

◆

Mr. John D. Rockefeller is one of the three or four richest men in the world. He says, "The poorest man I know of is the man who has nothing but money, nothing else in the world upon which to devote his ambition and thought." Mr. Rockefeller has told here the secret which many who are ambitious to get money have not thought of. To know how to use it is even more important than to know how to get it. Many a man, using a little wisely, has found wealth. Many another, having amassed a great fortune, has found it only "vanity and vexation of spirit."

◆

Prayer is a means of conformity to environment, of godlikeness. How do you become like a friend? Of course by associating and talking with him. And why does it help you to associate with a hero? Simply because you cannot be with him without being inspired with his heroism. And, best of all, if I pray for the gift of God's Spirit, that is the prayer which the whole world of environment has been framed to answer.—J. M. Tyler.

You don't have to keep it if you don't like it.

Cleveland's baking powder is guaranteed.

Buy it, try it, and if you do not find it better than any you ever used, your grocer will give you your money back.

693a

A Perfect Infant Food

Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

A Perfect Substitute For Mothers Milk. For 40 Years the Leading Brand.

"Infant Health" Sent Free.

N.Y. Condensed Milk Co. New York.

GRANULA "THE PERFECT HEALTH FOOD"
packages 25 cents. Specially suitable for invalids and children. Sample Book of Recipes FREE.
GRANULA CO., DANSVILLE, N. Y.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM

NOTED AMERICAN BOARD CONVERTS

(Parallel with The Congregationalist's missionary topic for July.)

Pre-eminent among the names of noted converts of the American Board stands that of Joseph Hardy Neesima. With awe does one read the story of his life, of the marked way in which he was led from childhood to his death that he might accomplish a work for Japan inestimable in its results to that island empire. His characteristics were so many and varied that it is impossible in a few lines to mention them all. He has been justly called by one of his countrymen "the Puritan of the Orient." A man of great meekness, a lover of peace, he had the fire of an unconquerable purpose, a determination to acquire knowledge not simply for its own sake but that, possessing it, he might be enabled to benefit his fellows. With great mental ability, executive, industrious, fearless, steadfast and invincible for the right, with lofty ideals, loving and loyal, he received an opportunity for service such as is seldom granted to one man, and he was faithful to it. Like Abraham he was a friend of God.

While still young, to use his own words, "his mind was fulfilled to read English Bible and to find some teacher or missionary," and intent upon this end in 1864 he left his home in Tokyo, little dreaming that ten eventful years would elapse before he should see his family again. His flight from Hakodate at midnight, disguised as a servant, in a ship bound for Shanghai, his long and tedious voyage in the Wild Rover, sailing from there to Boston, the marvelous loving-kindness of the Lord in opening the heart and home of Hon. Alpheus Hardy to the stranger constitute a thrilling story. While in Phillips Academy, Andover, Neesima united with the church, and in the same town he took his theological course after graduating from Amherst College in 1870. With the Japanese embassy, acting as its interpreter, he visited the capitals of Europe, examining, as was always his wont, so minutely the school systems that a paper prepared by him became, with some modifications, the basis of the system of education in the empire today. Those who attended the meeting of the Board in Rutland in 1874 will never forget the electrical effect produced by the powerful plea made by Neesima for funds to start a Christian college in Japan. Five thousand dollars were there subscribed for the undertaking. In November, 1875, the Doshisha—the name meaning one endeavor or one purpose company—was started in Neesima's house with a prayer meeting. In spite of opposition to the school in Kyoto, it increased in numbers, being materially helped by the members of the Kumamoto Band, a history of which and their instructors, Capt. and Mrs. L. L. Janes, deserves a chapter by itself, until in 1888–9 there were in all departments over nine hundred young men and women. He had conferred upon him in 1889 by his alma mater the degree of LL. D. Constant work beset with many difficulties told upon his health and, taking a heavy cold in the fall of this year, he failed rapidly, until in January, 1890, with the words, "Peace, joy, heaven" on his lips, he entered the eternal home. During his sickness plans for his beloved school, his best monument, were in his thoughts, but the welfare of all Japan was dear to him and he sent many New Year's letters to the leading pastors, one nearly three yards long, urging the planting of the gospel in important centers.

"My father, my father is dead" was the heartfelt cry that went up from many in the Zulu Mission when James Dube died. Faithful had been the laborers, few had been the visible results of the work, so that Daniel Lindley and his co-laborers must have felt a peculiar joy when Dube, a descendant of noted African chiefs, joined the little band of Christians. As befitted his royal blood he was of large stature, of commanding appearance and wielded much influence. He was a teacher in the station school at Inanda and pastor for seven years, until his death in 1878. Another well-beloved native Christian was Umcitwa, whose life was not long in years, but was noble in service and sacrifice. He and his wife, Yona, were the first Zulus to go into Matabeleland, 1,500 miles from their neat, attractive home in Umzumbe, to show that heathen people what a native Christian family, speaking their own tongue, could be. Six months of a wearisome journey, six months' struggle with disease, yet preaching the gospel by his patient life and words, such is the brief record of a hero's life.

The noble army of martyrs had a worthy soldier 100 years ago in the person of Assad Shidiak, whose home was near the foot of Lebanon, that "exceeding white" mountain, historic and beautiful. Of Arab descent, he was graduated with honors in the school of the Maronites, to which sect he belonged. Handsome in face and easy in manner, he readily found employment in the service of bishops and then of the patriarch. When about twenty-five years of age he found his way to Beirut and opened an Arabic school for boys, continuing, as any clever man would do, his own studies. He arranged a code of laws for the Maronites and wrote against Protestant doctrines which, through the preaching of Dr. Jonas King and others, were being made known in Syria. Searching for new arguments he turned to the Bible, but the proofs there failed to establish satisfactorily to his own mind the doctrine for worshiping the saints, and in 1826 he openly acknowledged himself a Christian. The next three and the last of his life, for he died at the early age of thirty-two, were years of continual and severe persecution. He learned the old truth that a man's foes shall be they of his own household, for in his father's house he was seized by his relatives and carried to the patriarch. The lonely convent of Canobeen, in one of the wildest, dreariest recesses of the Lebanon range, became henceforth his abiding place. There, with no bed, books, writing utensils, chained to a wall, he suffered for his Master's sake. When it was too late to save him from the clutches of the tyrant, his family made vain efforts to secure his release. Occasionally he would be taken out and scourged. When told to kiss the crucifix or the fire he kissed the fire, and every effort made to induce him to return to his former faith failed. His tormentors considered him a most obstinate man and found that he had a peculiar characteristic, namely, that he would never tell a lie. He climbed the steep ascent of heaven through peril, toil and pain, and exceeding rich was his reward.

A list of the devoted workers for the Master in the Ahmednagar district includes many names held in grateful remembrance by friends of the American Board in this land, but has one which, unfamiliar to us here, will ever be tenderly regarded by the native churches in India. Vishnupunt, as Bhaskar Karmarkar was commonly called, was of Brahman caste, born in Poona in 1834, where he lived in the poor home of his parents until he was twelve, when he was allowed to go to a government school. Later he taught in a school established and supported by educated natives for their daughters in Ahmednagar. Through the quiet influence and words of the missionaries, he began to be in doubt as to the forms and ceremonies of Hinduism and in 1853 he openly professed his faith in the Christian belief. His own prople tried to bring him back to the religion of his fathers and once attempted to kidnap him, but the attempt failed. The mission compound then became his home, the only safe one for him, and his work that of a teacher in the Girls' School. But a different life work was to be his, that of a minister. Licensed to preach in 1857, three years later an urgent call was received from the Second Church in Ahmednagar to become their pastor. His letter written to the church, after spending days and nights in prayer, shows clearly the spirit of humility which marked the man. He calls himself a "lifeless doll, a frail, earthen vessel," and says that he will go to them not as their pastor, but their poor, foolish servant. In 1868 leprosy made its fatal appearance and Bombay, on account of a better climate and docters, was chosen as his home. From that time until his death in 1881 he ministered to the American Mission Church in that important city. All classes of people respected and loved him, returning his love for them, which was such a prominent trait that he was called the Apostle John. A wealthy Arab Mussulman said to Vishnupunt's son, "If 5,000 rupees would prevent your father's death they should be yours in a moment," but neither love nor care availed, and after a week of great suffering release came, his last words being, "This is a great day."

A most remarkable sermon is that on Tithes, which was first preached in a small, poor village near Arabkir, Turkey, but has had a wide circulation, having been translated into English, Welsh and Chinese. Blind Hohannes, or John Concordance, as he was called, because of his great knowledge of the Scriptures, was a graduate of the theological seminary at Harpoot and became a preacher and teacher in a village of forty houses. Here on a salary of $8 a month he supported his wife and child, and gave one-tenth to the Lord, thus practicing what he so eloquently and powerfully preached. He died in March, 1869, loved by Armenians and Protestants, who vied with each other to give him a fitting burial.

Sources of Information

Joseph Hardy Neesima, by Dr. J. D. Davis.
Life and Letters of Joseph Hardy Neesima, by Prof. A. S. Hardy.
James Dube, Missionary Herald, April, 1884.
Assad Shidiak, Missionary Herald, April, 1886.
Vishnupunt, Missionary Herald, October, 1883.
Umcitwa and Yona, by Mrs. H. M. Bridgman, a leaflet published by Woman's Board of Missions.
Hobeana, by Miss Hance, a leaflet published by the Woman's Board.
A sermon on Tithes, a leaflet published by the American Board.

AT DRURY

Drury College never had a more interesting and significant Commencement. With close economy, for the first time in its history, President Fuller has brought the expenses of the year within the limit of the income, and the work has never shown to better advantage. The exercises of Sunday, the Edgell prize contest, the Class Day exercises, the musical exhibit of the college, were all of high order, and the Commencement exercises, June 17, in Stone Chapel, would have done credit to any college in the land. A most brilliant pianist was graduated in Miss Washatella Turner, who steps from college halls into a position of large influence as teacher. The salutatory and valedictory addresses, together with some of the other addresses, showed the influence of admirable teaching, and the master's oration by Forest E. Calland, who has taken a post-graduate course at Yale College, was one of uncommon power. Almost all of the graduates, through the influence of President Fuller and the faculty, have secured positions as teachers. Several subsequently will enter professions.

President Fuller is handling the financial interests with a master hand, and his scholarly ability is making itself felt everywhere. A large company sat down at the alumni banquet, and a still larger gathering greeted the president in the evening. The interest manifested in Drury, not only by the trustees but the entire city of Springfield and by the whole State of Missouri and the Southwest, is prophetic of a powerful institution. Next year it will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary, and it is hoped that a much needed scientific hall will then be in prospect. M. B.

Literature

BOOK REVIEWS

THE ANCIENT HEBREW TRADITION

Prof. Fritz Hommel of Munich, the well-known Orientalist, has written this book primarily, he tells us, for the theologian and the archæologist, but the common reader also will find much to absorb his attention. Recent discoveries are steadily extending our knowledge of primeval history and compelling the revision of current theories. It were greatly to be wished that the new material could be merely assimilated as so much positive addition to what was previously known, but while human nature remains what it is the temptation to polemics, to fashion the latest product of the mine into swords instead of plowshares, will hardly be resisted. Thus we find as the sub-title of this book "a protest against the modern school of Old Testament criticism." There is little comfort in it, however, for old-fashioned conservatives. The Pentateuch is held to be a composite; a partition of the story of Melchizedek is presented, with sundry conjectural readings; the conquest of Canaan, as here described, is utterly different from that given in the book of Joshua, and many such liberties are taken with the common interpretations of Scripture.

Nevertheless, the main trend of the book supports decidedly the ancient Hebrew tradition as it lies on the face of the Old Testament records. The Hebrews were probably monotheists long before Moses; the stories of the patriarchs were current in writing when Israel was in Egypt; the so-called priestly narrative is ancient and reliable, antedating even the Jehovist; Genesis 14 is veritable history; Deuteronomy is older than Hosea; the tabernacle with its ritual and priesthood belongs to the wilderness life; the reforms of Ezra were a reversion to primitive customs—such are some of Professor Hommel's contentions, and those who have best followed recent controversies will best know how fundamental they are.

The method of the book is a very interesting one, and, if it could be carried out successfully, a very convincing one. The authorship and the composition of the Biblical books are secondary questions. However these may be answered, the course of history is not affected, for the books themselves contain a cloud of unconscious witnesses in the shape of records whose antiquity and genuineness are proved by external evidence. The argument resembles that of Robertson's Early Religion of Israel, to which Hommel gives high, and almost extravagant, praise, although he falls below the Scotchman in soberness and soundness of judgment. Adopting the principle laid down by Edward Meyer in his late reply to Kosters, our author investigates minutely the proper names of the Old Testament, especially of the so-called priest code, comparing them with those of the early Babylonian inscriptions, the El-Amarna letters, the South Arabian documents, etc. Unquestionably this study of words is of great value, and must be reckoned with by all who would hereafter hold to the view best known by the name of Wellhausen. Most of the material is surprisingly fresh, and there are numerous references to learned works published during the present year.

The chief faults of the book are its lack of a judicial temper, e. g., "blinded by the prejudices which obscure the vision of modern critics of the Pentateuch" [p. 292], and its lack of a judicial faculty for distinguishing proof from probability. The fourth chapter, Chronology of the Time of Abraham, we have found especially disappointing. Elsewhere the name Ashur is traced to the region south of Palestine, but the evidence connecting this with Asher, the son of Jacob, is but slight. When the author asserts that the book of Joshua is accurate and trustworthy, and that the evidence from the monuments, as he presents it, does not oblige us to modify in any way the traditional view, he is simply inconsistent with himself.

In future editions a minor defect in the make-up of the book should be corrected. The general title is repeated as a uniform head-line, so that one who opens at random has no clew to his whereabouts. The table of contents should be utilized to furnish running titles. [E. & J. B. Young. $1.75.]

RELIGIOUS

In Gateways to the Bible [Rice & Hirst. 50 cents] Dr. Cunningham Geikie, Professor Sayce, Bishop Haygood, Dr. A. F. Schauffler, Bishop A. C. Coxe, Rev. M. H. Williams and others contribute a series of papers for the practical aid of Biblical students, especially those of average Sunday school attainments. Some of the titles are: The Age and Preservation of the Bible, Mutual Relations of the Old and New Testaments, What the Unlearned Find in the Bible, Why I Get So Little Out of the Bible, How I Can Get More Out of the Bible. The book puts no strain upon the intellect but serves its useful purpose effectively.——Fireside Readings for Happy Homes [H. L. Hastings. $1 50] is a reprint of a book published some sixteen years ago. It is intended and adapted to promote the development of early piety and to quicken that of adults. The book contains anecdotes in abundance and makes earnest moral pleas. The illustrations are the most unsatisfactory feature. ——Hymnal for Primary Classes [American Sunday School Union. 15 cents] and Songs of Love and Praise [J. J. Hood. 35 cents] are two Sunday school hymnals, the latter with and the former without tunes. Each of them is ordinary in respect to quality.

Two volumes of the lectures delivered on the occasion of the sesquicentennial celebration of Princeton University have been issued in neat and substantial form by Messrs. Scribner's Sons. One is Two Lectures on Theism [$1.00], by Prof. Andrew Seth of Edinburgh University. The other is the Claims of the Old Testament [$1.00], by Prof. Stanley Leathes of King's College, London. It need only be said now that they are learned and remunerative discussions which all Biblical scholars will appreciate.——A new edition of Prof. C. W. Rishell's book, The Higher Criticism an Outline of Modern Bible Study [Curts & Jennings. $1.00], is issued with an introduction by Prof. H. M. Harmon. The book came out first in 1893, and is a valuable practical treatise, timely and edifying. It has been carefully revised and enlarged.——A new number of the Modern Reader's Bible series is Ezekiel [Macmillan Co. 50 cents], edited by Prof. R. G. Moulton. It illustrates the same high grade of scholarship and is in the same compact and tasteful form as the previous volumes.——The Sacred Feast [Eaton & Mains. 35 cents] contains five short discourses by George Lester on the Lord's Supper, and is well adapted to promote the devotional spirit.

STORIES

That familiar expedient of the novelist, the introduction of a hero, uncouth because of unrefined early surroundings and ignorance of the usages of cultivated society, but possessing natural shrewdness and kindliness, into a position of wealth and influence by an unexpected whirl of the wheel of fortune, is used by Mr. E. W. Hornung quite successfully in his story, My Lord Duke [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25]. The hero comes out of the bush in New South Wales to assume the title and estates of an English duke. His somewhat startling methods of adjusting himself to his new surroundings are amusing, and he wins the hearty admiration of the reader, as he finally does that of the heroine, by his inherent manliness and goodness of heart. And when he finally turns out not to be a duke after all one feels that the author would have done better to let well enough alone.

His Native Wife [J. B. Lippincott Co. 75 cents], by Louis Becke, is a graceful, somewhat unconventional story of the South Sea Islands, illustrating a more or less frankly avowed inclination to sneer at missionaries and Christianity, and, on the whole, seeking to justify, somewhat unobtrusively, a freedom of morals which may be innocent among savages, but which is not innocent in the mind of an instructed author or reader.——The Burglar Who Moved Paradise [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25], by Herbert D. Ward, is a brisk, amusing and thoroughly readable little story, not without an undercurrent of wholesome seriousness in exalting nobility of character. It abounds in local allusions which many readers will recognize and enjoy, and it will take a good place among popular stories of the coming summer.

Ripple and Flood [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50], by James Prior, has for its hero an English artist of plebeian origin, and for heroine a waif of origin even more plebeian. They rise somewhat in the world, and their adventures and the story of their love are told in a more than ordinarily entertaining manner. There are drama and tragedy in the book, and it is rather a sad story, but a capital piece of work, nevertheless.——A Free Lance in a Far Land [Cassell Co. 50 cents], by Herbert Compton, describes graphically the adventurous career of one of those Englishmen, so many of whom went out to India in the days of the East Indian Company and entered the service of the different Indian princes to seek their fortunes. It is an exciting story on the whole, pervaded by a healthy tone and decidedly entertaining.

The Pursuit of the Houseboat [Harper & Bros. $1.25], by John K. Bangs, is in the author's familiar daring and amusing vein, but we must confess that it is a little tiresome to us. We have no doubt that many people thoroughly enjoy such literature, and they will find the author entertaining throughout in his characteristic way. He is not burdened with reverence, and the illusion which he undertakes to keep up puts a severe strain upon him, under which he occasionally bends, but the book is certainly a bright one, and the audacity of introducing the late Sherlock Holmes in the company of Socrates, Dr. Johnson, Madame Récamier, Cleopatra, Captain Kidd, Mrs.

Noah and others will carry the book with a great many.

The Parent's Assistant [Macmillan Co. $1.50] will be recognized by some of our readers as a familiar volume from the pen of Miss Maria Edgeworth, which they read in their youth. It contains stories for children, and it is entertaining to read afresh these narratives, once so popular, and always of interest because of their illustration of the literary and moral ideals and methods of half a century and more ago. It is illustrated, and Mrs. Anne Thackeray Ritchie has supplied an introduction.

MISCELLANEOUS

Rev. N. H. Chamberlain's new book, Samuel Sewall and the World He Lived in [De Wolfe, Fisk & Co.], is a study of Puritan life in early New England. The famous diary of Judge Sewall serves as a sort of text and backbone. Puritanism in Old England and New, Judge Sewall as a Puritan type, the life of the times, its literature, its ecclesiastical growth and kindred topics are considered in a series of thoughtful, well studied, carefully written and eminently interesting chapters. The author's spirit is candid in discussing disputed topics and he exhibits a shrewd perception of the salient features of the time, the characters and the events which come up for notice. The book is neither a history nor a biography, but a series of essays containing history and biography and also considerable philosophy and much in the way of suggestive comment. It has a number of excellent illustrations and is a pleasant addition to what may be called the literature of the colonial period.

Mr. O. P. Temple's The Covenanter, the Cavalier and the Puritan [Robert Clarke Co. $1 50] also is a study of colonial life in a large measure. It describes the Scotch and Irish Covenanters of a hundred years ago and more, their work as colonizers here, their settlements in the South, the distinction between them and the Cavaliers and Puritans, the services which they have rendered to our country, and the strength, vigor, enterprise and high integrity of the Covenanter character. The book does good service in making prominent certain facts which sometimes have failed to receive their due appreciation and as a study of the history of the Covenanters it will take a good place. It is an able book and serves a useful purpose.

Patrins [Copeland & Day. $1.25], by Louise I. Guiney, contains about a score of Miss Guiney's fascinating essays. The title of the book is a felicitous appropriation of a term used by the gypsies to describe handfuls of leaves or grass which they cast upon the road by way of leaving a trail. Miss Guiney is one of the most charming of the lighter essayists of our time, yet we do not mean that her productions lack substance. They are as well worth reading for their suggestiveness as they are for their fresh and vivacious manner and they are characterized by an unusually distinct individuality, a certain sparkle of which one does not weary. Some of her topics in this volume are on The Ethics of Descent, Reminiscences of a Fine Gentleman, The Under Dog, Quiet London, Willful Sadness in Literature, etc. The book is one which will extend greatly the number of her regular and admiring readers.

The substantial work in two volumes of Mr. L. F. Ward on Dynamic Sociology [D. Appleton & Co. $4 00], which appeared first in 1883, has been republished, but without a very extensive revision. To revise has seemed to be impracticable, and the expert reader is advised in the preface to omit the first six chapters inasmuch as they contain material once important, but now unnecessary except to the integrity of the work. The book has had a peculiarly interesting history in some respects, notably in connection with the endeavor to introduce the work into Russia, where it was interdicted. Perhaps the Russian authorities suspected from its title that it had something to do with dynamite.

Notes on the Nicaragua Canal [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1 25], by H. I. Sheldon, describes a visit to Nicaragua, which resulted in convincing the author of the desirability of constructing the proposed ship canal and follows with a careful and somewhat elaborate study of the subject, together with a history of what has been done. He recommends that the United States see the canal through to completion by the purchase of a strip of territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific, sufficient to include the canal, thus giving us the opportunity of constructing it upon American soil, and the right to control it, and making it natural for the Government to build it just as it builds its harbors and public buildings. Whether the plan is the wisest may be a question, but the clear and intelligent discussion which the author here gives deserves careful attention and may lead his readers to agree with his judgment. The book is illustrated handsomely.

Several more reading books are come to hand. One is In Brook and Bayou, or Life in Still Waters [D. Appleton & Co. 60 cents], by Clara K. Bayliss. It is the first volume in the Home Reading Book series edited by Dr. Harris, and discusses natural history in many of its manifestations, and is meant to beguile the young into the way of learning until they shall have acquired, at least, a taste for natural science and possibly some actual knowledge. In the hands of a good teacher such a book will accomplish a good deal. But the attempts at drollery in these pages are far from successful.

The Story of Troy [American Book Co. 60 cents], by M. Clarke, is the latest issue in the Eclectic School Reading series. The old story is retold briefly, but well, in clear type and with some excellent pictures.——In the Riverside Literature series Thomas De Quincey's Flight of a Tartar Tribe [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 25 cents] has been edited by Prof. M. H. Turk. It is in the usual neat and tasteful form of that series. ——Two other volumes of the Riverside Literature series are Tennyson's Princess, edited, with notes, by Dr. Rolfe, and the First Three Books of the Æneid [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 30 cents and 15 cents], edited by C. P. Cranch.

We are indebted to the courtesy of Justice David J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, president of the Venezuela Commission, for copies of the first publications of the commission. These consist of an atlas of maps of the Orinoco-Essequibo region compiled for the commission and the accompanying text relating to the geographical questions involved. The country itself is mapped with reference to its boundaries proposed or claimed, its forests and savannas, drainage basins, geology and European occupation so far as it can be traced at various dates from 1597 to the English occupation in 1814. Then follow reproductions of rare ancient or more recent maps covering the territory, many of which have a high degree of historical interest. The diligence and care of the inquiry are evident at every point, and there is an accumulation of material which must be of the greatest use to the arbitrators unless its very wealth proves an embarrassment. It is a comfort to think that this elaborate and studious work, in the providence of God, appears as the prelude of arbitration, and not of war.

NOTES

—— Ian Maclaren will give one or two religious books to his publishers before long, but will not print another novel at present.

—— The famous black-letter Chaucer in the Charles W. Frederickson library went to Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons at the recent auction, for $340. Goodwin's Antonio was secured by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. for $300. The different lots brought $8 apiece on the average.

—— The nine lectures recently given at Johns Hopkins University by M. Ferdinand Brunetière, who had so pleasant a reception wherever he went in our country, are to be brought out in substance in a volume before long. But another work, on French Literature, from his pen already is in press and will appear first.

—— Messrs. Bentley & Sons, publishers of the new and complete edition of Jane Austen's works, have just had a letter sent them to be forwarded to her! Alas! it is no longer possible to speak of her as "the late Miss Austen," although many years now are allowed to pass before that form of allusion is considered inappropriate.

—— The late Alfred Nobel, the famous Swedish chemist and manufacturer of dynamite, left a bequest of $10,000,000 to be funded for the benefit of science. Five equal prizes, of $50,000 each, are to be awarded annually. One will go to the writer of the best work in physiology or medicine, one to the person who has made the most important discovery or invention in physics, one to the similarly prominent person in chemistry, one to the author of the best idealistic work in literature, and the fifth to him who has done most to abolish standing armies and to promote the fraternization of nations.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Lothrop Pub. Co. Boston.

The Ready Rangers. By Kirk Munroe. pp. 334. $1 25.

The Great Island. By Willis Boyd Allen. pp. 176. 75 cents.

Ginn & Co. Boston.

Method in History. By W. H. Mace. pp. 311. $1 10

Via Latina. By W. C. Collar. pp. 203. 85 cents.

Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. Boston.

Macbeth. Edited by James M. Garnett, LL. D. pp. 224. 35 cents.

Silver, Burdett & Co. Boston.

Introduction to the Study of Economics. By C. J. Bullock, Ph. D. pp. 511. $1.28.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

Later Gleanings. By W. E. Gladstone. pp. 426. $1.25.

Arnaud's Masterpiece. A Romance of the Pyrenees. By W. C. Larned. pp. 213 $1.25.

The Old Gentleman of the Black Stock. By Thomas Nelson Page. pp 137. 75 cents

Nicholas Nickleby. By Charles Dickens Edited by Andrew Lang, in two vols. pp. 504, 497. $3.00.

A Concordance to the Greek Testament. Edited by Rev. W. F. Moulton, D. D., and Rev. A. S. Geden. pp. 1037. $7.00.

Illustrated Flora of the Northern United States and Canada. Vol. II By N. L. Britton, Ph. D., and Hon. Addison Brown. pp. 643. $3.00

Macmillan Co. New York.

A Rose of Yesterday. By F. Marion Crawford pp. 218. $1 25.

Henry Holt & Co. New York.

The Gadfly. By E. L. Voynich. pp. 373. $1.25.

H. S. Stone. Chicago.

Pink Marsh. By George Ade. pp 197. $1.25.

One Man's View. By Leonard Merrick. pp. 258. $1.00.

Maude. By Christina Rossetti. pp. 122. $1.00.

Advance Pub Co. Chicago.

In His Steps By C. M. Sheldon. pp. 282. $1.00.

Office of the Better Way. Grinnell.

The Better Way. By W. H. Wheeler. pp. 128. 60 cents.

PAPER COVERS

D. C. Heath & Co. Boston.

La Pondre aux Yeux. By Labiche et Martin. Edited by B. W. Wells, Ph. D. pp. 36. 25 cents.

H. L. Hastings. Boston.

The Credibility of the Christian Religion. By Samuel Smith, M. P. 25 cents.

Charles Scribner's Sons. New York.

Christian Conduct. By T. B. Kilpatrick, B. D. pp. 145. 20 cents.

Miracles of Our Lord. By Rev. Professor Laidlaw, D. D. pp 93. 20 cents.

MAGAZINES

June. Music—International Studio—Auburn Seminary Review.—Nineteenth Century.

BIOGRAPHICAL

REV. JOSHUA T. TUCKER, D.D.

A long and useful life was ended when, after years of feebleness, Dr. Tucker died of heart disease at Dorchester, June 11, in his eighty fifth year. He was born in Milton, where for six generations had lived his godly ancestors, Robert, the English emigrant, having first settled in Weymouth in 1635. He graduated at Phillips Academy, Andover, in 1829, and at Yale College in 1833, the class of Drs. Buckingham, Dutton, Day and Wolcott, Professor Dana, Charles T. Torrey, the martyr, and Secretary of War Taft. Studying theology at Lane Seminary he was ordained in 1837, and labored in Illinois and Missouri, especially at Hannibal and St. Louis, until 1848; was then pastor in Holliston, Mass., eighteen years, and in Chicopee Falls ten years, resigning in 1877. These forty years of pastoral service were abundantly fruitful. In his pioneer service at the West and in his Massachusetts pastorates repeated revivals attended his ministry. An awakening of remarkable power occurred in his Holliston pastorate in 1858, when the whole community was aroused to solemn consideration of religious duty. Meetings were held in the body of the church night after night for weeks, and over a hundred persons were added to the church, many of them heads of families and strong business men of the town, and all without evangelistic helpers or, least of all, any sensational measures, but simply through the Spirit's blessing upon the clear, earnest preaching of gospel truth.

To his ministerial labors Dr. Tucker often added valuable editorial service, in which he wielded a ready and effective pen. In Missouri he was connected with the St. Louis Herald of Religious Liberty; his extended notes of European travel in the Home Monthly Magazine of Boston just before the war will be remembered by some; while at Holliston he was one of the four founders of the Boston Review (afterwards the Congregational Review) and one of its editors from 1861 to 1868; while at Chicopee he was editorial contributor to the Springfield Union Daily for four years, and often furnished articles to other periodicals. He published in 1855 The Sinless One, a life of Christ, and in 1870 Christ's Infant Kingdom.

These data indicate not unfairly Dr. Tucker's ability, versatility and constant usefulness. In whatsoever work he engaged, whether as preacher, pastor or writer, he wrought earnestly, faithfully, well. He worked for success. He had success His works follow him in the grateful remembrance of the people to whom he successively ministered, and in the lives of hundreds whom he influenced in the formation and growth of Christian character. Conservative in his tendencies, and standing always on "the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture," he thought for himself and did not hesitate to adopt new views of truth when supported by his own reason or the reverent researches of Christian scholars. As Dr. Herrick finely said at his funeral, "He weeded out his opinions as he did the books of his library, throwing out such as were no longer necessary or helpful to him."

Dr. Tucker's first wife, Miss Mary A. Stibbs of London, Eng., died in 1844. His second wife, Miss Ann D. Shackford of Portsmouth, N.H., survives him, with one daughter, the widow of the late Edward P. Nettleton of the Boston bar. With the exception of two years spent in Andover, he had lived in Boston since his retirement from the active ministry, growing old gracefully, his dignified, genial presence imparting a benediction on all with whom he came in contact.

A brief service was held at his late residence in Dorchester, June 12, Rev. Dr. Herrick officiating, and Rev. C. F. Carter of Lexington paying a grateful tribute to the pastor of his boyhood. At Holliston, on June 14, eight of his former parishioners bore him to his burial from the old church where he had so long preached, and where the venerable Dr. Dowse of Sherborn assisted the young pastor in the loving memorial service, which was attended also by a delegation from the church at Chicopee.

Our Readers' Forum

A Pastor's Suggestion to Pastors as to the Finances of Our Missionary Societies—Pastoral Work Shared by the Church Members—The Bicycle versus the Prayer Meeting—Church Entertainments—Prayers for Rulers

NOT TO BE DELEGATED TO THE PASTOR

"Our pastor is a good preacher, but he doesn't visit among his people much" is a saying so old and common as to have lost its novelty. But what does this complaint amount to?

Every clergyman, however exacting his pulpit work, will visit the sick, the needy, the afflicted—those who really need him. If complainers knew that it takes from eight to fifteen hours to write out a half-hour sermon, after the thinking has been done, and realized the multifarious and exacting duties falling upon a minister in these days, they would not only cease to complain, but would wonder how he gets through his regular weekly duties.

Moreover, what are we Christians for, if it be not to cheer and enliven our brothers and sisters in the church? Why can't we do the ordinary pastoral visiting ourselves, and even offer the consoling word in times of sorrow, and thus give our pastor and teacher "to prayer and the ministry of the word," the work for which he has been specially trained? St. James's definition of "pure religion"—"To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction"—is surely sufficient authority for such a course. J D B.

MISSIONS AND MONEY

The most vital question connected with Christian missions has come to be that of financial support. Depleted treasuries, then special efforts and temporary relief constitute a repetition of the old story, with hope at a little lower level. That home and foreign missions suffer about equally show that lack of funds cannot now be attributed to dissatisfaction with ancient creeds retained or to the acceptance of a new theology. Something which has not yet been done must be done and quickly.

Is there room for change in the methods of raising money? Of late years some excellent plans have been adopted. Children and young people are attracted by something which will amuse for an hour, but there must be a new scheme for the next time or their interest soon disappears. They are not taught benevolence but something quite the opposite, and in a few years the result is apparent.

The result has indeed become such, and the need so pressing, that the benevolent societies have entered upon the task of trying to get the money from the churches by their own efforts. They have felt obliged to put agencies in the field, whose special mission is the gathering of funds, but they have simply attempted the impracticable. In the space of two or three years four missionary rallies were held within the limits of a certain town of Connecticut at which were present as speakers men and women of no mean reputation, and yet, from personal observation, the writer would be willing to pledge himself, for the moderate sum of ten dollars, to give all that has thus been added to the treasuries of the societies represented. A few of those already interested, and giving what they thought they were able to, were at the meetings, the rest stayed at home. More than a dozen visits, by secretaries and others, were made to the churches of the town to assist in Sabbath services. These men did their work admirably. Doubtless contributions were, in some instances, considerably increased. Yet have not many churches a kind of feeling that the small amount which they are able to give is pretty much eaten up by the salary and expenses of the persons visiting them?

What, then, is to be done? The pastor of each church must prepare himself and attend to raising money for benevolent purposes just as faithfully as he attends to any other branch of Christian service. He must regard himself as set apart for this particular thing. He should as soon expect that a man would be sent from a place a hundred miles away to help him in making his pastoral calls as to help him cultivate a spirit of benevolence. A few years ago a pastor began his work in a small parish in an Eastern state. He found the people already giving more liberally than most others—about $800 annually besides all home expenses of every kind. But he was not satisfied and he set himself to raise more. Very few of the agents of the benevolent societies were invited, on the contrary, when they proposed to come, they were usually put off. But the sum given in benevolence increased steadily, without the introduction of any new methods, till it reached about $1 400, considerably more than the salary of the pastor. The same man in another church, within the space of three years, increased the contributions more than 500 per cent. Pastors may sometimes profitably receive assistance, especially from missionaries returned from their work, but first and foremost must be their own unceasing endeavors. By example as well as words they must lead their people.

Stonington, Ct. J. O Barrows

THE NEW ENGLAND MIDWEEK MEETING PROTECTIVE LEAGUE

The bicycle has come to stay and the New England Sabbath Protective League has endeavored to meet the temptation that has come with it by presenting to all who own wheels this pledge: "I will not use my wheel for pleasure on the Sabbath." Would it not be well to include in this pledge the time of the midweek prayer meeting also? If not in this way, in some other the attention of Christians and church members should be called to their duty in this direction. What a grand opportunity Christians have to show their unconverted friends and companions that their religion is not a mere profession.

J. E. H.

LET THE CHURCH DECIDE

In the issue of April 23 a pastor, commenting on what had been called "the low standard of taste prevailing in church entertainments," suggests that "the standing committee adopt a rule that all programs must be submitted to the pastor before they are given." But why not relieve the pastor of that responsibility, and have the church itself decide what rules shall be observed at church entertainments, both its own and that of the societies under its care? The church lives from generation to generation, the stay of the pastor is of shorter duration.

Windsor Locks, Ct. J. H. H.

PRAY FOR THE PRESIDENT

It has often been a matter of surprise and regret to me that ministers of our denomination so seldom pray for our President and his Cabinet officers when conducting the morning Sabbath service. Allow me to suggest that a prayer for the President and his advisers be attached to our church hymn-books to be read in connection with the responsive readings by pastor and people in our Sunday service. It would seem that prayer for our rulers becomes more and more urgent with each new administration.

A Pastor's Daughter and Wife.

The determination of the missionary to accomplish the usual result with a deficient supply has developed unusual self reliance and invention. The financial pressure has compressed the society's forces and prepared them for more efficient action when the favorable opportunity shall arrive.—Dr. H. A. Schauffler at Saratoga.

In and Around Boston

Pushing Local Interests

The gathering at the United States Hotel last Monday evening under the auspices of the Congregational Church Union of Boston and vicinity was designed to mark the midway point in the year's work of the organization and as such it served its purpose admirably. There were both review and a forecast of opportunities awaiting the attention of the body, and the thirty-five gentlemen present went away with a new sense of the value of such an organization and a quickened determination to make it still more effective in binding together the churches of metropolitan Boston. President Darling introduced the speakers happily after Rev. E. H. Byington, D. D., had offered prayer. Treasurer Charles E. Kelsey reported that since May 1, 1896, the date when the union was practically organized, $1,348 have been received in membership dues and in collections from the churches.

The speaking was bright, strong and directly to the point. Justice Robert R. Bishop, who has been one of the stanchest friends of the union since its start, expressed his hearty sympathy with its aim, referred to the losses to other denominations during the last thirty years, occasioned in part by the lack of such an organization, and urged that the whole strength of the denomination be brought to bear upon fields that are weak and that need cultivating. We should not look upon ourselves as so many isolated and independent churches, but as one united church set here to conserve and advance the Pilgrim faith and to do our particular work for the kingdom of heaven.

Rev. H. G. Hale voiced the gratitude which he and his people of Leyden Church feel toward the union for its generous assistance the past year, without which the good results already reached would doubtless not have been attained. He justified the activity of the union in behalf of even what is considered a wealthy field on the ground that many residents in our rich suburban districts are slow to put their hands to a new enterprise. Hence an impulse from without is often needed. He went on to speak of the peculiar problems of his field, which are no less difficult than those of the slums, but equally interesting and inspiring. Rev. W. H. Allbright, D. D., drew attention to the opening at Savin Hill, which the union has already voted to enter this coming year. Though it means eventually a weakening of his own church, the Pilgrim, he declared himself ready to undergo it in behalf of the larger interests of the denomination. Dr. Allbright was warmly applauded for his broad and generous attitude.

In Honor of the Queen

Boston listened last Sunday to the praises of Queen Victoria. The flags of two nations were draped side by side in a score of churches. The patriotic hymns of England and America were everywhere sung, and the generous enthusiasm of so many eager audiences promised much for the Anglo-American arbitration treaty that is coming by and by.

The Episcopal churches, true to their spiritual inheritance, made much of the occasion. Dr. Donald preached at Trinity on The Reign of Victoria, quoting effectively the lines of Tennyson:

> She wrought her people lasting good,
> Her court was pure, her life serene,
> God gave her peace, her land reposed;
> A thousand claims to reverence closed
> In her as mother, wife and queen.

At Grace Church, South Boston, the jubilee was made the occasion of a full cathedral service with a vested choir of seventy voices. Eighty survivors of the early Victorian wars, decorated with their medals, listened to an address by Rev. A. E. George at St. Mathew's. Special collects, set forth by Bishop Lawrence, were in use throughout the diocese.

In the afternoon Dr. Reuen Thomas of Brookline delivered a magnificent oration before the Music Hall Patriotic Association. An audience of 3,000 people packed the building and applauded frequently with fine enthusiasm. Only a few rods from Music Hall another vast audience was gathered at Tremont Temple, which had been gayly decorated. British and American flags draped the pulpit, and the galleries were equally bright with bunting. The Sons of St. George brought their rampant red lion; the Welshmen were represented by a big blue banner bearing the unpronounceable motto, "Y draig Goch a ddyry Gychwyn," whatever that may mean; while the Caledonian societies and Scottish clans carried their colors on their persons. A whole row of bagpipes with "bonny plaids" attached were loaded upon the edge of the platform. Highland costumes made a fine show in the audience, and he missed much who failed to rest his eye upon a loyal British tar who had come ashore from H. M. S Pallas. Perhaps the most interesting feature of the occasion was the singing of the united national anthems as arranged by Dr. Lorimer—first two stanzas of God Save the Queen, then two of "My country, 'tis of thee," and then an original stanza closing with the lines:

> Make all the nations one,
> All hearts beneath the sun,
> Till thou shalt reign alone,
> Great King of kings.

During the first two stanzas the precentor used the British Jack as a baton, then he exchanged it for "old glory," and finally he waved the two flags together while the people responded with a brave flourish of white handkerchiefs.

The Training of Laymen

The Forward Movement in Church Work, which was the subject of the Ministers' Meeting on Monday, proved to be a presentation of the methods and aims of the Bible Normal College in Springfield, Mass., formerly known as the School for Christian Workers. Its secretary, J. L. Dixon, emphatically denied the charge that the school is a short cut into the ministry. It intends to do as thorough work to prepare laymen for teaching as the seminary does to fit ministers for preaching. The course of instruction, covering two years, is divided into three departments: (1) Biblical course; (2) auxiliary studies; (3) a department course, including training in foreign, home and city missionary work and preparation for Sunday school superintendents.

Dr. Reuen Thomas thought that the work of the ministry is to be harder than ever before in the coming years. The minister of the future must know a great deal more of philosophy in order to approach theology properly. Mere elementary scholarship will not be sufficient. A man who is not a philosopher cannot understand St. Paul and St. John. The teaching side of the ministry has never been sufficiently emphasized. To do away with the sentimental kind of religiousness we must teach the Bible with power. We can never make a fire that will last out of shavings, even theological shavings. We must know our Bible to be good citizens as well as good Christians. If the Bible College is doing this work of training men and women to use the best methods of the public schools in Sunday school work it should receive the support it needs.

Dr. G. M. Boynton added his word of approval to those already spoken and Rev. S. L. Loomis spoke of certain features of the religious outlook which make the work of the Bible College of importance. The Protestant churches of this country minister to a small portion of the population; the masses of the working classes are not found in them. He drew a vivid picture of the life of a child in the tenement house district, to whom neither nurture nor protection can be given. Motherhood lacks the power it should have. The mission school should supply this lack as far as possible. Patient, scientific work is needed. Pastors cannot do it, volunteers cannot; carefully trained men and women must be ready to do it.

Happenings in the Harbor

There have been unusual goings on in the harbor for the last three weeks. They began May 28 with the coming of two of the most notable vessels of the White Squadron, the armored cruiser, New York, and the first-class battleship, Massachusetts, to take part in the ceremonies at the unveiling of the Shaw memorial.

The vessels have been declared open to visitors, and hundreds of people have gone over them. Besides the attentions of the general public, special visits have been made to the Massachusetts by 200 members of the Boston Bank Officers' Association, and by some of the many distinguished bodies of visitors who have been seeing Boston during the past few weeks. On the 16th the fleet was increased by the dispatch boat Dolphin, flying her pennant to show that she brought the Secretary of the Navy.

On Bunker Hill Day there was a reception on board the Massachusetts, which was, perhaps, the most interesting of all the patriotic ceremonies of the day. Governor Wolcott, for the State, presented a beautiful bronze figure of Victory to the great battleship which has been named for the commonwealth. The gift was received in the name of the United States Navy by Secretary Long with an appropriate speech and turned over to Captain Rodgers.

Meantime the Massachusetts nautical training ship, Enterprise, has had her share of interest, while she was fitting for her foreign cruise on which she started last week. She will visit the principal ports of England, France and Italy, returning by way of the Bermudas, making Boston Harbor next October.

Friday the British warship Pallas came into the harbor from Halifax, to take part in Boston's celebration of Queen Victoria's jubilee, for which fifty officers and men had leave to land.

Young Wood-Workers of the North End

An interesting exhibition of sloyd, and some of the things it has accomplished in the heart of the North End, has been held for several weeks at the North Bennet Street Industrial School, closing last week. The models are pretty pieces of carpenters' and joiners' work, which the children have been taught to copy for the training of eye and hand. More interesting were a showing of things the North End waifs had made by themselves. There were tiny canoes and wheelbarrows, buckets, bas reliefs and a good-sized marionette, designed and finished with skill, which showed the value of the sloyd system to the children of the poor and ignorant classes.

Appreciation of it has extended widely among educators. The weekly classes during the past year have been attended by some sixty teachers of Boston and vicinity, among them several school superintendents and principals of high and grammar schools. One hundred and twenty teachers have taken a full course and received diplomas from this sloyd training school since it was opened five years ago.

Every time you make a new Christian you make a new argument that nothing can overturn for the truth of the gospel. Each new believer becomes an original witness to the truth of Christ's gospel. Each man can say, "I know whom I have believed."—G. S. Barrett, D. D.

News from the Churches

Meetings to Come

BOSTON MINISTERS' MEETING, Pilgrim Hall, June 28, 10 A. M. Last meeting for the season. Topic: The Contributions of Missions to Science, Commerce and Philosophy. Speaker: Rev. E. C. Ewing of Danvers.

SPECIAL meeting of the Congregational Education Society, July 8, 1897, at 2 P. M. in Pilgrim Hall, Congregational House, Boston, to consider and act upon an amendment to Article 5 of the constitution, authorizing the president and directors to make conveyance of any real estate owned by the society, and to transact such other business as may be legally brought before it.
I. A. HAMILTON.

Benevolent Societies

THE CONGREGATIONAL HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY is represented in Massachusetts (and in Massachusetts only) by the MASSACHUSETTS HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY, No. 9 Congregational House. Rev. Joshua Coit, Secretary; Rev. Edwin B. Palmer, Treasurer.

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Room No. 32, Congregational House. Office hours, 9 to 5. Annual membership, $1.00; life membership, $20.00. Contributions solicited. Miss Annie C. Bridgman, Treasurer.

AMERICAN BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS, Congregational House, No. 1 Somerset Street, Boston. Frank H. Wiggin, Treasurer; Charles E. Swett, Publishing and Purchasing Agent. Office in New York, 121 Bible House; in Chicago, 153 La Salle St.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Room 1 and 2, Congregational House. Miss Sarah Louise Day, Treasurer; Miss Abbie B. Child, Home Secretary.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, Bible House, New York. Missions in the United States, evangelistic and educational, at the South and in the West among the Indians and Chinese. Boston office, 21 Congregational House; Chicago office, 153 La Salle Street; Cleveland office, Y. M. C. A. Building. Donations may be sent to either of the above offices, or to H. W. Hubbard, Treasurer, 108 Bible House, New York City.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY —Church and Parsonage Building. Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., Secretary; Charles E. Hope, Treasurer, 59 Bible House, New York; Rev. George A. Hood, Congregational House, Boston, Field Secretary.

CONGREGATIONAL EDUCATION SOCIETY (Including work of former New West Commission).—Aids four hundred students for the ministry, eight home missionary colleges, twenty academies in the West and South, ten free Christian schools in Utah and New Mexico. S. F. Wilkins, Treasurer Offices: 10 Congregational House, Boston; 151 Washington St., Chicago, Ill. Address, 10 Congregational House, Boston.

CONG. SUNDAY SCHOOL & PUBLISHING SOCIETY.—Contributions used only for missionary work. Rev. George M. Boynton, D. D., Secretary; W. A. Duncan, Ph. D., Field Secretary; E. Lawrence Barnard, Treasurer, Congregational House, Boston.

MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF MINISTERIAL AID.—Treasurer, Mr. Arthur G. Stanwood, 701 Sears Building, Boston. Applications should be sent to Rev. E. B. Palmer, Room 9, Congregational House, Boston.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF.—In order to afford a little timely aid to aged and disabled home and foreign missionaries and ministers and their families, the committee of the National Council asks from each church one splendid offering for its permanent invested fund. It also invites generous individual gifts. For fuller information see Minutes of National Council, 1892, and Year-Book, 1893, page 62. Secretary, Rev N. H. Whittlesey, New Haven, Ct.; Treasurer, Rev. S. B. Forbes, Hartford, Ct. Form of a bequest: I bequeath to the "Trustees of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States" (a body corporate chartered under the laws of the State of Connecticut) [here insert the bequest], to be used for the purpose of Ministerial Relief, as provided in the resolution of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States at its session held in Chicago in October, 1886.

THE CONGREGATIONAL BOARD OF PASTORAL SUPPLY, established by the Massachusetts General Association, offers its services to churches desiring pastors or pulpit supplies. Careful attention is given to applications from without the State. Room 22A, Congregational House, Boston. Rev. Charles B. Rice, Sec.

THE BOSTON SEAMAN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, organized 1827. Chapel and reading-room, 287 Hanover St., Boston. Open day and evening. Sailors and landsmen welcome Daily prayer meeting, 11 A. M., Bible study, 3 P. M. Sunday services, usual hours. Meetings every evening except Saturday. Branch mission, Vineyard Haven. Is a Congregational society and appeals to all Congregational churches for support. Send donations of money to B. S. Snow, Corresponding Secretary, Room 22, Congregational House, Boston. Send clothing, comfort bags, reading, etc., to Capt. S. S. Nickerson, chaplain, 287 Hanover St. Bequests should read: "I give and bequeath to the Boston Seaman's Friend Society the sum of $——, to be applied to the charitable uses and purposes of said society." Rev. Alexander McKenzie, D. D., President; George Gould, Treasurer.

PASSING COMMENT ON THIS WEEK'S NEWS

Members of churches do well to provide for their pastor's expenses or for those of delegates, when necessary, that the large annual meetings of our benevolent societies or of our denominational bodies may be of benefit to the churches through the reports of their representatives on their return home. A delegate who merely attends an important meeting without yielding the impressions and spirit of the occasion to his brethren on his return has done but a part of his duty.

In this age, when individuality is emphasized but limited means render it impossible to supply every man with a church whose creed exactly accords with his opinions, perhaps no Christian duty is second in importance to that of being "like-minded" in essentials and forbearing in non-essentials. Progress in this direction is reported from Minnesota.

An advantage must surely come from the co-operative committee meeting plan which is in operation in a Connecticut church. The idea of simultaneous committee meetings at a given place could beneficially be introduced into the C. E. Society, we think, especially when chairmen are somewhat lax in attending to their important duties.

It is inspiring to record the instances of particularly good pastoral work as they crowd in upon us from all over the country. But it is equally encouraging now and then to find appreciative notice taken of the results of work by other leaders in church work. A glance at an Ohio item is a sample.

It is encouraging to hear from the vicinity of Cincinnati that our opportunities are greater now than they have ever been and perhaps larger than they ever will be again, but without men and money, which are now lacking, the harvests stand unreaped.

The cry of an "overcrowded ministry" would at times hardly seem to have any foundation in the face of the fact that a certain pastor of our denomination, after waiting many months for a pastorate, recently received five calls in a week.

Our sympathy is extended to that Nebraska church whose property has been wasted by fire and whirlwind. We trust that as a compensation the Lord has clearly manifested himself in the "still small voice."

It is interesting to note that the State Congregational body of Connecticut, which recently met, is the oldest Protestant religious organization in continuous existence in the United States.

The proportion of English services to German—three to one—in that German church in Iowa is a straw which indicates how rapidly the foreign element is becoming Americanized.

When the proposed enlargement of a New Jersey church edifice is accomplished the auditorium will be one of the largest of our denomination in the country.

Perhaps the Boston ministers will arrange such a delightful trip as the Detroit brethren enjoyed recently, when the "omnibus boats" are running on the Charles.

Individual communion cups are now used in more than sixty of our churches. The latest to report is in a suburb of Boston.

A church in Missouri rescued from threatened dissolution is a happy result of consecrated pastoral effort.

THE CONNECTICUT ASSOCIATION

The 188th annual meeting of this association was held in the United Church, New Haven, June 15, 16. In the absence of Dr. T. T. Munger, who was detained at home by severe illness in his family, Dr. Newman Smyth made the address of welcome Tuesday morning, referring to it as the oldest and most venerable religious organization in the State and at the same time the youngest, in spirit, having found the secret of perpetual youth. Rev. J. G. Davenport was unanimously elected moderator and Rev. G. H. Cummings scribe, with Rev. Messrs. W. J. Mutch and B. M. White assistants.

The address of the retiring moderator, Rev. R. T. Hall, on The Characteristic of a Sufficient Ministry, closed the morning session. If there is any especial characteristic in our ministry, he said, it is our efficiency to preach. We are not sacramentarians nor priests, therefore our efficiency must of necessity be preaching. Even our parochial work must be subsidiary to preaching.

The afternoon session had a report on ministerial supply. The chairman recommended a ministerial bureau, and cited the Massachusetts Board of Pastoral Supply and its success. A committee was appointed to consider whether Connecticut should contribute to the support of Dr. C. B. Rice's board and share in the benefits. The report on this much mooted question of ministerial supply opened up the usual spirited discussions, introducing a great variety of opinions.

A motion, finally carried, provided for a special committee to see what can be done about arranging pastorates and to report at the next meeting. Rev. D. E. Jones reported on the fund for ministers, urging larger contributions. During the past year only 111 churches contributed to the fund, and it has been impossible to assist all who have applied for help.

The papers of the afternoon were then taken up, The Direct Cultivation of Spirituality by the Pastor in Himself and in His People being discussed by three speakers: Rev. F. W. Greene spoke on The Need, Rev F. H. Means on The Methods, and Rev. H. B. Roberts on The Results. A social hour with refreshments preceded the evening session.

The evening congregation but partially filled the house and listened to an interesting and original discussion of Worship in Congregational Churches by Rev. Herbert Macy and Rev. C. M. Lamson, whose paper in his absence was read by Rev. J. W. Cooper. Certain forms of worship were criticised, while the general adoption of others was approved. A carefully prepared paper presented by the new moderator, Rev. Joseph Anderson, on The Effect of the Work of Drummond on the Religious Thought of the Day closed the evening session.

The closing session Wednesday morning had the following excellent program: The Bible as Literature, Prof. L. B. Paton; In What Sense Is the Bible Inspired? (a) Suggestions from the Teachings of St. Paul, by Prof. F. C. Porter; and (b) Some Simple Psychological Tests, by Rev. G. H. Beard. The next meeting will be held with the Center Church, Hartford, June 21, 22, 1898. E. D. C.

FROM CINCINNATI AND VICINITY

Prof. Graham Taylor of Chicago Seminary has recently given seven important addresses here. The last was at a great mass meeting in the interest of interdenominational Christian city missionary work. The audience listened with great eagerness for fully an hour, and then spent a second hour asking questions. Illustrating the need of new social conditions, Professor Taylor said: "No boy who calls the wretched tenement house 'home' and a drunken, cruel man 'father' is prepared to hear about the 'home' above or the first sentence of our Lord's Prayer."

At the annual meeting of the Associated Charities of Cincinnati Dr. Washington Gladden gave a thoughtful address, urging that a large share of our charitable work has been unwisely taken out of the hands of the churches. The so-called Buffalo plan of dividing the city into sections and assigning each district to a church for its special counsel and sympathetic helpfulness was commended.

The old, historic Vine Street Church is the last of our sisterhood left in the heart of the city. Rev. H. S. Bigelow, its pastor, has recently effected an organization for much needed municipal reform. The church is hopeful in spite of grave problems arising from its constituency. In the northwest part of the city Rev. D. I. Jones, of Riverside Church, has laid the foundation for a new Congregational organization. It now has a good Sunday school and a growing congregation. Our Welsh church, Rev. W. O. Jones, pastor, has a parish covering the whole city and many of the suburbs, reaching even into the State of Kentucky. The ministers' Monday meetings are to be discontinued for the summer. Cincinnati is putting forth a strong effort to secure the International C. E. Convention of 1899, and over 100 delegates will go from here to San Francisco.

The Newport church, the only Congregational church among a population of 60,000, is happy in securing as a temporary supply Rev. Dr. Simpson. The combined population of Newport, Covington and Cincinnati is scarcely less than a half-million, and yet not one dollar of home missionary money is spent in this vast field by our people. It is not because there is no need or opportunity. We organized the only church recently in a population of 2,500 people, and had a Sunday school of 180 members, but had to abandon the field for want of the right man and the money. Among the smaller organizations that, if sustained now, would grow into strong, hopeful fields may be mentioned Price Hill.

The church and mission school at Lexington, Ky., are doing important and successful work. The meeting house stands on the spot once occupied by a "slave pen," and one of the present members of the church was, when a girl of sixteen, sold from a block where the steps of the house now stand. Her sister, sold at the same time, she has never seen since. One of the suggestive relics is the large, old iron key to the "slave pen," which hangs on the wall of the meeting house under a picture of Christ. How fitting that this neat, electric lighted, Christian chapel should take the place of the dark and dismal "pen," and that the voices of cursing and crying should be supplanted by the voices of earnest prayer and joyous praise! A.

CANADIAN CONGREGATIONALISTS AT KINGSTON

The Entertaining Churches

The First Church, Kingston, was the place of meeting, but all three churches of the city united in entertaining the Union of Ontario and Quebec at its annual gathering, June 9–16. Rev. A. W. Richardson cordially welcomed the union "to one of the freest spots in the world," and the truth of his statement was abundantly manifest in the variety of discussions which took place. A delightful excursion was given among the Thousand Islands, and in many ways warm memories of kind hospitality will be cherished.

The Annual Utterances

The chairman's address, A Word of Cheer, by Rev. J. I. Hindley, was read by his son, Rev. W. J. Hindley. The title was significant on account of the writer's affliction with a fatal disease. In theology the address was conservative and in matters of denominational outlook grandly optimistic. The annual sermon by Rev. William McIntosh also showed conservative leanings, but over against these utterances might be placed the address of Rev. John Scholfield on Newer Religious Thinking and Its Influence on Individual and Church Life, which was fairly representative of the thought of a growing number in the union.

The Missionary Societies

The meetings of this society were full of encouragement. The secretary, Rev. A. F. McGregor, reported good work among the churches, as did the statistical secretary of the union, Rev. D. S. Hamilton, at a later meeting. The treasurer, Mr. C. R. Black, though regretting a lack of funds for opening new fields, was able to report a surplus in the treasury. Interesting addresses were heard from representatives of "the field," while those of the visitors, Rev. Messrs. W. G. Puddefoot, eastern field secretary of the United States, and A. K. Wray, missionary superintendent of Missouri, will not soon be forgotten.

Equally encouraging, too, were the meetings of the Foreign Society. The treasurer, Rev. W. T. Gunn, pointed out an increase in the contributions and a substantial balance on hand. Rev. E. M. Hill detailed the good work of the missionaries in Africa, and announced the appointment of two more, Dr. and Mrs. R. O. Ross, who are expected to leave for that field next spring. The principal speaker at the public meeting was Rev. C. H. Daniels, D. D., of the American Board, who delivered a splendid address on some of the factors of successful foreign mission work.

Education and Citizenship

One of the most enthusiastic meetings was that of Montreal College, the principal reason being the prospect of doubling the endowment fund and of making important additions to the teaching staff. The presence of Rev. J. H. George of St. Louis, Mo., who has been asked to take the principalship, contributed greatly to the interest of the occasion. With the college on a solid financial basis, an important step will be taken in the progress of Canadian Congregationalism.

The union was not unmindful of the claims of citizenship. Reports were heard from standing committees on prison reform, temperance and other questions of public interest. At the public meeting Rev. Messrs. John Morton and J. W. Pedley gave able addresses on The Need of Christian Citizenship. Rev. W. F. Clarke, an alderman, added a word of testimony from practical experience before beginning his address the following evening on Nonconformity in the Reign of Queen Victoria.

The Woman's Session

In response to a memorial from the Quebec Association a session was placed in the hands of representatives of the Woman's Board of Missions, Mrs. Macallum, president. An interesting account of successful annual meetings just held at Lanark was given, and the topics discussed were Work Among Children, Church Work and Temperance, The Swedish Church in Alberta, Systematic Giving, The New Dorcas Work, Training School Work and The Country Church. The women placed on record an interesting session.

Deepening of Spiritual Life

In response to a second memorial from the Quebec Association and other requests, a session was set apart for a conference on the deepening of spiritual life. Addresses were given by Rev. Messrs. B. W. Day, A. W. Main, E. C. Evans, D. D., and T. B. Hyde. Words of mutual testimony followed, and the morning will be remembered as one of the uplifting meetings of the series.

Here and There

A concluding paragraph will gather a few more interesting features. A case of discipline resulted in the suspension for one year or longer, as the next meeting may decide, of Rev. J. C. Madill of Toronto, and the admonition of his brother, Rev. W. H. Madill of Sarnia. The amalgamation of the different societies referred to a year ago gave place to a committee for closer co-operation. On Sunday afternoon a rally of the Sunday schools was held, when bright, attractive addresses were given, and in the evening a catholic sermon was preached by Rev. E. C. Evans, D. D. The essays by Rev. J. R. Black on Child Saving, Mr. J. C. Copp on Christ in Business, and Rev. E. M. Hill on The Institutional Church were all of a high order. The greetings of the Michigan Congregational Association, by Rev. John Allworth, were cordially given and warmly received. The study of Congregationalism in the societies was the chief thought of the Christian Endeavor conference, presided over by Rev. A. F. McGregor. And by no means least was the admirable conduct of the meetings by Rev. Professor Warriner, who was appointed to preside in the absence of the chairman.

J. P. G.

A QUARTER-CENTURY IN MEDFORD

The church in West Medford, Mass., celebrated its 25th anniversary June 13, 14. The exercises included a Sunday morning sermon by the pastor, Rev. J. V. Clancy, on The Power of the Church in the Community, followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, at which individual communion cups, the gift of a member, were used for the first time. At the evening service there were addresses by Mr. H. N. Ackerman, a charter member, on The Sunday School and C. E. Society, and Mr. D. H. Brown, the first clerk, on The Early History of the Church and Parish. Monday a social hour was held at 5 P. M., followed by a banquet and brief addresses. An evening service occurred, at which addresses were made by former pastors, Rev. Messrs. M. M. Cutter, E. C. Hood and H. W. Stebbins. The church is in a prosperous condition, and enters upon its second quarter-century with good prospect of success. The membership of church and congregation is steadily increasing. This part of the city has a rapid growth, and 17 new families have been added to the congregation in a year. The present church building will soon be too small to accommodate the people. Already a move for a new building is on foot. One of the senior members of the church has presented to the society a valuable corner lot, with the promise of an additional $4,000 when the building is started, which will be as soon as the business outlook is a little more encouraging.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS

ME.—Kennebec Conference was held at Litchfield. Papers were read on Noticeable Characteristics of Dr. J. T. Hawes, a former pastor, A Sketch of His Life and Work, by his son, Rev. Edward Hawes, D. D. A memorial service was also held. Other subjects were: The Religious Motive in American Discovery, The Power of the Gospel in Song, Claims of the Ministry on Young Men, The Kindergarten in Foreign Missions, How to Make Christ Real to the Mind of a Child, Living Messages from Living Messengers, Soul Saving. The sermon was by Rev. J. S. Williamson.

Lincoln Conference held its meeting with the First Church, Thomaston. Topics were: Better Bible Study, The Larger Christian Life, What Truths Need Emphasis in the Preaching of Today, The Opportunity of the Village Church, How Can the Church Fulfill Its Obligations to the Children? How Can the Men Be Reached?

Somerset Conference met at Madison. The topics were: Utilizing the Local Power of the Church, The Most Successful Legitimate Methods of Church Work, Worldly Wisdom in the Lord's Work, The Place of the Pastor's Wife, How to Have a Live Church, What Are the Advantages and the Disadvantages of Employing Evangelists?

York County Conference was entertained at Cornish. The sermon was preached by Rev. H. A. Merrill. The subjects were: Modern Congregationalism in the Modern World, Men and Books That Have Interested Me, and Maine Congregationalism. Rev. D. P. Hatch made a stirring appeal for Maine missions.

N. H.—Merrimack County Conference held its session at Laconia, June 2, 3 The topics were: How to Utilize the Social Power of the Church, Proportionate Giving, The Danger Point in Morals; and addresses on The Pre-eminence of the Bible, What Can Be Done to Promote a Revival of Religion in Our Churches, and What Shall We Preach? were practical. Reports revealed earnest work. At the evening session Rev. Dr. F. D. Ayer preached a helpful sermon.

Rockingham County Conference met, June 2, 3, at Epping, with a good attendance. Steady progress was reported. An address on Motive in Moral Reform emphasized the importance and methods of temperance work. A vigorous discussion of the Sabbath question was an interesting feature. During the session refreshments were served by the women of the local church. The session closed with an inspiring sermon by Rev. W. L. Anderson.

Hillsborough County Conference was held in Milford with a large attendance. Discussions took a practical turn and the importance of real Christianity finding expression in the business and social relationships of life was strongly emphasized. Other topics were: The Church at Work, Family Worship and The Country Church. The churches show sure progress. The sermon was preached by Rev. C. A. Bidwell.

Strafford County Conference convened, June 2, 3, at Barrington. The sermon was given by Dr. G. E. Hall on The Pauline Conception of Christian Fellowship. Discussions followed on Helps and Hindrances in City or Town and Country Parishes, The Church and Temperance, Personal Habits, Conversion, What the Church Can Do, What the Evangelist Can Do, How Can the Church Reach Our Young People Through the C. E. Society? Interesting reports from mission fields were given. Rev. G. M. Hamilton preached the communion sermon.

Coos and Essex Conference was held, June 2, 3, at Bethlehem, and though slimly attended was excellent. The topics were: The Leaven of the Country Church, under the aspects: A Heroic Country Pastor and A Wide-awake Country Church, The Underlying Spirit of Amusements, Our Young People in Christian Endeavor, Habits of Well-doing and What the People Expect from the Minister. Reports from the churches showed revival interest in some cases and large accessions. The sermon was by Rev. P. F. Marston and the communion sermon by Rev. J. H. Hoffman.

Sullivan County Conference met at Claremont, June 2, 3, and was well attended. Among the topics were: The Needs of Our Sunday Schools, Manhood and the Church, and Loyalty to the Local Church. Temperance and missions called forth emphatic utterances. The session was interesting and profitable.

N. Y.—The Black River and St. Lawrence Association met at Antwerp, June 15, 16. The attendance was unusually large and the meeting was one of the best for years. Means of Winning Souls to Christ was the opening theme, with three ten-minute papers under the heads, Home Life, Church Life and Social Life, concluding with a stirring impromptu address by Dr. W. A. Duncan. Other topics were: Machinery of the Congregation, Machinery of the Association Utilized, What Young People Can Do in Sunday School, Y. P. S C. E. and the King's Daughters' Circle, Obligations of Church Membership, Gospel for an Age of Doubt, A Surrendered Life. The sermon was by Rev. John Kincaid. An evening was occupied with addresses by Dr. Farnsworth of Turkey on Foreign Missions and Sec. Ethan Curtis on Home Missions. One session was in charge of the ladies of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, with papers on Our Opportunities, Why Every Church Should Be Interested in Home Missions, and an address by Dr. Mary A. Holbrook of China. A memorial service was held in honor of Rev. J. K. Griffith, with a paper by Rev. Duncan McGregor, pastor of the entertaining church, and in honor of Rev. I. F. Pettibone, D. D., deceased.

D. C.—Washington Conference, comprising the 15 churches of Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, held its meeting on the 15th at the University Park Temple. Organized Interdenominational Co-operation was ably discussed and papers relating to the work of Sunday school unions were read. A mass meeting is contemplated for the early autumn preparatory to a thorough canvass of the city by 1,500 persons of all denominations for the purpose of recruiting the Sunday schools. A review of the work of the C. E. Union was also given. The Anti-Saloon League was the subject of a stirring address under the subject: What Shall I Read? The topics were: Reading for Mental and Moral Improvement and Reading for Recreation and Relaxation. Other topics were: The Importance of the Christian Endeavor Society, What Part Should Small Churches Have in Missions? and What Is the True Principle of Christian Giving?

Wn.—Tacoma Association, composed of the churches and ministers of southwestern Washington, met in Orting, June 8–10. Rev. C. L. Diven, D. D., preached the sermon. Papers were read on Results of Spiritual Life—Historical Evidences, What a Spirit Filled Church Might Accomplish, Are There Too Many Ministers? Home Influences, the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and Education. Three of the benevolent societies were ably represented by their secretaries, and the work of the A. M. A. was presented by Dr. Myron Eells. A missionary hour was in charge of the women, led by Mrs. L. M. Bailey. The last evening was evangelistic, with a sermon by Rev. W. H. Scudder, followed by communion. The devotional hours interspersed, led by Rev. Messrs. Herbert Gregory, Rev. Samuel Greene and others, went far to make the meeting spiritually profitable. The fellowship was especially enjoyed by those who through the rest of the year are deprived of such privileges.

CLUBS

Mass.—The Worcester Club held its 21st annual meeting, June 14, in Mechanics Hall, with an attendance of 450. According to custom the club invited representatives of the other denominations as guests. Pastors from the leading Universalist, Unitarian and Episcopal churches, together with presidents of the Baptist and M. E. social unions and the mayor of the city, were present. Dr. G. F. Pentecost, formerly of London, was the principal speaker, on the theme, Three Essential Factors in Church Development. Spirituality, liberality and cordiality were the points he emphasized. Mayor Sprague responded to the toast, Worcester, a City of Churches. Other toasts were: The Church and the School, The Church and Business, The Church and Music, The Church and Art, The Church and Civic Institutions. The club has issued a neat manual, which contains a brief historical sketch and a list of topics discussed, besides lists of officers, etc., and of all the clubs in the country.

NEW ENGLAND

Boston

[For other Boston news see page 909.]

West Roxbury.—South Evangelical. Rev. R. M. Taft spent a recent Sunday with this church, and presented the cause of home missions. A liberal offering resulted, which was larger than last year. The average of collections for the year to home missions is over $300. This is the third year Mr. Taft has, by special appointment, represented the H. M. S. in this church. He is the head one of the society's missionaries in the State, and was formerly a business man, who felt called to fill the position of aiding in raising money to assist the home work. His efforts have been highly satisfactory, and are appreciated among the churches.

Park Street. Last Sunday Evangelist Moody preached as the regular supply in this pulpit and prefaced his discourse with appreciative comments on the location of Park Street meeting house as the most important corner in Boston and one of the most advantageous places in the city at which to do good. His sermon was on the subject Abraham. Monday noon he spoke in Tremont Temple, where he was given a hearty welcome.

South Boston.—Phillips. The evening services under the auspices of the Men's League, which have been so successful, are to be discontinued for the summer. On Children's Day the S. S. superintendent reported 1,032 members enrolled in the two Sunday schools. Rev. C. A. Dinsmore is pastor.

Massachusetts

Chelsea.—Central. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Jefferson, is preaching Sunday evenings a series of four sermons on: The Puritans in Their Relations with the Indians, the Quakers, the Witches and the Baptists and Episcopalians. Large congregations continue to fill the spacious auditorium and show appreciative interest in the timely topics of both the morning and the evening.

Somerville.—Prospect Hill. The pastor, Rev. E. S. Tead, and deacons hold communion services with the "shut-ins" Sunday afternoons. The Woman's Union has purchased a wheel chair which is loaned to invalids. The plan of having laymen conduct the Friday evening meeting results in increased interest and attendance.

Lowell.—Pawtucket observed the 100th anniversary of its organization last Sunday.——Eliot. Rev. J. M. Greene, D. D., has just completed the 27th year of pastoral service and the church is heartily of the opinion that he has never done more vigorous and effective work than at present.

Tyngsboro.—Last week Wednesday Miss Sarah A. Dixon, formerly of Barnstable, was ordained and installed as pastor. She is a graduate of the normal school at Bridgewater and of Boston University. The church, though formed 30 years ago as a union church, including members of various shades of belief, has long been a Congregational Church, and the council to act upon the ordination was chiefly made up of Congregationalists. Rev. J. M. Greene, D. D., of Lowell acted as moderator. Miss Dixon's examination was passed satisfactorily.

Worcester.—Immanuel. The people and friends surprised their pastor, Rev. G. S. Dodge, and his wife, June 15, by taking possession of their home and reminding them of their 25th wedding anniversary, substantiating their good wishes with gifts of a dinner set and purse of money.

Maine

Fairfield.—The elegant stone structure called the Moody Memorial Chapel was dedicated, June 16, with impressive ceremonies. Rev. O. W. Folsom preached the sermon. Miss Moody, who gave the fund for the building in honor of her brother, was present. The location of this chapel is fine, midway between the Good Will cottages for boys and girls and overlooking the Kennebec and The Pines beyond.

Hallowell.—South. The pastor, Rev. Edward Chase, read his resignation, to take effect when a council should convene. He has ministered here 14 years and was largely instrumental in canceling the debt on the new edifice. He has also spent much effort in practical benevolence among the poor of the city.

South Gardiner.—The year closed this time with a balance in the treasury. Since that period was the first year of the church's history in self-support great encouragement is felt. The pastor's salary was raised $100.

New Hampshire

Franklin celebrated its 75th anniversary, June 11, with interesting and appropriate services, making the occasion memorable. An important feature was the singing of the old-time tunes by old-time singers, adding much to the enjoyment. Three valuable papers were read by members of the church on The Sunday School, Woman's Work, and Music. Deacon D. S. Gilchrist followed in a brief speech pertinent to the occasion in behalf of the officers. As he concluded the pastor, Rev. J. H. Bliss, with words of hearty congratulation presented the modest, but faithful and efficient deacon of 25 years' standing, with a box containing the letters XXV made of silver dollars on a background of black velvet, and the names of nearly 100 members of the church who contributed to the testimonial. A reception by the pastor and church officers and their wives followed the afternoon services. An ample parish supper was also served. In the evening the local pastors extended salutations, followed by a strong and stirring address by Rev. W. A. Hadley, a former pastor, on Civic Righteousness. The following Sunday the pastor preached a sermon reviewing the history of the church from its organization, and showing the magnitude of its influence in shaping the history of the town. Among the worshipers of the past were included such distinguished men as Daniel and Ezekiel Webster, Judge Nesmith and Senator Pike.

Exeter.—First. The death, on June 11, of Mrs. Sarah C. Perry, wife of John T. Perry, removes a woman of rare ability who combined in an unusual degree intellectual and practical power and was prominent in church as well as social life. She wielded a facile pen, contributing to this and other papers, especially for many years to the Cincinnati Gazette, of which her husband was an editor. Her sketch of Mr. McFarland, the originator of the New Hampshire Female Cent Society, read at the home missionary meeting at Saratoga indicated her deep interest in missionary matters. She was for several years secretary of the N. H. Branch of the Woman's Board of Missions and was active in all the missionary work of her church—home, foreign and local. When at her funeral Rev. W. L. Anderson read from the last chapters of Proverbs and of Revelation, it was felt that the practical and the spiritual sides of her character had received only fitting recognition.

Dover.—First Parish. Children's Day was observed last week, Sunday, according to the custom of several years, the children entering the church in processional. A variety was given to the service in singing by the children of the Dover Children's Home. The pastor, Dr. G. E. Hall, gave an address to the children, his subject being taken from one of the hymns they had sung, "I will follow Jesus all the way."

Concord.—South. On Children's Sunday $62 were brought in by the children as a result of their earnings on a 10 cent capital given them at Easter, to be used towards founding a children's free bed at the hospital. The collection for the Sunday School Society amounted to $40.

Colebrook is building an addition at the rear of its house for the better accommodation of the choir.——Kingston has furnished its pews with new cushions.——Rev. E. B. Burrows of the Record will supply a year at Penacook.

Vermont

Greensboro.—The renovation of the meeting house has been completed and services have been resumed in connection with the observance of Children's Day. A steel ceiling in the audience-room, fresh paint and fresco, a new carpet and cathedral glass windows, all at an expense of about $800, make an attractive interior.

Craftsbury.—The work of remodeling the house of worship has begun and will cost about $2,000. The centennial of the church occurs this year and the rededication will probably take place in connection with the anniversary.

Sherburne.—Revival services held of late have resulted in some hopeful conversions. Mr. Whitney, who has helped the church before, assisted this time. Mr. William Hazen is supplying the pulpit for the present.

The ordination of a young man from Union Seminary at Albany, the coming of a graduate of Bangor to Lowell and a graduate of Hartford to Westmore make the churches of Orleans County fully equipped.

Children's Day was quite generally observed in the churches.——At Essex Junction the meeting house grounds are being improved.——The Colchester meeting house has been improved by a new pulpit.

Rhode Island

Providence.—Swedish. Rev. E. O. Hedberg conducts service at Auburn and Newport, as well as here. The building has recently been painted, and an organ, valued at $350, has been purchased, over one-half that sum being raised at a single subscription.——Free Evangelical. A "society of the open door" meets regularly on a week night for the study and discussion of social problems. The home department of the Sunday school is a strong feature with this church.

East Providence.—Riverside. The pastor, Rev. Edwin Hadlock, has recently completed a three years' post-graduate course and received the degree of Ph. D. Children's Day was one long to be remembered in this church. The pastor preached to the children in the morning. The largest Sunday school in the history of the church followed this service. Nineteen more than at any previous time were present, and 57 more than last Children's Day. An excellent S. S. concert was held in the evening.

PAWTUCKET.—Park Place. Young people aid by taking part in meetings, visiting the poor and hunting up absentees. Fifty infants have been baptized within a year.——Swedish. The young people have been able to decrease the debt. Rev. B. J. Thoren, the pastor, has a mission at Rumford, preaching every Sunday afternoon and once during the week.

CROMPTON.—Swedish Free. Twenty three new members during the year have been added. Rev. N. O. Olson has been granted a three months' leave of absence to visit Europe. Brother A. J. Monson from Chicago Seminary will supply during that time.

BARRINGTON.—Cottage meetings have been profitable for this church. The Ladies' Aid Society has put new chairs in the vestry and electric lighting in the meeting house. Rev. Norman Plass finds the stereopticon a great aid to his work.

NEWPORT.—United. Evening congregations have crowded the chapel in which the Sunday night services are usually held. About 40 women meet fortnightly at the manse to study New Testament introduction.

Connecticut

HARTFORD.—Rev. Dr. G. L. Walker and his son, with their families, left for their summer home at Brattleboro, Vt., last week. Dr. Walker is much improved in health and was to make the trip in a special car in the chair in which he is daily taken about.——Fourth. The contributions for home expenses in the month of May were the largest in the history of the church, amounting to over $800.——Center has given $25 to the Swedish church at South Manchester.——Pearl Street. The only son of the pastor, Dr. W. D. Love, is convalescing after a severe illness with pneumonia.——By the will of the late Mrs. E. C. Bacon bequests are made to the C. H. M. S., the local branch of the Woman's Board and the A. M. A., besides other gifts.

BRIDGEPORT.—South. The society held its first quarterly meeting last week. Every member is on one of the committees, all of which convene at the same time for the transaction of such business as properly belongs to their respective departments, each of which files with the general secretary a report of the work since the last meeting. Business is followed with a social with refreshments, an entertainment, etc. The new plan works splendidly, the attendance being increased about 80 per cent.

FARMINGTON.—The King's Daughters have filled a missionary barrel. The parsonage has been painted. The S. S. collections during May, amounting to $60, will be sent to the famine sufferers in India. The pastor, Rev. G. L. Clark, spoke on a recent Sunday of the four aged members who have died since the May communion, including Mrs. Mercy Thompson, who had been a member for over 70 years, being the oldest member.

WILLIMANTIC.—Last Sunday was observed as Children's Sunday with exercises appropriate to the day. The 22 graduates of the primary department were presented with Bibles, and several infants were baptized. Each member of the department was presented with a potted plant, over 100 in all.——At the recent social by the Sunday school $50 were netted, although nothing was sold for more than five cents.

CHESTER.—The 25th anniversary of the marriage of Rev. and Mrs. Alexander Hall was appropriately celebrated June 5. Among the presents received was a box of $35 in silver, a check for $25 and various articles of silverware. The members of the church and congregation to the number of 100 called at the parsonage in the evening and presented Mr. and Mrs. Hall with $55 in silver and a gold eagle.

WATERBURY.—The French Congregational church, which was established several months ago, is slowly making progress and will doubtless be formally organized in the fall. It is weak financially, and is helped by the C. H. M. S. and the First and Second Churches. About 60 families are represented in its membership, and services are held each Sunday in the conference room of the Second Church.

MILTON.—The church building has been put in thorough order. Repairs have been made on the parsonage, which will be used for social gatherings and prayer meetings, and is a sort of parish house on a small scale. Rev. W. E. Page, who has just been ordained and will serve as acting pastor, is a graduate of Bates College and Yale Divinity School.

HUNTINGTON.—An unusual occurrence for a place of this size took place on the 6th inst., when the bell tolled twice within an hour for the death of two of its aged members, while the husband of a third lay dead. One was the oldest member of the church, while the other was one of its most active members until ill health interfered.

DANIELSON.—Rev. Joseph Danielson is spending the summer here with the mother of Mrs. Danielson, and occupied the pulpit a week ago Sunday, preaching on the promises of the Bible. Mr. Danielson is a native of this place, being a descendant of one after whom the place was named.

EAST HAMPTON.—The recent entertainment by the King's Daughters was a great success, the net proceeds amounting to about $35. The society is working hard to get money with which to build a chapel, and also to provide a suitable place for lectures and entertainments.

NEW BRITAIN.—Nearly all the churches in the city observed Rose Sunday the 13th.——First. Rev. C. H. Ricketts baptized seven children.——South. Special exercises appropriate to the day were held Sunday, including singing by a chorus of children.

PLYMOUTH.—The meeting house is receiving general much needed repairs, including the painting of the tower and front of the edifice. Rev. C. H. Smith is pastor.

MIDDLE STATES

New York

LOCKPORT.—East Avenue, Rev. W. J. Tate, pastor, recently observed its seventh anniversary by a roll-call and social. A large proportion of the resident members responded and the pastor gave a brief, appropriate talk on Seven the Perfect Number. The Easter offering of the church was about $300. During the winter an evening each week has been given to a training school for Christian workers. At each session there was a normal drill on Acts, followed by a "round table" on various departments of church work and a lecture on Biblical themes or some phase of Christian service. The Bible school is prospering. Last quarter over 40 names were on the honor roll for perfect attendance and three fourths of the school were present 12 Sundays. It is the exception for a teacher to be absent, and most of them remain to a short prayer service at the close of the school.

LYSANDER, formed 20 years ago by the union of the Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed churches of the place, celebrated its 20th anniversary, May 23–25, by a historical sermon and address on The Community, by the pastor, Rev. J. L. Keedy, a roll-call at which 104 members responded, and addresses by former pastors and by officers of the church. The church is in good condition.

New Jersey

ASBURY PARK.—A year has passed since the organization of the church, during which time it has increased thirty per cent., chiefly through admissions on confession of faith. From the first it has strongly desired to have its minister, Rev. H. T. Widdemer, installed by council. The council of recognition held last October was ready to proceed to installation, but at the request of one member recommended that, inasmuch as the minister chosen had not all the usual papers, the matter go over for the time and be referred to a larger council to be called later. This larger council met on June 8, and found it necessary to hold two protracted sessions. The case was peculiar. The candidate had been charged with evil years before, when he was an Episcopal clergyman, and had been brought to trial before a church court. This tribunal, after an inquiry running through two months, acquitted him completely, except as to a technical and unintentional violation of Episcopalian law. The bishop, however, though not a member of the court nor present at its sessions, took a course that discredited its findings with many persons and led the candidate to withdraw from the denomination. As a consequence two presbyteries, when he was afterward a minister in the Presbyterian body, came into conflict over him, one being his supporter and one his opponent, so that in the interests of peace for all concerned he withdrew from that denomination also. After much inquiry the council accepted the decision of the Episcopal court as to the earlier years of his ministry and a majority of its members became satisfied that the later matters which were held by some to be sufficient ground for refusing installation were really echoes of previous erroneous charges supported in some cases by acts of the candidate which might be open to criticism on the score of wisdom but not of morals. The council therefore approved the action of the church and voted to assist in the installation services. These occurred on the 17th and were largely attended. The feeling of outsiders in the city and the judgment of the council was influenced not a little by the fact that for over three years the candidate had proved himself in substantially the same congregation an acceptable and successful pastor.

MONTCLAIR.—First celebrated its 27th anniversary the first Sunday in June. The church, of which Rev. A. H. Bradford, D. D., is pastor, now numbers over 850 members. It gave last year for benevolences $17,000 and for home expenses $13,000. Over 50 were added to the membership during the year. The property is valued at about $200,000, and the audience-room, which now seats 1,200, is outgrown and it is expected that it will soon be enlarged to accommodate four or five hundred more. The growth of the church, however, has only kept pace with that of the neighborhood. The church supports a flourishing mission of which Rev. Louis F. Berry is pastor.

Pennsylvania

PHILADELPHIA.—There has been within the bounds of the Congregational Association of New Jersey a Northern New Jersey and a Washington Conference. June 15 a gathering of representatives of the churches in this city and of that in Vineland, N. J., and members of the Philadelphia Association of Ministers was held at Park Church in this city to consider the formation of a Philadelphia Conference of churches. All the churches were represented. A constitution was adopted and a conference was formed, and Rev. C. H. Richards, D. D., was elected moderator for the year. A public evening meeting followed, at which addresses were made by several members of the conference.

THE INTERIOR

Ohio

CLEVELAND.—Euclid Avenue. Children's Sunday was observed by special services of the Bible school. Eight infants were baptized and 13 boys and girls of the Sunday school seven years of age received copies of the Bible. Rev. P. W. Sinks, the acting pastor, gave in part a sermon on Jesus and the Children, a printed copy of which was distributed to the congregation at the close of morning service. The evening theme was The Church and the Children.

FREDERICKSBURG.—First held its annual meeting, June 9, with good attendance. An increase of 23 in the membership was recorded during the past year. Rev. L. J. Travis has just begun his pastorate. The Sunday school has almost doubled its enrollment since the present superintendent took charge. June 13 was observed as Children's Day with a good program and a well filled house.

SANDUSKY.—Rev. C. A. Vincent has an especially favorable opportunity to take a well-earned and much-needed vacation, and goes abroad, July 10, for two months with the party of Rev. Sydney Strong for England, Scotland and France with bicycle accompaniment.

Illinois

[For Chicago news see page 898.]

OLNEY.—Rev. S. J. Malone has just closed his second year of service with this church, which is united in its pastor. A Sunday school has been organized in an outlying district in which the pastor has been preaching regularly every two weeks.

WARRENSBURG is succeeding in a brave struggle to hold its own. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Preston, is generously giving his Sunday afternoons to a point in the country a few miles out.

Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS.—Plymouth will continue regular services through July, with supplies after the first Sunday. Rev. F. E. Dewhurst delivered the Commencement address before the graduating class of Vincennes University.——Mayflower. Rev. N. A. Hyde, D. D., and family, are at Ludlow, Vt., where they will spend the summer. Children's Day was observed June 13, with large attendance and enthusiasm.——People's. Rev. O. D. Fisher, the pastor, has been elected president of the city Sunday School Superintendents' Union. Special services were held in the evening of Children's Day and the doors of the adjoining room were thrown open to accommodate the large congregation.

COAL MINE.—This mission work, which had its foundations laid by Rev. James Hayes, has so developed that it has been divided into two fields. Rev. J. A. Griffin lives in the parsonage at Coal Bluff and divides his time with Perth. Rev. C. F. Hill lives at Caseyville and becomes the pastor of that place and Cardonia. The Caseyville camp now numbers 1,100 and with the opening of adjoining mines will soon have 3,000 population. Mrs. E. R. Cheney, the new field secretary of the W. H. M. U., visited these fields recently, and also the Terre Haute churches.

KOKOMO.—Rev. R. J. Smith is delivering a course of Sunday evening lectures on various topics, such as Theosophy and Spiritualism, and demonstrating the permanent value of Christianity as opposed to them. The congregations are large. The work of the church is gaining perceptibly and reaching all parts of the city.

RIVERSIDE.—This young enterprise is prospering and the members are full of zeal. A large tent has been secured, in which services are now held. A lot has been purchased worth $400 and foundations have been laid for a brick and stone edifice to cost $2,000. The Sunday school has an attendance of 100.

ELKHART, under its enthusiastic pastor, Rev. F. E. Knopf, was never stronger than it seems at present.

Michigan

DETROIT.—Old First observed Children's Day with the usual features. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, the pastor, delivered the address on the theme The Escorts of Jesus.——People's regrets much that Rev. Morgan Wood feels it his duty to accept the call of the Bond Street Church, Toronto, Can. He has spent six useful years in the city and he will be missed.——Boulevard held a Children's Day service in the afternoon and the commodious chapel was too small for those wishing to participate. Seventeen children were dedicated in baptism.——The Congregational pastors of the city and vicinity with their families enjoyed a delightful outing on Monday, June 14. The trip was up the Detroit River, through Lake St. Clair, past the Flats to Algonac and back. The outing was arranged to take the place of the regular monthly Ministers' Meeting.

WHITE CLOUD.—Rev. C. H. Daines closed his pastorate June 20, to take up work in his new field at Oberlin, O. He has done excellent work in this triple field, and leaves with the best wishes of many friends.

EASTMANVILLE.—Rev. C. G. Rose, the pastor, is greatly encouraged. Every communion welcomes several new members to fellowship. The church has repapered and otherwise decorated its auditorium.

OWOSSO.—Rev. W. S. Ament and family are visiting here. He is the senior missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. at Peking. He is in good spirits over the outlook for Christianity in Peking.

The Alpine and Walker church has been beautifying its house of worship.——Rev. J. R. Mason at Mattison is pushing the work zealously, and has helped to organize three Sunday schools in the vicinity of late.——Muskegon begins the work of renovation soon.

Wisconsin

MENASHA.—A recent memorial service was held, with addresses relating to the life and death of Mr. C. P. Northrop, for many years church clerk. In the evening a union mass meeting in behalf of starving India was addressed by Prof. A. H. Sage of the Oshkosh Normal School. Over $150 were raised at once, and more will follow. Rev. S. T. Kidder is pastor.

MILWAUKEE.—Plymouth. The Nazarene lectures, by Rev. J. B. Koehne, were given lately. Dr. D. N. Beach of Minneapolis supplies the pulpit July 18 and 25 and Aug. 1. The three following weeks the church will be closed. Deacon Isaac Titsworth, father of the pastor, Dr. Judson Titsworth, died at Dunellen, N. J., May 15, at the age of 93 years.

BLOOMINGTON held its semi-centennial June 12, 13. The church has had 14 pastors. The memorial services drew together a large number of old settlers, and the papers covering the phases of the 50 years past were full of interest. The present pastor is Rev. T. W. Schoenfeld.

NEW LONDON.—Rev. W. B. Millard is having large success in this field. The congregations crowd the present house so that a new one is to be built, as provided for by a legacy. The new parsonage is satisfactory.

WATERTOWN.—Evangelist Pratt will conduct a Bible training school in this place, and has already moved his family to the city. A large, three-story building has been leased for a term of years.

Rev. Joel Martin has closed a two weeks' series of meetings in Waupun with excellent results.——Springvale has collected a carload of corn, providing 450 bushels itself, for the India sufferers.

THE WEST

Missouri

CARTHAGE.—During the 16 mouths' pastorate of Rev. A. J. Van Wagner, audiences have increased fourfold and 43 members have been received. Previous to his coming the question of disbanding had been seriously considered, but now all fear of that is removed.

Iowa

WESLEY.—This town, with a population of about 800, has now its second Congregational church, the first being Scandinavian. The English church was organized, June 15, with nine members, several others expecting to unite. There is but one other English-speaking Protestant church in the community. At the recognition services Secretary Douglass preached the sermon and made the address to the people. The day following the people began to circulate a subscription for a building.

GRAND VIEW is in the German Association, but the pastor, Rev. C. W. Anthony, preaches every Sunday once in German and twice in English. The Sunday school is also conducted in English, a session being held in German Sunday afternoons. The young people of all the churches unite in sustaining a C. E. Society.

Minnesota

MINNEAPOLIS.—Plymouth enjoyed its annual outing, June 12, at Washburn Park. About 500 persons attended and all had a pleasant time.——Bethany. Rev. J. W. Heyward closed his work June 13. During his 15 months' pastorate church finances have been straightened out and attendance on all services has largely increased.

GRANADA.—A $600 parsonage has just been completed. The pastor preaches at an out-station. The church, organized only two years ago with less than a dozen members, has now a house of worship and a parsonage paid for except a small debt on the latter to the C. C. B. S. It is also supporting work in the country.

FAIRMONT.—The corner stone of the new $5,000 edifice has been laid. The work will be pushed, and it is expected to dedicate free of debt in September. Services with large congregations are now held in a hall.

BIG LAKE.—Improvements upon the church property, new hymn-books and progress in molding a membership composed of various denominations into unity are reported.

Nebraska

TRENTON.—The pastor, Rev. D. F. Bright, cares for seven out-stations, some of which, however, have service only once a fortnight. Each week he preaches six times, attends prayer meeting, C. E. meeting, teaches in Sunday school, drives 100 miles, and spends the remainder of the time in calling, study and rest.

MCCOOK.—The tower was demolished by lightning, June 10, but fortunately the main part of the edifice escaped unharmed. Only a few years ago this church was stripped of its building by cyclone.

PACIFIC COAST

Washington

SPRAGUE.—The membership has been greatly reduced by the removal of the railroad shops, but Rev. O. S. Haines finds that an encouraging field is still left.

Rev. H. H. Wikoff is making a tour of the State in the interests of the C. C. B. S.——Long Beach has a class of 17 members for Bible study, conducted by Rev. H. W. Mercer.——Lake Park is the residence of Rev. Herbert Gregory, whose parish includes two churches and three preaching stations.——The people of Ritzville show appreciation of their pastor, Rev. G. H. Newman, by increased attendance at regular services.

EDUCATION

—— The graduating exercises of Dow Academy, Franconia, N. H., occurred June 17, the participants acquitting themselves with honor to the institution. The principal is Prof. F. W. Ernst, and Rev. G. W. Brooks of Boston is president of the board of trustees.

—— Fairmount College at Wichita, Kan., is one of the newer institutions of the Southwest, and will graduate its first class two years hence. The institution is assured of local support, and has done good work already, both in its preparatory department and in the work of its two classes thus far.

—— A pleasing exercise at the Commencement of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, was the address of Dr. Edward Everett Hale on a Liberal Education. He spoke to a cordial audience, and placed before his hearers the highest ideals. The graduates numbered 160, of whom forty were from the law department.

—— The thirty-eighth Commencement of Olivet College, June 17, added twenty-three to its roll of graduates. Seven of the thirteen young men expect to enter the ministry. President Sperry's baccalaureate sermon rehearsed some of the spiritual gifts which he hoped the graduates bore with them. The missionary address was on the Eastern Question by Rev. D. A. Richardson of Grand Haven. The alumni address by Rev. C. F. Swift dealt with the need of Christian attention to the sociological problems of the day. The season was crowned on the last evening by a fine rendering of the oratorio of The Messiah by a chorus of 150 voices.

—— The second session of the Atlanta University conference on problems of Negro city life was held at Atlanta, Ga. The conference this year was of special interest, as following on an extensive investigation into the material conditions of Negro life in the large cities, conducted in co-operation with the United States department of labor, and published in its tenth bulletin. The report shows that the mortality of Negroes in cities is greater than that of whites, owing in part to the necessity of family support by the work of women and the consequent neglect of home and family life.

—— The baccalaureate at Wells College, Aurora, Ill., was preached, June 6, by Rev. G. P. Nichols, D. D., of Binghamton on Self-Sacrifice, the Conservation of Life. Class Day was rendered especially interesting by the presence of Mrs. ex-President Cleveland, who came to present, in behalf of the Class of '85, of which she is a member, a beautiful memorial window. By her invitation Mr. Richard Watson Gilder made the presentation address, at the close of which Mrs. Cleveland unveiled the window with a few appropriate words. The central figure of the window represents Aurora. Bishop Vincent delivered the Commencement address on The Parlor, What It Stands for in the Household. The alumnæ dinner this year was marked by a new feature of after-dinner speeches.

—— "Life is a divine opportunity," was the keynote of Dr. George A. Gordon's baccalaureate sermon at Harvard last Sunday. The weighing of its gifts and choice of what is highest is the young man's chance in the world. "The passion for righteousness" in every walk of life "is the crusade we need today." At Williams President Carter used Christ's quotation from Deuteronomy, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," to warn the graduates against the most subtle temptation of the time, that of overestimating the temporal in comparison with the spiritual needs of man. President Hyde at Bowdoin spoke of freedom which comes by truth or right relation to environment. At Smith President Seelye emphasized the cloud of witnesses, real spiritual presences, vitally interested in our success or failure, whose presence is a motive for right living. At Mt. Holyoke Dr. Arthur Little presented the great alternative of our Lord's question, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" emphasizing the peril of an overestimate of worldly advantages. "Earthly possessions and acquisitions, however choice, have value only as they are transmuted into the immortal traits of character."

Royal makes the food pure,
wholesome and delicious.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

INDEX TO VOLUME LXXXII

Nos. 1 to 25 Inclusive

Biographical

Adams, 395
Baird, 21; Beecher, 326; Blake, 589; Bliss, 504; Bruce, 177.
Cheever, 246
Dunning, 469
Emerson, 589
Farnbam, 429; Ford, 106.
Goodenow, 586
Harris, 697; Harwood, 504; Haven, 21.
Kincaid, 249
Pettibone, 504
Tucker, 908
Worcester, 106

Letters

Australia, 11, 871
Boston, 9
Canada, 25, 206, 428, 659
Central New York, 804
Cincinnati and Vicinity, 910
Hawkeye State, 143, 586
India, 82, 603
Japan, 785
London, 191, 409, 638, 710
Northwest, 298
St. Louis, 652
Scotland, 388, 857

Meetings

Boston Superintendents' Union, 835
Boston Congregational Club, 616; May Festival of the, 763; The Young Men's, 462, 651.
British Free Church Parliament, 460; Congregationalists, Annual Assembly of, 789.
Canadian Congregationalists at Kingston, 911
College Y. M. C. A. Conference, 582
Conference, Open Air Workers in, 746
Congregational Club, 423
Congress of Mothers, 266
Economists at Baltimore, 24
Home Missionary Society, 836; Anniversary, 817.
International Missionary Union, 918
Missionary Rally, Young Ladies, 286
STATE MEETINGS.—Louisiana, 230; Mississippi, 449; Georgia, 582; Alabama, 583; NewJersey, 618; Florida, 619; Arizona, 652; Missouri, 690; New Mexico, 690; Indiana, 724; Kansas, 725; Massachusetts, 764; New York, 766; Ohio, 767; Illinois, 767; Michigan, 773; Iowa, 800; South Dakota, 805; Vermont, 874; Rhode Island, 875; Connecticut, 910.
Tuskegee, Conferences at, 362
W. B. M. at Salem, 799
W. H. M. A. at Lowell, 662
Working Women's Clubs at Philadelphia, 646

Poems

At the Day's Beginning, 554
Baby Olive, 237
Be Swift to Love, 231
Birthday of My Boy, 18
Children's Day, 813
Clover, 865
Cradle Tomb in Westminster Abbey, 195
Cup of Tears, 415
Dog's Tooth Violet, 754
Easter Lines, 532
End of the Game, 715
Evening Communion, 146
Feet of Clay, 863
Fellowship in Service, 340
For Vanity's Sake, 573
Foreign Lands, 793
Greece, 365
Hermit, 899
Hymn, 609
If Youth Could Know, 885
In the Furrow, 381
In May, 753
In Transitu, 451
June Thanksgiving, 791
Just for a Little While, 87
Love, 15
Maryland Yellow Throat, 643
Memorial Day, 737
Mother's Hymns, 380
Nature's Secret, 571
New Woman, The, 125
Out of the Mouth of Infants, 827
Poet and His Song, 53
Quest of the Arbutus, 487
Realization, 826
Reassurance, 437
Regret, 51
Road I Would Follow, 607
Sacramental Hymn, 37
"Sing Ye Lowly, Sing Ye Great," 530
Sower, The, 123
Spray of Apple Bloom, 678
Tempered, 326
Tomorrow and Today, 829
Torch Bearer, 379
True Home, A, 454; Light, The, 665.
Victoria, 849
Washington's Birthday, 232
When, 303
World, 160
Worth While, 268

General Index

Abbott's, Dr., Sermons on the Bible, 663
"Above Forty Years Old," 587
Acceptance of Common Opportunities the Judgment Test, 405
Across the Line, 206; the Border, 752.
Actor in a Congregational Pulpit, 348
Addams, Miss Jane, in Boston, 238
Afield, Ashore, Afloat, Aflying with Young Naturalists, 52
After Many Days, 839
Agrarian Problems, Our, 591
Alternative, What Is the, 821
Amaryllis, 716
America, Sixteen Months in, 712
American Antiquarians, The, 873
Amherst "Union Lecture Course," 25
Andover, Anniversary Week at, 873
Anniversaries of the Heart, 715
Anniversary Week, 801
Answers to Prayer, 370
Appeal to the Highest Court, 895
Apples of Gold, 87
Appreciation of the Fine Arts, 423
April Hopes, 562
Arbitration, Treaty of, 78; Treaty, Failure of the, 670.
"Are You Prepared to Die?" 300
Armenian Orphans' Fund, Tidings from Our, 107; Orphans, Probable Fruits of Relief for, 177; Refugees, The Placing of the, 277; Country, Joy in the, 323.
Art for the People, 299; and Religion, 415.
Arts and Crafts Exhibit, 528
Authorized and Revised Versions Compared, 31

Bacchante Will Not Stay, 801
Bangor Seminary Anniversary, 773
Baptists and Close Communion, 883
Be Somebody in Particular, 389
Behrends's, Dr., Question, Some Responses to, 411; Other Responses to, 484.
Benevolent Societies and the Hard Times, 140
Bequest, A Large, 42
Berkeley Temple, Gathering the Fruits at, 496; Temple School for Christian Workers, 801.
Berkeley's Threescore and Ten, 528
Berkshires, Beacon Light in the, 463
Bible, The Old-Fashioned, 305; and Simon the Zealot, 446; Don't Worry About the, 548.
Biblical Criticism, the Battle Ground of, 470
Bicycle Philosophy, 754
Bishop on Unity, A, 31
Bitlis, Happy Hearts in, 589
Blot on the Escutcheon, 405
Boers, The English and the, 370
Booth in Boston, Ballington, 462
Boston, First Service in, 26; Pulpits, Last Sunday in, 107; City Missions, 133; Matters of Note Here in, 159; Days and Ways," "Old, 617; Greeks, About, 651; Women Plead for Greeks, 690; Public Library, Gifts to the, 723; Schools, Condition of, 801.
Bradford Manuscript, The, 442; Manuscript Ceremonies, 802.
Bradford's Volume, Governor, 782
Brewer's Justice, Suggestions to Young Ministers, 554
British Free Church Parliament, 460; Congregationalists, Annual Assembly of, 789.
Bryce's Testimony to Our Missionaries, 71
Bypaths of European Travel, 605, 639, 675

Camera Hints for Young People, 679
Captain's Conversion, 373
Career, An Uncommon, 14
Causes of Suicide, 591
Cecilia Concert for Wage-Earners, 390
Chandler, Mr. E. H., Goes to Wellesley, 542
Characteristics, The Game of, 644
Christ in the Risen Life, 514; The Good News of the Risen, 515; The Indwelling, 607.
Christian Life? What Shall I Do With My, 296; Becoming a, 640; Endeavor Gospel Chorus, 801.
Christianity and Evolution, 551
Christ's Unique Position in the World, 151
Church Union in Boston, 114; A New Movement in the, 186.
Churches Begin, Let the, 6
Clark's Return, Father Endeavor, 873
Cleveland's Bettering Municipal Life, 461
College Life, An Unnoticed Phase of, 389; Girls, Our, 863.
Colleges for the People, 150
Colonial Days, Other Reminders of, 617
Colorado's Three Days' Jubilee, 311
Companions of the Sorrowful Way, 604, 750, 896.
Concerning Least Things, 6
Confidence and Candor in Home Relationships, 268
Congregational House, The New, 641; Churchmanship, 816.
Congregationalism in Greater Boston, 132; in Scotland, The New, 301; A New Departure in, 894.
Congregationalist's Pilgrims Have a Happy Reunion, 835
Consulting the Oracles, 295
Contentment, The Cultivation of, 563
Continual Easters, 533
Conveniences Multiplied, 827
Conversion? What Is, 634
Co-operation, In the Interests of, 463
Covenant, Our Own Church, 79; Our Church, 591.
Critics of a Critic, 854
Criticism and More Money": Not So, "Less, 155
Cultivating a Husband, 574

Davenport Association, Resolutions Passed by, 810
Day of Prayer for Colleges, 178
Deacon Dudley's Sundays in Boston, 48, 86, 154, 192, 335, 375, 448, 567, 677.
Democracy, President Tucker on, 762
Denominational Growth, A Center of, 803
Dies, How One, 126
Diet in Old Age, 415
Discrimination, A Nice, 755
Dolly's Millions, 263
Dow, Neal, as a Reader of the Bible, 507
Dr. Hü King Eng, 644
Drummond, Prof. Henry, 374; Funeral of, 445; Pregnant Sentences from, 507; Amongst His Students, 751.
Drury, At, 905

Eastertide, 530
Eddy or Flood, 523
Endeavorers to Anticipate, Something for, 541
English Visitor, Another, 390
Enterprise, A Lack of, 272
Equal to the Emergency, 488
Europe, On the Continent of, 301
Evangelism in Boston, Eight Weeks of, 294
Evangelistic Effort, Estimating, 598
Everlasting Punishment, 880
Evolution and the Old Gospel, 345
Expert Testimony, 150

Faith, The Breaking Strain of, 404
Family Worship and Grace at Meals, 340
Fashionable Gambling, 487
Fashions, Following the, 88
Field, The Church's World-Wide, 817
Finances of Our Benevolent Societies, 331; of Our National Societies, 356.
First Day of the Week, 522
Fellowship, Serious Breach of, 855
Flag Should Protect the Missionaries, 552
Flowering Trees and Shrubs, Our, 489; Trees and Shrubs, Later, 644.
Food for the Infant, 195; for the Child up to School Age, 232; During School and College Life, 268; for the Laboring Man, 303; for Old Age, 415.
"For Tom," 15
Fourth of July, A Rational, 268
Friend in Court, 341

Generosity, A Rare Case of, 901
Germans in the Classroom, Two Famous, 121
Girl Consorts, 87
Given to Hospitality, 231
Giving, On, 43
Gladstone's Schooldays, 716
God's Handiwork in Nature, 856
Going to Church, 160; a-Maying, 706.
Good of Sorrow, 232
Gordon's, Dr., New Theodicy? What Is, 787
Gospel in Lectures, 424
Grand Old Man Lifts His Voice, 33
Grant Celebration in New York, 638
Great Britain and the United States as Affected by the Events of 1896, 49
Great Britain's Jubilee, 854
Greece, Belligerent, 223
Greek, The Modern, 369
Grenfell's, Dr., Visit, 313
Growth by Consecration, 115
Gulf Stream? Is It Not the, 481

Hale's, Dr., Return, 528
Harnack and Wellhausen in German Universities, 121
Harpoot Rejoices Also, 589
Hartford, Completed Year at, 824
Harvard Yale Contest, The Latest, 462
Have Women No Imagination? 828
Health, Relation of Food to, 17; Notes, 533.
Her Resurrection Day, 530
Hero's Value to His Country, 634
Higher Criticism, Hopeful Side of, 34
Hodges, Dean, on Socialism, 497
Home-made Proverbs, 828
Honors Where Honors Are Due, 423
How to Be Happy Without a Wheel, 792
Hyde, Death of Henry D., 590
Hymns Stir Our Consciences, Let Our, 616
Hysteria and Temper, 197
Hysterics in Infants, 90

Ignorant Masses Do? What Will the, 552
Ill Temper, One Cause of, 270
Improved Health Among Women, 532
Impatience With God's Ways, 443
Immanuel Church, Four Decades at, 839
Inaugural Patriotism, 351
Inauguration Scenes at the Capital, 250; Bible, The, 382.
India Lectureship, The, 711
Indian Famine Is so Awful, Why an, 587
Industry, Perils of Modern, 568
Industrial Conciliation, 801
Infant Class, The, 452
Inhumanity of Christian Europe, 478
Installation at Cambridge, 238
Interdenominational Love Feast, An, 723
Iron Chancellor, The Gentle Side of the, 864
Is It Only an Eddy, or Is It More? 330

Joan of Arc, 196
John Parnell Explains, 899
Jordan, President, on Revivals, 366
Jubilee, No License, 651
Judicial Decisions of Church Councils, 300

Kid's New Year's Resolve, The, 51
Kimball and Farnsworth, Drs., Speak, 70
Knowing How It Is Yourself, 574

Laborers and Ministers, 330
Lamb Slain from the Foundation of the World, 479
Lansing, Rev. I. J., Resigns, 390
Lay Colleges Graduate Their Classes, 763
Lenten Days, 340; Lecture, Dr. Gordon's First, 351; Meditation, 454.
Lesson of a Monument, 782
Let Us Understand Each Other, 258
Leyden Church, Brookline, A Splendid Collection at, 763
Li Hung Chang, A Remarkable Meeting With, 488
Life Worth Living? What Makes, 187; in the Sanctum, 555.
Lincoln, Abraham, 186
Literary Approach to the Old Testament, 13, 49, 84; Diet for Our Children, A Generous, 792.
Living in the Light of God's Knowledge, 891
Love or Duty, 268; Making, The Art of, 645.

McKenzie, Huntington and Plumb, Anniversaries of Drs., 78; Dr., at Tremont Temple, 351.
Magician's Cave, A Modern, 793
Making of a Hero, 786
Manhattan Association and Dr. Abbott, 150
Mary Lyon's Just Reward, 222; Lyon: Her Breadth and Progressiveness, 229; Lyon Day, Outcome of, 446.
May Days in March, 448; Meetings, 723.
Melanchthon, Philip, 193
Memorial Day, Growing Meaning of, 742; to Phillips Brooks, 835.
Men's Housekeeping, 54
Method in Giving, 822
Meyer, Mr., in Boston, 204; American Visit of, 259.
Ministerial Standing, 563
Ministers, Are There Too Many, 817
Ministers' Meeting Again, The, 351
Ministry, Should He Enter the, 743
Missions, An Extensive Rally for, 543
Mistress of the Manse, 124
Money-Making for Country Boys, 380
Moody Campaign of 1877, 26; Meetings in 1897, First of the, 26; Mr., at Sixty, 186; Meetings Drawing to an End, 277; Meetings from the Press Table, 277; Mr., in Cincinnati, 352, 464.
Moody's, Mr., Presence in Boston, 6; Mr., Winter Labors in Two Great Cities, 12; Mr., Boston Campaign, 65; Mr., Second Week, 75; Mr., Birthday Present, 205; Again at, 919.
Moon of Leaves, 890
Morals, A Big Gain in, 865
Morley, Mrs., and Her Friend, 304
Mother and Son, 124
Motors and Bicycles for Snow and Ice, 89
Mt. Holyoke, The New, 227; Alumnæ Association, 462.
Murphy, Mr., At Faneuil Hall, 238
Museum as an Educational Institution, 794
Music Hall Organ Sold, Old, 723

National Capital, Impressions of Life at the, 447, 525; Shortcoming, A, 591.
Neal Dow's Ninety-third Birthday, 423
Need of the Hour, 115
New Psychology and Religion, 528
Newton, The Work in, 277
Nina, 607
Non-Church-Goers, About Some, 478
Noontide Worship in King's Chapel, 313
Northfield, Notable Day at, 804
Northwest, A Flooded District of the, 580
Notable Philosophical Conclave, 825
Novel and Profitable Gathering, 528

Oberlin's Anniversary, 685
Odd Volumes, 314
Old South Sermons, Two, 462; Time Giver, In Honor of an, 800.
Omnibus Boats on the Charles, 873
Opportunities of Service, Lost, 599
Organ Recitals, The Free, 238; Recitals a Great Success, 617.
Original Methods, One Mother's, 829
Orphans in Marsovan, 820
Oscar Was Prince, When King, 572
Our Last Club Meeting, 305
Outgoing Administration, 294
Outward Show of Inward Life, 635

Parables in Pictures, 123, 303, 410, 487, 607, 715.
Parents in League, 678
Parish System, 258
Park Street Council, 496
Partnership, The Question of, 43
Passing of the Old-Time Darky, 754
Pastor's Decade and a Half, 835
Pastoral Transfer in the Bay State, 542
Pastorates, Honored, 78; A New Method of Preparation for the, 338.
Penalty or Reform, 590
People and Civil Service Reform, The, 731
Peril of Intemperate Speech, 707
Personal Religion, Studies in, 463
Phillips Brooks's Broadening Influence, 278; Dr. Gordon on, 287.
Piazza, How to Furnish the, 901
Pity of It, 643
Place of Crucifixion, 523
Plague-Stricken Bombay, 485
Playing Church, 829
Pleasant to Live With, 330
Power of Suggestiveness, 54
Prayer for Colleges, Further Returns from the Day of, 212; for the Incoming Administration, 259.
Preacher and His Audience, 34
Presiding Officer, 195
Preserving the Forests, 514
Pretending To Be Wicked, 18
Pro Patria, 747
Promises for the Opening Year, 7
Proper Retort, 32
Providence Express, By the, 571
"Puttering" Woman, The, 755

Queen Victoria, 410; Victoria's Reign and the Higher Life of Her People, 860; Victoria's Reign and the Common People, 861; Yet a Woman, 865; About the, 865.
Queens of Service, 381
Quint, Dr., Another Tribute to, 157; Dr., Tribute to, 713.

Ramsdell, Mr., Installed at Cambridge, 238
Real and Pretended Ideals, 791
Reasons for Reassurance, 634
Reassurance from Many Sources, 404
Rejoicing in the Lord, 331
Relief Work in Marsovan, 580
Religious Life in the Colleges, 97
Remembering the Days of Old, 743
Remedy, Where Lies the, 337; What Is the, 670.
Rescue Work at the North End, 723
Resources, The Christian's, 371
Reviewing by Extracts, 239
Revival Meetings in Boston, 118; at Sardis, 156.
Revivals in the Church, The Place of, 222
Rhode Island, Progress in, 391
Robbins, Rev. A. B., Career of, 14

Sacredness of Secular Work, 671
Safeguards in Popular Government, 782
Saint Catherine, 379
Salvation a Fact, Not a Theory, 33
San Francisco, Conditions in, 206
Saratoga Meetings, About the, 873
Saturday Night, 268
Science Notes, 881
Seamen's Friend Society, The Boston, 496
Sensitiveness Alias Selfishness, 753
Sermon, Dr. McKenzie, 158
Serving Our Generation, 223
Settlement Worker, An Honored Social, 238
Settling Down for the Winter, 51
Sharp, Isaac, The Traveling Quaker Missionary, 457
Shaw Memorial Orations, Echoes of the, 847
Sincerity, 587
South African Situation, 442; Dakota Legislation, 507; A Peep into the, 569.
Southern Station, The New, 651; Minnesota Circuit, 838.
Southward, A Run, 897
Spiritual Dangers of Theological Study, 676
Spring Fever, 478
St. Louis, Churches and Civics in, 205; Church and Its New Leader, 582.
Stamp in Existence, The Rarest, 829
Statutory Suppression of Religion, 742
Stepmothers and Mothers-in-law, 17
Street Car Incident, 341
Submerged Classes, Help for the, 351
Suburban Pulpit Filled, Another, 803
Subway Nearing Completion, 423
Success in Debt Raising, 392
Sultan Triumphant, The, 706
Sunday Rest for Working Men, 78; School Normal Work, An Experiment in, 313; School Lessons for the Twentieth Century, 435; for Brain Workers, A, 490; Hen, 829.
Supreme Problems and Their Christian Solutions, 158

Teaching as a Makeshift, 826
Tendencies of Thought Among Theological Students, 823
Testimony of the Spirit, 783
Theological Responsibility, 890
Theology and Evolution, 562; of the Coming Century, 617; of the Preacher, 835.
Thomas, Dr., An Assistant for, 314
Through Man to Men, 598
Trial by Jury, 114
Truth Embodied in a Person, 2
Turkey and Turkish Problems, 377
Twentieth Century Sunday Schools, 442
Two Services, 451
Tyngsborough Council, 891

Unconscious Character, 573
Undenominationalism The Evils of, 42
Union Theater Services, 278; Aid for Distress, 313; Meetings, The, 390; for Revival, Practical, 542.
University Cities, Two Middle State, 409; Extension, A New Form of, 335.
"U. S. A., The," 125

Verse in Luke, 519
Veteran Still in Harness, Worthy Honors to a, 651
Vivekananda Upon His Native Heath, Swami, 568

Wanted, New Men and New Measures, II., 122; III., 155.
Washington Happenings, Recent, 65; George, 223; A Little Boy's Interview with, 234; An Institutional Enterprise in, 424; Springtime in, 789.
Wearied Hospitality, 160
"We Must Be Spiritual," 526
Welcome to the New Administration, 330
Wells, D.D., Rev. George H., 429
Wheaton," "Long Live Old, 617
Why Pray for Others? 515
Wise Evangelist, 552
Woman, A Remarkable, 434
Worcester, Mass., New Beginnings in, 279
Word to Young Travelers, 609
Wyoming, Our Opportunity in, 352

Yale Divinity, At, 752
Young M. C. A. Work, Half a Century of, 277; Patriots Inspired, 314; Women's Christian Work, 351; M. C. A.'s, The Growth of, 390; Boston Congregationalists, 801.

WEEKLY REGISTER

Calls

BACHELER, Gilbert H., Hartford Sem., accepts call to Perry, Me.
BEACH, Arthur G., Yale Sem., to Ashland, Wis.
BURLING, Jas. P., formerly of Green St. Ch., Chicago, to Kearney, Neb. Accepts, and has begun work.
DUTCHER, Norman H., Andover Sem., accepts call to Vergennes, Vt.
EVANS, John E., formerly of Henry, Ill., to Osseo, Wis.
FOSTER, E. D., to Merrill, Mich. Accepts.
FOSTER, Frank, lately of Shandon, O., to Memorial Ch., St. Louis. Accepts for three months, with a view to permanency.
GRAY, Herry P., to remain a third year at West Branch, Mich.
GRIFFITH, Wm. R., Welsh Ch., Denver, Col., to Strang and Shickley, Neb, He has begun work.
HAYWARD, Chas. E., E. Fairfield, Vt., to First Ch., Jericho.
HELMS, Geo. L., Faulkton and Cresbard, S. D., to Lake Henry and Drakola. Accepts.
HEYWARD, Jas. W., Bethany Ch., Minneapolis, to Clear Lake, Io. Accepts.
HIATT, Casper W., First Ch., Peoria, Ill., to Euclid Ave. Ch, Cleveland O.
KEENE, J. L., N. Mankato, Minn., to Belgrade, for a year.
LEWIS, Henry, to remain another year at Schroon Lake, N. Y.
MERRILL, Chas. C., Yale Sem., accepts call to Steubenville, O.
MILLARD, Watson B., formerly of Plymouth Ch., St. Paul, Minn., to supply for a year at First Ch., Port Huron, Mich., while the pastor travels in Europe.
MOOR, David Y., Yale Sem., to Willington, Ct., for a year. Accepts.
PRESTON, Elmer E., formerly of Topeka, Kan., to Owen's Grove, Io. Accepts.
PRINGLE, Henry N., formerly of Anoka, Minn., to Eastport, Me.
PROVAN, Jas., Lowell, Mich., to Shelby.
REED, H. L., Vt., to Presb. Ch., Albany, Ore. Accepts.
REEVE, John C., Pilgrim Ch., Springfield, Mo., to Cole Camp. Accepts
RICHARDS, Howard A. N., formerly of Lakewood Ch., Cleveland, O., to Unionville.
SCHAEFFER, Grant L. (U. B.), Yale Sem., accepts call to Oxford, Ct.
SEVERANCE, Claude M., has begun work at Denison (not Denwai) Ave. Chapel, Cleveland, O
STAPLETON, Robt. S, Chicago Sem., to Cannon, Mich. Accepts.
STEARNS, Wm. F., formerly of Marlboro, Mass., accepts call to Norfolk, Ct, to begin Oct. 3.
TOWER, Chas. E., Van Cleve, Io., to Silver Creek and Keck. Accepts.
TRAVIS, David Q., lately of Pocatello, Ida., to Marion, Ind. Accepts.
WADSWORTH, Geo., formerly of Big Horn, Wyo., to Ulysses, Neb. Accepts.
WEST, R. B. (layman), now preaching for Christian Ch, N. Shrewsbury, Vt., accepts call to Bridgewater.
WILLISTON, Martin L., Elmhurst, Ill., to Central Ch, Attleboro Falls, Mass. Accepts and has begun work.
WOOD, Morgan, People's Ch., Detroit, Mich., accepts call to Bond St. Ch., Toronto, Can.

Ordinations and Installations

DIXON, Miss Sarah A., o. p. Tyngsboro, Mass., June 16. Sermon, Prof. G. K. Morris, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. W. Dodge, C. L. Merriam, W. A. Bartlett, Rev. Mrs. Amelia A. Frost.
HILDRETH, Homer W., o. Albany, Vt., June 16. Sermon, Dr. G. W. F. Birch; other parts, Rev. Messrs. Leonard Dodd, R. L. Sheaff, C. L. Guild, J. C. Langford, C. H. Merrill.
KIRTLAND, Chas. C., o. Sebastopol, Cal., May 25. Sermon, Rev. J. H. Goodell; other parts, Rev. Messrs. C. S. Nash, W. A. Tenney and L. D. Rathbone.
MACKAY, Chas. C., o. p. Le Raysville, Pa.
MATHER, J. Bruce, i. Vine Ch., Minneapolis, June 15. Sermon, Rev. G. R. Merrill, D. D.; other parts, Rev. Messrs. J. A. Stemen, L. H. Keller, E. P. Ingersoll, D D.
PAGE, Wesley E., o. p. Milton, Ct., June 15. Sermon, Prof. L. O. Brastow, D. D.; other parts, Prof. Samuel Harris, D. D., Rev. Messrs. E. C. Starr, R. E. Carter, Evan Evans, John Hutchins.
REED, H. L., o. as evangelist, Manchester, Vt., June 16. Sermon, Rev. C. O. Gill; other parts, Rev. Messrs. G. T. Smart, A. C Reed, father of the candidate, W. S. Walker, P. S. Pratt, D D.
SLOAN, Alex., Jr., o. p. Groveland, Mass., June 15. Sermon, Prof. E. Y. Hincks, Rev. Messrs. J D. Kingsbury, D. D., G. H. Reed, F. B. Noyes, L. F. Berry, C. W. Collier.

Resignations

CHASE, Edward, Hallowell, Me., after a pastorate of 14 years.
EPPENS, Edward H., Pittsfield, Vt.
HOLMAN, David A., Chesaning, Mich.
KRUM, John P. Kelloggsville, O., to take effect Aug. 1.
REEVE, John C, Pilgrim Ch., Springfield, Mo.
SHULTZ Jacob K., Chester Center Io.
UPDYKE, Stephen G., Waseca, Minn
WHITHAM, Frank E., Green Ridge, Mo.
WILMOT, Wm. F., Utica, Mich.

Churches Organized

STEUBEN, Wis.
WESLEY, Io., Second, 15 June, nine members.

Supplies for the Summer

WARREN, Vt., Geo. A. Andrews, Andover Seminary.

Miscellaneous

BLAKE, Elmer T., and wife, were recently surprised by a call from a large and enthusiastic company of their parishioners in Charlestown, N. H., who presented them with a handsome oak bookcase as a testimonial of esteem.

DANA, Malcolm McG., of Brooklyn, N. Y., is slowly convalescing. Among the many disappointments his sickness has entailed is his being obliged to decline the invitation to preach the annual sermon before the International Conference of Charities, which meets at Toronto, July 11. He has long been a moving spirit in these conferences.

DIFFENBACHER, Benj. F., now chaplain, has removed from Ulysses, Neb., to Lincoln.

FANKHAUSER, Chas. K., of Avon, Ct., is just recovering from a long and serious illness, brought on by overwork in his parish in connection with his post-graduate course at Yale.

HATCH, Franklin S., of Monson, Mass., and JENKINS, Frank E., of Palmer, have sailed together for a two months' trip abroad. After a bicycle tour of England it is likely that Mr. Hatch will visit Ireland and Mr. Jenkins will go to Italy, returning by the Mediterranean.

JONES, Newton I., South Hadley, sailed for Europe from New York, June 24, to remain abroad till the early part of September.

LATHROP, Stanley E., of Ashland Academy, will supply at Hayward in the absence of the pastor, Rev. L. W. Winslow.

MARVIN, John T., formerly pastor at Corning, Io., is temporarily residing at Grinnell.

TURNER, Leonard A., on the eve of departure for his new pastorate at Indianola, Neb., was given a reception by the people of Plymouth and Kilpatrick, as one evidence of their hearty appreciation.

WILLIAMS, Lewis, of Port Leyden, N. Y., has decided not to withdraw his resignation, and will reside for the present at Utica.

WINSLOW, Jacob, who recently resigned at Fremont, Ind., has purchased a fruit farm near South Haven, Mich., and removed there with his family.

Marriages

The charge for marriage notices is twenty-five cents.

FIELD—JONES—In Brockton, June 9, by Rev. Dr. A. W. Archibald at the Porter Church, John Howard Field of Brockton, son of J. W. Field of Dorchester, and Lizzie Lee, daughter of A. T. Jones of Brockton.

MATHEWS—KIMBALL—In Austin, Minn., June 9, George Raynolds Mathews, professor in Salt Lake University and a member of the Yale Divinity Class of '87, and Lois Carter Kimball.

NORTON—RUSSELL—In Wellesley, June 16, by Rev. George G. Phipps of Newton Highlands, Fred Lewis Norton of Boston and Mary Rebecca, only daughter of William L. Russell of Wellesley.

WALLACE—SANFORD—In Bridgewater, Ct., June 9, by Rev. John O. Jones of Bound Brook, N. J., Rev. W. W. Wallace of Middletown, N. Y., and Genevieve S., daughter of the late Horace N. and of Dora Kasson Sanford. Mr. Wallace and his wife are to sail from New York the last of June to join the Madura Mission, South India.

Deaths

The charge for notices of deaths is twenty-five cents. Each additional line ten cents, counting eight words to a line. The money should be sent with the notice.

HIGGINS—In Orleans, June 18, Deacon Jonathan Higgins.

HOTCHKISS—In Sharon Inn, Sharon, Ct., after a long sickness, June 19, Imogene S., widow of the late Frederick A. Hotchkiss.

MILLS—In Peabody, May 17, Lydia Mills, aged 90 yrs., 8 mos., 11 dys.

SHURR—In Ellsworth, Minn., June 4, Lillian, daughter of J. B. Shurr, a member of the Congregational church, aged 27 yrs. Her life was beautiful and her death triumphant.

THAYER—In Presque Isle, Me., June 12, Mary P., widow of Rev P. B. Thayer, of Garland, Me.

IN A BAD CONDITION.—"My stomach was in a very bad condition and was so weak I could not retain food. Since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills my stomach does not trouble me. My husband has taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for rheumatism and it has helped him very much." MRS. C. B. OLIVER, South Yarmouth, Mass.

HOOD'S PILLS are prompt, efficient, always reliable, easy to take, easy to operate.

COMMENCEMENT DATES

The following list includes the Commencement and Anniversary days of the leading educational institutions:

UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES
Amherst, Amherst, Mass.,	June 30
Bates, Lewiston, Me.,	July 1
Colby, Waterville, Me.,	June 30
Dartmouth, Hanover, N. H.,	June 30
Harvard, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 30
Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.,	July 1
Middlebury, Middlebury, Vt.,	June 30
Pomona, Claremont, Cal.,	June 30
Radcliffe, Cambridge, Mass.,	June 29
Vermont, Burlington, Vt.,	June 30
Wesleyan, Middletown, Ct.,	June 30
Yale, New Haven, Ct.,	June 30
SEMINARIES AND ACADEMIES
Thayer, Braintree, Mass.,	June 26

Nervous Weak Tired Thousands are in exactly this condition and do not know the cause of their suffering. They are despondent and gloomy, cannot sleep, have no appetite, no energy, no ambition. Hood's Sarsaparilla soon brings help to such people. It gives them pure, rich blood, cures nervousness, creates an appetite, tones and strengthens the stomach and imparts new life and increased vigor to all the organs of the body. It builds sound, robust health on the solid and lasting foundation of pure blood. It also cures all blood diseases, scrofula, humors, etc. Get only Hood's, because

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5.

Hood's Pills are tasteless, mild, effective. all druggists. 25 cents.

Gloves and Mitts

89c. Chamois Gloves for . 59c.!
25c. Pure Silk Mitts for 12½c.!

LADIES' IMPORTED CHAMOIS GLOVES, warranted washable, 4-button and Mousquetaire Wrists, sizes 5½ to 7½, special price

Only 59c. Pair.
Worth 89c. per Pair.

LADIES' IMPORTED PURE SILK MITTS, one inch hem and silk point back, colors Black and White, all sizes, special price,

Only 12½c. Pair.
Worth 25c. per Pair.

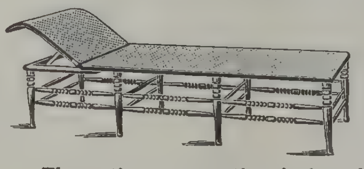
MAIL ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.,
Millinery, Dry and Fancy Goods,
90 to 98 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

10 CHANGES—$10.



Here are ten attitudes of summer comfort. Here are ten couches in one. By successive adjustments in a long iron side-rack, this becomes an erect couch, a sitting couch, a divan couch, a reading couch, a sewing couch, a smoking couch, a reclining couch, an invalid's couch, a sleeping couch, and a flat rattan bed.

The entire construction is in solid oak. It is very stoutly framed, has double cross rails, and stands securely upon eight strong legs. There are brass hinges and brass bound corners. The rattan is very close woven and has just the proper degree of elasticity for a delightful couch.

The ten adjustments make substantially ten different pieces of furniture. We fix the price $10, which is one dollar for each different piece. Think of $1 for a change of couch.

It will last easily twenty years. Don't you think you can get $10 worth of pleasure from it in that time!

New Catalogue of Summer Furniture, 36 pages, mailed on receipt of two 2 cent stamps.

PAINE FURNITURE CO.,
48 CANAL STREET, BOSTON.

Y. P. S. C. E.

PRAYER MEETING

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN

Topic, July 4-10. Consecrated Patriots—What Will They Do? Deut. 32: 1-18.

Recent imposing public events have served to remind us of the greatness and glory of our country and to stimulate us by the example of illustrious leaders to a more thoughtful and heroic patriotism. The splendid pageant in New York when the Grant mausoleum was dedicated, all the stirring scenes and suggestions connected with the unveiling of the monument to Robert Shaw, the southern trip of President McKinley with its accompanying exhibitions of a patriotism that overleaps sectional and party barrier—all these are proof that our people are still loyal and ardent in their attachment to what represents the dignity and mission of this nation. It is pleasant to set these displays of unselfish and far-extending patriotism over against lynchings and other outbursts of passion and disregard of law, and over against also the dickering and the greed shown in the making of the tariff, and the distress and want rife in many parts of the country.

For we cannot close our eyes, as we draw near the celebration of the nation's birthday, to the fact that along with all that we have to be proud of and grateful for there is much discontent, just in some degree and calling for wise and patient treatment. So when the question is asked, What will consecrated patriots do? we cannot dispose of it simply by repeating the old, commonplace injunctions, good as they are, "Pray for your country, attend the primaries, vote regularly and righteously." We must go deeper. First of all we must seek to understand and, in so far as in us lies, to allay the discontent about us. More men today have grievances real or fancied, than we realize. The foreigner working on the highway whom you pass every day, the motorman on the trolley, the housemaid in the kitchen, may be letting their troubles rankle in their hearts, when a sympathetic word from us might make them patient and reasonable. If they are cherishing mistaken notions the Lord may give us wit enough to remove them. Perhaps they can teach us something. What is needed, at any rate, is that rare Christian virtue, the gift of putting one's self in another's place and of seeing life, at least temporarily, through his eyes. It is the business of the Christian patriot, also, to be hospitable to measures looking toward the betterment of society. Wild schemes are in the air, to be sure, and it is a safe rule to stick to the old order until the new exhibits decided advantages, but we shall never get any progress or reform unless we keep our minds open to the new truth, the new opportunity. For instance, I can hardly imagine any Christian Endeavorer in greater New York not being eager to enroll himself in the Citizens' Union. It is God's way of working that the old order should in time—through evolution, not revolution—give place to the new.

The consecrated patriot will always exalt the righteous and the divine elements in our national life. He will support only those men and measures that stand for truth and justice and mercy. He will hold before himself and before all whom he can influence ideals of life which make those who cherish them simple and sturdy, not showy and artificial, humble and considerate, not vain and selfish, broadly and genuinely patriotic, not bombastic and boastful.

BELLS
Steel Alloy Church & School Bells. ☞Send for Catalogue. The C. S. BELL CO., Hillsboro, O.

Williams' JERSEY-CREAM TOILET SOAP

Absolutely Pure. Delicately Scented.
THE PERFECTION OF TOILET SOAP.

Just Like Cream in its Soothing, Healing Effect Upon the Skin.

A BEAUTIFUL
TRANSPARENT WINDOW THERMOMETER
Carefully packed with each dozen cakes of the soap
will be given away for a limited time only . . FREE.

Any druggist or dealer in Soaps can supply you, but if unable to obtain it for any reason, we will [illegible] any express office in the United States, all charges paid, a package of this soap (one dozen cakes), with Thermometer, on receipt of $2.00.

SAMPLE CAKE (full size) FIFTEEN CENTS, Post-paid.

Address Department G,
THE J. B. WILLIAMS COMPANY
GLASTONBURY CONN.

MANUFACTURERS FOR OVER HALF A CENTURY OF WILLIAMS' CELEBRATED SHAVING SOAPS.

SIZE 12 X 3 INCHES.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB'S TOURS.
ALL TRAVELING EXPENSES INCLUDED.

Parties will leave Boston in June, July, August and September, 1897, for

60 SUMMER TOURS

of Five to Nineteen Days to the Principal Resorts of New England, Canada and New York, including Saratoga, Lakes George and Champlain, and Ausable Chasm.
The White, Adirondack, and Green Mountains.
Niagara Falls, the Thousand Islands, Montreal, Quebec, and the Saguenay.
Poland Spring, Old Orchard Beach, Mt Desert, and Moosehead Lake.
The Maritime Provinces.

June 26. Special Tour through Europe.
June 28 and July 12. Alaska and Yellowstone Park.
July 15 or 29 and August 31. Yellowstone Park tours.
July 29. Yellowstone Park, Utah and Colorado.
August 24 and September 13. Hawaii, Japan and China.
August 31. Yellowstone Park, the Northwest and California.

Independent Railroad Tickets via the Boston & Albany, Boston & Maine and Other Principal Lines; also, Steamship Tickets to all points.

Send for descriptive book, mentioning tour desired.
RAYMOND & WHITCOMB,
296 Washington Street, opp. School St., Boston, Mass.

Going To . . . EUROPE?
H. GAZE & SONS (Ltd.),
The Universal Tourist Agts. (Est. 1844), will send out
30 ESCORTED PARTIES
Of the highest class. Programme free. INDEPENDENT TICKETS issued for any desired tour. Estimates furnished. Choicest berths on all steamship lines to and from EUROPE secured. TOURIST GAZETTE—POST FREE, gives details.
W. H. EAVES, New England Agent,
201 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

The St. Denis,
BROADWAY AND ELEVENTH STREET,
Opposite Grace Church, NEW YORK.
EUROPEAN PLAN.
"There is an atmosphere of home comfort and hospitable treatment at the St. Denis which is rarely met with in a public house, and which insensibly draws you there as often as you turn your face toward New York."

PASSACONAWAY INN,
YORK CLIFFS, MAINE. NOW OPEN.
ROBERT MURRAY, Manager.
FURNISHED COTTAGES FOR RENT.
New York Office, 203 Broadway.

CHURCH CARPETS AT MANUFACTURERS' PRICES. JOHN H. PRAY, SONS & CO., CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY. 658 WASHINGTON ST., OPP. BOYLSTON ST. BOSTON.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY UNION

BY MRS. W. H. BELDEN

One hundred and fifty-five foreign missionaries came together at Clifton Springs, N. Y., June 9-15, and enjoyed a week of rich and heavenly intercourse. This unique gathering has now entered upon its fourteenth year, with a revised constitution and increasing membership. The great fields of China, India, Japan and Turkey claimed two-thirds of the missionaries present, but among the twenty-one societies and twenty-four distinct countries represented laborers from Abyssinia, Assam, Austria, Egypt, Korea, Laos, New Zealand, West Indies and other little known fields were present, giving a glorious panorama of mission work. Two modest little Japanese ladies, who have recently taken the degree of M. D. and are about returning to their native land, a Japanese pastor, and a young Chinaman on his way as a delegate to Northfield added interest to the occasion as fruits of mission work.

The morning devotional sessions were unusually spiritual. The need of the infilling of the Holy Spirit, the practical working of the Spirit, with abundant illustrations from personal experience, was a theme which ran like a silver thread through the whole week. By special request Mr. J. R. Mott, lately returned from a journey around the world, gave an address upon the World's Federation of Christian Students. He gave an inspiring view of the student movement in its rapid development and its future prospects, which in its new federated form binds together for systematic work students from every land where Christianity has founded a college. Not less interesting was Dr. H. A. Schauffler in his address upon the Bohemians on both sides of the Atlantic, or Rev. Theophilus Waldmeier in his account of work in Abyssinia. He is now about to establish the first asylum for the insane in Syria. The awful horrors of the famine and plague in India were graphically pictured by Rev. H. A. Crane and others. The providential openings for Christian work in the midst of, or by reason of, these distresses gave a silver lining to the dark cloud. Obstruction to work and persecutions in these and other fields more than once brought out an expression of feeling that the darkest periods of history are the times of greatest opportunity.

Among the topics for discussion—old but ever new and of vital importance—were those upon Education, Methods, Comity and Coöperation, Literature, The Native Church, The Missionary, on furlough or on the field, and in his relation to diplomacy and protection. The relative importance and opportunities of fields at this moment was a fruitful theme, and caused no little amusement when missionaries from all parts of the world in turn gave each his convincing arguments to show his field of paramount importance.

One might wish for a camera to preserve the picture of the venerable Drs. George W. Wood and Cyrus Hamlin as they arose and followed the remarks of Dr. W. A. Farnsworth of Turkey on the subject of Missions and Nations. These veterans, with more than fourscore years behind them, in a colloquial way reminded one another and us of their early days in Constantinople, when Daniel Webster had decided the question that American missionaries had the same rights as other American citizens.

The money problem in missions, as Dr. M. P. Parmelee of Trebizond remarked, like the poor, is always with is. But the expression of opinion, founded on experience in all fields, was the same. Churches and individuals should be made self-supporting at the earliest possible moment as the best means of making strong Christians. Dr. T. L. Gulick, born in the Sandwich Islands, said that the churches there had always been built by natives, first of thatch, then of wood and now of stone, the pastors being supported by their own people. The hope was expressed by many that self-supporting missionaries sent out in connection with our mission boards, as so extensively done abroad, might become more common in America.

A tender and tearful session, yet one strong with faith and consecration, was that held to pray for missionaries and their children separated or about to be separated. The Ladies' Session and the Children's Session were, as usual, the most popular and were crowded with short addresses. There was singing in various languages—the Cree, the Naga, the Telegu, the Siamese, the Hindustani—and various dialects of China and Africa. At the farewell meeting forty-four sat upon the platform as returning or going for the first time to their fields during the coming year. Their brief remarks were full of hope, of faith and of intense interest in their work. The farewell words were spoken by Dr. Cyrus Hamlin and by Dr. Henry Foster, the beloved friend of missionaries.

ALL bleeding is relieved by Pond's Extract. Trade Mark outside each bottle on buff wrappers.

OBSERVATION SLEEPING CARS ON B. & O.—Commencing Sunday, June 13, the B. & O. R. R. will place in service, between Baltimore and Chicago, Pullman Observation Sleeping Cars. The cars have a saloon parlor in the rear, furnished with easy arm-chairs, upholstered revolving chairs and sofas. This will enable passengers to view with better advantage the scenic wonders that have made the B. & O famous.

JUST $1 APIECE.—"Ten different pieces of furniture for $10" is the latest slogan in the furniture trade, and it is awakening a host of sleeping buyers. A rattan chair-couch has been brought out by the Paine Furniture Company which, by successive changes in the adjustment, is made into ten different pieces, running the entire gamut from an erect chair to a flat bed. Our readers should see it, but we warn them that to see it is to buy it and health making are included in the making of HIRES Rootbeer. The preparation of this great temperance drink is an event of importance in a million well regulated homes.

FUN MAKING

HIRES Rootbeer

is full of good health. Invigorating, appetizing, satisfying. Put some up to-day and have it ready to put down whenever you're thirsty.

Made only by The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia. A package makes 5 gallons. Sold everywhere.

SKINS ON FIRE

With torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, and pimply humors, instantly relieved by a warm bath with CUTICURA SOAP, a single application of CUTICURA (ointment), the great skin cure, and a full dose of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, greatest of blood purifiers and humor cures.

Cuticura

Is sold throughout the world. POTTER D. AND C. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. ☞ "How to Cure Torturing Humors," free.

BABY'S SKIN Scalp and Hair purified and Beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

Grand National Prize of 16,600 francs at Paris

Quina-Laroche

Possesses in the highest degree the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark. Endorsed by the medical faculty as the best remedy for Fever and Ague, Malaria, Poorness of the Blood, General Debility and Wasting Diseases; Increases the Appetite, Strengthens the Nerves and builds up the entire system.

Paris: 22 Rue Drouot
New York: E. FOUGERA & CO.
26-30 N. William St.

BLANCARD'S

PILLS AND SYRUP OF Iodide of Iron

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDIES OF EUROPE, for ANÆMIA, POORNESS of the BLOOD, CONSTITUTIONAL WEAKNESS, SCROFULA, Etc.

None genuine unless signed "BLANCARD, 40 rue Bonaparte, Paris." ALL DRUGGISTS.

E. FOUGERA & CO., N. Y. Agents for U. S.

LADIES! your beauty depends on your health. Are you suffering from any of the ailments which cause impaired digestion, nervous prostration and premature age? You need

...VITAL TONE...

It never fails. Sent, postpaid, securely packed, on receipt of one dollar. VITAL TONE CO., No. 1 Beacon St., Room 76, Boston, Mass.

Turkey and Turkish Problems.

Our April Handbook is now ready, and in view of the deepening war clouds in the East it is especially timely. Entitled Turkey and Turkish Problems, it is a reprint of the article by Rev. Edwin Hallock Byington in our issue of March 18. It was widely commented upon by the newspapers of the country, and in its present cheap and convenient form can be easily circulated.

☞ 100 Copies, $1.25, postpaid. ☜
4 cents each; 50 copies, 75 cents; 25 copies, 50 cents.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT TRADE MARK REGISTERED

50c. and $1.00.

Starvation Never Cures.

Dyspeptics need plenty of wholesome food—nature can't repair without materials. Eat with moderation, then aid digestion by taking Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient.

It sweetens and cleanses the stomach, increases the supply of digestive fluids, and hastens the expulsion of waste materials. This gentle, pleasant remedy has been curing indigestion for 50 years.

TARRANT & CO., CHEMISTS, NEW YORK.

CURRENT THOUGHT

AT HOME

The problem of overcrowding in the ministry seems to be a real one in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The Christian Advocate of Nashville, the general organ of that body, says: "From every part of the church the report reaches us that the annual conferences are crowded with men. In many quarters it is becoming increasingly difficult to find places for all those who wish to enter upon the itinerancy. But it is still true that for men of uncommon intelligence and consecration there was never a greater demand than now. The bishops assure us that they find it no easy task to supply the strong congregations throughout the Connection, and the colleges are crying with loud voice for fit professors and presidents. How are we to account for so seemingly contradictory a state of affairs, except by supposing that the great majority of the candidates who are now coming forward are inadequately prepared for the work which they propose to undertake?" But the condition above described is not confined to any one denomination. The Interior, for example, says that the average annual increase of Presbyterian churches is 100, and of ministers, 144.

ABROAD

The Honolulu Friend remarks of the crisis in the affairs of the islands under the title Shall Hawaii Be Japanese or American: "Hawaii has now reached the parting of the ways, when this fundamental question of her future is to be decided. Hitherto American influence and American institutions have been progressively predominant, and Hawaii is already very thoroughly Americanized. A revolution is now imperiously menaced by an attempted rapid immigration of the quite intelligent and capable subjects of the populous empire of Japan. That people are within ten days' easy steaming of Honolulu. They have an overflowing population, who have now well learned what a charming climate and noble subsistence are to be found in Hawaii. They are ready to pour in here at a rate which in from five to ten years will render them the great majority in these islands, when the rest of the people and the government of the republic will be wholly at their mercy. There is no possible escape from an early and complete Japanization of Hawaii except in the immediate interposition of the United States or of some European power."

AGAIN AT MOODY'S

Northfield has arrayed itself in the robes of June, and with a radiant face is welcoming its summer guests, seeking mental, physical and spiritual re creation. Like a mother's face its charms increase from year to year.

"The opening of the season" began Saturday evening, June 12, in the great auditorium seating 2,500, with a fine concert under the direction of Professor Phillips. The students of the two schools, over 700 in number, filled the seats back of the platform, which rise up in tiers, and formed a beautiful picture of young life. Choice selections from Handel, Mendelssohn and modern authors were rendered admirably, and the majestic Ein' Feste Burg was a fitting prelude to the Sabbath.

The baccalaureate sermon by Mr. Moody to the graduates of Mt. Hermon School and Northfield Seminary was tender, practical and spiritual. His plea was for the Word in its simplicity, to be studied and read that it might help in the work opening before these young women and young men.

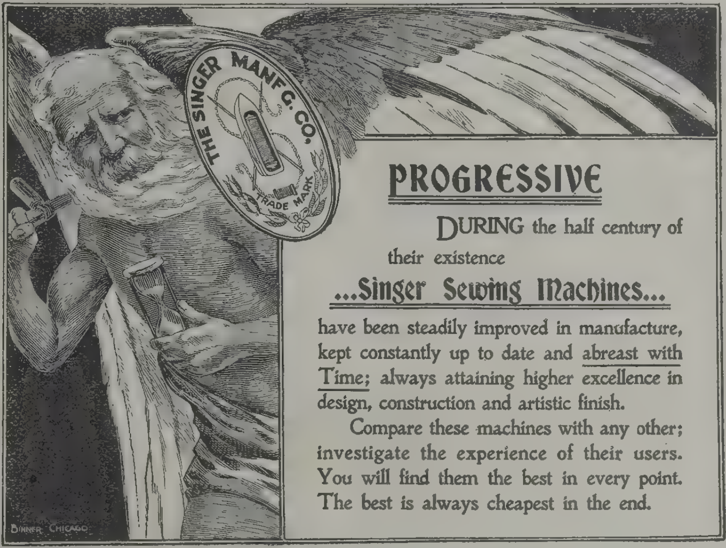
The schools have never been more successful than in the year closing. There has been no death, and good work has been done by pupils and teachers, all working in harmony. The Skinner gymnasium Mr. Moody reckons as a great factor in the physical department. Some 700 applicants for the next year indicate the appreciation of these schools, but scarcely one in five accepted for lack of room. S. E. B.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN } New York.
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS CO Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

THERE is a right way to paint and a wrong way. The right way is to have the best paint—Pure White Lead (see list of genuine brands) and Linseed Oil—applied by a practical painter. The wrong way is to get some mixture about which you know nothing and apply it yourself or have some inexperienced, irresponsible person do it.

FREE By using National Lead Co.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, any desired shade is readily obtained. Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application.

National Lead Co., 1 Broadway, New York.



PROGRESSIVE

DURING the half century of their existence

...Singer Sewing Machines...

have been steadily improved in manufacture, kept constantly up to date and abreast with Time; always attaining higher excellence in design, construction and artistic finish.

Compare these machines with any other; investigate the experience of their users. You will find them the best in every point. The best is always cheapest in the end.

Waverley Bicycles

Our great factories—second to none in the world—have not sprung into existence by magic. The reason for their existence lies in the reputation which our product has obtained and which is and will be maintained regardless of cost. We simply build good bicycles and people have found it out. There lies the whole secret.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.
Catalogue free.

Palestine in Pictures.

396 Plates (8 in. x 10 in. each).

(25 Parts, Colored Map with each Part.)

This series of views by an American artist is the best ever published, and is indispensable to every Bible student. Two years ago we filled orders for 50,000. WE RECOMMEND THEM WITHOUT RESERVE.

Price, postpaid, $2.50.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,
1 Somerset St., Boston, Mass.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Blake Bell Foundry
Established in 1820.
Successors to WM. BLAKE & CO.
Manufacture bells of every description, single or chimes, of Copper and Tin. Address
BLAKE BELL CO., Boston, Mass.

Buckeye Bell Foundry
E.W. Vanduzen Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.
Best Pure Copper and Tin Church Bells & Chimes.
Highest Grade, Pure Tone Westminster Bells. Founders of Largest Bell in America.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING
CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS in the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

"WELL DONE OUTLIVES DEATH," EVEN YOUR MEMORY WILL SHINE IF YOU USE . . . . SAPOLIO

Genuine India Silks

Very Finest Qualities of Real Eastern Silks that are Imported. Printed in Lyons with Stylish designs.

OUR ENTIRE STOCK

NOTHING HELD BACK

45c 79c $1.00	PER YARD	Regular Value $1 to $1.50

Samples Sent Free

R. H. Stearns & Co.

Tremont Street and Temple Place,
BOSTON

Men's Summer Bicycle Suits

At $2.50 each.

This is one of the most decided Bargains ever offered Bicycle Riders. The suits are made of Mixed Covert Cloth in brown and gray effects. The Bloomers have two hip, two side and two watch pockets and are re-inforced. The Coat has four patch pockets and the seams are piped. If you don't like the suit send it back and we will refund the money.

Caps to match, 25 cents.

Strawbridge & Clothier

PHILADELPHIA.

CALIFORNIA

IN 3 DAYS

$25.00

SAME RATE RETURNING

TWO TRAINS DAILY
FROM CHICAGO
6.00 P. M. and 10.30 P. M.

PALACE AND TOURIST
SLEEPING CARS Without Change

COLORADO

$12.50

Fast Time and Through Cars between Chicago and Denver

Tickets Sold June 29 to July 3, 1897

For Particulars Inquire of Your Nearest Ticket Agent and Ask for Tickets via

CHICAGO & NORTH-WESTERN RY.

PRINCIPAL OFFICES:
212 Clark St., CHICAGO. 423 Broadway, NEW YORK.
5 State St., BOSTON.

THERE IS ONLY
ONE

POND'S EXTRACT

A SAMPLE LETTER.—ONE OF MANY.

"Almost twenty years of medical experience have led me to know that POND'S EXTRACT is of greater clinical value than any commercial Witch Hazel that I have seen."

G. E. POTTER, M.D.

NEWARK, N. J., March 30, 1897.

Sold only in bottles with buff wrappers and our landscape trade-mark thereon.

POND'S EXTRACT CO., New York & London.

Storage

HILLIPS'
KBINDER.
ST.-S.F.-CAL.